At that time the enlightened one, the lord was staying among the Bhaggā on Suṃsumāra Hill in the Bhesakaḷā Grove in the deer-park. Now at that time monks in the Kokanada palace threw out amidst the houses¹ rinsings of the bowls with lumps of boiled rice. People ... spread it about, saying:

BD.3.140

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, throw out amidst the houses rinsings of the bowls with lumps of boiled rice, like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?”

Monks heard ... (as in Bu-Sk.55) ... “... should be set forth:

“I will not throw out amidst the houses rinsings of the bowl with lumps of boiled rice,’ is a training to be observed.”

One should not throw out amidst the houses rinsings of the bowl with lumps of boiled rice. Whoever out of disrespect throws out amidst the houses rinsings of the bowl with lumps of boiled rice, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ Vinaya Texts i.65, n.2 says that antaraghare “here means the space, or small open square in the middle of the house.”

There is no offence if it is unintentional, if he is not thinking, if he does not know, if he is ill, if he throws them out having removed¹ or broken up² or covered up³ or taken out,⁴ if there are accidents, if he is mad, if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 57

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) with a sunshade in his hand. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six monks teach dhamma to (someone) with a sunshade in his hand?" ...

Bu-Sk.57.1.1

"Is it true, as is said, that you, monks, taught dhamma to (someone) with a sunshade in his hand?"

BD.3.141

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How can you, foolish men, teach dhamma to (someone) with a sunshade in his hand? It is not, foolish men, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, this rule of training should be set forth:

'I will not teach dhamma to (someone) with a sunshade in his hand,' is a training to be observed."

And thus this rule of training for monks came to be laid down by the lord.

Bu-Sk.57.1.2

At that time monks were (too) scrupulous to teach dhamma to (someone) who was ill (and) had a sunshade in his hand. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, not teach dhamma to (someone) who is ill (and) has a sunshade in his hand?”

¹ uddharitvā. Vin-a.894 says, "if having removed the lumps of boiled rice from the water, having made them into a heap in one place, he throws out the water." ² bhinditvā. Vin-a.894 says, "if having broken up the lumps of boiled rice, having put them in the water, he throws it out." ³ paṭiggahetvā. Vin-a.894, reading paṭiggāhe va, says "if he throws out what he has accepted, covering it up with a receptacle." ⁴ nīharitvā. Vin-a.894, "if he throws it out outside."

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to teach dhamma to (someone) who is ill (and) has a sunshade in his hand. And thus, monks, this rule of training should be set forth:

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) who is not ill (and) who has a sunshade in his hand, is a training to be observed.”

Sunshade¹ means: there are three (kinds of) sunshade: white sunshade,² sunshade of matting, sunshade of leaves; fastened at the middle, fastened to the rim.³

Dhamma means: spoken by the enlightened one, spoken by disciples, spoken by seers, spoken by devatas, connected with the goal, connected with dhamma.⁴

Should teach means: if he teaches by line, for every line there is an offence of wrong-doing. If he teaches by syllable, for every syllable there is an offence of wrong--doing.⁵

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) who has a sunshade in his hand (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect teaches dhamma to (someone) who has a sunshade in his hand (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional, if he is not thinking, if he does not know, if he is ill, if there are accidents, if he is mad, if he is the first

¹ = Vin.4.338. ² setacchatta, emblem of royalty. Cf. DN.ii.15, DN.ii.19; AN.i.145. ³ salāk-abaddha; -bandha at Vin.4.338. See Vinaya Texts iii.133 note for these two ways of fastening the handle to the sunshade. ⁴ = Vin.4.15, Vin.4.22. ⁵ Cf. Vin.4.15, Vin.4.22.

wrong-doer

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 58

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) with a staff in his hand ... “... Bu-Sk.58.1.1

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) who is not ill (and) who has a staff in his hand,’ is a training to be observed.”

Staff means: (the size of) four hands¹ of a man of average height. Bigger than that it is not a staff, smaller it is not a staff.²

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) who has a staff in his hand (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect teaches dhamma to (someone) who has a staff in his hand (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 59

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) with a knife in his hand ... “... Bu-Sk.59.1.1

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) who has a knife in his hand (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

BD.3.143

Vin.4.201

Knife means: a weapon,¹ single-edged, double-edged.² Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) who has a knife in his hand (and) who is not ill ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 60

Bu-Sk.60.1.1

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) with a weapon³ in his hand ... “...

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) who has a weapon in his hand (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Weapon means: a long-bow, a cross-bow.⁴ Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) who has a weapon in his hand (and) who is not ill ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

The Sixth Division: that on hissing

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 61

Bu-Sk.61.1.1

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) wearing shoes ... “...

¹ On hattha, “hand”—i.e., hand and forearm—see BD.2.li. ² adaṇḍa; cf. apatta at Vin.3.243. The above use of adaṇḍa has not been noticed by the Critical Pali Dictionary ¹ paharaṇi. Oldenberg queries, and suggests “paharaṇi?”. ² Cf. MN.i.281. ³ āvudha. ⁴ Cf. MN.i.429.

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) wearing shoes (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) wearing shoes (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect teaches dhamma to (someone) mounted on (shoes) or (with shoes) fastened on or (with shoes) unfastened¹ (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional ... if he if the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 62

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery ... (see Bu-Sk.61. Instead of wearing shoes read wearing sandals²) ...

Bu-Sk.62.1.1
BD.3.144

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) wearing sandals (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 63

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) in a vehicle ... “... ”

Bu-Sk.63.1.1

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) in a vehicle (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

¹ Only at the heels, according to Vin-a.895. ² upāhana. Regulations for monks wearing these given at Vin.1.185ff.; at Vin.2.207f. it is said that in-coming monks should take off their sandals on entering a monastery—as a sign of respect.

Vehicle¹ means: a cart,² a carriage,³ a waggon, a chariot, a palanquin,⁴ a sedan-chair⁵.

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) in a vehicle (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect teaches dhamma to (someone) in a vehicle (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 64

Bu-Sk.64.1.1
Vin.4.202

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) on a bed ... “...

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) on a bed and who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

BD.3.145

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) on a bed (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect teaches dhamma to (someone) on a bed and even lying on the ground (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ = Vin.4.339; cf. Vin.3.49 which omits the last two, and DN-a.82 which omits the last but one. ² vayha, translated as “litter” at BD.1.81. But at Vin.1.191, Vin.2.276 an (ill) monk and nun were respectively made uncomfortable by the jolting of a yāna (vehicle), and two other means of transport were allowed: a palanquin and a sedan-chair. These are not included in the Old Commentary's definition of yāna at Vin.3.49, although they are above and at Vin.4.339. It looks therefore as if the first four items under yāna were the original ones, and further, as if they were conveyances drawn by animals and liable to jolt. It thus seems best to correct “litter” to “cart.” ³ See AN.iv.191 for various parts of a horse-drawn ratha. ⁴ Allowed to be used by (ill) monks at Vin.1.192, by (ill) nuns at Vin.2.277. ⁵ Allowed to be used by (ill) monks at Vin.1.192, by (ill) nuns at Vin.2.277.

There is no offence if it is unintentional ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 65

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) who was sitting down, lolling¹ ... “...
Bu-Sk.65.1.1

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) who is sitting down, lolling (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) sitting down, lolling, (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect teaches dhamma to (someone) who is sitting down, lolling on his hands or lolling on his robes (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 66

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) with a turban on his head ... “...
Bu-Sk.66.1.1

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) with a turban on his head (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Turban on the head means: it is a turban when it does not let the ends of the hair be seen.

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) with a turban on his head (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect teaches dhamma to (someone) with a turban on his head (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ Cf. Bu-Sk.26.

There is no offence if it is unintentional, if he is not thinking, if he does not know, if he is ill, if he shows the ends of the hair having caused them to be uncovered, if there are accidents, if he is mad, if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 67

Bu-Sk.67.1.1
BD.3.146

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks taught dhamma to (someone) with his head muffled up¹ ... “...

“I will not teach dhamma to (someone) with his head muffled up (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Vin.4.203

Head muffled up means: it is so called if he is dressed, including his head, in his upper robe.

Dhamma should not be taught to (someone) with his head muffled up (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect should teach dhamma to (someone) with his head muffled up (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional, if he is not thinking, if he does not know, if he is ill, if he shows the head having caused it to be uncovered,

¹ Cf. Bu-Sk.23.

if he is mad, if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 68

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks, having sat down on the ground, taught dhamma to (someone) sitting on a seat ... “... Bu-Sk.68.1.1

“Having sat down on the ground, I will not teach dhamma to (someone) sitting on a seat (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Having sat down on the ground, dhamma should not be taught to (someone) sitting on a seat (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect, having sat down on the ground, teaches dhamma to (someone) sitting on a seat (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 69

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks, having sat down on a low seat, taught dhamma to (someone) sitting on a high seat.¹ Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks ... teach dhamma to (someone) sitting on a high seat?” ... Bu-Sk.69.1.1

“Is it true, as is said, that you, monks, ... taught dhamma to (someone) sitting on a high seat?” BD.3.147

¹ Ja.no.309 (=Ja.3.27.) is based on this story, and should be compared with it, especially for variant readings.

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

How can you, foolish men, ... teach dhamma to (someone) sitting on a high seat? It is not, foolish men, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Formerly, monks, in Benares, the wife of a certain low class man¹ came to be pregnant. Then, monks, this low class woman spoke thus to this low class man: ‘Sir,² I am pregnant; I want to eat a mango.’

‘There are no mangoes, it is not the mango season,’ he said.

Now at that time the king had a mango tree with a perpetual crop of fruit. Then, monks, that low class man approached that mango tree; having approached, having climbed up that mango tree, he remained hidden. Then, monks, the king together with the brahmin priest, approached that mango tree; having approached, having sat down on a high seat, he learnt a mantra. Then, monks, it occurred to that low class man:

‘How unrighteous³ is this king, inasmuch as he learns a mantra, having sat down on a high seat. This brahmin also is unrighteous, inasmuch as he, having sat down on a low seat, teaches a mantra to (someone) sitting on a high seat. I too am unrighteous, I who for the sake of a woman, steal the king’s mangoes. But all this is quite gone,⁴ (and) he fell down just there.

Neither knows the goal,⁵ neither sees dhamma,⁶

Neither he who teaches the mantra,

¹ chapaka. Vin-a.896 explains by caṇḍāla, which is the word used in the Jātaka. ² ayyaputta. At Vin.3.17, the monk Sudinna’s former wife addresses him as ayyaputta. ³ adhammika.

⁴ parigata. Reading seems confused. Vinaya Texts iv.364 gives variant reading camarikatan ti (°natan ti B); Vin-a.896, variant reading carimakatan ti; Ja.3.28 carimavataṃ, with variant readings carivamataṃ, carimaṃ kataṃ. “Done long ago”—i.e., carimaṃ kataṃ, makes sense for the Jātaka version. ⁵ attha. Vin-a.896 says, “These two people do not know the meaning (attha) of the text (pāli).” ⁶ Vin-a.896 says, “they do not see the text”; Ja.3.29, “the two people do not see that the rule of old (porāṇakadhamma) is worthy of respect,” and adds the verse: “First the rule came to appear, afterwards what is not the rule arose, in the world.”

Or dhamma may here be in its wider sense, to balance “goal,” and not in its more specialised Vinaya sense of “rule.”

nor he who learns according to what is not the rule.”¹

“My food² is pure conje of rice flavoured with meat,³
I do not therefore fare on dhamma,⁴ dhamma praised by the noble.”

“Brahmin,⁵ shame on that gain of wealth,
(that) gain of fame;
That conduct (leads) to falling away⁶ or to walking by what is not the rule.⁷

“Go forth,⁸ great brahmin, for other creatures boil,⁹
Do not you, following what is not the rule, from that break like a pot.”¹⁰

At that time,¹¹ monks,¹² to teach¹³ a mantra, having sat down on a low seat, to (someone) sitting on a high seat, was not liked by me. So, however could it now be not not¹⁴ liked to teach¹⁵ dhamma, having sat down on a low seat, to (someone) sitting on a high seat? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, this rule of training should be set forth:

BD.3.149

“I will not teach dhamma, having sat down on a low seat, to (someone) sitting on a high seat (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Dhamma should not be taught, having sat down on a low seat, to (someone) sitting on a high seat (and) who is not ill. Whoever out of disrespect, having sat down on a low seat, teaches dhamma to someone sitting on a high seat (and) who is not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ adhammena. The “rule” against which these two, had they been monks, would be transgressing, is the one laid down in this Sekhiya. ² bhutta. According to Ja.3.29 and Vin-a.896 the brahmin says this verse. ³ For this line, cf. also Ja.3.144, Ja.4.371. ⁴ Or “the rule.”

⁵ This verse, also found at Ja.2.422, Ja.3.32, is here, according to Vin-a.896, spoken by the low-class man. ⁶ vinipāta, often combined with apāya and duggati, sometimes plus niraya, as one of the ways of woeful rebirth—e.g., Vin.1.227; DN.i.82, DN.i.162; MN.i.73, AN.i.29, AN.i.48. ⁷ adhammacaraṇena; or unrighteousness, what is not dhamma. ⁸ I.e., into homelessness. ⁹ pacanti, cook or boil, here in one of the hells. ¹⁰ asmā kumbhaṃ iva bhida. ¹¹ According to Ja.3.30, the bodhisattva was the low-class man. ¹² Cf. Vin.4.6. ¹³ vāceti. ¹⁴ na amanāpa; at Vin.4.6, manāpa, liked. ¹⁵ deseti.

There is no offence if it is unintentional ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 70

Bu-Sk.70.1.1

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks, standing, taught dhamma to (someone) who was sitting down ... “...

“I will not teach dhamma, standing, to (someone) who is sitting down (and) who is not ill,' is a training to be observed.”

Dhamma should not be taught, standing, to (someone) who is sitting down (and) who is not ill ... (see Bu-Sk.70) ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.205

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 71

Bu-Sk.71.1.1

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks, going behind, taught dhamma to (someone) going in front ... “...

“I will not teach dhamma, going behind, to (someone) going in front (and) who is, not ill,' is a training to be observed.”

Dhamma should not be taught, going behind ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 72

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks, going at the side of a path,¹ taught dhamma to (someone) going along the path ... “...
Bu-Sk.72.1.1
BD.3.150

“I will not teach dhamma, going at the side of a path, to (someone) going along the path (and) who is not ill, is a training to be observed.”

Dhamma should not be taught, going at the side of a path ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 73

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks eased themselves standing
Bu-Sk.73.1.1

“I will not ease myself standing if not ill, is a training to be observed.”

One must not ease oneself standing if not ill. Whoever out of disrespect eases himself standing if not ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ uppatha.

There is no offence if it is unintentional, ... if he is the first wrong-doer.

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 74

Bu-Sk.74.1.1

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks eased themselves and spat on green corn¹ ... “...

“I will not ease myself or spit, if not ill, on green corn,’ is a training to be observed.”

One should not ease oneself or spit, if not ill, on green corn. Whoever out of disrespect eases himself or spits, if not ill, on green corn, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional, if he is not thinking, if he does not know, if he is ill, if done where there is no green corn² he spreads³ green corn over it, if there are accidents, if he is mad, if he is the first wrongdoer.

BD.3.151

MONKS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 75

Bu-Sk.75.1.1

... in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks eased themselves and spat in the water. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, ease themselves and spit in the water, like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest

Vin.4.206

¹ harita, fresh—i.e., green wheat or cereals; vegetables, grass. ² appaharita, little or no green corn. Vin-a.897 reads na harite. Cf. Bu-Pc.19. ³ ottharati, to spread, to cover up. See also BD.1.137, n.4, and next Sekhiya, where ottharati seems to mean to pour or to sprinkle.

monks ... spread it about, saying:

“How can this group of six monks ... in the water?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, that you, monks, ... in the water?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How can you, foolish men, ... in the water? It is not, foolish men, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, this rule of training should be set forth:

‘I will not ease myself or spit in the water,’ is a training to be observed.”

And thus this rule of training for monks came to be laid down by the lord.

Bu-Sk.75.1.2

Now at that time ill monks were (too) scrupulous to ease themselves and spit in the water. They told this matter to the lord. Then the lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, a monk if he is ill, to ease himself and spit in the water. And thus, monks, this rule of training should be set forth:

“I will not ease myself or spit in the water, if not ill,’ is a training to be observed.”

If one is not ill he should not ease himself or spit in the water. Whoever out of disrespect, if not ill, ... offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional, if he is not thinking, if he does not know, if he is ill, if done on dry land and he pours¹ water over it, if there are accidents, if he is mad, unhinged, in pain, if he is the first wrongdoer.

BD.3.152

The Seventh Division: that on shoes

Recited, venerable ones, are the rules of training. Concerning them, I ask the venerable ones: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The venerable ones are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.

¹ ottharati. See previous note above.

Told are the Rules for Training

MONKS' DECIDING OF LEGAL QUESTIONS (ADHIKARAṄASAMATHA)

These seven rules, venerable ones, for the deciding of legal questions¹ come up for recitation. For the deciding, for the settlement of legal questions arising from time to time:

1. A verdict in the presence of² may be given.
2. A verdict of innocence³ may be given.
3. A verdict of past insanity⁴ may be given.
4. It may be carried out on (his) acknowledgement.⁵

¹ adhikaraṇa. This passage = Vin.4.351, and cf. DN.iii.254, AN.iv.144. The four kinds of adhikaraṇa are explained at Vin.2.88ff., and the ways of settling them at Vin.2.99ff. The four are stated merely, in definition of adhikaraṇa, at Vin.3.164 (=BD.1.282), Vin.4.126 (=above, BD.3.6), Vin.4.238 (=below, BD.3.206). See also Vin.3.168, Vin.3.173. At AN.i.99 (=GS.1.85) a list of monastic duties is given, ending with these seven ways of settling legal questions. For a full exposition of their working and significance, see S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, 156ff. ² sammukhāvīnaya. Vin.2.93 says there must be the presence of the Order, of dhamma, of discipline, and of the persons (disputing). Each of these is then defined. See also Vin.2.96, Vin.2.97; MN.ii.247. ³ sativīnaya. See Vin.1.325, Vin.2.99; MN.ii.247. Vinaya Texts i.68, Vinaya Texts iii.58 translate by “consciously innocent.” Such persons have been “mindful” (sati) in their behaviour, they do not remember (sarati) having fallen into any offence, therefore they are innocent of the charges brought against them. See also GS.1.85, n.7. ⁴ amūḷhavīnaya. See Vin.2.82, where this decision was made specially for the mad monk Gagga, and cf. Vin.1.123. Afterwards (Vin.2.100) it was formed into a “general rule for every similar case” (Vinaya Texts iii.18, n.2). See also MN.ii.248. ⁵ paṭiññāya kāretabbaṃ. See Vin.1.325, where it is said that to carry out this form of settling legal questions without the accused monk's acknowledgement of his offence is not a legally valid act; and Vin.2.83, where various official acts, if carried out against a monk without his acknowledgement, are said to give rise to a dukkāṭa offence. See MN.ii.248, for the way in which a monk should confess (paṭideseti) the offence into which he had fallen (āpattiṃ āpanno).

BD.3.153

Bu-As.1

Bu-As.2

Bu-As.3

Bu-As.4

Bu-As.5

BD.3.154
Bu-As.6
Bu-As.7

5. (There is) the decision of the majority.¹
6. The decision for specific depravity.²
7. The covering up (as) with grass.³

Recited, venerable ones, are the seven rules for the deciding of legal questions. Concerning them, I ask the venerable ones: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The venerable ones are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this.

¹ yebhuyyasikā, or “of a greater number.” It is explained at considerable length at Vin.2.93ff., and in less detail at MN.ii.247, that if monks dwelling in one āvāsa are unable to settle legal questions themselves, they may take them to the monks dwelling in another āvāsa. At Vin.2.84, however, this method is apparently not contemplated, for here it is said that if monks are unable to settle a legal question, they are allowed to agree upon an assigner of (voting) tickets, salākagāhāpaka (cf. pattagāhāpaka at Vin.3.246 = BD.2.122, n.5. n.1), and then to vote; but nothing is here said about consulting monks living in another āvāsa. At Vin.2.85 ten ways are given for an invalid, and ten for a valid taking of votes, while at Vin.2.98f., three methods of taking votes are described. ² tassapāpiyyasikā, or the “obstinately wrong” (Vinaya Texts iii.28 q.v., n.3). This method of settling a legal question is to be employed when a monk “having denied (an offence) acknowledged it, having acknowledged it denied it, shelved the question by asking others, told a conscious lie,” Vin.2.85, and cf. Vin.4.1, where Hatthaka is said to have behaved in this way. The right way of carrying out this method of settling a legal question is given at Vin.2.85, Vin.2.86, and, rather differently, at MN.ii.249. AN.iv.347 states the proper practice in regard to a monk against whom these proceedings have been taken. ³ tiṇavatthāraka. The kinds of disputes to be settled by this method and the right procedure for carrying it out, are given at Vin.2.86f., and cf. MN.ii.250.

MONKS' CONCLUSION

Recited, venerable ones, is the occasion, recited are the four rules for offences involving defeat, recited are the thirteen rules for offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, recited are the thirty rules for offences of expiation involving forfeiture, recited are the ninety-two rules for offences of expiation, recited are the four rules for offences which ought to be confessed, recited are the rules for training, recited are the seven rules for the deciding of legal questions. So much (of the sayings) of the lord, handed down in clauses,¹ contained in clauses, comes up for recitation every half month. All should train therein in harmony, on friendly terms, without contention.

BD.3.155

Told is the Great Analysis

Vin.4.208

¹ sutta, here, as elsewhere in Vinaya, meaning a clause, article, rule. See BD.1, Introduction, p.x, and above, BD.3.43, n.5.

Volume II

The Analysis of Nuns' Rules
(Bhikkhunīvibhaṅga)

Contents of Volume

Nuns' Defeat (Pārājika) 5	988
Nuns' Defeat (Pārājika) 6	996
Nuns' Defeat (Pārājika) 7	999
Nuns' Defeat (Pārājika) 8	1003
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 1	1006
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 2	1010
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 3	1014
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 4	1019
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 5	1023
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 6	1026
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 10	1029
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 11	1033
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 12	1035
Nuns' Formal Meeting (Saṅghādisesa) 13	1038

Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 1	1041
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 2	1044
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 3	1047
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 4	1049
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 5	1052
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 6	1054
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 7	1057
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 8	1059
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 9	1061
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 10	1062
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 11	1064
Nuns' Forfeiture (Nissaggiya) 12	1067
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 1	1069
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 2	1072
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 3	1074
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 4	1075
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 5	1077
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 6	1079
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 7	1081
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 8	1083
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 9	1085

Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 10	1087
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 11	1089
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 12	1091
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 13	1092
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 14	1093
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 15	1095
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 16	1098
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 17	1100
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 18	1102
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 19	1104
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 20	1106
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 21	1108
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 22	1110
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 23	1112
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 24	1115
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 25	1117
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 26	1119
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 27	1121
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 28	1123
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 29	1125
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 30	1127

Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 31	1129
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 32	1131
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 33	1133
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 34	1135
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 35	1137
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 36	1140
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 37	1143
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 38	1145
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 39	1146
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 40	1148
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 41	1150
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 42	1152
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 43	1154
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 44	1156
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 45	1157
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 46	1159
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 47	1160
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 48	1162
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 49	1164
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 50	1166
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 51	1167

Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 52	1170
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 53	1173
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 54	1175
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 55	1177
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 56	1179
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 57	1181
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 58	1183
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 59	1185
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 60	1186
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 61	1188
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 62	1190
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 63	1191
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 64	1194
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 65	1196
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 66	1198
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 67	1200
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 68	1202
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 69	1204
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 70	1206
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 71	1208
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 72	1209

Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 73	1210
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 74	1212
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 75	1214
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 76	1216
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 77	1218
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 78	1220
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 79	1221
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 80	1223
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 81	1225
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 82	1227
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 83	1228
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 84	1229
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 85	1231
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 86	1233
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 87	1235
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 88	1236
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 89	1237
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 90	1238
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 91–93	1240
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 94	1241
Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 95	1243

Nuns' Expiation (Pācittiya) 96	1245
Nuns' Confession (Pāṭidesaniya) 1	1247
Nuns' Confession (Pāṭidesaniya) 2-8	1249
Nuns' Training (Sekhiya) 1-75	1251
Nuns' Deciding of Legal Questions (Adhikaraṇasamatha)	1253
Nuns' Conclusion	1254

NUNS' DEFEAT (PĀRĀJIKĀ) 5

¹At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Sālha,² Migāra's grandson,³ became desirous of building a dwelling-house for the Order of nuns. Then Sālha, Migāra's grandson, having approached the nuns, spoke thus:

Bi-Pj.5.1.1
BD.3.156

“Ladies, I want to build a dwelling-place for the Order of nuns; give me a nun who is an overseer of repairs.”⁴

At that time four sisters had gone forth among the nuns: Nandā, Nandavatī, Sundarīnandā, Thullanandā.⁵ Among these, the nun Sundarīnandā⁶ had gone forth when she was young; she was beautiful, good to look upon, charming, she was clever, experienced, wise, she was skilled, energetic, she was possessed of consideration for those kinds of things,⁷ she was able to build, able to make arrangements.⁸ Then the nuns, having chosen the nun Sundarīnandā, gave (her) as overseer of repairs to Sālha, Migāra's grandson.

BD.3.157

Now at that time the nun Sundarīnandā constantly went to the dwelling of Sālha, Migāra's grandson, saying: “Give a knife, give a hatchet, give an axe, give a spade, give a chisel.”⁹ And Sālha, Migāra's grandson, constantly went to the nunnery to learn what was built and what was not built. These,¹⁰ through constantly seeing (one another), came to be in love. Then Sālha, ¹ Note by Sujato: Pārājika 1 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² Mentioned also at AN.i.193f. ³ Vin-a.900 says that he was the “grandson of Migāra's mother”—i.e., of Visākhā. ⁴ navakammikā, a superintendent. Cf. Vin.2.15 (masculine). Method of entrusting repairs to an overseer, and the qualities he should possess, are given at Vin.2.160. Cf. also Vin.2.172f. ⁵ Cf. Vin.4.259. ⁶ Cf. Vin.4.232, Vin.4.234. ⁷ tatrupāyāya vimaṃsāya samannāgatā. Cf. Vin.1.70. Vin-a.900 makes out that she was connected with the investigation or examination of the building or repairs that should be undertaken. ⁸ Cf. Vin.1.70. ⁹ Cf. Vin.3.144. ¹⁰ I.e., Sundarīnandā and Sālha.

Migāra's grandson, through not getting an opportunity to seduce the nun Sundarīnandā, for this purpose gave a meal for the Order of nuns. Then Sālha, Migāra's grandson, having appointed a seat in the refectory, thinking: "Some nuns are senior to the lady Sundarīnandā," appointed a seat to one side, and thinking: "Some are junior," appointed a seat to the other side.¹ He appointed a seat for the nun Sundarīnandā in a concealed place, in a corner, so that the nuns who were elders might conclude, "She is sitting with the junior nuns," and the junior nuns might conclude, "She is sitting with the nuns who are elders."

Vin.4.212

Then Sālha, Migāra's grandson, had the time announced to the Order of nuns, saying: "It is time, ladies, the meal is ready." The nun Sundarīnandā, having realised (what was happening), thinking: "Sālha, Migāra's grandson, is not benevolent (although) he gave a meal for the Order of nuns; he wants to seduce me. If I go, there will be trouble for me,"² ordered her pupil, saying: "Go, bring back almsfood for me, and if anyone asks for me, let it be known that I am ill."

"Very well, lady," the nun answered the nun Sundarīnandā.

At that time Sālha, Migāra's grandson, came to be standing outside the porch of the door, asking for the nun Sundarīnandā, saying: "Where, lady, is the lady Sundarīnandā; where, lady, is the lady Sundarīnandā?"

When he had spoken thus, the pupil of the nun Sundarīnandā spoke thus to Sālha, Migāra's grandson: "She is ill, sir; I will take back her almsfood." Then Sālha, Migāra's grandson, thinking: "This meal which I gave for the sake of the nuns was on purpose for the lady Sundarīnandā," and having commanded the people, having said: "Offer the meal for the Order of nuns," he approached the nunnery.

BD.3.158

At that time the nun Sundarīnandā came to be standing outside the porch of the monastery waiting for Sālha, Migāra's grandson. Then the nun Sundarīnandā saw Sālha, Migāra's grandson, coming from afar; seeing him, having entered the dwelling,³ having put on her upper robe including over her head,⁴ she lay down on a couch. Then Sālha, Migāra's grandson, approached the nun Sundarīnandā; having approached, she spoke thus to the nun Sundarīnandā: “What is your discomfort, lady? Why are you lying down?”

¹ See rights of seniority in a refectory, given at Vin.2.274. ² Cf. Vin.4.229=below, BD.3.188; Vin.4.339=below, BD.3.404. ³ Upassaya, doubtless meaning bhikkhuni-upassaya, nuns' quarters. ⁴ Cf. Bu-Sk.23, Bu-Sk.67.

“Surely it is this, sir: she who desires is not desired.”

“How can I, lady, not desire you? But I did not get an opportunity to seduce you,” and filled with desire he came into physical contact¹ with the nun Sundarīnandā, also filled with desire.

Now at that time a nun, weakened by age, her feet affected,² came to be sitting down not far from the nun Sundarīnandā. That nun saw Salha, Migara’s grandson, filled with desire, coming into physical contact with the nun Sundarīnandā, (also) filled with desire; seeing them, she looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Sundarīnandā, filled with desire, consent to physical contact with a male person³ who is filled with desire?” Then this nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns, contented, conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training, these looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Sundarīnandā, filled with desire ... with a male person who is filled with desire?” Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. These monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the nun Sundarīnandā, filled with desire ... with a male person who is filled with desire?” Then these monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying:

Vin.4.213

BD.3.159

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Sundarīnandā, filled with desire ... with a male person filled with desire?”

“It is true, lord,” they said.

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“It is not fitting, monks, in the nun Sundarīnandā, it is not suitable, it is not becoming, it is unworthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can the nun Sundarīnandā, filled with desire, consent to physical contact with a male person who is filled with desire? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased, but, monks, it is both for displeasing those who are not (yet) pleased and those who are pleased, and for causing wavering in some.”

¹ Cf. BD.1.201, n.3. ² caraṇaḡilānā. ³ purisapuggala, see Introduction, p.25ff.

Then the lord, having in many a figure rebuked the nun Sundarīnandā for her difficulty in supporting¹ herself, for her difficulty in maintaining herself, having spoken in dispraise of great desires, of discontent, of clinging (to the obstructions²), of sloth; having in many a figure spoken in praise of ease in supporting oneself, of ease in maintaining oneself, of desiring little, of contentment, of expunging (evil), of punctiliousness, of graciousness, of decreasing (the obstructions),³ of putting forth energy⁴; having given reasoned talk to the monks on what is fitting, on what is suitable,⁵ he addressed the monks, saying:

BD.3.160

“On account of this, monks, I will lay down a rule of training for nuns founded on ten reasons: for the excellence of the Order, for the comfort of the Order, for the restraint of evil-minded nuns, for the ease of well-behaved nuns, for the restraint of cankers belonging to the here and now, for the combating of cankers belonging to other worlds, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased, for establishing what is verily dhamma, for following the rules of restraint.⁶ And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, filled with desire, should consent to rubbing,⁷ or rubbing up against, or taking hold of or touching or pressing against a male person below the collar-bone, above the circle⁸ of the knees, if he is filled with desire, she also becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion, she is one who touches above the circle of the knees.”⁹

Vin.4.214

Bi-Pj.5.2.1

Whatever¹⁰ means: she who is an elder or a junior or one of middle standing, this one, on account of relations, on account of birth, on account of name, on account of clan, on account of virtue, on account of the way of living, on account of the field of activity, is called whatever.

¹ dubbharatāya, translated at GS.4.187, “luxury.” ² saṅgamika = kilesasaṅgamika at Vin.a.222; but at AN.iv.280, as gregariousness, sociability, it is contrasted with aloofness. ³ apacaya, translated at GS.4.187 “dispersion” (of rebirth). ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.21, Vin.3.171, and Vin.4.142. See BD.1.37, notes. ⁵ Cf. Vin.4.120. ⁶ Cf. Vin.3.21. ⁷ On āmasati see BD.1.203, n.6. ⁸ maṇḍala, see above, BD.3.121. ⁹ ubbhajānumaṇḍalikā. Not explained in the Old Commentary. Vin-a.901 says, “it is only the name of this one who is defeated, therefore it is not considered in the Padabhājanīya.” ¹⁰ Cf. Vin.3.23 (=BD.1.42).

Nun means: she is a nun because she is a beggar for alms, she is a nun because she submits to walking for alms, she is a nun because she is one who wears the patch-work robes, she is a nun by the designation (of others), a nun because of her acknowledgement, a nun (to whom it was said, 'Come, nun,' a nun is one ordained by the three goings to a refuge, a nun is auspicious, a nun is the essential, a nun is a learner, a nun is an adept, a nun is ordained by both complete Orders by means of a (formal) act at which the motion is put and followed by three proclamations, irreversible and fit to stand.¹ In this way is this nun one who is ordained by both complete Orders by means of a (formal) act at which the motion was put and followed by three proclamations, irreversible, fit to stand, and this is how nun is to be understood in this case.²

BD.3.161

Filled with desire³ means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.

Filled with desire⁴ means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.⁵

A male person means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal; he is learned, competent⁶ to come into physical contact.

Below the collar-bone means: below the collar-bone.⁷

Above the circle of the knees means: above the circle of the knees.⁸

Rubbing means: merely rubbed.⁹

Rubbing up against means: moving from here and there.¹⁰

Taking hold of means: merely taken hold of.¹¹

Touching means: merely contact.¹²

Or should consent to pressing against means: having taken hold of a limb she consents to pressing against.

¹ akuppa thānāraha; probably meaning that the formal act should not be re-opened for discussion. ² Cf. Vin.3.24 (=BD.1.42). ³ Feminine. ⁴ Masculine. ⁵ = Vin.3.121, Vin.3.128 in definition of otiṇṇa, affected by desire. ⁶ Cf. definition of "woman" at Vin.3.128, MN.iii.192. ⁷ adhakkhakaṇṇa ti heṭṭhakkhakaṇṇaṇi. ⁸ ubbhajāṇumaṇḍalan ti uparijānumaṇḍalaṇi. ⁹ = Vin.3.121. ¹⁰ = Vin.3.121. ¹¹ = Vin.3.121. ¹² = Vin.3.121.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the preceding.¹

Becomes one who is defeated means: as a man with his head cut off cannot become one to live by attaching it to his body, so a nun, filled with desire, consenting to rubbing or to rubbing up against or to taking hold of or to touching or to pressing a man who is filled with desire below the collar-bone, above the circle of the knees, becomes one who is not a recluse, not a daughter of the Sakyans; therefore she is called, she becomes one who is defeated.²

Is not in communion means: communion is called one (formal) act, one recital, an equal training; this is called communion. If it is not together with her, she is therefore called not in communion.³

BD.3.162

If both are filled with desire (and) she rubs the body⁴ below the collar-bone, above the circle of the knees with the body, there is an offence involving defeat. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body, there is a grave offence. If she rubs the body with something attached to the body, there is a grave offence. If she rubs something attached to the body with something attached to the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs the body with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something attached to the body with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Bi-Pj.5.2.2

If she rubs the body above the collar-bone, below the circle of the knees with the body, there is a grave offence. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs the body with something attached to the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something attached to the body with something attached to the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs the body with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something attached to the body with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ Vin-a.901 says, in reference to the group of the four Pārājika (set forth in the Monks' Vibhaṅga, but to be observed by nuns also see Introduction BD.3.32). ² Cf. Vin.1.96, Vin.3.28.

³ Cf. Vin.3.28. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.123ff.

BD.3.163

If one is filled with desire, and she rubs the body below the collar-bone, above the circle of the knees with the body, there is a grave offence. If she rubs the body with something attached to the body ... If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If she rubs the body above the collar-bone, below the circle of the knees with the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body ... If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If both are filled with desire, and she rubs the body of a yakkha or of a departed one or of a eunuch or of an animal in human form, below the collar-bone, above the circle of the knees with the body, there is a grave offence. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body ... If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If she rubs the body above the collar-bone, below the circle of the knees, with the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body ... If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If one is filled with desire, and she rubs the body below the collar-bone, above the circle of the knees with the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body ... If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If she rubs the body above the collar-bone, below the circle of the knees with the body, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body ... If she rubs something that may be cast with something that may be cast, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

BD.3.164

There is no offence if it is unintentional; if she is not thinking; if she does not know; if she does not consent; if she is mad, if her mind is unhinged, if she is in pain, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

Bi-Pj.5.2.3

Told is the First Offence involving Defeat in the Nuns' Analysis

¹ Cf. Vin.3.126.

NUNS' DEFEAT (PĀRĀJIKĀ) 6

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Sundarīnandā became pregnant by Saḷhā, Migāra's grandson. Until the embryo quickened she concealed it; when the embryo was matured, having left the Order, she gave birth. Nuns spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Lady, Sundarīnandā not long after leaving the Order gave birth. We wonder if she was pregnant when she was a nun?"

Bi-Pj.6.1.1
BD.3.165

"Yes, ladies."

"But how is it that you, lady, knowing that a nun had fallen into a matter involving defeat,² neither reproved her yourself, nor spoke to a group?"

"Whatever is blame for her, that is blame for me; whatever is disgrace for her, that is disgrace for me; whatever is dishonour for her, that is dishonour for me; whatever is loss for her, that is loss for me. How can I, ladies, speak to others of my own blame, my own disgrace, my own dishonour, my own loss?"

Those who were modest nuns looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, knowing that a nun had fallen into a matter involving defeat, neither reprove her herself, nor speak to a group?" Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, having given reasoned talk, questioned the monks, saying:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, knowing that a nun ... neither reproved her herself, nor spoke to a group?"

BD.3.166

"It is true, lord."

¹ Note by Sujato: Pārājika 2 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² As by Bi-Pj.5, having physical contact with a man.

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, knowing that a nun ... neither reprove her herself, nor speak to a group? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, knowing that a nun has fallen into a matter involving defeat, should neither herself reprove her, nor speak to a group, but when she may be remaining or deceased or expelled or withdrawn,¹ should afterwards speak thus: ‘Ladies, before I knew this nun, she was a sister like this and like that,’ and should neither herself reprove her nor should speak to a group, she also becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion, she is one who conceals a fault.”²

Vin.4.217

Bi-Pj.6.2.1

Whatever means: she who ...

Nun means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

She knows means: either she knows by herself or others tell her or she³ tells (her).

Has fallen into a matter involving defeat means: of the eight offences involving defeat⁴ (she) has fallen into a certain offence involving defeat.

Should neither herself⁵ reprove her means: should neither herself reprimand her.

BD.3.167

Nor should speak to a group means: nor should speak to other nuns.

But when she may be remaining or deceased means: Remaining means she is called remaining in her own characteristic.⁶ Deceased means she is called one who has passed away. Expelled means she herself comes to be leaving the Order or she is expelled by others. Withdrawn means she is called one who has gone over to the fold of a sect.¹

¹ avasatā. See Old Commentary, below. Critical Pali Dictionary gives “having entered, having arrived”; Pali-English Dictionary “withdrawn, gone away, one who has left a community and, gone over to another sect.” ² vajjapaṭicchādikā, not explained in the Old Commentary. Vin-a.903 says it is merely the name of this Pārājika offence. Cf. Monks’ Bu-Pc.64. ³ I.e., the nun who has committed the Pārājika offence, Vin-a.903. Cf. Vin.3.265 = BD.2.161. ⁴ Vin-a.903 says, a certain one of the four in common with monks and of the four not in common with monks. The nuns had to observe the Pārājika of the Bhikkhu-Pātimokkha, as well as their own. ⁵ attanā ... sayam. ⁶ ṭhitā nāma salinṅe ṭhitā vuccati.

Should afterwards speak thus: 'Ladies, before I knew this nun, she was a sister like this and like that,' and should neither herself reprove her means: should neither herself reprimand her; nor speak to a group means: nor should speak to other nuns.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Becomes one who is defeated means: as a withered leaf freed from the stalk cannot become green again,² so a nun, knowing that a nun has fallen into a matter involving defeat (and) thinking, 'I will neither myself reprove her, nor speak to a group,' in throwing off the responsibility,³ becomes one who is not a recluse, not a daughter of the Sakyans; therefore she is called, she becomes one who is defeated.

Is not in communion means: communion ... is therefore called not in communion.

There is no offence if she does not speak, thinking 'There will come to be quarrel or dispute or strife or contention for the Order'; if she does not speak, thinking 'There will come to be a schism in the Order or dissension in the Order'⁴; if she does not speak, thinking 'This one, harsh, rough, will bring⁵ danger to life or danger to the Brahma-life if she does not speak not seeing other suitable nuns; if she does not speak (though) not desiring to conceal; if she does not speak, thinking: 'It will be evident from her own action'; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.⁶

Bi-Pj.6.2.2

BD.3.168

Told is the Second Offence involving Defeat in the Nuns' Analysis

¹ titthāyatanaṃ saṃkantā. Cf. Vin.1.60, Vin.1.69, referring to one who formerly a member of another sect, titthiya, has gone back to it; Vin.2.279, where it is laid down that nuns who have joined the titthiyas, coming back to the Order of nuns, are not to be ordained again. Titthāyatana occurs at MN.i.483, AN.i.173, Ds.381, Ds.1003 See Buddhist Psychological Ethics, 2nd. edition p.93, n.9, and LEDI SAYADAW, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1913, p.117.

² Cf. Vin.1.96, Vin.3.47. ³ Cf. BD.1.82. ⁴ = Vin.4.37, Vin.4.128, Vin.4.153. ⁵ karissati, literally will do or make. ⁶ Cf. Vin.4.128 = above, BD.3.9.

NUNS' DEFEAT (PĀRĀJIKĀ) 7

Bi-Pj.7.1.1
BD.3.169

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā imitated the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer,² and who was suspended by a complete Order.³ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā imitate the monk ... suspended by a complete Order?” ... “It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā imitate the monk ... suspended by a complete Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should imitate him—a monk suspended by a complete Order, one who is disrespectful towards, who does not make amends towards,⁴ one who is unfriendly towards⁵ the rule,⁶ the discipline, the teacher's instruction—that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: ‘Lady, this monk, suspended by a complete Order, is disrespectful towards, he does not make amends towards, he is unfriendly towards the rule, the discipline, the teacher's instruction. Do not imitate this monk, lady.’ And if this nun, being spoken to thus by these nuns, should persist as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to the third time for giving up this (course). If, being admonished up to the third time, she should give it up, that is good. But if she should not give it up, she also becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion, she is an imitator of one who is suspended.”¹

BD.3.170

¹ Note by Sujato: Pārājika 3 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² See Monks' Bu-Pc.68, Bu-Pc.69.

³ See Monks' Bu-Pc.69. ⁴ apaṭikāra. Cf. Vin.1.97, appaṭikamma and paṭikaroti used with āpatti, an offence. Also AN.ii.241ff., yathādhammaṃ paṭikarissati, he (or she) will make amends according to the rule, for having fallen into a pārājika, saṃghādisesa, pācittiya or pāṭidesaniya(ka) offence (dhamma). Paṭikaroti is also “to confess.” ⁵ akatasahāya. Critical Pali Dictionary's “who has not taken an advocate” cannot be accepted here. ⁶ dhamma.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Complete Order means: belonging to the same communion, staying within the same boundary.²

Suspended means: suspended for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up an offence.³

Towards the rule, the discipline means: towards whatever is the rule, whatever is the discipline.⁴

Towards the teacher's instruction means: towards the conqueror's instruction, the enlightened one's instruction.⁵

Disrespectful means: he does not heed an Order or a group or an individual or a (formal) act.

Does not make amends towards means: he is suspended, not restored.⁶

Unfriendly towards means: monks belonging to the same communion are called friends. He who is not together with these is therefore called unfriendly.

Should imitate him means: if he becomes one of such views, of such indulgence, of such pleasures, she too becomes one of those views, of that indulgence, of those pleasures.

That nun means: whatever nun is an imitator of one who is suspended.

By the nuns⁷ means: by other nuns: these see, these hear; she should be told by these saying: 'Lady, this monk, suspended by a complete Order, ... do not imitate this monk, lady.' And a second time she should be told ... And a third time she should be told ... If she gives it up, that is good; if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having heard, they do not speak, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun, having been pulled into the midst of the Order, should be told: 'Lady, this monk, suspended by a complete Order, ... do not imitate this monk, lady.' And a second time ... And a third time she should be told ... If she gives it up, that is good; if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ As in Monks' Bu-Pc.68, this is more like Saṅghādisesa method and material than Pārājika.

² = above, BD.3.65, below, BD.3.193, and Vin.3.173. ³ = below, BD.3.193. ⁴ = below, BD.3.193.

⁵ = below, BD.3.193. ⁶ = above, BD.3.28, in definition of akataṇudhamma, "has not acted according to the rule." ⁷ Cf. Vin.3.178f., Vin.3.185.

That nun should be admonished. And thus, monks, should she be admonished: the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so imitated a monk suspended by a complete Order, one who is disrespectful towards, who does not make amends towards, who is unfriendly towards the rule, the discipline, the teacher's instruction. She does not give up this course. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order admonish the nun so and so in order that she may give up this course. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so ... She does not give up this course. The Order admonishes the nun so and so in order that she may give up this course. If the admonishing of the nun so and so in order that she may give up this course is pleasing to the ladies, let them be silent; if it is not pleasing, then you should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The nun so and so is admonished by the Order for giving up this course. It is pleasing to the Order ... So do I understand this.'

As a result of the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing; as a result of two proclamations there are grave offences; at the end of the proclamations, there is an offence involving defeat.

BD.3.172

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

She becomes one who is defeated means: as a flat stone broken in half cannot be put together again,¹ so a nun, being admonished up to the third time, not giving it up, becomes one who is not a (true) recluse, not a daughter of the Sakyans; therefore she is called she becomes one who is defeated.

Vin.4.220

Not in communion means: communion ... is therefore called not in communion.

Bi-Pj.7.2.2

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence involving defeat. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence involving defeat. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence involving defeat. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

¹ Cf. Vin.1.97, Vin.3.74.

There is no offence if she is not admonished; if she gives it up, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

Bi-Pj.7.2.3

Told is the Third Offence involving Defeat

¹ Cf. Vin.3.174, Vin.3.177, Vin.3.179, Vin.3.186; Vin.4.136, where last clause of Bi-Pj.7.2.2 ends anāpatti instead of, as on these other occasions, āpatti dukkaṭassa. ² Cf. Vin.3.174, Vin.3.177, Vin.3.179, Vin.3.186; Vin.4.136, where last clause of Bi-Pj.7.2.2 ends anāpatti instead of, as on these other occasions, āpatti dukkaṭassa.

NUNS' DEFEAT (PĀRĀJIKA) 8

Bi-Pj.8.1.1
BD.3.173

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns, filled with desire, for the sake of following what was verily not the rule,² consented to taking hold of the hand of a male person who was filled with desire, and they consented to taking hold of the edge of (his) outer robe, and they stood and they talked and they went to a rendezvous and they consented to a man's approaching (them) and they entered into a covered place and they disposed the body for such a purpose.³ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the group of six nuns, filled with desire, for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, consent to ... and stand and talk and go to a rendezvous ... and enter ... and dispose ...?” “It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: “How, monks, can the group of six nuns ... consent to ... dispose the body for such a purpose? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, filled with desire, for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, should consent to taking hold of the hand of a male person who is filled with desire or should consent to taking hold of the edge of (his) outer cloak or should stand or should talk or should go to a rendezvous or should consent to a man's approaching (her) or should enter into a covered place or should dispose the body for such a purpose, she also becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion, she is a doer of eight things.”¹

Vin.4.221

BD.3.174

¹ Note by Sujato: Pārājika 4 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² asaddhamma—i.e., Bu-Pj.1. Vin. a.904 calls asaddhamma “physical contact, not sexual intercourse.” Not explained in Old Commentary. ³ kāyam pi tadatthāya upasaṃharanti.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pj.8.2.1

Filled with desire means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.²

Filled with desire means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.³

A male person means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal; he is learned, competent to come into physical contact.⁴

Should consent to taking hold of the hand means: hand means, going up from the tip of the nail as far as the elbow.⁵ If for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she consents to taking hold below the collarbone, above the circles of the knees, there is a grave offence.

Or should consent to taking hold of the edge of (his) outer cloak means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she consents to take hold of what he is clothed in⁶ or of what he has put on,⁷ there is a grave offence.

Or should stand means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she stands within the reach of a man's hand, there is a grave offence.

Or should talk means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she talks standing within the reach of a man's hand, there is a grave offence.

Or should go to a rendezvous means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she, being told by a man, 'Come to such and such a place,' goes (there), for every step there is an offence of wrong-doing. In merely approaching the reach of a man's hand, there is a grave offence.

Or should consent to a man's approaching means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, she consents to a man's approaching, there is an offence of wrong-doing. In merely approaching a reach of his hand, there is a grave offence.

BD.3.175

¹ aṭṭhavattukā, not explained in the Old Commentary, but it means the eight actions here referred to. ² =above, BD.3.161. ³ =above, BD.3.161. ⁴ =above, BD.3.161. ⁵ =Vin.3.121 (BD.1.203). ⁶ nivattha, referring to his inner robe. ⁷ pāruta, referring to his upper robe and outer cloak.

Or should enter into a covered place means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, in merely entering any concealed place whatever, there is a grave offence.

Or should dispose the body for such a purpose means: if for the sake of following what is verily not the rule, standing within the reach of a man's hand, she disposes the body, there is a grave offence.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

She becomes one who is defeated means: as a palmyra tree cut off at the crown cannot become one for new growth,¹ so a nun, completing² the eight courses,³ becomes one who is not a (true) recluse, not a daughter of the Sakyans; therefore she is called she becomes one who is defeated.

Not in communion means: communion ... is therefore called not in communion.

Bi-Pj.8.2.2

There is no offence if it is not intentional; if she is not thinking; if she does not know; if she does not consent: if she is mad, her mind unhinged, afflicted with pain, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Told is the Fourth Offence involving Defeat

BD.3.176

Recited, ladies, are the eight offences⁴ involving defeat; a nun having fallen into one or other of these does not receive communion together with the nuns; as before, so after, she becomes one who is defeated, she is not in communion. Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.⁵

Vin.4.223

Told is the Portion on Defeat

¹ = Vin.1.97, Vin.3.92. ² paripūrentī, accomplishing. ³ vatthu, mode or course—i.e., the eight above specified. ⁴ According to Vin-a.906, four laid down for monks which are also to be followed by nuns, and these (above) four for nuns only; thus eight Pārājika rules are recited for the ladies at the joint recital the Pātimokkha. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxii.

⁵ Cf. Vin.3.109 = BD.1.190.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 1

These seventeen¹ things, venerable ones, entailing formal meetings of the Order, come for exposition.

Bi-Ss.1.1.1
BD.3.177

At one time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain lay-follower, having given a store-room² to an Order of nuns, passed away. He had two sons, one of no faith, not believing,³ the other with faith, believing. Then he of no faith, not believing, spoke thus to him with faith, believing: "The store-room is ours, let us deal it out."⁴ When he had spoken thus, the one with faith, believing, spoke thus to him of no faith, not believing: "Do not, sir, speak thus; it was given to the Order of nuns by our father." And a second time he of no faith, not believing, spoke thus to him with faith, believing: "The storeroom is ours, let us deal it out." Then the one with faith, believing, spoke thus to him of no faith, not believing: "Do not, sir, speak thus; it was given to the Order of nuns by our father." And a third time he of no faith ... "... let us deal it out." Then the one with faith, believing, thinking, "If it became mine, I also would give it to an Order of nuns," spoke thus to the one of no faith, not believing: "Let us deal it out." Then that store-room being dealt out by these, fell to⁵ him of no faith, not believing. Then the one of no faith, not believing, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "You must depart, ladies, the store-room is ours." When

BD.3.178

¹ Ten are given in this section; but seven are the same as those already given in the Saṅghādisesas for monks; see below, BD.3.212, n.1, and BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxiii. ² uddosita = bhaṇḍasālā (Vin-a.906). Uddosita is sometimes a stable; cf. Vin.3.200, and Vinaya Texts iii.363, n.2. At Vin.2.278 uddosita is "allowed," a lay-follower again being recorded to give one to an Order of nuns. ³ appasanna, or not pleased (with the master's teaching). ⁴ bhājāma; Sinhalese edition reads bhājema. ⁵ pāpuṇāti, to reach, attain, arrive at, to obtain to.

he had spoken thus, the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that man:

“Do not, sir, speak thus; the store-room was given to the Order of nuns by your father.”

Saying: “Was it given¹ (or) not given?” they asked the chief ministers of justice. The chief ministers spoke thus:

“Who knows, ladies, if it was given to the Order of nuns?” When they had spoken thus, the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to these chief ministers:

Vin.4.224

“But, masters, was not the gift seen or heard of by you as it was being given, eye-witnesses having been arranged?” Then the chief ministers, saying: “What the lady says is true,” made over the store-room to the Order of nuns. Then that man, defeated, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

“These shaven-headed (women) are not (true) recluses, they are strumpets.² How can they have the store-room taken away from us?” The nun Thullanandā told this matter to the chief ministers. The chief ministers had that man punished.³ Then that man, punished,⁴ having had a sleeping-place made for Naked Ascetics not far from the nunnery, instigated the Naked Ascetics, saying: “Talk down⁵ these nuns.” The nun Thullanandā told this matter to the chief ministers. The chief ministers had that man fettered. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns have a store-room taken away (from him) and secondly have him punished and thirdly have him fettered? Now they will have him killed.”

BD.3.179

Nuns heard these people as they ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Thullanandā be one who speaks in envy?”⁶ Then these nuns told this matter to the monks ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā is one who speaks in envy?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

¹ Square brackets in text, but Sinhalese edition reads dinno na dinno. ² Cf. below, BD.3.257, BD.3.275. The word translated as “strumpets” is bandhakiniyo; cf. Ja.5.425. ³ daṇḍāpesum, perhaps beaten with a stick. ⁴ daṇḍika. ⁵ accāvadatha. Vin-a.906 says atikkamitvā vadatha, akkosatha, having surpassed them, talk, swear at them. ⁶ ussayavādikā.

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā be one who speaks in envy? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should be one who speaks in envy concerning a householder or a householder’s sons (or brothers¹) or a slave or a workman² and even concerning a wanderer who is a recluse,³ that nun has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once,⁴ entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”⁵

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Ss.1.2.1

One who speaks in envy means: she is called a bringer of law-suits.⁶

Householder means: he who lives in a house.⁷

Householder’s sons (or brothers) means: whoever are sons and brothers.⁸

BD.3.180

Slave means: born within, bought for money, taken in a raid.⁹

Workman¹⁰ means: a hireling, a worker.¹¹

Wanderer who is a recluse means: setting aside monk and nun and probationer and novice and female novice, he who is endowed with (the status of) wanderer.¹²

Vin.4.225

If she thinks, “I will bring a law-suit,” or looks about for a companion or goes herself,¹³ there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she announces it to one (person), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she announces it to a second, there is a grave offence. At the end of the law-suit, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

¹ See Old Commentary below. ² kammakāra, or servant. ³ samaṇaparibbājaka. ⁴ paṭhamāpattikaṃ, which in Bi-Ss.1-Bi-Ss.6 is in opposition to yāvataṭṭhāyika, that which is not an offence until a nun has been admonished up to the third time (see Bu-Ss.7-Bu-Ss.10). Cf. Vin.3.186 (=BD.1.328). ⁵ nissāraṇiyaṃ saṅghādisesaṃ; cf. the similar construction, nissaggiyaṃ pācittiyaṃ, and see BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxvi. ⁶ aṭṭakārīkā, a maker of law-suits, cases, causes. ⁷ Cf. BD.2.47, BD.2.55, BD.2.148. ⁸ yo koci puttabhātaro. ⁹ = MN-a.3.8. These three are explained at Vin-a.361; four “slaves” mentioned at Mnd.11; cf. DN-a.1.168, DN-a.1.300. The last two, dhanakkīta and karamarāṇita (feminine) come into the description of the ten kinds of wife at Vin.3.140. ¹⁰ Cf. MN-a.3.8, DN-a.300. ¹¹ āhataka, “one who is beaten,” so Pali-English Dictionary. ¹² Cf. Vin.4.92, Vin.4.285. ¹³ Cf. Vin.3.47 (=BD.1.76). Above it means, according to Vin-a.907, if she looks about for a witness or friend; and if standing where there is a nunnery, or alms-road, she thinks, “I will bring a law-suit,” going from there to the magistrates, there is an offence of wrong-doing for every step that she takes.

An offence at once means: she falls through transgression of a course,¹ not after admonition.²

Involving being sent away means: she is caused to be sent away from the Order.³

Offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order means: the Order inflicts the mānattadiscipline on account of her offence, it sends back to the beginning, it rehabilitates; it is not several (nuns), it is not one nun, therefore it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. A synonym for this class of offence is (formal) act, therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.⁴

BD.3.181

Bi-Ss.1.2.2

There is no offence if she goes being dragged along by people; if she asks for protection; if she explains without reference (to a particular person); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ saha vatthujjhācārā. ² Cf. below, BD.3.203. ³ saṅghamhā nissāriyati, explained by Vin-a.908 as saṅghato nissāreti. The -sār- causative, “she is made or caused to be sent away.” See BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxvi. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.112 (BD.1.196).

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 2

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time in Vesālī, the wife of a certain Licchavi came to be an adulteress. Then that Licchavi spoke thus to that woman: "Please desist, else will we do you harm." But being spoken to thus, she paid no heed. Now at that time a group of Licchavis were assembled in Vesālī on some business. Then that Licchavi spoke thus to those Licchavis: "Let the masters allow me power over one woman."¹

Bi-Ss.2.1.1
BD.3.182

"What is her name?"

"My wife commits adultery, I will kill her."

"Take your right,"² they said. Then that woman heard: "My husband wants to kill me," and taking precious belongings, having gone to Sāvattḥī, having approached members of other sects, she asked for the going forth.³ The members of other sects did not wish to let her go forth.⁴ Having approached nuns, she asked for the going forth. Neither did the nuns wish to let her go forth. Having approached the nun Thullanandā, having shown (her) the belongings, she asked for the going forth. The nun Thullanandā, having taken the belongings, let her go forth. Then that Licchavi, searching for that woman, having gone to Sāvattḥī, seeing her gone forth among the nuns, approached King Pasenadi of Kosala; having approached, he spoke thus to King Pasenadi of Kosala:

Vin.4.226

"Sire, my wife, taking precious belongings, has reached Sāvattḥī; let the king⁵ allow me power over her."

"Well now, good sir, having examined⁶ (her), explain."

"Sire, she was seen gone forth among the nuns."

¹ ekam me ayyo itthim anujānātha. ² jānāhi. ³ pabbajjam yāci. ⁴ pabbājetum. ⁵ devo
⁶ vicinitvā.

BD.3.183 “If, good sir, she has gone forth among the nuns, there is nothing to do against her.¹ Well preached by the lord is dhamma; let her lead the Brahma-life for the utter ending of ill.”²

Then that Licchavi, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns let a woman thief go forth?”³

Nuns heard that Licchavi who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Thullanandā let a woman thief go forth?” Then these nuns told this matter to the monks ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā let a thief go forth?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: “How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā let a woman thief go forth? It is not monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

BD.3.184 “Whatever nun should knowingly receive⁴ a woman thief found to merit death,⁵ without having obtained permission⁶ from a king or an Order or a group⁷ or a guild⁸ or a company,⁹ unless she is allowable,¹⁰ that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

Bi-Ss.2.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood.

She knows means: either she knows by herself or others tell her or she tells her.

¹ na sā labbhā kiñci kāṭum, she is not a receiver of anything there is to do. ² Cf. Vin.1.74-75.

³ The Licchavi appears to lose sight of his wife’s original sin in his effort to recover the property. ⁴ vuṭṭhāpeti; cf. below, BD.3.361, and Introduction, p.xlvff. ⁵ vajjhā. ⁶ anapaloketvā, explained by anāpucchā, Old Commentary, below, and anāpucchitvā at Vin-a.910.

⁷ Vin-a.910 makes out that this means a group of wrestlers and so on. But, preceded by saṅgha, it might have the usual Vinaya meaning of a group (of two to four monks or nuns). On the other hand, it is followed by two words that have no religious significance, and which denote associations of people “in the world.” ⁸ pūga = dhammapūga, “a guild under dhamma” (?), Vin-a.910. Probably a guild governed by some rule or law. ⁹ seṇi, a corporation, company or guild of artisans or traders following the same business or dealing in the same articles. Vin-a.910 says here it is a seṇi of perfumers, of cloth merchants. Number given as eighteen at Ja.6.22. ¹⁰ kappā.

Woman thief¹ means: she who takes by means of theft (anything) having the value of five māsakas or more than five māsakas that has not been given—she is called a woman thief.

To merit death means: having done that for which she is condemned to death.

Found² means: she becomes known³ by other people, thinking, ‘This one merits death.’

Without having obtained permission means: not asking (for permission).⁴

King means: where a king governs,⁵ the king’s permission should be obtained.⁶

Order means: it is called an Order of nuns; the permission of the Order of nuns should be obtained.

Group means: where a group governs, the group’s permission should be obtained.

Company means: where a company governs, the company’s permission should be obtained.

Unless she is allowable means: having set aside one who is allowable. Allowable means: there are two who are allowable: either she who has gone forth among members of other sects, or she who has gone forth among other nuns.⁷

Vin.4.227

If she thinks, “I will receive one, unless she is allowable,” and looks about for a group or for a female teacher or for a bowl or for a robe or if she determines a boundary,⁸ there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of two proclamations, there are grave offences. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence involving a formal meeting of the Order for the female preceptor, an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the female teacher.⁹

BD.3.185

¹ Here feminine = Vin.3.47 (masculine). ² viditā. ³ ñātā. ⁴ =below, BD.3.360.

⁵ anusāsati, to govern, rule, advise, give instruction. ⁶ rājā apaloketabbo, or “the king should be asked for permission. But in spite of this grammatical construction, I think the two words, apaloketi and āpucchati, should be differently rendered. ⁷ These may be ordained without asking for permission.

⁸ See Vin.1.106 for prescribed method of determining a boundary. ⁹ With this passage, cf. above, BD.3.13, and below, BD.3.362.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Bi-Ss.2.2.2

If she thinks that she is a thief when she is a thief (and) receives her, unless she is allowable, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is in doubt ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not a thief when she is a thief ... no offence. If she thinks that she is a thief when she is not a thief, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not a thief, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not a thief when she is not a thief, there is no offence.

Bi-Ss.2.2.3

There is no offence if she receives her, not knowing; if she receives one, she having obtained permission; if she receives one who is made allowable; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 3

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,¹ having quarrelled with nuns, went to a family of (her) relations² in a village. Bhaddā Kāpilānī, not seeing that nun, asked the nuns, saying: "Where is so and so? She is not to be seen."

Bi-Ss.3.1.1
BD.3.186

"Lady, she is not to be seen (because) she has quarrelled with nuns."

"My dears,³ a family of her relations are in such and such a village; having gone there, look for her."

The nuns, having gone there, having seen that nun, spoke thus: "Why did you, lady, come alone? We hope that you were not violated?"

"I was not violated, ladies," she said. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can a nun go among villages⁴ alone?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun went among villages alone?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun go among villages alone? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

Vin.4.228

Whatever nun should go among villages alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the

BD.3.187

¹ A pupil (or pupils) of hers mentioned also at Vin.4.268ff. Bhaddā Kāpilānī mentioned with Thullanandā at Vin.4.290, Vin.4.292. Her verses are at Thig.63–Thig.66. Thig-a.68–69 says that, having gone forth under Mahāpajāpati, she soon won arahanship. Called foremost of the nuns able to remember previous lives, AN.i.25. N.B. That, although nuns address her as "lady," she otherwise lacks a descriptive title. ² Vism.91 distinguishes between ñātikula (as above), a family of relatives, and upaṭṭhākakula, a family of supporters. ³ amma.

⁴ gāmantaram, defined at Vin.4.63=131.

Order involving being sent away.”

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Bi-Ss.3.2.1

At that time two nuns were going along the high-road from Sāketa to Sāvattthī. On the way there was a river to be crossed.¹ Then these nuns, having approached a boatman, spoke thus:

“Please, sir, take us across.”

Saying, “I am not able, ladies, to take both across at once,” he made one cross alone with him²; one who was across seduced the one who was across, one who was not across seduced the one who was not across. These, having met afterwards, asked (one another): “I hope that you, lady, were not violated?”

“I was violated, lady. But were you violated, lady?”

“I was violated, lady.” Then these nuns, having arrived at Sāvattthī, told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying :

“How can a nun go to the other side of a river alone?” Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun went to the other side of a river alone?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can a nun go to the other side of a river alone? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

BD.3.188

“Whatever nun should go among villages alone, or should go to the other side of a river alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

¹ Cf. Vin.4.65. ² eko ekam uttāresi. Cf. eko ekāya in the Aniyatas, Vin.3.187ff. meaning, the one (a monk) with the other (a woman); here meaning a man (eko) and a nun (ekam). They crossed alone together. In Monks’ Bu-Pc.28 it is evidently thought safer to allow a nun to cross a river with a monk than to wait behind on the bank.

At that time several nuns, going to Sāvattthī through the country of Kosala, arrived in the evening at a certain village. A certain nun there was beautiful, good to look upon, charming. A certain man came to be in love with that nun on account of her appearance. Then that man, appointing a sleeping-place for those nuns, appointed a sleeping-place at one side for this nun. Then this nun, having realised, “This man is obsessed¹; if I come at night there will be trouble for me,”² not asking the nuns (for permission), having gone to a certain family, lay down in the sleeping-place. Then that man, having come during the night, searching for that nun, knocked against the nuns. The nuns, not seeing this nun, spoke thus: “Doubtless this nun has gone out together with the man.”

Bi-Ss.3.3.1

Vin.4.229

Then this nun, at the end of that night, approached those nuns. The nuns spoke thus to that nun: “Why did you, lady, go out together with the man?”

Saying: “Ladies, I did not go out together with the man,” she told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can a nun be away for a night alone ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun was away for a night alone? ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should go among villages alone, or should go to the other side of a river alone, or should be away for a night alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

At that time several nuns were going along the highroad to Sāvattthī through the country of Kosala. A certain nun there, wanting to relieve herself, having stayed behind alone, went on afterwards. People, having seen that nun, seduced her. Then that nun approached those nuns. The nuns spoke thus to that nun: “Why did you, lady, stay behind alone? We hope that you were not violated?”

Bi-Ss.3.4.1
BD.3.189

“I was violated, ladies.”

¹ = Vin.4.94. ² = Vin.4.212.

Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can a nun stay behind a group alone?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun stayed behind a group alone?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: “How, monks, can a nun stay behind a group alone? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not” (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should go among villages alone, or should go to the other side of a river alone, or should be away for a night alone, or should stay behind a group alone, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

Vin.4.230

Bi-Ss.3.5.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should go among villages alone means: in making the first foot cross¹ the enclosure of a village that is fenced in, there is a grave offence. In making the second foot cross, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.² In making the first foot cross the precincts of a village that is not fenced in, there is a grave offence. In making the second foot cross, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Or should go to the other side of a river alone means: having covered up the three circles,³ it is called a river there wherever, as a nun is crossing over, the inner robe is made wet. In making the first foot cross over,⁴ there is a grave offence. In making the second foot cross over, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

BD.3.190

Or should be away for a night alone means: at sunrise, if leaving a hand’s reach of a nun who is a companion, there is a grave offence. When she has left it, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Or should stay behind a group alone means: if she, in what is not a village, in what is jungle, is leaving the range⁵ of sight or the range of hearing of a nun who is a companion, there is a grave offence. When she has left it, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

¹ atikkāmentiyā. Atikkamati is to go beyond, to pass over. ² Cf. Vin.3.52. ³ I.e., the navel and the two knees. ⁴ uttarantiyā. ⁵ upacāra, literally precincts; cf. Vin.4.93.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

There is no offence if the nun who is the companion has gone away or has left the Order or has passed away or has gone over to (another) side¹; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

Bi-Ss.3.5.2

¹ Cf. Vin.4.313 below, and Vin.1.60, where these four words occur. Of the last, pakkhasaṃkanta, Vinaya Texts i.178, n.1 says, “Buddhaghosa can scarcely be right in explaining it by titthiyapakkhasaṃkanta.” The commentarial explanation on the above passage is titthāyatānaṃ saṃkantā, gone over to members of another sect (Vin-a.913), a phrase which also occurs at Vin.4.217 (=above, BD.3.167). At the same time, I do not think that pakkha necessarily means “a (schismatic) faction,” as translated at Vinaya Texts i.178, although it undoubtedly has this meaning at Vin.3.173, Vin.3.175. For it can also mean another side or part of the Order, one of its sub-divisions, and in such cases does not imply any hostility, schism or dissension. At Vin.1.307f., we hear of people giving water and robes to one and the same pakkha or to different pakkha. In the former case the pakkha is said to be the owner, in the latter the saṅgha. Had the pakkha been regarded as schismatic, it would hardly have been considered entitled to receive these gifts. ² Cf. below, BD.3.353.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 4

Bi-Ss.4.1.1
BD.3.191

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ the nun Caṇḍakālī² was one who made strife, who made quarrels, who made contention, who made brawls, who made disputes in the Order.³ The nun Thullanandā protested when a (formal) act was being carried out against her.⁴ At that time the nun Thullanandā went to a village on some business. Then the Order of nuns, thinking: "The nun Thullanandā has gone away," suspended⁵ the nun Caṇḍakālī for not seeing an offence. The nun Thullanandā having concluded that business in the village, returned again to Sāvattthī. When the nun Thullanandā was coming, the nun Caṇḍakālī neither made ready a seat, nor put out⁶ water for washing her feet, a foot-stool,⁷ a foot-stand,⁸ nor having gone out to meet her did she take her bowl and robe, nor did she offer her drinking-water. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to the nun Caṇḍakālī:

Vin.4.231

"Why did you, lady, when I was coming, neither make ready a seat for me nor put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand, nor having gone out to meet me, take my howl and robe, nor offer me drinking-water?"

BD.3.192

"Surely it is this, lady, that I am without a mistress⁹ in regard to this."

¹ Cf. Nuns' Bi-Pc.53 below. ² An obstreperous nun, mentioned at Vin.4.276, Vin.4.277, Vin.4.293, Vin.4.309, Vin.4.331, Vin.4.333. ³ Cf. Vin.4.12, Vin.4.150, Vin.4.309. At AN.iii.252 it is said that five disadvantages are to be expected for such a monk—also probably for such a nun. ⁴ Cf. above, BD.3.58. ⁵ ukkhipi. On ukkhitta, past participle of ukkhīpati, see above, BD.3.28, n.4. ⁶ upanikkhipati, to lay down near, to store. ⁷ pādapīṭha. Vin-a.913 says a stool (ṭhapanaka) to put the washed feet on. ⁸ pādakathalika. According to Vin-a.913, "a stool to put the unwashed feet on"—i.e., probably another kind of foot-stool. Buddhaghosa on Kd.12.1.1 says that pādakathalika alternatively means a towel to rub the feet with. This word and the two preceding occur also at Vin.1.9, Vin.1.312; Vin.2.22, Vin.2.31; see Vinaya Texts i.92, n., Vinaya Texts ii.373, n.5. ⁹ anāthā, or helpless, deserted, without a protector.

“But why are you, lady, without a mistress?”

“Lady, these nuns, saying of me, ‘She is without a mistress, she is not esteemed, there is no one who can answer for¹ her,’ suspended me for not seeing an offence.”

The nun Thullanandā, saying, “These are ignorant, these are inexperienced, they do not (even) know a (formal) act or the defect of a (formal) act² or the failure of a (formal) act³ or the success of a (formal) act⁴; but we know a (formal) act and the defect of a (formal) act and the failure of a (formal) act and the success of a (formal) act, and we may make them carry out a (formal) act that was not carried out or we may find fault with⁵ a (formal) act that was carried out,” and having very quickly convened an Order of nuns, she restored⁶ the nun Caṇḍakalī. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā, without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings⁷ in accordance with the rule, the discipline, the teacher’s instruction,⁸ not having learnt the desire⁹ of a group, restore a nun suspended by a complete Order?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, without having obtained permission ... restored a nun suspended by a complete Order?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, without having obtained permission ... restore a nun suspended by a complete Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings in accordance with the rule, the discipline, the teacher’s instruction, not having learnt the group’s desire, should restore a nun suspended by a complete Order, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

¹ pativattar. Word occurs also at SN.i.222. ² kammadosa. ³ kammavipatti.
⁴ kammasampatti. ⁵ kopeyyāma. Cf. above, BD.3.63, kopetukāma. ⁶ osāreti. Cf. Vin.4.137=above, BD.3.28, q.v. and note. ⁷ kāraṣaṅgha. ⁸ Cf. Vin.4.126, Vin.4.152, Vin.4.218. ⁹ chanda, desire or partiality, as in the four agatis; consent of an absentee, as in Monks’ Bu-Pc.79, Bu-Pc.80.

Bi-Ss.4.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Vin.4.232

Complete Order means: belonging to the same communion, staying within the same boundary.¹

Suspended means: suspended for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up an offence.²

In accordance with the rule, the discipline means: according to whatever is the rule, according to whatever is the discipline.³

(In accordance with) the teacher's instruction means: in accordance with the conqueror's instruction, the enlightened one's instruction.⁴

Without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings means: not having asked (the permission) of the Order which carried out the (formal) act.

Not having learnt⁵ the desire means: not having known the desire of a group.

BD.3.194

If she thinks, “I will restore (her),” (and) looks about for a group or determines a boundary, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of two proclamations, there are grave offences. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Bi-Ss.4.2.2

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) restores her, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) restores her, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.65, BD.3.170, and Vin.3.173. ² Cf. above, BD.3.170. ³ Cf. above, BD.3.170.

⁴ Cf. above, BD.3.170. ⁵ anaññāya ... ajānitvā.

There is no offence if, having obtained permission from, the Order which carried out the (formal) act, she restores (her); if she restores (her) having known that it is the desire of the group; if she restores one who is behaving so as to get rid of the fault¹; if she restores (her), there being no Order which carried out the (formal) act; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Ss.4.2.3

¹ vatte vattantiṃ osāreti, one taking steps about, proceeding in regard to, what has been done.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 5

Bi-Ss.5.1.1
BD.3.195

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Sundarīnanda was beautiful, good to look upon, charming.¹ People, having seen the nun Sundarīnanda in the refectory, were filled with desire (and) gave the very best meals to the nun Sundarīnanda² who was filled with desire. The nun Sundarīnanda ate as much as she pleased; other nuns did not obtain as much as expected. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Sundarīnanda, filled with desire, having accepted with her own hand from the hand of a man who is filled with desire, solid food, soft food, eat it, partake of it?" ...

Vin.4.233

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Sundarīnanda, filled with desire ... ate it, partook of it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the nun Sundarīnanda, filled with desire, having accepted with her own hand ... solid food or soft food, eat it, partake of it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... And thus, monks ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, filled with desire, having accepted with her own hand from the hand of a man who is filled with desire, solid food or soft food, should eat it or partake of it, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away."

Bi-Ss.5.2.1

BD.3.196

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ Cf. Vin.4.211 (=above, BD.3.156), Vin.4.234 (=below, BD.3.198). ² To here from beginning = Bi-Ss.6.

Filled with desire¹ means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.

Filled with desire² means: infatuated, full of desire, physically in love with.

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal³; he is learned, competent to be infatuated.

Solid food means: having set aside the five (kinds of) meals⁴ (and) water for cleansing the teeth,⁵ the rest is called solid food.

Soft food means: the five kinds (of) meals: conjei, barley-meal, food made with flour, fish, meat.⁶

If, thinking, "I will eat, I will partake of," she accepts, there is a grave offence. For every mouthful there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If one is filled with desire (and) she accepts, thinking, "I will eat, I will partake of," there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is a grave offence. If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If both are filled with desire (and) thinking, "I will eat, I will partake of," she accepts from the hand of a yakkha or of a departed one or of a eunuch or of an animal in human form, there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful there is a grave offence. If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If one is filled with desire (and) she accepts, thinking, "I will eat, I will partake of," there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ =above, BD.3.161. ² =above, BD.3.161. ³ =above, BD.3.161. ⁴ Cf. Vin.4.83. ⁵ See Monks' Bu-Pc.40. ⁶ =Vin.4.83.

Bi-Ss.5.2.3

There is no offence if neither comes to be filled with desire; if she accepts, knowing, "He is not filled with desire"; if he is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 6

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Sundarīnandā was beautiful, good to look upon, charming. People, having seen the nun Sundarīnandā in the refectory, were filled with desire (and) gave the very best meals to the nun Sundarīnandā.¹ The nun Sundarīnandā, being scrupulous, did not accept. The nun immediately following her² spoke thus to the nun Sundarīnandā: "Why do you, lady, not accept?"

Bi-Ss.6.1.1
BD.3.198

"He is filled with desire, lady."

"But are you, lady, filled with desire?"

"I am not filled with desire."

"What can this man,³ whether he is filled with desire or not filled with desire, do to you, lady, since you are not filled with desire? Please, lady, eat or partake of the solid food or the soft food which this man is giving to you, you having accepted it with your own hand."

Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun speak thus: 'What can this man ... Please, lady, eat or partake of ... having accepted it with your own hand'?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun spoke thus: 'What can this man ... Please, lady, eat or partake of ... having accepted it with your own hand'?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun speak thus: 'What can this man ... Please, lady, eat or partake of ... having accepted it with your own hand'? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

BD.3.199

¹ = opening of Bi-Ss.5, above. ² I.e., in the procession for alms. ³ purisapuggala, as at Vin.4.212.

“Whatever nun should speak thus: ‘What can this man, whether he is filled with desire or not filled with desire, do to you, lady, since you are not filled with desire? Please, lady, eat or partake of the solid food or the soft food which this man is giving to you, you having accepted it with your own hand,’ that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence at once, entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

Bi-Ss.6.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should speak thus: ‘What can this man ... with your own hand’ (and) instigates¹ her, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, at her bidding she accepts, thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is a grave offence. At the end of the meal, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Vin.4.235

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Offence at once means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Bi-Ss.6.2.2

If she instigates her, saying: “Accept water for cleansing the teeth,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, at her bidding she accepts, thinking, “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing.

If one is filled with desire (and) she instigates her saying: “Eat or partake of solid food or soft food from the hand of a yakkha or of a departed one or of a eunuch or of an animal in human form,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, at her bidding she accepts, thinking: “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of wrong-doing. At the end of the meal, there is a grave offence. If she instigates her, saying: “Accept water for cleansing the teeth,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. If at her bidding she accepts, thinking: “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing,

BD.3.200

Bi-Ss.6.2.3

There is no offence if she instigates her knowing that he is not filled with desire; if she instigates her, thinking: “Being angry, she does not accept”; if she instigates her, thinking: “She does not accept out of compassion for a family”; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ uyyojeti.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 10

Bi-Ss.10.1.1
BD.3.201

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakālī, having quarrelled with nuns,² angry, displeased, spoke thus: "I repudiate³ the enlightened one, I repudiate dhamma, I repudiate the Order, I repudiate the training. What indeed are these recluses who are recluses, daughters of the Sakyans? For there are other recluses, conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training; I will lead the Brahma-life among these." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Caṇḍakālī, a nun, angry, displeased, speak thus: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these?'" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakālī, angry, displeased, spoke thus: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these?'"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

Vin.4.236

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakālī, angry, displeased, speak thus: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, angry, displeased, should speak thus: 'I repudiate the enlightened one ... I repudiate the training. What indeed are these recluses who are recluses, daughters of the Sakyans? For there are other recluses, conscientious, scrupulous,' desirous of training; I will lead the Brahma-life among these,' that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Do not, lady, angry, displeased, speak thus: "I repudiate the enlightened one ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these." Be satisfied, lady, dhamma is well preached, lead the Brahma-life for the utter ending of ill.' And if that nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, persists as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to a third time¹ for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to a third time, she should give it up, that is good. If she should not give it up, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition),² entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away."

BD.3.202

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 7 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² See Bi-Ss.4, where she is again shown as quarrelsome. ³ paccācikkhati, intensive of paccakkhāti, on which see BD.1.40, n.2.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Angry, displeased means: dissatisfied, the mind worsened, stubborn.³

Should speak thus means: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these.'

That nun means: whatever nun speaks thus.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these⁴: "Do not, lady, angry, displeased ... for the utter ending of ill." And a second time she should be told, and a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. If she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having heard, they do not speak, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And that nun, having been pulled into the midst of the Order, should be told: "Do not, lady, angry, displeased, speak thus: 'I repudiate the enlightened one, I repudiate, dhamma, I repudiate the Order, I repudiate the training ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these.' Be satisfied, lady, ... lead the Brahma-life for the utter ending of ill." And a second time she should be told, and a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. If she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun should be admonished. And thus, monks should she be admonished: the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: "Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so, angry, displeased, spoke thus: 'I repudiate ... I will lead the Brahma-life among these.' She does not give up this course. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order admonish the nun so and so for giving up this course. This is the motion.

¹ yāvatatiyaṃ. ² yāvatatīyakāṃ. Cf. BD.1.328, n.2. ³ = Vin.3.255 (BD.2.140), Vin.4.146 (above, BD.3.47), Vin.4.238 (below, BD.3.206); cf. Vin.3.163 (BD.1.281). ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.178, Vin.3.185 (BD.1.312, BD.1.326).

Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so ... She does not give up this course. The Order admonishes the nun so and so for the giving up of this course. If the admonition of the mm so and so for the giving up of this course is pleasing to the ladies, let them be silent. If it is not pleasing, then you should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The nun so and so is admonished by the Order for the giving up of this course. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.”

As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing; as a result of two proclamations, there are grave offences. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is committing an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the offence of wrong-doing according to the motion and the grave offences according to the two proclamations, subside.¹

She also means: she is so called in reference to the former.

Up to the third time means: she falls on the third admonition, not through transgression of a course.²

Involving being sent away means: she is caused to be sent away by the Order.

Offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

BD.3.204

Bi-Ss.10.2.2

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.³

¹ Cf. BD.1.302, BD.1.307, BD.1.313, BD.1.327. ² Cf. above, BD.3.180. ³ Cf. BD.1.302, BD.1.307, BD.1.313, BD.1.327.

There is no offence if she is not admonished, if she gives it up; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

Bi-Ss.10.2.3

¹ Cf. BD.1.302, BD.1.307, BD.1.313, BD.1.327.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 11

Bi-Ss.11.1.1
BD.3.205

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakālī,² overthrown³ in some legal question, angry, displeased, spoke thus: "The nuns are following a wrong course through desire and the nuns are following a wrong course through hatred and the nuns are following a wrong course through stupidity and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady, the nun Caṇḍakālī ... displeased, speak thus: '... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear?'" ...

Vin.4.238

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakālī, ... displeased, speak thus: '... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear'? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, overthrown in some legal question, angry, displeased, should speak thus: 'The nuns are following a wrong course through desire ... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear,' that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Do not, lady, overthrown in some legal question, angry, displeased, speak thus: "The nuns are following a wrong course through desire ... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear." The lady herself⁴ may go (wrong)⁵ from desire, and she may go (wrong) from hatred and she may go (wrong) from stupidity and she may go (wrong) from fear.' And if this nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, persists as before, she should be admonished up to a third time for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to a third time, she should give it up, that is good. If she should not give it up, that nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition), entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away.”

BD.3.206

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 8 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² Cf. Bi-Ss.4, Bi-Ss.10.

³ paccākatā. ⁴ kho. ⁵ gaccheyya.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Ss.11.2.1

In some legal question means: legal question means, there are four (kinds of) legal questions: legal questions arising out of disputes legal questions arising out of censure, legal questions arising out of transgressions, legal questions arising out of obligations.¹

Overthrown means: she is called defeated.²

Angry, displeased means: dissatisfied, the mind worsened, stubborn.³

Should speak thus means: saying, “The nuns are following a wrong course through desire ... and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear.”

That nun means: whatever nun speaks thus.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these: “Do not, lady, overthrown ... and she may go (wrong) from fear.” And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told ... (see Bi-Ss.10.2.1–Bi-Ss.10.2.3. Instead of Do not, lady, angry, etc., read Do not, lady, overthrown, etc.; instead of this nun so and so, angry, etc., read this nun so and so, overthrown, etc.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.239

¹ = Vin.3.164 (BD.1.282), BD.4.126 (=above, BD.3.6). ² parājītā. ³ See BD.3.47 above, for references.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 12

Bi-Ss.12.1.1
BD.3.207

¹ ... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns who were pupils of the nun Thullanandā lived in company,² they were of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living,³ vexing⁴ the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins.⁵ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns live in company ... concealing one another's sins?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns live in company ... concealing one another's sins?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns live in company ... concealing one another's sins? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"In case nuns live in company, of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins, those nuns should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Sisters are living in company ... concealing one another's sins. Let the ladies desist⁶; the Order praises this detachment in sisters.' But if these nuns, being spoken to thus by the nuns, should persist as before, these nuns should be admonished by the nuns up to the third time for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to the third time they should give it up, that is good. If they should not give it up, these nuns also have fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition), entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away."

BD.3.208

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 9 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² saṃsaṅghā viharati. Cf. Vin.4.293, saṃsaṅghā viharati gahapatināpi gahapatiputtana pi, with householders and householders' sons; Vin.4.333, purisaṃsaṅghā kumārakaṃsaṅghā, in the company of men and youths; Vin.2.4, gihisaṃsaṅgho, in the company of, or in association with, householders. Vin-a.915 says missibhūtā, become mixed up with (the world), and that in regard to the body they were pounding and cooking for householders, perfuming and adorning themselves, using garlands and chains, and in regard to their speech they were acting as go-betweens, carrying messages and replies. Saṃsaṅghā viharati occurs at AN.iii.109. ³ pāpasiloka. ⁴ vihesikā. Cf. vihesā, vexation, at BD.3.41 above; and vihesaka, vexing, at Vin.4.36 (= BD.2.231f.), where it means keeping silence. ⁵ vajja. Cf. Vin.3.171 (= BD.1.297).

In case nuns means: they are called ordained.

Bi-Ss.12.2.1

Are living in company means: in company means that they are living in company unbecomingly in regard to body and speech.

Of evil habits means: they are possessed of depraved habits.

Of evil report means: they are notorious¹ because of (their)² bad reputation.³

Of evil ways of living means: they lead life by means of an evil, wrong mode of livelihood.

Vexing the Order of nuns means: they protest when a (formal) act is being carried out against each other.

Vin.4.240

Concealing one another's sins means: they reciprocally conceal a sin.

Those nuns means: those nuns who live in company.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; they should be told by these: "Sisters are living in company ... detachment in sisters." And a second time they should be told. And a third time they should be told ... (see Bi-Ss.10.2.1. Instead of Do not, ladies, angry, etc., read Sisters are living in company, etc.; instead of that nun) ... does not give up that course read those nuns ... do not give up that course; instead of this nun so and so read these nuns so and so and so and so are living in company ... they do not give up that course ... the nuns so and so and so and so should be admonished ... are admonished for giving up that course ... If they are committing an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the offence of wrong-doing according to the motion and the grave offences according to the two proclamations, subside.

BD.3.209

⁶ viviccati, separate themselves, be alone. Cf. below, BD.3.210. ¹ abbhuggatā, literally spread abroad. ² Vin-a.915 says "the bad reputation of these, etāsāṃ, means 'evil report.'

³ pāpaka kittisadda.

Two or three should be admonished together. More than that should not be admonished together.

These nuns also means: they are so called in reference to the former.

Up to the third time means: they fall on the third admonition, not through transgression of a course.

Involving being sent away means: they are caused to be sent away¹ from the Order,

Offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order means: ... therefore again it is called an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order.

Bi-Ss.12.2.2

If they think that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) do not give up ... (see Bi-Ss.10.2.2) ... If they think that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Bi-Ss.12.2.3

There is no offence if they are not admonished; if they give it up; if they are mad, if they are the first wrong-doers.

¹ Oldenberg, Vin.4.366, says that the correct reading is nissāriyanti, as against text's nissāriyati.

NUNS' FORMAL MEETING (SAṄGHĀDISESA) 13

¹ ... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, admonished by the Order, spoke thus to the nuns: "Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise. For there are in the Order other nuns of such habits, of such repute, of such ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins²; the Order does not say anything to these. It is to you yourselves that the Order, out of disrespect, out of contempt, out of impatience,³ in gossiping, on poor evidence,⁴ says this: 'Sisters are living in company, of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins. Let the ladies desist; the Order praises this detachment in sisters.'" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

Bi-Ss.13.1.1
BD.3.210

Vin.4.241

"How can the lady Thullanandā, admonished by the Order, speak thus to nuns: 'Ladies, live you as though in company ... detachment in sisters' ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, admonished by the Order, spoke thus to nuns: 'Ladies, live you ... detachment in sisters'?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, admonished by the Order, speak thus to nuns: 'Ladies, live you ... praises this detachment in sisters'? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should speak thus: 'Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise. For there are in the Order other nuns of such habits, of such repute, of such ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins; the Order does not say anything to these. It is to you yourselves that the Order, out of disrespect, out of contempt, out of impatience, in gossiping, on poor evidence, says this: "Sisters are living in company, of evil habits, of evil repute, of evil ways of living, vexing the Order of nuns, concealing one another's sins. Let the ladies desist, the Order praises this detachment in sisters," — that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Do not, lady, speak thus: "Sisters are living in company ... detachment in sisters.'" And if that nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, should persist as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to a third time for giving up that (course). If, being admonished up to a third time, she should give it up, that is good. If she should not give it up, this nun also has fallen into a matter that is an offence on the third (admonition), entailing a formal meeting of the Order involving being sent away."

BD.3.211

¹ Note by Sujato: Saṅghādisesa 10 in I.B. Horner's edition. ² See Bi-Ss.12. ³ Five disadvantages of being "impatient" given at AN.iii.254. ⁴ dubbalyatā. See Journal of the Pali Text Society 1886, p.129.

Bi-Ss.13.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should speak thus means: 'Ladies, live you as though in company ... It is to you yourselves that the Order, out of disrespect means: out of disesteem.

Out of contempt¹ means: out of disdain.

Out of impatience means: out of ill-temper.²

In gossiping means: made into talk.³

On poor evidence means: not having partisans.⁴

Vin.4.242

Says this means: it says, 'Sisters are living in company ... detachment in sisters.'

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these: "Do not, lady, speak thus: 'Ladies, live you as though in company ... detachment in sisters.'" And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told ... (see Bi-Ss.10.2.1–Bi-Ss.10.2.3. Instead of do not, lady, angry, etc. read do not, lady, speak thus, etc. Read: Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so, admonished by the Order, speaks thus to the nuns: 'Ladies, live you as though in company,' etc.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

BD.3.212

¹ paribhavena ... pāribhavyatā. ² kopena. ³ vibhassikatā. ⁴ Text reads appakkhatā; Sinhalese edition apakkhatā = a + pakkha + tā, being without a faction, a side, thus without partisans (as Critical Pali Dictionary).

Recited, ladies, are the seventeen matters that are offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order—nine which are offences at once, eight¹ on the third (admonition). A nun having fallen into one or other of these shall spend a fortnight in mānatta discipline² before both Orders. If, when the nun has performed the mānatta discipline, the Order of nuns should number twenty, then that nun may be rehabilitated. But if the Order of nuns, numbering less than twenty even by one, should rehabilitate that nun, that nun is not rehabilitated, and those nuns are blameworthy; this is the proper course there. Concerning this, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.

Bi-Ss.13.3.1

Told are the Seventeen

Vin.4.243

¹ Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.915 brings the ten Saṅghādisesas here set out up to seventeen by saying that, besides these six that are offences at once, there are also three that are included in the Mahāvibhaṅga (Bu-Ss.5, Bu-Ss.8, Bu-Ss.9); and besides these four that are offences at the third admonition, there are also four that are included in the Mahāvibhaṅga (Bu-Ss.10, Bu-Ss.11, Bu-Ss.12, Bu-Ss.13). The nuns have four more Saṅghādisesas than the monks. See also BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxiii. ² pakkhamānatta. Buddhaghosa says that he will explain this phrase in detail in a Khandhaka. Pakkha here almost certainly has the meaning of one-half of the lunar month.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 1

Bi-NP.1.1.1
BD.3.213

These thirty rules, ladies, for offences of expiation involving forfeiture come up for recitation.

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ the group of six nuns made a hoard of many bowls. People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place and seeing (this hoard), looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns make a hoard of many bowls? Will these nuns do a trade in bowls or will they set up an earthenware shop?"

Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns make a hoard of bowls?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns made a hoard of bowls?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the group of six nuns make a hoard of bowls? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should make a hoard of bowls, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture."

Bi-NP.1.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bowl² means: there are two (kinds of) bowls: an iron bowl, a clay bowl.

BD.3.214

There are three sizes for a bowl: a large bowl, a medium-sized bowl, a small bowl. A large bowl means that it takes half an ālḥaka measure of boiled rice, or¹ a quarter of that quantity of uncooked rice or a suitable curry. A medium-sized bowl means that it, takes a nālīka measure of boiled rice, a quarter of that quantity of uncooked rice, a suitable curry. A small bowl means that it takes a pattha measure of boiled rice, a quarter of that quantity of uncooked rice, a suitable curry. (A bowl) greater than that is not a bowl, (a bowl) smaller (than that) is not a bowl.

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-NP.21 (BD.2.113f.) where, however, the offence is to keep an extra bowl; and also Monks' Bu-NP.1 (BD.2.1f.). ² = BD.2.115 (Vin.3.243) and cf. BD.2.415 (Vin.4.123).

Vin.4.244

Should make a hoard means: what is not allotted, not assigned.²

It is to be forfeited means: it should be forfeited at sunrise. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun.³ And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: That nun, having approached an Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior nuns, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: 'Ladies, this bowl is to be forfeited by me, a night having elapsed. I forfeit it to the Order.' Having forfeited it, the offence should be confessed. The offence should be acknowledged by an experienced, competent nun; the bowl forfeited should be given back (with the words): 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This bowl of the nun so and so which had to be forfeited is forfeited (by her) to the Order. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order give back this bowl to the nun so and so.'

That nun, having approached several⁴ nuns, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: 'Ladies, this bowl is to be forfeited by me, a night having elapsed. I forfeit it to the ladies.' Having forfeited it, the offence should be confessed. The offence should be acknowledged by an experienced, competent nun; the bowl forfeited should be given back (with the words): 'Let the ladies listen to me. This bowl of the nun so and so which had to be forfeited is forfeited (by her) to the ladies. If it seems right to the ladies, let the ladies give back this bowl to the nun so and so.'

BD.3.215

That nun, having approached one nun, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: 'Lady, this bowl is to be forfeited by me, a night having elapsed. I forfeit it to the lady.' Having forfeited it, the offence should be confessed. The offence should be acknowledged by this nun; the bowl forfeited should be given back (with the words): 'I will give back this bowl to the lady.'

¹ Omitted, probably rightly, at Vin.3.243. It does not occur in the other cases either here or there. ² Cf. definition of "extra robe," "extra bowl" at BD.2.7, BD.2.114. ³ ekabhikkhunī balancing puggala, individual, in the Monks' Nissaggiyas. ⁴ sambahulā, meaning a gaṇa, group of two to four monks or nuns.

Bi-NP.1.2.2

If she thinks that a night has elapsed when it has elapsed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether a night has elapsed ... If she thinks that a night has not elapsed when it has elapsed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she thinks that it is allotted when it is not allotted ... If she thinks that it is assigned when it is not assigned ... If she thinks that it is bestowed when it is not bestowed ... If she thinks that it is lost when it is not lost ... If she thinks that it is destroyed when it is not destroyed ... If she thinks that it is broken when it is not broken ... If she thinks that it is stolen when it is not stolen, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If, not having forfeited the bowl which had to be forfeited, she makes use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that a night has elapsed when it has not elapsed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether a night has not elapsed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that a night has not elapsed when it has not elapsed, there is no offence.

Vin.4.245

Bi-NP.1.2.3

BD.3.216

There is no offence if before sunrise it is allotted, assigned, bestowed, lost, destroyed, broken, if they tear it from her, if they take it on trust; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

Bi-NP.1.3.1

Then the group of six nuns did not give back a bowl that was forfeited. They told this matter ... to the lord. He said: "Monks, a bowl that is forfeited is not to be given back. Whosoever should not give it back, there is an offence of wrong-doing."²

¹ Cf. BD.2.116f., and BD.2.10f. (a robe). ² Cf. BD.2.116f., and BD.2.10f. (a robe).

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 2

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns, having spent the rains in a village-residence, went to Sāvattḥī keeping the customs,¹ dignified in deportment, badly dressed, wearing shabby robes. Lay-followers having seen these nuns, thinking, "These nuns are keeping the customs ... wearing shabby robes, these nuns will have been robbed," gave robe-material to the Order of nuns not at the right time.² The nun Thullanandā, saying, "Our kaṭhina-cloth is (formally) made,³ it was robe-material given at the right time," having allotted it, had it distributed.⁴ The lay-followers having seen those nuns, spoke thus: "Was not the robe-material received by the ladies?"

Bi-NP.2.1.1
BD.3.217

"We did not receive robe-material, sirs. The lady Thullanandā, saying, 'Our kaṭhina-cloth is (formally) made; it was robe-material given at the right time,' having allotted it, had it distributed."

BD.3.218

The lay-followers ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, thinking that robe-material (given) not at the right time was robe-material (given) at the right time, having allotted

¹ vattasampannā. Groups of vattāni enumerated at Vb-a.297. Here probably these nuns had not yet their new robes, as it was not the custom to get these during the rains. The village perhaps could not supply enough material and so the nuns proposed to get it in Sāvattḥī.

² See BD.2.26, BD.2.311, BD.2.366. ³ atthata. See BD.2.5, n.1, BD.2.26, n.3. The kaṭhina-cloth had to be made up after the rains, Vin.1.254. Robe-material accruing not at the right time might be accepted by a monk, but then should be made up quickly, Vin.3.203 (BD.2.25f.). It looks as if Thullanandā and her nuns had had their kaṭhina robes made up before these other nuns arrived at Sāvattḥī, and that she took possession of the material given by the laity, and in having it distributed, ignored these incoming nuns. ⁴ This seems to imply that she did not distribute it herself. At Vin.1.285 monks are allowed to agree upon a monk possessed of five qualities as distributor of robe-material; the way in which it should be distributed is then set forth.

it, have it distributed?”

Nuns heard these lay-followers who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Thullanandā thinking ... have it distributed?”

Vin.4.246

Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks ... to the lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... had it distributed?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... have it distributed? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, thinking that robe-material (given) not at the right time is robe-material (given) at the right time, having allotted it should have it distributed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Bi-NP.2.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Robe-material (given) not at the right time¹ means: some that has accrued during the eleven months when the kaṭhina cloth is not (formally) made; some that has accrued during the seven months when the kaṭhina cloth is (formally) made; a gift (of material) offered² even at the right time; this means robe-material (given) not at the right time.

BD.3.219

If thinking, “It is robe-material (given) at the right time,” having allotted it, she has it distributed, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; on acquisition it is to be forfeited. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: “Ladies, I, thinking that this robe-material (given) not at the right time was robe-material (given) at the right time, having allotted it, caused it to be distributed; it is to be forfeited by me. I forfeit it to the Order.” ... “... let the Order give back ... they should give back ... I will give back (this robe-material) to the lady.”

¹ Cf. Monks’ Bu-NP.3, Vin.3.204 (BD.2.26, where see note), and cf. BD.2.311, BD.2.366, “time of giving robes.” ² ādiṣṣa. Vin-a.546 explains by apadisitvā, pointed out, indicated, designated; Vin-a.658 by uddisitvā, pointed out, proposed; while Vin-a.916 says, “she saying, ‘having obtained (sampattā), let them distribute,’ and then she says, ‘I will give this to a group and this to you.’”

If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) not at the right time when it is robe-material (given) not at the right, time, and saying, “It is robe-material (given) at the right time,” having allotted it she has it distributed, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether it is robe-material (given) not at the right time ... there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) at the right time when it is robe-material (given) not at the right time ... there is no offence. If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) not at the right time when it is robe-material (given) at the right time, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is robe-material (given) at the right time, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is robe-material (given) at the right time when it is robe-material (given) at the right time, there is no offence.

Bi-NP.2.2.2

There is no offence if she thinks that it is robe-material (given) not at the right time when it is robe-material (given) not at the right time and has it distributed; if she thinks that it is robe-material (given) at the right time when it is robe-material (given) at the right time and has it distributed; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-NP.2.2.3

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 3

Bi-NP.3.1.1
BD.3.220

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, having exchanged¹ a robe with a certain nun, made use of it. Then that nun, having folded up that robe, laid it aside.²

Vin.4.247

The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, that robe which was exchanged by you with me, where is that robe?" Then that nun, having taken out that robe, showed it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, take back³ your robe, give⁴ me this robe. That which is yours is yours, that which is mine is mine. Give this to me, take away your own," and she tore it away.⁵ Then that nun told this matter to the nuns ... to the monks. The monks ... to the lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... tore it away?"
"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... tear it away? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having exchanged a robe with a nun, should afterwards speak thus: 'Lady, take your robe, give this robe to me. That which is yours is yours, that which is mine is mine. Give this to me, take away your own,' (and) should tear it away or should cause (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture."⁶

BD.3.221

¹ Or bartered, parivattetvā. In Bhikkhu Bu-NP.5 monks are allowed to accept robes in exchange from monks, nuns, probationers, male and female novices; while in Bhikkhu Bu-Pc.25 they are allowed to give robes in exchange to these same five classes of people. ² Cf. Vin.4.61 = BD.2.285. ³ handā. Vin-a.917 says gaṇha, take. ⁴ āharati here has sense of to give, as at Vin.3.206. ⁵ Cf. Vin.3.254 (= BD.2.139). ⁶ Cf. Monks' Bu-NP.25 where a monk having himself given a robe to a monk must-not then tear it away from him.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

With a nun means: with another nun.

Robe means: any one robe of the six (kinds of) robes (including) the least one fit for assignment.¹

Having exchanged means: something large for something small or something small for something large.

Should tear it away means²: if she tears it away herself, there is an offence of' expiation involving forfeiture.

Should cause (another) to tear it away means: if she commands another, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If having commanded once, she then tears many away, it is to be forfeited. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: 'Ladies, having exchanged this robe with a nun, it was torn away by me; it is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to the Order' ... 'the Order should give back ... let the ladies give back ... I will give back (this robe) to the lady.'

Bi-NP.3.2.1

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained, (and) having exchanged a robe, tears it away or causes (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... involving forfeiture. Having exchanged another requisite, if she tears it away or causes (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Having exchanged a robe or another requisite with one who is not ordained, if she tears it away or causes (another) to tear it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Bi-NP.3.2.2

Vin.4.248

BD.3.222

There is no offence if she gives it or takes it from her in a friendly manner; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-NP.3.2.3

¹ = Vin.3.210, Vin.3.213, Vin.4.122, Vin.4.123. ² From here to end cf. Monks' Bu-NP.25.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 4

Bi-NP.4.1.1
BD.3.223

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā came to be ill. Then a certain lay-follower approached the nun Thullanandā, and having approached he spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "What, lady, is your discomfort? What may be brought (for you)?"

"Sir, I am in need of ghee."

Then that lay-follower, having for a kahāpaṇa brought ghee from the house of a certain shopkeeper, gave it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā said: "I am not in need of ghee, sir, I am in need of oil." Then that lay-follower approached that shopkeeper, and having approached he spoke thus to that shopkeeper:

"The lady says that she does not need ghee, master, she needs oil. You take¹ the ghee (and) give me the oil."

"If we, master, take back again goods that were bought, when will our goods be sold? Ghee was taken owing to the purchase of ghee; give for² the purchase of oil (and) you shall take oil"

Then that lay-follower ... spread it about, saying: "How can this lady Thullanandā, having had one thing asked for,³ then have another thing asked for?" Nuns heard this lay-follower who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about ... Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks ... to the lord. He said:

BD.3.224

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thulla nandā, having had one thing asked for, had another thing asked for?"

¹ handā, as above, BD.3.220. ² āhara = yācitvā, Vin-a.917, but I think the above translation better shows that the shopkeeper was, as he states, unwilling to change goods once bought.

³ viññāpetvā.

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... have another thing asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun, having had one thing asked for, should have another thing asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Vin.4.249

Nun means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-NP.4.2.1

Having had one thing asked for means: having had anything whatever asked for.

Should have another asked for means: excepting that (thing), if she has another asked for, in the request¹ there is an offence of wrong-doing. It is to be forfeited on acquisition. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: “Ladies, having had this thing asked for, the other thing asked for is to be forfeited by me. I forfeit it to the Order.” ... “... the Order should give back ... let the ladies give back ... I will give back (this thing) to the lady.”

Bi-NP.4.2.2

If she thinks that one thing is another thing and has the other thing asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether one thing ... If she thinks that an identical thing² is another thing ... offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she thinks that another thing is an identical thing (and) has the identical thing asked for, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is an identical thing (and) has an identical thing asked for, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is an identical thing when it is an identical thing, there is no offence.

BD.3.225

Bi-NP.4.2.3

¹ payoge, action, doing. ² anañña.

There is no offence if she has that thing asked for and also has another thing asked for¹; if having pointed out the advantage, she has it asked for; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ According to Vin-a.917 this means that the little she first asked for does not suffice, so she asks for it again. If ghee was first asked for a watch of the night (i.e., to be used as a medicine) it may be boiled; but if the doctor prescribed oil and she says she needs this too, thus (it is said) she asks for another thing. The simultaneous asking for things is hence not an offence; it puts a shopkeeper to no embarrassment, and saves a lay-person from going to and fro. This “asking for” a thing when an offer has been made is different from the “asking for” in Bu-Pc.7 and in the Pāṭidesaniyas. For there, nuns appear to be asking for food and medicine on their own initiative.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 5

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā came to be ill. Then a certain lay-follower approached the nun Thullanandā; having approached, he spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "I hope, lady, that you are better, I hope that you are keeping going."

Bi-NP.5.1.1
BD.3.226

"Sir, I am not better, I am not keeping going."

"Lady, I will deposit a kahāpaṇa in the house of such and such a shopkeeper; you can have whatever you want brought from there."

The nun Thullanandā enjoined a certain probationer, saying: "Go, probationer, fetch oil for the kahāpaṇa from the house of such and such a shopkeeper."

Then that probationer, having for the kahāpaṇa fetched oil from the house of that shopkeeper, gave it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā said: "I do not need oil, probationer, I need ghee." Then that probationer approached that shopkeeper; having approached, she spoke thus to that shopkeeper:

Vin.4.250

"The lady says that she does not need oil, sir, she needs ghee. You take the oil (and) give me the ghee."

"If we, lady, take back again goods that were bought, when will our goods be sold? Oil was taken owing to the purchase of oil; give for the purchase of ghee (and) you shall take ghee."

Then that probationer stood crying. Nuns spoke thus to that probationer: "Why are you crying, probationer?" Then that probationer told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā, having got one thing in exchange,¹ get another thing in exchange?”

BD.3.227

“Is it true, as is said, monks, ... (see Bi-NP.4.1. Instead of having had asked for, etc., read having got in exchange) ... rule of training:

“Whatever nun, having got one thing in exchange, should get another thing in exchange, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Bi-NP.5.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Having got one thing in exchange means: having got anything whatever in exchange ... (see Bi-NP.4.2). Instead of has asked for, having had asked for read gets in exchange, having got in exchange

... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ cetāpetvā.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 6

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time lay-followers, having made a voluntary collection¹ for robe-material² for an Order of nuns, having laid aside what was necessary³ in a certain cloak-seller's⁴ house, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a cloak-seller's house what is necessary for robe-material is laid aside. Having had that robe-material brought from there, distribute it."

Bi-NP.6.1.1
BD.3.228

The nuns, having got medicine in exchange for what was necessary, made use of it. The lay-followers, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns get something⁵ in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing,⁶ belonging to an Order?" Nuns heard these lay-followers who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

BD.3.229

Vin.4.251

¹ chandakaṃ saṃharitvā. This is Pali-English Dictionary's suggestion. Vin-a.918 says, "saying, 'Let us do a dhamma-duty, give what you are able,' thus having produced desire and pleasure in others, it is a synonym for a requisite that is taken up" (gahitaparikkhāra).

² civararathhāya, instrumental; it therefore looks as if they did not collect robe-material itself, but some medium of exchange with which the nuns could obtain the material.

³ parikkhāra, the usual technical term for the four, or eight, requisites allowed to a monk. But in view of the construction civararathhāya, it is likely that parikkhāra here stands not for a "requisite" itself, but for the means, perhaps some deposit of a medium of exchange, for obtaining it. This hypothesis is strengthened by Bu-NP.8, where a voluntary collection for conje, yāgu, was to be made. Conje is not a specific "requisite" at all, at Vin.4.93 e.g., being mentioned separately and in addition to solid food and soft food. There is in English the vulgarism "the needful," which I think parikkhāra in this and the following Nissaggiyas most nearly means. ⁴ pāvārika. Pali-English Dictionary suggests above translation. Pāvāra as cloak or mantle occurs at Vin.1.281, Ja.5.409. ⁵ aññaṃ. ⁶ aññadatthikena parikkhārena aññuddisikena, literally for the good of another, for the advantage of another, Cf. attuddesaṃ at Vin.3.149.

“How can these nuns get something in exchange ... belonging to an Order?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns got something in exchange ... belonging to an Order?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can nuns get something in exchange ... belonging to an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should get something in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, (and) belonging to an Order, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Bi-NP.6.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing means: for what was given for another thing.

Belonging to an Order¹ means: it is for an Order, not for a group, not for one nun.

Should get something in exchange means: having set aside that for which it was given, if she gets another thing in exchange, there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; it is to be forfeited on acquisition. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: ‘Ladies, this thing got in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, (and) belonging to an Order, is to be forfeited by me. I forfeit it to the Order.’ ... “... the Order should give back, ... let the ladies give back ... I will give back (this thing) to the lady.”

BD.3.230

Bi-NP.6.2.2

If she thinks that it was appointed for another thing when it was appointed for another thing, and gets something else in exchange, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt ... If she thinks that it was not appointed for another thing ... there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. Having acquired what was forfeited, it may be taken as, so to speak, a gift.¹ If she thinks that it was appointed for another thing when it was not appointed for another thing, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it was not appointed for another thing, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it was not appointed for another thing when it was not appointed for another thing, there is no offence.

¹ Another definition occurs at Vin.3.266 and Vin.4.43.

There is no offence if she takes² a remainder; if she takes having obtained the owner's permission³; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-NP.6.2.3

¹ yathādāne upanetabbari. ² upaneti. ³ I.e., saying it was given for the sake of robe-material, but they have this and need oil, Vin-a.918.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 7

Bi-NP.7.1.1
BD.3.231

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ lay-followers, having made a voluntary collection for robe-material for the Order of nuns, having laid aside what was necessary in a certain cloak-seller's house, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a cloak-seller's house what is necessary for robe-material is laid aside. Having had the robe-material brought from there, distribute it."

Vin.4.252

And the nuns, although having themselves asked for² what was necessary, yet having got medicine in exchange, made use of it. The lay-followers, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an Order, (and) that they themselves asked for³?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns got something in exchange ... that they themselves asked for?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns get something in exchange ... that they themselves asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an Order, (and) that she herself asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture."

BD.3.232

Bi-NP.7.2.1

¹ Cf. Bu-NP.6. ² sayam yācitvā. Cf. Vin.3.144 (BD.1.246). ³ sarṇyācikenā.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing ... Belonging to an Order ... That she herself asked for means: oneself having asked for.¹

Should get something in exchange means: ... (see Bi-NP.2.1-3. After belonging to an Order insert that she herself asked for)
... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Vin.3.149 (BD.1.254).

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 8

Bi-NP.8.1.1
BD.3.233

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns dwelling in cells¹ belonging to a certain guild were going short of conje. Then that guild, having made a voluntary collection for conje for the nuns, having laid aside what was necessary in a certain shop-keeper's house, having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a shopkeeper's house what is necessary for conje is laid aside. Having had husked rice brought from there, having had the conje boiled, make use of it."

The nuns, having got medicine in exchange for what was necessary, made use of it. Then that guild, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company²?"

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns got something in exchange ... belonging to a company?"

"It is true, lord."

Vin.4.253

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can nuns get something in exchange ... belonging to a company? It is not, monks,

BD.3.234

¹ pariveṇavāsikā. They were not a complete Order, merely a number of nuns. ² mahājanikena. Mahājana usually means "people, a crowd, the populace." Here it does not mean the guild regarded as a company, but the nuns for whom the conje was collected. The word is explained in the Old Commentary, and at Vin-a.918 by gaṇa, the technical term for "group" (two to four monks or nuns). This rule is in contrast on the one hand to Bu-NP.6 and Bu-NP.7, which speak of saṅghikena, belonging to an Order; and on the other to Bu-NP.10, which speaks of belonging to an individual, puggalikenā. It is because of this frequent triad, saṅgha, gaṇa, puggala (= ekā bhikkhunī) that mahājana must here be taken as equivalent to gaṇa, group, in its technical and monastic meaning.

for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-NP.8.2.1

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing means: for what was given for another thing.

Belonging to a company means: it is for a group, not for an Order, not for one nun.

Should get something in exchange means: ... (see Bi-NP.6.2.1–Bi-NP.6.2.3. Instead of belonging to an Order read belonging to a company) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 9

Bi-NP.9.1.1
BD.3.235

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns dwelling in cells belonging to a certain guild ... (see Bi-NP.8.1) ... "... make use of it." And the nuns, although having themselves asked for what was necessary, yet having got medicine in exchange, made use of it. Then that guild, having found out ... (see Bi-NP.8.1. After belonging to a company insert (and) that they themselves asked for) ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company, (and) that she herself asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture."

Bi-NP.9.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing ... Belonging to a company ... That she herself asked for means: oneself having asked for.

Should get something in exchange means: ... (see Bi-NP.6.2.1–Bi-NP.6.2.3. Instead of belonging to an Order read belonging to a company, (and) that she herself asked for)

Vin.4.254

... if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 10

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater, she was wise, she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk. Many people visited the nun Thullanandā. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā's cell was falling to pieces.¹ People spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Why is this cell of yours, lady, falling to pieces?"

Bi-NP.10.1.1
BD.3.236

"Sirs, there are neither benefactors, nor are there workmen."

Then these people, having made a voluntary collection for the nun Thullanandā's cell, gave what was necessary to the nun Thullanandā. And the nun Thullanandā, although having herself asked for what was necessary, yet having got medicine in exchange, made use of it. The people, having found out ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an individual, (and) that she herself asked for?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... (and) that she herself asked for?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... (and) that she herself asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should get something in exchange for what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing,

BD.3.237

¹ udriyati.

belonging to an individual, (and) that she herself asked for, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Bi-NP.10.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

For what was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing... Belonging to an individual means: it is for one nun, not for an Order, not for a group.

That she herself asked for means: oneself having asked for.

Should get something in exchange means: ... (as above, Bi-NP.6.2.1; read constantly belonging to an individual, (and) that she herself asked for.)

Vin.4.255

... if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 11

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater, she was wise, she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk.¹ Then King Pasenadi of Kosala having, in the cold weather, put on a costly woollen garment, approached the nun Thullanandā; having approached, having greeted the nun Thullanandā, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the nun Thullanandā roused ... gladdened King Pasenadi of Kosala with dhamma-talk. Then King Pasenadi of Kosala, having been roused ... gladdened with dhamma-talk by the nun Thullanandā, spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Do let me know, lady, what would be of use (to you)."²

Bi-NP.11.1.1
BD.3.238

"If, Sire, you are desirous of giving (something) to me, give me this woollen garment."

Then King Pasenadi of Kosala, having given the woollen garment to the nun Thullanandā, having risen from his seat, having greeted the nun Thullanandā, departed keeping his right side towards her. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

"These nuns have great desires, they are not contented. How can they ask the king for a woollen garment?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā ask the king for a woollen garment?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā asked the king for a woollen garment?"

"It is true, lord."

BD.3.239

¹ As in Bu-NP.10, Bu-Pc.33. Cf. Pasenadi's interview with the nun Khemā at SN.iv.374. ² Cf. BD.1.222 = BD.2.43 for same expression.

The enlightened one, the lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ask the king for a woollen garment? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“If a nun is bargaining for¹ a heavy cloth,² she may bargain for one (worth) at most four “bronzes.”³ If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Bi-NP.11.2.1

A heavy cloth means: whatever is a cloth for the cold weather.

Is bargaining for means: is asking for.

Vin.4.256

She may bargain for one (worth) at most four “bronzes” means: she may bargain for one worth sixteen kahāpaṇas.

If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that means: if she asks for one (worth) more than that, in the request there is an offence of wrong-doing. It is to be forfeited on acquisition. It should be forfeited to an Order or to a group or to one nun. And thus, monks, should it be forfeited: ‘Ladies, this heavy cloth (worth) at most more than four “bronzes,” bargained for by me, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to the Order’ ... “... the Order should give back ... let them give back ... I will give back this (heavy cloth) to the lady.”

BD.3.240

Bi-NP.11.2.2

¹ cetāpentiyā, explained in Old Commentary, as viññāpentiyā, asking for, as at Vin.3.246 (BD.2.121). Cetāpeti is usually “to get in exchange,” see BD.2.54f., BD.2.120, and above Bu-NP.7-Bu-NP.10. Here Thullanandā certainly gets the cloth in exchange for her teaching. But, since for us, “to get in exchange” usually means the changing hands of tangible objects, I have thought it best, in order to avoid this implication, to use “to bargain.” Moreover, cetāpeti is not really synonymous with viññāpeti, although it may be said to contain, as does “to bargain,” this meaning. ² garupāvuraṇa. ³ kaṁsa. As RHYS DAVIDS states, Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon, p.7, this “as a measure of value is only found in this passage.” Here, according to the Old Commentary, four “bronzes” are worth sixteen kahāpaṇas; and so, as Buddhaghosa says, Vin-a.919, “here a kaṁsa is (worth) four kahāpaṇas”; and cf. Kankhāvitaraṇī (Simon Hewavitarne Bequest), p.172, and Moggallāna, Abhidhānappadīpikā 905. The value being so small, Rhys Davids is against the notion that the kaṁsa was a bronze or brass cup, plate or vessel. It may possibly have been a bronze weight such as those used until recently in Burma. There is no commentarial support for Childers’ view that kaṁsa is “a coin,” or for Böhtlingroth’s that it is an equivalent of āḍhaka (Pali, āḷhaka).

If she thinks that it is (worth) more when it is (worth) more than four “bronzes” (and) bargains for it, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she is in doubt as to whether it is (worth) more than four “bronzes” ... If she thinks that it is (worth) less when it is (worth) more than four “bronzes” (and) bargains for it, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture. If she thinks that it is (worth) more when it is (worth) less than four “bronzes,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is (worth) less than four “bronzes,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is (worth) less when it is (worth) less than four “bronzes,” there is no offence.

There is no offence if she bargains for one (worth) at most four “bronzes”; if she bargains for one (worth) at most less than four “bronzes”; if they belong to relations; if they are offered; if it is for another; if it is by means of her own property; if she bargains for something of small value while (the other person) desires to bargain for something costly¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-NP.11.2.3

¹ Cf. Vin.3.217 (BD.2.57) and where cetāpeti is in sense of “to get in exchange” rather than “to bargain.”

NUNS' FORFEITURE (NISSAGGIYA) 12

Bi-NP.12.1.1
BD.3.241

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned ... (see Bi-NP.11.1. Instead of in the cold weather read in the hot weather; instead of woollen garment read linen garment) ... “... this rule of training:

“If a nun is bargaining for a light cloth,¹ she may bargain for one (worth) at most two and a half ‘bronzes.’ If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that, there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.”

Bi-NP.12.2.1

Light cloth means: whatever is a cloth for the hot weather.

Is bargaining for means: is asking for.

She may bargain for one (worth) at most two and a half “bronzes” means: she may bargain for one worth ten kahāpaṇas.

If she should bargain for one (worth) more than that means: ... (see Bi-NP.11.2. Read a light cloth (worth) at most more than two and a half “bronzes,” more than two and a half “bronzes,” less than two and a half “bronzes”) ... there is no offence.

Vin.4.257

Bi-NP.12.2.2

There is no offence if she bargains for one (worth) at most two and a half “bronzes”; if she bargains for one (worth) at most less than two and a half “bronzes”; ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-NP.12.3.1

¹ lahupāvuraṇa.

Recited, ladies, are the thirty rules¹ for offences of expiation involving forfeiture. Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter; therefore are they silent. Thus do I understand this.

BD.3.242

Told are the thirty offences of expiation involving forfeiture

Vin.4.258

¹ Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.919 says that eighteen (Nissaggiya Pācittiya) rules of training are laid down for both sides, that is for monks and nuns alike. As these have appeared already in the Mahāvibhaṅga, only twelve additional ones need to be included in the Bhikkhuni-Pātimokkha to bring the total of Nissaggiyas for nuns up to thirty. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxvii.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 1

Bi-Pc.1.1.1
BD.3.243

These hundred and sixty-six matters, ladies, that are offences of expiation come up for recitation.

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the Order of nuns was offered garlic by a certain lay-follower,¹ saying: "If these ladies need garlic, I (can supply them) with garlic."² And the keeper of the field was instructed (with the words): "If the nuns come, give two or three bundles³ to each nun." Now at that time there was a festival in Sāvattthī; the garlic was used up as soon as it was brought in.⁴ The nuns, having approached that lay-follower, spoke thus: "Sir, we have need of garlic." He said: "There is none, ladies; the garlic is used up as soon as it is brought in; go to the field." The nun Thullanandā, having gone to the field, not knowing moderation, had much garlic taken away. The keeper of the field looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, not knowing moderation, have much garlic taken away?" Nuns heard that keeper of the field who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

BD.3.244

¹ Ja.no.136 (Ja.1.474) is based on this story. ² Cf. Vin.3.244 (BD.2.118). ³ bhaṇḍike, explained at Vin-a.919 that this is a synonym for poṭṭalike sampuṇṇamiñjānaṃ. As poṭṭalika (several variant readings) appears to mean a kind of grass, perhaps the phrase here stands for "two or three leaves from full bulbs." At Ja.1.474 the reading is gaṇḍikā, a stalk or stick. At Vin-a.920 it is said "So too is this bhaṇḍikalasuṇa (garlic in the bundle), it is not one, two (or) three bulbs (miñjaka)." Miñjā, according to GEIGER, Pali Literature und Sprache, § 9 = majjā (pith, sap); a-miñjaka, according to Critical Pali Dictionary is "without tuber." But onions, garlic and leeks are bulbous plants. It seems that the nuns were to be given the garlic done up into bundles, rather than the bulbous parts themselves. ⁴ See Pali-English Dictionary under yathābhataṃ. Ja.1.475 makes out that the nuns went to the lay-follower's house where the garlic had been brought from the field. This would explain his injunction to them to go to the field.

“How can the lady Thullanandā, not knowing moderation, have much garlic taken away?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, not knowing moderation, had much garlic taken away?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, not knowing moderation, have much garlic taken away? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Formerly, monks, the nun Thullanandā was the wife of a certain brahmin and there were three daughters, Nandā, Nandavatī, Sundarīnandā.¹ Then, monks, that brahmin, having passed away, was born in the womb of a certain goose² and his feathers were made all of gold. He gave a feather one by one to these. Then, monks, the nun Thullanandā, saying: ‘This goose is giving us a feather one by one,’ having taken hold of that king of the geese, plucked him. His feathers, on growing again, turned out white. So at that time, monks, the nun Thullanandā lost the gold through too much greed; now she will lose the garlic.”

Vin.4.259

“One should be pleased with what is received, for too much greed is bad.
By taking hold of the king of the geese,
one may lose the gold.”

Then the lord having in many a figure rebuked the nun Thullanandā for her difficulty in maintaining herself ...” ... And thus, monks, the nuns should set forth this rule of training:

BD.3.245

¹ Cf. Vin.4.211 where these appear as the sisters of Thullanandā. ² hamsa, or swan; “mallard” at Jātaka translation 1.293.

“Whatever nun should eat garlic, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

Bi-Pc.1.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Garlic means: it is called the Magadha (plant).²

If she says, ‘I will eat,’ and accepts, there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.1.2.2

If she thinks that it is garlic when it is garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is garlic ... If she thinks that it is not garlic when it is garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is garlic when it is not garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not garlic (and) eats, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not garlic when it is not garlic (and) eats, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.1.2.3

There is no offence if it is an onion, if it is a beetroot,³ if it is yellow myrobalan,⁴ if it is bow-garlic,⁵ if it is in a concoction of broth,⁶ in a concoction of meat, in a concoction of oil; if it is in a salad⁷; if it is in a tit-bit⁸; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

BD.3.246

¹ Ja.1.476 points out that this prohibition, affecting all the nuns, is due to Thullananda’s greed. At Vin.2.140 it is made a dukkāṭa offence for monks to eat garlic; nor should Jain monks accept it (Āyāraṅgasutta 2 1, 8.13). ² Vin-a.920 says that māgadha means that here it is a synonym for “garlic,” for it is the garlic grown in the kingdom of Magadha. ³ bhañjanaka. This, as a vegetable, is not given in Pali-English Dictionary. “Beetroot” is guess-work, based on remark at Vin-a.920 that it is red in colour. This, however, may suggest radish. Vin-a.920 also says that it has two bulbs (miñja); in this Vin-a. resembles other early commentaries, which it cites. ⁴ haritaka. According to Pali-English Dictionary this is Terminalia citrina or chebula. Vin-a.920 says that it is the colour of vegetables (or greens) and has three “bulbs,” or, according to another early commentary, one. Atthasālinī 320 uses haritaka in definition of kasāva, an astringent decoction made from plants. At Vin.1.201 the fruit is allowed as a medicine. ⁵ cāpalasūna. Vin-a.920 says it has no bulb but only sprouts; cf. the bulbless onion, Allium fistulosum, grown for its leafy tops; and cf. another botanical name, cāpa-paṭa (Sanskrit), the tree Buchanania lalifolia. ⁶ This and the two following occur at Vin.4.110. They could contain the Magadha garlic. ⁷ sālave. Vin-a.920 says there is no offence if it is in a “hot” salad, or salad of jujube-fruits and so on, badarasālavādīsu, or if it is among astringent vegetables, ambilasākādīsu. Cf. BD.2.316, n.2; Vin-a.817; Atthasālinī 320. ⁸ uttaribhaṅga, or dainties; cf. BD.1.275, n.5.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 2

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns, having let the hair of the body grow, bathed naked together with prostitutes at the same ford of the river Aciravatī.¹ The prostitutes ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns let the hair of the body grow, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these prostitutes who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns let the hair of the body grow?" ...

Bi-Pc.2.1.1
BD.3.247

Vin.4.260

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns let the hair of the body grow?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns let the hair of the body grow? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should let the hair of the body grow, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.2.2.1

Hair of the body means: under both armpits and on the private parts.

Should let grow means: if she lets one hair grow, there is an offence of expiation. If she lets many hairs grow, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Cf. Vin.1.293; Vin.4.278.

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 3

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time two nuns, tormented by dissatisfaction, having entered an inner room, slapped with the palms of the hands. Nuns, having run up at the sound of this noise, spoke thus to these nuns: "Why do you, ladies, misbehave with a man?" Saying: "Ladies, we are not misbehaving with a man," they told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns slap with the palms of the hands?" ...

Bi-Pc.3.1.1
BD.3.248

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns slapped with the palms of the hands?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns slap with the palms of the hands? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"In slapping with the palms of the hands, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Vin.4.261

Slapping with the palms of the hands means: if she, enjoying the contact, gives a blow to the private parts even with a lotus leaf,² there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.3.2.1

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ On these "brief Pācittiyas" (cf. also the next), see BD.2, Introduction, p.xxxiv. ² Cf. the same expression at Vin.4.146 in definition of "should give a blow," and at Vin.4.147 in definition of "should raise the palm of the hand."

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 4

Bi-Pc.4.1.1
BD.3.249

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain woman who had formerly been a king's concubine, had gone forth among the nuns. A certain nun, tormented by dissatisfaction, approached this nun, and having approached, she spoke thus to this nun: "The king, lady, constantly came to see you. How did you manage?"

"By means of an application of lac, lady."

"What is this application of lac, lady?"

Then this nun showed an application of lac to that nun. Then that nun, having taken the application of lac, having forgotten to wash it, put it to one side. The nuns, having seen it surrounded by flies, spoke thus: "Whose doing is this?" She spoke thus: "It is my doing." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can a nun take an application of lac?"

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun took an application of lac?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun take an application of lac? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"In an application of lac, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.4.2.1

Application of lac means: it is made of lac, made of wood, made of flour, made of clay.

Should take¹ means: if she, enjoying the contact, makes even a lotus-leaf enter the private parts, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Note that a word is here defined which does not come into the rule, and that this, as it stands, is one of the "brief Pācittiyas."

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 5

Bi-Pc.5.1.1
BD.3.250

... among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery. Then Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid approached the lord; having approached, having greeted the lord, she stood to windward, saying: “Lord, the women smell nasty.” Then the lord, saying: “Then let the nuns take an ablution with water,” roused ... delighted Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid with dhamma-talk. Then Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid, having been roused ... delighted with dhamma-talk by the lord, having greeted the lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, an ablution with water for the nuns.”

Bi-Pc.5.1.2

Now at that time a certain nun, saying: “An ablution with water is allowed by the lord,” taking a very deep ablution with water, got a sore on her private parts. Then this nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can this nun take a very deep ablution with water?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun took a very deep ablution with water?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can a nun take a very deep ablution with water? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“If a nun is taking an ablution with water, she may take at most (a measure of) two finger-joints. For whoever exceeds this, there is an offence of expiation.”

Ablution with water means: it is called washing the private parts.

Bi-Pc.5.2.1

Is taking means: is washing.

BD.3.251

She may take at most (a measure of) two finger-joints means: she may take at most (a measure of) two joints of two fingers.

For whoever exceeds this means: if she, enjoying the contact, exceeds by even a hair's breadth, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that it is more when it is more than (a measure of) two finger-joints (and) takes it,¹ there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is more than (a measure of) two finger-joints ... If she thinks that it is less when it is more than (a measure of) two finger-joints (and) takes it, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is more when it is less than (a measure of) two finger-joints, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is less than (a measure of) two finger-joints, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is less when it is less than (a measure of) two finger-joints, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.5.2.2

Vin.4.263

There is no offence if she takes at most (a measure of) two finger-joints; if she takes less than at most (a measure of) two finger-joints; if it is because of illness; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.5.2.3

¹ I.e., the ablution.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 6

Bi-Pc.6.1.1
BD.3.252

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Ārohanta, a chief minister,¹ had gone forth among the monks (and) his former wife had gone forth among the nuns. Now at that time that monk participated in a meal in the presence of that nun. Then that nun enticed² that monk, standing near him with drinking water and with a fan as he was eating.³ Then that monk upbraided that nun, saying: "Do not, sister, do this, it is not allowable."

"Formerly you did this and that to me, now you do not put up with this much," and having thrown down the drinking cup on his head, she struck him with the fan. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can this nun strike a monk?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun struck a monk?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun strike a monk? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

BD.3.253

"Whatever nun should stand with drinking water or with a fan close to a monk while he is eating, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.6.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ Mentioned, I think, nowhere but here. ² accāvadati; in sense of "to talk down," at Vin.4.224. Here, according to Vin-a.922, she spoke to him as though they were still leading the household life, saying that she used to stand close to him thus while he ate. Note that nuns had access to the monks quarters. ³ bhuñjati is the verb used for partaking of soft foods, those which constitute the five kinds of meals (see Vin.4.83) referred to below. To stand close to a monk eating solid food is a dukkata offence (below).

To a monk means: to one who is ordained.

Is eating means: is eating any one meal of the five (kinds of) meals.¹

Drinking water means: whatever is drinkable.²

Fans means: whatever is a fan.³

Should stand close means: if she stands within a reach of the hand, there is an offence of expiation.

Vin.4.264

If she thinks that he is ordained when he is ordained (and) stands close with drinking water or with a fan, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether he is ordained ... If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is ordained ... there is an offence of expiation. If she stands close having left a reach of the hand, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she stands close while he is eating solid food, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she stands close to one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that he is ordained when he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁴

Bi-Pc.6.2.2

There is no offence if she gives⁵; if she causes (another) to give; if she commands one who is not ordained⁶; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.6.2.3
BD.3.254

¹ See Vin.4.83. ² For pāniya, drinking water, also has this meaning of a beverage. Vin-a.922 says that it may be pure water, or buttermilk, curds, milk and so on. ³ vidhūpana ... vijanī, Vin-a.922 saying, "even the corner of a robe." Vidhūpana allowed to monks at Vin.2.130. Vv-a.147 calls it caturassavījanī, a four-cornered vījanī. Three kinds of vījanī allowed at Vin.2.130, in addition to the "mosquito-fan," makasavījanī. Vinaya Texts iii.131f. translates as both fan and fly-whisk. ⁴ Cf. previous clause but two. ⁵ I.e., the curry or water to the monk to drink, or the fan for him to fan himself with, Vin-a.922. ⁶ Vin-a.922, if she commands a novice to stand near a monk (and minister to him as he is eating), there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 7

Bi-Pc.7.1.1
BD.3.255

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns, having had raw grain asked for at harvest time, carried it towards the town. (Those) at the gateway, saying: "Ladies, give a portion," having obstructed (them) let (them) go. Then these nuns, having gone to a dwelling,¹ told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns have raw grain asked for?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nuns had raw grain asked for?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns have raw grain asked for? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having asked for raw grain or having had it asked for, or having roasted it or having caused it to be roasted, or having pounded it or having caused it to be pounded, or having cooked it or having caused it to be cooked, should eat it, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.7.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Raw grain means: rice, paddy, barley, wheat, millet, beans, rye.²

Having asked for means: oneself having asked for.

Having had asked for means: having caused another to ask for.

Having roasted means: oneself having roasted.

Having caused to be roasted means: having caused another to roast.

Having pounded means: ... Having caused to be pounded means ...

BD.3.256

¹ Probably meaning a nunnery. ² See BD.1.83, n.4.

Having cooked means: ... Having caused to be cooked means: having caused another to cook.

If she says, "I will eat it" (and) accepts it, there is an offence of wrongdoing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of expiation. Vin.4.265

There is no offence if it is because of illness, if she has pulses¹ asked for; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer. Bi-Pc.7.2.2

¹ aparāṇṇa, or vegetables, or prepared cereals; cf. below, BD.3.259.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 8

Bi-Pc.8.1.1
BD.3.257

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain brahmin who earned (his keep) as a hireling of a king,¹ saying, "I will ask for wages as before," having washed his head, went along beside a nunnery to the royal court. A certain nun, having relieved herself in a receptacle, in throwing it away over a wall, let it fall² on that brahmin's head. Then that brahmin ... spread it about, saying: "These shaven-headed strumpets are not true recluses.³ How can they let a pot fall on my head? I will set fire to their dwelling," and having taken up a fire-brand, he entered the dwelling. A certain lay follower as he was going out from the dwelling saw that brahmin who, having taken up the fire-brand, was entering the dwelling. Seeing him, he spoke thus to that brahmin: "Why do you, good sir, having taken up a fire-brand, enter the dwelling?"

"Good sir, these shaven-headed strumpets let a pot fall on my head. I will set fire to their dwelling."

"Go away, good brahmin, this is auspicious; you will receive a thousand, and this is (your) wage." Then that brahmin, having washed his head, having gone to the royal court, received a thousand, and this was the wage. Then that lay follower, having entered the dwelling, having told this matter to the nuns, scolded them. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns throw out excrement over a wall?" ...

Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns threw out excrement over a wall?"

"It is true, lord."

BD.3.258

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

¹ nibbiṭṭharājabhāṭa. Cf. Snp.25. ² āsumbhi. Cf. above, BD.3.252. ³ Cf. above, BD.3.178, below, BD.3.275.

“How, monks, can nuns ... over a wall? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should throw out or should cause (another) to throw out excrement or urine or rubbish or remains of food over a wall or over a fence, there is an offence of expiation.”

Vin.4.266

Bi-Pc.8.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Excrement means: it is called faeces.

Urine means: it is called water.

Rubbish means: it is called sweepings.

Remains of food means: odd bits or bones or impure water.¹

Wall means: there are three (kinds of) walls, a wall of bricks, a wall of stones, a wall of wood.

Fence means: there are three (kinds of) fences, a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.

Over a wall means: beyond a wall.

Over a fence means: beyond a fence.

Should throw out means: if she herself throws out, there is an offence of expiation.

Should cause (another) to throw out means: if she commands another, there is an offence of expiation. When once commanded, if she throws out many times, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.8.2.2

There is no offence if she throws out having looked over; if she throws out into what is not a track²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ This list occurs at Vin.2.115, monks there being forbidden to take these things out in their bowls, as though they were waste-tubs. ² avalañje—i.e., presumably meaning into a place where no one is likely to pass, avalañja meaning “impassable, out of use” (Critical Pali Dictionary), and valañja, meaning a “track” (Pali-English Dictionary). Commentary is of no help.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 9

Bi-Pc.9.1.1
BD.3.259

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain brahmin's cornfield was beside a nunnery. The nuns threw out excrement and urine and rubbish and remains of food into the field. Then that brahmin ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nuns despoil our cornfield?"¹ Nuns heard that brahmin who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns throw out excrement ... and the remains of food on to the crops?"² ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns threw out ... on to the crops?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns throw out ... on to the crops? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should throw out or should cause (another) to throw out excrement or urine or rubbish or the remains of food on to the crops, there is an offence of expiation."³

Bi-Pc.9.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Vin.4.267

Excrement means: (see Bi-Pc.8.2.1) ... or impure water.

BD.3.260

Crops means: grain and pulses⁴ planted as food for the use of human beings.

Should throw out means: if she herself throws out, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Cf. Vin.4.47 (BD.2.257). ² harita. Cf. Vin.4.48. ³ Cf. Bu-Sk.74. ⁴ aparaṇṇa. Cf. BD.3.256, above. This definition of "crops" = Vin.4.48.

Should cause (another) to throw out means: ... (see Bi-Pc.8.2.1) ... offence of expiation.

If she thinks that they are crops when they are crops (and) throws out or causes (another) to throw out, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether they are crops ... If she thinks that they are not crops when they are crops ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that they are crops when they are not crops, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether they are not crops, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that they are not crops when they are not crops, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.9.2.2

There is no offence if she throws out having looked round; if she throws out on to the edges of a field; if she throws out having asked the owner (for permission) and having obtained the permission¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.9.2.3

¹ āpucchitvā apalokelvā. Cf. above, BD.3.184.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 10

Bi-Pc.10.1.1
BD.3.261

... in Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding-place. Now at that time there was a festival on a mountain-top in Rājagaha.¹ The group of six nuns went to see the festival on the mountain-top. People ... spread it about saying: "How can nuns come to see dancing and singing and music, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the group of six nuns go to see ... music?" ...

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the group of six nuns go to see ... music? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should go to see dancing or singing or music, there is an offence of expiation."²

Bi-Pc.10.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Dancing means: whatever is dancing.³

Singing means: whatever is singing.⁴

Music means: whatever is music.⁵

Vin.4.268
BD.3.262

If she goes to see, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees or hears, there is an offence of expiation. If having left the region of sight, she sees or hears again, there is an offence of expiation. If she goes to see one or the other, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees or hears, there is an offence of expiation. If having left the region of sight, she sees or hears again, there is an offence of expiation.¹

¹ Cf. Vin.4.85 (BD.2.335 and note.) ² Made into a dukkata for monks at Vin.2.108. ³ Vin-a.925 says that if dancers and so on dance, or drunkards, and even peacocks, parrots and monkeys, all this is dancing. ⁴ Vin-a.925 says what is connected with the utter waning of the noble ones, or the singing on festive occasions, or the singing of dhamma-repeaters if they are monks lacking in restraint, all this is singing. Cf. Vin.2.108. ⁵ This may be music got by playing on a thong or the string of a lute or the music of the pitcher-drum and even of the water-drum, Vin-a.925.

There is no offence if, standing in a monastery, she sees or hears; if, having come to where nuns are resting or sitting down or lying down, they dance or sing or play music; if, going along a path, she sees or hears; if, having gone as there is something to be done,² she sees or hears; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.10.2.2

The First Division: that on garlic

¹ Cf. Vin.4.108 (BD.2.380). ² Vin-a.926 says that if she has gone for ticket-food, or because there is anything else to be done, there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 11

Bi-Pc.11.1.1
BD.3.263

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a man, a relative¹ of a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,² set out from a village for Sāvattthī on some business. Then that nun stood together with and further talked with that man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there was no light. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun stand together with and further talk with a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... when there was no light?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun ... when there was no light? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with³ a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.11.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

In the dark of the night means: after the sun has gone down.⁴

When there is no light means: when it is dark.⁵

Vin.4.269
BD.3.264

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal; one who is learned, competent to stand, to talk.

¹ Fact that he was a relative did not mitigate the offence. ² Mentioned at Vin.4.227, Vin.4.269, Vin.4.290, Vin.4.292. ³ Vin-a.926 "about worldly life." ⁴ Same phrase used in definition of attharīgate suriye, "after sunset," at Vin.4.55 (BD.2.275). ⁵ anāloke.

Together with means: together.¹

The one with the other means: there is a man as well as a nun.²

Should stand together with means: if she stands within a reach of a man's hand, there is an offence of expiation.

Or should talk with means: if she talks, standing within a reach of a man's hand, there is an offence of expiation. If she stands or talks, having left (the space of) a reach of the hand,³ there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she stands together with or talks with a yakkha or a departed one or a eunuch or an animal in human form, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if some learned friend comes to be (present); if she, not wishing for a private place, stands or talks thinking about something else⁴; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.11.2.2

¹ Cf. Vin.4.68 (BD.2.301). ² Cf. Vin.4.68 (BD.2.301). ³ Cf. Vin.4.95. ⁴ Cf. Vin.4.69, Vin.4.97 (BD.2.301, BD.2.358f.) and BD.3.268, below.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 12

Bi-Pc.12.1.1
BD.3.265

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a man, a relative of a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,¹ set out from a village for Sāvattthī on some business. Then that nun, thinking: "It is forbidden by the lord to stand together with (or) talk with a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light,"² stood together with and talked with that very man, the one with the other, in a secluded place. Those who were modest nuns ... (Bi-Pc.11.1. Instead of in the dark of the night when there is no light read in a secluded place) ... " ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with a man, the one with the other, in a secluded place, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.12.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.,

A secluded place means: it is secluded by a wall built of wattle and daub or by a door or by a screen or by a screen wall or by a tree or by a pillar or by a sack or it is secluded by anything whatever.³

Vin.4.270

Man means: a human man ... (Bi-Pc.11.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See above, BD.3.263, for references. ² Nuns' Bi-Pc.11. ³ Cf. Vin.3.188, Vin.3.192 (BD.1.332, BD.1.337).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 13

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a man, a relative of a nun who was a pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī,¹ set out from a village for Sāvattḥī on some business. Then that nun, thinking: "It is forbidden by the lord to stand together with (or) talk with a man, the one with the other, in a secluded place,"² stood together with and talked with that very man in an open place. Those who were modest nuns ... (Bi-Pc.11.1. Instead of in the dark of the night when there is no light read in an open place) ... "... this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.13.1.1
BD.3.266

"Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with a man, the one with the other, in an open place, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.13.2.1

Open place means: what is not secluded by a wall built of wattle and daub ... or by a sack or what is not secluded by anything whatever.

Man means: a human man ... (Bi-Pc.11.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See above, BD.3.263, for references. ² Nuns' Bi-Pc.12.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 14

Bi-Pc.14.1.1
BD.3.267

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, stood together with and talked with a man, the one with the other, on a carriage road and in a cul-de-sac and at cross-roads,¹ and she whispered in his ear² and she dismissed the nun who was her companion. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā stand together with ... at cross-roads, and whisper in his ear and dismiss the nun who is her companion?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā stood together with ... and dismissed the nun who is her companion?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā stand together with ... and dismiss the nun who is her companion? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

Vin.4.271

“Whatever nun should stand together with or should talk with a man, the one with the other, on a carriage road or in a cul-de-sac or at cross-roads³ or should whisper in his ear or should dismiss the nun who is her companion, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.14.2.1
BD.3.268

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Carriage road means: it is called a carriage road.⁴

¹ These three words occur above, BD.3.105 (Vin.4.176) in definition of “among the houses.”

² nikaṇṇikaṃ jappeti. ³ Curiously translated by B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature 1.74, in (12) “in the public street or cross roads where there are crows.” ⁴ rathiyā nāma racchā vuccati. Racchā is a contracted form of rathiyā; it occurs at Vin.2.194, Vin.3.151; Ja.1.346, Ja.1.425, and in definition of rathikā, at Vin-a.886.

Cul-de-sac means: they depart by that (way) by which they entered.

Cross-roads means: it is called a place where four roads meet.¹

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal; one who is learned, competent to stand, to talk.²

Together with means: together.³

The one with the other means: there is a man as well as a nun.⁴

Should stand together with means: ... offence of expiation.⁵

Or should talk with means: ... offence of expiation.⁶

Or should whisper in his ear means: if she talks close into a man's ear,⁷ there is an offence of expiation.

Or should dismiss the nun who is her companion means: if, desiring to indulge in bad habits, she then⁸ dismisses the nun who is her companion, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁹ In leaving the region of sight or the region of hearing, there is an offence of wrong-doing. When she has left, there, is an offence of expiation.¹⁰ If she stands or talks, having left (the space of) a reach of the hand, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹¹ If she stands together with or talks with a yakkha or a departed one or a eunuch or an animal in human form, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if some learned friend comes to be (present); if, not wishing for a private place she stands or talks thinking about something else¹²; if, not wishing to indulge in bad habits, she dismisses the nun who is her companion if there is something to be done¹³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.14.2.2

BD.3.269

¹ siṅghāṭako nāma caccaram vuccati. Cf. explanation of siṅghāṭaka at Vin-a.886, quoted above, BD.3.105. The word caccara occurs at Vin.3.151 (BD.1.257); Mi.330; Ja.1.425. ² = above, BD.3.264. ³ = above, BD.3.264. ⁴ = above, BD.3.264. ⁵ = above, BD.3.264. ⁶ = above, BD.3.264. ⁷ upakaṇṇake, or secretly; cf. Vin.2.99, Vin.4.20 (BD.2.203). ⁸ pi, which Oldenberg says, Vin.4.367, "we ought to expunge." ⁹ Cf. Vin.4.93 (BD.2.352) in definition of "should dismiss." ¹⁰ Cf. Vin.4.93 (BD.2.352) in definition of "should dismiss." ¹¹ Cf. above, BD.3.264. ¹² Cf. Vin.4.69, Vin.4.97 (BD.2.301, BD.2.358), BD.2.269 (above, BD.3.264). ¹³ Cf. Vin.4.94 (BD.2.353). Vin-a.927 says on the above passage, "if it is for conveying ticket-food or for putting in order something badly arranged in the dwelling-place."

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 15

Bi-Pc.15.1.1
BD.3.270

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun frequented a certain family as a regular diner. Then that nun, having dressed in the morning, taking her bowl and robe, approached that family; having approached, having sat down on a seat, she departed without asking the owner (for permission). The family's slave-woman, while sweeping the house, placed that seat inside a dish.¹ The people, not seeing that seat, spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, where is that seat?"

Vin.4.272

"I, sirs, did not see that seat."

Saying, "Lady, give back that seat," having scolded her, they stopped (her as) a regular diner. Then these people, searching² the house, having seen that seat inside the dish, having apologised to that nun, (re-) established her as a regular diner. Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can this nun, having approached families before a meal, having sat down on a seat, depart without asking the owner (for permission)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... the owner (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun ... depart without asking the owner (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

BD.3.271

¹ This sounds odd, but we know little of the sizes of the dishes and vessels used. But if the āsana, the seat, defined below as "the place for sitting cross-legged," was only a rush- or padded-seat for sitting on on the floor, it could easily be mislaid in quite a moderate sized bowl. ² sodheti can also mean to clean.

“Whatever nun, having approached families before a meal, having sat down on a seat, should depart without asking the owner (for permission), there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Before a meal means: from sunrise until midday.¹

Family means: there are four (kinds of) families: a noble family, a brahmin family, a merchant family, a low-caste family.²

Having approached means: having gone there.

A seat means: it is called a place for sitting cross-legged.³

Having sat down means: having sat down on this.

Should depart without asking the owner (for permission) means: whatever man in that family is learned, without asking him (for permission but) in letting herself pass a place that is sheltered from the rain,⁴ there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.15.2.1

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) and departs, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked (for permission) ... If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) ... there is an offence of expiation. If it is not for a place for sitting cross-legged, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.15.2.2

BD.3.272

¹ This is the reverse of the definition of “wrong time” (for eating) at Vin.4.86 (BD.2.336). These two definitions together divide the day into two times for eating—the right and the wrong. ² = Vin.3.184, Vin.4.80, Vin.4.177. ³ pallaṅka must at some time have come to mean the thing sat upon, early on perhaps a simple mat. At Vin.1.192 pallaṅka is among various things which if used gives rise to a dukkata offence; while at Vin.2.280 nuns incur a similar offence if they sit on one, a half-pallaṅka being “allowed” instead. This may mean, however, sitting half cross-legged—so as to give more room. At Vin.2.169 a pallaṅka is allowed to be used by monks if the hair is destroyed (bhīnditvā), while at Vin.4.299 this same proviso (here chīnditvā, cut out) turns the nuns’ offence of using a pallaṅka into no offence.” It is defined here as “made by bringing (horse-) hair for it,” but at DN-a.86 as “made having put figures of wild animals on the legs.” See Dialogues of the Buddha 1.11, n.5 for some interesting remarks. ⁴ anovassaka. Cf. deso anovassako at Vin.2.211. Vin-a.927 says that in making the first foot cross (or pass), there is an offence of wrong-doing; in making the second foot cross, one of expiation.

Bi-Pc.15.2.3

There is no offence if she goes away asking (for permission); if it is one that is not movable¹; if she is ill; if there are accidents²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.273

¹ asamhāṛime; presumably meaning that she can go away of her own accord if she has not been given a pallaṅka or other movable seat. ² Vin-a.927 says that if they depart (pakkamanti, variant reading °ati) without asking (for permission) should a fire have broken out in the house or if there are thieves or similar misfortunes, there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 16

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, having approached families after a meal, sat down on¹ a seat without having asked the owner (for permission) and moreover lay down on it. People, being shy of the nun Thullanandā, neither sat down on that seat nor lay down on it. The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nun Thullanandā, having approached families after a meal, sit down on a seat without asking the owner (for permission) and moreover lie down on it?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā ... and moreover lie down on it?" ...

Bi-Pc.16.1.1
BD.3.273

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... and moreover lay down on it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... and moreover lie down on it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having approached families after a meal, should sit down on or should lie down on a seat without asking the owner (for permission), there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

After a meal means: after midday has passed until the sun has set.

Family means: ...²

Bi-Pc.16.2.1

BD.3.274

¹ abhi- ... abhi- may be intended to convey meaning of "loll" and "sprawl." ² See Bi-Pc.15.2.1.

Having approached means: having gone there.¹

Without asking the owner (for permission) means: whatever man in that family is the owner, without asking him to give (permission).

A seat means:²

Should sit down on means: if she sits down on it, there is an offence of expiation.

Should lie down on means: if she lies down on it, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.16.2.2

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) and sits down on or lies down on (a seat), there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked (for permission) ... (see Bi-Pc.15.2) ... there is no offence.

Vin.4.274

Bi-Pc.16.2.3

There is no offence if she, asking (for permission), sits down on or lies down on a seat; if it is a permanently appointed (seat); if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ See Bi-Pc.15.2.1. ² See Bi-Pc.15.2.1.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 17

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns, going to Sāvattḥī through the Kosalan districts, having arrived at a certain village in the evening, having approached a certain brahmin family, asked for accommodation.¹ Then that brahmin woman spoke thus to these nuns: "Wait, ladies, until the brahmin comes." The nuns, saying: "Until the brahmin comes!", having spread a sleeping-place, some sat down, others lay down. Then that brahmin having come during the night, spoke thus to that brahmin woman: "Who are these?"

Bi-Pc.17.1.1
BD.3.275

"They are nuns, master."

Saying: "Throw out these shaven-headed strumpets,"² he threw them out from the house. Then these nuns, having arrived in Sāvattḥī, told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, having approached families at the wrong time, having spread a sleeping-place without asking the owner (for permission), sit down on it³ and lie down on it?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... lay down on it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns, having approached families ... lie down on it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having approached families at the wrong time, having spread or having caused a sleeping- place to be spread without asking the owner (for permission), should sit down on it or should lie down on it, there is an offence of expiation.”

BD.3.276

¹ okāsaṃ yācīṃsu. ² Cf. BD.3.178, BD.3.257, above. ³ Here and below abhinisidati, abhini-pajjati; above merely nisidati, nipajjati. The stress of abhi- may mean, as in previous Pācittiya, to "loll" and "sprawl."

Bi-Pc.17.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Wrong time means: from sunset until sunrise.¹

Family means: ... Having approached means: ... Without asking the owner (for permission) means: ... (see Bi-Pc.16.2.2) ...

Sleeping-place means: even a spreading of leaves.²

Vin.4.275

Having spread means: oneself having spread.

Having caused to be spread means: having caused another to spread.

Should sit down on means: Should lie down on means: ...

Bi-Pc.17.2.2

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) and having spread or having caused a sleeping-place to be spread, she sits down on it or lies down on it, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked (for permission) ... If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission) ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.17.2.3

There is no offence if asking (for permission), having spread or having caused a sleeping-place to be spread, she sits down on it or lies down on it; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. other definitions of “wrong time” at BD.2.336 and above, BD.3.86. ² Other definitions of “sleeping-place” at BD.2.196 = BD.2.201, BD.2.244.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 18

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun who was the pupil of Bhaddā Kāpilānī¹ attended on Bhaddā Kāpilānī respectfully. Bhaddā Kāpilānī spoke thus to the nuns: "Ladies, this nun attends on me respectfully, I will give her this robe." Then that nun, because of a misapprehension,² because of a misunderstanding,³ saying: "Ladies, they say that I do not attend respectfully upon the lady, they do not say that she will give me a robe," made (someone) look down upon another. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding, make (someone) look down upon another?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... made (someone) look down upon another?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun, because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding, make (someone) look down upon another? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding, should make (someone) look down upon another, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ See Bi-Ss.3, Bi-Pc.11–Bi-Pc.13. ² duggahitena. I think here it does not mean that the robe was taken wrongly, but what Bhaddā said. ³ dūpadhāritena.

Because of a misapprehension means: because it was apprehended in a different manner.

Because of a misunderstanding means: because it was understood in a different manner.

Another means: one who is ordained. If she makes (someone) look down upon (her), there is an offence of expiation.

Vin.4.276

Bi-Pc.18.2.2

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) makes (someone) look down upon (her), there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she makes (someone) look down upon one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

Bi-Pc.18.2.3

There is no offence if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

¹ Surely should read anāpatti, no offence. ² This Pācittiya is unique in the nuns' group in having no more than these two regularly recurring instances where no offence is caused.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 19

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns, not seeing their own things, spoke thus to the nun Caṇḍakālī¹: “Has the lady not seen our things?” The nun Caṇḍakālī ... spread it about, saying:

Bi-Pc.19.1.1
BD.3.279

“What, am I a thief then? What, am I just shameless? That these ladies, not seeing their own things, spoke thus to me: ‘Has the lady not seen our things?’ If indeed, ladies,² I take your things I am not a true recluse, I am falling away from the Brahma-life, I rise up in hell. But whoever speaks thus of me when it is not a fact, let her too be not a true recluse, let her fall away from the Brahma-life, let her rise up in hell.”

Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Caṇḍakālī curse herself as well as another with hell as well as with the Brahma-life?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakālī cursed herself ... with the Brahma-life?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakālī curse herself as well as another with hell as well as with the Brahma-life? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should curse herself or another with hell or with the Brahma-life, there is an offence of expiation.”

¹ See Bi-Ss.4.7.8. ² sacā h'ayye. Oldenberg says, Vin.4.367, that this may be sace aham ayye, and refers us to Vin.1.88, sacāca, with variant reading and interpretation given by Buddhaghosa, appearing at Vin.1.372.

Bi-Pc.19.2.1
BD.3.280

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Herself means: herself (individually).¹

Another means: one who is ordained.

If she curses with hell or with the Brahma-life, there is an offence of expiation.

Vin.4.277

Bi-Pc.19.2.2

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) curses (her) with hell or with the Brahma-life, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she curses (her) with animal birth or with the realm of the departed or with human misfortune, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she curses one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.²

Bi-Pc.19.2.3

There is no offence if she is aiming at (explaining) the goal, if she is aiming at (explaining) a rule, if she is aiming at (explaining) the teaching³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ attānan ti paccattam = below, BD.3.281. This explanation will have been necessary if in early Buddhist thought attā was prevalently held to stand for Ātman, transcendental self. But here it has no such reference, meaning simply a person, an individual, pacca- = paṭi- throwing back the emphasis away from Ātman on to an individual or particular self X, as contrasted with Y. Paccattam at AN.i.156 is explained by sāmaṃ at AN-a.2.256. ² This is the Sinhalese and Siamese reading. Oldenberg's edition reads: "if she thinks that she is ordained ...," as in sentence but one before. Offence of wrong-doing "should probably read no offence."

³ Vin.3.130 (BD.1.218, and see n.2) = Vin.4.11 (BD.2.185) = Vin.4.309 (below, BD.3.345).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 20

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakalī, having quarrelled with the nuns, wept having struck¹ herself again and again. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Caṇḍakalī weep, having struck herself again and again?" ...

Bi-Pc.20.1.1
BD.3.281

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakalī wept, having struck herself again and again?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakalī weep, having struck herself again and again? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should weep, having struck herself again and again, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.20.2.1

Herself means: herself (individually).²

If she weeps, having struck herself again and again, there is an offence of expiation. If she strikes, (but) does not weep, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she weeps, (but) does not strike, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if, smitten by loss of relations or by loss of posses-

Bi-Pc.20.2.2
BD.3.282

¹ vadhivā, also meaning to punish. ² See above, BD.3.280.

sions¹ or by loss of health,² she weeps (but) does not strike; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.278

The Second Division: that on the dark

¹ bhoga, usually translated in this sequence as “wealth,” must here refer either to the nun’s own few possessions or to her relatives’ wealth. ² Here three misfortunes or losses, vyasana, occur; five are given at AN.iii.147, DN.iii.235, where it is said that of these five, three (those mentioned above) do not cause beings to arise after death in painful states, while the other two do.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 21

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns bathed naked with prostitutes at the same ford of the river Aciravati.¹ The prostitutes made fun of the nuns, saying: "Why in the world, ladies, is the Brahma-life led by you when you are young? Surely the pleasures of the senses should be enjoyed. When you are old, then you can lead the Brahma-life; thus will both extremes be experienced² by you." The nuns, being made fun of by these prostitutes, became ashamed.³ Then these nuns, having gone to a dwelling, told this matter to the nuns. The nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

"Because of this, monks, I will lay down a rule of training for nuns founded on ten reasons: for the excellence of the Order ... for following the discipline.⁴ And thus, monks, the nuns should set forth this rule of training: "Whatever nun should bathe naked, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Should bathe naked means: if she bathes not clothed, not dressed,⁵ there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Cf. Vin.1.293 and above, BD.3.247. Other regulations as to the foods to be used by nuns when bathing given at Vin.2.280. ² pariggahita, literally taken up. ³ At Vin.1.293 this is the story said to have been told by Visākhā to the lord when she was asking him to confer the eight boons, and of which the giving of bathing cloths for the nuns was the last. ⁴ See BD.1.37f.; BD.2.87, BD.3.248, BD.2.323. ⁵ nivattha and pāruta, the words used above, are also those that together cover the putting on of the three robes; see BD.2.32, n.2, n.3.

There is no offence if she is one whose robe is stolen¹ or if she is one whose robe is destroyed²; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ These words are defined (for monks) at BD.2.48—i.e., in Monks' Bu-NP.6 which, as is to be gathered from Vin-a.919, holds good for nuns as well as for monks. ² See previous note.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 22

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time bathing cloths for the nuns were allowed by the lord.¹ The group of six nuns, saying: "Bathing cloths are allowed by the lord," wore bathing cloths that were not of a (proper) measure; they went about trailing (these) in front as well as behind.² Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the group of six nuns wear bathing cloths that are not of a (proper) measure?" ...

Bi-Pc.22.1.1
BD.3.285
Vin.4.279

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns wear bathing cloths that are not of a (proper) measure?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns wear bathing cloths that are not of a (proper) measure? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"When a bathing cloth is being made for a nun, it must be made to a (proper) measure. This is the (proper) measure here: in length four spans according to the accepted span, in width two spans. For her who exceeds this (measure), there is an offence of expiation involving cutting down."³

Bathing cloth means: dressed in⁴ which, she bathes.

Bi-Pc.22.2.1
BD.3.286

¹ At Vin.1.294. The giving of bathing cloths for the Order of nuns was the last of the eight boons which Visakha asked the lord to confer on her. The bathing cloth was the fifth robe to be pointed out to a nun at her ordination, Vin.2.272. ² Cf. above, BD.3.99. ³ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.87, Bu-Pc.89, Bu-Pc.90, Bu-Pc.91. ⁴ Here is another example of a garment to which nivattha refers; see BD.2.32, n.2.

Is being made means: making or causing to be made.¹

It must be made to a (proper) measure. This is the (proper) measure here: in length four spans according to the accepted span, in width two spans means: if she makes it or causes it to be made exceeding this (measure), in the business there is an offence of wrong-doing; having cut it down on acquisition, an offence of expiation is to be confessed.

If what was incompletely executed by herself she has finished by herself, there is an offence of expiation. If she makes others finish what was incompletely executed by herself ... If what was incompletely executed by others she has finished by herself ... If she makes others finish what was incompletely executed by others, there is an offence of expiation. If she makes it or causes it to be made for another, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having acquired what was made for another, she makes use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.²

Bi-Pc.22.2.2

There is no offence if she makes it to the (proper) measure; if she makes it to less than the (proper) measure; if having acquired what was made for another (but) exceeding the (proper) measure, having cut it down, she makes use of it; if she makes a canopy or a ground-covering or a screen-wall or a mattress or a squatting-mat; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.³

¹ = Vin.3.226, Vin.4.168, Vin.4.171. ² = Vin.3.225, Vin.4.167, Vin.4.169, Vin.4.170, Vin.4.171.

³ = Vin.4.171.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 23

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun's robe of costly robe-cloth was badly made, badly sewn. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that nun: "Lady, this robe-cloth of yours is lovely, but the robe is badly made, badly sewn."

Bi-Pc.23.1.1
BD.3.287

Vin.4.280

"If I unsew it, lady, will you sew it?"

"Yes, lady, I will sew it."

Then that nun, having unsewn that robe, gave it to the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā, thinking: "I will sew it, I will sew it," neither sewed it nor made an effort¹ to get it sewn. Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having had a nun's robe unsewn, neither sew it nor make an effort to get it sewn?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the Thullanandā, having had a nun's robe unsewn, neither sewed it nor made an effort to get it sewn?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor make an effort to get it sewn? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having unsewn or having made (another) unsew a nun's robe, if she is not afterwards prevented should neither sew it nor should make an effort to get it sewn, except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ ussukkaṃ karoti, or "to find energy." Cf. below, BD.3.309, BD.3.330.

Bi-Pc.23.2.1
BD.3.288

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

A nun's means: another nun's.

Robe means: any one robe of the six (kinds of) robes.

Having unsewn means: herself having unsewn.

Having made (another) unsew means: having made another unsew.

If she is not afterwards prevented means: if there is not an obstacle.¹

Should neither sew means: should not herself sew.

Nor should make an effort to get it sewn means: should not command another.²

Except on the fourth and fifth days means: having excluded the fourth and fifth days.

If she thinks, "I will neither sew it nor make an effort to get it sewn," in the mere throwing off of the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.³

Bi-Pc.23.2.2

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained, having unsewn or having made (another) unsew a robe, and if she is not afterwards prevented, neither sews it nor makes an effort to get it sewn, except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If, having unsewn or having made (another) unsew another requisite ... except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, having unsewn or made (another) unsew a robe or another requisite of one who is not ordained ... except on the fourth and fifth days, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Vin.4.281

Bi-Pc.23.2.3

BD.3.289

¹ =below, BD.3.331. ² Cf. below, BD.3.310, BD.3.331. ³ Cf. below, BD.3.331.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle¹; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance²; if she, working,³ lets the fourth and fifth days pass; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ antarāya; ten are enumerated at Vin.1.112, Vin.1.169. ² On analogy of Bi-Pc.34, Bi-Pc.45 below and following the Sinhalese version, I have adopted a different punctuation from that occurring in Oldenberg's text of Bi-Pc.23, hence altering the sense. Cf. also below, BD.3.310, BD.3.331. ³ Taking the Sinhalese and Siamese karontī as against Oldenberg's karontān.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 24

Bi-Pc.24.1.1
BD.3.290

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ nuns, having entrusted robes² to the hands of (other) nuns, set out on a tour of the country with (only) the inner and the upper robes. Those robes, deposited for a long time, became soiled; nuns dried them in the sun. Nuns spoke thus to these nuns: "Ladies, whose are these robes that are soiled?" Then these nuns told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns, having entrusted robes to the hands of (other) nuns, set out on a tour of the country with (only) the inner and the upper robes?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... with (only) the inner and the upper robes?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... with (only) the inner and the upper robes? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should miss going about in an outer cloak for five days,³ there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.24.2.1

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-NP.2 (BD.2.12). ² Merely called cīvara here. The sikkhāpada makes it clear that the saṃghāti, outer cloak, is meant; Vin-a.652 says that this is the case with the monks' cīvara mentioned in Bu-NP.2. At some time the nuns came to be allowed five robes, mentioned below. For these see BD.2, Introduction, p.xix. It is therefore quite possible to say here that the nuns went with "only" their inner and upper robes, if we think of these with the outer cloak as constituting the regular set of three robes, to which the other two were merely added as extras for the nuns. ³ pañcāhikam, what consists of five days

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

BD.3.291

Should miss going about in an outer cloak for five days means: if on the fifth day she neither dresses in nor puts on nor dries in the sun the five robes, (but) lets the fifth day pass, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that five days are passed when they are passed, there is an offence of expiation.¹ If she is in doubt as to whether five days are passed, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that five days are not passed when they are passed, there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that five days are passed when they are not passed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether five days are not passed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that five days are not passed when they are not passed, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.24.2.2

Vin.4.282

There is no offence if, on the fifth day, she dresses in or puts on or dries the five robes in the sun; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.24.2.3

¹ Some material left out here. These clauses should state that the offence also depends on her not dressing in, putting on or drying the five robes. Vin-a.929 says that for each robe there is an offence, thus for the five (robes) there are five (offences).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 25

Bi-Pc.25.1.1
BD.3.292

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun having walked for alms, having spread out a damp robe,¹ entered a dwelling-place. A certain nun, having put on that robe, entered a village for almsfood. She, having come out,² asked the nuns: "Ladies, have you not seen my robe?" The nuns told this matter to that nun. Then that nun ... spread it about, saying:

"How can this nun, without asking (for permission) put on my robe?" Then this nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun put on a nun's robe without asking (for permission)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... without asking (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can a nun ... without asking (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should wear a robe that should be handed back,³ there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.25.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

A robe that should be handed back means: if she dresses in or puts on any one robe of the five (kinds of) robes of one who is ordained, either

BD.3.293

¹ allacīvara. Cf. Ja.6.51. Alla can mean wet, moist, and also fresh, new. ² This must refer to the first nun, meaning when she (later) came out of the dwelling-place. ³ cīvarasaṃkamanīyaṃ, explained at Vin-a.930 as paṭidātābbacīvara, a robe that should be restored, given back (to the rightful owner).

if it was not given to her or without asking (permission) for it, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) wears a robe that should be handed back, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she wears a robe of one who is not ordained and that should be handed back, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

Bi-Pc.25.2.2

Vin.4.283

There is no offence if she gives it or, if asking (permission) for it, she dresses in it or puts it on; if she is one whose robe is stolen,² if she is one whose robe is destroyed³; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.25.2.3

¹ Should doubtless read, "there is no offence." ² Cf. above, BD.3.284. ³ Cf. above, BD.3.284

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 26

Bi-Pc.26.1.1
BD.3.294

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the family who supported the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Lady, we will give robes for the Order of nuns." The nun Thullanandā saying: "You are very busy, there is much to be done," put an obstacle in the way.¹ Then that family's house was burnt down. They ... spread it about, saying: "How could the lady Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of our gift of faith? We are down and out; all round,² both as to property and as to merit." Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes?"³ ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robes there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.26.2.1
BD.3.295

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ antarāyaṃ akāsi, as we might, say, "made an objection." ² paribāhirā; the word also occurs at SN.i.126. Vin.2.140. ³ Note how the interest is shifted from the laypeople to the nuns.

A group means: it is called an Order of nuns.¹

Robe means: any one robe of the six (kinds of) robes (including) the least one fit for assignment.²

Vin.4.284

Should put an obstacle in the way means: if, saying: “How can this robe be given?” she puts an obstacle in the way, there is an offence of expiation. If she puts an obstacle in the way of another requisite, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she puts an obstacle in the way of a robe or of another requisite for several nuns³ or for one nun or for a woman who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if she hinders having pointed out an advantage⁴; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.26.2.2

¹ = below, BD.3.346. In the Vinaya, gaṇa is almost always a group of from one to four monks or nuns, while saṅgha is an Order—i.e., five or more monks or nuns. It is curious to find gaṇa and saṅgha identified, as above, but the wording of the introductory story appears to be responsible. ² = Vin.3.196, Vin.3.210, Vin.4.60, Vin.4.122, Vin.4.123, etc. ³ sambahula. With Old Commentary's identification, above, of saṅgha and gaṇa, gaṇa a group, has moved from its normal second to the first place of that triad which is usually found as saṅgha gaṇa ekabhikkhunī (Order, group, one nun). The second place has therefore to be filled by another word: sambahula is the obvious choice, for in Vinaya it is often virtually a synonym for gaṇa. “One nun” follows next in its usual order and form. Cf. below, BD.3.347. ⁴ Cf. below, BD.3.301.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 27

Bi-Pc.27.1.1
BD.3.296

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time robe-material had accrued to an Order of nuns not at a right time.¹ Then that Order of nuns collected together wishing to distribute that robe-material. Now at that time the nuns who were pupils of the nun Thullanandā had gone out. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to those nuns²: "Ladies, nuns are gone out; the robe-material should not be distributed yet," (and she held back the division of the robe-material. Nuns, saying: "The robe-material should not be distributed yet," parted company. When the nuns who were pupils returned, the nun Thullanandā had that robe-material distributed. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā hold back a legally valid division of robe-material?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, that the nun Thullanandā held back a legally valid division of robe-material?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā hold back a legally valid division of robe-material? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should hold back a legally valid division of robe-material, there is an offence of expiation."³

¹ See Nuns' Bu-NP.2, where also Thullanandā takes a hand in robe-distribution, and where robe- (material given) not at a right time is defined. Cf. also Monks' Bu-NP.3, where akālacīvara may be accepted by a monk. It is to be gathered from Vin-a.919 that the Monks' Bu-NP.3 holds good for nuns as well as for monks. ² Presumably to those constituting the Order, for the pupils had not yet returned. ³ Cf. below, Bi-Pc.30.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.27.2.1
BD.3.297

Legally valid division of robe-material means: a complete Order of nuns, having collected together, distributes it.¹

Vin.4.285

Should hold back means: if, saying: "How could one distribute this robe-material?"² she holds it back, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.27.2.2

If she thinks that it is legally valid when it is legally valid (and) holds (the division) back, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is legally valid ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not legally valid when it is legally valid ... no offence. If she thinks that it is legally valid when it is not legally valid, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not legally valid, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not legally valid when it is not legally valid, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.27.2.3

There is no offence if she holds it back having pointed out an advantage; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ "Pupils," not being fully ordained, did not rank as nuns with administrative powers, although they were called antevāsibhikkhuniyo. Therefore their absence from a ceremony would not invalidate it, as would the absence of a fully ordained nun. "Complete" (samagga) interpreted at Vin-a.792 as meaning "all come"; see BD.2.267, and note 7. ² Oldenberg Vin.4.368, proposes to read idaṃ cīvaraṃ bhājīyeyya for text's imaṃ cīvaraṃ bhājeyya. Sinhalese edition has idaṃ cīvaraṃ bhājeyya; Siamese edition same as text.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 28

Bi-Pc.28.1.1
BD.3.298

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā gave¹ recluses' robe-material to players² and to dancers³ and to female tumblers⁴ and to female conjurors⁵ and to drummers,⁶ saying: "Do praise me in public."⁷ The players and the dancers and the tumblers and the conjurors and the drummers praised the nun Thullanandā in public, saying: "The lady Thullanandā is very learned, she is a repeater, she is wise, she is skilled in giving talk on dhamma.⁸ Give for the lady, make for the lady." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

BD.3.299

"How can the lady Thullanandā give recluses' robe-material to a householder?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā gave recluses' robe-material to a householder?"

¹ Cf. below, BD.3.332. ² naṭā, explained at Vin-a.931 as "those who play (or dance, nāṭenti) a pantomime (or dance, nāṭakam)." This last is probably dance-drama. There was no hard-and-fast line in ancient India between dancing, acting and miming; all were needed together, with drumming, for the full production. At sn.iv.306f. players, nāṭa, are said by Gotama, as recorded, to arouse wrong states of mind in their audience, and to be reborn in the Hell of Laughter. ³ nāṭaka, explained at Vin-a.931 as those who dance (naccanti). Word occurs at Mi.331, translated as "play actor," and at Mi.191. ⁴ laṅghikā, "those who do tumbling on bamboos and thongs," Vin-a.931. Laṅghakā (plural) occurs at Mi.34, Mi.191, Mi.331; Ja.2.142. ⁵ sokajjhāyikā. Vin-a.931 reads sokasāyikā, with variant readings as text and sokachāyi, and explains as "illusion-makers." Cf. Ja.6.580, explained thus here too, and with the further meaning of those who allay and dispel grief. ⁶ kumbhathūṇikā, explained at Vin-a.931 as players with a small jar (ghaṭaka?). Word also occurs at Ja.5.506, Ja.6.580 (not explained) and DN.i.6; see Dialogues of the Buddha 1.8, n.4. DN-a.84 says that kumbhathūṇa is the noise of a pot striking a four-cornered trough, which explanation Dialogues of the Buddha 1.8, n.4 says is "obscure and probably corrupt." ⁷ parisati. ⁸ As in Nuns' Bu-NP.10, Bu-NP.11, Bu-Pc.33.

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā give recluses' robe-material to a householder? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should give recluses' robe-material to a householder or to a wanderer or to a female wanderer, there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.28.2.1

Householder means: he who inhabits a house.¹

Wanderer means: excluding monk and novice, he who has reached (the stage of a) wanderer.²

Female wanderer means: excluding nun and probationer and female novice, she who has reached (the stage of a) female wanderer.³

Vin.4.286

Recluses' robe-material means: it is called made allowable.⁴ If she gives, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if she gives to (her) parents; if she gives for the time being⁵; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.28.2.2

¹ = Vin.3.212, Vin.3.219, Vin.3.259 (BD.2.47, BD.2.60, BD.2.148). ² = Vin.4.92 (BD.2.349) = below, BD.3.332, and cf. Vin.4.224. ³ = Vin.4.92 (BD.2.349) = below, BD.3.332, and cf. Vin.4.224.

⁴ kappakata. Cf. definition of “new (robe)” as akalakappa at Vin.4.120. See BD.2.407, n.5, n.6, and BD.2.409, n.5. ⁵ Cf. BD.1.110, n.7.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 29

Bi-Pc.29.1.1
BD.3.300

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the family who supported the nun Thullanandā spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "If we, lady, are able, we will give robe-material for the Order of nuns." Now at that time nuns, having kept the rains-retreat, collected together wishing to distribute robe-material. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to these nuns: "Wait, ladies, there is for the Order of nuns an expectation of robe-material." The nuns spoke thus to the nun Thullanandā: "Do go, lady, and find out about this robe-material." The nun Thullanandā approached that family; having approached she spoke thus to the people: "Sirs, do give robe-material for the Order of nuns." They said: "Lady, we are not able to give robe-material for the Order of nuns." The nun Thullanandā told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, when an expectation of robe-material is not sure,¹ let the robe-season² pass?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... let the robe-season pass?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... let the robe-season pass? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, when an expectation of robe-material is not sure, should let the robe-season pass, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ dubbala, not strong, weak; uncertain, not sure, low or poor. ² Cf. Vin.3.261 (BD.2.152f.).

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.29.2.1
BD.3.301

When an expectation of robe-material is not sure means: if they say, "If we are able, we will give, we will make," (but their) word becomes broken.

Robe-season means: the last month of the rainy season when the kaṭhina cloth is not (formally) made, the five months when it is (formally) made.¹

Vin.4.287

Should let the robe-season pass means: if she lets pass the last day of the rainy season when the kaṭhina cloth is not (formally) made, there is an offence of expiation. If she lets the day pass for removing the kaṭhina (privileges),² there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that the robe-material is not sure when it is not sure (and) lets the robe-season pass, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether the robe-material is not sure ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that the robe-material is sure³ when it is not sure ... no offence. If she thinks that the robe-material is not sure when it is sure, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether the robe-material is sure, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that the robe-material is sure when it is sure, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.29.2.2

There is no offence if she hinders having pointed out an advantage⁴; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.29.2.3

¹ = definition of "time of giving robes" at Vin.4.74, Vin.4.100 (BD.2.311, BD.2.366), and cf. Vin.3.204. ² Cf. Vin.3.196 (BD.2.5 and notes). ³ adubbala. ⁴ =above, BD.3.295.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 30

Bi-Pc.30.1.1
BD.3.302

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a dwelling-place had been erected by a certain lay-follower for the Order. He, at the festival for this dwelling-place, was desirous of giving robe-material at the wrong time for both the Orders. Now at that time the kaṭhina cloth for both the Orders was (formally) made. Then that lay-follower, having approached the Order,¹ asked for the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges).² They told this matter to the lord. Then the lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to remove the kaṭhina (privileges). And thus, monks, should the kaṭhina (privileges) be removed: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order remove the kaṭhina (privileges). This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order removes the kaṭhina (privileges). If the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent. If it is not pleasing, they should speak. The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed by the Order, and it is right ... So do I understand this.’”

Bi-Pc.30.1.2

Then that lay-follower, having approached the Order of nuns, asked for the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). The nun Thullanandā, thinking, “There will be robe-material for us,” held back the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). Then that lay-follower ... spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns not give a removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) for us?" Nuns heard that lay-follower who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nun Thullanandā hold back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges)?" ...

Vin.4.288
BD.3.303

¹ I.e., the Order of monks, as one gathers from the context. ² See BD.2.5, n.3, BD.2.6, n.5. Here the removal must depend on the ground of the robes being settled, or on that of the general removal of the privileges by a whole Order.

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā held back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges)?"

"It is true, lord " ... (see Bi-Pc.27.1) "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should hold back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges), there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.30.2.1

Legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) means a complete Order of nuns, having collected together, remove them.¹

Should hold back means: if, saying: "How can this kaṭhina (privilege) be removed?" she holds it back, there is an offence of expiation.²

If she thinks that it is legally valid when it is legally valid (and) holds it back ... (see Bi-Pc.27.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.30.2.2

The Third Division: that on being naked

¹ Cf. Bi-Pc.27.2.1. ² Cf. Bi-Pc.27.2.1.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 31

Bi-Pc.31.1.1
BD.3.304

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time two nuns shared¹ one couch.² People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place, having seen (them) ... spread it about, saying: "How can two nuns share one couch, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can two nuns share one couch?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that two nuns shared one couch?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can two nuns share one couch? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

Vin.4.289

"Whatever two nuns should share one couch, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.31.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Nuns mean: they are called ordained.

Two should share one couch means: if one is lying down and the other lies down, there is an offence of expiation. Or if both are lying down, there is an offence of expiation. If having got up, they lie down again, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.31.2.2

¹ tuvattenti, explained at Vin-a.932 as to lie down on. ² At Vin.2.124 it is made a dukkata offence for monks to share one couch. At Vin.2.10 one of the bad habits indulged in by lax monks was the sharing of one couch with women of respectable families.

There is no offence if one is lying down and the other sits down, or if both are sitting down; if they are mad, if they are the first wrong-doers.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 32

Bi-Pc.32.1.1
BD.3.305

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time two nuns shared one covering-cloth.¹ People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place ... (see Bi-Pc.31.1. Instead of one couch read one covering-cloth) ... "... this rule of training:

“Whatever two nuns should share one covering-cloth, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.32.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Nuns mean: they are called ordained.

Two should share one covering-cloth means: if having covered themselves with that,² they put that³ on, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.32.2.2

If they think that it is one covering-cloth when it is one covering-cloth (and) share it, there is an offence of expiation. If they are in doubt as to whether it is one covering-cloth ... If they think they are different covering-cloths when it is one covering-cloth ... offence of expiation. If they think that they are different cloths when it is one covering, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they think that it is one covering-cloth when they are different coverings, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they think that it is one covering-cloth when they are different covering-cloths, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they are in doubt as to whether they are different covering-cloths, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they think that they are different covering-cloths when they are different covering-cloths, there is no offence.

BD.3.306

¹ ekattharaṇapāvuraṇa. Vin-a.932 says that this means one covering as well as a cloth. At Vin.2.10, among the bad habits indulged in by lax monks were that they shared one covering, attharaṇa, that they shared one cloth, pāvuraṇā, and that they shared one covering-cloth, attharaṇapāvuraṇā with women of respectable families. At Vin.2.124 the group of six monks shared these articles, thereby incurring an offence of wrong-doing. The fact that the two words attharaṇa and pāvuraṇā appear both separately and then together (see also below), to my mind shows that, when joined, they stand for one article: a cloth used as a covering, therefore a covering-cloth. There is also the reference to it as taṃ (acc.), “that”; see next note. ² tañ ñeva ... tañ ñeva. ³ tañ ñeva ... tañ ñeva.

There is no offence if they lie down having pointed out an arrangement¹; if they are mad, if they are the first wrong-doers.

Bi-Pc.32.2.3

Vin.4.290

¹ vavatthāna. Vin-a.932 says that for those who lie down having placed the “yellow robes” in the middle or a walking-staff or even a belt, there is no offence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 33

Bi-Pc.33.1.1
BD.3.307

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater, she was wise, she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk.¹ Bhaddā Kāpilānī² also was very learned ... she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk, she was esteemed as being eminent.³ People, thinking: “Bhaddā Kāpilānī is very learned ... she is skilled in giving dhamma-talk, she is esteemed as being eminent,” having first visited⁴ Bhaddā Kāpilānī afterwards visited the nun Thullanandā. The nun Thullanandā, overcome by envy,⁵ thinking: “Those who are said to have few wants, to be content, detached, not living in company, these are intent on convincing,⁶ intent on hinting,” walked up and down and stood still and sat down and lay down on a sleeping-place and recited and made (another) recite and studied⁷ in front of Bhaddā Kāpilānī. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can the lady Thullanandā intentionally cause discomfort to the lady Bhaddā Kāpilānī?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā intentionally caused discomfort to Bhaddā Kāpilānī?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā intentionally cause discomfort to Bhaddā Kāpilānī? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

¹ As in Nuns' Bi-NP.10, Bi-NP.11, Bi-Pc.28. ² Cf. above, BD.3.186, n.1. ³ ulārasaṃbhāvitā.

⁴ payirupāsati also means to honour. ⁵ issāpakatā, as at SN.ii.260, Vin.3.107. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.932 takes it as issāya pakatā, envious by nature, with the variant reading apakatā, not having done away with envy. ⁶ saññattibahulā. ⁷ For these last two cf. BD.2.192 (Vin.4.15).

BD.3.308

“Whatever nun should intentionally cause discomfort to a nun, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.33.2.1

To a nun means: to another nun.

Intentionally means: a transgression committed knowingly, consciously, deliberately.²

Should cause discomfort means: if thinking, “Because of this there will be discomfort for her,” she walks up and down or stands still or sits down or lies down on a sleeping-place or recites or makes (another) recite or studies in front of (her) without asking (for permission),³ there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) intentionally causes discomfort, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained (and) intentionally causes discomfort, there is an offence of expiation. If she intentionally causes discomfort to one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁴

Bi-Pc.33.2.2

Vin.4.291

There is no offence if she, not desiring to cause discomfort (and) having asked (for permission), walks up and down ... or studies in front of (her); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.33.2.3

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.77. ² = Vin.3.73; see BD.1.126, n.3. ³ This appears to be a gloss, limiting the scope of the rule. ⁴ Should doubtless be “no offence.”

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 34

Bi-Pc.34.1.1
BD.3.309

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, when (the woman) who lived with her¹ was ailing, neither attended to her nor made an effort² to get her attended to. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, when (the woman) who lives with her is ailing, neither attend to her nor make an effort to get her attended to?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... neither attended to her nor ... attended to?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, when (the woman) who lives with her is ailing, neither attend to her nor make an effort to get her attended to? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should neither attend to an ailing (woman) who lives with her nor should make an effort to get her attended to, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.34.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Ailing means: she is called ill.

¹ sahajīvinī. cf. below, BD.3.375, BD.3.379. Not necessarily a fully ordained nun, for the sahajīvinī might be a pupil or one not ordained (see Bi-Pc.34.2.1 below), while Bi-Pc.68 and Bi-Pc.70 speak of Thullanandā ordaining her sahajīvinī, which means that they had shared a cell before the latter was ordained. ² Cf. above, BD.3.287, below, BD.3.330.

(Woman) who lives with her means: she is called one who shares her cell.¹

BD.3.310

Should neither attend to her means: should not herself attend to her.²

Nor should make an effort to get her attended to means: should not command another.³

If she thinks, “I will neither attend to her nor make an effort to get her attended to,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.⁴ If she attends neither to a pupil nor to one who is not ordained nor makes an effort to get her attended to, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Vin.4.292

There is no offence if there is an obstacle⁵; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.34.2.2

¹ saddhivihārini, co-resident. Also below, BD.3.375, BD.3.379. ² Cf. above, BD.3.288, below, BD.3.331. ³ Cf. above, BD.3.288, below, BD.3.331. ⁴ Cf. above, BD.3.288, below, BD.3.331.

⁵ Cf. above, BD.3.289, but where the text's punctuation is different, and below, BD.3.331. I prefer that obtaining in Bi-Pc.34 and Bi-Pc.45.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 35

Bi-Pc.35.1.1
BD.3.311

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time Bhaddā Kāpilānī had spent the rains in Saketa. As she had some business to do, she sent a messenger to the nun Thullanandā, saying: "If the lady Thullanandā would give me quarters, I would come to Sāvattthī." The nun Thullanandā spoke thus: "Let her come, I will give it." Then Bhaddā Kāpilānī went from Saketa to Sāvattthī. The nun Thullanandā gave quarters to Bhaddā Kāpilānī. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā was very learned, she was a repeater ... (see Bi-Pc.33.1) ... she was skilled in giving dhamma-talk. The nun Thullanandā, thinking: "Those who are said to have few wants ... (see Bi-Pc.33.1) ... intent on hinting," angry, displeased threw Bhaddā Kāpilānī out of her quarters. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, angry, displeased, having given quarters to the lady Bhaddā Kāpilānī, throw her out?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... threw her out?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... throw her out? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having given quarters to a nun, should, angry, displeased, throw her out or have her thrown out, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Bi-Pc.35.2.1
BD.3.312

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

A nun² means: another nun.

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.17. ² Accusative.

Quarters means: it is called fastened by a door.¹

Having given means: oneself having given.

Angry, displeased means: dissatisfied, the mind worsened, stubborn.²

Should throw out means: if, having taken (her) in a room, she throws her out on to the verandah, there is an offence of expiation. If, having taken her on the verandah, she throws her outside, there is an offence of expiation. If, with one effort, she makes her pass through many doors, there is an offence of expiation.³ Should have her thrown out means: if she commands another, there is an offence of wrong-doing. When once commanded, if she makes her pass through many doors, there is an offence of expiation.⁴

Vin.4.293

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) having given her quarters, angry, displeased, throws her out or has her thrown out, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she throws out or has her requisites thrown out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she throws out or has her thrown out from what is not fastened by a door ... If she throws out or has her requisites thrown out ... If she throws out or has one who is not ordained thrown out from what is or from what is not fastened by a door ... If she throws out or has her requisites thrown out ... If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁵

Bi-Pc.35.2.2

BD.3.313

There is no offence if she throws out or has one who is shameless thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she throws out or has one who is mad thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she throws out or has one who makes strife ... quarrels ...

Bi-Pc.35.2.3

¹ = definition of "dwelling" at BD.3.336, below. ² Cf. BD.1.281, BD.2.140, BD.2.251; Vin.4.146, Vin.4.236. ³ Cf. BD.2.251f. ⁴ Cf. BD.2.251f. ⁵ Last clause should probably read "no offence." Cf. whole paragraph with BD.2.252.

contention ... brawls ... who makes disputes in the Order thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she throws out or has a pupil or one who shares a cell or one who is not proceeding fitly thrown out, if she throws out or has her requisites thrown out; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

¹ Cf. BD.2.253.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 36

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakalī kept company¹ with a householder and with a householder's son.² Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Caṇḍakalī keep company ...?" ...

Bi-Pc.36.1.1
BD.3.314

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakalī kept company ...?"

"It is true, lord."

"How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakalī keep company with a householder and a householder's son? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

Vin.4.294

"Whatever nun should keep company with a householder or with a householder's son, that nun should be spoken to thus by the nuns: 'Do not, lady, keep company with a householder and with a householder's son. Let the lady desist, the Order praises such detachment in a sister.' But if that nun, being spoken to thus by the nuns, should persist as before, that nun should be admonished by the nuns up to the third time for giving up that (course). If she should give it up, while being admonished up to the third time, that is good. If she should not give it up, there is an offence of expiation.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.36.2.1
BD.3.315

¹ This Pācittiya should be compared with the Nuns' Bi-Ss.12. The Pācittiya, partaking as it does of Saṅghādisesa material and character, seems out of place here. The main difference is that in the Pācittiya, a nun lived in society with a householder, while in the Saṅghādisesa, nuns who were pupils lived in society and were of evil habits and so on. Cf. also Bi-Pc.79.

² gahapatināpi gahapatiputtana pi. Cf. DN.i.62; MN.i.179, MN.i.344.

Keeps company means: keeps company unbecomingly as to body and speech.

Householder means: he who inhabits a house. Householder's son means: he who is a son or brothers.¹

That nun means: that nun who keeps company.

By the nuns means: by other nuns who see, who hear; she should be told by these: "Do not, lady, ... the Order praises such detachment in a sister." And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. But if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Having heard, if they do not speak, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun, having been pulled to the midst of the Order, should be told: "Do not, lady, ... the Order praises such detachment in a sister." And a second time she should be told. And a third time she should be told. If she gives it up, that is good. But if she does not give it up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. That nun should be admonished. And thus, monks, should she be admonished: the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: "Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so keeps company with a householder and with a householder's son. She does not give up this course. If it seems right to the Order let the Order admonish the nun so and so for giving up this course. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This nun so and so ..." And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The nun so and so is admonished by the Order for giving up this course. If it is pleasing ... So do I understand this.²

Vin.4.295

As a result of the motion, there is an offence of wrong-doing; as a result of two proclamations, there are offences of wrong-doing. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.36.2.2
BD.3.316

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) does not give it up, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

¹ yo koci puttabhātaro. ² Cf. Nuns' Bi-Ss.10.

There is no offence if she is not admonished; if she gives it up; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

Bi-Pc.36.2.3

¹ Should no doubt read “no offence.” ² Cf. Nuns' Bi-Ss.10.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 37

Bi-Pc.37.1.1
BD.3.317

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns walked without a weapon¹ on almstour within (their own) region² (when this was) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening.³ Bad men assaulted them. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ... dangerous, frightening?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... dangerous, frightening?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... dangerous, frightening? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should walk without a weapon on alms-tour within (her own) region (when this is) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.37.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Within (her own) region means: in a region of that country⁴ in which she lives.

BD.3.318

Dangerous means: if on this road a place where thieves are halting is seen, a place where they are eating is seen, a place where they are resting

¹ asatthikā. As in Monks' Bu-Pc.27, translators differ as to whether this means "without a weapon" or not (having joined) a caravan. See BD.2.289, n.3. I here follow B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature 1.75 (No.21), and not WALDSCHMIDT, Bruchstücke des Bhikṣuṇī-Prātimokṣa der Sarvāstivādins, p.127, "ohne sich einer Karawane angeschlossen zu haben." ² antoratṭhe. Not given in Pali-English Dictionary or Critical Pali Dictionary, but cf. tiroraṭṭha in next Pācittiya.

³ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.27, where the only legal occasion where a monk might go along the same highroad with a nun was if the road was dangerous and frightening. ⁴ vijita, or kingdom, territory, conquered land.

is seen, a place where they are sitting down is seen, a place where they are lying down is seen.¹

Frightening means: if on this road people injured by thieves are seen, (people) plundered are seen, (people) beaten down are seen.²

Without a weapon³ means: without a weapon.⁴

Should walk on almstour means: in a village close enough for a cock (to walk), among every (such) village, there is an offence of expiation. For every half yojana in what is not a village, in a jungle, there is an offence of expiation.⁵

There is no offence if she goes with a weapon; if she goes in a place of security⁶ that is not frightening; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.37.2.2

Vin.4.296

¹ = BD.2.158, BD.2.290. ² = BD.2.158, BD.2.290. ³ asatthikā, more literally “weaponless.”

⁴ vinā satthēna. ⁵ Cf. BD.2.290 in definition of “even among villages”; BD.2.294; and above, BD.3.16. ⁶ khema; a word which at some time became important as being applied particularly to spiritual peace, nibbana.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 38

Bi-Pc.38.1.1
BD.3.319

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns walked without a weapon on almstour outside (their own) region¹ (when this was) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening. Bad men ... (see Bi-Pc.37.1. Instead of within (her own) region read outside (her own) region) ..." ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should walk without a weapon outside (her own) region (when this is) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.38.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Outside (her own) region means: setting aside that country in which she lives, in another's region.

Dangerous means: ... (see Bi-Pc.37.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ tiroraṭṭhe.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 39

... at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time nuns walked on alms-tour during the rains. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns walk on almstour during the rains, trampling down the crops and grasses, injuring life that is one-facultied, bringing many small creatures to destruction?"¹ Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

Bi-Pc.39.1.1
BD.3.320

"How can these nuns ... during the rains ... bringing many small creatures to destruction?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... during the rains ... bringing many small creatures to destruction?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns walk on almstour during the rains ... bringing many small creatures to destruction? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should walk on almstour during the rains, there is an offence of expiation."

Vin.4.297

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.39.2.1
BD.3.321

¹ These three phrases occur at Vin.1.137, Vin.1.138, where rains-retreat is allowed to the monks, for lay-people had complained that by walking for alms in all seasons they did harm to crops and small living things, and where it is made a dukkāṭa for monks to set out on almstour before they have kept the earlier or later three months of the rains. For "life that is one-facultied," cf. BD.2.223, BD.2.226, and for "small creatures to destruction," cf. BD.2.71.

During the rains means: not having spent the first three months or the last three months.¹

Should walk on almstour means: in a village close enough for a cock (to walk) ... (see Bi-Pc.37.2.1) ... in what is not a village, in the jungle, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.39.2.2

There is no offence if she goes away for seven days because there is something to be done; if she goes away because she is troubled about something; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ The rains were reckoned to occupy four months; three of these had to be spent in a rains-settlement, on which there were two times for entering, Vin.1.137. Cf. definition of “having spent the rains” below, BD.3.322, BD.3.354.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 40

... at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time nuns, as before,¹ spent the rains in Rājagaha, the cold weather there, the hot weather there. People ... spread it about, saying: "The (four) quarters are blocked,² confused with nuns; because of them the (four) quarters are not seen."³ Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

Bi-Pc.40.1.1
BD.3.322

"Because of this, monks, I will lay down a rule of training founded on ten reasons: for the excellence of the Order⁴ ... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having kept the rains, should not set out on alms-tour, even for (a distance of) five or six yojanas, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.40.2.1

Having kept the rains means: having kept the first three months or the last three months.⁵

If she thinks "I will not set out on almstour, even for (the distance of) five or six yojanas," in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ tatth'eva—i.e., as in Bi-Pc.39. ² āhundarika. See MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.73. ³ Cf. Vin.1.79 for a corresponding paragraph, and DN.ii.99, AN.iii.69 for the last phrase. The meaning clearly is that the nuns were too many for the place. It seems that the lay people were complaining on their own account and not on that of the nuns, as the dative (bhikkhunīnaṃ, imāsaṃ) might suggest. ⁴ As at BD.1.37, BD.2.87. ⁵ Cf. Vin.1.138, Vin.4.314.

Bi-Pc.40.2.2
BD.3.323

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about for a nun as a companion,¹ she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

The Fourth Division: that on sharing

¹ It was an offence for a nun to go about singly. ² =BD.3.357, BD.3.380, below; and cf. BD.3.289, BD.3.310, BD.3.331, BD.3.336.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 41

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a bold design¹ was made in a picture gallery² in King Pasenadi of Kosala's pleasure grove. Many people went to see the picture gallery. The group of six nuns also went to see the picture gallery. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns go to see the picture gallery, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns go to see a picture gallery?"

Bi-Pc.41.1.1
BD.3.324

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns went to see a picture gallery?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can this group of six nuns go to see a picture gallery? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should go to see a king's pleasure house³ or a picture gallery or a park or a pleasure grove or a lotus pond,⁴ there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.41.2.1

¹ paṭibhānacitta. See BD.2.285, n.5. ² cittāgāra. ³ rājāgāra. Cf. DN.i.1, °ka, which DN-a.42 explains as: "there they made a rest house (agāra) adorned with various designs (paṭibhānacitta) for the king's amusement. It was called a rājāgāra. ⁴ At Vin.2.123 a lay follower wanted to have a lotus pond built for the monks. The lord, as is said, allowed the lotus pond to the monks.

King's pleasure house means: wherever it is made for a king to amuse himself, to enjoy himself.

BD.3.325

Picture gallery means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.

Park¹ means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.

Pleasure grove means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.²

Lotus pond means: wherever it is made for people to amuse themselves, to enjoy themselves.

If she goes to see, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees, there is an offence of expiation. Having left the region of sight, if she sees again, there is an offence of expiation. If she goes to see one or the other, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Standing where she sees, there is an offence of expiation. Having left the region of sight, if she sees again, there is an offence of expiation.³

Vin.4.299

Bi-Pc.41.2.2

There is no offence if, standing in a monastery, she sees;⁴ if she sees as she is going out or coming in⁵; if she sees, having gone out as there is something to be done,⁶ if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ ārāma, which I have usually translated as “monastery”; see BD.2.2, n.2. ² uyyāna therefore here does not have the special meaning of “royal” pleasance, as is sometimes the case.

³ Cf. Vin.4.108 (BD.2.380). As Vin-a.934 points out, the last two clauses there, corresponding to the last two above, incur an offence of wrong-doing. It is sometimes the case that monks incur a lesser penalty than the nuns for a comparable offence. ⁴ According to Vin-a.934 this means that if she sees them building a king's pleasure house and so on when she is inside a monastery.

⁵ Vin-a.934 explains that if she sees when on the road for her almstour, there is no offence. ⁶ Vin-a.934, in the king's presence.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 42

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns made use of a sofa¹ and of a divan.² People, engaged in touring the dwelling place, having seen (them) ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns make use of a sofa and of a divan, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns make use of a sofa and of a divan?" ...

Bi-Pc.42.1.1
BD.3.326

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns made use of a ... divan?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns make use of a sofa and of a divan? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

BD.3.327

¹ āsandi. This is the first of the high seats, the large seats which the group of six monks used, thereby incurring a dukkāṭa offence, Vin.1.192. The same list occurs at Vin.2.163, where monks are allowed to sit down on all but āsandi, pallaṅka (see next note) and tūlika, but to lie down on none; also at AN.i.181, and DN.i.7 as being among the seats which Gotama is said to refrain from using. At Vin.2.142-143 āsandi and pallaṅka, with bowls and shoes, are the only wooden articles not allowed to monks.

See Dialogues of the Buddha, 1.11, n.4, where Rhys Davids is of the opinion that height and not length is referred to. The fact that in this Pācittiya it is "no offence" to use an āsandi if the legs have been cut down, also points this way, as does the allowance given monks at Vin.2.169-170 to use āsandi if the legs have been broken, bhinditvā. On the other hand, at DN.i.55=MN.i.515=SN.iii.207 an āsandi is used as a bier—i.e., as something long, SN-a.ii.339=MN-a.3.227, calling it a couch for lying down on, with (MN-a.) variant reading "for sitting down on." Old Commentary, below speaks of sitting down on and lying down on. CHALMERS Jātaka translation 1.10, translates as "couch" (in a cart); it is therefore not "clear from Ja.1.108" that āsandi is a "cushion" as stated at Vinaya Texts ii.27, n.2. ² pallaṅka. See above, BD.3.271, n.3.

“Whatever nun should make use of a sofa or of a divan, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

Bi-Pc.42.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Sofa means: it is called of exceeding measure.

Divan means: it is made having brought hair (stuffing).²

Should make use of means: if she sits down on it or lies down on it, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.42.2.2

There is no offence if, having cut down the legs of the sofa, she makes use of it; if, having cut out the hair (stuffing) from the divan, she makes use of it³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ A dukkata for nuns to sit on a divan at Vin.2.280, a half-(aḍḍha-) pallaṅka being allowed instead. ² vāla at MN-a.2.45 is explained as assavāla, horse-hair. ³ Cf. Vin.2.169-70, where these articles are allowed to monks if the legs of the former are broken, bhīnditvā, and the horse-hair of the latter destroyed, bhīnditvā. Above the reading is in both cases chīnditvā, cut.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 43

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns spun yarn. People, engaged in touring the dwelling place, having seen (them) ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns spin yarn, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns spin yarn?" ...

Bi-Pc.43.1.1
BD.3.328
Vin.4.300

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns spin yarn?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns spin yarn? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should spin yarn, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.43.2.1

Yarn means: the six (kinds of) yarn: linen, cotton, silk, wool, coarse hempen cloth, canvas.¹

Should spin means: if she herself spins, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every running up² there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.43.2.2

¹ = Vin.3.256. The same as the six kinds of robe-material; see BD.2.143 for notes. ² ujjavuj-jave; a term used in spinning, found I think only here. Vin-a.935 seems to say "if whatever was rolled by hand (hatthena, Pali-English Dictionary giving the reading patthena, by measure) is twisted round on that spindle (? takka), there is one offence."

There is no offence if she spins spun yarn¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ kantitasutta; kantita can also mean “cut off.” Vin-a.935 explains by saying, “if she spins having bound together loose yarn (dasikasutta), or if she unspins what was badly spun, there is no offence.”

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 44

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns did household work. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns do household work?" ...

Bi-Pc.44.1.1
BD.3.329

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns do household work?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns do household work? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should do household work, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.44.2.1

Household work means: if she cooks conje^y or rice or solid food for a layman,¹ if she washes a cloak or a turban, there is an offence of expiation

Vin.4.301

There is no offence if it is a drink of conje^y,² if it is for the Order; if it is for worship at a shrine; if in doing household work for herself she cooks conje^y or rice or solid food, washes a cloak or a turban; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.44.2.2

¹ agārika. ² Vin-a.935 says that there is no offence in cooking a drink of conje^y (yāgupāna, cf. Vin.1.84, Vin.1.339) or rice for the Order (given) for it by people.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 45

Bi-Pc.45.1.1
BD.3.330

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun, having approached the nun Thullanandā, spoke thus: "Do come, lady, and settle this legal question." The nun Thullanandā, having answered, "Very good," neither settled it nor made an effort to get it settled.¹ Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, being spoken to by a nun, saying: 'Do come, lady, and settle this legal question,' and having answered, 'Very good,' neither settle it nor make an effort to get it settled?"

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... to get it settled?"
"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor make an effort to get it settled? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, being spoken to by a nun, saying: 'Do come, lady, and settle this legal question,' and having answered: 'Very good,' (yet) if she is not afterwards prevented, should neither settle it nor should make an effort to get it settled, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.45.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

By a nun means: by another nun.

Legal question means: there are four (kinds of) legal questions: legal questions arising out of disputes legal questions arising out of censure,

BD.3.331

¹ Cf. Bi-Pc.23, Bi-Pc.34, Bi-Pc.77.

legal questions arising out of transgressions, legal questions arising out of obligations.¹

Do come, lady, and settle this legal question means: Do come, lady, and decide this legal question.

If she is not afterwards prevented means: if there is not an obstacle.²

Vin.4.302

Should neither settle it means: should not herself settle it.³

Nor should make an effort to get it settled means: should not command another.⁴

If she thinks, "I will neither settle it nor make an effort to get it settled," in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.⁵

If she thinks that she is ordained when she is ordained (and) neither settles a legal question nor makes an effort to get it settled, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she neither settles a legal question nor makes an effort to get it settled for one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ordained ... If she thinks that she is not ordained when she is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁶

Bi-Pc.45.2.2

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if having looked about, she does not get the chance⁷; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.45.2.3

¹ = Vin.3.164 (BD.1.282). ² = above, BD.3.288. ³ = above, BD.3.288, BD.3.310. ⁴ = above, BD.3.288, BD.3.310. ⁵ = above, BD.3.288, BD.3.310. ⁶ Last clause should probably read "no offence." ⁷ = above, BD.3.289, BD.3.310, and below, BD.3.336, BD.3.355.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 46

Bi-Pc.46.1.1
BD.3.332

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā gave with her own hand solid food and soft food to players and dancers ... (see Bi-Pc.28.1) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should give with her own hand solid food or soft food to a householder or to a wanderer or to a female wanderer, there is an offence of expiation.”¹

Bi-Pc.46.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Householder means: ... (see Bi-Pc.28.2) ... she who has reached (the stage of a) female wanderer.

Solid food means: excluding the five (kinds of) meals and water for cleansing the teeth, the rest is called solid food.²

Soft food means: the five (kinds of) meals: cooked rice, food made with flour, barley-meal, fish, meat.³

Should give means: if she gives by means of the body or by means of something attached to the body or by means of something that may be cast, there is an offence of expiation.⁴ If she gives water for cleansing the teeth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Vin.4.303

Bi-Pc.46.2.2

There is no offence if she gets (someone) to give (but) does not (herself) give; if she gives depositing it near; if she gives ointment for external (use); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.⁵

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.41. ² = Vin.4.92 (BD.2.349) and cf. Vin.4.83 (BD.2.330). ³ = Vin.4.83, Vin.4.92. For notes, see BD.2.330. ⁴ = Vin.4.92. ⁵ = Vin.4.92.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 47

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, not having given up her household robe,¹ made use of it. Other menstruating nuns did not obtain it. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, not having given up her household robe, make use of it?" ...

Bi-Pc.47.1.1
BD.3.333

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... makes use of it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... make use of it? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, not having given up her household robe, should make use of it, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.47.2.1

Household robe means: it is given with the words: 'Let menstruating nuns make use of it.'

Not having given up, should make use of it means: if, having made use of it for two or three days, having washed it on the fourth day, she makes use of it, not having given it up to a nun or to a probationer or to a female novice, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that it is not given up when it is not given up (and) makes use of it, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it

Bi-Pc.47.2.2

¹ āvsathacīvara; allowed to nuns at Vin.2.271.

BD.3.334 is not given up ... If she thinks that it is given up when it is not given up ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is not given up when it is given up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is given up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is given up when it is given up, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.47.2.3

There is no offence if, having given it up, she makes use of it; if she makes use of it on a further occasion; if there are no other menstruating nuns; if she is one whose robe is stolen; if she is one whose robe is destroyed; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.304

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 48

Bi-Pc.48.1.1
BD.3.335

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, not having given up her dwelling,¹ set out on almstour. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā's dwelling caught fire. Nuns spoke thus: "Come along, ladies, we are bringing out the things." Some spoke thus: "Ladies, we will not bring them out; she will make us responsible for² everything that is destroyed." The nun Thullanandā, having come back again to that dwelling, asked the nuns, saying: "Ladies, did you bring out my things?"

"We, lady, did not bring them out."

The nun Thullanandā ... spread it about, saying:

"How can these nuns, when a dwelling is on fire, not bring out the things?" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can the lady Thullanandā, not having given up her dwelling, set out on almstour?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... set out on almstour?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā, not having given up her dwelling, set out on almstour? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, not having given up her dwelling, should set out on almstour, there is an offence of expiation."³

¹ āvasatha. ² amhe abhiyuñjissati. ³ The offence is not in not saving property and helping one another, but in not making proper provision for the cure of property.

Bi-Pc.48.2.1
BD.3.336

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Dwelling means: it is called fastened by a door.¹

Not having given up, should set out on almstour means: if, not having given up to a nun or to a probationer or to a female novice, in passing beyond the enclosure of a dwelling that is fenced in, there is an offence of expiation. In passing beyond the precincts of a dwelling that is not fenced in, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.48.2.2

If she thinks that it is not given up when it is not given up (and) sets out, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not given up ... If she thinks that it is given up when it is not given up ... offence of expiation. If, not having given up what is not fastened by a door, she sets out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is not given up when it is given up ... If she is in doubt as to whether it is given up, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that it is given up when it is given up, there is no offence.

Vin.4.305

Bi-Pc.48.2.3

There is no offence if she sets out having given it up; if there is an obstacle; if having looked about she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. definition of “quarters,” upassaya, at BD.3.312, above. ² Cf. above, BD.3.289, BD.3.310, BD.3.323, BD.3.331.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 49

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns learnt worldly knowledge.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns learn worldly knowledge, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns learn worldly knowledge?" ...

Bi-Pc.49.1.1
BD.3.337

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns learn worldly knowledge?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them saying:

"How, monks, can this group of six nuns learn worldly knowledge? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should learn worldly knowledge, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.49.2.1

Worldly knowledge means: whatever is secular,² not connected with the goal.

Should learn means: if she learns by line,³ for every line there is an offence of expiation. If she learns by syllable, for every syllable there is an offence of expiation.

BD.3.338

¹ tiracchāna-vijjā, literally "animal wisdom." B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature 1. p.75 has "art for her livelihood," but Old Commentary, does not bear this out. At Vin.2.139 it is a dukkaṭa for a monk to learn this. Cf. tiracchānakathā at Monks' Bu-Pc.85, "worldly talk"—i.e., talk on matters concerning life in the world. Vinaya Texts iii.152 renders by "the low arts"—those set out at DN.i.9–DN.i.12. ² bāhirakam̐. ³ padena; see BD.2.190, BD.2.191 and notes.

Bi-Pc.49.2.2

There is no offence if she learns writing¹; if she learns what is memorised²; if she learns a spell³ for protection; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ lekham pariyāpuṇāti. See Vinaya Texts i. p.xxxiiff. and BD.1.131, n. ² dhāraṇā, a memorising; cf. Mi.79, and dhammadhāraṇā at MN.ii.175. ³ parittā. Cf. DN.iii.206, where monks are enjoined to learn and master the Āṭānāṭiya rakkhā or ward rune. This is called atthasamhitā, connected with the goal; cf. foregoing definition of “worldly knowledge,” which therefore looks as if it does not include protective spells. See Dialogues of the Buddha 3.185ff. for discussion of position and use of the various named parittās in early Buddhism. The proximity of writing (late?) and protective spells (early?) points to a patchwork compilation of this Pācittiya.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 50

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns taught worldly knowledge.¹ People ... spread it about ... (Bi-Pc.44.1. Instead of learn read teach.) ... “... this rule of training: “Whatever nun should teach² worldly knowledge, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.50.1.1
BD.3.339
Vin.4.306

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.50.2.1

Worldly knowledge means: ...

Should teach³ means: if she teaches by line ... (Bi-Pc.44.2. Instead of learns read teaches.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

The Fifth Division: that on a picture gallery

¹ At Vin.2.139 it is made a dukkāṭa for a monk to do so. ² vāceyya—i.e., should cause (someone) to repeat or speak. ³ Cf. Vin.4.15 (BD.2.192).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 51

Bi-Pc.51.1.1
BD.3.340

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several monks, (each) wearing (only) one robe, were making robes in a village residence. Nuns, having entered the monastery without asking (for permission), approached those monks. The monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns enter a monastery without asking (for permission)?"

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... without asking (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns enter a monastery without asking (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should enter a monastery without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation."

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Bi-Pc.51.2.1

Then these monks went out from that residence. The nuns, saying, "The masters have gone out," did not go back to the monastery. Then these monks came back again to that residence. The nuns, saying, "The masters have come back," having entered the monastery asking (for permission), approached these monks, having approached, having greeted these monks, they stood at a respectful distance. As they were standing at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to these nuns: "Why do you, sisters, neither sweep the monastery nor provide drinking water and water for washing?"

Vin.4.307

“Masters, a rule of training came to be laid down by the lord that, without asking (for permission) a monastery should not be entered (by a nun), therefore we did not come.” They told this matter to the lord. He said:

BD.3.341

“I allow, monks, (a nun) to enter a monastery asking (for permission) if a monk be there. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should enter a monastery without asking (for permission) if a monk be there,¹ there is an offence of expiation.”

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Then these monks, having gone out from that residence, came back again to that residence. The nuns, saying, “The masters have gone out,” entered the monastery without asking (for permission). These became remorseful and said: “A rule of training laid down by the lord for nuns says that a monastery should not be entered (by a nun) without asking (for permission) if a monk be there, and we, not asking (for permission) if a monk was there, entered the monastery. Is it now possible that we have fallen into an offence of expiation?” They told this matter to the lord. He said: “And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.51.3.1

“Whatever nun should knowingly enter a monastery with monks (in it) without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.51.4.1

She knows means: either she knows of herself or others tell her or these tell (her).²

A monastery with monks (in it) means: even where monks stay at the foot of a tree.

Should enter a monastery without asking (for permission) means: without asking a monk or a novice or a monastery attendant (for permission),³ in passing beyond the enclosure of a monastery that is fenced in, there is an offence of expiation. In entering the precincts of a monastery that is not fenced in, there is an offence of expiation.⁴

BD.3.342

¹ Cf. Vin.4.100 (BD.2.365 and see n.1). ² Cf. Vin.3.265 (BD.2.161), etc. ³ Cf. Vin.4.40 (BD.2.241), and see Vin.2.211. ⁴ Cf. Vin.4.166.

Bi-Pc.51.4.2

If she thinks that there are monks (in it) when there are monks (in it) and enters a monastery without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether monks are (in it) ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that monks are not (in it) when monks are (in it) ... no offence. If she thinks that monks are (in it) when monks are not (in it), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether monks are not (in it), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that monks are not (in it) when monks are not (in it), there is no offence.

Vin.4.308

Bi-Pc.51.4.3

There is no offence if she enters asking (for permission) if a monk be there; if she enters not asking (for permission) if a monk be not there¹; if she walks looking ahead²; if she goes where there are nuns gathered together; if (her) way is through a monastery; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. Vin.4.101 (BD.2.367). ² Vin-a.937 says that there is no offence if she enters looking at the heads of the nuns who are entering first.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 52

... at Vesālī in the Great Grove at the Hall of the Gabled Pillars. Now at that time the venerable Kappitaka,¹ the venerable Upāli's preceptor,² lived in a cemetery. Now at that time an older³ nun of the group of six nuns had passed away. The group of six nuns, taking out that nun, having cremated her not far from the venerable Kappitaka's dwelling place, having made a tomb, having gone (there), wept at that tomb. Then the venerable Kappitaka, troubled by that noise, having destroyed that tomb, scattered (the materials). The group of six nuns took counsel,⁴ saying: "Our lady's tomb is destroyed by this Kappitaka, come, let us kill him." A certain nun told this matter to the venerable Upāli. The venerable Upāli told this matter to the venerable Kappitaka. Then the venerable Kappitaka, having gone out from that dwelling place, lay in hiding. Then the group of six nuns approached the venerable Kappitaka's dwelling place, having approached, having had the venerable Kappitaka's dwelling place covered over⁵ with stones and clods of earth, they departed, saying, "Kappitaka is dead." Then the venerable Kappitaka at the end of that night having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Vesālī for almsfood. The group of six nuns saw the venerable Kappitaka walking for almsfood; seeing him, they spoke thus: "This Kappitaka is alive, how ever did he foil our plan?"⁶ The group of six nuns heard it said: "Our plan was foiled by master Upāli." These reviled⁷

Bi-Pc.52.1.1
BD.3.343

BD.3.344

¹ Cf. Pv.49–Pv.50. Vin-a.937, Pv-a.230 say that he was an elder among the thousand matted hair ascetics. ² Cf. Pv-a.230. ³ mahatarā, perhaps a leading nun. ⁴ mantesuṃ. Pali-English Dictionary says "perhaps 'plotted'" here. ⁵ ottharāpetvā; see BD.1.137, n.4. ⁶ mantarṃ sarṃharati. ⁷ akkosiṃsu; see BD.2.269 and BD.2.171, n.3.

the venerable Upāli, saying: “How can this barber,¹ a shampooing low-birth (person),² foil our plan?” Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six nuns revile master Upāli?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns reviled Upāli?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can the group of six nuns revile Upāli? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should revile or should abuse a monk,³ there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.52.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Monk means: one who is ordained.

Should revile means: if she reviles with the ten ways of reviling⁴ or with any one of these, there is an offence of expiation.

Or should abuse means: if she makes him afraid,⁵ there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.52.2.2

If she thinks that he is ordained when he is ordained (and) reviles or abuses him, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether he is ordained ... If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is ordained ... offence of expiation. If she reviles or abuses one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that he is ordained when he is not ordained ... If she is in doubt as to whether he is not ordained ... If she thinks that he is not ordained when he is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

BD.3.345

Bi-Pc.52.2.3

¹ kasāvaṭa; see Psalm of the Bretheren. 168, Tha-ap.37ff., and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names 410 for view that Upāli was born a barber in this Buddha age. ² kasāvaṭo malamajjano nihīnajacco; cf. Ja.3.452 hīnajacco malamajjano nahāpita (putto). ³ Cf. the seventh of the eight important rules, garudhammā, given at Vin.4.52 (BD.2.269), BD.2.255, AN.iv.277. ⁴ See BD.2.171, n.3. ⁵ bhayaṃ upadaṃseti, causes fear to appear.

There is no offence if she is aiming at (explaining) the goal, if she is aiming at (explaining) a rule, if she is aiming at (explaining) the teaching¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = Vin.3.130 (BD.1.218) = Vin.4.11 (BD.2.185) = Vin.4.277 (above, BD.3.280).

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 53

Bi-Pc.53.1.1
BD.3.346

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time¹ the nun Caṇḍakālī was one who made strife, who made quarrels, who made contention, who made brawls, who made disputes in the Order ... (see Bi-Ss.4) ... The nun Thullanandā, saying: "These are ignorant, these are inexperienced, they do not even know a (formal) act or the defect of a (formal) act or the failure of a (formal) act or the success of a (formal) act," and being quick tempered,² she abused³ a group. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

Vin.4.310

"How can the lady Thullanandā, being quick tempered, abuse a group?"

...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā, being quick tempered, abused a group?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... abuse a group? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, being quick tempered, should abuse a group, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.53.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Being quick tempered means: she is called angry.⁴

BD.3.347

Group means: it is called an Order of nuns.⁵

¹ See Nuns' Bi-Ss.4 above. ² caṇḍikatā. ³ paribhāsati; cf. Bi-Pc.52. ⁴ kodhanā; cf. Vin.4.334; Pv-a.83 caṇḍi ti kodhanā, and see definition at MN-a.2.99. ⁵ =above, BD.3.295.

Should abuse¹ means: if she abuses, saying: “These are ignorant, these are inexperienced, they do not even know a (formal) act ... or the success of a (formal) act,” there is an offence of expiation. If she abuses several nuns or one nun or one who is not ordained, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if she is aiming at (explaining) the goal ... (see Bi-Pc.52.2.3) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.344.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 54

Bi-Pc.54.1.1
BD.3.348
Vin.4.311

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain brahmin, having invited nuns, offered them food¹ ...” ...

“Whatever nun, being invited or being satisfied,² should eat or partake of solid food or soft food, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.54.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Being invited means: being invited to any one meal of the five (kinds of) meals.

Being satisfied means: eating is to be seen, a meal is to be seen, standing within a reach of the hand, she asks (her), a refusal is to be seen.³

Solid food means: setting aside the five (kinds of) meals, conje⁴, food (that may be eaten) during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life, the rest means solid food.⁵

Soft food means: the five (kinds of) meals: ... meat.⁶

If she accepts, thinking: “I will eat, I will partake of,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of expiation.⁷ If she accepts for the sake of nutriment (food to be eaten) during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life, there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹

BD.3.349

¹ = Monks' Bu-Pc.35, first story; see BD.2.326f. The rule was amended for the monks but not for the nuns. ² The words are here changed to nimantitā vā pavāritā vā from bhuttavi pavarita of the story. This latter pair (in the masculine) appears in the monks' sikkhāpada (Bu-Pc.35); therefore the Old Commentary there defines bhuttāvi, having eaten, while above it defines nimantitā, being invited; but the terms used in these two definitions are the same.

³ = Monks' Bu-Pc.35.3.1. See BD.2.328ff. for notes. ⁴ This is omitted from corresponding paragraph in Monks' Bu-Pc.35. For conje, yāgu, as being neither a solid food nor a soft food, see BD.2, Introduction, p.xxxi and BD.3.352f. It was counted rather as a drink, see “no offence” clause below. ⁵ = Monks' Bu-Pc.35.3.1. See BD.2.328ff. for notes. ⁶ = Monks' Bu-Pc.35.3.1. See BD.2.328ff. for notes. ⁷ = Monks' Bu-Pc.35.3.1. See BD.2.328ff. for notes.

There is no offence if, being invited (but) not being satisfied, she drinks conje; if she eats having asked the owner (for permission); if when there is a reason she makes use of (food to be eaten) during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.54.2.2

Vin.4.312

¹ = Monks' Bu-Pc.35.3.2. ² = Monks' Bu-Pc.35.3.3.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 55

Bi-Pc.55.1.1
BD.3.350

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun, walking for alms along a certain road in Sāvattḥī, approached a certain family; having approached, she sat down on an appointed seat. Then these people, having offered food to this nun, spoke thus: "Lady, other nuns may also come." Then this nun, thinking: "How may these nuns not come?" having approached the nuns, spoke thus: "Ladies, in such and such a place there are fierce dogs, a wild bull, the place is a swamp, do not go there." But a certain nun, walking for alms along that road, approached that family; having approached, she sat down on an appointed seat. Then these people, having offered food to that nun, spoke thus: "Why do not the other nuns come, lady?" Then this nun told this matter to those people. The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can that nun be grudging as to families?"¹ ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun was grudging as to families?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun be grudging as to families? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should be one who is grudging as to families, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.55.2.1
BD.3.351

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ Five forms of meanness, stinginess or grudgingness, macchhariya, are given at AN.iii.139, AN.iii.258, AN.iii.266, AN.iii.273, AN.iv.459; DN.iii.234; Ds.1122 (see Buddhist Psychological Ethics, § 1122, n.); Vism.683.

Family means: ... low caste family.¹

Should be one who is grudging as to families means: if they say, “Why do the nuns not come?” (and) she speaks dispraise of a family in front of nuns, there is an offence of expiation. Or if she speaks dispraise of nuns in front of a family, there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if, not being grudging as to families, she merely explains that there is a danger²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.55.2.2

Vin.4.313

¹ = Vin.3.184, Vin.4.80, Vin.4.100, Vin.4.272. ² According to Vin-a.938 she either explains to the nuns that the family are non-believers, or she explains to the family that the nuns are of weak morality and of depraved states of mind.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 56

Bi-Pc.56.1.1
BD.3.352

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns, having spent the rains in a village residence, went to Sāvattthī. Nuns spoke thus to these nuns: "Where did the ladies spend the rains? We hope that the exhortation was effective?"¹

"There were no monks there, ladies; how could the exhortation be effective?" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

"How can these nuns spend the rains in a residence where there is no monk?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nuns ... where there was no monk?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nuns ... where there is no monk? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should spend the rains in a residence where there is no monk, there is an offence of expiation."²

Bi-Pc.56.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

A residence where there is no monk means: it is not possible to go for exhortation³ or for communion.⁴ If she thinks, "I will spend the rains," (and) prepares a lodging, provides drinking water and water for washing, sweeps a cell, there is an offence of wrong-doing. With sunrise, there is an offence of expiation.

BD.3.353

¹ iddha, as at Vin.4.50, Vin.4.54. ² This rule is the same as the second of the eight "important rules," see BD.2.268. ³ Rules for exhortation in the eight "important rules" occur at Monks' Bu-Pc.21–Bu-Pc.24. ⁴ saṁvāsa. (To go) for communion explained at Vin-a.938 to mean (to go) for asking the (date of the) Observance day, uposatha, and the Invitation ceremony, pavāraṇā. See BD.2.268 and n.6, n.8; also Nuns' Bi-Pc.57; but also see definition of saṁvāsa at end of each Pārājika rule, and below, BD.3.356.

There is no offence if monks, having entered on the rains-settlement, come to have gone away or left the Order or done their time or gone over to (another) side; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

Bi-Pc.56.2.2

¹ = above, BD.3.190, where see n.3.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 57

Bi-Pc.57.1.1
BD.3.354

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time several nuns, having kept the rains in a village residence, went to Sāvattḥī. Nuns spoke thus to these nuns: "Where did the ladies keep the rains? Was an Order of monks 'invited'¹?"

Vin.4.314

"Ladies, we did not 'invite' an Order of monks." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, having spent the rains, not 'invite' an Order of monks?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... did not 'invite' an Order of monks?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... not 'invite' an Order of monks? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having kept the rains, should not 'invite' both Orders in respect of three matters: what was seen or heard or suspected, there is an offence of expiation."²

Bi-Pc.57.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Having kept the rains means: having kept the first three months or the last three months.³

If she thinks, "I will not 'invite' both Orders in respect of three matters: what was seen or heard or suspected," in throwing off the responsibility,

BD.3.355

¹ pavārito, a technical term. See BD.2.268, n.8. Regulations for nuns to hold the pavāraṇā ceremony, using the word pavāreti, given at Vin.2.275. Cf. also Vin.1.161. ² Cf. the fourth "important rule," BD.2.268. ³ Cf. definition of "during the rains," above, BD.3.321.

there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

Bi-Pc.57.2.2

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.289, BD.3.310, BD.3.331, BD.3.336; and below, BD.3.376.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 58

Bi-Pc.58.1.1
BD.3.356

... among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery. Now at that time¹ the group of six monks, having approached a nunnery, exhorted the group of six nuns. Nuns spoke thus to the group of six nuns: “Come, ladies, we will go for exhortation.”

“Well, ladies, we would go for the sake of exhortation, (but) the group of the six masters exhort us, having come to this place itself.” Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six nuns not go for exhortation?” ...

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns do not go for exhortation?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

Vin.4.315

“How, monks, can the group of six nuns not go for exhortation? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should not go for exhortation or for communion, there is an offence of expiation.”²

Bi-Pc.58.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Exhortation means: the eight important rules.³

Communion means: one (formal) act, one recitation, an equal training.⁴ If she thinks, “I will not go for exhortation or for communion,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

BD.3.357

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.23, where the offence is for a monk to exhort a nun in a nunnery except at a right time. Clearly the trend is for nuns to go to monks. Other regulations for exhortation set out at Vin.2.263ff. ² Cf. Vin.2.263; a nun who does not go for exhortation is to be dealt with according to the rule. ³ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.21–Bu-Pc.24. ⁴ Cf. Old Commentary's explanation of asāmvāsa in each Pārājika (BD.1), and definition of “ill nun” at BD.2.278.

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about for a nun as a companion, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.¹

Bi-Pc.58.2.2

¹ = above, BD.3.323, below, BD.3.380, and cf. BD.3.289, BD.3.310, BD.3.331, BD.3.336.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 59

Bi-Pc.59.1.1
BD.3.358

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns neither asked (the date of) the Observance day¹ nor did they ask for exhortation. Monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns neither ask (the date of) the Observance day nor ask for exhortation?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns neither ... nor ask for exhortation?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns neither ... nor ask for exhortation? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Every half month a nun should desire two things from the Order of monks: the asking as to (the date of) the Observance day and the approaching for exhortation.² For her who transgresses this, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.59.2.1

Every half month means: every Observance day.³

Observance day means: the two Observance days, that on the fourteenth day and that on the fifteenth day.⁴

Exhortation means: the eight important rules.

If she thinks, "I will neither ask (the date of) the Observance day nor ask for exhortation," in throwing off the responsibility, ... (see Bi-Pc.58.2.1–Bi-Pc.58.2.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.316

¹ See Vin.1.105, where the lord is shown as prompting Kappina, and as saying that if brahmins do not honour the uposatha, who will? ² The third of the eight "important rules," Vin.4.52; see BD.2.268. ³ =above, BD.3.44. ⁴ Cf. Vin.1.104, Vin.1.132.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 60

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun together with a man, the one with the other, made a boil burst that had formed on the lower part of her body. Then that man began to violate that nun. She cried out in distress. Nuns, having run up, spoke thus to that nun: "Why do you, lady, cry out in distress?" Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun together with a man, the one with the other, make a boil burst that had formed on the lower part of her body?" ...

Bi-Pc.60.1.1
BD.3.359

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun ... lower part of her body?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun ... lower part of her body? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, without having obtained permission from an Order or from a group, should together with a man, the one with the other, make a boil or a scab¹ that has formed on the lower part of her body burst or break or let it be washed or smeared or bound up or unbound,² there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.60.2.1

Lower part of the body means: below the navel to above the circle of the knees.

Has formed means: has formed there.

Boil means: whatever is a boil.

BD.3.360

¹ rūhita, a diseased growth, literally meaning "healed." ² mocāpeyya, in opposition to previous word, bhandāpeyya.

Scab means: whatever is a sore.

Without having obtained permission means: not asking (for permission).¹

Order means: it is called an Order of nuns.²

Group means: they are called several nuns.

Man means: a human man, not a yakkha, not a departed one, not an animal³; one who is learned, competent to violate.

Together with means: together.⁴

The one with the other means: there is a man and also a nun.⁵

If she commands, saying: "Burst it," there is an offence of wrong-doing. When it is burst, there is an offence of expiation. If she commands, saying: "Break it ... wash it ... smear it ... bind it up ... unbind it," there is an offence of wrong-doing. When it is broken ... washed ... smeared ... bound up ... unbound, there is an offence of expiation.

Vin.4.317

Bi-Pc.60.2.2

There is no offence if, having obtained permission, she causes it to be burst or broken ... or unbound; if some learned man (is there) as companion; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

The Sixth Division: that on a monastery

¹ = above, BD.3.184; cf. BD.3.193. ² = above, BD.3.184; cf. BD.3.193. ³ = Vin.4.269, Vin.4.271.

⁴ = BD.1.202, BD.1.332, BD.1.337; Vin.4.269, Vin.4.271. ⁵ = Vin.4.269, Vin.4.271.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 61

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained¹ a pregnant woman. She walked for alms. People spoke thus: "Give almsfood to the lady, the lady is heavy with child." The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nuns ordain a pregnant woman?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying, "How can these nuns ordain a pregnant woman?" ...

Bi-Pc.61.1.1
BD.3.361

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ordained a pregnant woman?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain a pregnant woman? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a pregnant woman, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Pregnant woman means: she is called entered by beings.²

Should ordain means: should confer the upasampada ordination.³

If she thinks: "I will ordain (her)" and looks about for a group or for a woman teacher or for a bowl or for a robe or if she determines a boundary, there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing. As a result of two proclamations, there are offences of wrong-doing. At the end of the proclamations, there is an offence of expiation for the woman preceptor, and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.¹

Bi-Pc.61.2.1

BD.3.362

¹ vuṭṭhāpentī. ² āpannasattā. ³ upasampādeyya.

Bi-Pc.61.2.2

If she thinks that she is pregnant when she is pregnant (and) ordains her, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not pregnant when she is pregnant, (and) ordains her, there is no offence. If she thinks that she is pregnant when she is not pregnant, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not pregnant, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not pregnant when she is not pregnant, there is no offence.

Vin.4.318

Bi-Pc.61.2.3

There is no offence if she ordains a pregnant woman thinking that she is not pregnant²; if she ordains a woman who is not pregnant thinking that she is not pregnant; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.13, BD.3.185, for this passage. ² This has been said in the paragraph above.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 62

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a woman giving suck. She walked for alms. People spoke thus: "Give almsfood to the lady, the lady has a companion."¹ The people ... spread it about, saying: "How can the nuns ... (Bi-Pc.61.1, instead of pregnant woman read woman giving suck) ..." " ... this rule of training: "Whatever nun should ordain a woman giving suck, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.62.1.1
BD.3.363

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Woman giving suck means: she is a mother or a foster-mother.

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.61.2. Read, If she thinks that she is a woman giving suck when she is a woman giving suck; if she thinks that she is not a woman giving suck, etc.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.62.2.1

¹ sadutiyaikā, with a companion; cf. dutiyaikā bhikkhunī at Vin.4.230, Vin.4.315; and porāṇa-dutiyaikā, former wife.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 63

Bi-Pc.63.1.1
BD.3.364

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a probationer who had not trained for two years in the six rules.¹ These² were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable.³ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain a probationer who has not trained for two years in the six rules?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... in the six rules?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

Vin.4.319

"How, monks, can these nuns ordain ... in the six rules? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

BD.3.365

"I allow you, monks, to give a probationer the agreement as to training⁴ for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That probationer, having approached the Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the nuns,⁵ having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a probationer, under the lady so and so, request the Order for the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules.' And a second time it should be requested ... And a third time it should be requested. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This (woman) so and so, a probationer, under the lady so and so, requests the Order for the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order give the probationer so and so the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. This is the motion: Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This (woman) so and so ... requests ... for two years in the six rules. If the giving to the probationer so and so of the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules is pleasing to the ladies, let them be silent; if it is not pleasing, they should speak. The agreement as to training for two years in the six rules is given to the probationer so and so, and it is right ... So do I understand this.'"

¹ Cf. the sixth of the eight "important rules," Vin.4.52, Vin.2.255. The six rules are given below. See also I.B. HORNER, Women under Primitive Buddhism, 138ff. ² This refers to the probationers; one nun was enough to ordain a probationer, an Order or group not being necessary. The meaning here, and in similar passages below, is that several nuns each ordained one probationer. ³ As in Nuns' Bi-Pc.66, Bi-Pc.72. ⁴ sikkhāsammuti, occurring also in Nuns' Bi-Pc.66, Bi-Pc.72. Cf. other "agreements" at Vin.3.199, Vin.3.228, Vin.3.263, Vin.4.31, Vin.4.330. ⁵ The word "senior" (vuddha) which occurs in corresponding passages—e.g., in Monks' Nissaggiyas, is rightly omitted here, for a probationer, being junior as regards ordination to all other nuns, should honour them all.

That probationer should be told: "Speak thus: 'I undertake for two years not to transgress the resolution of abstinence from onslaught on creatures; I undertake ... abstinence from taking what is not given ... abstinence from unchastity ... abstinence from lying ... abstinence from occasions for sloth (arising from) fermented liquor and spirits¹ and strong drink²; I undertake for two years not to transgress the resolution of abstinence from eating at the wrong time³.'"

Then the lord, having rebuked these nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... "... And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a probationer who has not trained for two years in the six rules, there is an offence of expiation."⁴

BD.3.366

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.63.2.1

¹ See V.S. AGRAWALA, Maireya in Pāṇini, D.R. Bhandarkar Volume, 1940, p.291. ² Cf. DN.iii.62; AN.i.211f.; SN.ii.68 for these five sīlas. ³ Cf. AN.i.212, and Monks' Bu-Pc.37. ⁴ The upasampadā ordination had to be conferred on nuns by monks as well as by nuns; see Vin.2.255, Vin.4.52; cf. Vin.2.257. The ordination proceedings are set out at Vin.2.271ff.

Vin.4.320 Two years means: two years.¹

Has not trained means: either the training is not given or the training is given (but) is interrupted.²

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.61.2.1) ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

Bi-Pc.63.2.2

If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act (and) ordains her, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is a legally valid act... offence of expiation. If she thinks that it is a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether it is not a legally valid act ... If she thinks that it is not a legally valid act when it is not a legally valid act, there is an offence of wrong-doing.³

Bi-Pc.63.2.3

There is no offence if she ordains a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ vassāni ... saṃvaccharāṇi. The former is also more specifically the rains, but the exegesis under “has not trained” suggests that the training had to go on uninterruptedly for two full years and not merely for two rainy seasons. ² kupitā, disturbed. ³ Last clause should probably read “no offence.”

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 64

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a probationer who had trained for two years in the six rules (but) who was not agreed upon by the Order.¹ Nuns spoke thus: "Come, probationers,² find out about this, give this, convey this, make this allowable." These spoke thus: "Ladies, we are not probationers, we are nuns." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order?" ...

Bi-Pc.64.1.1
BD.3.367

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ordained ... not agreed upon by the Order?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain ... not agreed upon by the Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"I allow you, monks, to give the agreement as to ordination³ to a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules, having approached the Order ... (Bi-Pc.63.1) ... should speak thus: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules under the lady so and so, request the Order for the agreement as to ordination.' And a second time ... (Bi-Pc.63.1 instead of probationer read probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules instead of agreement as to training for two years in the six rules read agreement as to ordination.) ... So do I understand this.”

Vin.4.321

BD.3.368

¹ See previous Bi-Pc.63 where in order to carry out the training as to have a legal right to be ordained, a probationer had to receive the agreement of the Order. ² Note use of plural here, and cf. previous and following Pācittiyas: also Bi-Pc.73. ³ vuṭṭhānasammuti. See above, BD.3.364, for other "agreements."

Then the lord, having rebuked the nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order,¹ there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.64.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Two years means: two years.²

Has trained means: has trained in the six rules.³

Not agreed upon means: the agreement as to ordination is not given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.⁴

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.61.2.1) ...

There is no offence if she ordains a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules and who is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ The probationer has to get the agreement, but the nuns have to abide by it. ² As above, BD.3.366. ³ =below, BD.3.374, BD.3.383. ⁴ =below, BD.3.374, BD.3.383. On ñattidutiya kammās see Vin.1.319, and on Saṅghakammās (formal acts) generally, S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, 146ff.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 65

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a girl¹ married for less than twelve years.² These³ were not able to endure cold, heat, hunger, thirst, contact with gadflies, mosquitoes, wind and sun, creeping things, abusive hurtful language; they were not able to endure bodily feelings which arising are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly.⁴ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can nuns ordain a girl married for less than twelve years?" ...

Bi-Pc.65.1.1
BD.3.369

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ordained ... married for less than twelve years?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain a girl married for less than twelve years? Monks, a girl married for less than twelve years is not able to endure cold ... bodily feelings ... miserable, deadly. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

Vin.4.322

"Whatever nun should ordain a girl married for less than twelve years, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.65.2.1

Less than twelve years means: not attained to twelve years.⁵

BD.3.370

¹ gihigatā, one gone to a layman (as his wife or co-wife). ² See BD.3, Introduction, p.xlix, and I.B. HORNER, Women under Primitive Buddhism, p.27ff. ³ As in previous Pācittiyas, plural used here, meaning that an indefinite number of nuns had each ordained a "married girl," or child-wife. ⁴ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.65.1, that in which monks are forbidden to ordain a man under twenty. ⁵ Cf. above, BD.3.13.

Girl married means: one cohabiting with a man.¹

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.61.2.1) ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

Bi-Pc.65.2.2

If she thinks that it is less than twelve years when it is less than twelve years (and) ordains her, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether it is less than twelve years ... offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that twelve years are completed when it is less than twelve years ... no offence. If she thinks that it is less than twelve years when twelve years are completed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether twelve years are completed, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that twelve years are completed when twelve years are completed, there is no offence.²

Bi-Pc.65.2.3

There is no offence if she ordains one (married) for less than twelve years thinking that twelve years are completed; if she ordains one who has completed twelve years thinking that they are completed³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ purisantaragatā. This is the definition of itthi, woman, at MN-a.2.209; DN-a.78. Cf. Ja.1.290; MN.i.77; AN.i.295, AN.ii.206. ² Cf. above, BD.3.13. ³ This occurs in the preceding paragraph.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 66

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a girl married for full twelve years (but) who had not trained for two years in the six rules. These were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable.¹ Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain a girl married for full twelve years (but) who has not trained for two years in the six rules?" ...

Bi-Pc.66.1.1
BD.3.371

"Is it true, as is said, monks ...?" ...

The enlightened one, the lord rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can these nuns ordain ... in the six rules? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.4.323

"I allow you, monks, to give a girl married for full twelve years the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That girl married for full twelve years, having approached the Order ... (Bi-Pc.63.1) ... should speak thus: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a girl married for full twelve years, and who am under the lady so and so, request the Order ... (Bi-Pc.63.1. Instead of probationer read a girl married for full twelve years) ... So do I understand this.' That girl married for full twelve years should be told: 'Speak thus: ... (Bi-Pc.63.1) ...' "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a girl married for full twelve years (but) who has not trained for two years in the six rules, there is an offence of expiation."

¹ For the whole of this Pācittiya, cf. Bi-Pc.63.

Bi-Pc.66.2.1
BD.3.372

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Full twelve years means: attained to twelve years.¹

Girl married means: one cohabiting with a man.²

Two years means: ...

There is no offence if she ordains a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ =below, BD.3.374. ² As in Bi-Pc.65, Bi-Pc.67.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 67

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a girl married for full twelve years and who had trained for two years in the six rules, but who was not agreed upon by the Order. Nuns spoke thus: "Come, probationers, ... (Bi-Pc.64.1) ..." ... "How can these nuns ordain a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules, but who is not agreed upon by the Order?" ... he addressed the monks, saying:

Bi-Pc.67.1.1
BD.3.373

"I allow you, monks, to give the agreement as to ordination to a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules, having approached the Order ... (Bi-Pc.63.1) ... should speak thus: 'Ladies, I, so and so, a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained under the lady so and so for two years in the six rules, request the Order for the agreement as to ordination.' And a second time ... (Bi-Pc.63.1. Instead of probationer read girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules; instead of agreement as to training for two years in the six rules read agreement as to ordination) ... 'So do I understand this.'"

Vin.4.324

Then the lord, having rebuked these nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... "... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a girl married for full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.67.2.1
BD.3.374

Full twelve years means: attained to twelve years.¹

Girl married means: one cohabiting with a man.²

Two years means: two years.³

Has trained means: has trained in the six rules.⁴

Not agreed upon means: the agreement as to ordination is not given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.⁵

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.61.2.1) ...

There is no offence if she ordains a girl married for full twelve years who has trained for two years in the six rules and who is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ = above, BD.3.372. ² = above, BD.3.370, BD.3.372. ³ = above, BD.3.366, BD.3.368. ⁴ = above, BD.3.368, below, BD.3.383. ⁵ = above, BD.3.368, below, BD.3.383.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 68

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, having ordained the woman who lived with her,¹ for two years neither helped her nor had her helped. These² were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having ordained the woman who lives with her, for two years neither help her nor have her helped?" ...

Bi-Pc.68.1.1
BD.3.375

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... nor had her helped?"

Vin.4.325

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor have her helped? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having ordained the woman who lives with her, for two years should neither help her nor have her helped, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.68.2.1

Woman who lives with her means: she is called the one who shares her cell.³

Having ordained means: having conferred the upasampada ordination.

Two years means: two years.⁴

BD.3.376

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.309, below, BD.3.379. ² This must mean that at least for more than one year Thullanandā had ordained her sahajivinīs. ³ = above, BD.3.309. ⁴ = above, BD.3.366, BD.3.368, BD.3.374.

Should neither help her means: should not herself help her in regard to the exposition, the interrogation,¹ the exhortation, the instruction.²

Nor should have her helped means: should not command another.

If for two years she thinks: "I will neither help her nor have her helped," in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.68.2.2

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if having looked about she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.³

¹ Cf. BD.2.94, BD.2.271. ² anusāsani. Cf. Vin.1.50 for repetition of these four words. ³ Cf. above, BD.3.289, BD.3.310, BD.3.331, BD.3.336, BD.3.355.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 69

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns for two years did not wait upon an ordained woman instructor.¹ These² were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns for two years not wait upon an ordained woman instructor?" ...

Bi-Pc.69.1.1
BD.3.377

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... woman instructor

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... ordained woman instructor? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

Vin.4.326

"Whatever nun for two years should not wait upon an ordained woman instructor, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.69.2.1

Ordained means: the upasampadā, ordination conferred.

Woman instructor means: she is called a woman preceptor.³

BD.3.378

Two years means: two years.

¹ pavattinī, or proposer—i.e., for a nun on whom the upasampada ordination is being conferred, as at Vin.2.271. ² Doubtless here referring to the nuns. ³ upajjhā. The first sentence of n.1 at Vinaya Texts iii.351 must therefore be corrected; also upajjhā occurs twice at Vin.3.35. The word (upajjhā) at Vin.3.100 is obviously a shortened plural form of the regular masculine upajjhāya, for see Vin.3.101=PC:69.2.1 which contains two stories about two (different) upajjhāya. Pali-English Dictionary is probably right in giving both upajjha, short masculine, as at Vin.1.94 and doubtless once at Vin.3.35; and upajjhā, feminine, as in above explanation of pavattinī and in the "no offence" clause, and doubtless once at Vin.3.35.

Should not wait upon means: should not herself attend upon.¹

If she thinks: “I will not wait upon her for two years,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.69.2.2

There is no offence if the woman preceptor is ignorant or shameless; if he is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ According to Vin-a.941, with soap-powder, toothpick, water for rinsing the mouth, and with whatever was to be done. Cf. Bi-Pc.88 below.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 70

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā, having ordained (the woman) who lived with her,¹ neither withdrew² her nor had her withdrawn; her husband seized her. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having ordained (the woman) who lives with her, neither withdraw her nor have her withdrawn? Her husband seized her. If this nun had departed her husband could not have seized her." ...

Bi-Pc.70.1.1
BD.3.379

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... nor had her withdrawn (so that) her husband seized her?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor have her withdrawn (so that) her husband seized her? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having ordained (the woman) who lives with her, should neither withdraw her nor have her withdrawn even to (a distance of) five or six yojanas, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.70.2.1

(Woman) who lives with her means: she is called the one who shares her cell.³

Having ordained means: having conferred the upasampadā ordination.⁴

Vin.4.327
BD.3.380

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.309, BD.3.375. ² vūpakāsesi, to withdraw, seclude, alienate—i.e., from the haunts of men. ³ Cf. above, BD.3.309, BD.3.375. ⁴ Cf. above, BD.3.361, BD.3.375.

Should neither withdraw her¹ means: should not herself withdraw her.

Nor should have her withdrawn means: should not command another.

If she thinks: “I will neither withdraw her nor will I have her withdrawn even to (a distance of) five or six yojanas,” in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.70.2.2

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about for a nun as a companion, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.²

¹ Vin-a.941, “if having taken her, she should not go away.” ² Cf. above, BD.3.323, BD.3.331, BD.3.336, BD.3.355, BD.3.357.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 71

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a maiden¹ who was under twenty years of age. These were unable to endure cold ... (Bi-Pc.65. Instead of a girl married for less than full twelve years read a maiden who is under twenty years of age; instead of for full twelve years read twenty years of age.) ... “... this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.71.1.1
BD.3.381

“Whatever nun should ordain a maiden under twenty years of age, there is an offence of expiation.”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.71.2.1

Under twenty years of age means: not attained to twenty years of age.²

Maiden means: she is called a female novice.

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.65.2. Read who is under twenty years of age, who has completed twenty years of age.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ kumāribhūtā, probably a virgin. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xlix. Vin-a.942 says that if the agreement as to training has been given to a married girl in her tenth year of marriage, she may be ordained in her twelfth; and likewise receiving the agreement up to her eighteenth year of marriage she may be ordained in her twentieth. From a woman's eighteenth year on, according to her marriage or age, one may say, “This is a married girl” and “This is a maiden.” But a maiden is not to be called a married girl. For the eighteenth year, see next Pācittiya. ² = Vin.4.130.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 72

Bi-Pc.72.1.1
BD.3.382

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a maiden who had completed twenty years of age (but) who had not trained for two years in the six rules. These were ignorant, inexperienced ... (Bi-Pc.66.1. Instead of a girl married for full twelve years read a maiden who has completed twenty years of age.) ... he addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.4.328

“I allow you, monks, to give a maiden of eighteen years of age the agreement as to training for two years in the six rules. And thus, monks, should it be given: That maiden of eighteen years of age having approached the Order ...” (Bi-Pc.66.1. Instead of a girl married for full twelve years read a maiden of eighteen years of age.) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a maiden who has completed twenty years of age (but) who has not trained for two years in the six rules, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.72.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Has completed twenty years of age means: has attained to twenty years of age.

Maiden means: she is called a female novice.

Two years means: ... (Bi-Pc.63.2) ...

There is no offence if she ordains a maiden who has completed twenty years of age and who has trained for two years in the six rules; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 73

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained a maiden who had completed twenty years of age and who had trained for two years in the six rules (but) who was not agreed upon by the Order. Nuns spoke thus: "Come, probationers, find out about this, give this, convey this, this is needed, make this allowable." These spoke thus: "Ladies, we are not probationers, we are nuns." Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ..." (Bi-Pc.67.1. Instead of a girl married for full twelve years read a maiden who has completed twenty years of age.) ... "... this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.73.1.1
BD.3.383

"Whatever nun should ordain a maiden who has completed twenty years of age and who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) who is not agreed upon by the Order, there is an offence of expiation."

Vin.4.329

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Completed twenty years of age means: attained to twenty years of age.

Maiden means: she is called a female novice.¹

Two years means: two years.²

Has trained means: has trained in the six rules.³

Not agreed upon means: the agreement as to ordination is not given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.⁴

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.63.2) ...

Bi-Pc.73.2.1

¹ =above, BD.3.381, BD.3.382. ² =above, BD.3.366, BD.3.368, BD.3.374, BD.3.375, BD.3.378.

³ =above, BD.3.368, BD.3.374. ⁴ =above, BD.3.368, BD.3.374.

There is no offence if she ordains a maiden who has completed twenty years of age, who has trained for two years in the six rules and who is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 74

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained while they were less than twelve years (of standing).¹ They were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable; moreover, the women who' shared their cells were ignorant, inexperienced, they did not know what was allowable or what was not allowable. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain while they are less than twelve years (of standing)?" ...

Bi-Pc.74.1.1
BD.3.384

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... less than twelve years (of standing)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... less than twelve years (of standing)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain while she is less than twelve years (of standing) there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Less than twelve years means: not attained to twelve years.

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.61.2.1) ... offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

Bi-Pc.74.2.1

¹ ūnadvādasavassā, probably to be taken as nominative plural agreeing with bhikkhuniyo, and meaning less than twelve years from their own ordination. See next two Pācittiyas, and BD.3, Introduction, p.lii.

Bi-Pc.74.2.2

There is no offence if she ordains when she has completed twelve years (of standing); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 75

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained when they had completed twelve years (of standing but) were not agreed upon by the Order. They were ignorant ... (Bi-Pc.74.1. Instead of less than twelve years (of standing) read when they have completed twelve years (of standing but) are not agreed upon by the Order.) ... “... It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Bi-Pc.75.1.1
BD.3.385

“I allow you, monks, to give a nun who has completed twelve years (of standing) the agreement to ordain.¹ And thus, monks, should it be given: That nun who has completed twelve years (of standing), having approached the Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior nuns, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘Ladies, I, so and so, a nun who has completed twelve years (of standing), request the Order for the agreement to ordain.’ And a second time it should be requested ... And a third time it should be requested. This nun should be tested² by the Order thinking: ‘This nun is experienced, she is conscientious.’ If she is both ignorant³ and unconscientious it should not be given. If she is ignorant but conscientious it should not be given. If she is experienced but unconscientious, it should not be given. If she is both experienced and conscientious, it should be given. And thus, monks, should it be given: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the

BD.3.386

¹ vuṭṭhāpana-sammuti, to cause ordination (in another). ² paricchitabbā. Cf. paricchitvā in next Pācittiya Vin-a.942 explains upaparikkhati, to test, examine, investigate. Apparently the Order, in testing her, should do so with a view to her experience and conscientiousness.

³ bālā, apparently here as opposite of byattā, experienced.

Order listen to me. This nun so and so who has completed twelve years (of standing) requests the Order for the agreement to ordain. If it seems right to the Order ... (cf. Bi-Pc.63.1, etc.) ... So do I understand this.”

Then the lord, having rebuked the nuns in many a figure for their weakness in maintaining themselves ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun who has completed twelve years (of standing but) who is not agreed upon by the Order should ordain, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.75.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Completed twelve years means: attained to twelve years.

Not agreed upon means: the agreement to ordain is not given by a (formal) act at which the motion is followed by one proclamation.¹

Vin.4.331

Should ordain means: ... (Bi-Pc.63.3) ...

There is no offence if she ordains when she has completed twelve years (of standing) and is agreed upon by the Order; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.368, BD.3.374, BD.3.383.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 76

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Caṇḍakālī, having approached the Order of nuns, asked for the agreement to ordain. Then the Order of nuns, having tested¹ the nun Caṇḍakālī, saying: "You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being,"² did not give her the agreement to ordain. The nun Caṇḍakālī answered, "Very good." Now at that time the Order of nuns gave the agreement to ordain to other nuns. The nun Caṇḍakālī ... spread it about, saying: "Am I then ignorant, am I then unconscientious,³ that the Order gives the agreement to ordain to other nuns, but does not give it to me?" Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

Bi-Pc.76.1.1
BD.3.387

"How can the lady Caṇḍakālī, on being told, 'You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being,' and having answered, 'Very good,' afterwards engage in criticism?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Caṇḍakālī ... afterwards engaged in criticism⁴?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the nun Caṇḍakālī ... afterwards engage in criticism? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, on being told, 'You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being,' and having answered, 'very good,' should afterwards engage in criticism, there is an offence of expiation."

BD.3.388

¹ paricchitvā; cf. previous Pācittiya. ² alam tāva te ayye vuṭṭhāpitena, or "please stop ordaining," or "there is no need for you to ordain at present." Cf. alam te idhavāsena at Vin.3.184. ³ The two points on which nuns had to be tested according to the previous Pācittiya. ⁴ See above, BD.3.59, BD.3.64, and notes.

Bi-Pc.76.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

‘You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being’ means: ‘You have conferred the upasampadā,¹ sufficiently, lady, for the time being.’

If, having answered, ‘Very good,’ she afterwards engages in criticism, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.76.2.2

There is no offence if she criticises one acting by nature from desire, from hatred, from confusion, from fear²; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.332

¹ At Bi-Pc.79 below, Caṇḍakāli is called a probationer, and was ordained by Thullanandā.

² Cf. above, BD.3.66.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 77

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain probationer, having approached the nun Thullanandā, asked for the upasampadā ordination. The nun Thullanandā, having said to that probationer, "If you, lady, will give me a robe, then will I ordain you," neither ordained her nor made an effort to get her ordained.¹ Then that probationer told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā, having said ... neither ordain her nor make an effort to get her ordained?" ...

Bi-Pc.77.1.1
BD.3.389

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ... nor made an effort to get her ordained?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... nor make an effort to get her ordained? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having said to a probationer: 'If you, lady, will give me a robe, then will I ordain you,' (yet) if she is not afterwards prevented, should neither ordain her nor should make an effort to get her ordained, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.

'If you, lady, will give me a robe, then will I ordain you' means: then will I confer the upasampadā ordination on you.

Bi-Pc.77.2.1

BD.3.390

¹ Cf. Bi-Pc.23, Bi-Pc.34, Bi-Pc.45.

If she is not afterwards prevented means: if there is not an obstacle.

Should neither ordain her means: should not herself ordain her.

Nor should make an effort to get her ordained means : should not command another.

If she thinks, "I will neither ordain her nor make an effort to get her ordained," in throwing off the responsibility, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.77.2.2

There is no offence if there is an obstacle; if, having looked about, she does not get the chance; if she is ill; if there are accidents¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer. .

Vin.4.333

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.289, BD.3.310, BD.3.331.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 78

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain probationer, having approached the nun Thullanandā, asked for the upasampadā, ordination. The nun Thullanandā spoke thus to that probationer: "If you, lady, will wait upon me for two years, then will I ordain you," and having said (this) ... (see Bi-Pc.77.1) ... "... this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.78.1.1
BD.3.391

"Whatever nun, having said to a probationer: 'If you, lady, will wait upon me for two years, then will I ordain you,' (yet) if she is not afterwards prevented, should neither ordain her nor should make an effort to get her ordained, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.78.2.1

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.

'If you, lady, will wait upon me for two years' means: if you will attend upon me for two years.¹

'Then will I ordain you,' means: then will I confer the upasampada, ordination on you.

If she is not afterwards prevented means: ... (see Bi-Pc.77.2) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.378.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 79

Bi-Pc.79.1.1
BD.3.392

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā ordained the probationer Caṇḍakalī who kept company with men, who kept company with youths, who was violent,¹ a dwelling-place of grief.² Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the lady Thullanandā ordain ... grief?”

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ordained ... grief?”

“It is true, lord.”

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

Vin.4.334

“How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ordain ... grief? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should ordain a probationer who keeps company with men, who keeps company with youths, who is violent, a dwelling-place of grief, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.79.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Man means: one attained to twenty years of age.

Youth means: one not attained to twenty years of age.

Keeps company means: keeps company unbecomingly as to body and speech.³

Violent⁴ means: she is called angry.

Dwelling-place of grief means: she arouses sorrow in others, she enters upon grief.

¹ caṇḍī. ² sokāvāsā. ³ Cf. above, BD.3.208, BD.3.315. ⁴ Cf. above, BD.3.346, where same definition of caṇḍikatā, “quick-tempered.”

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules. BD.3.393

Should ordain means: ... (see Bi-Pc.61.2) ... and an offence of wrongdoing for the group and for the woman teacher.¹

There is no offence if she ordains her not knowing; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer. Bi-Pc.79.2.2

¹ Cf. above, BD.3.13, BD.3.185, BD.3.361.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 80

Bi-Pc.80.1.1
BD.3.394

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā ordained a probationer without the consent of the parents and husband. The parents and the husband ... spread it about, saying : "How can the lady Thullanandā ordain the probationer without our consent?" Nuns heard the parents and the husband who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying : "How can the lady Thullanandā ordain a probationer without the consent of the parents and husband?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ordained ... and husband?" "It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ordain a probationer ... and husband? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

Vin.4.335

"Whatever nun should ordain a probationer without the consent of the parents and husband, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Bi-Pc.80.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Parents means: they are called the progenitors.

Husband means: he to whom she is married.²

Without the consent means: not asking (for permission).

BD.3.395

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.

Should ordain means: ... (see Bi-Pc.61.2) ... and an offence of wrongdoing for the group and for the woman teacher.

¹ The twenty-second of the twenty-four questions to be put to a nun at her ordination was whether she had her parents' and husband's consent, Vin.2.271. ² yena pariggahitā hoti, by whom she is possessed or appropriated.

There is no offence if she ordains her not knowing; if she ordains her, (she) having obtained permission; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 81

Bi-Pc.81.1.1
BD.3.396

... at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time the nun Thullanandā thinking: "I will ordain a probationer," having had monks who were elders convened, having seen sumptuous solid foods and soft foods, saying: "Masters, I will not ordain the probationer yet," having dismissed the monks who were elders, having had Devadatta, Kokālika, Kaṭamorakatissaka, the son of the lady Khaṇḍā and Samuddadatta¹ convened, she ordained the probationer. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can the lady Thullanandā ordain a probationer by showing² favouritism³ to (monks) placed on probation⁴?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the nun Thullanandā ordained a probationer by showing favouritism to (monks) placed on probation?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can the nun Thullanandā ... (monks) placed on probation? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ordain a probationer by showing favouritism to (monks) placed on probation, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.81.2.1
BD.3.397
Vin.4.336

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ Schismatic monks; cf. Monks' Bu-Ss.10, Bu-Ss.11. At Vin.4.66 Thullanandā says that these five were mahānagā (great heroes) to her. ² Literally giving, dāna. ³ chanda; as at Vin.4.38 (BD.2.235). ⁴ pārivāsikā bhikkhū. Cf. Vin.1.136; and Vin.2.31ff., where in Kd.12, Kd.13 the rules for monks under probation are discussed at length. The "four months' probation" is described at Vin.1.69, three other types in Kd.13. Four still further kinds given at Vin-a.943f. See also S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.168.

By showing favouritism to (monks) placed on probation means: to a company that has risen.¹

Probationer means: ... (Bi-Pc.80.2) ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

There is no offence if she ordains her if the company has not risen; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.81.2.2

¹ vuṭṭhitāya parisāya. Cf. Vin.1.136, where it is said that uposatha should not be held by (accepting) the declaration of purity of (a monk) placed on probation except if the company has not (yet) risen “Has risen” would here seem to apply to monks considered not fit to carry out the various formal acts in a seated assembly of monks.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 82

Bi-Pc.82.1.1
BD.3.398

... At Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained every year; there were not sufficient dwellings. People ... spread it about saying: "How can these nuns ordain every year? There are not sufficient dwellings." Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain every year?" ...

"Is it true, as it is said, monks, that nuns ordain every year?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ordain every year? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of raining:

"Whatever nun should ordain every year, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Bi-Pc.82.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Every year means: annually.²

Should ordain means: ... and an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

Bi-Pc.82.2.2

There is no offence if she ordains in the alternate (years); if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Quoted MN-a.3.156 ² anuvassan ti anusaṃvaccharaṃ.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 83

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns ordained two (probationers) in the one year.¹ As before,² there were not sufficient dwellings. As before³ people ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ordain two (probationers) in one year? As before, there are not sufficient dwellings." Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: ... (cf. Bi-Pc.82.1) "... this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.83.1.1
BD.3.399

Vin.4.337

"Whatever nun should ordain two (probationers) in one year, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.83.2.1

One year means: one year.⁴

Should ordain two (probationers) means: should confer the upasampadā ordination on two (probationers).

If she thinks: "I will ordain two (probationers)," and looks about for a group or ... (Bi-Pc.61.2) ... there is an offence of wrong-doing for the group and for the woman teacher.

There is no offence if she ordains in alternate years⁵; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.83.2.2

*The Eighth Division: that on a maiden.*⁶

¹ Vin-a.945 says "she ordained two (probationers) in one year in alternate years." ² tath'eva—i.e., in Bi-Pc.82. ³ tath'eva—i.e., in Bi-Pc.82. ⁴ ekavassan ti ekaṃ sarīvaccharaṃ.

⁵ Nothing to show whether the notion of "two (probationers)" is dropped here or not.

⁶ N.B. thirteen Pācittiyas in this Division, and also in the next.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 84

Bi-Pc.84.1.1
BD.3.400

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns used sunshades and sandals. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns use sunshades and sandals, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns use sunshades and sandals?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks ... and sandals?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can ... and sandals? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should use a sunshade and sandals, there is an offence of expiation."

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Bi-Pc.84.1.2
Vin.4.338

At that time a certain nun came to be ill; there was no comfort for her without a sunshade and sandals. They told this matter to the lord. He said: "Monks, I allow a sunshade and sandals to a nun who is ill. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"Whatever nun who is not ill should use a sunshade and sandals, there is an offence of expiation."¹

Bi-Pc.84.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

¹ Cf. Bu-Sk.57, Bu-Sk.62.

Who is not ill means: for whom there is comfort without a sunshade and sandals.

Who is ill means: for whom there is not comfort without a sunshade and sandals.

Sunshade means: there are three (kinds of) sunshade: white sunshade, sunshade of rushes, sunshade of leaves, fastened at the middle, fastened to the rim.¹

Should use means: if she uses (them) even once, there is an offence of expiation.

BD.3.401

If she thinks that she is not ill when she is not ill (and) uses a sunshade and sandals, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ill ... If she thinks that she is ill when she is not ill ... offence of expiation. If she uses a sunshade (but) not sandals, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she uses sandals (but) not a sunshade, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is not ill when she is ill ... If she is in doubt as to whether she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ill when she is ill, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.84.2.2

There is no offence if she is ill; if she uses (them) in a monastery, in monastery precincts²; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.84.2.3

¹ = Vin.4.200. N.B. sandals, upāhana, not defined by Old Commentary. ² At Vin.2.130f. regulations for monks using sunshades are: (1) sunshades allowed; (2) whoever uses one, offence of wrong-doing; (3) allowed for an ill monk; (4) allowed to be used by a monk whether ill or not ill in a monastery or monastery precincts. At Vin.2.207 it is said that incoming monks on entering the monastery should put down their sunshades—as a sign of respect.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 85

Bi-Pc.85.1.1
BD.3.402

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns went¹ in a vehicle.² People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns go in a vehicle, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns go in a vehicle?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns went in a vehicle?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can this group of six nuns go in a vehicle? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

Vin.4.339

"Whatever nun should go in a vehicle, there is an offence of expiation."³

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Bi-Pc.85.1.2

Now at that time a certain nun came to be ill. She was not able to go on foot. They told this matter to the lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a vehicle for a nun who is ill."⁴ And thus, monks ... this rule of training:

BD.3.403

"Whatever nun who is not ill should go in a vehicle, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.85.2.1

¹ yāyanti. GEIGER, Pali Literature und Sprache, §138, gives "geht", which seems more suitable than "have themselves earned" (Vinaya Texts ii.25), for "go" covers both driving and being carried in the vehicles mentioned by the Old Commentary. ² yāna; see note at BD.1.81.

³ A dukkata for monks at Vin.1.191; at Vin.2.276 it is said that nuns going in a vehicle "should be dealt with according to the rule"—i.e., this Pācittiya. Cf. Bu-Sk.63. ⁴ This recurs at Vin.2.276. Corresponding permission for monks given at Vin.1.191.

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Not ill means: she is able to go on foot.

Ill means: she is not able to go on foot.

Vehicle¹ means: a cart,² a carriage, a waggon, a chariot, a palanquin,³ or a sedan chair.⁴

Should go means: if she goes even once, there is an offence of expiation.

If she thinks that she is not ill when she is not ill (and) goes in a vehicle, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ill ... If she thinks that she is ill when she is not ill ... offence of expiation. If she thinks that she is not ill when she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ill when she is ill, there is no offence.

Bi-Pc.85.2.2

There is no offence if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.85.2.3

¹ = Vin.4.201, and cf. Vin.3.49. ² See above, BD.3.144, n.3. ³ See above, BD.3.144, n.5.

⁴ See above, BD.3.144, n.5

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 86

Bi-Pc.86.1.1
BD.3.404

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun frequented a certain woman's family. Then that woman spoke thus to that nun: "Please, lady, give this petticoat to such and such a woman." Then that nun, thinking: "If I go away taking it in my bowl, there will be trouble for me,"¹ went away having tied it on. When she was on the high road the strings broke and were scattered. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns² wear a petticoat, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns ... heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun wear a petticoat?" ...

Vin.4.340

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that a nun wore a petticoat?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun wear a petticoat? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should wear a petticoat, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.86.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Petticoat means: whatever goes about the hips.

Should wear means: if she wears it even once, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.86.2.2
BD.3.405

¹ = above, BD.3.157, BD.3.188. ² The people generalise from one instance.

There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if she wears a hip-string¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ kaṭisuttaka, allowed to nuns at Vin.2.271, but not to be worn all the time; a dukkāṭa for monks to wear them at Vin.2.106, but where meaning may be an ornamental waist-band.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 87

Bi-Pc.87.1.1
BD.3.406

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns wore women's ornaments. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns wear women's ornaments, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns wear women's ornaments?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that ... women's ornaments?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can ... women's ornaments? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should wear women's ornaments, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.87.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Women's ornaments mean: they go on the head, round the neck, on the hands,¹ on the feet, round the hips.²

Should wear means: if she wears them even once, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.87.2.2

There is no offence if it is on account of illness³; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ hattha also means "forearm," see definition of "hand" at BD.1.203. ² Cf. Vin.3.239 \(BD.2.107\) where these phrases occur in definition of kata, "shaped." ³ It is difficult to imagine what diseases could be cured or alleviated by wearing ornaments.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 88

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns bathed with perfume and paint.¹ People ... (see Bi-Pc.87.1; read bathed with perfume and paint, etc.) ... “... this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.88.1.1
BD.3.407

“Whatever nun should bathe with perfume and paint, there is an offence of expiation².”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.88.2.1

Perfume means: whatever is a perfume.

Paint means: whatever is a paint.

Should bathe means: if she bathes, in the business there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the bathing there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.88.2.2

There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ DN.ii.142, D.2.161; Thag.960. ² At Vin.2.280 it is a dukkata for nuns to bathe with chunam (soft soap-powder) or scented clay.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 89

Bi-Pc.89.1.1
BD.3.408

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns bathed with scented ground sesamum. People ... (see Bi-Pc.87.1; read, bathed with scented ground sesamum, etc.) ... “... this rule of training:

“Whatever nun should bathe with scented ground sesamum, there is an offence of expiation.”

Bi-Pc.89.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Scented means: whatever is scented.

Ground sesamum means: it is called crushed sesamum seed.

Should bathe means: if she bathes, in the business there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the bathing there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.89.2.2

There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if she bathes with common ground sesamum; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Vin.4.342

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 90

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns caused (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment)¹ and also caused (themselves) to be massaged² by a nun. People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place, having seen (them), ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also cause (themselves) to be massaged by a nun, just like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed ... by a nun?" ...

Bi-Pc.90.1.1
BD.3.409

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns caused (themselves) to be rubbed ... by a nun?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also cause themselves to be massaged by a nun? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) or should cause (herself) to be massaged by a nun, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

By a nun means: by another nun.

Should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) means: if she makes (another) rub (her with ointment),¹ there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.90.2.1

BD.3.410

¹ ummaddāpentī. At Vin.2.266 it is an offence of wrong-doing for a nun if she mukhaṃ ummaddeti, rubs (ointment, etc.) into her face. ² parimaddāpentī.

Should cause (herself) to be massaged means: if she makes (another) rub² (her), there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.90.2.2

There is no offence if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

¹ Vin-a.946 reads ubbaṭṭāpeti, to make anoint, to make shampoo. ² sambāhāpeti, to rub or shampoo.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 91–93

... at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns caused (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also caused (themselves) to be massaged by a probationer ... by a female novice ... by a woman householder. People, engaged in touring the dwelling-place, having seen (them), ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns cause (themselves) to be rubbed (with ointment) and also cause (themselves) to be massaged by a probationer ... by a female novice ... by a woman householder, just like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard ... (see Bi-Pc.90.1) ... "... this rule of training:

Bi-Pc.91.1.1
Bi-Pc.92.1.1
Bi-Pc.93.1.1
BD.3.411

Vin.4.343

"Whatever nun should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) or should cause (herself) to be massaged by a probationer ... by a female novice ... by a woman householder, there is an offence of expiation."

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Bi-Pc.91.2.1

Probationer means: one who has trained for two years in the six rules.¹

Female novice means: one conforming to the ten rules of training.²

Woman householder means: she is called a housewife.³

Should cause (herself) to be rubbed (with ointment) means: if she makes (another) rub (her with ointment), there is an offence of expiation.

BD.3.412

Should cause (herself) to be massaged means: if she makes (another) rub (her), there is an offence of expiation.

There is no offence if it is on account of illness; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.91.2.2

¹ = Vin.4.122, Vin.4.332, Vin.4.333, Vin.4.334, Vin.4.335. ² = Vin.4.122. ³ agāriṇī; cf. gharaṇī at Vin.4.20.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 94

Bi-Pc.94.1.1
BD.3.413

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns sat down on a seat in front of a monk¹ without asking (for permission). Monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ... without asking (for permission)?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that nuns ... without asking (for permission)?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can nuns ... without asking (for permission)? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should sit down on a seat in front of a monk without asking (for permission), there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.94.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

In front of a monk means: in front of one who is ordained.

Without asking (for permission) means: not having obtained permission.

Should sit down on a seat means: if she sits down even on the ground, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.94.2.2

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission and) sits down on a seat, there is an offence of expiation. If she is in doubt as to whether she has not asked (for permission) ... If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has not asked ¹ Cf. the first of the eight "important rules," Vin.4.52.

(for permission) ... there is an offence of expiation. If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she has asked (for permission), there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she has asked (for permission) when she has asked (for permission), there is no offence.

Vin.4.344
BD.3.414

There is no offence if, having asked (for permission), she sits down on a seat; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.94.2.3

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 95

Bi-Pc.95.1.1
BD.3.415

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time nuns asked a question of a monk who had not given leave.¹ Monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ask a question of a monk who has not given leave?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks ... (see Bi-Pc.94.1) ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should ask a question of a monk who has not given leave, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.95.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Not given leave means: without asking (for permission).²

Should ask a question means: if, having asked for leave³ in regard to Suttanta, she asks about Discipline or about Abhidhamma,⁴ there is an offence of expiation. If, having asked for leave in regard to Discipline, she asks about Suttanta or about Abhidhamma, there is an offence of expiation. If, having asked for leave in regard to Abhidhamma, she asks about Suttanta or about Discipline, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.95.2.2

If she thinks that she has not asked (for permission) when she has not asked (for permission and) asks a question ... (Bi-Pc.94.2.2) ... there is no

BD.3.416

¹ anokāsakataṃ, accusative, agreeing with bhikkhum, meaning "who has not made an occasion" for allowing himself to be questioned. Cf. Vin.1.114, Vin.1.170. It seems as if the nun had to give some kind of notice, and get the monk's permission to put her question. ² The monk could not give leave before the nun had asked permission for it. ³ okāsaṃ kārāpetvā, having had an opportunity made. ⁴ Here probably meaning the literary digest of this name. This passage would therefore seem late, dating from some time after the compilation of the three Piṭakas. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xff.

offence.

There is no offence if she asks, having asked for leave; if having asked for leave in general, she asks concerning whatever she likes¹; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pc.95.2.3

¹ yattha katthaci, there wherever, presumably meaning that she asks a question on any part of the Suttantas, Vinaya or Abhidhamma, and without having specified beforehand which of these three she would be asking about.

NUNS' EXPIATION (PĀCITTIYA) 96

Bi-Pc.96.1.1
BD.3.417
Vin.4.345

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time a certain nun entered a village for almsfood without her vest.¹ While she was on the high road gusts of wind blew up her outer cloak. People shouted out: "Beautiful is the waist of the lady." That nun, being made fun of by the people, became ashamed. Then that nun, having gone to a dwelling,² told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this nun enter a village without her vest?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that this nun ... without her vest?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can a nun enter a village without her vest? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun should enter a village without her vest, there is an offence of expiation."

Bi-Pc.96.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Without a vest means: without a vest.³

Vest means: from below the collar-bone to above the navel, for the sake of covering this.

Should enter a village means: in going beyond the enclosure of a village that is fenced in, there is an offence of expiation. In entering the precincts of a village that is not fenced in, there is an offence of expiation.

Bi-Pc.96.2.2
BD.3.418

¹ saṃkacchika, the fourth of a nun's five robes to be pointed, out to her at her upasampadā ordination, Vin.2.272. ² upassaya, very likely meaning bhikkhuni-upassaya, a nunnery.

³ asaṃkacchikā ti vinā saṃkacchikarū.

There is no offence if she is one whose robe is stolen¹; if she is one whose robe is lost; if she is ill; if she is not thinking; if she does not know²; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

*The Ninth Division: that on a sunshade*³

Recited, ladies, are the hundred and sixty-six rules for offences of expiation.⁴ Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.

*Told is the Minor (Class)*⁵

Vin.4.346

¹ Vin-a.947 says that her vest is to be called a "robe." ² Cf. above, BD.3.121ff. ³ Note that there are thirteen Pācittiyas in this, as in the preceding Division. ⁴ Ninety-six are here recorded. The monks have ninety-two. The total for monks and nuns is therefore 188. Of the monks' 92, 70 apply also to the nuns. Thus we get 96+70=166 for nuns, leaving 22 for the monks alone, as stated at Vin-a.946. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxviii. ⁵ Cf. above, BD.3.101.

NUNS' CONFESSION (PĀṬIDESANIYA) 1

Bi-Pd.1.1.1
BD.3.419

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns, having had ghee¹ asked for, partook of it. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns, having had ghee asked for, partake of it? Who does not like well cooked things? Who does not like sweet things?"² Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns, having had ghee asked for, partake of it?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns, having had ghee asked for, partook of it?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns ...? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"Whatever nun, having had ghee asked for, should partake of it, it should be confessed by that nun, saying: 'I have fallen, ladies, into a blameworthy matter, un-becoming, which ought to be confessed; I confess it.'"

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Bi-Pd.1.1.2

Now at that time nuns came to be ill.³ Nuns enquiring after the ill ones, spoke thus to the ill nuns: "We hope, ladies, that you are better, we hope that you are keeping going."

BD.3.420

"Formerly, ladies, we, having had ghee asked for, partook of it, thus there came to be comfort for us. But now it is forbidden by the lord and, being scrupulous, we do not have it asked for, thus there does not come to be comfort for us.” They told this matter to the lord. He said:

¹ One of the five standard medicines. ² = Vin.2.196 = Vin.4.71, Vin.4.87. ³ Cf. Vin.4.88 (BD.2.341).

“I allow, monks, an ill nun, having had ghee asked for, to partake of it. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training: Vin.4.347

“Whatever nun who is not ill, having had ghee asked for, should partake of it, it should be confessed by that nun, saying: ‘I have fallen, ladies, into a blameworthy matter, unbecoming, which ought to be confessed; I confess it.’”

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case. Bi-Pd.1.2.1

Not ill means: for whom there comes to be comfort without ghee.

Ill means: for whom there does not come to be comfort without ghee.

Ghee means: ghee from cows or ghee from she-goats or ghee from buffaloes, ghee from those whose meat is allowable.¹

If she is not ill (and) has it asked for for herself, in the request there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she accepts, thinking: “I will partake of it on acquisition,” there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful there is an offence which ought to be confessed.²

If she thinks that she is not ill when she is not ill (and) having had ghee asked for partakes of it, there is an offence which ought to be confessed. If she is in doubt as to whether she is not ill ... If she thinks that she is ill when she is not ill ... offence which ought to be confessed. If she thinks that she is not ill when she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she is in doubt as to whether she is ill, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If she thinks that she is ill when she is ill, there is no offence.³ Bi-Pd.1.2.2
BD.3.421

There is no offence if she is ill; if having been ill (and) having had it asked for she partakes of it when she is not ill, if she eats the remainder of an ill nun’s meal; if it belongs to relations; if they are invited; if it is for another; if it is by means of her own property; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.⁴ Bi-Pd.1.2.3

¹ Cf. Vin.3.251, Vin.4.88 (BD.2.131, BD.2.342). ² Cf. Vin.4.89. ³ Cf. Vin.4.89. ⁴ Cf. Vin.4.89.

NUNS' CONFESSION (PĀṬIDESANIYA) 2-8

Bi-Pd.2.1.1
BD.3.422

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns having had oil asked for, partook of it ... having had honey ... molasses ... fish ... meat ... milk ... curds asked for, partook of them.¹ People ... (Bi-Pd.1.1.1-Bi-Pd.1.1.2. Instead of ghee read curds) ... "... this rule of training:

Vin.4.348

"Whatever nun who is not ill, having had oil (honey, molasses, fish, meat, milk, curds) asked for, should partake of it, it should be confessed by that nun, saying: 'I have fallen, ladies, into a blameworthy matter, unbecoming, which ought to be confessed; I confess it.'"

Bi-Pd.2.2.1

Whatever means: ... nun is to be understood in this case.

Not ill means: for whom there comes to be comfort without curds.

Ill means: for whom there does not come to be comfort without curds.

Oil means: sesamum oil, oil of mustard seeds, oil containing honey, oil of the castor-oil plant, oil from tallow. Honey means: honey of bees. Molasses means: what is produced from sugar-cane. Fish means: it is called one that lives in water. Meat means: the meat of those whose meat is allowable. Milk means: milk of cows or milk of she-goats or milk of buffaloes, milk 'of those whose meat is allowable. Curds means: curds from just these.²

If she is not ill and has them³ asked for for herself ... (Bi-Pd.1.2. Instead of ghee read curds.) ... if she is the first wrong-doer.

Bi-Pd.2.3.1
BD.3.423

Recited, ladies, are the eight rules for offences which ought to be confessed. Concerning them, I ask the ladies: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a second time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? And a third time I ask: I hope that you are quite pure in this matter? The ladies are quite pure in this matter, therefore they are silent; thus do I understand this.

¹ Referring to curds. ² = Vin.3.251, Vin.4.88. ³ Referring to curds.

Told are the offences which ought to be confessed.

NUNS' TRAINING (SEKHIYA) 1-75

Bi-Sk.75.1.1
BD.3.424

These rules for training, ladies, come up for recitation.¹

At that time the enlightened one, the lord, was staying at Sāvattī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns dressed with the inner robe hanging down in front and behind. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns dress with the inner robe hanging down in front and behind, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns dress ... and behind?" ...

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns ... and behind?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can the group of six nuns ... and behind? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"I will dress with the inner robe all round (me),¹ is a training to be observed."

One should dress with the inner robe going all round one for covering the circle of the navel, the circle of the knees. Whoever out of disrespect dresses with the inner robe hanging down in front or behind, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional; if she is not thinking; if she does not know; if she is ill; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer ...

¹ Being the same as the Monks' Sekhiyas, only the first and the last are reprinted here, as in Oldenberg's edition.

... at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six nuns eased themselves and spat in the water. People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these nuns ease themselves and spit in the water, like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Nuns heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six nuns ... in the water?" Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the lord. Then the lord questioned the monks, saying:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six nuns ... in the water?"

"It is true, lord."

The enlightened one, the lord, rebuked them, saying: "How, monks, can this group of six nuns ... in the water? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... this rule of training:

"I will not ease myself or spit in the water,' is a training to be observed."

And thus this rule of training for nuns came to be laid down by the lord.

Now at that time ill nuns were (too) scrupulous to ease themselves and spit in the water. They told this matter to the lord. He said:

"I allow, monks, a nun if she is ill to ease herself and spit in the water. And thus, monks, let the nuns set forth this rule of training:

"I will not ease myself or spit in the water, if not ill, is a training to be observed."

If she is not ill she should not ease herself or spit in the water. Whoever out of disrespect, if not ill ... offence of wrong-doing.

There is no offence if it is unintentional; if she is not thinking; if she does not know; if she is ill; if done on dry land she pours water over it; if there are accidents; if she is mad, if she is the first wrong-doer.

Recited, ladies, are the rules for training. Concerning them, I ask the ladies ... thus do I understand this.

Told are the Rules for Training

Bi-Sk.75.2.1

BD.3.425

Vin.4.350

Bi-Sk.75.2.2

Bi-Sk.76.1.1

Vin.4.351

NUNS' DECIDING OF LEGAL QUESTIONS (ADHIKARANASAMATHA)

BD.3.426

These seven rules,¹ ladies, for the deciding of legal questions come up for recitation. For the deciding, for the settlement of legal questions arising from time to time:

Bi-As.1

1. A verdict in the presence of may be given.

Bi-As.2

2. A verdict of innocence may be given.

Bi-As.3

3. A verdict of past insanity may be given.

Bi-As.4

4. It may be carried out on (her) acknowledgement.

Bi-As.5

5. (There is) the decision of the majority.

Bi-As.6

6. The decision for specific depravity.

Bi-As.7

7. The covering up (as) with grass.

Recited, ladies, are the seven rules for the deciding of legal questions. Concerning them I ask the ladies ... thus do I understand this.

¹ = Vin.4.207. See above, BD.3.153f. for notes.

NUNS' CONCLUSION

Recited, ladies, is the occasion, recited are the eight rules for offences involving defeat, recited are the seventeen rules for offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, recited are the thirty rules for offences of expiation involving forfeiture, recited are the hundred and sixty-six rules for offences of expiation, recited are the eight rules for offences which ought to be confessed, recited are the rules for training, recited are the seven rules for the deciding of legal questions. So much (of the sayings) of the lord, handed down in clauses, contained in clauses, comes up for recitation every half month. All should train therein in harmony, on friendly terms, without contention.

Told is the Nuns' Analysis

*Told are both Analyses*¹

Vin.4.352

¹ Here ends Oldenberg's Vol. IV.

Volume III
Khandhaka

Contents of Volume

Translator's Introduction	1256
1. Going forth (Pabbajjā)	1277
On Awakening1277
At the Goatherds' Banyan tree1279
On Mucalinda1280
At the Rājāyatana tree1281
On the invitation of Brahmā1283
On the group of five1287
On the going forth of Yasa1299
With Māra1305
On going forth and full ordination1306
With Māra, the second1307
The story of the excellent group1308
On the miracles at Uruvelā1310
On Bimbisāra's gathering1325
On the going forth of Sāriputta and Moggallāna1331
On the duties to the preceptor1337
On the duties to the one who shares his cell1347
On dismissal1348
On the duties to the teacher1355
On the duties to the student1359
On not forgiving when dismissed1359

The story of the ignorant and inexperienced1359
On the nullifications of guidance1360
On five cases when one may ordain1361
On six cases when one may ordain1364
On one who had formerly been a member of another sect1365
The story of five diseases1369
On King's service1371
The story of a thief (wearing) a garland of fingers1373
The story of a thief who has broken out of jail1373
The story of an thief with a "wanted" notice1374
The story of a scourged man1375
The story of a debtor1375
The story of a slave1376
The story of a bald-headed metal-smith1376
The story of the boy Upāli1377
The story of malaria1379
The story of Kaṇḍaka1380
The story of when it was crowded1381
On release from dependence1382
The story of Rāhula1384
On training rules1386
The story of an act of punishment1387
The story of making a prohibition without asking1388
The story of luring away1389
The story of Kaṇḍaka the novice1389
The story of a eunuch1390
The story of one in communion by theft1391
The story of an animal1392
The story of a matricide1394
The story of a parricide1394
The story of a killer of a perfected one1395
The story of a raper of nuns1395
The story of a hermaphrodite1396
The story of without a preceptor, etc.1396

The story of without a bowl, etc.	1397
The portion on thirty-two (cases) where one should not let go forth	1398
The story of guidance for the unconscientious	1400
The story of guidance for one on a journey, etc.	1400
Permission to proclaim by clan	1402
The story of two expecting ordination, etc.	1402
Permission for ordination twenty years from conception	1403
Ordination procedure	1403
Four requisites	1407
Four things not to be done	1407
The story of one suspended for not seeing an offence	1409

2. Observance (Uposatha) 1413

Permission to gather	1413
Permission to recite the Pātimokkha	1414
The story of Mahākappina	1419
Permission for a boundary	1420
On an observance hall	1422
On a maximum for observance	1423
Permission for a “not separated” boundary	1425
Abolishing a boundary	1427
A village boundary, etc.	1428
Incomplete observance, etc.	1429
Reciting the Pātimokkha in brief, etc.	1430
On questioning regarding Vinaya	1432
On answering regarding Vinaya	1433
On reproving	1434
Protesting an act that is not the rule, etc.	1435
Requesting the reciting of the Pātimokkha, etc.	1436
Allowance to learn the counting of the fortnights, etc.	1436
Allowance for preliminary duties	1439
The story of those travelling to distant parts, etc.	1440
On giving entire purity	1442
On giving consent	1444

On being grabbed by relatives1445
Agreement for the mad1446
The observance by an Order, etc.1448
Procedure for making amends for offences1450
Procedure for an offence without making obstacle1451
Procedure for making amends for a shared offence1452
Fifty cases of no offence1455
Fifty cases of perceiving it is a group or not a group1456
Fifty cases of doubt1457
Fifty cases of acting badly1458
Fifty cases of aiming at schism1458
Abbreviated repetitions on entering a boundary1458
Seeing characteristics, etc.1460
Performing observance with those of a different communion, etc.1461
Portion on should not go1462
Portion on should go1463
Seeing a blameworthy person1464
3. Rains (Vassa)	1467
Allowance to enter the rains1467
On tour in the rains, etc.1468
Allowance for seven days business1469
Allowance for five even when not sent for1473
Allowance for seven when sent for1478
Allowance only when sent for1479
Portion on no offence for cutting short the rains when there is danger1480
Portion on no offence for cutting short the rains when there is schism in the Saṅgha1482
Entering the rains in a cow pen, etc.1484
Places for not entering the rains1485
Unlawful agreement1486
Offence of wrong-doing in assent1487
4. Invitation (Pavāraṇā)	1491

Dwelling not in comfort	1491
Division of the Invitation	1496
Allowance to give invitation	1496
On being grabbed by relatives	1497
Division of invitation by Saṅgha, etc.	1497
Procedure for making amends	1500
Procedure for no obstacle from offence	1500
Procedure for making amends for shared offence	1501
Fifty cases of no offence	1501
Fifty cases of perceiving it is a group or is not a group	1502
Fifty cases of doubt	1503
Fifty cases of acting badly	1503
Fifty cases of aiming at schism	1503
Abbreviated repetitions on entering a boundary	1504
Various days	1504
Visible characteristics	1505
Invitation with those of different communion, etc.	1505
Portion on should not go	1505
Portion on should go	1505
Seeing a blameworthy person	1505
Invitation with two statements, etc.	1505
Setting aside the invitation	1508
Basis for a grave offence, etc.	1513
The story of makers of strife	1515
Harmonious invitation	1517

5. Leather (Camma) 1520

The story of Soṇa Koḷivisa	1520
Rejection of double-lined sandals	1528
Rejection of all dark green, etc.	1529
Allowance for cast off sandals with many linings	1531
Rejection of sandals inside a monastery	1532
Rejection of wooden sandals	1534
Rejection of vehicles, etc.	1538

Rejection of high and broad seats1540
Rejection of all leather1541
Allowance for what is displayed by householders, etc.1543
The story of Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa1545
The five boons for Mahākaccana1547

6. Medicine (Bhesajja) 1554

On five medicines1554
On root medicine, etc.1556
The story of Pilindavaccha1562
Allowance for sugar, etc.1570
On rejection of what is prepared indoors, etc.1571
Picked up and received1574
Allowance for what is received, etc.1576
On rejection of surgery1579
On rejection of human flesh1580
On rejection of elephant flesh1583
Allowance for conje and honey-lumps1586
The story of the minister young in faith1588
The story of Belaṭṭhakaccāna1590
The story of Pāṭaligāma1594
The story of Sunidha and Vassakāra1597
On the truths at Koṭigāma1600
The story of Ambapālī1601
The story of the Licchavīs1601
The story of General Sīha1603
Allowance for a place for what is allowable1610
The story of the householder Meṇḍaka1614
Allowance for five dairy products, etc.1619
The story of Keṇiya the matted-hair ascetic1622
The story Roja the Malla1626
The story of one gone forth when old1630
On the four great references1633

7. Kaṭhina 1636

Allowance for Kaṭhina1636
Seven on bringing1644
Seven on taking1646
Six on bringing1646
Six on taking1646
Fifty on bringing1647
Fifty on taking, etc.1649
Fifty on taking what is imperfectly executed1650
Twelve cases contrary to expectation1650
Twelve cases in accordance with expectation1652
Twelve on business1655
Nine cases on without collecting1657
Five on living in comfort1659
On obstacles and not-obstacles1660

8. Robes (Cīvara) 1665

The story of Jīvaka1665
The story of the merchant's wife1669
The story of King Bimbisāra1671
The story of the merchant of Rājagaha1672
The story of the merchant's son1675
The story of King Pajjota1676
On a pair of Siveyyaka cloths1680
On exactly thirty purges1680
On asking for a boon1682
On permission for woollen garments, etc.1684
On searching for rag-robres1686
On an agreement for the receiver of cloth1688
On an agreement for a storeroom, etc.1689
On dying robes1692
Allowance for cut-up cloth1695
Allowance for three robes1697
On extra robes1699
The story of Visākhā1701

Allowance for a sitting-cloth, etc.1707
On the least robe to be assigned, etc.1710
On when a robe becomes the Saṅgha's1714
The story of Upananda the Sakyan1716
On the story of one ill1718
On inheritance1721
On rejection of nakedness1723
On rejection of garments of grass, etc.1724
On rejection of all dark green1725
On when there is no robe after the rains1726
On a robe for a divided Saṅgha1728
On rightly and wrongly allotted1729
Eight channels for the accruing of robes1731

9. The monks from Campā (Campeyya) 1734

The story of the monk Kassapagotta1734
On an act not by rule in an incomplete assembly, etc.1738
On an act without a motion, etc.1740
Carrying out by a fourfold Order, etc.1745
Carrying out by a Fourfold (Order)1746
Carrying out by a Fivefold (Order)1747
Carrying out by a Tenfold (Order)1747
Carrying out by a Twentyfold (Order)1747
On one on probation, etc.1747
On two sent away, etc.1748
On an act not by rule, etc.1750
On the questions of Upāli1754
On an act of censure1759
On an act of guidance1761
On an act of banishment1761
On an act of reconciliation1761
On revoking an act of suspension for not seeing an offence1762
On an act of suspension for not making amends for an offence . .	.1762
On revoking an act of suspension for not relinquishing1763

On revoking an act of censure1763
On revoking an act of guidance1764
On revoking an act of banishment1764
On revoking an act of reconciliation1764
On revoking an act of suspension for not seeing an offence1764
On revoking an act of suspension for not making amends for an offence1765
On revoking an act of suspension for not relinquishing1765
On an act of censure for disputes1765
On an act of guidance for disputes1766
On an act of banishment for disputes1766
On an act of reconciliation for disputes1767
On an act of suspension for not seeing an offence for disputes1767
On an act of suspension for not making amends for an offence for disputes1767
On an act of suspension for not relinquishing for disputes1767
On revoking an act of censure1767
On revoking an act of guidance1768
On revoking an act of banishment1768
On revoking an act of reconciliation1768
On revoking an act of suspension for not seeing for an offence1768
On revoking an act of suspension for not making amends for an offence1769
On revoking an act of suspension for not relinquishing1769
10. The monks from Kosambī (Kosambaka)	1774
On the dispute among the monks from Kosambī1774
The story of Dīghāvu1780
On going to Bālakalaṇaka1790
On going to Pācīnavaṃsadāya1791
On going to Pārileyyaka1794
On eighteen cases1796
Allowance to restore1799
On harmony in the Saṅgha1800

Questions of Upāli on harmony in the Saṅgha1801

Translator's Introduction 1805

11. The followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka (Paṇḍulohitaka) 1821

Act of censure1821

Twelve on an act not by rule1824

Twelve on an act by rule1825

Six on desires1826

Eighteen duties1827

Eighteen cases that should not be settled1828

Eighteen cases that should be revoked1829

Act of guidance1831

Twelve on an act not by rule1832

Twelve on an act by rule1832

Six on desiring1832

Eighteen duties1832

Eighteen cases that should not be revoked1833

Eighteen cases that should be revoked1833

Act of banishment1834

Twelve on an act not by rule1839

Twelve on an act by rule1839

Fourteen on desiring1839

Eighteen duties1840

Eighteen cases that should not be revoked1841

Act of reconciliation1843

Twelve on an act not by rule1847

Twelve on an act by rule1847

Four on desiring1847

Eighteen duties1848

Eighteen cases that should not be revoked1850

Eighteen cases that should be revoked1850

An act of suspension for not seeing an offence1851

Twelve on an act not by rule1852

Twelve on an act by rule1852

Six on desiring	1852
Forty three duties	1852
Forty-three cases that should not be revoked	1854
Forty-three cases that should be revoked	1856
An act of suspension for not making amends for an offence	1856
Twelve on an act not by rule	1857
Twelve on an act by rule	1857
Six on desiring	1857
Forty-three duties	1857
Forty-three cases that should not be revoked	1857
Forty-three cases that should be revoked	1857
An act of suspension for not relinquishing a wrong view	1857
Twelve on an act not by rule	1860
Twelve on an act by rule	1860
Six on desiring	1860
Forty-three duties	1860
Forty-three cases that should not be revoked	1861
Forty-three cases that should be revoked	1861
12. Probation (Parivāsa)	1865
Duties on one on probation	1865
Duties of one being sent back to the beginning	1870
Duties of one deserving mānatta	1871
Duties of one undergoing mānatta	1872
Duties of one deserving rehabilitation	1873
13. Accumulation (Samuccaya)	1876
Emission of semen	1876
Unconcealed mānatta	1876
Unconcealed rehabilitation	1877
Probation concealed for one night	1879
Mānatta concealed for one night	1879
Rehabilitation concealed for one night	1879
Probation concealed for five days	1880
Sending one on probation back to the beginning	1880

Sending one deserving mānatta back to the beginning1881
Mānatta for three offences1882
Sending one undergoing mānatta back to the beginning1883
Sending one deserving rehabilitation back to the beginning1883
Rehabilitation for one who has been sent back to the beginning1883
Probation for one who has concealed for a fortnight1885
Sending one on probation for a fortnight back to the beginning1885
Concurrent probation1886
Sending one deserving mānatta back to the beginning, etc.1886
Mānatta for three offences1887
Sending one undergoing mānatta back to the beginning1887
Sending one deserving rehabilitation back to the beginning1887
Rehabilitation for one who has concealed for a fortnight1888
Probation1888
Concurrent probation with dependent duration1888
All lengths concealed with dependent duration1889
Probation for two months1890
Procedure for one to be given probation for two months1895
Purifying probation1896
Forty cases1900
Thirty-six cases1902
One hundred on mānatta1903
Four hundred on concurrent probation and beginning1906
The portion with eighteen cases measured, etc.1908
The portion with eleven cases on two monks1909
Nine cases on impure beginning1911
Second set of nine cases1913
Third set of nine cases1915

14. Settlements (Samatha) 1917

Verdict in the presence of1917
Verdict by memory1919
Verdict by former madness1926
Acknowledgement1930

Majority	1931
Bad character	1933
Covering over with grass	1935
Issues	1937
Settlement of issues	1946
15. Minor matters (Khuddaka)	1961
16. Lodgings (Sayanāsana)	2024
First recitation section	2024
Allowance for dwellings	2024
Allowance for couches and chairs	2028
Allowance for whitewash, etc.	2032
Rejection of a bold design	2033
Allowance for a balustrade	2033
Allowance for an assembly hall	2035
Allowance for a porch	2036
Allowance for a fenced monastery	2036
Second recitation section	2037
The story of Anāthapiṇḍika	2037
Giving building work	2044
Allowance for the first seat, etc.	2045
Persons not to be bowed to	2048
Rejection of reserved seating	2048
Allowance for what is displayed by householders	2049
Appreciation for the Jetavana monastery	2050
Reservation of a seat, etc.	2051
Agreement for an assigner of lodgings	2054
Third recitation section	2056
Things not to be disposed of	2059
Things not to be distributed	2060
On the gift of building work	2062
Rejection of using elsewhere, etc.	2065
Allowance for meals for the Order, etc.	2067
Agreement for an issuer of meals	2068

Agreement for an assigner of lodgings	2068
Agreement on one to dispose of trifles	2069
Agreement on an acceptor of outer cloaks	2070
17. Schism in an Order (Saṅghabheda)	2074
First recitation section	2074
On the going forth of the six Sakyans	2074
The story of Devadatta	2080
On the five teachers	2082
Second recitation section	2085
Act of informing	2085
The story of Prince Ajātasattu	2088
Sending assassins	2089
Shedding blood	2092
Sending out Nālāgiri	2093
On the request for the five points	2095
Third recitation section	2100
On schism in the Order	2100
Questions of Upāli	2107
18. Duties (Vatta)	2112
On the duties of visitors	2112
On the duties of residents	2116
On the duties of travellers	2117
On the duties of expressing appreciation	2118
On duties in the refectory	2119
On duties for those going on almsround	2122
On duties for forest dwellers	2124
On duties regarding lodgings	2126
On duties in the sauna	2129
On duties in the toilet	2130
On duties to the preceptor	2132
On duties to one who shares his cell	2138
On duties to the teacher	2141
On duties to the student	2141

19. Suspending the Observance (Uposathaṭṭhāpana)	2147
Requesting the recitation of the Pātimokkha	2147
Eight wonderful things about the great ocean	2149
Eight wonderful things about this Dhamma and Vinaya	2150
Those deserving to hear the Pātimokkha	2153
Setting aside the Pātimokkha by rule and not by rule	2154
Setting aside the Pātimokkha by rule	2159
Factors for undertaking on one's own behalf	2161
Things to be reviewed by a reprover	2162
Things to be established by a reprover	2164
On connected with the reprover and the reprovèd	2165
20. Nuns (Bhikkhunī)	2169
First recitation section	2169
The story of Mahāpajāpatī Gotamī	2169
Eight important rules	2171
Allowance for the ordination of nuns	2174
Second recitation section	2180
Third recitation section	2193
21. (Recitation with) Five Hundred (Pañcasata)	2210
Origin of the Council	2210
On the lesser and minor training rules	2215
On the higher penalty	2219
22. (Recitation with) Seven Hundred (Sattasata)	2224
First recitation section	2224
Second recitation section	2235

TRANSLATOR'S INTRODUCTION

BD.4.v

The present volume of the Book of the Discipline covers the whole of the Mahāvagga, the Great, or Greater Division of the Vinaya, and is thus a translation of the first volume of OLDENBERG'S Vinaya Piṭakam, published in 1879. The Mahāvagga was translated in full by RHYS DAVIDS and OLDENBERG, and comprises most of Volume I and the first part of Volume II of their Vinaya Texts (their Cūlavagga translation also begins in Volume II), published in the Sacred Books of the East, Volumes XIII and XVII, in 1881, 1882. These volumes, although they first appeared seventy years ago, are still indispensable for a study of early Buddhist monastic life.

This new translation of the Book of the Discipline is, however, justified I think, for various reasons. For example, recent events have focused attention on the Buddhist lands of South-East Asia where Buddhist monks still follow these ancient rules; Buddhism itself is stirring and seeking to know more of its own treasures, and it is attracting non-Buddhists to become acquainted with them likewise. The moment is therefore not unsuitable to re-translate one of the principal works of the Pali canon, the more especially as many Western students are now debarred from consulting the original English translation, Vinaya Texts, since unfortunately it is out of print. Moreover, the scholarship which has been lavished on the Pali canon during roughly the last century has inevitably resulted in an increased understanding of the technical and other terms so abundant in the Vinaya and which in many cases also occur in other parts of the Pali canon. Following this, there has resulted a surer knowledge of Pali Buddhism as a whole. Now that references, allusions, remarks, not to mention words themselves, can be compared with other contexts, which had been either not edited in roman letters or not translated by the time Vinaya Texts was published, they are able to take on a fresh and a fuller meaning. For the same reason various terms and phrases, hitherto difficult and perhaps baffling, have become easier to understand, and hence to translate.

I have therefore attempted translations of various words that Rhys Davids and Oldenberg, for one reason or another, kept in the Pali. I do not claim originality, however, for my renderings, for most, if not all of these terms have already been translated where they occur in other canonical texts and have appeared in their appropriate books in the Pali Text Society's Translation Series or in the Sacred Books of the Buddhists. Some of these words may be mentioned here. For example, as in the first three volumes of the Book of the Discipline, saṅgha is rendered as Order; dukkāṭa as wrongdoing (a type of offence) of constant occurrence in this volume; sāmaṇera as novice; titthiyā as other sects; bhikkhu and bhikkhunī as monk and nun; chabbaggiyā bhikkhū as the sixfold group of monks; vassa as the rains; parivāsa as probation; upajjhāya as preceptor; saddhivihārika as the one who shares his cell; ācariya as teacher (in a technical sense), and antevāsin as his pupil; and pavāraṇā as Invitation.

In this volume I have also translated a number of other words, likewise left untranslated by Rhys Davids and Oldenberg, and which have not occurred in my three preceding volumes. For example, I have translated pārisuddhi as entire purity; nissaya as dependence; and ñatti as motion while ñatticatuttha is a motion followed by a resolution put three times. I have also given the names of the formal acts of the Order in English. All these are technical terms, and should be understood, for they naturally help to clarify some of the depths and complications of the Vinaya. In almost every case the notes which Rhys Davids and Oldenberg append to their untranslated words are of great value and merit careful consultation. I have made no attempt to translate dhamma and nibbāna. But I hope by translating such terms as I have mentioned above I have, while keeping to the Pali intention, perhaps clothed them in a meaning and significance easier for the English reader to grasp than when he is confronted with the Pali forms.

This volume opens with the account, of the greatest importance to historians and devotees of Buddhism alike, of the days immediately preceding the formation of the Order itself, beginning with the seven days' contemplation under the Bo-tree where Gotama sat enjoying the bliss of deliverance just after he had attained that full awakening, illumination or enlightenment which marked his passage from Bodhisattahood to Buddhahood.

According to this Mahāvagga account, during each of "the three watches of the night" — presumably the last of the seven spent under the Bo-tree — he uttered a solemn utterance concerned with cause, and then with the routing of Māra (in the third watch). The Dhammapada Commentary (Dhp-a.iii.127) says that in the first watch he dissipated the darkness (ignorance) veiling his former abodes, or lives, births; that in the second he purified his deva-vision; and that in the third, out of compassion for creatures, he paid right mindfulness to dependent origination both in forward and reverse order. Then, self-awakened to the fullest self-awakening, he uttered the solemn utterance common to hundreds of thousands of Buddhas, namely the two verses beginning anekajātisaṃsāraṃ (Dhp.153; Thag.183; Ja.i.76). The Introduction to the Vinaya Commentary (Samantapāsādikā), Vol.i, p.17, and the Dīgha Commentary (DN-a.i.16), agree that these verses are the first Buddhavacana; while the Udāna Commentary (Ud-a.208) and the Suttanipāta Commentary (Snp-a.ii.392) also say that he uttered these verses after he had attained the three knowledges in the three watches of the night. The Khuddakapāṭha Commentary (Kp-a.12–Kp-a.13), elaborating further, or perhaps following some other tradition, says that while these two verses were the first of all words to be uttered by the Buddha (Buddha, because now, although very recently, "awakened"), they were only spoken mentally and not out loud. For what he first spoke out loud, so this Commentary continues, was the verse which in the Mahāvagga is attributed to the end of the first watch of the night of awakening.

At the end of the third watch of this crucial night the Buddha went, according to the Mahāvagga, to the foot of the Ajapāla banyan and sat there for seven days; he then spent another seven days at the foot of the Mucalinda tree, and a still further seven at the foot of the Rājāyatana. While he was at the first of these three trees he was visited by a brahmin, representative of one of the sects which abounded in India at that time, and the Buddha stated his view on what it is to be a "Brahmin" (in the true sense).

BD.4.viii

While he was at the second tree a naga-king arrived to offer him protection—indicative of the close and, on the whole, friendly relations which in the Buddhist tradition existed between serpents and human beings. Again Gotama made a short statement, this time on what it is that constitutes “highest bliss”, parama sukha. Although this statement lacks the terseness of that attributed to Gotama in the Māgandiya Sutta (MN 75): that “nibbāna is the highest bliss”, it nevertheless contains tenets that throughout the long history of Buddhism have remained at the heart of its teaching: that the absence of malice, the absence of feeling attracted to conditioned things, the transcending of sense-pleasures, and the averting (or control, vinaya) of pride in the thought “I am”—that these are the highest bliss.

In the “Talk on Brahmā’s Entreaty” during the time of the Buddha’s hesitation to teach dhamma, concepts emerge which, with more insistence or less, are found in most of the Pali canonical texts: the deepness and difficulty of dhamma, its peace, and the consequent need to teach it in a world so delighting and rejoicing in sensual pleasure that it was averse to letting itself be persuaded that dhamma, earnestly practised, led upstream, against the current, paṭisotaḡāmin, and by the death of craving opened the doors of deathlessness to nibbāna, the source of true and supreme bliss.

The first Khandhaka, Section or Chapter of the Mahāvagga, called the Great (mahā) Section,¹ also contains Gotama’s famous utterance to Upaka, the Naked Ascetic, of his victoriousness, perfection and self-awakening, of his uniqueness, and of his having had no teacher (Kd.1.6.8). He is therefore different from other human beings. Then there comes, preceded by further stress on the finding of deathlessness, the First Discourse, delivered to the five earliest followers, and called elsewhere the Dhammacakkappavattana Sutta, the Discourse on the Rolling of the Wheel of Dhamma, in which the Middle Course between the two extremes, the dead-ends of too great luxury and too great austerity, is called the ariyan Eightfold Way. This Way is graded into sīla, samādhi and pañña. (MN.i.301) and centres on dukkha, unsatisfactoriness, ill or suffering, and the stopping of it, epitomised later by Gotama when he is recorded to say (MN.i.140): “As formerly, so now, this is precisely what I teach: ill and the stopping of ill." Aññata Koṇḍañña was the first of the disciples to apprehend this central fact in causality, that "whatever is of the nature to arise, all that is of the nature to stop". It was his vision of dhamma, as it was soon afterwards that of his four companions.

¹ Note by Sujato: In this SuttaCentral edition this is titled the Pabbajjākkhandhaka, the Chapter on Going Forth.

BD.4.ix

As this dhamma-vision arose in each one of them he asked for the "going forth" or admission, pabbajā, and for the ordination, upasampadā, in the Lord's presence. In response, Gotama uttered the words, "Come, monk, ehi bhikkhu, well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for the utter ending of ill." This, the original formula, used by Gotama when the Order was beginning to form and while it was still in its infancy, covers simultaneous admission and ordination. Later, two separate procedures supervened, and as the Mahāvagga shows, admission into the Order had to be gained before ordination could be conferred.

After the Second Discourse, that on the impossibility of the five khandhas being self because they are impermanent and suffering, and also spoken to the five original followers, and after the ordination of Yasa, his four friends, and then his fifty friends, there were sixty-one arahants in the world (Kd.1.10.4). "Freed from all snares," they were told by Gotama to go out on tour and preach dhamma for the good and the welfare of the multitude. As a result many people became anxious for admission and ordination, but, journeying to Gotama so as to be admitted and ordained by him, they arrived exhausted. Accordingly he thereupon allowed monks themselves to admit and ordain in any district, in any quarter. They were not, however, instructed to use the words "Come, monk." On the contrary, it is now the candidate who has three times to repeat another formula. This is called admission and ordination by the "three goings for refuge". This marks the second stage in the ordination proceedings. In the usage to be followed by those who wished to be monastic followers, the three refuges became stabilised as buddhaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi, dhammaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi, saṃghaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi, each phrase to be repeated three times. Those who wished to be counted as lay-disciples (upāsaka, feminine upāsikā) asked for this status by repeating the slightly different formula of taking refuge not in buddhaṃ, dhammaṃ and saṃghaṃ, but in bhagavantam, dhammaṃ and bhikkhusaṅghaṃ,¹ or in bhavantāṃ Gotamaṃ, dhammaṃ and bhikkhusaṅghaṃ.²

BD.4.x

It is probable that this method of admitting and ordaining did not last very long. The reasons given for abolishing it are perhaps not very convincing, and we should have expected more details and tales of mishaps showing that it no longer sufficed and therefore needed revising. At all events, as the Mahāvagga stands, on an occasion when Sāriputta asked him how he should admit and ordain a certain Brahmin, Gotama did not answer that the Brahmin's repetition of the three goings for refuge would constitute his ordination (Kd.1.28.3). Instead the third phase now arose: that of the Order ordaining a candidate, presented by his preceptor, by means of a formal act (kamma) consisting of a motion and a resolution proclaimed three times (ñatticatuttha). This means that it is now the Order alone which has the authority, the power and the legal right to ordain. In addition, the candidate for ordination now has to have a preceptor, agreed upon by the Order, who must present him to the Order—that is to the one dwelling within the boundary where he wants to take up his residence—and who must have prepared him beforehand so that, without feeling ashamed or confused, he will be able to answer a number of routine questions that will be put to him in the midst of the Order. No doubt of gradual growth, these routine-questions form a kind of examination, and it is impressed on the candidate by his preceptor that now, above all times, is a time for truth-speaking.

These are, however, merely some of the features among the many leading to the finalised form of the ordination proceedings. These multiplied and became intricate to suit the dynamic and progressive phase in which they took shape. Gone is the old simplicity of "Come, monk". Regulations have to increase to meet a complexity of emergent eventualities. The resources, nissaya, the minimum number of monks composing an Order competent to ordain, the number of years a monk must have been ordained before he is reckoned as suitable or competent to ordain others, living in dependence, nissāya vatthum, on a teacher, giving guidance, nissayaṃ dātuṃ, the qualities that a monk should be possessed of in order to ordain, and the ordination and probation of former members of other sects, and the age at which a person may be ordained, are all subjects brought under review. The inner life of the Order had to be safeguarded as much as had its relations to the world outside.

¹ Besides the Mahāvagga references, see e.g. MN.i.368, MN.i.379, MN.i.391, MN.i.396. ² See also e.g. MN.i.290, MN.i.413, MN.i.489, MN.i.501.

BD.4.xi

That the candidate for ordination had to undergo a prior period of preparation and instruction at the hands of a preceptor implies a passage of time elapsing between “going forth” or preliminary admission, and “ordination”, or final admission. It would seem that in order to meet difficulties, perhaps created by the drawing power of Gotama’s Order itself, what had once been one operation became split into two. This is the intention of Kd.1.28 which, without mentioning admission, allows monks to ordain by a formal act consisting of the motion and the resolution put to the Order three times. Since the method of admission is not formulated here, although Sāriputta had asked how to admit and how to ordain, it becomes clear that these two proceedings, hitherto simultaneous, are now in the process of separating. Kd.1.30 shows even more confusion. It cites an instance where monks admit and ordain a brahmin who had asked for admission (only). Gotama reproved them for admitting anyone who went forth for the sake of the good meals the monks were reputed to enjoy—and then pointed out the four “resources” for one being ordained, saying that admission was for the sake, not of good food, but of each one of the resources.

It is, however, clear that two stages were becoming necessary before the full status of a monk could be acquired, and that in the earlier of these two stages, entered on to by pabbajjā, admission, the monk’s standing, rights and duties would be different from those in the latter stage, entered on to by upasampadā, ordination. Hence when pabbajjā was functionally separated from upasampadā, it received a new and specialised significance, coming to mean admission to noviciateship. One became a novice, sāmaṇera, by the conferment of pabbajjā, a newly ordained monk, nava, by the conferment of upasampadā. The former, like the latter, had its own machinery for its proper enactment (BD.1.50–BD.1.61). For example, a boy should not be allowed to “go forth” unless he had his parents’ consent, and unless he had reached the age of fifteen, except on the strange condition that he could scare crows (BD.1.51)—a test perhaps that his first infancy was past. Methods of dealing with refractory novices are laid down (BD.1.57–BD.1.60). As depraved monks could be expelled after they had been ordained, so depraved novices could be expelled before they were ordained. The going for refuge in the buddha, dhamma and saṅgha although abolished from the normal procedure of ordination, was retained as the formula novices are to repeat when being allowed to go forth (Kd.1.54.3). It is also the formula to be used by those former members of other sects, who later will be eligible for ordination, when they are asking to enter on a four months' probationary period which they have to observe first (BD.1.38).

BD.4.xii

By enlarging the Order to include novices, who might be those who shared a cell (with a preceptor) or pupils (of a teacher), by not limiting it to Gotama himself and the first sixty monks, all of whom were arahants, by exhorting these original “adepts” to go forth and teach dhamma and as a result of their returning with an unspecified number of people seeking for admission and ordination, the Order was rendered accessible to men whose powers of attaining the matchless deliverance (Kd.1.13.1) were not so great as those of the original disciples. These were monks who therefore stood in need of training. But in spite of many opportunities of submitting to it and profiting by it, they did not always turn out satisfactorily. Hence it may be presumed that the bhikkhusaṅgha of the third refuge for lay followers said less than was intended. The saṅgha of arahants, or at least of ariyans is meant, not that of average men. The Saṅgha of the Triple Gem is not the community of monks as such, not the community that includes the groups of six or seventeen monks, notorious for their bad habits and as makers of trouble, or the quarrelsome monks of Kosambī, or those depraved or ill-behaved individuals on account of all of whom rules were formulated, regulations devised, and offences discriminated from what were not classed as offences, and whose misdoings provide the raison d'être of discipline, of vinaya, of the outward standard of self-control so much needed not merely to distinguish the monks from members of other sects, although in some cases a certain amount of imitation was permitted, but also to gain the loyalty and support of the lay followers. For on these depended to a large extent the physical conditions which would make a monk free to devote himself to his training, the goal of which was the vision of nibbāna. The Sarīgha of the third refuge has in reality reference only to those steadfast disciples who, having entered the sotāpanna stage are on the supramundane parts of the Way, and so are themselves of supramundane stature and attainments—lokuttara because unaffected by all that is lokiya, of the world, compounded and conditioned. “They are united by the communion of understanding and ethical behaviour,” according to the Commentaries on the Bhayabherava Sutta (MN-a.i.130ff.) and the Khuddakapāṭha (Kp-a.18), in both of which the meaning of “going for refuge” is discussed at length and at a high level not approached in the Vinaya Commentary.

BD.4.xiii

The first twenty-four chapters of the First Section, the Mahākhandhaka, of the Mahāvagga appear to give a chronological account of events from the night of Awakening under the Bo-tree on the banks of the river Nerañjarā to the admission and ordination of Sāriputta and Moggallāna, the pair of chief disciples, already gone forth from home into homelessness as wanderers. From this point on, a precise historical narration is not so apparent, for the Mahāvagga now begins to group together subject-matter that belongs together. Strict chronology is suspended, no doubt in the interests of classifying this subject-matter and reducing its complexity to some kind of manageable order, the better to be fixed in the memory. What need was there for the existing or for any subsequent Order to know the exact procession of events? It was of greater value to learn and master the rules and procedure governing both the recurrent occasions and the daily conduct of monastic life, and this could be more easily accomplished if the material for the various topics were grouped together instead of being scattered throughout the immense compilation known as the Vinaya-Piṭaka.

If, in the hands of the early editors the sequence of events became secondary to systematisation, this plan nonetheless well shows both the development and the stabilisation of the Order as a uniform institution, the growth of several monastic practices, of government within it for the sake of its own preservation and continuance which, in turn, depended on the essential qualities of scrupulousness and striving on the part of the individuals who became its members. These therefore were being continually brought to live in conformity with a standard of behaviour specially suitable to recluses, samaṇa, and worthy of those who had “left the world” with its evanescent pleasures and its troubles and had instead entered on a way of life where worldly joys and sorrows were gradually to be renounced so that the other-worldly and higher joy that transcended them could be apprehended.

BD.4.xiv

For achieving this, the life of the Order regarded as a whole came to be, no doubt gradually, planned and arranged and adapted to circumstances, while, running parallel to such developments, the life of its members became carefully regulated. Thus the first steps of all—admission and ordination into the Order—were experimented with until various types of applicants regarded as not eligible for entry could be excluded by rules, based either on experience or on forethought. This left the Order open only to the sort of person whom it was not unreasonable to suppose might be assimilated without bringing it into disgrace. Even so, there were backsliders, as already mentioned. Disgrace would have been courted if, for example, debtors and those in the royal service had been allowed to escape their obligations by becoming monks. Therefore they were debarred from entering the Order.

After its first Section on Admission and Ordination, the Mahāvagga proceeds to an account of the nature and establishment of the great fortnightly Observance of uposatha, whose principal feature is the recital of the Pātimokkha rules. This provides monks with an occasion to reveal any offence they may have committed. Their silence, on the other hand, is taken to mean that they have “entire purity”, pārisuddhi, in respect of adherence to the rules. As usual, all kinds of subsidiary matters had to be defined and regularised in order to achieve the smooth running of the main concerns. In the case of the Uposatha it was for example determined that only monks living within the same recognised boundary should gather together on an Uposatha day. Therefore methods of fixing boundaries had to be established. Moreover the Uposatha could not be held at some place chosen at random; a place of a maximum size for the current needs had to be agreed upon within each boundary so that all the monks living there should know where to go and arrive in time. If they had difficulty in crossing a river—one that ran through their boundary—to get there, it might be agreed by the Order that they need not come bringing all their three robes; but if they left them behind they must not lay them aside in an unsuitable place where they might get lost or burnt or eaten by rats (BD.2.12).

Right and wrong methods of reciting the Pātimokkha are given: whether or not it should be recited in full or in brief, which to some extent depended on the absence or presence of ten sources of danger. It was, ideally, to be recited by an elder (thera), but if he was incompetent, then it was to be recited by some other experienced, competent monk; if there were none within the boundary, a newly ordained monk was to be sent to a neighbouring residence to learn it there, either in full or in brief, and then return (Kd.2.17.6).

If a monk, owing to illness, could not attend the recital of the Pātimokkha, he had to send his “entire purity”, pārisuddhi, by another. This monk conveyed it on behalf of the one who was ill and declared it (dātum) to the Order; but many occasions are posited when the entire purity comes to be not conveyed on account of a variety of things that might happen to the conveyer both while on his way from the invalid to the meeting-place and after his arrival there but before he had given the entire purity. This, and the conveyance and giving, or declaration of the consent (chandaṃ dātum) on behalf of a monk who is ill for the carrying out of a formal act of the Order, serve to show how extremely important it was held to be—a point stressed over and over again—that an Order should be “complete” whenever its business was being discharged. This was not to fall into the hands of the few. Even those who, like Mahākappina, claimed to be “purified with the highest purity” (Kd.2.5.5), were not not to go. For an Order would not have been complete if even one monk were absent. It would seem that the only reasons for not going to the Observance in person were severe illness and madness. In the former case the Order could be regarded as complete although in fact not complete, provided that the entire purity and the consent were properly and safely conveyed and declared. In the latter, the Order must grant the mad monk, here typified by Gagga, the agreement for a madman. This agreement is to the effect that whether the mad monk remembers the Observance or not, comes for it or not, whether he remembers a formal act of the Order or not, comes for it or not, the Order either with him or without him can legitimately carry out both the Observance and the formal act.

Such are some of the items and problems which had to be settled and solved before the recital of the Pātimokkha received its final form. I do not recapitulate all these here, for they may be read in the text. Those I have given may be regarded as typical of the care taken to forestall and circumvent deleterious contingencies that might arise and disrupt the monk's standing either in his own eyes or in those of his fellows or those of the world. The strength of the regulations governing monastic proceedings and individual conduct lies in the standard or criterion they give of how to act in a multitude of circumstances affecting a monk's life.

When the Mahāvagga comes to deal with the rainy season it pays almost equal attention to entering on the rains and then keeping them by residing in one monastery for either the first three or the second three of the four months of this period, as it does to the journeys monks may take away from their rains-residence. The prime motive underlying the establishment of rains-residences was protection or non-injury: the protection of crops—the economic mainspring of life—and the protection of the teeming small creatures that some Pācittiyas also seek to safeguard. One of the results of this anxiety not to harm vegetable or animal life, and which sometimes received an impetus from the criticisms the laity made, was the allowance given monks and nuns to enter on the rains, followed by an attempt to immobilise them during this season. But restrictions such as this latter were at variance with the immense vitality the Orders possessed, as is shown by the numerous occasions when it is deemed not only permissible but desirable for monks to leave the rains-residence on various kinds of monastic business or on compassionate missions. Even as life must go on, so the Order's business must go on. And the life of this smaller world within the larger one could not close down entirely for a third of each year¹; monks were too much involved with the world outside, they were dependent on it (BD.3.10-BD.3.11.4), and had commitments towards it, and their lives were too much interlocked with those of the laity to make this feasible. A compromise had therefore to be found between, on the one hand, staying in a residence for the whole of the three months of the rains, whereby the minimum of harm would be brought to the crops and the life of minute creatures, and, on the other, leaving the residence for business which might reasonably be regarded as urgent. This compromise was effected by limiting the time of absence to seven days; and the business calling for a monk's presence being carefully defined, if he could not transact it within this time, he should not undertake it at all.

BD.4.xvii

¹ The rains lasted for four months. Each monk could choose whether he would observe the first three months or the second three months, but he was not expected to observe all four.

The end of the rains was marked by two ceremonies. One of these was the Pavāraṇā, when monks invited one another to speak of offences they had seen, heard or suspected to have been committed during the rains. The recital of the Pātimokkha was to "remove" offences, by confessing them, during the nine dry months of the year; the Invitation was to remove any offences that monks had committed during the three wet months, and would help them to aim at grasping discipline (Kd.4.1.13).

The other ceremony held at the end of the rains was not disciplinary in nature or connected with the confession of offences. It was for the making up of the kaṭhina cloth, or cotton cloth that had accrued by way of gift to the monks, into robes to replace those that had become thin and shabby or spoiled by the rains (Kd.7). Thus the replenishment of robe-material comes under consideration, and had to be managed in an orderly and prescribed way.

Further, various officers were created for looking after robe-material: the acceptor, the guardian, the distributor; places suitable for store-rooms are prescribed: dyes and methods of dyeing laid down; the use of three robes only (one doubled however) allowed; while the kinds of medicine monks might take are discussed in considerable detail. The kinds of shoes and sandals they might wear, and the use they might make of animals' skins are treated with equal precision. Both of these categories no doubt spring from the desire not to take life, however infinitesimal. Wooden shoes, or clogs, are objected to because if monks wore them and stepped on insects they might kill them (Kd.5.6.3), besides disturbing monks who were meditating. Further, sandals made of young palmyra palms and young bamboos came to be forbidden after people had complained to monks that, in cutting these down, they were destroying life that was one-facultied. Other complaints must also have tended to reduce the slaughter of animals. Rugs—or garments (Kd.8.28.2)—made of black antelope skin were forbidden to monks and also sheets made of the hide of the Kadali deer (Kd.5.10.4), and it became an offence of wrong-doing to recline upon the hides of lions, tigers and leopards (Kd.5.10.6) or of smaller animals. Cowhides were forbidden because scandalised monks found that one of their number had incited a depraved lay follower to kill a calf for his benefit, and they remembered that Gotama had condemned “onslaught on creatures”. But, at the end of Kd.5, an exception is made in favour of the border districts (Kd.5.13.13) where, because of the hardships and discomfort, the hides of sheep, goats and deer were allowed to be used as coverings.

The last two Sections of the Mahāvagga point to an Order that was indubitably growing and that, in order to meet this expansion, had to be carefully controlled. Kd.9 engages on a thorough discussion of what it is that constitutes valid as against invalid formal acts that an Order can carry out. In the first place an Order to carry out a legally valid formal act must be complete; those monks not able to be present because of illness must send their leave for absence, and those who are present must not protest against the proceedings. A “complete Order” also refers, as before, to the one residing within a determined boundary. The actions and business of every such Order must be transacted on a uniform pattern, and conform to one uniform standard, so that each Order transacts its business in the same way as every other, all following the same regulations. This must therefore be done, in the second place, dhammena, rightly, properly, by rule. To carry out a formal act dhammena, by rule, means that if it is to be carried out by a motion and one resolution, ñattidutiya, the motion must be put and the resolution proposed once only. But if it is to be carried out by a motion and a resolution put three times, ñatticatuttha, then this must be done, in all cases the motion being put before the resolution is proclaimed. The formal act will then be irreversible, fit to stand, and protests against its validity of no avail. Immense pains are taken to distinguish a formal act carried out in a complete assembly and by rule from one carried out in an incomplete assembly and either by what has the appearance of rule or not by rule. The formal acts under the jurisdiction of an Order number sixteen. They comprise (Kd.9.4.1): invitation, rehabilitation, ordination, but only an Order consisting of twenty monks or more can carry out all of these. They also include verdicts of innocence, of past insanity, specific depravity, formal acts of suspension for not seeing an offence, for not making amends for it, for not giving up a wrong view; and of banishment, censure, placing under guidance, reconciliation, sending one who merits probation back to the beginning, and the imposing of mānatta (two features in the penalty for Saṅghādisesa offences). When circumstances justify, these formal acts may be revoked by the Order.

Finally, the tenth and last Section strikes a different note again by promulgating regulations and advice for allaying schisms. These might arise through genuine disagreement upon what constituted an offence and what did not, or upon the particular kind of offence incurred by a particular action; or when factions formed to support a monk or monks who had quarrelled with their fellows from other causes, among which must be included the positive wish to create a schism, a wish put into practice by, for example, suspending a monk for an offence he had not committed and that he therefore refused to see as an offence of his. On one such an occasion Gotama is reputed to have tried, unsuccessfully, to make the bickering monks compose their differences by telling them a Jātaka story illustrating the conquest of wrath by non-wrath (Kd.10.2). The Mahāvagga therefore contains dhamma or doctrine as well as discipline. Indeed the latter would be nugatory if it were not based on the former and promulgated in conjunction with it. How great is the contrast between the quarrelsome monks of Kosambī whose brawls and dissensions caused Gotama to seek solitude like the great bull-elephant who was beset and annoyed by the rest of the herd (Kd.10.4.6), and the peaceable monks, Anuruddha, Nandiya and Kimbila who lived harmoniously together as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection, full of amity in gesture, speech and thought surrendering their minds to each other and so, although having different bodies, having only one mind nāna hi kho no kāyā ekañ ca pana maññe cittaṃ, (Kd.10.4.3-Kd.10.4.4).

BD.4.xx

The Mahāvagga deals with a time when, at the beginning of Gotama's ministry, the number of monks—and nuns too—was fast increasing, and when they, travelling to more distant parts of India, bore the new doctrine with them and so started the influx of members that has gone on until today. If the geographical expansion of the Order can be gauged by the relaxations in the rules for the outlying districts or border countries, made necessary by the conditions prevailing there, harder than those of the Middle Country where otherwise the scene is laid—principally at Rājagaha, also at Sāvattī, Vesālī, Kapilavatthu and other neighbouring places—its numerical expansion can equally well be gauged by the awareness of schisms arising to the danger and detriment of the Order, and which could only have occurred some time after its formation.

Although the beginning of the Mahāvagga gives not only an impression but an account of an Order expanding and taking shape immediately after its inception, the remainder appears to refer to a time when the Order already had a considerable amount of history behind it, and to a time therefore when many rules had been laid down and when, in spite of attempted schisms, a certain amount of stability had been achieved in the matter of the Order's government and legislation. This may to some extent be judged, for example, by the number of times, thirteen in all, that the phrase yathādhammo kāretabbo, should be dealt with according to the rule, occurs. The rule referred to will in each case be found complete with the penalty incurred for infringing it, in the Vibhaṅgas. That the use of this phrase assumes the prior existence of the rule is confirmed, in addition, by the fact that the material contained in the Mahāvagga is placed in the palm-leaf manuscripts after the Maha- (or Bhikkhu-) and Bhikkhuni-Vibhaṅgas. Although this sequence is not followed by Oldenberg in his edition of the Vinaya Piṭakam, it is that rightly adopted in the Vinaya Texts, for here the Vibhaṅga for monks, although drastically curtailed precedes the Mahāvagga—that for nuns being omitted entirely.

BD.4.xxi

The question then arises why, in the middle of the Vinaya, an account is incorporated “of the very first events in the history of the Saṅgha” (Vinaya Texts i.72, note). Rhys Davids and Oldenberg think it “natural” to connect “the stories or legends concerning the ordination of bhikkhus” with these early events because, so they argue, “it was impossible to realise the idea of a Saṅgha without rules showing who was to be regarded as a duly admitted member of the fraternity, and who was not". I agree that this provides a good reason for prefacing the record of the development of the first and most vital step in a monk's life by a short history of how there came to be a life for monks at all. From their admission and ordination, all the rest follows. At the same time many stories are interspersed throughout the whole of the Vinaya, excepting the Parivāra. Not only are there several in the Mahāvagga itself, for example about Ambapālī and the Licchavis, about Jīvaka Komārabhacca, Visākhā, Meṇḍaka, Dīghāvu, and about Pilindavaccha, and about the boy Upālī (both told elsewhere in the Vinaya), and countless shorter ones, but every rule in the Vibhaṅgas is introduced by some story, long or short, as the case may be. This being so, it seems not only "natural" but logical to introduce the rules governing the initial and most important step in a monk's life by an account of the first events which occurred after the supreme moment when Gotama attained full self-awakening. Since this was the initial and most important step in a Buddha's career, to recount it was therefore the greatest of all stories a Buddhist "book" could tell.

The Mahāvagga possibly derives its name from that of its first Section, the Mahākhandhaka, the Great (or Greater) Section because it deals with great (or greater) events. The plan of naming a Division after its first Section, or a Section after its first chapter, is of fairly common occurrence in the Piṭakas, and was perhaps adopted here. On the other hand, it might be conceded that the Mahāvagga, including as it does matter concerned with admission and ordination, with the Uposatha, Pātimokkha, Pavāraṇā and Kaṭhina ceremonies, the clarification of what are valid formal acts, and the ways of dealing with a schism, contains subjects exceeding in importance those contained in the Cūḷavagga. It is again possible that the Cūḷavagga was regarded as the "Less" or "Lesser" or the Small Division because of its two Sections on the Councils of Rājagaha and Vesālī. As the first of these purports to have been convened shortly after Gotama had died, and the second a century later, the Cūḷavagga takes us to a time when he, as the living fount of authority, was no longer promulgating discipline, and when discipline was no longer growing.

Yet the mass of the rules attributed to him and held to have been laid down by him when he was alive, many large in their scope, others concerned with small details, but having their own significance nonetheless, together yield a formidable body of that discipline, vinaya, which with dhamma, was to be the teacher after Gotama had passed away. The text at DN.ii.154 is I think sufficiently clear in its meaning, although it has been accused of gloss. It reads yo vo Ānanda mayā dhammo ca vinayo ca desito paññatto so vo mam' accayena satthā. Gotama was speaking to Ānanda, a monk; he would not therefore have omitted to speak of vinaya which, together with dhamma, gives a surer basis for progress towards the final vision and ultimate bliss than dhamma alone can give. Had the sentence run: yo vo mayā dhammo ca desito vinayo ca paññatto, it might have been more apparent that the reference of the following so was to both dhamma and vinaya. Dhamma is taught, desita, showing the Way; vinaya is laid down, paññatta, for keeping one's footsteps on the Way by strict adherence to it. Both are satthu sāsanaṃ, the Teacher's instruction.

Discipline, as promulgated, is itself an authority. According to the early editors (Vin.1.99) the teaching will stand firm so long as vinaya is not lost even if the Suttanta (Piṭaka) and the Abhidhamma be forgotten. It is moreover capable of almost indefinite extension and application, and can regulate items of behaviour that, in spite of the multitude of rules, offences and "allowances" (anujānāmi) that were laid down by the Teacher, were not legislated for in particular in his lifetime. The monk must make up his mind about what has not been legislated for, measuring any course of action by the general standard of what he knows to be discipline. He must remember this and apply it to his problem. When Mahāpajāpatī asked to be taught dhamma in brief (Vin.2.258) a general standard was given to her by which she might know of other things eso dhammo eso vinayo etaṃ satthu sāsanaṃ (this is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher's instruction). Similarly in the Mahāvagga, when some monks were doubtful or had scruples about what had been allowed, anuññata, and what had not, they were told that anything not fitting in with what had been allowed, anything tallying with what had not been allowed, was not allowable, na kappati, not suitable; and the contrary.

In the Mahāvagga alone there are about 280 occasions when Gotama, by uttering the word anujānāmi, I allow, I permit, made some thing or some usage permissible to monks. The variety of cases covered is so large, ranging as it does from accepting a monastery to the preparation of a foot-salve, from using three robes to the insertion of a patch, from the novices training in ten rules to the use of a trough for dye, that anyone acquainted with these would stand a good chance of knowing how to act in circumstances not specifically either allowed or objected to by Gotama. Or they could extend an “allowance” to suit circumstances beyond those legislated for. Gotama himself, as recorded, once gave a flint in this direction when, after making ten “allowances” for curing a boil a monk was suffering from, finally said, “I allow, monks, a linen bandage, and every treatment for curing a sore” (BD.6.14.4–BD.1.14.5).

Besides the use of anujānāmi, the Buddha is often represented as saying to monks, “you may” or “you should not”, a prohibition apt to be followed by intimating that contravention results in an offence of wrong-doing. This kind of offence, with thullaccaya, grave offences, mentioned infrequently in this volume, and three other types of offence, not mentioned here at all, are regarded as a “falling away from right habits” (Kd.4.16.12).

Whether Gotama himself was responsible for all these allowances and prohibitions we shall probably never know. In the story of the three monks who had spent the rains at Rājagaha and who journeyed to Pāṭaliputta to ask elders residing there to solve their problem there is a hint that power might be delegated (Kd.8.24.6). This story may, however, be included in the Mahāvagga for the simple reason that it was recording exceptional events. Or it may have been left in because in fact the practice of turning to others instead of to Gotama to interpret dhamma, a rule, was becoming more generally adopted than is evident in the rest of the Mahāvagga.

BD.4.xxiv

It is true that there is not much philosophy in the Vinaya. It is by nature as by name a book or basket of discipline. But as it is rather hollow to lay down rules for training and for outward behaviour without giving the underlying reasons why they should be observed, it is not possible to exclude philosophical concepts completely from a “book” principally concerned with discipline. I have already mentioned some of these philosophical concepts (above, BD.4.viii). The Mahāvagga, especially at its beginning, is not in fact devoid of some of the notions which are recognised features in Buddhist philosophy. In the first place, to mention but a few examples, the goal is spoken of and is named. It is amata, deathlessness, the undying. Its gates have been opened by Gotama, the Way-finder, so that those who hear dhamma may arrive at the object of their quest. The notion of gaining the goal by travelling on a Way between two opposites is common to many traditions and in Pali Buddhism finds expression in the First Utterance, but which is merely one example among several the Pali canon contains of the philosophical rightness of adopting the mean between two opposing extremes. The First Sermon also defines the four truths of ill, or the unsatisfactoriness and suffering which possesses every compounded thing. It is because these truths are not understood or grasped that there is this long long faring-on (in saṃsāra) “both for me and for you” (Vin.1.230). Ill has to be eradicated by cutting off its root, ignorant craving, before recurrent birth, again-becoming, punabbhava, can be stopped, and deathlessness won.

Then, the young men are told, in a passage that with the passing of time has become controversial, that they should seek, gaveseyyātha, the self, attānam (singular). Anyone acquainted with the importance of Atman, self, in the Upaniṣads might be inclined to think that this was the greatest of all philosophical concepts in Ancient India. Various passages in the Pali canon, including the Attavagga of the Dhammapada, should not be ignored in estimating the position of it as a philosophical concept in Early Buddhism. The Second Utterance, for example, lays the idea of self beside that of not-self when it says in its opening words: rūpaṃ bhikkhave anattā, rūpaṃ ca h’idam bhikkhave attā abhaviṣṣa, “material shape (or body), monks, is not self, for if, monks, material shape had been self ...” and similarly of the four other khandhas: if they had been self they would not be as we know them: impermanent, suffering and liable to alteration. Everything that is compounded or constructed is not-self. What is constructed is to be escaped from (Ud.p.80); and the self is to be sought (Vin.1.23), that self which therefore by inference is not made, is not compounded, and which is unaffected by kamma, the deeds or actions done in a series of individual lives while the being is bound to saṃsāra, satto saṃsāraṃ āpādi (Sn.i.38).

The message of the Third Utterance is that if one turns away from feelings of pleasure and pain derived from the impingement of the sixfold sensory data on their appropriate sense-organs, then one knows that one is freed and comprehends that birth (rebirth) is destroyed, the walk to the Highest is brought to a close, done is what was to be done, and there is now no more of being this or that (Vin.1.34-35). The content of this Disquisition on Burning is purely philosophical.

Nor will the various allusions to cause and dependent origination be missed. The whole system was based on cause: if this comes to be that will come to be. Discipline therefore will lead to something not yet existing for the man who is earnestly training in it and cultivating it. The Buddha would not have spent so much time in laying down rules and precepts unless he had thought they would be effective in the quest for the goal.

At the top of each right hand page the chapter number and paragraph number of each Section are given.¹ The figures in heavy type in square brackets in the body of the text refer to the page numbers of Oldenberg's Vinaya Piṭakam, Volume I, and are placed so as to mark the end of each such page.

I gratefully acknowledge the care and attention given by the Burleigh Press to the production of this volume.

I.B. HORNER.

London, February, 1951.

¹ Note by Sujato: These remarks do not apply to the SuttaCentral edition.

1. GOING FORTH (PABBAJJĀ)

Praise to the Lord, the Perfected One, the Fully Self-Awakened One

ON AWAKENING

Kd.1.1.1

Vin.1.1

BD.4.1

At one time¹ the awakened one, the Lord, being recently fully awakened, was staying at Uruvelā on the bank of the river Nerañjarā at the foot of the Tree of Awakening.² Then the Lord sat cross-legged in one (posture)³ for seven days at the foot of the Tree of Awakening⁴ experiencing the bliss of freedom.⁵

Kd.1.1.2

Then the Lord during the first watch of the night paid attention to⁶ causal uprising in direct and reverse order: conditioned by ignorance⁷ are the habitual tendencies⁸; conditioned by the habitual tendencies is consciousness⁹; conditioned by consciousness is psycho-physicality¹⁰; conditioned by psycho-physicality are the six (sense-) spheres; conditioned by the six (sense-) spheres is awareness¹¹; conditioned by awareness is feeling; conditioned by feeling¹ is craving; conditioned by craving is grasping; conditioned by grasping is becoming; conditioned by becoming is birth; conditioned by birth, old age and dying, grief, sorrow and lamentation, suffering, dejection and despair come into being.

¹ From here to the end of Kd.1.2.3 cf. Ud.p.1. I largely follow translation at Verses of Uplift, which also see for notes. ² bodhirukkha is the Bo-tree, ficus religiosa. Vin-a.952 says “bodhi is knowledge of the four ways; the lord attained that awakening here, so the tree acquired the name of the tree of awakening.” Cf. MN-a.iii.326 and MN-a.i.54. ³ eka-pallaṅkena. ⁴ bodhirukkhamūle; cf. bodhiyā mūle at Ps.i.174=Mnd.458; and bodhimūle at Snp-a.32, Snp-a.391. ⁵ vimuttisukha. ⁶ manasākāsi, worked with the mind. ⁷ The “causal chain” occurs, with explanations of its terms, at SN.ii.1ff. See also MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.76ff. ⁸ sankhāra. ⁹ viññāṇa. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.77, p.150; Indian Religion and Survival, p.66; Original Gospel, p.63, p.112, p.114; Dialogues of the Buddha ii, 2nd edition, Preface, p.ix for the view that viññāṇa has a meaning of “man as surviving.” ¹⁰ nāmarūpa, name and shape. ¹¹ phassa, perhaps contact. It is the known or realised impingement of a sense-datum on its appropriate sense-organ.

BD.4.2

Such is the arising of this entire mass of ill. But from the utter fading away and stopping of this very ignorance (comes) the stopping of habitual tendencies; from the stopping of habitual tendencies the stopping of consciousness; from the stopping of consciousness² the stopping of psycho-physicality; from the stopping of psycho-physicality the stopping of the six (sense-) spheres; from the stopping of the six (sense-) spheres the stopping of awareness; from the stopping of awareness the stopping of feeling; from the stopping of feeling the stopping of craving; from the stopping of craving the stopping of grasping; from the stopping of grasping the stopping of becoming; from the stopping of becoming the stopping of birth; from the stopping of birth, old age and dying, grief, sorrow and lamentation, suffering, dejection and despair are stopped. Such is the stopping of this entire mass of ill.

Vin.1.2

Kd.1.1.3

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

“Truly, when things³ grow plain to the ardent meditating brahmin,
His doubts all vanish
in that he comprehends thing-with-cause.”

Kd.1.1.4

Then the Lord during the middle watch of the night paid attention to causal uprising in direct and reverse order: conditioned by ignorance are the habitual tendencies; conditioned by the habitual tendencies is consciousness ... Such is the arising ... Such is the stopping of this entire mass of ill.

Kd.1.1.5

¹ From here to “dejection and despair come into being”, cf. DN.i.45. ² From here to the end of the paragraph cf. DN.ii.35. ³ dhammā. According to Vin-a.954-5 the (thirty-seven) things helpful to awakening and the four ariyan true things. These last are not necessarily the four truths of ill, for see AN.v.56 (the four stations of mindfulness) and Minor Anthologies 1, Introduction, p.2ff. But see also Points of Controversy, p.118, n.1. This verse and the two following occur at Kv.186.

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

“Truly, when things grow plain
to the ardent meditating brahmin,
His doubts all vanish
in that he discerns destruction of cause.”

Kd.1.1.6

BD.4.3

Then the Lord during the last watch of the night paid attention to causal uprising in direct and reverse order: conditioned by ignorance are the habitual tendencies; conditioned by the habitual tendencies is consciousness ... Such is the arising ... Such is the stopping of this entire mass of ill.

Kd.1.1.7

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

“Truly, when things grow plain
to the ardent meditating brahmin,
Routing the host of Māra does he stand
Like as the sun when lighting up the sky.”

*Told is the Talk on Awakening.*¹

AT THE GOATHERDS' BANYAN TREE

Kd.1.2.1

Then the Lord, having emerged from that contemplation at the end of seven days, approached the Goatherds' Banyan² from the foot of the Tree of Awakening; having approached, he sat cross-legged in one (posture) for seven days at the foot of the Goatherds' Banyan experiencing the bliss of freedom.

Kd.1.2.2

Then a certain brahmin of the class uttering the sound *hum*³ approached the Lord; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, that brahmin spoke thus to the Lord: “To what extent, good Gotama, does one become a brahmin? And again, what are the things which make a brahmin¹?”

¹ This is probably an abbreviation for “Told is the Talk at the Tree of Awakening”: see titles of 2, 3 and 4. ² Although Ud-a.51 gives two more possible explanations for this name than Vin-a.957, both agree that goatherds used to come and sit in the shade of this tree.

³ huhunīkajātiko brāhmaṇo. See Journal of the Pali Text Society, 1901, p.42, and Verses of Uplift, p.3, n. Vin-a.957 calls him one who believes in omens that are seen, ditṭhamangalika, and who walks about making: (the sound) hum from arrogance and in anger.

Vin.1.3

Kd.1.2.3

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

BD.4.4

“That brahmin who bars out evil things, not uttering the sound *hum*², with no impurity, curbed-of-self,
Master of Vedas³, who lives the Brahma-faring—this is the brahmin who may rightly speak the Brahma-speech⁴
Who has no blemishes⁵ anywhere in the world⁶.”

Told is the Talk at the Goatherds’

ON MUCALINDA

Kd.1.3.1

Then the Lord, at the end of seven days, having emerged from that contemplation, approached the Mucalinda (tree) from the foot of the Goatherds’ Banyan; having approached, he sat cross-legged in one (posture) for seven days at the foot of the Mucalinda experiencing the bliss of freedom.

Kd.1.3.2

¹ brāhmaṇa-karaṇā. Ud.3 reads -kārakā. ² nihuhuṅka. He is to give up having confidence in his superstitious omens and formulæ, and to believe instead in the new teaching. “Brahmin” came to mean, in this, the best and highest kind of man. ³ vedāntagū, as at Snp.463. Vin-a.958 says there has been a going either to the end by means of the “lores” (vedas, those called the knowledge of the four ways, or to the end of the three Vedas. ⁴ dhammena so brāhmaṇo brahmāvādāṃ vadeyya. Vin-a.958=Ud-a.55 take this to mean he can rightly say “I am a brahmin”. MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.85, translates brahmavāda by “Brahma-faith”, with a note, p.84, that vāda is equally to be rendered by -cult or -teaching. ⁵ ussāda, prominence, excrescence; conceit, arrogance. Vin-a.958=Ud-a.55 give five: passion, hatred, stupidity, pride, false view. Snp-a.ii.521 gives seven, enumerated at Snp-a.ii.425 as the five of Vin-a and Ud-a. With the addition of the obstructions and wrong conduct. See my Early Buddhist Theory of Man Perfected, p.262 and p.265, n.2. ⁶ This verse occurs at Ud.p.3, Ne.150. Last line = last line of Snp.783.

Now at that time¹ a great storm arose out of due season, for seven days there was rainy weather, cold winds and overcast skies. Then Mucalinda, the serpent king, having come forth from his own haunt, having encircled the Lord's body seven times with his coils, having spread a great hood over his head, stood saying: "Let no cold (annoy) the Lord, let no heat (annoy) the Lord, let not the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind and heat or creeping things (annoy) the Lord."

Kd.1.3.3

Then Mucalinda, the serpent king, at the end of those² seven days, having known that the sky³ was clear and without a cloud, having unwound his coils from the Lord's body, having given up his own form and assumed a youth's form, stood in front of the Lord honouring the Lord with joined palms.

Kd.1.3.4

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this (solemn) utterance:

BD.4.5

"Happy his solitude who glad at heart
Hath dhamma learnt and doth the vision see!
Happy is that benignity towards
The world which on no creature worketh harm.

Happy the absence of all lust, th' ascent
Past and beyond the needs of sense-desires.
He who doth crush the great 'I am' conceit—
This, truly this, is happiness supreme."

Told is the Talk at the Mucalinda

AT THE RĀJĀYATANA TREE

Kd.1.4.1

Then the Lord, at the end of seven days, having emerged from that contemplation, approached the Rājāyatana⁴ from the foot of the Mucalinda; having ¹ Kd.1.2.3 to Kd.1.2.5=Ud.2.1, Mucalindavagga; verses quoted Kv.212, see Points of Controversy, 129, n.3 for further references. ² tassa, omitted at Vin.1.3, but found at Ud.10. ³ deva.

⁴ Name of a tree. Called by MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.80, "Kingstead tree." See Vinaya Texts, i.81, note.

approached, he sat cross-legged in one (posture) for seven days at the foot of the Rājāyatana experiencing the bliss of freedom.

Kd.1.4.2

Now at that time¹ the merchants Tapussa² and Bhallika were going along the high-road from Ukkalā to that district.³ Then a devatā who was a blood-relation of the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika spoke thus to the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika: “My good fellows, this Lord, having just (become) wholly awakened, is staying at the foot of the Rājāyatana, go and serve that Lord with barley-gruel⁴ and honey-balls, and this will be a blessing and happiness for you for a long time.”

Vin.1.4

Then the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika, taking barley-gruel and honey-balls, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they stood at a respectful distance. As they were standing at a respectful distance, the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord receive our barley-gruel and honey-balls, that this may be a blessing and happiness for us for a long time.”

Kd.1.4.3

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Truth-finders⁵ do not receive with their hands. Now with what shall I receive the barley-gruel and honey-balls?” Then the four Great Kings, knowing with their minds the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, from the four quarters presented the Lord with four bowls made of rock crystal, saying: “Lord, let the Lord receive the barley-gruel and honey-balls herein.” The Lord received the barley-gruel and the honey-balls in a new⁶ bowl made of rock crystal, and having received them he partook of them.

Kd.1.4.4

BD.4.6

Then the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika, having found that the Lord had removed his hand from the bowl, having inclined their heads towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “We, Lord, are those going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma; let the Lord accept us as lay-disciples gone

Kd.1.4.5

¹ Cf. Ja.i.80f. ² Chief of the disciples who first came for refuge, AN.i.26; included in a list of eminent householders and upāsakas at AN.iii.450–451. Bhalliy(k)a has a verse at Thag.7, while Thag-a.50 gives in outline the story of their ministering to the Lord. ³ According to Vin-a.959, the Middle District (or Country) where the Lord was staying. ⁴ mantha, defined at Vin.4.80, see BD.2.324. ⁵ Further Dialogues of the Buddha 1.118, n.4, claims that “the first use of the term Tathāgata in the Buddha’s life-history” occurs at MN.i.168. ⁶ paccagghe. Vin-a.960 says this usually means very costly; but it can mean, as here, quite new and quite hot (abbhūṇha), produced at that very moment.

for refuge for life from this day forth.” Thus these came to be the first lay-disciples in the world using the two-word formula.¹

Told is the Talk at the Rājāyatana

ON THE INVITATION OF BRAHMĀ

Kd.1.5.1

Then the Lord, having emerged from that contemplation at the end of seven days, approached the Goatherds’ Banyan from the foot of the Rājāyatana; having approached, the Lord stayed there at the foot of the Goatherds’ Banyan.

Kd.1.5.2

Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus:² “This dhamma, won to by me, is deep, difficult to see, difficult to understand, peaceful, excellent, beyond dialectic, subtle, intelligible to the learned.³ But this is a creation delighting in sensual pleasure,⁴ delighted by sensual pleasure, rejoicing in sensual pleasure. So that for a creation delighting in sensual pleasure, delighted by sensual pleasure, rejoicing in sensual pleasure, this were a matter difficult to see, that is to say causal uprising by way of cause. This too were a matter very difficult to see,⁵ that is to say the calming of all the habitual tendencies, the renunciation of all attachment, the destruction of craving, dispassion, stopping, nibbāna. And so if I were to teach dhamma and others were not to understand me, this would be a weariness to me, this would be a vexation to me.”

Vin.1.5

BD.4.7

Kd.1.5.3

And further, these verses not heard before in the past occurred spontaneously to the Lord:

“This that through many toils I’ve won—
Enough! Why should I make it known?
By folk with lust and hate consumed

¹ dvevācīkā, i.e. bhagavā (and not, as at some time became usual, buddha) and dhamma, there being at that time no saṅgha. ² For the Great Hesitation, cf. SN.i.136, DN.ii.36, MN.i.167, and see KS.i.171, Dialogues of the Buddha ii.29f. and Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.118 for notes. See also MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.73ff. ³ Quoted at Bv-a.9. ⁴ ālaya, what is clung to, “habit.” But Vin-a.961 = MN-a.ii.174 explain by the five strands of sense-pleasure. ⁵ suddasa, as at Dh.36.

This dhamma is not understood.¹

Leading on against the stream²,
 Subtle, deep, difficult to see, delicate,
 Unseen 'twill be by passion's slaves
 Cloaked in the murk of ignorance."³

In such wise, as the Lord pondered, his mind inclined to little effort⁴ and not to teaching dhamma. Then it occurred to Brahmā Sahampati,⁵ knowing with his mind the reasoning in the Lord's mind: "Alas,⁶ the world is lost,⁷ alas, the world is destroyed, inasmuch as the mind of the Truth-finder, the perfected one, the fully awakened one, inclines to little effort and not to teaching dhamma."

Kd.1.5.4

Then as a strong man might stretch forth his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did Brahmā Sahampati, vanishing from the Brahma-world, become manifest before the Lord.⁸

Kd.1.5.5

Then Brahmā Sahampati, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having stooped his right knee to the ground having saluted the Lord with joined palms, spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, let the Lord teach dhamma, let the Well-farer teach dhamma; there are beings with little dust in their eyes who, not hearing dhamma, are decaying, (but if) they are learners of dhamma, they will grow."⁹

Kd.1.5.6

BD.4.8

¹ Cf. Snp.764. ² paṭisotagāmin, against the stream up to the source (nibbāna), not with the stream, for that leads to dangerous whirlpools and waves in a pool (here in an unfavourable sense) lower down. Vin-a.962 says that paṭisota is called nibbāna. A stream can be a River of Life or a River of Death, according as to whether one goes against the current, striving with hands and feet, or with the current. Cf. LAMOTTE, Vol. I, p.59, n.1. ³ This translation follows that at Dialogues of the Buddha ii.30, with the important exception that paṭisotagāmin is not "against the stream of common thought." Verse also found at MN.i.168, DN.ii.38, SN.i.136; Mahāvastu iii.314, Lalitavistara, edited LEFMANN, p.397. ⁴ appossukkatā, indifference, "rest quiet" (Further Dialogues of the Buddha, i.118), "to be averse from exertion" (KS.i.173), "to remain quiet" (Vinaya Texts, i.85). ⁵ A Great Brahmā. ⁶ vata bho. ⁷ Quoted Bv-a.10. ⁸ For this paragraph and the beginning of the next, see AN.ii.21, ⁹ Quoted Bv-a.10. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Dialogues of the Buddha ii, 2nd edition, Preface, xii. Also her Note to Gotama the Man (added in 1938) where she says, "The only rational translation (of aññātāro bhavissanti) is that 'they who come to know (i.e. the dhamma you should teach), will come to be, will become, that is will grow. Thus rendered the last clause balances the opposed clause, that men are in a decline."

Kd.1.5.7

Thus spoke Brahmā Sahampati; having said this, he further spoke thus:¹

“There has appeared in Magadha before thee
An unclean dhamma by impure minds devised.
Open this door of deathlessness, let² them hear
Dhamma awakened to by the stainless one.

“As on a crag on crest of mountain standing
A man might watch the people far below,
E’en so do thou, O Wisdom fair, ascending,
O Seer of all, the terraced heights of truth,³
Look down, from grief released, upon the peoples
Sunken in grief, oppressed with birth and age.

“Arise, thou hero! Conqueror in the battle!
Thou freed from debt! Man of the caravan!
Walk the world over, let the Blessed One Teach dhamma. They who learn will grow.”⁴

When he had spoken thus, the Lord spoke thus to Brahmā Sahampati: “Brahmā, it occurred to me: ‘This dhamma penetrated by me is deep ... that would be a vexation to me.’ And further, Brahmā, these verses not heard before in the past occurred spontaneously to me: ‘This that through many toils I’ve won ... cloaked in the murk of ignorance.’ In such wise, Brahmā, as I pondered, my mind inclined to little effort and not to teaching dhamma.”

Then a second time did Brahmā Sahampati speak thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord teach dhamma ... if they are learners of dhamma, they will grow.”
Then a second time did the Lord speak thus to Brahmā Sahampati: “But, Brahmā, it occurred to me: ... my mind inclined to little effort and and not to teaching dhamma.”

Then a third time did Brahmā Sahampati speak thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord teach dhamma ... if they are learners of dhamma, they will grow.” Then the Lord, having understood Brahmā’s entreaty and, out of compassion for beings, surveyed the world with the eye of an awakened one. As the Lord was surveying the world with the eye of an awakened one, he saw beings with little dust in their eyes, with much dust in their eyes, with acute faculties, with dull faculties, of good dispositions, of bad dispositions, docile, indocile, few seeing fear in sins and the worlds beyond.¹

¹ As at MN.i.168, SN.i.137; quoted Bv-a.10. For references to parallel Sanskrit, Chinese and Tibetan Texts, see LAMOTTE, Traité de la Grande Veriu de Sagesse, vol.1, p.57, n.1. ² To end of this verse = Snp.384. ³ dhammamaya pāsāda; cf. paññāpāsāda at Dh.p.28. ⁴ Second part of verses taken from MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.82. The Dīgha version omits the first four lines. Last four lines at SN.i.234.

Kd.1.5.11

Even as in² a pond of blue lotuses or in a pond of red lotuses or in a pond of white lotuses, a few blue or red or white lotuses are born in the water, grow in the water, do not rise above the water but thrive while altogether immersed; a few blue or red or white lotuses are born in the water, grow in the water and reach to the surface of the water; a few blue or red or white lotuses are born in the water, grow in the water, and stand up rising out of the water, undefiled by the water.

Kd.1.1.12

Even so, did the Lord, surveying the world with the eye of an awakened one, see beings with little dust in their eyes, with much dust in their eyes, with acute faculties, with dull faculties, of good dispositions, of bad dispositions, docile, indocile, few seeing fear in sins and the worlds beyond. Seeing Brahmā Sahampati, he addressed him with verses:

Vin.1.7

“Open for those who hear are the doors of deathlessness³;
let them renounce their faith⁴.

Thinking of useless fatigue, I have not preached, Brahmā, the sublime and excellent dhamma to men⁵.”

Kd.1.5.13
BD.4.10

Then Brahmā Sahampati, thinking: “The opportunity was made by me for the Lord to teach dhamma,”⁶ greeting the Lord, keeping his right side towards him, vanished then and there.⁷

¹ paralokavajjabhayadassāvino, Vin-a.963 saying that these are those who see by fear (bhayato) the world(s) beyond and sin. ² Cf. DN.i.75, MN.iii.93, SN.i.138. ³ Vin-a.963 calls this “the noble Way”, ariyamagga. The “quest” in folklore and in the great religious traditions alike is for immortality, the undying. Early Buddhism is in line with these traditions. ⁴ saddhā must refer to their (own, Vin-a.963) present wrong beliefs. ⁵ Verse also at DN.ii.39, MN.i.169, SN.i.138; and cf. Mahāvastu iii.319; Lalitavistara, p.400. See discussion on some of the expressions found in the verse by LAMOTTE, Vol. I, p.60, n.1. ⁶ From the beginning of the verses to here is quoted at Bv-a.18. ⁷ tatth’eva can mean “as before”; if it does so here, it would mean by the same method of vanishing from the Brahma-world as in Kd.1.5.5 above.

Told is the Talk on Brahmā's Entreaty

ON THE GROUP OF FIVE

Kd.1.6.1

Then it occurred to the Lord: "Now, to whom should I first teach dhamma? Who will understand this dhamma quickly?" Then it occurred to the Lord: "Indeed, this Āḷāra the Kālāma¹ is learned, experienced, wise, and for a long time has had little dust in his eyes. Suppose I were to teach dhamma first to Āḷāra the Kālāma? He will understand this dhamma quickly."

Kd.1.6.2

But then an invisible devatā announced to the Lord: "Lord, Āḷāra the Kālāma passed away seven days ago." And the knowledge arose to the Lord that Āḷāra the Kālāma had passed away seven days ago. Then it occurred to the Lord: "Āḷāra the Kālāma was of great intelligence. If he had heard this dhamma, he would have understood it quickly."

Kd.1.6.3

Then it occurred to the Lord: "Now, to whom should I first teach dhamma? Who will understand this dhamma quickly?" Then it occurred to the Lord: "Indeed, this Uddaka, Rāma's son,² is learned, experienced, wise, and for a long time has had little dust in his eyes. Suppose I were to teach dhamma first to Uddaka, Rāma's son? He will understand this dhamma quickly."

Kd.1.6.4

But then an invisible devatā announced to the Lord: "Lord, Uddaka, Rāma's son, passed away last night." And the knowledge arose to the Lord that Uddaka, Rāma's son, had passed away last night. Then it occurred to the Lord: "Uddaka, Rāma's son, was of great intelligence. If he had heard this dhamma, he would have understood it quickly."

BD.4.11

Kd.1.6.5

Then it occurred to the Lord: "Now, to whom should I first teach dhamma? Who will understand this dhamma quickly?" Then it occurred to the Lord:

Vin.1.8

¹ The teacher to whom, according to the biographical record (also preserved in the Ariya-pariyesanā Sutta, MN 26.), Gotama first went for instruction after he had gone forth (from home into homelessness). ² According to the same account, the teacher to whom Gotama went next when he had mastered Āḷāra's teaching. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism. 57ff. for some remarks on both these teachers, and E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.184. Mi.236 says that Āḷāra and Uddaka were Gotama's fourth and fifth teachers; and Thig-a.2 that he went first to Bhaggava (not mentioned at Mi.236).

“That group of five monks¹ who waited on me when I was self-resolute in striving² were very helpful. Suppose I were to teach dhamma first to the group of five monks?”

Kd.1.6.6

Then it occurred to the Lord: “But where is this group of five monks staying at present?³ Then the Lord with deva-vision, purified and surpassing that of men, saw the group of five monks staying near Benares at Isipatana in the deer-park. Then the Lord, having stayed at Uruvelā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Benares.

Kd.1.6.7

Upaka, a Naked Ascetic,⁴ saw the Lord going along the highroad between Gayā and the (Tree of) Awakening; seeing him, he spoke thus to the Lord: “Your reverence, your sense-organs are quite pure, your complexion very bright, very clear. On account of whom have you, your reverence, gone forth, or who is your teacher, or whose dhamma do you profess?”

Kd.1.6.8

When this had been said, the Lord addressed Upaka, the Naked Ascetic, in verses:⁵

“Victorious over all, omniscient am I,
Among all things undefiled,
Leaving all, through death of craving freed,
By knowing for myself, whom should I follow?⁶

“For me there is no teacher,
One like me does not exist,
In the world with its devas
No one equals me.⁷

BD.4.12

“For I am perfected in the world,
The teacher supreme am I,⁸
I alone am all-awakened,⁹
Become cool am I, nibbāna-attained.

¹ Añña-Koṇḍañña, Bhaddiya, Vappa, Mahānāma, Assaji, as below BD.6.31ff. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names; MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, 62f.; and “Unknown Co-founders of Buddhism”, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society 1927. ² padhānapahitattam. ³ Quoted at Bv-a.18. ⁴ ājivika, “man of the livelihood”, Buddhist India, p.143. At Divyāvadāna 393 Upaka appears to be called Upaganena. ⁵ Verses also at MN.i.171; quoted at Kv.289; Thig-a.220. ⁶ This verse = Dhp.353. ⁷ This verse is quoted at Mi.235. Cf. also Mahāvastu iii.326. ⁸ Cf. Snp.179. ⁹ Or, “I am unique, the all-awakened.”

“To turn the dhamma-wheel
 I go to Kasi’s city,
 Beating the drum of deathlessness
 In a world that’s blind become.”

Kd.1.6.9

“According to what you claim, your reverence, you ought to be¹ victor of the unending²” (Upaka said).

“Like me, they are victors indeed,
 Who have won to destruction of the cankers;
 Vanquished by me are evil things,
 Therefore am I, Upaka, a victor.”³

When this had been said, Upaka, the Naked Ascetic, having said, “It may be (so),¹ your reverence,” having shaken his head,² went off taking a different road.

¹ arah’asi, also meaning “you deserve to be, are worthy or fit to be”. There is also the reading arahā asi, as at Kv.289, and see Psalms of the Sisters, 129f. ² anantajina. Vin-a.964 merely says “You are set on becoming a victor of the unending.” Ananta, the unending, may refer to dhamma, also to nibbāna. ³ This verse and Upaka’s remarks are quoted at Kv.289.

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course approached Benares, the deer-park of Isipatana, the group of five monks. The group of five monks saw the Lord coming in the distance; seeing him, they agreed among themselves, saying: “Your reverences, this recluse Gotama is coming, he lives in abundance, he is wavering in his striving, he has reverted to a life of abundance.³ He should neither be greeted, nor stood up for, nor should his bowl and robe be received; all the same a seat may be put out, he can sit down if he wants to.”

Kd.1.6.10
BD.4.13

Vin.1.9

Kd.1.6.11

But as the Lord gradually approached this group of five monks, so this

¹ hupeyya. MN.i.171, Snp-a.258, Thig-a.220 read huveyya (which is interchangeable with hupeyya). It is a dialectical form of bhaveyya. According to B.M. BARUA, The Ājīvikas, p.50, it is an expression found in the “Ājīvika language” and “is not a recognised Pali word.” He translates “perhaps it may be so,” Oldenberg “it may be so,” Chalmers, preserving the patois, “mebbe” E.J. THOMAS, The Life of Buddha, p.83, “would that it might be so”, Dictionary of Pali Proper Names (under Upaka) “it may be so”; while MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, To Become or not to Become, p.85, would prefer “may he become”, the “he” referring to the man, every man, to whom Gotama was prepared to teach his message. She suggests that he will have rehearsed this message to Upaka, and maintains that what has survived—“a glaringly imperfect misrepresentation”—makes omission and glossing all but certain. ² I think that as the text stands, had Upaka been convinced or even interested he would not have departed by a different road (ummagga, also meaning the wrong road). It is perhaps odd that this episode, if it shows disagreement, is presumed to have occurred at the beginning of Gotama ministry. But it may be included to emphasize his determination to preach first of all to the “five” in accordance with his decision; or to show that Upaka spoke somewhat as a prophet—in the “key”, below, BD.4.127, he is called Upako isi, Upaka the seer. According to Thig-a.220f., when Upaka was an old man, tormented by his wife’s gibes, he sought Gotama and went forth into homelessness; he then soon attained the stage of non-returning and died. From this account it does not appear that he had had any great urge earlier to become one of Gotama’s disciples.

In the translation above I have put a slight bias on three words, each of which admits of more than one rendering, so as to mark consistently what seems to me to be Upaka’s apparent failure to be convinced: (1) arahasi = (a) you ought to be (slightly contemptuous), (b) you are worthy to be (respectful); (2) huveyya, discussed in preceding note; (3) sisam okampetvā, having shaken his head. Okampeti may mean, according to Pali-English Dictionary, both to wag and to shake. Indians shake their heads from side to side to show disagreement, but wag them up and down to show agreement. ³ bahulla. As MRS. RHYS DAVIDS observes. Manual of Buddhism, 69, this means literally “muchness”, Vin-a.964 taking it to mean abundance of robes, etc.

group of five monks, not adhering to their own agreement, having gone towards the Lord, one received his bowl and robe, one made ready a seat, one brought water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand.¹ The Lord sat down on the seat made ready, and the Lord, while he was sitting down, washed his feet.² Further, they addressed the Lord by name and with the epithet of “your reverence.”³

Kd.1.6.12

When this had been said, the Lord spoke thus to the group of five monks: “Do not, monks, address a Truthfinder by name, and with the epithet ‘your reverence’. A Truthfinder, monks, is a perfected one, a fully awakened one. Give ear, monks, the deathless has been found; I instruct, I teach dhamma. Going along in accordance with what has been enjoined, having soon realised here and now by your own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring⁴ for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, you will abide in it.”

Kd.1.6.13

BD.4.14

When this had been said, the group of five monks spoke thus to the Lord: “But you, reverend Gotama, did not come to a state of further-men,⁵ to the eminence of truly ariyan vision of knowledge, by this conduct, by this course, by this practice of austerities. So how can you now come to a state of further-men, to the eminence of the truly ariyan vision of knowledge, when you live in abundance, are wavering in striving, and have reverted to a life of abundance?”

Kd.1.6.14

When this had been said, the Lord spoke thus to the group of five monks: “A Truthfinder, monks, does not live in abundance, he does not waver in striving, he does not revert to a life of abundance. A Truthfinder, monks, is a perfected one, a fully awakened one. Give ear, monks, the deathless has been found; I instruct, I teach dhamma. Going along in accordance with what has been enjoined, having soon realised here and now by your own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, you will abide in it.”

Kd.1.6.15

And a second time did the group of five monks speak thus to the Lord ... And a second time did the Lord speak thus to the group of five monks ...

¹ Cf. Vin.4.231, Vin.4.310; see BD.3.191. ² As at MN.ii.139. ³ āvusovādena. ⁴ At MN.i.197, MN.i.201, this goal is said to be unshakeable freedom of mind. ⁵ Cf. Bu-Pj.4 (and see BD.1, Introduction, p.xxiv).

And a third time did the group of five monks speak thus to the Lord: “But you, reverend Gotama, did not come to a state of further-men ... by this practice of austerities ... to a life of abundance?”

Vin.1.10

When this had been said, the Lord spoke thus to the group of five monks: “Do you allow, monks, that I have never spoken¹ to you like this before?”

Kd.1.6.16

“You have not, Lord.”

“A Truthfinder, monks, is a perfected one, a fully awakened one. Give ear ... you will abide in it.” And the Lord was able to convince the group of five monks.² Then the group of five monks listened to the Lord again, gave ear to him and aroused their minds for profound knowledge.³

Kd.1.6.17

BD.4.15

Then⁴ the Lord addressed the group of five monks, saying: “These⁵ two (dead) ends,⁶ monks, should not be followed by one who has gone forth. Which two? That which is, among sense-pleasures, addiction to attractive sense-pleasures, low, of the villager,⁷ of the average man,⁸ unariyan, not connected with the goal⁹; and that which is addiction to self-torment, ill, unariyan, not connected with the goal. Now, monks, without adopting either of these two (dead) ends, there is a middle course, fully awakened to by the Truthfinder, making for vision,¹⁰ making for knowledge, which conduces to calming,¹¹ to super-knowledge,¹² to awakening,¹³ to nibbāna.

Kd.1.6.18

¹ bhāsitaṃ. MN.1.172 reads vabbhācitaṃ. Vin-a.965 and MN-a.ii.191 explain by vākyabhedaṃ.

² From here the Majjhima version diverges. ³ aññācittaṃ upaṭṭhāpesuṃ; cf. DN.i.230, DN.1231. ⁴ Cf. SN.v.420. ⁵ See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.109, for a literal translation of the First Utterance, and a discussion of many of its terms; also E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.87. This Utterance given at SN.iv.330, SN.v.420, and the “middle course” part of it at MN.i.15, to whose Commentary (MN-a.i.104f.) Vin-a.965 refers. ⁶ anta is end, then contrast, extreme, opposite, side. See Manual of Buddhism, p.118, for discussion of the meaning. SN-a.iii.297 explains by koṭṭhāsā, parts, divisions. MN-a.i.104 says “the Way does not lead to, does not approach these sides, it is freed from these sides, therefore it is called the middle course.” The “mean” between two extremes also found at SN.ii.17, SN.ii.20, SN.ii.61, SN.iii.135. ⁷ gammo. Another debatable term. I follow SN-a.iii.297 (cf. AN-a.iii.360) whose explanation is gāma-vāsīnaṃ santako, belonging to village dwellers; meaning I think more “common” than “pagan”, by both of which it has been rendered. “Boorish” would be better. ⁸ pothujaniko, ordinary, of the many-folk, the “blind” and fools. ⁹ anattasamhita, defined at MN-a.iii.110 as na vuḍḍhinissita, not bent on growth. ¹⁰ According to MN-a.i.104 vision of the knowledge of the truths. ¹¹ Of passion, etc., MN-a.1.104, AN-a.iii.360; of the corruptions, SN-a.iii.297. ¹² abhiññā, of the four truths, MN-a and SN-a. ¹³ MN-a.i.104 says that awakening is the Way, sambodho ti maggo.

“And what, monks, is this middle course fully awakened to by the Truthfinder, making for vision, making for knowledge, which conduces to calming, to super-knowledge, to awakening, to nibbāna? It is this ariyan eightfold Way itself, that is to say: right view, right thought, right speech, right action, right mode of living, right endeavour, right mindfulness, right concentration.¹ This, monks, is the middle course, fully awakened to by the Truthfinder, making for vision, making for knowledge, which conduces to calming, to super-knowledge to awakening, to nibbāna.”

BD.4.16

Kd.1.6.19

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of ill: birth is ill, and old age is ill and disease is ill and dying is ill, association with what is not dear is ill, separation from what is dear is ill, not getting what one wants is ill—in short the five groups of grasping are ill.”

Kd.1.6.20

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill:² that which is craving connected with again-becoming, accompanied by delight and passion, finding delight in this and that, that is to say: craving for sense-pleasures, craving for becoming, craving for de-becoming.³”

Kd.1.6.21

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill: the utter and passionless stopping of that very craving, its renunciation, surrender, release, the lack of pleasure in it.⁴”

Kd.1.6.22

“And this, monks, is the ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill⁵: this ariyan eightfold Way itself, that is to say: right view ... right concentration.”

Vin.1.11

Kd.1.6.23

¹ A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Hinduism and Buddhism, p.69, uses “composure” for samādhi, and elsewhere “synthesis.” MN-a.i.105 gives the interpretations which the Ancients, porāṇa, used to put upon the eight “fitnesses” of the Way: “the way of insight is right view, the way of thorough furthering, abhiniropana, is right thought, the way of equanimity is right concentration.” The gaps may be filled up from what follows at MN-a.i.105. ² This paragraph is debated at Kv.488–489. ³ vi-bhava, meanings ascribed: (1) wealth, property, prosperity; (2) non-becoming, ceasing (although there is the word a-bhava); (3) more becoming, more births. Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.214 “annihilation.” See also Dialogues of the Buddha ii.340, note. I think it means, with taṇhā, craving or thirst, the longing for sensations to come and go, rise and fall. LAMOTTE, Le Traité de la Grande Vertu de Sagesse, vol.1, p.3, n.4, translates these three cravings (taṇhā) as cravings for plaisir, existence, impermanence. ⁴ anālaya. On ālaya, pleasure (clinging, abode, habit) see above, BD.4.6. Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.214 “ejection”, Dialogues of the Buddha iii.298 “aversion from.” SN-a.iii.112 defines it in connection with kāma. ⁵ The “four truths of ill” are cited at Kv.290.

On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of ill’, among things not heard before by me, monks, vision arose, knowledge¹ arose, wisdom² arose, higher knowledge³ arose, light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is the ariyan truth of ill must be completely known’ ... ‘Now that which is the ariyan truth of ill is completely known’, among things not heard before by me, monks, vision arose, knowledge arose, wisdom arose, higher knowledge arose, light arose.

Kd.1.6.24

“On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill’ ... light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is this ariyan truth of the uprising of ill must be given up’⁴ ... ‘... is given up’ ... light arose.

BD.4.17

Kd.1.6.25

“On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill’ ... light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is this ariyan truth of the stopping of ill must be realized’ ... ‘... is realised’ ... light arose.

Kd.1.6.26

“On thinking, ‘This is the ariyan truth of the course going to the stopping of ill’ ... light arose. On thinking, ‘Now that which is this ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill must be made to become’ ... ‘... is made to become’ ... light arose.

Kd.1.6.27

“And so long, monks, the vision of knowledge of these four ariyan truths, with the three sections and twelve modes⁵ as they really are, was not well purified by me, so long was I, monks, not thoroughly awakened with the supreme full awakening as to the world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, with its recluses and brahmins, its creatures with devas and men. This I knew.

Kd.1.6.28

“But when, monks, the vision of knowledge of these four ariyan truths, with the three sections and twelve modes as they really are, was well purified by me, then was I, monks, thoroughly awakened with the supreme full awakening as to the world ... with its recluses and brahmins, its creatures with devas and men. This I knew.

Kd.1.6.29

“Moreover, the vision of knowledge arose in me: ‘Freedom of mind is for me unshakeable, this the last birth, there is not now again-becoming.’⁶”

¹ ñāṇa. ² paññā. ³ vijjā. We have nothing in English corresponding to the number Pali words for “knowledge.” ⁴ I.e. the craving or thirst (taṇhā) which leads to the uprising of ill must be given up. ⁵ Each of the four truths is treated as (1) a truth which (2) must be in some way responded to, and which (3) has been in that way responded to. ⁶ One of the formulae of arahanship.

Thus spoke the Lord; delighted, the group of five monks rejoiced in the Lord's utterance. Moreover, while this discourse¹ was being uttered, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the venerable Koṇḍañña that "whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop."

Kd.1.6.30

And when the Lord had rolled the dhamma-wheel, the earth devas made this sound heard²: "The supreme dhamma-wheel rolled thus by the Lord at Benares in the deer-park at Isipatana cannot be rolled back by a recluse or brahmin or deva or by Māra or by Brahmā or by anyone in the world." Having heard the sound of the earth devas, the devas of the Four Great Kings³ made this sound heard ... the Thirty devas ... Yama's devas ... the Happy devas ... the devas who delight in creation ... the devas who delight in the creation of others ... the devas of Brahmā's retinue made this sound heard: "The supreme dhamma-wheel rolled thus by the Lord at Benares in the deer-park at Isipatana cannot be rolled back by a recluse or brahmin or deva or by Māra or by Brahmā or by anyone in the world."

Vin.1.12

BD.4.18

Kd.1.6.31

In this wise in that moment, in that second, in that instant, the sound reached as far as the Brahma-world, and the ten thousandfold world-system⁴ trembled, quaked, shook violently and a radiance, splendid, measureless, surpassing the devas' own glory,⁵ was manifest in the world. Then the Lord uttered this solemn utterance: "Indeed, Koṇḍañña has understood, indeed, Koṇḍañña has understood." Thus it was that Aññata Koṇḍañña⁶ became the venerable Koṇḍañña's name.⁷

Kd.1.6.32

Then the venerable Aññata Koṇḍañña, having seen dhamma,⁸ attained dhamma,⁹ known dhamma,¹⁰ plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained without another's help to full confidence in the teacher's instruction,¹¹ spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ veyyākaraṇa, called at DN-a.130 a sutta (discourse) without verses. ² Cf. Vin.3.18-19 (BD.1.33). ³ I.e. the Regents of the four quarters. A longer list of devas is to be found at MN.i.289. ⁴ Cf. AN.i.227. ⁵ devānaṃ devānubhāvaṃ, cf. DN.ii.12, MN.iii.120. ⁶ aññāta meaning "who has understood". He is often called Añña Koṇḍañña. At AN.i.23 he is called "foremost of the disciples of long standing." Verses at Thag.673-688. For the view that Añña was his personal name, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Gotama the Man, p.102, GS.i.16, n.2, Verses of Uplift (Sacred Books of the Buddhists VIII), p.93, n.1. See too Ud-a.371, Psalm of the Bretheren, p.284. ⁷ Saṃyutta account breaks off here. ⁸ Saṃyutta account breaks off here. ⁹ Quoted Bv-a.13, the last two in reverse order. ¹⁰ Saṃyutta account breaks off here. ¹¹ Cf. DN.i.10,148; AN.iv.186; MN.i.234, MN.i.501.

“May I, Lord, receive the going forth¹ in the Lord’s presence, may I receive ordination?²”

“Come, monk³,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma. Fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be this venerable one’s ordination.

BD.4.19

Then the Lord exhorted, instructed those remaining monks with dhamma-talk. Then while they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma-talk, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the venerable Vappa⁴ and to the venerable Bhaddiya,⁵ that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

Kd.1.6.33

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma ... having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “May we, Lord, receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

Kd.1.6.34

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination.

Vin.1.13

Then the Lord, eating the food brought back by these,⁶ exhorted, instructed those remaining monks with dhamma-talk, saying: “Let the group of six⁷ live on whatever the three monks bring when they have walked for almsfood.”

Kd.1.6.35

Then while they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma-talk, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the venerable Mahānāma⁸ and to the venerable Assaji,⁹ that “whatever is of the nature to

Kd.1.6.36

¹ pabbajjā. ² upasampadā. ³ The first time that this, thought to be the oldest formula for leave to become a disciple of Gotama’s, is used in the Vinaya. The Order was not as yet in existence, and the ordination regulations were neither appointed nor was ordination separated by a period of probation from the time of a disciple’s “going forth”, pabbajjā, from home, or the household life, into homelessness. ⁴ Verses at Thag.61, see also Thag-a.150, Vin-a.965, MN-a.ii.192, AN-a.i.147, Ja.i.82; MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.63. ⁵ No verses ascribed to him. See Vin-a.965, MN-a.ii.192, AN-a.i.147, Ja.i.82. Omitted from Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁶ Koṇḍañña, Vappa and Bhaddiya. ⁷ I.e. Gotama and the group of five. ⁸ References as under n.2 above. See also Dh-p-a.ii.74. Included in Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁹ The disciple through whom Sāriputta and so Moggallāna became followers of Gotama, see Vin.1.39f. (below, BD.4.52); also MN.i.227 (Cūlasaccaka Sutta), SN.iii.124ff., MN-a.ii.270, MN-a.ii.271, and BD.4.52, n.3 below.

uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

Kd.1.6.37

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma ... having attained without another's help to full confidence in the teacher's instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “May we, Lord, receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones' ordination.

BD.4.20

Kd.1.6.38

Then the Lord addressed the group of five monks, saying: “Body, monks, is not self.¹ Now were this body self, monks this body would not tend to sickness, and one might get the chance of saying in regard to body, ‘Let body become thus for me, let body not become thus for me’. But inasmuch, monks, as body is not self, therefore body tends to sickness, and one does not get the chance of saying in regard to body, ‘Let body become thus for me, let body not become thus for me’.

Kd.1.6.39

Feeling is not self ... and one does not get the chance of saying in regard to feeling, ‘Let feeling become thus for me, let feeling not become thus for me’.

Kd.1.6.40

“Perception² is not self ... The habitual tendencies are not self ... one does not get the chance of saying in regard to the habitual tendencies, ‘Let the habitual tendencies become thus for me, let the habitual tendencies not become thus for me’.

Kd.1.6.41

Vin.1.14

“Consciousness is not self ... Inasmuch, monks, as consciousness is not self, therefore consciousness tends to sickness, and one does not get the chance to say in regard to consciousness, ‘Let consciousness become such for me, let consciousness not become thus for me.’

Kd.1.6.42

What do you think about this, monks? Is body permanent or impermanent?”

“Impermanent, Lord.”

¹ This famous Second Utterance given also at SN.iii.66, where called “The Five”, doubtless referring to the five disciples who heard it, and to the five topics, body ... consciousness (or mind) which it covered; cf. MN.iii.19. Translated at KS.iii.59, Further Dialogues of the Buddha, ii, 165f., MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.150, E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.88.

² saññā.

“But is that which is impermanent painful or pleasurable¹?”

“Painful, Lord.”

“But is it fit to consider that which is impermanent, painful, of a nature to change, as ‘This is mine, this am I, this is my self’?”

“It is not Lord.”

Kd.1.6.43

“Is feeling ... perception ... are the habitual tendencies ... is consciousness permanent or impermanent?”

BD.4.21

“Impermanent, Lord.”

“But is that which is impermanent painful or pleasurable?”

“Painful, Lord.”

“But is it (it to consider that which is impermanent, painful of a nature to change, as ‘This is mine, this am I, this is my self’?”

“It is not so, Lord.”

Kd.1.6.44

“Wherefore, monks, whatever is body, past, future, present or internal or external, or gross or subtle, or low or excellent whether it is far or near—all body should, by means of right wisdom, be seen, as it really is, thus: This is not mine, this am I not, this is not my self.

Kd.1.6.45

“Whatever is feeling ... whatever is perception ... whatever are the habitual tendencies ... whatever is consciousness past, future, present, or internal or external, or gross or subtle, or low or excellent, whether far or near—all consciousness should, by means of right wisdom, be seen as it really is, thus: This is not mine, this am I not, this is not my self.

Kd.1.6.46

“Seeing in this way, monks, the instructed² disciple of the ariyans disregards³ body and he disregards feeling and he disregards perception and he disregards the habitual tendencies and he disregards consciousness; disregarding he is dispassionate; through dispassion he is freed; in freedom the knowledge comes to be: ‘I am freed’⁴, and he knows: Destroyed is birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such or such.”

Kd.1.6.47

Thus spoke the Lord; delighted, the group of five monks rejoiced in what the Lord had said. Moreover while this discourse was being uttered, the ¹ sukha, happiness, mental and physical ease; used in opposition to dukkha. ² sutavant, one who has heard, hence learnt (the oral teaching). ³ nibbindati, turns away from, is disgusted by. He “disregards” because he refuses to know. ⁴ See BD.1.10 and its n.2, n.3.

Vin.1.15 minds of the group of five monks were freed from the cankers without grasping. At that time there were six perfected ones in the world.

The First Portion for Recital

ON THE GOING FORTH OF YASA

BD.4.22 At that time in Benares there was a young man of family, the son of a (great) merchant¹, delicately reared, called Yasa².

Kd.1.7.2 He had three mansions, one for the cold weather, one for the hot weather, one for the rains. Being ministered to by bands of female musicians³ for four months in the mansion for the rains, he did not come down from that mansion⁴. Then while Yasa, the young man of family, was possessed of and provided with the five kinds of sense-pleasures⁵, and was being ministered to, he fell asleep first and his suite fell asleep after him, and an oil lamp was burning all through the night.

Kd.1.7.3 Then Yasa, the young man of family, having awoken first saw his own suite sleeping, one with a lute in the hollow of her arm, one with a tabor at her neck, one with a drum in the hollow of her arm, one with dishevelled hair, one with saliva dripping from her mouth, muttering in their sleep, like a cemetery before his very eyes.⁶ Seeing this, its peril grew plain, and his mind was set on disregarding it.⁷ Then Yasa, the young man of family, uttered a solemn utterance: "What distress indeed, what affliction indeed."

Then Yasa, the young man of family, having put on his golden sandals, approached the door of the dwelling. Non-human beings opened the door, thinking: "Let there be no obstacle for the going forth from home into homelessness of Yasa, the young man of family." Then Yasa, the young man of family, approached the city-door. Non-human beings opened the door, thinking: “Let there be no obstacle for the going forth from home into homelessness of Yasa, the young man of family.” Then Yasa, the young man of family, approached the deer-park at Isipatana.

¹ See BD.2, Introduction, p.xlvii and BD.42, n.4. ² Verses at Thag.117. ³ nippurisehi turiyehi; see note at Dialogues of the Buddha ii.18; also Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.356.

⁴ Reading heṭṭhā pāsādā. DN.ii.21, MN.i.504 read heṭṭhāpāsādāṃ, "to the lower (parts of the) mansion." On pāsāda, see BD.2.16, n.5, n.6. ⁵ Cf. Vin.iii.72, DN.i.36, DN.i.60, and DN-a.121.

⁶ hatthapattāṃ susānaṃ maññe, literally one would think one's hand had reached a cemetery. Hatthappatta, what one can put one's hand on, and so what is before one's eyes. ⁷ nibbidāya cittaṃ saṅṭhāsi.

Kd.1.7.4

At that time, the Lord having risen in the night towards dawn, was pacing up and down in the open air. The Lord saw Yasa, the young man of family, coming in the distance: seeing him, having come down from (the place) where he was pacing up and down, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then Yasa, the young man of family, when he was near, uttered this solemn utterance to the Lord: “What distress indeed, what affliction indeed.” Then the Lord spoke thus to Yasa, the young man of family: “This, Yasa, is not distress, this, Yasa, is not affliction. Come, sit down, Yasa, I will teach you dhamma.”

BD.4.23

Then Yasa, the young man of family, thinking: “It is said that this is not distress, that this is not affliction”, exultant and uplifted, having taken off his golden sandals, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk¹ to Yasa, the young man of family, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing them.

Kd.1.7.5

When the Lord knew that the mind of Yasa, the young man of family, was ready, malleable, devoid of hindrances, uplifted, pleased², then he explained to him the teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way³. And just as a clean cloth without black specks will take a dye easily, even so (as he was sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Yasa, the young man of family, that whatever is of a nature to uprising, all that is of a nature to stop.”

Kd.1.7.6

Vin.1.16

Then the mother of Yasa, the young man of family, having mounted up to the mansion, not seeing Yasa, the young man of family, approached the

Kd.1.7.7

¹ This passage is frequently found in connection with “conversions”; cf. Vin.2.156, Vin.2.192, DN.i.110, DN.i.148, DN.ii.41, MN.i.379, AN.iv.186, AN.iv.209, Ud.49. ² In sense of with the teaching, prepared to follow it. ³ Note that paṭipadā (of the fourth truth), the course which leads to the ceasing of ill, is here represented by the one word maggā. This may not be a substitution for the “fourth truth”, but the original notion, left in.

(great) merchant, the householder; having approached she spoke thus to the (great) merchant, the householder; “Householder, your son, Yasa, is not to be seen.” Then the (great) merchant, the householder, having dispatched messengers on horse-back to the four quarters, himself approached the deer-park at Isipatana. The (great) merchant, the householder, saw the prints of golden sandals, and seeing them he followed them along.

Kd.1.7.8

BD.4.24

The Lord saw the (great) merchant, the householder, coming in the distance; seeing him, it occurred to the Lord: “Suppose I were to perform such a psychic wonder that the (great) merchant, the householder, sitting here, should not see Yasa the young man of family, sitting here?” Then the Lord performed such a psychic wonder.

Kd.1.7.9

Then the (great) merchant, the householder, approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord has the Lord not seen Yasa, the young man of family?”

“Well, householder, sit down. Perhaps, sitting here, you may see Yasa, the young man of family, sitting here.”

Then the (great) merchant, the householder, thinking: “It is said that I, sitting here, will see Yasa, the young man of family, sitting here”, and exultant, uplifted, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

Kd.1.7.10

As the (great) merchant, the householder was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk ... attained without the help of another to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Just as one might set upright what has been upset, or might uncover what was concealed, or might show the way to one who is astray, or might bring an oil lamp into the darkness, thinking, ‘Those with eyes may see shapes’, even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. I myself go to the Lord as refuge, to dhamma, and to the Order of monks. Let the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple gone for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.” Thus he came to be the first lay-disciple in the world using the three-word formula.¹

Vin.1.17

Kd.1.7.11

¹ tevācika, instead of the dhevācika of Kd.1.4.5, for here the bhikkhusaṅgha is included in the refuge-formula. We must therefore assume that when the group of five monks became disciples of Gotama a saṅgha was formed.

Then while the father of Yasa, the young man of family, was being taught dhamma, as he¹ was reviewing his stage (of knowledge) as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Then it occurred to the Lord: “While the father of Yasa, the young man of family, was being taught dhamma, as he was reviewing his stage (of knowledge) as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Now Yasa, the young man of family, cannot become one, having turned back to the low life, to enjoy pleasures of the senses as he did formerly when leading a household life. Suppose I were to annul that psychic wonder?” Then the Lord annulled that psychic wonder.

BD.4.25

Kd.1.7.12

Then the (great) merchant, the householder, saw Yasa, the young man of family sitting down; seeing him, he spoke thus to Yasa, the young man of family: “Dear Yasa, your mother is full of lamentation and grief, give your mother life.”

Kd.1.7.13

Then Yasa, the young man of family, looked towards the Lord. Then the Lord spoke thus to the (great) merchant, the householder: “What do you think about this, house-holder, that dhamma was seen by Yasa with a learner’s knowledge, with a learner’s insight, even as by you? As he was reviewing his stage (of knowledge), as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Now can Yasa, householder, having turned back to the low life, become one to enjoy pleasures of the senses, as he did formerly when leading a household life?”

“No, Lord.”

“Dhamma was seen by Yasa, the young man of family, householder, with a learner’s knowledge, with a learner’s insight, even as by you. As he was reviewing his stage (of knowledge), as it was seen, as it was known, his mind was freed from the cankers without grasping. Now Yasa, the young man of family, householder, cannot become one, having turned back to the low life, to enjoy pleasures of the senses, as he did formerly when leading a household life.”

Kd.1.7.14

“Lord, it is a gain for Yasa, the young man of family, Lord, it is well gotten for Yasa, the young man of family, inasmuch as the mind of Yasa, the young man of family, is freed from the cankers without grasping. Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow with Yasa, the young man of family, as his attendant?" The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the (great) merchant, the householder, knowing that the Lord had consented, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

¹ I.e. Yasa.

Kd.1.7.15

BD.4.26

Then Yasa, the young man of family, soon after the (great) merchant, the householder, had departed, spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, may I receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may I receive ordination?"

Vin.1.18

"Come, monk," the Lord said, "well preached is dhamma. Lead the Brahmarfaring for making an utter end of ill." So this came to be that venerable one's ordination. At that time there were seven perfected ones in the world.

Told is the Going Forth of Yasa

Kd.1.8.1

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the (great) merchant, the householder, with the venerable Yasa as attendant; having approached, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then the mother and the former wife of the venerable Yasa approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance.

Kd.1.8.2

The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them that, "whatever is of a nature to uprise, all that is of a nature to stop."

Kd.1.8.3

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma ... spoke thus to the Lord: "Excellent Lord! ... we ourselves, Lord, go to the Lord as refuge, to dhamma and to the Order of monks. Let the Lord accept us as women lay-disciples, gone for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts." Thus these were the first women lay-disciples in the world using the three-word formula.

Kd.1.8.4

Then the venerable Yasa's mother and father and former wife, having with their own hand(s) served the Lord and the venerable Yasa and having offered them sumptuous foods, solid and soft, sat down when the Lord had finished his meal and had removed his hand from the bowl. Then the Lord, having gladdened, roused, rejoiced, delighted the venerable Yasa's mother and father and former wife with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat departed.

Four householder friends of the venerable Yasa, young men of families of (great) merchants and lesser (great) merchants¹ in Benares, Vimala, Subāhu, Puṇṇaji, Gavampati², heard: “They say that Yasa, the young man of family, having cut off his hair and beard, having put on yellow robes, has gone forth from home into homelessness.” Having heard this, it occurred to them: “Now this can be no ordinary dhamma and discipline, nor can this be an ordinary going forth, in that Yasa, the young man of family, having cut off his hair and beard, having put on the yellow robes, has gone forth from home into homelessness.”

Kd.1.9.1

BD.4.27
Vin.1.19

These four people approached the venerable Yasa; having approached, having greeted the venerable Yasa, they stood at a respectful distance. Then the venerable Yasa, taking these four householder friends, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Yasa spoke thus to the Lord: “These four householder friends of mine, Lord, young men of families of (great) merchants and lesser (great) merchants in Benares, Vimala, Subāhu, Puṇṇaji, Gavampati, may the Lord exhort, may he instruct these four.”

Kd.1.9.2

The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

Kd.1.9.3

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma ... spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

Kd.1.9.4

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well preached is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones’ ordination. Then the Lord exhorted, instructed these monks with dhamma talk. While they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma talk, their minds were freed from the cankers without grasping. At that time there were eleven perfected ones in the world.

¹ setṭhānuseṭṭhi. See Ja.v.384 for mahā-setṭhi, setṭhi (but with variant reading anuseṭṭhi) and anuseṭṭhi; also Vinaya Texts i.102, n.3. ² Verses attributed only to Gavampati, Thag.38, and he appears to be the only one mentioned elsewhere in the canon, e.g. DN.ii.356, SN.v.436.

Vin.1.20

Told is the Going Forth of the four Householders

Fifty householder friends of the venerable Yasa, young men of the first families and of those next to the first¹ in the district heard: “They say that Yasa, the young man of family ... (as in BD.9.1-9.4 down to:) While they were being exhorted, instructed by the Lord with dhamma talk, their minds were freed from the cankers without grasping. At that time there were sixty-one perfected ones in the world.

Kd.1.10.1
BD.4.28

WITH MĀRA

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying²: “I, monks, am freed from all snares, both those of *devas*³ and those of men. And you, monks, are freed from all snares, both those of devas and those of men. Walk, monks, on tour for the blessing of the manyfolk, for the happiness of the manyfolk out of compassion for the world, for the welfare, the blessing, the happiness of devas and men. Let not two (of you) go by one (way).⁴ Monks, teach dhamma which is lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending.⁵ Explain with the spirit and the letter the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled, wholly pure. There are beings with little dust in their eyes, who, not hearing dhamma, are decaying, (but) if they are learners of dhamma, they will grow. And I, monks, will go along to Uruvelā, to the Camp township,⁶ in order to teach dhamma.”

Kd.1.11.1

Vin.1.21

Kd.1.11.2

¹ pubbānupubbaka. Explained by Vin-a.966 as the oldest and next to the oldest in regard to lineage. ² SN.i.105-106. ³ dibba; neither “divine” (Vinaya Texts i.112) nor “celestial” (KS.i.131) is exactly right for this difficult adjective which means deva-ish, pertaining to devas. ⁴ ekena can also mean together, but above is interpretation given at Vin-a.966, and cf. SN-a.i.172. ⁵ SN-a.i.172 gives differing but related arrangements of subjects included under “beginning, middle and end”. ⁶ Senānigama here and at MN.i.166; for the variant spelling used at e.g. SN.i.106, Ja.i.68, see Vinaya Texts i.113, n.1, KS.i.132, n.5; Dictionary of Pali Proper Names; E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.230. There was a tradition that in old times it had been an army’s camping place, MN-a.ii.173, SN-a.i.172, the town where Senāni, Sujāta’s father lived.

Then Māra, the Evil One, approached the Lord; having approached, he addressed the Lord with verses:

“Bound art thou by all the snares,
Both those of devas and of men,
In great bondage art thou bound,
Recluse, thou’lt not be freed from me.”¹

BD.4.29

“Freed am I from all the snares,
Both those of devas and of men,
From great bondage am I freed,
Humbled art thou, O End-maker.”²

“The tale of mind-impressions is a snare
That weaves its tallies to and fro in air.
With these will I have wherewith to fetter thee,
Recluse, thou wilt not be freed from me.”³

“Sights, sounds, scents, tastes,⁴ and things to touch, Bringing delights to mind of man-for such
All wish, all will, for me is past and gone,
Humbled art thou, O End-maker.”

Then Māra, the Evil One, thinking, “The Lord knows me, the well-farer knows me,” pained, afflicted, vanished then and there.

Told is the Talk on Māra

ON GOING FORTH AND FULL ORDINATION

At that time monks brought (to the Lord) from various quarters, from various districts those wishing for the going forth, those wishing for ordination, thinking: “The Lord will let these go forth, he will ordain them.”

Kd.1.12.1

¹ These four lines with the next four also at SN.i.106. ² Antaka, explained at Vin-a.966 as an inferior, low being; a name of Māra. Cf. Thig.59, Thig.62, Thig.195; also Dhp.48, where not used in this way. ³ These four lines and the next four occur also at SN.i.111. ⁴ The Vinaya version puts scents before tastes in the usual way. SN.i.111 reverses the order; see KS.i.140, n.3. Cf. Kd.5.1.27; Snp.387, Snp.759, Thag.455. Thag.895. AN.iii.69.

Thereby both the monks as well as those wishing for the going forth and those wishing for ordination were tired. Then a reasoning arose in the Lord's mind as he was meditating in seclusion, thus: "At present monks are bringing (to me) from various quarters ... and those wishing for ordination are tired. Suppose I were to allow it to monks, saying: 'You, monks, may now yourselves let go forth, may ordain in any¹ quarter, in any district?'"

Kd.1.12.2

Then the Lord, emerging from seclusion towards evening, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "While I was meditating in seclusion, monks, a reasoning arose in my mind, thus: 'At present monks are bringing ... in any quarter, in any district?'"

Vin.1.22

BD.4.30

Kd.1.12.3

"I allow, monks, that you yourselves may now let go forth may ordain in any quarter, in any district. And thus, monks, should one let go forth, should one ordain: First, having made him have his hair and beard cut off, having made him put on yellow robes, having made him arrange an upper robe over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks' feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be told: 'Speak thus: "I go to the awakened one for refuge, I go to dhamma for refuge, I go to the Order for refuge. And a second time I go ... And a third time I go to ... the Order for refuge."' I allow, monks, the going forth and the ordination by these three goings for refuge."²

Kd.1.12.4

Told is the Talk on Ordination by the three Goings for Refuge

WITH MĀRA, THE SECOND

Kd.1.13.1

Then the Lord, having kept the rains, addressed the monks, saying: "Monks, by proper attention, by proper right effort was supreme freedom attained by me, supreme freedom³ realised. You, too, monks, by proper attention, ¹ tāsu tāsu. Tam tam means whatever, each, this and that. ² Apparently this was the second stage in admitting disciples to the religious life, the first being by the formula spoken by the Lord, 'come, monk'. Responsibility is now being delegated to his followers themselves. Note that bhagavantam (the lord) has given way to buddham (the awakened one) in the first sentence of the formula. ³ Cf. AN.iii.218.

by proper right effort may attain supreme freedom, may realise supreme freedom.”

Then Māra, the Evil One, approached the Lord; having approached, he addressed the Lord with verses:

Kd.1.13.2

“Bound art thou by Māra’s snares,
Both those of devas and of men,
In great bondage art thou bound.
Recluse, thou wilt not be freed from me.”¹

“Freed am I from Māra’s snares,
Both those of devas and of men,
From great bondage am I freed,
Humbled art thou, O End-maker.”

Then Māra, the Evil One, thinking, “The Lord knows me, the well-farer knows me,” pained, afflicted, vanished then and there.

BD.4.31

THE STORY OF THE EXCELLENT GROUP

Then the Lord, having stayed at Benares for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Uruvelā. Then the Lord, turning off from the road, approached a certain woodland grove²; having approached, having plunged into that woodland grove, he sat down at the root of a certain tree. At that time a group of as many as thirty friends of high standing,³ with their wives, were amusing themselves in that same woodland grove. One had no wife, (so) a woman of low standing¹ was brought along for him. Then while they were heedlessly amusing themselves that woman of low standing, taking (their) belongings, ran away.

Vin.1.23
Kd.1.14.1

¹ These four lines occur at SN.i.105, but there the third line of each verse reads, “In (From) Māra’s bondage ...” ² At Ja.i.82 this is called Kappāsiya woodland grove. ³ timsamattā bhaddavaggiyā sahāyakā. Vin-a.971 says “sons of rājas, of high repute (bhaddaka, honoured, of good quality), bound into a group (vagga, party) by their bodies and minds, were wandering about”; and Vin-a.1106 says “because they were brothers by one father of the King of Kosala, a synonym for these elders is the group who are of high standing”. For both here and at Dhp-a.ii.32 they are identified with the thirty monks of Pāvā (see Vin.1.253, SN.iii.87). The bhaddavaggiyā=kumāra are referred to at Ja.i.82=Dhp-a.i.87, Dhp-a.i.97 as among the “converts” who, because converted first, should, so some monks thought, have been given precedence over the Great Pair; at Dhp-a.i.100, as having heard the Tuṇḍilovāda (cf. Vin-a.1106 and Ja.no.388). Mahavaṃsa xxx.79 mentions their conversion as a subject to be represented in the relic shrine of the Mahā Thūpa.

Kd.1.14.2

Then these friends, doing their friend a service and seeking for that woman, roaming about that woodland grove, saw the Lord sitting at the root of a certain tree; seeing him, they approached the Lord, having approached, they spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, has the Lord not seen a woman?”

“But what have you, young men, to do with a woman?”

“We, Lord, a group of as many as thirty friends of high standing, with our wives, were amusing ourselves in this woodland grove; one had no wife, (so) a woman of low standing was brought along for him. Then, Lord, as we were heedlessly amusing ourselves, that woman of low standing, taking our belongings, ran away. Consequently, Lord, we friends, doing our friend a service and seeking for that woman, are roaming about this woodland grove.”

Kd.1.14.3

BD.4.32

“What do you think of this, young men? Which is better for you, that you should seek for a woman or that you should seek for the self²?”

“Truly this were better for us, Lord, that we should seek for the self.”

“Well then, young men, you sit down, I will teach you dhamma.”

Saying, “Yes, Lord,” this group of friends of high standing, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance.

Kd.1.14.4

The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”³

Kd.1.14.5

These, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma,⁴ ... spoke thus to the Lord: “May we, Lord, receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

Vin.1.24

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this came to be these venerable ones' ordination.

¹ vesī can also mean a prostitute, but here probably used in opposition to bhadda, high standing. ² attānaṃ gaveseyyātha. Cf. Dh.146 andhakāreṇa onaddhā padīpaṃ na gavessatha, “that ye in the bonds of darkness should not hunt for a lamp”; and the compound attadīpā of DN.ii.100 and Snp.501. ³ As in Kd.1.7.5-1.7.6. ⁴ As in Kd.1.6.32.

Told is the Case of the Group of Friends of High Standing

The Second Portion for Repeating

ON THE MIRACLES AT URUVELĀ

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Uruvelā. Now at that time three matted hair ascetics, Kassapa of Uruvelā,¹ Kassapa of the River,² Kassapa of Gayā,³ were living at Uruvelā. Of these, the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā was leader, guide, highest, chief, head of five hundred matted hair ascetics; the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of the River was leader ... head of three hundred matted hair ascetics; the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Gayā was leader ... head of two hundred matted hair ascetics.

BD.4.33

Then the Lord approached the hermitage⁴ of the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā; having approached, he spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: "If it is not inconvenient to you, Kassapa, let me stay for one night in the fire-room."

Kd.1.15.2

"It is not inconvenient to me, great recluse, (but) there is a fierce serpent king of psychic power there; he is a terribly venomous snake. Do not let him harm you." And a second time the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: "If it is not inconvenient to you ...". And a third time the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: "If it is not inconvenient to you, Kassapa, let me stay for one night in the fire-room."

¹ Verses at Thag.375–380. At AN.i.25 he is called chief of those disciples who have large followings. Thag-a.i.71 recounts that one of this Kassapa's followers, Belaṭṭhasīsa, was tamed with him (see below, Kd.20.18.19) and afterwards became Ānanda's preceptor. These three Kassapas were brothers. They had a sister whose son, Senaka, was converted by the Lord, see Psalm of the Bretheren, p.180. On the three brothers, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Manual of Buddhism, p.206ff. ² I.e. of the river Nerañjarā. His verses at Thag.341. Thag-a on Uruvelākassapa says that Kassapa of the River was so called because he "went forth" at a bend in a great river; and that Kassapa of Gayā was so called because he went forth at Gayāsīsa. ³ Verses at Thag.345–349. ⁴ Cf. Vin.4.107 (BD.2.382) for many similarities with this passage.

“It is not inconvenient to me, great recluse, (but) there is a fierce serpent king of psychic power there; he is a terribly venomous snake. Do not let him harm you.”

“It is not likely that he can harm me. Please do you, Kassapa, allow (me the use of) the fire-room,”

Kd.1.15.3 “Stay, great recluse, as you wish it.”

Then the Lord, having entered the fire-room, having laid down a grass mat, sat down cross-legged, keeping his back erect, having caused mindfulness to be present in front of him. Then that serpent saw that the Lord had entered, and seeing this, pained, afflicted, he blew forth smoke. Then it occurred to the Lord: “What now if I, without destroying this serpent’s skin and hide and flesh and ligaments and bones and the marrow of the bones, were to master (his) heat by heat?”

Vin.1.25

Kd.1.15.4

Then the Lord, having worked a work of psychic power, blew forth smoke. Then that serpent, not conquering anger, blazed up. The Lord, having attained the condition of heat, also blazed up. When both were in flames, the fire-room became as though burning, ablaze, in flames. Then the matted hair ascetics, having surrounded the fire-room, spoke thus: “Beautiful indeed is the great recluse, (but) he will be harmed by the serpent.”¹

BD.4.34

Kd.1.15.5

Then the Lord at the end of that night, without having destroyed that serpent’s skin and hide and flesh and ligaments and bones and the marrow of the bones, having mastered (his) heat by heat, having placed him in his bowl, showed him to the matted hair ascetic, Uruvelākassapa, saying: “This, Kassapa, is your serpent, his heat was mastered by heat.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great majesty, in that he can master by heat the heat of the fierce serpent king who has psychic power and is a terribly venomous snake; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Kd.1.15.6

¹ Text reads nāge na viheṭhissati, but should be corrected, as Vinaya Texts i.120, n.3 indicates, by parallel passage at Vin.2.195: nāgena viheṭhiyissati, which I follow. Sinhalese edition reads nāgena viheṭhiyati, is harmed by the serpent, which also makes sense if the ascetics, seeing Gotama in flames, thought he was already brought to harm.

Near the Nerañjarā,¹ the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa:
“If it is not inconvenient to you, Kassapa, let me stay this day (only)² in the fire-hall.³”

“It is not inconvenient to me, great recluse,
(but) as I am anxious for your comfort I warn you that there is a fierce serpent king there, of psychic power, a terribly venomous snake.
Do not let him harm you.”

“It is not likely that he can harm me.
Please do you, Kassapa, allow (me the use of) the fire-room.⁴”
“It is given”; having understood this,
the fearless one entered, fear overpassed.

Having seen that the holy man⁵ had entered, the chief of snakes⁶, afflicted, blew forth smoke.
The chief of men, joyful, unperturbed, blew forth smoke there too.

BD.4.35

But the chief of snakes, not conquering anger, blazed up like a fire.
The chief of men, highly proficient in the condition of heat, blazed up there too.

When both were in flames,

¹ For note on this repetition of the story (in this and the next paragraph) in a more popular style, see Vinaya Texts i.120, n.4. Note by Sujato: the “popular style” is in fact verse and has been formatted as such, without changing the text. ² ajjuṇho; see BD.2.64, n.1. Vin-a.971 also explains by ajja ekadivasam. ³ Text reads aggisālamhi; Sinhalese edition aggisaraṇamhi; variant reading at Vin.1.365 aggisālāyam. ⁴ agyāgara, as throughout, except for case just referred to. ⁵ isi=ṛsi, seer, sage. ⁶ Here, instead of being called nāgarājā, king of serpents, he is called ahināga; and here nāga is probably not to be taken as “serpent” but as balancing the nāga in manussanāga, “chief of men,” just below, and therefore as meaning chief, strongest, foremost (something awe-inspiring: cobra, elephant, saint). Cf. mahānāga, used of (chief) disciples, at MN.i.32, MN.i.151; and definition of nāga at MN.i.145 as “synonym for that monk in whom the cankers are destroyed,” and cf. also MN-a.i.153.

the matted hair ascetics, as they were looking at the fire-room, said:

“Beautiful indeed is the great recluse,
(but) he will be harmed by the serpent.”¹

Kd.1.15.7

Then at the end of that night
the serpent’s flames became extinguished, but the multicoloured flames of him of psychic power remained, and multicoloured flames, dark green, then red, crimson, yellow and crystal-coloured were on Angirasa’s² body.

Having put the chief of snakes into his bowl,
he showed him to the brahmin,³ saying:
“This, Kassapa, is your serpent, his heat was mastered by heat.”

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, thoroughly believing in this wonder of psychic power of the Lord, spoke thus to the Lord: “Stay just here, great recluse, I (can offer you) a constant supply of food.”⁴

Vin.1.26

The First Wonder

Kd.1.16.1

Then the Lord stayed in a certain woodland grove near the hermitage of the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa. Then the four Great Kings, having illuminated the entire woodland grove on a glorious night with glorious colour, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they stood at the four quarters like huge fires.

Kd.1.16.2

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night, and having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready. But now, who were these, great recluse, who, having illumined the entire woodland grove during the glorious night with glorious colour, approached you and having approached, having greeted you, stood at the four quarters like huge fires?”

¹ See above, BD.4.34, n.1. ² Name applied to Gotama now and again in the Piṭakas; DN.iii.196 (“name of the son of the Sakyans”), SN.i.196 = Thag.1252, AN.iii.239, Thag.536, Ja.i.116. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names and GS.iii.175, n.1. Vin-a.971 says aṅgato raṁsiyo saṁsaranti, flames streamed from his body (limb). ³ Note that the jaṭila is here referred to as a brahmin. ⁴ This invitation seems to cancel the Lord’s request to stay for “one day (only),” and to account for the fact that he stayed on in the woodland grove for several days.

BD.4.36

“Kassapa, these were the four Great Kings who approached me in order to hear dhamma.”

Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that the four Great Kings also approach him in order to hear dhamma; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

The Second Wonder

Then Sakka, lord of the devas, having illumined the entire woodland grove on a glorious night with glorious colour, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance, like a huge fire, more glorious and more superb than the former splendours of colour.¹

Kd.1.17.1

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night ... (as in² Kd.1.16.2) ... stayed in that same woodland grove.

Kd.1.17.2

Vin.1.27

The Third Wonder

Then Brahmā Sahampati ... (as in Kd.1.17) ... stayed in that same woodland grove.

Kd.1.18.1

Kd.1.18.2

The Fourth Wonder

Now at that time a great sacrifice (made by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa was going forward,³ and the entire (population of) Aṅga and Magadha, taking abundant solid food and soft food, wanted to go (to it)).¹ Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “At present my great sacrifice is going forward, and the entire (population of) Aṅga and Magadha, taking abundant solid food and soft food, will come. If the great recluse does a wonder of psychic power before the populace, the great recluse’s gains and honour will much increase, my gains and honour will decline. Now the great recluse shall certainly not come to-morrow.”

Kd.1.19.1

¹ I.e. the four Great Kings, so Vin-a.972. ² Reading “Sakka, lord of devas” instead of “the four Great Kings.” ³ paccupaṭṭhito hoti. It was a sacrifice performed by him.

BD.4.37

Kd.1.19.2

Vin.1.28

Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind of the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, having gone to Uttarakuru,² having fetched almsfood from there, having eaten it by the Anotatta lake,³ took his midday rest there. Then at the end of that night the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready. But why did you not come yesterday, great recluse? We thought of you however, saying ‘How is it that the great recluse does not come?’ A portion of solid food and soft food was put aside for you.”

Kd.1.19.3

“Now did it not occur to you, Kassapa, ‘At present my great sacrifice is going forward ... Now the great recluse shall certainly not come to-morrow’?”

Kd.1.19.4

“So I, Kassapa, knowing by mind the reasoning in your mind, having gone to Uttarakuru, having fetched almsfood from there, having eaten it by the Anotatta lake, took my mid-day rest there.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that he also knows mind by mind; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.” Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

The Fifth Wonder

Kd.1.20.1

Now at that time a rag-robe accrued to the Lord. Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now where can I wash the rag-robe?” Then Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, having dug a tank with his hand, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord may wash the rag-robe here.” Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now on what can I knead the rag-robe?” Then Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, having put down a large stone near him, said: “Lord, the Lord may knead the rag-robe here.”

¹ Cf. the people’s annual festivals mentioned at Psalms of the Brethren 181, at one of which the Lord converted Kassapa of Uruvelā’s nephew. ² Mentioned at Vin.3.7 (BD.1.14). See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, especially for its being considered a mark of great psychic power to be able to go here—a somewhat mythical region. ³ One of the seven great lakes of the Himalayas. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names.

BD.4.38

Kd.1.20.2

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now holding on to what can I come up from (the water)?” Then a devatā inhabiting a kakudha (tree)¹, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, bent down a bough, saying: “Lord, the Lord may come up from (the water) holding on here.” Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now on what can I stretch out² the rag-robe?” Then Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in the Lord’s mind, having put down a large stone near him said: “Lord, the Lord may stretch out the rag-robe here”

Vin.1.29

Kd.1.20.3

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready. But how is it, great recluse, that this tank was not here before, and now this tank is here? Nor was this stone put down before. By whom was this stone put down? Nor was a bough of this kakudha (tree) bent down before, and now this bough is bent down.”

Kd.1.20.4

“Kassapa, a rag-robe accrued to me here, and this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now where can I wash the rag-robe?’ Then, Kassapa, Sakka, lord of the devas, knowing by mind the reasoning in my mind, having dug a tank with his hand, spoke thus to me: ‘Lord, the Lord may wash the rag-robe here.’ So this tank was dug by the hand of a non-human being.³ Then this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now on what can I knead the rag-robe?’ ... So this stone was put⁴ by a non-human being.

Kd.1.20.5

Then this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now holding on to what can I come up out of (the water)?’ Then, Kassapa, a devatā ... said: ‘Lord, the Lord may come up from (the water) holding on here.’ So this kakudha (tree) was a hold for my hand.¹ Then this occurred to me, Kassapa, ‘Now on what can I stretch out the rag-robe?’ Then² Sakka, lord of the devas ... So this stone was put by a non-human being.”

¹ Terminalia Arjuna according to Pali-English Dictionary. Cf. Ja.vi.518–519, Dhp-a.iv.153, Ajjuna at Buddhavaṃsa viii.23 and Dhp-a.i.105 is the tree of the Buddha Anomadassin. Vin-a.972 calls it ajjunarukkha, which Pali-English Dictionary calls Pentaptera Arjuna. ² vissajjeyyaṃ, explained at Vin-a.972 as sukkhāpanatthāya pasāretvā ṭhapeyyaṃ (where) can I put it, stretching it out to dry? ³ amanussena. Cf. Vin.3.85 (and BD.1.147, n.2). ⁴ nikkhittā, instead of, as previously, upanikkhi-.

Kd.1.20.6

Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that Sakka, lord of the devas, does him a service; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.” Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelākassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

Kd.1.20.7

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night; having approached, he announced the time to the Lord, saying: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready.”

Vin.1.30

“You go on, Kassapa, I am coming along,” and having dismissed the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, having plucked a fruit from a rose-apple tree, after which this Land of the Rose-apples³ is named, he sat down in the fire-room, having arrived first.

Kd.1.20.8

The matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa saw the Lord sitting in the fire-room; seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: “By what way have you come, great recluse? I set out before you, but you are sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first.”

Kd.1.20.9

“Now I, Kassapa, having dismissed you, having plucked a fruit from a rose-apple tree, after which this Land of the Rose-apples is named, am sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first. Truly, Kassapa, this rose-apple fruit is full of colour, full of scent, full of flavor; if you like, do eat it.”

“No, great recluse, you alone are worthy of it, you alone eat it.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that having dismissed me first ... he sat down in the fire-room, having arrived first; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.” Then the Lord, having eaten the meal (offered by) the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, stayed in that same woodland grove.

Kd.1.20.10

Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa approached the Lord at the end of that night; having approached he announced the time to the

BD.4.40

¹ āhara-hattha. ² The name Kassapa is omitted here. ³ Jambudīpa, usually meaning India.

Lord, saying: “It is time, great recluse, the meal is ready.”

“You go on, Kassapa, I am coming along,” and having dismissed the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, and having plucked a mango fruit not far from the rose-apple tree, after which this Land of the Rose-apples is named ... having plucked a fruit of emblic myrobalan¹ not far from the mango tree ... having plucked a fruit of yellow myrobalan² not far from the emblic myrobalan, having gone to the Thirty,³ having plucked a flower from the Coral Tree,⁴ he sat down in the fire-room, having arrived first. The matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa saw the Lord sitting in the fire-room, and seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: “By what way have you come, great recluse? I set out before you, but you are sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first.”

Kd.1.20.11

“Now I, Kassapa, having dismissed you, having gone to the Thirty, having plucked a flower from the Coral Tree, am sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first. Truly, Kassapa, this flower of the Coral Tree is full of colour, full of scent; if you like, do take it.”

“No, great recluse, you alone are worthy of it, you alone take it.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that having dismissed me first, having gone to the Thirty, having plucked a flower from the Coral Tree, he is sitting in the fire-room, having arrived first; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Vin.1.31

Now at that time these matted hair ascetics, wanting to tend the (sacred) fires, were unable to chop sticks. Then it occurred to these matted hair ascetics: “Doubtless it is (owing to) the psychic might of the great recluse that we are unable to chop sticks.” Then the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Kassapa, let sticks be chopped.”

Kd.1.20.12

BD.4.41

¹ āmalakī (here and at MN.i.456; elsewhere āmalaka), Phyllanthus emblica. The fruit allowed to monks as a medicine, Vin.1.201. Cf. Vin.1.278. ² haritakī. Fruit also allowed as a medicine at Vin.1.201. Cf. MN.iii.127. ³ I.e. to the realm of the Thirty (or Thirty-three) Devas, tāvatiṃsa. ⁴ pāricchattaka, “shading all round,” Erythrina Indica. (mythical) tree growing in the Tāvatiṃsa realm. At AN.iv.117 the devas’ rejoicings at each stage in the development of shoot and bloom are set out. See GS.iv.78ff. for notes. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, missing the above Vinaya reference, asserts that the flowers are never plucked. In that case this is a noteworthy exception.

“Let them be chopped, great recluse.” Five hundred sticks were chopped simultaneously.¹ Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that also sticks are chopped; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Kd.1.20.13

Now at that time these matted hair ascetics, wanting to tend the (sacred) fires, were unable to kindle the fires. Then it occurred to these matted hair ascetics: “Doubtless ... unable to kindle the fires.” Then the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Kassapa, let the fires be kindled.”

“Let them be kindled, great recluse.” Five hundred fires were kindled simultaneously ... “... in that also the fires are kindled; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Kd.1.20.14

Now at that time these matted hair ascetics, having tended the fires, were unable to extinguish the fires.² ... The five hundred fires were extinguished simultaneously ... “... in that also the fires are extinguished; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

Kd.1.20.15

¹ sakid eva, just once, once only. There was doubtless one stick “for each of the five hundred jaṭilas over whom Kassapa was chief” (Vinaya Texts i.129). ² It is clear therefore that the fires were not kept burning perpetually.

Now at that time on the cold winter nights between the eights¹ in a time of snowfall these matted hair ascetics were plunging into the river Nerañjarā, then emerging and repeatedly plunging in and out.² Then the Lord created as many as five hundred fire-vessels³ just where these matted hair ascetics, having come up from (the river), warmed themselves.⁴ Then it occurred to these matted hair ascetics: “Doubtless it is (owing to) the psychic might of the great recluse that these fire-vessels are created.” Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: “Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that he can create these fire-vessels; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.”

BD.4.42

Vin.1.32

Now at that time a great rain fell out of the proper season, and a great flood resulted.⁵ The Lord was staying in a place which became inundated by water. Then it occurred to the Lord: “Now suppose that I, having made the water recede all round, should pace up and down in the middle on dust-covered ground?” Then the Lord, having made the water recede all round, paced up and down in the middle on dust-covered ground. Then the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa, thinking: “I hope that the great recluse has not been carried away⁶ by the water,” went together with a boat and many matted hair ascetics to that place where the Lord was staying.

Kd.1.20.16

¹ antaraṭṭhakāsu, the aṭṭhakā days which, according to Vin-a.1128, are “the eight (days) between Māgha and Phagguṇa” (names of lunar mansions). Cf. MN-a.ii.48 (on MN.i.79) “four at the end of the month of Māgha, four at the beginning of the month of Phagguṇa, thus between the two there are eight nights.” Cf. AN-a.ii.225 (on AN.i.136), “the time extends for eight days in the interval between Māgha and Phagguṇa. For there are four days at the end of Māgha and four at the beginning of Phagguṇa, this is called ‘occurring between the eights’” (antaraṭṭhako) See Vin.1.288, Ud.1.9, Ud-a.74. Translated at Sacred Books of the Buddhists viii, p.7 as “between the eighths”; at GS.i.119, Further Dialogues of the Buddha i.55 as “in the dark half of the month(s)”; at Vinaya Texts i.130, Vinaya Texts ii.211 as “between the Aṣṭakā festivals.” Critical Pali Dictionary gives “occurring between the eights.” The translation “eighths” is justified by the meaning of aṣṭakā (feminine) as the “eighth day after full moon” (Monier Williams). But “eights” seem preferred by the Commentaries. See notes at Sacred Books of the Buddhists viii.p.7, GS.i.119, Vinaya Texts i.130. ² Cf. Ud.6 for parallel passage. It would appear that jaṭilas practised purification by fire and water; cf. ceremonial bathing at Gayā mentioned by Kassapa of Gayā, Thag.345. ³ mandāmukhi. Vin-a.972 calls these aggibhājāni. ⁴ Same word, visibbeti, as used in Bu-pc.56; see BD.2.398, n.3. ⁵ sañjāyi, literally was born, was produced. ⁶ Cf. same expression at Vin.3.213 (BD.2.48).

The matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa saw the Lord who, having made the water recede all round, was pacing up and down in the middle on dust-covered ground, and seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: "Is it indeed you who are here, great recluse?"

"It is I,¹ Kassapa," and the Lord having risen up above the ground, placed himself in the boat. Then it occurred to the matted hair ascetic Uruvelakassapa: "Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might, in that also the water does not carry him away; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am."

Kd.1.20.17

Then it occurred to the Lord: "Now, for a long time it will occur to this foolish man, 'Truly the great recluse is of great psychic power, of great might; but yet he is not a perfected one as I am.' Now, suppose I should deeply stir² this matted hair ascetic?" Then the Lord spoke thus to the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā: "Neither are you, Kassapa, a perfected one nor have you entered on the way to perfection, and that course is not for you by which you either could be a perfected one or could have entered on the way to perfection." Then the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā, having inclined his head to the Lord's feet, spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, may I receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may I receive ordination?"

BD.4.43

Kd.1.20.18

"It is you, Kassapa, who are leader, guide, highest, chief, head of five hundred matted hair ascetics; do consult these so that they can do what they think (right)." Then the matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Uruvelā approached these matted hair ascetics; having approached, he spoke thus to these matted hair ascetics: "I want, good sirs,³ to fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse; let the revered sirs⁴ do what they think (right)."

Vin.1.33

"For a long time we, good sir,⁵ have been much pleased⁶ by the great recluse; if, revered sir,⁷ you will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse, all of us will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse."

Kd.1.20.19

Then these matted hair ascetics, having let their hair, their braids, their bundles on the carrying-poles,¹ their implements for fire-worship be carried away² all mixed up in the water, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined their heads to the Lord's feet, they spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may we receive ordination?"

¹ Emphatic: ayam ah'asmi. ² saṁvejeyyaṁ. Cf. this word, as used above, with other examples of it given by A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Saṁvega, 'Aesthetic Shock', Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol. 7, No. 3, Feb., 1943. ³ bho. ⁴ bhavanto. ⁵ bho. ⁶ In the sense of believing in his teaching. ⁷ bhavaṁ.

BD.4.44

"Come, monks," the Lord said, "well taught is dhamma fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill." So this came to be these venerable ones' ordination.

Kd.1.20.20

The matted hair ascetic Kassapa of the River saw the hair the braids, the bundles on the carrying-poles, the implements for fire-worship being carried away all mixed up in the water; seeing this, it occurred to him: "I hope my brother is not in danger," and he dispatched matted hair ascetics saying: "Go and find out about my brother," and he himself with his three hundred matted hair ascetics approached the venerable Kassapa of Uruvela; having approached he spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa of Uruvela: "Is this better, Kassapa?"

"Yes, friend, this is better."

Kd.1.20.21

Then these matted hair ascetics ...³ So this came to be these venerable ones' ordination.

Kd.1.20.22

The matted hair ascetic Kassapa of Gayā saw the hair, the braids, the bundles on the carrying-poles, the implements for fire-worship being carried away all mixed up in the water; seeing this, it occurred to him: "I hope my brothers are not in danger," and he dispatched matted hair ascetics, saying: "Go and find out about my brothers," and he himself with his two hundred matted hair ascetics approached the venerable Kassapa of Uruvela; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa of Uruvelā: "Is this better, Kassapa?"

"Yes, friend, this is better."

Kd.1.20.23

¹ khārikāja, which Vin-a.972 explains as khāri-bhāra. Khāri is a three bushel measure, kāja (= vividha, vivadha) is the shoulder-pole on which some ascetics and wanderers carried their property, their khāri. DN-a.269 calls khāri the requisites of an ascetic: kindling wood, water pot, needle and so on. Cf. khāri-vividha at Ud.65=SN.i.78, and DN.i.101. ² pavāhetvā. Pavāheti is to cause to be carried away, and hence to cleanse, to wash away (evil). Perhaps a dual reference is intended here. Cf. Thag.346 (Kassapa of Gayā's verses). ³ Repeating Kd.1.20.19 for the followers of Kassapa of the River.

Then these matted hair ascetics, having let their hair, their braids, their bundles on the carrying-poles, their implements for fire-worship be carried away all mixed up in the water, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined their heads to the Lord's feet, they spoke thus to the Lord: "Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord's presence, may we receive ordination?"

Vin.1.34

"Come, monks," the Lord said, "well taught is dhamma, fare the Brahmarfaring for making an utter end of ill." So this came to be these venerable ones' ordination.

Kd.1.20.24

Through the Lord's psychic resolution, five hundred fire-sticks could not be chopped, (and) were chopped; fires could not be kindled (and) were kindled; could not be extinguished (and) were extinguished; five hundred fire-vessels were created. In this way there came to be three thousand five hundred marvels.

BD.4.45

Kd.1.21.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Uruvelā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Gayā Head together with a large Order of monks, with all those same thousand monks who had formerly been matted hair ascetics. Then the Lord stayed near Gayā at Gayā Head together with the thousand monks.

Kd.1.21.2

And there the Lord addressed the monks, saying: "Monks, everything is burning.¹ And what, monks, is everything that is burning? The eye, monks, is burning, material shapes are burning, consciousness through the eye² is burning, impingement on the eye³ is burning, in other words the feeling which arises from impingement on the eye, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too is burning. With what is it burning? I say it is burning with the fire of passion,⁴ with the fire of hatred, with the fire of stupidity; it is burning because of birth, ageing, dying, because of grief, sorrow, suffering, lamentation and despair.

Kd.1.21.3

"The ear is burning, sounds are burning ... the nose is burning, odours are burning ... the tongue is burning, tastes are burning ... the body is burning, tangible objects are burning ...the mind is burning, mental states are burning, consciousness through the mind¹ is burning, impingement on the mind is burning, in other words the feeling which raises through impingement on the mind, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too is burning. With what is it burning? I say it is burning with the fire of passion, with the fire of hatred, with the fire of stupidity; it is burning because of birth, ageing, dying, because of grief, sorrow, suffering, lamentation and despair.

¹ Quoted at Kv.209. ² cakkhuvīññaṇa, i.e. cognising by the eye, vision or seeing. See Buddhist Psychological Ethics, 2nd edition, p.161, n.5; Dialogues of the Buddha ii.340, Dialogues of the Buddha iii.230; and cf. MN.i.111f. ³ cakkhusamphassa, or impression on, or contact with, the eye. ⁴ Quoted at Snp-a.32.

“Seeing this, monks, the instructed disciple of the ariyans disregards the eye and he disregards material shapes and he disregards consciousness through the eye and he disregards impingement on the eye, in other words the feeling which arises from impingement on the eye, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too he disregards. And he disregards the ear and he disregards sounds, and he disregards the nose and he disregards odours, and he disregards the tongue and he disregards tastes, and he disregards the body and he disregards tangible objects, and he disregards the mind and he disregards mental states and he disregards consciousness through the mind and he disregards impingement on the mind, in other words the feeling that arises from impingement on the mind, be it pleasant or painful or neither painful nor pleasant, that too he disregards; disregarding, he is dispassionate; through dispassion he is freed; in freedom the knowledge comes to be, ‘I am freed’, and he comprehends: Destroyed is birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such or such.”²

And while this discourse was being uttered, the minds of these thousand monks were freed from the cankers without grasping.

Told is the Disquisition³ on Burning

Told is the Third Portion for Repeating: the Wonder(s) at Uruvelā

¹ manoviññāṇa, i.e. cognising by the mind, ‘apprehending’.

² As above, BD.4.21.

³ pariyāya.

Kd.1.21.4

BD.4.46

Vin.1.35

ON BIMBISĀRA'S GATHERING

Then the Lord, having stayed at Gayā Head for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha together with the large Order of monks, with all those same thousand monks who had formerly been matted hair ascetics. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Palm Grove pleasure ground¹ in the Supatiṭṭha shrine.²

Kd.1.22.2

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha heard: “Verily, the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, who has gone forth from the Sakyan clan, has reached Rājagaha and is staying at Rājagaha in the Palm Grove pleasure ground in the Supatiṭṭha shrine. A lovely reputation has gone forth concerning the Lord Gotama, thus: He is indeed Lord, perfected one, fully awakened one, endowed with knowledge and conduct, well-farer, knower of the worlds, unrivalled charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and mankind, awakened one, Lord. Having realised them by his own super-knowledge, he makes known this world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, creatures with devas and men, with recluses and brahmins. He teaches dhamma, lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending. He explains with the spirit and the letter the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled and wholly pure. Good indeed it were to see perfected ones like this.”

BD.4.47

Kd.1.22.3

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, surrounded by twelve myriad³ brahmins and householders⁴ of Magadha, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Then some of these twelve myriad brahmins and householders of Magadha having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance; some exchanged greetings with the Lord, and having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, they sat down at a respectful distance; some having saluted the Lord with joined palms, sat down at a respectful distance; some having shouted out their name and clan before the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance; some having become silent, sat down at a respectful distance.

Vin.1.36

¹ Laṭṭhivanuyyāna, literally the pleasance, pleasure ground or park of the grove of sprouts (or canes or sticks). Vin-a.972 explains by tāluyyāna, the palmyra, or talipot-palm pleasance. Cf. Ja.i.68, Ja.i.84; and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ² Vin-a.972 calls this a round tree. See E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.230. ³ nahuti. Cf. Snp.677. Exact meaning unknown, but some high number. Vin-a.972 says “here one nahuta is ten thousand.” ⁴ brāhmaṇagahapatika, not “brahmin householders” as at BURLINGAME, Buddhist Legends i.197, but as at Vinaya Texts i.137 (where see note) and above. For see definition of “householder” at Vin.3.222, “setting aside king ... and Brahmin, he who remains is called ‘householder’.”

Kd.1.22.4

Then it occurred to those twelve myriad brahmins and householders of Magadha: “Now,¹ does the great recluse fare the Brahma-faring under Kassapa of Uruvelā, or does Kassapa of Uruvelā fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse?” Then the Lord, knowing with his mind the reasoning in the minds of those twelve myriad brahmins and householders of Magadha, addressed Kassapa of Uruvelā with the verses:

BD.4.48

“What hast thou seen, O dweller in Uruvelā,
That thou, known as emaciate², hast abandoned the (sacred) fire?

I ask thee about this matter, Kassapa:
Hast thou abandoned thy fire-implements?”

“The sacrifices speak of forms and sounds,
Also of tastes³, pleasures and women.
Knowing that ‘This is dross’ among affections—
Therefore I delighted not in sacrifice, in offering.”

Kd.1.22.5

“But if your mind delights not there, Kassapa,” the Lord said, “Among forms, sounds and also tastes,
Then in the world of devas and men what does your mind delight in?

Kassapa, tell me that.”

“When I had seen the path, peaceful, without substrate,⁴ Stainless⁵, not attached to sensations’ becoming,

¹ Cf. Ja.vi.220; To end of second verse quoted at Bv-a.20. ² kisako vadāno; see note Vinaya Texts i.138, n.1. ³ rūpe ca sadde ca atho rase; cf. Snp.974. ⁴ anupadhika, i.e. without substrate for or attachment to rebirth. ⁵ akiñcanaṃ kāmabhava asattaṃ, also at Snp.176, Snp.1059, Snp.1091. Akiñcana can also mean “having nothing”, “calling nothing one’s own”, see Vinaya Texts i.139, n.1. Vin-a.973 says of it that it means without the stain of passion.

Not becoming otherwise¹, where one is not led by others²—
In consequence, I delighted not in sacrifice, in offering.”

Kd.1.22.6

Then the venerable Kassapa of Uruvelā, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having inclined his head towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple³; Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple.” Then it occurred to those twelve myriad Brahmins and householders of Magadha: “Kassapa of Uruvelā fares the Brahma-faring under the great recluse.”

Kd.1.22.7

Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the minds of these twelve myriad Brahmins and householders of Magadha, talked a progressive talk ... stopping, the Way.⁴

BD.4.49

Vin.1.37

Kd.1.22.8

And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take a dye, even so as the twelve myriad Brahmins and householders of Magadha with Bimbisāra at their head were (sitting) in those very seats, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them, that “Whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop,” and one myriad declared themselves to be lay-followers.

Kd.1.22.9

Then King Bimbisāra of Magadha, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Formerly, Lord, when I was a young man I had five ambitions.⁵ These are now realised⁶ by me.

1. “Formerly, Lord, when I was a young man it occurred to me: ‘Might I be anointed into kingship.’ This was my first ambition, Lord. It has now been realised by me.
2. “And ‘Might the perfected one, the fully awakened one come into my realm.’ This, Lord, was my second ambition. It has now been realised by me.

Kd.1.22.10

¹ anaññathābhāvīm, i.e. there is no becoming (for the path) as to birth, decrepitude, dying (according to Vin-a.973). Cf. SN.iii.225, SN.iv.23, SN.iv.66. ² anaññaneyyam. Vin-a.973 says that one should oneself, by making the Way become, come to the path and should not be brought to it by anyone else. Cf. Snp.55, Snp.213, Snp.364. ³ Ja.vi.220, Bv-a.20. ⁴ As above, Kd.1.7.5-1.7.6. ⁵ assāsaka. ⁶ samiddha, well effected.

3. “And ‘That I might pay homage to this Lord.’ This, Lord, was my third ambition. It has now been realised by me.
4. “And ‘May that Lord teach me dhamma.’ This, Lord, was my fourth ambition. It has now been realised by me.
5. “And ‘Might I understand that Lord’s dhamma.’ This, Lord, was my fifth ambition. It has now been realised by me.

“Formerly, Lord, when I was a young man I had these five ambitions. They are now realised by me.

“Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Even, Lord, as one might set upright what has been upset¹ ... even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. So I, Lord, go to the Lord² as refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. Lord, may the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple gone for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts. And, Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me to-morrow together with the Order of monks.”
The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, at the end of that night had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “Lord, it is time, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha together with the large Order of monks, with all those same thousand monks who had formerly been matted-hair ascetics.

Now at that time Sakka, lord of the devas, having assumed the form of a Brahmin youth, walked in front of the Order of monks with the Lord at its head, singing these verses:

“The tamed with the tamed, with the former matted-hair ascetics,
the well freed³ with the well freed,
The Lord, beautifully coloured like a golden ornament,⁴

¹ As above, i.7.10. ² bhagavantam. ³ vippamutta. ⁴ singīnikkhasuvaṇṇa. Cf. SN.ii.234. Gold is the colour for immortality.

Kd.1.22.11

Vin.1.38

Kd.1.22.12
BD.4.50

Kd.1.22.13

entered Rājagaha.

“The freed¹ with the freed,
with the former matted-hair ascetics,
the well freed with the well freed,
The Lord, beautifully coloured like a golden ornament,
entered Rājagaha.

“The crossed over with the crossed over,
with the former matted-hair ascetics,
the well freed with the well freed,
The Lord, beautifully coloured like a golden ornament,
entered Rājagaha.

“He of the ten states,² of the ten powers,³ versed in the ten things,⁴ and furnished with the ten,⁵
He, the Lord, surrounded by ten hundred, entered Rājagaha.⁶”

Kd.1.22.14

People having seen Sakka, lord of the devas, spoke thus: “Indeed this brahmin youth is lovely, indeed this brahmin youth is good to look upon, indeed this brahmin youth is charming. Whose, now, is this brahmin youth?”
BD.4.51 When they had spoken thus, Sakka, lord of the devas, addressed these people with a verse:

“He who is steadfast, tamed in every way, awakened, peerless among men,
Perfected, well-farer,
I am his attendant in the world.”⁷

Kd.1.22.15

¹ mutta. ² dasavāsa. Ten ariya-vāsā given at DN.iii.269, AN.v.29. ³ dasabala became an epithet of this and the previous Buddhas. ⁴ According to Vin-a.973 the ten paths of action. ⁵ According to Vin-a.973 the ten factors of an adept, asekhehi aṅgehi upeto. Cf. the adept’s ten qualities, dhammā, at AN.v.222, and his ten powers, balāni, at Ps.ii.173: both consist of the eight “fitnesses” of the eightfold Way with the addition of right knowledge and right freedom. ⁶ Quoted at Ja.i.84. ⁷ Ja.i.84.

Then the Lord approached the dwelling of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, with his own hand having offered, having satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, sat down at a respectful distance.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance it occurred to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “Now, where could the Lord stay that would be neither too far from a village nor too near, suitable for coming and going, accessible for people whenever they want¹, not crowded by day, having little noise at night, little sound, without folk’s breath, haunts of privacy, suitable for seclusion?”²

Then it occurred to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “Now, this Bamboo Grove of ours, a pleasure park,³ is neither too far from a village ... suitable for seclusion. Suppose I were to give the Bamboo Grove, a pleasure park, to the Order of the monks with the awakened one at its head?”

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having taken a ceremonial vessel made of gold, dedicated it to the Lord, saying: “May I, Lord, give this Bamboo Grove, a pleasure park, to the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head?” The Lord accepted the park.⁴ Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma, having risen from his seat, departed. Then the Lord, on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, I allow a park.”⁵

Vin.1.39

Kd.1.22.16

Kd.1.22.17

Kd.1.22.18

BD.4.52

ON THE GOING FORTH OF SĀRIPUTTA AND MOGGALLĀNA

Kd.1.23.1

At that time the wanderer Sañjaya¹ was residing in Rājagaha together with a great company of wanderers, with two hundred and fifty wanderers. Now at that time Sāriputta and Moggallāna fared the Brahma-faring under the wanderer Sañjaya, and an agreement came to be formed by these: “Whoever attains the deathless first, let him announce it.”

Kd.1.23.2

Then the venerable Assaji,² having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. He was pleasing whether he was approaching or departing, whether he was looking in front or looking behind, whether he was drawing in or stretching out (his arm), his eyes were cast down, he was possessed of pleasant behaviour.³ The wanderer Sāriputta saw the venerable Assaji walking for almsfood in Rājagaha—pleasing whether he was approaching ... possessed of pleasant behaviour—and seeing him, it occurred to him: “This is one of those monks who are indeed perfected ones in the world or who have entered on the way to perfection. What now if I, having approached this monk, should ask him: ‘On account of whom are you, your reverence, gone forth, or who is your teacher, or whose dhamma do you profess?’⁴”

Vin.1.40

Kd.1.23.3

Then it occurred to the wanderer Sāriputta: “But it is not the right time to question this monk, he has gone in among the houses, he is walking for almsfood. What now if I should follow close after this monk who has learnt a way for those who need it⁵?” Then the venerable Assaji, having ¹ atthikānaṃ-atthikānaṃ, explained at Vin-a.974 as going up to the awakened one and hearing dhamma. ² This is stock, Vin.2.158, DN.iii.38, MN.ii.118, MN.iii.13, AN.iv.88, Vb.224.

³ uyyāna; see definition at Vin.4.298. (BD.3.325). ⁴ uyyāna; see definition at Vin.4.298. (BD.3.325). ⁵ Ārāma, a park, and then a monastery. ¹ Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, ii.p.1000 identifies him with Sañjaya-Belaṭṭhiputta, one of the six famous heretical teachers of Gotama’s days, and whose doctrines are given at DN.i.58. See also MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.123. ² This Assaji was one of “the group of five” friends to whom Gotama addressed his first and second Utterances. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.122ff. for the view that the “subject of causation ... is due directly to Assaji,” and her Gotama the Man, p.76f., p.108, p.242, Manual of Buddhism, p.215. ³ Stock. Cf. e.g. MN.iii.35, MN.iii.90, DN.i.79, AN.ii.104, AN.ii.106, AN.ii.210, Vin.3.180. ⁴ Cf. above Kd.1.6.7. ⁵ atthikehi upaṇṇātaṃ maggaṃ. Vin-a.975 says this means either a way that is known and practiced; or, there will be deathlessness for us who need it; and thus upaṇṇāta means nibbāna, and so the meaning here is: tracking (or wayfaring after, magganto), seeking this.

¹ Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, ii.p.1000 identifies him with Sañjaya-Belaṭṭhiputta, one of the six famous heretical teachers of Gotama’s days, and whose doctrines are given at DN.i.58. See also MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.123. ² This Assaji was one of “the group of five” friends to whom Gotama addressed his first and second Utterances. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.122ff. for the view that the “subject of causation ... is due directly to Assaji,” and her Gotama the Man, p.76f., p.108, p.242, Manual of Buddhism, p.215. ³ Stock. Cf. e.g. MN.iii.35, MN.iii.90, DN.i.79, AN.ii.104, AN.ii.106, AN.ii.210, Vin.3.180. ⁴ Cf. above Kd.1.6.7. ⁵ atthikehi upaṇṇātaṃ maggaṃ. Vin-a.975 says this means either a way that is known and practiced; or, there will be deathlessness for us who need it; and thus upaṇṇāta means nibbāna, and so the meaning here is: tracking (or wayfaring after, magganto), seeking this.

walked for almsfood in Rājagaha, taking his almsbowl, returned. Then the wanderer Sāriputta approached the venerable Assaji; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the venerable Assaji; having exchanged courteous and friendly greetings, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, the wanderer Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Assaji: “Your reverence, your faculties are quite pure, your complexion very bright, very clear. On account of whom, your reverence, have you gone forth, or who is your teacher, or whose dhamma do you profess¹?”

BD.4.53

“There is, friend, a great recluse, a son of the Sakyans, gone forth from a Sakyan family. I have gone forth on account of this Lord and this Lord is my teacher and I profess this Lord’s dhamma.”

Kd.1.23.4

“But what is the doctrine of your reverence’s teacher, what does he point out?”

“Now, I, friend, am new,² not long gone forth, fresh to this dhamma and discipline. I am not able to teach you dhamma in full, but I can tell you its purport³ briefly.”

Then the wanderer Sāriputta spoke thus to the venerable Assaji: “So be it, your reverence, tell me little or tell me much, (but) in any case explain to me its purport; I want just its purport. Why should you make a great elaboration⁴?”

Kd.1.23.5

Then the venerable Assaji uttered this terse expression⁵ of dhamma to the wanderer Sāriputta:

BD.4.54

¹ As at Kd.1.6.7. ² nava. If occurring with bhikkhu means a recently ordained monk. But not so combined here. It can also mean young, but other evidence is lacking to show that Assaji, the last of the group of five to attain dhamma-vision Kd.1.6.36 was young in years. He was however young in standing as a follower of Gotama, newly ordained. ³ attha. This whole passage is controversial. MRS. RHYS DAVIDS takes attha here as “the well, the good,” Sakya, p.134f.; COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol.4, no.2, July 1939, p.172f. as “purport”. On the whole I am inclined to agree with his interpretation of the passage. See also E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, etc., p.93f. ⁴ vyañjana. See COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol.4, no.2, July 1939, p.171ff. E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha as Legend and History, p.94, n.1, says that this is a verse “in āryā metre ... even if now corrupted”, and he prints it as verse as does Norman at Dhṛp-a.1.92. ⁵ pariyāya, formula, paraphrase, circumlocution, see COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol.4, no.2, July 1939, p.172, n.1. Perhaps “epitome”. Cf. AN.iv.63, where dhamma-pariyāya also appears to refer to verses.

“Those things which proceed from a cause,
of these the Truth-finder has told the cause,
And that which is their stopping—the great recluse has such a doctrine.”¹

When the wanderer Sāriputta had heard this terse expression of dhamma, there arose dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, that “Whatever is of the nature to uprise all that is of the nature to stop.” He said: “If this is indeed dhamma, you have penetrated as far as the sorrowless path, unseen, neglected for many myriads of æons.”²

Kd.1.23.6

Then the wanderer Sāriputta approached the wanderer Moggallāna. Then the wanderer Moggallāna saw the wanderer Sāriputta coming in the distance, and seeing the wanderer Sāriputta, he spoke thus: “Friend, your faculties are quite pure, your complexion very bright, very clear. Can it be that you, friend, have attained the deathless?”

Vin.1.41

“Yes, friend, I have attained the deathless.”

Kd.1.23.7

“But how did you, friend, attain the deathless?”

“Now, I, friend, saw the venerable Assaji walking for almsfood in Rājagaha—pleasing whether he was approaching or departing ... (as at Kd.1.23.2)

Kd.1.23.8

...

“Then, friend, it occurred to me: ‘But it is not the right time to question this monk ... (as at Kd.1.23.3, Kd.1.23.4) ...

Kd.1.23.9

“Then, friend, the venerable Assaji uttered this terse expression of dhamma:

“Those things which proceed from a cause,
of these the Truthfinder has told the cause,
And that which is their stopping—the great recluse has such a doctrine.”

When the wanderer Moggallāna had heard this terse expression of dhamma ... (as at Kd.1.23.5) ...

Vin.1.42

Kd.1.24.1

BD.4.55

¹ Referred to at Ja.i.85. ² =Tha-ap.i.149. See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.135. Vin-a.976 takes the phrase to mean “this sorrowless path, unseen by us for many myriads of aeons is neglected” (or passed by, abbhatitam). Or, taking abbhatitam to mean “in the past, what is passed and over”, this passage could be translated; “unseen by us for many myriads of aeons in the past.”

Then the wanderer Moggallāna spoke thus to the wanderer Sāriputta: “Let us go, friend, to the Lord, (for) this Lord is the teacher for us.”

“Friend, these two hundred and fifty wanderers are staying here because of us, looking to us; do let us consult them so that they may do what they think (right).” Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached these wanderers; having approached, they spoke thus to these wanderers:

“We are going, friends, to the Lord, (for) this Lord is the teacher for us.”

“We, venerable ones, are staying here because of you, looking to you. If the venerable ones will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse all of us will fare the Brahma-faring under the great recluse.”

Kd.1.24.2

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached the wanderer Sañjaya; having approached they spoke thus to the wanderer Sañjaya: “Sir, we are going to the Lord, (for) this Lord is the teacher for us.”

“No, friends, do not go; we three will one and all look after this group.” And a second time ... And a third time ... “... will look after this group.”

Kd.1.24.3

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna, taking those two hundred and fifty wanderers, approached the Bamboo Grove; but on that self-same spot hot blood issued from the mouth of Sañjaya the wanderer.¹ The Lord saw Sāriputta and Moggallāna coming in the distance; seeing them, he addressed the monks saying:

“Monks, these two friends, Kolita and Upatissa,² are coming. This pair of disciples will be my chief, my eminent pair.”³

When, in the deep sphere of knowledge, they had attained the matchless freedom in which there is destruction of attachments,⁴ then the teacher explained about them in the Bamboo Grove:

¹ See Vinaya Texts i.149, n.1. ² Moggallāna was named Kolita, probably after his village, where he was born; Upatissa was Sāriputta’s name, as he is recorded to say at MN.i.150, “but my fellow Brahma-farers know me as Sāriputta”—a name derived from his mother’s, Rūpasārī. ³ Quoted at Dhp-a.i.95. ⁴ See Vinaya Texts i.149, n.3, for note on “extraordinary grammatical construction” of this passage. Note by Sujato: The reason for the “extraordinary grammatical construction” is that the passage is in verse, which was not recognized by editor or translator. I have not changed the text, but I have formatted it as verse.

“These two friends,
 Kolita and Upatissa, are coming.
 This pair of disciples will be my chief,
 my eminent pair.”

Kd.1.24.4
 Bd.4.56
 Vin.1.43

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined their heads to the Lord’s feet, they spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may we receive the going forth in the Lord’s presence, may we receive ordination?”

“Come, monks,” the Lord said, “well taught is dhamma fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.” So this was these venerable ones’ ordination.

Kd.1.24.5

Now at that time very distinguished young men belonging to respectable families of Magadha were faring the Brahma-faring under the Lord. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “The recluse Gotama gets along by making (us) childless, the recluse Gotama gets along by making (us) widows, the recluse Gotama gets along by breaking up families. A thousand matted hair ascetics have now been allowed to go forth by him, and these two hundred and fifty wanderers of Sañjaya have been allowed to go forth, and these very distinguished young men belonging to respectable families of Magadha are faring the Brahma-faring under the recluse Gotama.” Moreover, having seen the monks, they reprovved them in this verse:

“The great recluse has come to Giribbaja of the Magadhese
 Leading all Sañjaya’s (followers).
 Who will now be led by him?”

Kd.1.24.6

Monks heard these who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, this noise will not last for long, it will last only for seven days, after seven days it will cease. Therefore, monks, if they reprove you in this verse:

‘The great recluse has come to Giribbaja¹ of the Magadhese

 Leading all Sañjaya's (followers).
 Who will now be led by him?

You should reprove them in reply in this verse:

'Verily great heroes, Truthfinders,
 lead by what is true dhamma.
 Who would be jealous of the wise,
 leading by dhamma?'"

Now at that time the people, having seen the monks, reproved them in this verse:

Kd.1.24.7
 BD.4.57

"The great recluse has come
 to Giribbaja of the Magadhese
 Leading all Sañjaya's (followers).
 Who will now be led by him?"

The monks reproved these people in reply in this verse:

"Verily great heroes, Truthfinders,
 lead by what is true dhamma.
 Who would be jealous of the wise,
 leading by dhamma?"

Vin.1.44

With the people saying: "It is said that the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, lead by dhamma, not by what is not-dhamma," that noise lasted exactly seven days, after seven days it ceased.

Told is the Going Forth of Sāriputta and Moggallāna

Told is the Fourth Portion for Repeating

¹ A name for Rājagaha, cf. Snp.408. Literally "cow-pen". Vin-a.97 says Giribbaja was a town in the country of the Magadhese.

ON THE DUTIES TO THE PRECEPTOR

Now at that time monks, being without preceptors, not being exhorted, not being instructed, walked for almsfood wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, not befittingly attired.¹ While people were eating, they held their almsbowls close above the soft food for the remains,² and they held their almsbowls close above the solid food for the remains, and they held their almsbowls close above the savoury food for the remains, and they held their almsbowls close above the beverages³ for the remains, and having themselves asked for curry and boiled rice,⁴ they ate it, and they remained in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise.⁵

Kd.1.25.2

People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, walk for almsfood, wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, not befittingly attired? While people are eating, they hold their almsbowls close above the soft food ... and they remain in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise, like brahmins at the meal-time of brahmins.”

BD.4.58

Kd.1.25.3

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks, contented, conscientious, scrupulous desirous of training ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks walk for almsfood wrongly dressed ... and remain in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise?”

Kd.1.25.4

Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks walk for almsfood wrongly dressed ... and remain in the refectory making a great noise, a loud noise?”

Vin.1.45

“It is true, Lord.”

Kd.1.25.5

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“It is not fitting, monks, in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not proper, it is unworthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men walk for almsfood ... and remain in the refectory making a loud noise, a great noise? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased, but it is, monks, for displeasing those who are not (yet) pleased as well as those who are pleased, and for causing wavering in some.”

¹ See Bu-Sk.1, Bu-Sk.2, Bu-Sk.3, Bu-Sk.4, Bu-Sk.23, Bu-Sk.24, and BD.2.369 for references. I think it is meant that they were not wearing their robes in the regulation ways. ² uttiṭṭhappatta. Vin-a.977, as noted in Vinaya Texts i.152, gives two explanations of this phrase, the one connecting it with ucchittha, left over, rejected; the other with uṭṭhahati, to rise. ³ Cf. Vin.3.72 (BD.1.124) for these four items. ⁴ odana, one of the five soft foods (Vin.4.83). ⁵ Cf. Bu-Sk.11–Bu-Sk.14.

Kd.1.25.6

Then the Lord,¹ having rebuked these monks, having in many a figure spoken in dispraise of difficulty in supporting and maintaining oneself, of great desires, of lack of contentment, of clinging (to the obstructions), of indolence; having in many a figure spoken in praise of ease in supporting and maintaining oneself, of desiring little, of contentment, of expunging (evil), of punctiliousness, of graciousness, of decreasing (the obstructions), of putting forth energy, having given reasoned talk on what is fitting, on what is becoming, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, I allow a preceptor.² The preceptor, monks, should arouse in the one who shares his cell³ the attitude of a son⁴; the one who shares his cell should arouse in the preceptor the attitude of a father.⁵ Thus these, living with reverence, with deference, with courtesy towards one another, will come to growth, to increase, to maturity in this dhamma and discipline.

BD.4.59

Kd.1.25.7

“And thus, monks, should a preceptor be chosen⁶: having arranged the upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured his feet, having sat down on the haunches, having saluted with joined palms, he should speak to him thus: ‘Honoured sir, be my preceptor; honoured sir, be my preceptor; honoured sir, be my preceptor.’ If he⁷ says: ‘Very well’ or ‘Certainly’ or ‘All right’ or ‘It is proper’ or ‘Manage it amiably’, and makes this understood by gesture, makes this understood by speech, makes this understood by gesture and by speech, the preceptor has been chosen; if he does not make this understood by gesture, if he does not make this understood by speech,

Vin.1.46

¹ Cf. this passage with Vin.3.21 (BD.1.37). ² upajjhāya; Sanskrit upadhyāya, a tutor. ³ saddhivihārika, literally one who stays, resides, lives with (another), a co-resident, and so a pupil in the same vihāra. ⁴ puttacitta, a son’s mind. Cf. SN.iv.110f., mātucitta bhaginīcitta dhītucitta, the mind of a mother, sister, daughter. ⁵ pitucitta, a father’s mind. ⁶ ga-hetabbo, literally should be taken. But words for “choosing” were almost lacking, and gaṇhāti was often made to do duty for them. ⁷ I.e. the preceptor, see Vin-a.977.

if he does not make this understood by gesture and by speech, the preceptor has not been chosen.

Kd.1.25.8

“The one who shares a cell,¹ monks, should conduct himself properly towards the preceptor. This is the proper conduct in this respect: having got up early, having taken off his sandals,² having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, he should give tooth-wood,³ he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conje, having washed a bowl, the conje should be placed near (the preceptor). When he has drunk the conje, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it,⁴ having washed it properly without rubbing it, it should be put away. When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed. If that place is soiled, that place should be swept.

BD.4.60

Kd.1.25.9

“If the preceptor wishes to enter a village, his inner clothing⁵ should be given (to him), the inner clothing (that he is wearing) should be received (from him) in return,⁶ the girdle should be given (to him); having folded

¹ From here to BD.4.67 below, = Vin.2.223–227. ² Vin-a.977 says he might have worn these for pacing up and down or for keeping his feet clean if he had got up early. ³ dantakaṭṭha, as used by Indians today, a piece of wood. Allowed at Vin.2.138. Vin-a.977 says that the saddhivihārika, the one who shares a cell, having brought a large, a middle-sized and a small one—whatever he (the preceptor) takes of these is for three days, and then on the fourth, day he should be given the same again. ⁴ nīcaṃ katvā. So as not to let drops of water from inside the bowl spoil his robes when one is washing it; in the case of an earthen bowl it might break if dropped from a height. ⁵ nivāsana; possibly another word for antaravāsaka, the putting on of which is denoted by nivāseti, cf. BD.2.1, n.2, BD.2.32, n.2, n.3. ⁶ paṭṇivāsanaṃ paṭṇiggaḥetabbaṃ. Vin-a.978 is silent. Vinaya Texts i.155 suggests “house-dress?”. This would mean some kind of robe in addition to the three regulation ones. Bohtlingk and Roth, and Monier-Williams also both give “a kind of garment, for Buddhists”. It would look as if a monk might, and indeed must, enter village in a nivāsāna, but not in a paṭṇivāsana. I doubt the separate existence of such a garment. I suggest it is a nivāsāna that is simply changed for another when a monk sets out on the begging round. If he has a change of nivāsāna he could not be a tecīvarika. Monks in Ceylon often change their robes before they go out.

them¹ (into two or four folds), the outer robes are to be given² (to him); having washed it, a bowl with water³ is to be given (to him). If the preceptor desires an attendant, (the latter) having put on his inner robe all round so as to cover the three circles,⁴ having bound on the girdle, having folded them and having dressed in the outer robes, having fastened the ties, having washed, having taken a bowl, should be the preceptor's attendant. He should not walk too far away (from him), he should not walk too close. He should receive the bowl and its contents.⁵

“He should not interrupt the preceptor when he is speaking. (But) if the preceptor is bordering on an offence, then speaking himself, he should warn him. When he⁶ is returning,⁷ he⁸ should make a seat ready, having come back first; he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand⁹; having gone to meet him, he should receive his bowl and robe, he should give back the inner clothing (given) in return, he should receive his inner clothing. If a robe is damp with perspiration, he should dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but a robe should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should fold up the robe. When folding up the robe, having made the corners turn back four finger-breadths, he should fold up the robe thinking: ‘Mind there is no crease¹⁰ in the middle.’ The girdle should be placed in a fold (of the robe).¹¹ If there comes to be almsfood and the preceptor wishes to eat,¹ having given him water, almsfood should be placed near (him).

Kd.1.25.10

BD.4.61

¹ saguṇaṃ katvā. As at Kd.18.4.3. Vin-a.789 says “having made two robes of one” (i.e. having put two robes together), “two outer cloaks (saṅghāṭiyo) are to be given. Every robe is called a saṅghati if it is put together, saṅghāṭittā”. It thus seems that saṅghāṭi here stands both for the outer cloak and for the upper robe, uttarāsanga; not for the inner robe, however, since this, under the name nivāsana, had probably been given to the preceptor already. Usually there is only one robe called saṅghāṭi. ² saṅghāṭiyo, literally outer cloaks. See above note. ³ sa-udako means with the drops of water remaining in the bowl after rinsing it, not drying it. ⁴ Cf. Bu-Sk.1, Bu-Sk.2 (BD.3.121). ⁵ pattapariyāpanna. Vin-a.978 says that if the bowl is warm or heavy with the coney or rice received, the one who shares a cell should take the preceptor's bowl and give him his own. ⁶ Presumably the preceptor. ⁷ To the monastery from the alms-round. ⁸ Presumably the one who shares a cell. ⁹ Cf. Vin.1.9; Vin.4.231, Vin.4.310 (BD.3.191). ¹⁰ bhaṅga, breaking, splitting, dissolution, destruction. Vin-a.979 indicates that if the robe were folded up in the same crease every time, it would wear thin along that crease. ¹¹ obhoga. Vin-a.979 says “having folded up the girdle, it should be laid aside having arranged it in a fold (bhoga) of the robe”.

Kd.1.25.11

“He should offer the preceptor drinking-water. When he has eaten, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it,² having washed it properly without rubbing it, having emptied out the water, he should dry it for a short time in the sun’s warmth, but a bowl should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other hand under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground.³ When laying aside a robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.⁴ When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed, the water for washing the feet, the foot-stool, the foot-stand should be put away. If that place comes to be soiled, that place should be swept.

Vin.1.47

Kd.1.25.12

“If the preceptor wishes to bathe, he should prepare a bath. If he wants a cold (bath), he should prepare a cold one; if he wants a hot (bath), he should prepare a hot one. If the preceptor wishes to enter a bathroom⁵, he should knead chunam should moisten clay⁶; taking a chair for the bathroom,⁷ having gone close behind the preceptor, having given him the chair for the bathroom, having received his robe, he should lay it to one side. He should give him the chunam, he should give him the clay. If he is able to do so,⁸ he should enter the bathroom. When he is entering the bathroom, having smeared his face with clay, having covered himself front and back, he should enter the bathroom.

BD.4.62

Kd.1.25.13

¹ Vin-a.979 says that this would only be if he had failed to obtain almsfood in the village; in this case the one who shares his cell should bring him the almsfood which he himself had obtained. ² So as not to get dusty, Vin-a.979. ³ So as not to get dusty, Vin-a.979.

⁴ Vin-a.980, he is not to lay it aside by taking hold of the edges and throwing the robe over bamboo or cord, or the fold might be damaged by coming into contact with a wall.

⁵ jantāghara, see Vinaya Texts i.157, n.2; iii.103. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.183, calls jantāghara, “a common bath”, and jantāgharasālā, “bath-rooms”. ⁶ Clay for use on the face in the bath-room allowed at Vin.2.120. ⁷ Allowed at Vin.2.120. ⁸ Vin-a.980, if he is not ill. The bathroom must have been full of hot steam, and juniors as much as seniors had to be careful to protect their faces with a smearing of clay.

“He should not sit down so as to encroach upon (the space intended for) monks who are elders.¹ He should not keep newly ordained monks from a seat. He should make preparation for the preceptor in the bathroom. When he is leaving the bathroom, taking the chair for the bathroom, having covered himself front and back, he should leave the bath-room. He should also make preparation for the preceptor in the water. When he is bathing, having come out (of the water) first, having dried his own body, having put on his inner robe, he should wipe off the water from the preceptor’s limbs, he should give him his inner clothing, he should give him his outer cloak²; taking the chair for the bathroom, having come back first, he should make ready a seat, he should put out water for washing the feet, a footstool, a footstand. He should offer the preceptor drinking-water.

Kd.1.25.14

“If he wishes to make him recite,³ he should make him recite. If he wishes to interrogate,⁴ he should be interrogated. In whatever dwelling-place the preceptor is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, it should be cleaned if he⁵ is able (to do so). When he is cleaning the dwelling-place, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet,⁶ he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the mattress⁷ and the squatting-mat,⁸ he should lay them to one side.

BD.4.63

“Having lowered the couch, having taken it out properly without rubbing it,⁹ without knocking it against the door or the posts,¹⁰ he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out properly without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the couch,¹ he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the spittoon,² he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining-board,³ he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the ground-covering,⁴ having observed how it was laid down,⁵ he should lay it to one side. If there come to be cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering⁶; he should wipe the corners⁷ of the window-holes.⁸ If a wall that was coloured red⁹ becomes stained, he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked¹⁰ becomes stained he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground did not come to be treated, he should sweep it, having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: ‘Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust.’ Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side.

Kd.1.25.15

Vin.1.48

¹ Cf. Vin.4.42, where monks must not lie down in the space meant for elders, and see BD.2.247, n.3. This expression and the next also occur at Kd.18.4.2. ² saṃghāṭi, perhaps here meaning the upper robe as well as the outer cloak, although then the plural might have been expected. See above, BD.4.60, n.3. ³ No doubt meaning, if the preceptor wishes to make the one who shares the cell recite the Pātimokkha or give an exposition of the eight chief rules, cf. BD.2.271, n.1. ⁴ Cf. BD.2.271, n.2. ⁵ I.e. the one who shares a cell. ⁶ nisidanapaccattharaṇa. Cf. BD.2.34, n.1, BD.2.46, n.3, BD.2.244, n.6. ⁷ Cf. BD.2.47, n.1. ⁸ Cf. BD.2.73, n.6. ⁹ Vin-a.980, without rubbing it on the ground. ¹⁰ kavāṭapiṭṭha. Vin-a.980 explains as “not touching the door (kavāṭa) and the door-posts” (piṭṭhasaṃghāṭa). On kavāṭa and piṭṭhasaṃghāṭa see BD.2.258, n.3, n.8, and A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p.256 (under dvāra). Kavāṭa allowed at Vin.2.142, and kavāṭapiṭṭhasaṃghāṭa at Vin.2.153, Vin.2.154.

BD.4.64

Kd.1.25.16

“Having dried the ground-covering in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the supports for the couch¹¹ in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them where they were before. Having dried the couch in the sun ... the chair in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back properly without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the mattress and the squatting-mat in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down before. Having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down before. Having dried the spittoon in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before. Having dried the reclining-board in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before.

¹ A couch and a chair might have removable legs; cf. BD.2.240. See BD.4.64, n.4. ² Allowed at Vin.2.175. ³ apassenaphalaka, a board for resting the head, arms or elbows upon. Allowed at Vin.2.175. Some made of stone can be found at the entrance to dwelling-places among the ancient remains at Anuradhapura. ⁴ bhummattharaṇa; cf. BD.2.46, n.4. ⁵ Paññatta; same word as is used for “laying down” a rule of training, see BD.2.4, n.1. ⁶ ullokā paṭhamam ohāretabbam. Not, I think, “he should remove them as soon as he sees them”, as at Vinaya Texts i.159 and as favoured by Pali-English Dictionary. For ulloka occurs at Vin.2.151 as meaning a cloth or covering for a couch or chair, and was something that could be spread, santharati. Thus it probably has a technical meaning, and is one of the numerous kinds of “cloths”. Budhaghosa on Vin.2.151 explains it as cilimika; and this he explains at Vin-a.775 as something made for preserving the texture of earth which is prepared with plaster. ⁷ Vin-a.980, of the room. But it seems more probable that the corners of the window-holes are intended. ⁸ ālokasandhi. Cf. BD.2.258 and n.2; BD.2.259 and n.1. ⁹ gerukaparikkammakata. Geruka is yellow ochre or red chalk. Cf. BD.2.259 and n.3. ¹⁰ Cf. BD.2.259. Setavaṇṇa, whitewash or plaster, the third colouring (with red and black) allowed for use in vihāras (Vin.2.150) is not included above. ¹¹ Allowed at Vin.2.150. It seems that these supports were detachable from the couches, for first they were to be taken out and put in the sun, and then the couch was to be taken out. Vinaya Texts iii.278, n.3, says that the couch “was supported on movable tressels—the paṭipādakā”, but A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p.265, sees “no reason why the paṭipādakā of a mañca should not be fixed legs”. On the other hand, āhaccapādaka (of couches and chairs) seems to mean “removable legs”, Bu-Pc.14, and Vin.2.149.

Kd.1.25.17
BD.4.65

“He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl ... (as in Kd.1.25.11) ... the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

Kd.1.25.18

“If dusty winds blow from the east, he should close the eastern windows.¹ If dusty winds blow from the west, he should close the western windows. If dusty winds blow from the north, he should close the northern windows. If dusty winds blow from the south, he should close the southern windows. If the weather is cool, he should open the windows by day, he should close them at night. If the weather is warm, he should close the windows by day, he should open them at night.

Vin.1.49

“If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch² ... If an attendance-hall³ ... If a fire-hall⁴ ... If a privy comes to be soiled, the privy should be swept. If there does not come to be drinking-water, drinking-water should be provided. If there does not come to be water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there does not come to be water in the pitcher of water for rinsing,⁵ water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing.

Kd.1.25.19

“If dissatisfaction⁶ has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell

Kd.1.25.20

¹ vātapāna, see BD.2.259, n.1. Three kinds allowed at Vin.2.148. ² koṭṭhaka, or gate-house, or store-room, allowed at Vin.2.142, Vin.2.153. ³ upaṭṭhānasālā, allowed at Vin.2.153. See BD.2.194, n.4. ⁴ aggisālā, allowed at Vin.2.154. ⁵ ācamanakumbhī, allowed at Vin.2.142. ⁶ anabhirati, see BD.1.114, n.1; and Vin.1.144.

should allay¹ it or should get (another) to allay² it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If remorse has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares the cell should dispel it or should get (another) to dispel it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If wrong views have arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell should dissuade him (from them) or should get another to dissuade him (from them),³ or he should give him a talk on dhamma.⁴”

Kd.1.25.21

BD.4.66

“If the preceptor has committed an offence against an important rule⁵ and deserves probation,⁶ the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order grant the preceptor probation?’ If the preceptor deserves to be sent back to the beginning,⁷ the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order send the preceptor back to the beginning?’ If the preceptor deserves mānatta (discipline), the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) on the preceptor?’ If the preceptor deserves rehabilitation,⁸ the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order rehabilitate the preceptor?’

Kd.1.25.22

“If the Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against the preceptor—one of censure⁹ or one of guidance¹⁰ or one of banishment¹¹ or one of reconciliation¹² or one of suspension¹³—the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order not carry out

¹ vūpakāsetabbā. Vin-a.981 says that he should take him elsewhere. ² vūpakāśāpetabbā. Another monk should be told: ‘Having taken the elder, go elsewhere’, Vin-a.981. Cf. Vin.1.142 (=below, BD.4.190). ³ Cf. Vin.1.142 (=below, BD.4.190). ⁴ For above passage cf. AN.v.72, where competence in these matters is one of the qualifications a monk must possess in order to confer the upasampadā ordination. ⁵ At Vin.4.51, one of the qualities a monk must possess in order to exhort the nuns is that of not having offended against an “important rule”, garudhamma. There were eight “important rules” to be kept by nuns; see BD.2.266, n.11 and BD.4.267. But, above, the important rules seem to refer to Saṅghādisesa, for what follows; probation, etc., are among the penalties for breaking Saṅghādisesa rules. ⁶ parivāsa, cf. BD.1.196, n.3, and Vin.1.143, Vin.2.31ff. Not the same parivāsa as that granted to members of other sects on their wishing to enter the Order, see below, BD.4.85. ⁷ Cf. BD.1.196, n.4, and for mānatta BD.1.196, n.5, and Vin.1.143. ⁸ abbhāna, cf. BD.1.196, n.6; BD.3.28, n.4. ⁹ tajjaniya. Cf. Vin.1.143, Vin.2.2ff. See Vin.1.325, AN.i.99 and DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.170, for this and the four following formal acts. ¹⁰ nissaya, tutelage. Cf. Kd.11.9.1ff. ¹¹ pabbājaniya. Cf. Kd.11.13.1ff. ¹² paṭisāraniya. Cf. Kd.11.18.1ff. ¹³ ukkhepaniya. Cf. Kd.11.25.1ff.

a (formal) act against the preceptor or change it to a lighter one?’¹ Yet if a (formal) act—one of censure ... one of suspension—is carried out by the Order against him, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor conduct himself properly,² be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order could revoke that (formal) act?’

Kd.1.25.23

“If the preceptor’s robe should be washed, the one who shares his cell should wash it or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor’s robe be washed?’ If the preceptor’s robe-material should be made up, the one who shares his cell should make it up or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor’s robe-material be made up?’ If dye should be boiled for the preceptor ... If the preceptor’s robe should be dyed ... ‘... could the preceptor’s robe be dyed?’ When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased.³

Vin.1.50
BD.4.67

“Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not give an almsbowl to anyone nor should he receive an almsbowl from anyone; he should not give a robe to anyone nor should he receive a robe from anyone; he should not give a requisite to anyone nor should he receive a requisite from anyone; he should not cut off anyone’s hair nor should he have his hair cut off by anyone; he should not render a service to anyone nor should he cause a service to be rendered by anyone; he should not execute a commission for anyone nor should he cause a commission to be executed by anyone; he should not become an attendant on anyone nor should he take anyone as an attendant; he should not bring back alms-food for anyone nor should he have almsfood brought back by anyone. Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not enter a village, he should not go to a cemetery, he should not leave the district.⁴ If the preceptor becomes ill, he should tend him for as long as life lasts; he should wait (with him) until

Kd.1.25.24

¹ Vin-a.981 indicates that the one who shares the cell should do his best to plead with the monks to cancel the formal act. But if they insist, he should beg the preceptor to conduct himself properly. ² Cf. BD.1.323 and its n.1, n.2, n.3 for these expressions. ³ acchinne theve. Vin-a.981 says “he should not depart if even a little dye is falling down.” Proper methods for dyeing robe-material given at Vin.1.286. ⁴ disā pakkamitabbā. Cf. Kd.2.21.1 where ignorant monks travelling to distant parts, disaṅgamikā, do not ask teachers and preceptors for permission.

he recovers.¹”

Told is what is due to a Preceptor

ON THE DUTIES TO THE ONE WHO SHARES HIS CELL

Kd.1.26.1

“The preceptor,² monks, should conduct himself properly towards the one who shares his cell. This is the proper conduct in this respect: the one who shares the cell should be furthered,³ he should be helped by the preceptor in regard to recitation, interrogation, exhortation, instruction.⁴ If there is a bowl for the preceptor but no bowl for the one who shares his cell, a bowl should be given by the preceptor to the one who shares his cell, or he should make an effort, thinking ‘How then could a bowl be procured for the one who shares my cell?’ If there is a robe for the preceptor ... If there is (another) requisite for the preceptor ... ‘How then could (another) requisite be procured for the one who shares my cell?’

BD.4.68

Vin.1.51

Kd.1.26.2

“If the one who shares the cell becomes ill, having got up early he should give tooth-wood, he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conje⁵ ... that place should be swept.

Kd.1.26.3

“If the one who shares a cell wishes to enter a village⁶ ... having washed, a bowl with water is to be given to him. Thinking, ‘He will be returning about now’, he should⁷ make ready a seat, he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand ... He should offer drinking water to the one who shares his cell.

Vin.1.52

“In whatever dwelling-place one who shares a cell is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, it should be cleaned if he is able to do so ...⁸ ... so that the Order could revoke that (formal) act.’

Vin.1.53

Kd.1.26.8

– “If the robe of one who shares a cell should be washed, the preceptor

Kd.1.26.11

¹ vuṭṭhānassa, until he gets up from his illness, Vin-a.982. Cf. Vism.94. ² From here to BD.4.69, below = Vin.2.227–Vin.2.230. ³ saṃgahetabbo, used with the next word, anuggahetabbo, below, BD.4.157. ⁴ These four words are used in definition of “should (neither) help” at Vin.4.325 (BD.3.376); and cf. BD.2.271, n.2. ⁵ As at Kd.1.25.2, reading “preceptor” for “one who shares a cell” and vice versa. ⁶ As at Kd.1.25.9 (first half). ⁷ From here to the end of Kd.1.26.6, as at Kd.1.25.10–Kd.1.25.13, omitting the first two sentences of Kd.1.25.10.

⁸ As at Kd.1.25.14–Kd.1.25.22.

should explain, saying: ‘Thus should you wash it or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the robe of the one who shares my cell be washed?’ If the robe-material of one who shares a cell should be made up, the preceptor should explain, saying: ‘Thus should you make it up’, or ... ‘How then could the robe-material of the one who shares a cell’ ... ‘Thus should you boil it or ... ‘How then could dye be boiled for the one who shares my cell?’ If the robe of the one who shares a cell should be dyed ... ‘Thus should you dye it’, or ... ‘How then could the robe of the one who shares my cell be dyed?’ When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased. If the one who shares a cell becomes ill, he should tend him as long as life lasts; he should wait until he recovers.”

BD.4.69

Told is what is due to one who shares a cell

ON DISMISSAL

Now at that time those who shared cells did not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can those who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that those who share cells do not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?”

Kd.1.27.1

“It is true, Lord.”

The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can those who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?”

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, those who share cells should not not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors. Whoever should not conduct himself properly, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.1.54

Kd.1.27.2

Even so, they did not conduct themselves properly. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to dismiss¹ one who does not conduct himself properly. And thus, monks, should he be dismissed: If he, saying: ‘I dismiss you’ or ‘Do not come back here’ or ‘Bring back your bowl and robe’ or ‘I am not to be waited upon by you’, makes this understood by gesture, if he makes this understood by voice, if he makes this understood by gesture and by voice, the one who shares the cell comes to be dismissed. If he does not make this understood by gesture, if he does not make this understood by voice, if he does not make this understood by gesture and by voice, the one who shares the cell does not come to be dismissed.

¹ paṇāmetuṃ.

Kd.1.27.3

Now at that time those who shared a cell and who were dismissed did not apologise. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow (them), monks, to apologise.” Even so, they did not apologise. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is dismissed is not not to apologise. Whoever should not apologise, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.4.70

Kd.1.27.4

Now at that time preceptors, on being apologised to, did not forgive. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to forgive.” Even so, they did not forgive. And those who shared a cell departed and they left the Order and they went over to (other) sects. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, when you are being apologised to you should not not forgive. Whoever should not forgive, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.27.5

Now at that time preceptors dismissed those who were conducting themselves¹ properly, they did not dismiss those who were not conducting themselves properly. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is conducting himself properly is not to be dismissed. Whoever should dismiss him, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And, monks, one who is not conducting himself properly is not not to be dismissed. Whoever should not dismiss him, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.27.6

¹ For use of singular, where we should use the plural, cf. BD.3.364, BD.3.367, BD.3.369. Here the meaning is that each of several preceptors dismissed the particular monk who shared his cell.

“Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities he may be dismissed: if there does not come to be much affection for his preceptor, if there does not come to be much faith (in him), if there does not come to be much sense of shame (towards him), if there does not come to be much respect (for him), if there does not come to be much development¹ (under him). Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities he may be dismissed. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities he should not be dismissed: if there comes to be much affection for his preceptor ... if there comes to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities he should not be dismissed.

Kd.1.27.7

“Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities it is suitable² to dismiss him: if there does not come to be much affection for his preceptor ... if there does not come to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities, it is suitable to dismiss him. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities it is not suitable to dismiss him: if there comes to be much affection for his preceptor ... if there comes to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities it is not suitable to dismiss him.

BD.4.71

Vin.1.55

Kd.1.27.8

“Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities, a preceptor, in not dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in dismissing him, he does not become one who has gone too far: if there does not come to be much affection for his preceptor... if there does not come to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities, a preceptor, in not dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in dismissing him he does not become one who has gone too far. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of five qualities, the preceptor, in dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in not dismissing him, he does not become one who has gone too far: if there comes to be much affection for the preceptor ... if there comes to be much development. Monks, if one who shares a cell is possessed of these five qualities, a preceptor, in dismissing him, becomes one who has gone too far; in not dismissing him, he does not become one who has gone too far.”

¹ bhāvanā. Vin-a.982 explains by mettabhāvanā, development of amity. ² alaṃ, enough.

Kd.1.28.1

Now at that time a certain brahmin, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks did not want to let him go forth, and because he could not obtain the going forth among the monks, he became lean, wretched, of a bad colour, very yellow, his veins standing out all over his body.¹ The Lord saw this brahmin, lean ... all over his body, and seeing him, he addressed the monks, saying: “How is it, monks, that this brahmin is lean ... all over his body?”

“Lord, this brahmin asked the monks for the going forth. The monks did not want to let him go forth, and because he could not obtain the going forth among the monks, he is lean ... all over his body.”

Kd.1.28.2
BD.4.72

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Now, monks, who remembers a service² done by this brahmin?” When he had spoken thus the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “I, Lord, remember a service done by this brahmin.”

“Now, what help (given) by this brahmin, Sāriputta, do you remember?”

“Lord, as I was walking for almsfood here in Rājagaha this brahmin had spoon-alms³ bestowed upon me. This, Lord, is the service done by this brahmin which I remember.”

Vin.1.56
Kd.1.28.3

“Good, Sāriputta, it is good. Indeed those who are truly men,⁴ Sāriputta, are thankful and grateful.⁵ Because of this do you, Sāriputta, let this brahmin go forth (and) ordain him.”

“How, lord, do I let this brahmin go forth, how do I ordain him?”

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“From this day forth, monks, I abolish that ordination by going to the three refuges which I allowed. I allow you, monks, to ordain by a (formal) act consisting of a motion and a resolution put three times.⁶

Kd.1.28.4

“And thus, monks, should one ordain: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This (person) so and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain so and so, through the preceptor so and so. This is the motion.

¹ Stock, cf. Vin.3.88 (BD.1.153–BD.1.154). ² adhikāra. ³ kaṭacchubhikkhā, alms given with a ladle to a monk (cf. Thag.934, Mi.9); contrasted with ticket-food and the gifts of robes, etc., at Dhṛp-a.1.379, and with a “great gift”, mahādāna, given to a body of monks at Pv.2.9.56–Pv.2.9.58. ⁴ sappurisa. Cf. Vin.3.7. ⁵ Cf. SN.ii.272. ⁶ ñatticatuttha. See Kd.9.3.4–Kd.9.3.9, and DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.150.

Kd.1.28.5

“Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This person so and so ... may ordain so and so. The Order is ordaining so and so through the preceptor so and so. If the ordination of so and so through the preceptor so and so is pleasing to the venerable ones let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... should speak.

Kd.1.28.6
BD.4.73

“And a third time I speak forth this matter ... should speak. So and so is ordained by the Order through the preceptor so and so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Now at that time a certain monk immediately after he was ordained indulged in bad habits. Monks spoke thus: “Do not, your reverence, do that, it is not allowed.”¹ He spoke thus: “But indeed, I did not ask the venerable ones saying, ‘Ordain me’. Why did you ordain me without being asked (to do so)?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not ordain without being asked (to do so). Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain when you have been asked (to do so).

Kd.1.29.1

Vin.1.57

“And thus, monks, should one ask (for it): That one who wishes for ordination, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks’ feet, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘Honoured sirs, I ask the Order for ordination; honoured sirs, may the Order raise me up,² out of compassion.’ And a second time should he ask ... And a third time should he ask ...

Kd.1.29.2

Kd.1.29.3

¹ Cf. BD.1.309, BD.2.230, BD.2.393. ² ullumpatu, meaning according to Vin-a.984 “having made me arise from what is bad may they establish me in what is good; or, having raised me from the status of a novice may they establish me in the status of a monk”. Cf. below, BD.4.122, and Vin-a.1033. See also A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol.4, No.2, p.145, where he takes ullumpatu as meaning “extract” (me from all evil).

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This (person) so and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. So and so asks the Order for ordination through the preceptor so and so. If it seems right to the Order the Order may ordain so and so through the preceptor so and so. This is the motion.

Kd.1.29.4

“‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This (person) so and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. So and so asks the Order for ordination through the preceptor so and so. If the ordination of so and so through the preceptor so and so is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... So and so is ordained by the Order through the preceptor so and so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

BD.4.74

Kd.1.30.1

Now at that time in Rājagaha a succession of meals of sumptuous foods came to be arranged.¹ Then it occurred to a certain brahmin: “Now, these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are pleasant in character, pleasant in conduct; having eaten good meals they lie down on beds sheltered from the wind.² What now if I should go forth among these recluses, sons of the Sakyans?” Then that brahmin, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks allowed him to go forth (and) they ordained him.

Kd.1.30.2

The succession of meals dwindled away³ after he had gone forth. Monks spoke thus: “Come along now, your reverence, we will walk for almsfood.” He spoke thus: “Your reverences, I did not go forth for this—that I should walk for almsfood. If you will give to me, I will eat, but if you will not give to me, I will leave the Order.”

Vin.1.58

“But, did you, your reverence, go forth for your belly’s sake?”

Kd.1.30.3

“Yes, your reverences.”

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this monk go forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught for his belly's sake?" These monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Cf. Vin.1.248, Vin.4.75 (BD.2.315). ² Cf. Vin.1.72, Vin.4.129 (BD.3.10-11). ³ Khīyittha; cf. khīyanti at BD.2.236, n.1, n.2.

"Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, went forth for your belly's sake?"

"It is true, Lord."

The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

"How can you, foolish man, go forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught for your belly's sake? It is not foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased." Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

BD.4.75

Kd.1.30.4

"I allow you, monks, when you are ordaining, to explain four resources¹: that going forth is on account of meals of scraps; in this respect effort is to be made by you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: a meal for an Order, a meal for a special person, an invitation, ticket-food, (food given) on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon, on an Observance day, or the day after an Observance day.² That going forth is on account of rag-robbs; in this respect effort is to be made by you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: (robbs made of) linen, cotton, silk, wool, coarse hemp, canvas.³ That going forth is on account of a lodging at the root of a tree; in this respect effort is to be made by you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: a dwelling-place, a curved house,⁴ a long house,⁵ a mansion,⁶ a cave.⁷ That going forth is on account of ammonia as a medicine; in this respect effort is to be made by

¹ nissaya, cf. Vin.1.96. Nissaya is something which you depend upon, which supplies you, a source of supply. Not to be confused with the formal act called nissaya, referred to at Vin.1.49 (BD.4.66, above), which is an act placing someone under guidance, giving him help.

² For last four, cf. BD.2.313–BD.2.314 and notes. ³ See Kd.2.7.143, and notes. ⁴ aḍḍhayoga. Commentaries speak of it as supaṇṇavaṅkageha (see Pali-English Dictionary), as garuḷasaṅṭhānapāsāda (see Critical Pali Dictionary), and as suvaṇṇavaṅkageha (see Vinaya Texts i.173, n.1). It is possible that the curve refers only to the roof, curved upwards perhaps at the ends, like some forms of domestic architecture in present-day India, and this is the reason for the aḍḍha, half: that in some respect the building is half and not entirely curved. At Vin.2.172 it is said that repairs may be made to an aḍḍhayoga during a period of seven or eight years.

⁵ pāsāda, see BD.2.16, n.5. ⁶ hammiya, see BD.2.16, n.6. ⁷ guha. These five are the five lenāni, abodes, allowed at Vin.2.146; allowed at Vin.1.107, as the site for an uposatha hall; at Vin.1.239 as the site for kappiyabhūmi, a place for what is allowable, an outhouse; at Vin.1.284 as the site for a store-room—in the last three cases the sites are to be agreed upon by the Order.

you for life. (These are) extra acquisitions: ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses.¹

Told is the Fifth Portion for Repeating: on what is due to a Preceptor

ON THE DUTIES TO THE TEACHER

BD.4.76 Now at that time a certain brahmin youth, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks explained the resources to him beforehand. He spoke thus: "If honoured sirs, you had explained the resources to me after I had gone forth, I should have been satisfied, but now, honoured sirs, I will not go forth; the resources are disgusting and loathsome to me." The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, the resources should not be explained beforehand. Whoever should (thus) explain them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to explain the resources soon after ordaining (a person)."

Kd.1.31.2

Now at that time monks ordained through a group of two and a group of three (monks). They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, you should not ordain through a group of less than ten (monks).² Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through a group of ten or more than ten (monks)."

Kd.1.31.3

Now at that time monks of one year's standing and of two years' standing (severally) ordained the one who shared his cell. And when he was of one year's standing,³ the venerable Upasena, Vanganta's son,⁴ ordained the one who shared his cell. When he was of two years' standing, having kept the rains-residence, taking the one who shared his cell and who was of one year's standing, he approached the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Now, it is the custom for awakened ones, for Lords to exchange friendly greetings with in-coming monks.

¹ Cf. BD.1.133, BD.2.342. At BD.2.131 these five medicines may be used by ill monks. ² See Vin.1.319. A group gaṇa, is usually in the Vinaya regarded as consisting of from two to four monks (or nuns), but here it is equivalent to an Order, a saṅgha. ³ See Ja.ii.449, Vin-a.194, Ud-a.266, AN-a.i.271 for this same episode. Ud-a. states that Upasena was of two years' standing as a preceptor. But it is more likely that AN-a. is right in saying that two years' standing as a monk is meant, i.e. since his own ordination. ⁴ See BD.2.83.

Then the Lord spoke thus to the venerable Upasena, Vanganta's son: "I hope, monk, that things go well with you, I hope you are keeping going, I hope you came here with but little fatigue on the journey."

Kd.1.31.4

"Things do go well with me, Lord, I am keeping going, Lord, I came, Lord, with but little fatigue on the journey."

BD.4.77

Now, Truthfinders (sometimes) ask knowing,¹ and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask, knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask, knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truthfinders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal. There is bridge-breaking², for Truthfinders in whatever does not belong to the goal. Awakened ones, Lords, question monks concerning two matters: "Shall we teach dhamma?" or "Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?"

Kd.1.31.5

Then the Lord spoke thus to the venerable Upasena, Vanganta's son: "Of how many years' standing are you, monk?"

"I, Lord, am of two years' standing."

"And of how many years' standing is this monk?"

"He is of one year's standing, Lord."

"Who is this monk as regards you?"

"He is the one who shares my cell, Lord."

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked (him), saying:

"It is not fitting, foolish man, it is not becoming, it is not proper, it is unworthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it should not be done. How can you, foolish man, when you should be exhorted and instructed by others, think to exhort and instruct another (monk)? Too quickly have you, foolish man, turned to abundance,³ that is to say to acquiring a group. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased." Having rebuked him, having given

¹ See also Vin.1.158, Vin.1.250, Vin.3.6, Vin.3.88-89 for this passage; and BD.1.13, n.1, n.2.

² See COOMARASWAMY, The Perilous Bridge of Welfare, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol. 8, No. 2, August, 1944, for a discussion of the Bridge mainly from Indian sources. ³ Cf.

Vin.1.287.

reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one who is of less than ten years’ standing should not ordain.¹ Whoever (such) should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through one who is of ten years’ standing or through one who is of more than ten years’ standing.”

Kd.1.31.6
BD.4.78

Now at that time ignorant, inexperienced monks ordained thinking: “We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing.” (Consequently) there were to be found ignorant preceptors, wise (monks) who shared their cells; inexperienced preceptors, experienced (monks) who shared their cells; preceptors who had heard little, (monks) who shared their cells who had heard much; preceptors of poor intelligence, intelligent (monks) who shared their cells; and a certain former member of another sect, when he was being spoken to by his preceptor regarding a rule, having refuted the preceptor, went over to the fold of that same sect² (as before.)

Vin.1.60

Kd.1.31.7

Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these ignorant, inexperienced monks ordain, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing’? (So that) there are to be found ... intelligent (monks) who share their cells.” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that ignorant, inexperienced monks ordained, thinking: ... there are to be found ... intelligent (monks) who share their cells?”

Kd.1.31.8

“It is true, Lord.”

Then awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men, ignorant, inexperienced, ordain, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing’? ... intelligent (monks) who share their cells. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one who is ignorant, inexperienced should not ordain. Whoever (such) should ordain, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through an experienced, competent monk who is of ten years' standing or more than ten years' standing.”

¹ Cf. Bi-Pc.74, where a nun of less than twelve years’ standing should not ordain. ² titthāyatanam saṅkhami. Cf. Vin.4.217 (BD.3.167).

Now at that time monks, when their preceptors had gone away and had left the Order and had died and had gone over to another side (of the Order),¹ being without teachers,² not being exhorted, not being instructed, walked for almsfood wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, not befittingly attired. While people were eating ... (=Kd.1.25.1-1.25.4) ...

Kd.1.32.1

BD.4.79

“It is true, Lord.”

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, I allow a teacher. The teacher, monks, should arouse in his pupil³ the attitude of a son; the pupil should arouse in his teacher the attitude of a father. Thus these, living with reverence, with deference, with courtesy towards one another, will come to growth, increase, maturity in this dhamma and discipline. I allow you, monks, to live ten years in dependence,⁴ and when one is of ten years' standing to give guidance.⁵

Kd.1.32.2

“And thus, monks, should a teacher be chosen: having arranged the upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured his feet, having sat down on the haunches, having saluted with joined palms, he should speak to him thus: ‘Honoured sir, be my teacher, I will live in dependence on the venerable one; honoured sir, be my teacher, I will live in dependence on the venerable one; honoured sir, be my teacher, I will live in dependence on the venerable one.’ If he says: ‘Very well’ or ‘Certainly’ or ‘All right’ or ‘It is proper’ or ‘Manage it amiably’, and makes this understood by gesture ... (=Kd.1.25.7-1.25.24, reading teacher and pupil for preceptor and one who shares a cell) ... If the teacher becomes ill, he should tend him as long as life lasts; he should wait until he recovers.”

Vin.1.61

¹ Cf. BD.3.190. ² ācariya. See Vinaya Texts i.178, n.2 for note comparing this with preceptor. Vism. 94 says that in a dwelling-place are teachers, preceptors, those who share a cell, pupils, those having the same preceptors, those having the same teachers. It mentions teachers for the going forth, teachers for ordination, pupils ordained and allowed to go forth having the same preceptor; teachers in guidance, in the exposition (or recitation, of the Pātimokkha), pupils in the same having the same teacher. ³ antevāsika. ⁴ nissāyaṃ vatthuṃ. ⁵ nissayaṃ dātuṃ. There is also the formal act of nissaya, of placing under guidance, as in Kd.1.25.22. The word translated above, Kd.1.30.4, as “resource” is also nissaya, but it is there combined with the verb ācikkhituṃ.

Told is what is due to a Teacher

ON THE DUTIES TO THE STUDENT

Kd.1.33.1

“The teacher, monks, should conduct himself properly towards his pupil. This is the proper conduct in this respect: the pupil should be furthered, he should be helped by the teacher ... (=Kd.1.26.1-1.26.2, reading teacher and pupil for preceptor and one who shares a cell) ... If the pupil becomes ill, he should tend him as long as life lasts; he should wait until he recovers.”

BD.4.80

What is due to a Pupil

The Sixth Portion for Repeating

ON NOT FORGIVING WHEN DISMISSED

Now at that time pupils did not conduct themselves properly towards their teachers ... (=Kd.1.27.1-1.27.8, reading teacher and pupil as above) ... in not dismissing him he does not become one who has gone too far.”

THE STORY OF THE IGNORANT AND INEXPERIENCED

Kd.1.35.1

Now at that time ignorant, inexperienced monks, gave guidance, thinking: “We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing.” (So that) there were to be found ignorant teachers, wise pupils; inexperienced teachers, experienced pupils; teachers who had heard little, pupils who had heard much; teachers of poor intelligence, intelligent pupils. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these ignorant inexperienced monks give guidance, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing’? (So that) there are to be found ignorant teachers ... intelligent pupils.”

Vin.1.62

Kd.1.35.2

Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that ignorant, inexperienced (monks)¹ are giving guidance, thinking: ‘We are of ten years’ standing, we are of ten years’ standing?’”

“Is it true, Lord.” The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked them; having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, one who is ignorant, inexperienced, should not give guidance. Whoever (such) should give it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to give guidance through an experienced, competent monk who is of ten years’ standing or of more than ten years’ standing.”²

ON THE NULLIFICATIONS OF GUIDANCE

Now at that time monks, when their teachers and preceptors had gone away and had left the Order and had died and had gone over to another side (of the Order),³ did not know about nullifications of guidance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, there are these five nullifications of guidance from a preceptor: when a preceptor has gone away or left the Order or died or gone over to another side (of the Order), and command is the fifth.⁴ These, monks, are the five nullifications of guidance from a preceptor. Monks, there are these six nullifications of guidance from a teacher: when a teacher has gone away or left the Order or died or gone over to another side (of the Order), and command is the fifth, or if he⁵ has come to be connected with a preceptor.⁶ These, monks, are the six nullifications of guidance from a teacher.

Kd.1.36.1

BD.4.81

ON FIVE CASES WHEN ONE MAY ORDAIN

Kd.1.36.2

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities¹ he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him: if he is not possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... body of concentration ... body of wisdom ... body of freedom ... body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a monk is not possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.

Kd.1.36.3

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him: if he is possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him.

Vin.1.63

Kd.1.36.4

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him: if he is neither himself possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit nor encourages another as to an adept’s body of moral habit ... if he is neither himself possessed of an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom nor encourages another as to an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.

BD.4.82

Kd.1.36.5

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him: if he is himself possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit and encourages another as to an adept’s body of moral habit ... if he is himself possessed of an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom and encourages another as to an adept’s body of vision and knowledge of freedom. Monks, if a novice is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him.

¹ Omitted in Oldenberg’s text of the Vinaya. ² Cf. above, Kd.1.31.6–1.31.8. ³ As in Kd.1.32.1.

⁴ Vin-a.986 says that the teacher dismisses the pupil from guidance if the words of Kd.1.27.2.

⁵ Meaning the pupil, if we follow Vin-a.988; but DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.181, takes it to mean the teacher. ⁶ Vin-a.988 says that if one who shares a cell, living in dependence on a teacher, sees a preceptor walking for alms in the same village or worshipping at the same shrine, or if he hears him teaching dhamma in a dwelling-place or among houses (the teacher’s) guidance lapses. This would suggest that the preceptor occupies a higher position than the teacher. ¹ Cf. DN.iii.279; SN.i.99; AN.i.162, AN.iii.271, AN.v.16.

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if he comes to be lacking in faith,¹ if he comes to be without shame, if he comes to be reckless, if he comes to be lazy, if he comes to be of muddled mindfulness.² Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him.

Kd.1.36.6

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if he comes to have faith, if he comes to feel shame, if he comes to be cautious, if he comes to be of stirred up energy, if he comes to be of ready mindfulness³. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him.

Kd.1.36.7

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if, in regard to moral habit,⁴ he comes to have fallen away from moral habit; if, in regard to good habits,⁵ he comes to have fallen away from good habits; if, in regard to (right) view,⁶ he comes to have fallen away from (right) view; if he comes to have heard little, if he comes to be of poor intelligence. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain ...

Kd.1.36.8

BD.4.83

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if, in regard to moral habit, he does not come to have fallen away from moral habit; if, in regard to good habits, he does not come to have fallen away from good habits; if, in regard to (right) view, he does not come to have fallen away from (right) view; if he comes to have heard

Kd.1.36.9

Vin.1.64

¹ On the following quintet, cf. DN.iii.252, DN.iii.282; MN.i.43; AN.ii.218; SN.ii.159, also AN.iii.421, AN.iv.145 and see MN-a.i.190. ² muṭṭhassati. See definition at SN-a.i.115. On this and upaṭṭhitasati, “ready mindfulness” (or recollection), see MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.92. Cf. sati muṭṭha at Thag.98, Thag.99. ³ upaṭṭhitasati; cf. also MN.i.356. ⁴ adhisīle. Vin.1.172 says that the four Pārājikas and the thirteen Saṅghādisesas are “falling away from moral habit”, as does Vin-a.989. Thus adhisīla is also the “higher morality”. ⁵ ajjhācāra. Vin.1.172 names the falling away from this as grave offences, offences of expiation, those which ought to be confessed, those of wrong-doing, those of wrong speech. Vin-a.989 calls them “the five other classes of offence” (i.e. excluding the Pārājika and Saṅghādisesa). Ajjhācāra can also mean “transgression”. ⁶ atiditṭhi. Vin.1.172 says that “falling away from right view means wrong view”, views of an extreme nature; while Vin-a.989 says that getting rid of right view, he is possessed of wrong view of an extreme nature.

much; if he comes to be intelligent. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may ordain ... a novice may attend him.

Kd.1.36.10

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if he is not competent to tend or to get (another) to tend a pupil or one who shares a cell and who is ill, to allay or get (another) to allay dissatisfaction that has arisen, to dispel or get (another) to dispel, by means of dhamma,¹ remorse that has arisen, if he does not know what is an offence, if he does not know the removal² of an offence. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... a novice should not attend him.

Kd.1.36.11

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him.

Kd.1.36.12

“And monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain ... a novice should not attend him: if he is not competent to make a pupil or one who shares a cell train in the training regarding the fundamentals of conduct,³ to lead him in the training regarding the fundamentals of the Brahma-faring,⁴ to lead him in what pertains to dhamma,⁵ to lead him in what pertains to discipline,⁶ to discuss or get (another) to discuss, by means of dhamma, a false view that has arisen. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... a novice should not attend him.

BD.4.84

Kd.1.36.13

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him.

Kd.1.36.14

“And monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... a novice should not attend him: if he does not know what is an offence,⁷ if he does not know what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight offence,

¹ Cf. above Kd.1.25.20. ² vuṭṭhāna, the arising from. Cf. below, BD.4.134, āpatti vuṭṭhitā, an offence that is removed, and BD.4.197, gāmo vuṭṭhāsi, the village (was) removed. ³ abhisamācārikā. Vin-a.989–Vin-a.990 equates these with the duties (laid down) in the Khandhakas. ⁴ ādibrahmacāriyikā; see Vinaya Texts i.185, n.1. Vin-a.990 speaks of this as sekhapaññatti, which might mean ideas, concepts, notions suitable to a sekha, a learner. ⁵ abhidhamma. Vin-a.990 takes this as a division by name and form; and clearly has the Abhidhammapiṭaka in mind. But, for this passage pre-dating the existence of the Abhidhammapiṭaka, see Oldenberg, Vin.1.xii, also BD.3.xf., and my article: Abhidhamma Abhivinaya Indian History Quarterly Vol. XII, No. 3, September, 1941. ⁶ abhivinaya, taken by Vin-a.990 to mean the whole of the Vinayapiṭaka. ⁷ Cf. Vin.2.249; AN.iv.140, AN.v.71, AN.v.80, AN.v.201.

if he does not know what is a serious offence, if the two Pātimokkhas¹ in full are not properly handed down to him, not properly classified, not properly intoned, not properly divided by rule and in respect of the explanation.² Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... a novice should not attend him.

Kd.1.36.15

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... a novice may attend him.

Kd.1.36.16

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him: if he does not know what is an offence, if he does not know what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight offence, if he does not know what is a serious offence, if he is of less than ten years’ standing. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.

Kd.1.36.17

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him: if he knows what is an offence, if he knows what is not an offence, if he knows what is a slight offence, if he knows what is a serious offence, if he is of ten years’ standing or of more than ten years’ standing.”

BD.4.85

Told is the Portion of sixteen times five (cases) when one may ordain

ON SIX CASES WHEN ONE MAY ORDAIN

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of six qualities ... he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.³”

Kd.1.37.1

Vin.1.67

Vin.1.68

Vin.1.69

¹ That for the monks and that for the nuns. On Pātimokkha see below, BD.4.131, n.2. For this part of the passage see also Vin.4.51 (BD.2.266). In general Buddhaghosa, at Vin-a.790 and Vin-a.990, gives different explanations of the terms. This accounts for the different translations here and at BD.2.266. ² Or, meaning, anuvyañjanaso. Vin-a.990 appears to explain this by vibhaṅgato, as to the Vibhaṅga, the explanatory material surrounding each rule; and suttato, “by rule”, by mātikato, by the “summaries”, the headings of, or key to, each set of rules (in Vin.iii and Vin.iv). ³ Vinaya Texts i.186, n.1 points out that BD.1.37 is “identical with Kd.1.36.2-1.36.15, but for the sixth case which, throughout chap.BD.1.37, is added each time at the end of the five cases given in chap.BD.1.36”: “if he is of less than ten years’ standing” and “if he is of ten years’ standing or more than ten years’ standing” respectively.

Told is the Portion of sixteen times¹ six (cases) when one may ordain

ON ONE WHO HAD FORMERLY BEEN A MEMBER OF ANOTHER SECT

Kd.1.38.1

Now at that time the one who had formerly been a member of another sect² when he was being spoken to by his preceptor regarding a rule, having refuted the preceptor, went over to the fold of that same sect (as before), but having come back again, he asked the monks for ordination.³ The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, he who was formerly a member of another sect ... having refuted the preceptor and going over to the fold of that same sect (as before), on coming back should not be ordained. But, monks, whoever else was formerly a member of another sect and desires the going forth in this dhamma and discipline and desires ordination, to him you should grant probation⁴ for four months.⁵

Kd.1.38.2

BD.4.86

“And thus, monks, should it be granted: first, having made him have his hair and beard cut off, having got (someone) to present⁶ him with yellow robes, having made him arrange his upper robes over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks’ feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be told: ‘Speak thus: “I go to the enlightened one for refuge, I go to dhamma for

¹ Vinaya Texts i.186, n.2, points out that this should be “Fourteen times”, for where the first four items in Kd.1.36.15 and Kd.1.36.17 are the same as one another and only the last in each is different, thus together making a total of six items, in Kd.1.37.13, Kd.1.37.14 there is no repetition and these six items form one group and no more. ² See above Kd.1.31.6. ³ Cf. Vin.2.279, in regard to nuns. ⁴ This is probation before ordination into the Order took place. It is not the probation which forms part of the penalty for breaking a Saṅghādisesa rule. Vin-a.990 says that it is called probation, parivāsa, for members of other sects and also probation for the unconcealed, appaṭicchannaparivāsa, and can be given to naked wanderers, naked ascetics, ājīvakas, and to unclothed ascetics, acela, but not to anyone who has a cloak or a blanket made of the skin of wild animals. Cf. appaṭicchannaparivāsa at Vin.5.126. If Buddhaghosa’s explanation is right, the “unconcealed probation” of Critical Pali Dictionary is erroneous. ⁵ Cf. this sentence with *Sn*p.p.102, DN.i.176. ⁶ See BD.2.53, BD.2.55, etc.

refuge, I go to the Order for refuge. And a second time I go ... And a third time I go ... to the Order for refuge.”¹ “Monks, if he who was formerly a member of another sect has approached the Order ... has saluted with joined palms, he should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, so and so, formerly a member of another sect, desire ordination in this dhamma and discipline. Therefore do I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for probation for four months.’² And a second time he should ask. And a third time he should ask. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, so and so, formerly a member of another sect, desires ordination in this dhamma and discipline. He asks the Order for probation for four months. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may grant probation to so and so, formerly a member of another sect, for four months. This is the motion.

Kd.1.38.3

Kd.1.38.4

“‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, so and so, formerly a member of another sect, desires ordination in this dhamma and discipline. He asks the Order for probation for four months. The Order is granting probation for four months to so and so, formerly a member of another sect. If the granting of probation for four months to so and so, formerly a member of another sect, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Probation for four months is granted by the Order to so and so, formerly a member of another sect. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

Vin.1.70

Kd.1.38.5

BD.4.87

“Monks, a former member of another sect becomes one who succeeds thus, one who fails thus. And how, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails? Herein, monks, a former member of another sect enters a village at too early a time,³ he returns too late in the day.⁴ Thus, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails. And again, monks, a former member of another sect comes to be one whose ¹ Same method used at Kd.1.54.3 for letting novices go forth. ² Quoted at DN-a.ii.362.

³ Vin-a.991 says that he enters a village when he ought to be doing services for the monks.

⁴ Vin-a.991 says that he comes back when the monks are meditating or having the exposition and interrogation, and does not do what is due to a preceptor or teacher.

resort¹ (for alms) is among prostitutes,² or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among widows,³ or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among grown girls,⁴ or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among eunuchs, or he comes to be one whose resort (for alms) is among nuns.⁵ Thus, too, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails.

Kd.1.38.6

“And again, monks, a former member of another sect in regard to those various things which have to be done by his fellows in the Brahma-faring, comes to be not dexterous therein, not vigorous, not possessed of consideration for those kinds of things,⁶ not able to act himself, not able to direct (others). Thus too, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails. And again, monks, a former member of another sect comes to be one who is not of keen desire⁷ as to the recitation, as to the interrogation, as to the higher morality, the higher thought, the higher wisdom. Thus too, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who fails.

BD.4.88

Kd.1.38.7

“And again, monks, a former member of another sect becomes angry, displeased, dissatisfied if dispraise is being spoken of the teacher, the views, the approval, the persuasion, the creed⁸ of that fold of a sect from which he has come over; he becomes pleased, elated, satisfied if dispraise is being spoken of the awakened one or of dhamma or of the Order; or else he becomes pleased, elated, satisfied if praise is being spoken of the teacher, the views, the approval, the persuasion, the creed of that fold of a sect from which he has come over; he becomes angry, displeased, dissatisfied if praise is being spoken of the awakened one or of dhamma or of the Order. This, monks, is the knitting together¹ in regard to what may be the failure² of a former member of another sect. It is thus, monks, that a former member of another sect becomes one who fails. Therefore, monks, if there come a former member of another sect who has failed, he should not be ordained.

¹ gocara, animals' feeding ground, pasture, then applied to places where monks accept alms-food. ² vesiyā, also meaning a low-class woman. Vin-a.991 calls them women who fall easily into transgression on account of their beauty. On vesiyagocara see also Vb-a.339, AN-a.iii.278 The gocaras are referred to below, BD.4.417. Also at AN.iii.128, where it is said that if a monk goes to them he is thought of as a depraved monk and is mistrusted even if he is kuppadhamma (variant reading akuppa-), bound for the immovable (see GS.iii.98, n.1). At Vb.246 (quoted Vism.17) a sixth gocara is added: liquor-shop, and the six are called agocara. These are referred to at Dh-p-a.iii.275. ³ Vin-a.990, Vb-a.339 define widows as women whose husbands are dead or absent. ⁴ thullakumāriyo. Cf. below, BD.4.198. Vin-a.991 says these are girls who have attained their youth or who are past it; Vb-a.339, AN-a.iii.278 say that they are mahallika, i.e. grown-up girls, Vb-a. adding that they are “not placed”, i.e. unmarried (cf. same expression in regard to kulakumāriyo at AN-a.iv.12). See Ja.iv.219 where thullakumārika does not mean “coarse” but “grown-up”, of full age, vayappatta; unmarried is implied by the context. On kumāribhūtā as maiden, unmarried girl, see BD.3, Introduction, p.xlix. ⁵ Not necessarily visiting the nuns' quarters, for see story of Udāyin asking Uppalavaṇṇā for one of her robes when she visited the monks' dwelling-place, Vin.3.208. ⁶ Same expression occurs at Vin.4.211. ⁷ tibbacchanda; cf. DN.iii.252, DN.iii.283 for seven other matters for which a monk should have tibbacchanda. ⁸ ādāya, here used as a noun.

Kd.1.38.8

“And how, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who succeeds? Herein, monks, a former member of another sect does not enter a village at too early a time, he does not return too late in the day. Thus, monks, does a former member of another sect become one who succeeds. And again, monks ... (point by point the contrary of Kd.1.38.5, Kd.1.38.6, Kd.1.38.7) ... This, monks, is the knitting together in regard to what may be the success of a former member of another sect. It is thus, monks, that a former member of another sect becomes one who succeeds. Therefore, monks, if there come a former member of another sect who has succeeded, he may be ordained.

Vin.1.71

Kd.1.38.11

“If, monks, a former member of another sect comes naked, a robe belonging to a preceptor³ should be looked about for. If he comes without the hair of his head cut off, the Order should be asked for permission for shaving it close.⁴ Monks, if those come who are fire-worshipping matted hair ascetics they may be ordained, probation should not be given to these. What is the reason for this? These, monks, affirm deeds, they affirm what ought to be done.⁵ If, monks, there come a former member of another sect who is a

BD.4.89

¹ saṅghātanikaṃ, the unifying. The word also occurs at MN.i.322, AN.iii.10 in the simile of the house with the peaked roof. There is no justification for the “decisive moment” of Vinaya Texts i.190. The sentence comes as a conclusion to the ways, already mentioned, in which failure (and below, success) may be manifested. ² anārādhaniyaṣmiṃ. ³ upajjhāyamūlaka cīvara. According to Vin-a.994, having made a preceptor his master, issara, he has some claim on him as to bowl and robes. At Vin.3.204, there is the expression mūlacīvara. See Kd.1.26.1 where if one who shares a cell has no robe his preceptor should try to get one for him. ⁴ bhaṇḍukamma. Cf. below, end of Kd.1.48.2. ⁵ kammavādino kiriyavādino. Cf. DN.i.53, DN.i.115, AN.i.62, Vin.1.233, Vin.3.2. See also A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol.4, No.2, p.119ff.

Sakyan by birth, he may be ordained, probation should not be given to him. I, monks, will give this special privilege to (my) relations.”

The Talk on Former Members of Another Sect

The Seventh Portion for Repeating

THE STORY OF FIVE DISEASES

Now at that time five diseases were prevalent among the people of Magadha: leprosy, boils, eczema, consumption, epilepsy.¹ People, afflicted with the five diseases, having approached Jīvaka Komārabhacca,² spoke thus: “It were good, teacher, if you would attend us.”³

Vin.1.72

“But I, masters, am very busy, there is much to be done, and King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha is to be looked after by me, also the women’s quarters and the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head. I am not able to attend you.”

“All this property shall become yours, teacher, and we will be your slaves.”⁴ It were good, teacher, if you would attend us.”

Kd.1.39.2

“But I, masters, am very busy ... I am not able to attend you.”

BD.4.90

Then it occurred to these people: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are of pleasant character, of pleasant conduct; having eaten good meals, they lie down, on beds sheltered from the wind. Suppose we were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans? In that case monks would look after us and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca would attend us.” Then these people, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks let them go forth, they ordained them. These monks looked after them and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca attended them.

Kd.1.39.3

Now at that time monks, looking after many ill monks, lived intent on asking, intent on hinting, saying: “Give food for the sick, give food for those who look after the sick, give medicines for the sick.”⁵ And Jīvaka Komārab-

¹ As at Kd.1.76.1 below. Cf. Vin.4.8 (BD.2.180, where see n.4 for further references). Mentioned also with many other diseases, at AN.v.110. ² See Kd.8.1. ³ tikicchati, to treat medically, to cure. ⁴ Cf. Vin.1.274. ⁵ Three of the benefits that Visākhā was allowed to confer on the Order.

hacca, attending many ill monks, omitted some of his duties towards the king.

A certain man, afflicted with the five diseases, having approached Jīvaka Komārabhacca, spoke thus: “It were good, teacher, if you would attend me.”

Kd.1.39.4

“But I, master, am very busy ... I am not able to attend you.”

“All this property shall be yours, teacher, and I will be your slave. It were good, teacher, if you would attend me.”

“But I, master, am very busy ... I am not able to attend you.”

Kd.1.39.5

Then it occurred to that man: “Now these recluses, sons of the Sakyans are of pleasant character ... Suppose I were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans? In that case monks would look after me and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca would attend me; and when I am well I will leave the Order.”

Then that man, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. These monks let him go forth, they ordained him. These monks looked after him and moreover Jīvaka Komārabhacca attended him. When he was well he left the Order. Jīvaka Komārabhacca saw that man who had left the Order; seeing him, he spoke thus to that man: “Had not you, master, gone forth among the monks?”

Vin.1.73

“Yes, teacher.”

“Then why have you, master, acted in this way?” Then this man told this matter to Jīvaka Komārabhacca.

Jīvaka Komārabhacca looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these honoured sirs let one afflicted with the five diseases go forth?” Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “It were well, Lord, if the masters did not let one afflicted with (any one of)¹ the five diseases go forth.”

Kd.1.39.6

BD.4.91

The Lord then gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with talk on dhamma. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the ¹ Taken separately at Vin-a.995f. in relation to going forth.

Kd.1.39.7

Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one afflicted with (any one of) the five diseases should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ON KING’S SERVICE

Kd.1.40.1

Now at that time there came to be a disturbance on the borderlands of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded the generals, the chief ministers, saying: “Go, good sirs, search¹ the borderlands.”

Kd.1.40.2

“Very well, sire,” the generals, the chief ministers answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent.

BD.4.92

Kd.1.40.3

Then it occurred to (some) very distinguished warriors: “Because we delight in battle,² we do evil and we engender much demerit. Now by what means could we refrain from evil and do what is good?” Then it occurred to these warriors: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are dhamma-farers, even-farers, Brahma-farers, they are truth-speakers, of moral habit, of good character.³ Now, if we were to go forth among these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, thus might we refrain from evil and do what is good.” Then these warriors, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks let them go forth, they ordained them.

Vin.1.74

The generals, the chief ministers, asked those in the King’s service⁴: “How is it, good sirs, that the warriors, so and so and so and so, are not to be seen?”

“Sirs,⁵ the warriors, so and so and so and so, have gone forth among the monks.” The generals, the chief ministers ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, let one who is in the king’s service go forth?” The generals, the chief ministers told this matter to King Seniya

¹ Vin-a.996 says that thieves were giving trouble, but because Bimbisāra was a stream-winner he did not command: “Strike them, kill them.” ² Cf. Vin.4.104. ³ Cf. BD.1.70, BD.1.125, BD.1.200, BD.1.223. ⁴ rājabhaṭa. ⁵ sāmi, lords, masters.

Bimbisāra of Magadha. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha asked the chief ministers of justice:

“Good sirs, what does he who lets one go forth who is in a king’s service engender¹ (for himself)?”

“Sire, a preceptor’s head should be cut off, the tongue should be torn from the announcer of a proclamation,² half the ribs of a (member of a) group should be broken.”

Kd.1.40.4

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the Lord: “There are, Lord, kings who are of no faith, not believing; these might harm monks even for a trifling matter. It were well, Lord, if the masters did not let one in a king’s service go forth.” Then the Lord gladdened ... delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one in a king’s service should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF A THIEF (WEARING) A GARLAND OF FINGERS

Now at that time a thief (wearing) a garland of fingers¹ came to have gone forth among the monks. People, having seen (him), were perturbed, then alarmed, then they ran away, then they went by a different route, then they turned in another direction, then they closed the door.² People ... spread it about, saying: “How can the recluses, sons of the Sakyans let a thief wearing an emblem³ go forth?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. The Lord addressed the monks saying:

Kd.1.41.1
BD.4.93

“Monks, a thief who wears an emblem should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF A THIEF WHO HAS BROKEN OUT OF JAIL

Now at that time it was decreed by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “There is nothing to do against those who go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans. Well preached is dhamma, let them fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill.”⁴ Now at that time a certain man, having committed a theft, was imprisoned in a jail; he, having broken out of jail, having run away, went forth among the monks.

Kd.1.42.1
Vin.1.75

Kd.1.42.2

¹ pasavati, same word as used above in “engender much demerit”. ² anussāvaka. Vin-a.996 takes this as ācariya, teacher, which would be more in line with “preceptor” and “group”, both of which might let a person go forth. The announcer of a proclamation had not, as such, this power. ³ āṅgulimāla. Not the well-known bandit-thief of this name (as Vinaya Texts i.196 and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names take it), for in the absence of nāma or ti no proper name is denoted. The robber who came to be called Āṅgulimāla has verses ascribed to him at Thag.866–891. At Thag.869–870 he is shown as asking the Lord for the going forth, the Lord as saying, “Come, monk”, and this at constituting his monk-status, bhikkhubhāva. His story, and the verses are also given at MN 86. It is difficult to reconcile the above Vinaya ruling with the story of Āṅgulimāla’s going forth, for the Lord recognised his unusual potentialities, hardly to be expected in the common run of thieves. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.144 (BD.1.246). ⁵ dhajabaddha.

⁴ Cf. Vin.4.226 (BD.3.182–183) where similar words are attributed to King Pasenadi.

People having seen (him) spoke thus: “This is the very¹ thief who has broken out of jail. Come along, let us bring him (back).²” Some spoke thus: “Do not, masters, speak thus, for it is decreed by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: ‘There is nothing to do against those ... utter end of ill.’” People ... spread it about, saying:

“These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are safe and secure³; there is nothing to do against them. But how can they let a thief go forth who has broken out of jail?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.94

“Monks, a thief who has broken out of jail should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

THE STORY OF AN THIEF WITH A “WANTED” NOTICE

Now at that time a certain man, having committed a theft, having run away, went forth among the monks. And in the royal palace, this was written:⁴ “Wherever he may be seen, there he should be killed.” People, having seen (him), spoke thus: “This is the very thief who was written about. Come along, let us kill him.” Some spoke thus: “Do not, masters, speak thus ... utter end of ill.” People ... spread it about, saying:

Kd.1.43.1

“These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are safe and secure; there is nothing to do against them. But how can they let a thief go forth who has been written about?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a thief who has been written about should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

¹ ayaṃ so, emphatic. ² nema, as in Kd.1.46.1, Kd.1.47.1. ³ abhayūvarā. This is the word which gives the title to this portion for “repeating”. ⁴ likhita. Editors of Vinaya Texts vol.i, Introduction, p.xxxii take this as a passage showing “in an indisputable manner the existence of the art of writing at the time when the Vinaya Texts were put into their present shape”. Vin-a.998 appears to confirm this view by saying rājā ca naṃ paṇṇe vā potthake vā ... likhāpeti, the king causes it to be written on a leaf or in a book. As potthaka can also mean “modelled in clay”, we must not assume that writing was then necessarily what it is now. Then, what “writing” was done was probably on palm-leaves and metal or clay tablets, and on wood. Likh in Pali can mean draw, write, carve, turn.

THE STORY OF A SCOURGED MAN

Kd.1.44.1

BD.4.95

Now at that time a certain man who had been scourged as punishment¹ came to have gone forth among the monks. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, let one who has been scourged as punish-ment go forth?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who has been scourged as punishment should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.1.76

<h2>The story of a branded man</h2>>

Kd.1.45.1

Now at that time a certain man who had been branded as punishment² ... (as in Kd.1.44.1 to the end).

THE STORY OF A DEBTOR

Kd.1.46.1

Now at that time a certain man, a debtor, having run away, came to have gone forth among the monks. The creditors, having seen (him), spoke thus: “This is our very debtor. Come along, let us bring him (back).³” Some spoke thus: “Do not, masters, speak thus, for it is decreed by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “There is nothing to do against those who go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans. Well preached is dhamma, let them fare the Brahma-faring for making an utter end of ill’.” People ... spread it about, saying:

“These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are safe and secure; there is nothing to do against them. But how can they let a debtor go forth?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a debtor should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF A SLAVE

Kd.1.47.1

Now at that time a certain slave, having run away, came to have gone forth among the monks. The mistresses,¹ having seen (him), spoke thus: “This is our very slave. Come along, let us bring him (back).”² ... (as in BD.1.46) ...

“Monks, a slave should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.4.96

THE STORY OF A BALD-HEADED METAL-SMITH

Now at that time a certain bald-headed metal-smith,³ having quarrelled with his parents, having gone to a monastery, went forth among the monks. Then the parents of that bald-headed metal-smith, searching for that bald-headed metal-smith, having gone to the monastery, asked the monks, saying: “Honoured sirs, have you seen a youth like that?” The monks, not knowing (him), merely said: “We do not know (him)”; not seeing (him), merely said: “We do not see (him).”

Kd.1.48.1

Then the parents of that bald-headed metal-smith, searching for that bald-headed metal-smith, having seen him gone forth among the monks ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are shameless, of bad conduct, liars; knowing, they merely say, ‘We do not know’; seeing, they merely say, ‘We do not see’ and this youth is gone forth among the monks.” Monks heard the parents of this bald-headed metal-smith who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.48.2

Vin.1.77

¹ kasāhata katadaṇḍakamma. ² lakkaṇāhata katadaṇḍakamma. ³ nema, as in Kd.1.42.2, Kd.1.47.1. ¹ ayyikā. At Vin.1.371, the variant reading sāmikā is given. A small piece of evidence that women ruled the household, rather than their husbands. ² nema, as in Kd.1.42.2 and Kd.1.46.1. ³ kammārabhaṇḍu. Highly esteemed by king and people, Ja.iii.281. No distinction was apparently made between workers in gold, silver and other metals, but Vin-a.1002 says he was a goldsmith’s son. The exact point of his being a smith is obscure.

“I allow you, monks, to ask the Order for permission for shaving (the hair of the head) close.¹”

THE STORY OF THE BOY UPĀLI

Kd.1.49.1

Now at that time in Rājagaha a group of seventeen boys were friends²; of these the youth Upāli was the chief. Then it occurred to Upāli’s parents: “By what means could Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want?” Then it occurred to Upāli’s parents: “If Upāli should learn writing, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want.” Then it occurred to Upāli’s parents: “But if Upāli learns writing his fingers will become painful. If Upāli were to learn calculation, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want.”

BD.4.97

Kd.1.49.2

Then it occurred to Upāli’s parents: “But if Upāli learns calculation, his breast will become painful. If Upāli were to learn money-changing, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want.” Then it occurred to Upāli’s parents: “But if Upāli learns money-changing his eyes will become painful. Now there are these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, pleasant in habit, pleasant in conduct; having eaten good meals, they lie down on beds sheltered from the wind. Now if Upāli were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, so would Upāli, after our demise, live at ease and not be in want.”

Kd.1.49.3

The boy Upāli heard this conversation of his parents. Then the boy Upāli approached those boys; having approached, he spoke thus to these boys: “Come, masters, we will go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans.”

“If you, master, will go forth, we likewise will also go forth.” Then these boys, having (each) approached his parents, spoke thus:

Vin.1.78

“Consent that I may go forth from home into homelessness.” Then the parents of those boys consented, thinking: “All these boys want the same thing, they are bent on what is good.” These, having approached monks, asked for the going forth. These monks let them go forth, they ordained them.

¹ bhaṇḍukamma, cf. above Kd.1.38.11. Vin-a.1003 says that if there is a newly shaven one (navamuṇḍa) or one leaving the Order or if there is anyone among the Jains and so on whose hair is two finger-breadths long or less, there is no need to cut his hair, therefore such a one can be allowed to go forth without asking for the close shaving. But whoever has hair more than two finger-breadths long, even if it be only a top-knot, may only be allowed to go forth when the close shaving has been asked for. ² As at Vin.4.128ff. (BD.3.10ff.).

Kd.1.49.4

Getting up in the night towards dawn, these cried out: “Give conjei, give rice, give solid food.”

The monks spoke thus: “Wait, your reverences, until it turns light. Should there be conjei you shall drink it; should there be rice you shall partake of it; should there be solid food you shall eat it. But should there not be conjei or rice or solid food, then, having walked for alms, you shall eat.”

But these monks, being spoken to thus by the monks, cried out just the same: “Give conjei, give rice, give solid food,” and they soiled and wetted the bedding.

Kd.1.49.5

Then the Lord, getting up in the night towards dawn, hearing this noise of boys, addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Why ever, Ānanda, is there this noise of boys?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.98

“Is it true as is said, monks, that monks knowingly ordain an individual¹ who is under twenty years of age?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men knowingly ordain an individual who is under twenty years of age?”

Kd.1.49.6

Monks, an individual under twenty years of age is not able² to endure cold, heat, hunger, thirst, the sting of gadflies or mosquitoes, wind and sun, creeping things, abusive, hurtful language; he is not the kind (of person) who endures bodily feelings which, arising, are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly. But, monks, an individual of twenty years of age is able to endure cold, heat ... miserable, deadly. Monks, this is not for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing the number of those who are pleased.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ On the monkish intention of puggala, see BD.3.xxiiif. ² As at Vin.4.130, Bu-Pc.65 (BD.3.12).

“Monks, an individual who is under twenty years of age should not knowingly be ordained. Whoever should (so) ordain (one such) should be dealt with according to the rule.”¹

THE STORY OF MALARIA

Kd.1.50.1

Now at that time a certain family came to pass away as a result of malaria.² (Only) the father and little son belonging to it survived.³ These, having gone forth among the monks, walked even for almsfood together. Then that boy, when almsfood was given to his father, having run up to him, spoke thus: “Give to me too, father, give to me too, father.” People ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are not chaste. This boy was born of a nun.” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.1.79

BD.4.99

“Monks, a boy of less than fifteen years of age should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”⁴

Kd.1.51.1

Now at that time the family, faithful, believing, who supported the venerable Ānanda, passed away as a result of malaria, but two boys survived. These, having seen monks, ran up to them according to their former allowable custom, (but) the monks sent them away. These cried on being sent away by the monks. Then it occurred to the venerable Ānanda: “It is laid down by the Lord that a boy of less than fifteen years of age should not be allowed to go forth, and these boys are less than fifteen years of age. Now by what means might these boys not be lost?" Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Bu-Pc.65. ² ahivātakaroga, should be “snake-wind-disease”. Word occurs at Ja.ii.79, Ja.iv.200. See note at Jataka Cambridge translation, ii.55. Cf. Mahāvastu i.253, a disease called adhivāsa (produced by non-human agency) which is said to attack a whole district. ³ sesā honti “came to remain”. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1003 explains the means by which a person may escape from the disease—by making a hole in the wall or roof and running away. This is also mentioned at Ja.ii.79, Ja.iv.200. See note at Jātaka translation, ii.55. The rogāmādigato, the reading which Vinaya Texts i.204, n.1 ascribes to the Commentary, should be tirogāmādigato, reached a distant village (where he is free, muccati, of the disease). ⁴ Five years, therefore, were to elapse before the upasampadā ordination was allowed (see Bu-Pc.65 and below, Kd.1.75.1). (Note by Sujato: This last reference is, apparently by mistake, left blank in the text. I have supplied the probable referent.) This intervening period is referred to at Ja.i.106: kulaputto ... pabbajitvā upasampadāya pañcavassiko hutvā, a boy of good family, having gone forth, being five years off ordination ...

"But, Ānanda, are these boys able to scare¹ crows?"

"They are able (to do so), Lord." Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

"I allow you, monks, to let a youth of less than fifteen years of age and who is a scarer of crows² go forth."

THE STORY OF KAṆḌAKA

Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, had two novices, Kaṇḍaka³ and Mahaka.⁴ These committed sodomy with one another. Monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these novices indulge in a bad habit such as this?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, two novices should not attend one (monk). Whoever should make two novices attend⁵ him, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

¹ uṭṭepetum, meaning "to make fly up" or "to catch in snares". See Pali-English Dictionary Vin-a.1003 is not helpful. ² kākuṭṭepaka. The word should probably read uḍḍepaka. Vin-a.1003 explains as "having taken a clod of earth in his left hand, he is able, sitting down and having made the crows fly up (kāke uḍḍāpetvā), to eat a meal put down in front of (him)". This shows a certain amount of physical strength and endurance, not to be found in an infant. In a country where crows are as persistent as they are in India, it must have been useful to have had boys who could scare them away. Nevertheless this allowance forms a most singular exception to the general rule forbidding the going forth of a youth under fifteen years of age. ³ Also below, BD.4.107, where it was probably this Kaṇḍaka who was expelled. There is also a Kaṇḍaka, a novice, at Vin.4.138, but he was expelled for holding a wrong view, and is therefore perhaps not the same as Upananda's novice. ⁴ Heard of nowhere but here, I think. ⁵ upaṭṭhāpeti. Cf. above, Kd.1.36.2. This word can also mean to look after, to cause to attend, e.g. one who is ill or another monk, whether a senior or a junior. See Vinaya Texts i.49, n.5; also Bu-Pc.70 where the same word is used in connection with the expelled Kaṇḍaka, and is there defined by the Old Commentary, in terms of giving material help and comfort. It does not mean "to ordain" as at Vinaya Texts i.205 and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names, article on Karitaka. Below, Kd.1.55.1, the ruling is amended.

Kd.1.52.1

BD.4.100

THE STORY OF WHEN IT WAS CROWDED

Kd.1.53.1

Now at that time¹ the Lord spent the rains just there, in Rājagaha, the cold weather there, the hot weather there. People ... spread it about, saying: “The district is crowded up, confused with recluses, sons of the Sakyans; because of them the district is not to be seen.” Monks, heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.1.53.2

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Go, Ānanda, and taking a key, announce to the monks in every cell: “Your reverences, the Lord wishes to set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri. Whatever venerable one needs (to do so), let him come.”

Vin.1.80

“Yes, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered the Lord in assent, taking the key, announced to the monks in every cell: “Your reverences, the Lord wishes to set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri. Whatever venerable one needs (to do so), let him come.”

Kd.1.53.3

Monks spoke thus: “Reverend Ānanda, it is laid down by the Lord (that one is) to live ten years in dependence, and when one is of ten years’ standing (he is) to give guidance.² If we go there then guidance must be chosen³ (there), but the stop (there) may be short; then we must come back again and guidance must be chosen again. If our teachers and preceptors are going, we too will go; but if our teachers and preceptors are not going, then we will not go. Reverend Ānanda, we shall (otherwise) look feather-brained.”⁴

BD.4.101

Kd.1.53.4

Then the Lord set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri with an Order of monks numbering less than a group.⁵

¹ Cf. Kd.1.53.1 with Bi-Pc.40, where a similar description of Rājagaha is given when it was crowded out by nuns. ² See Kd.1.32.1 above. ³ nissayo ca gahetabbo bhavissati. Cf. upajjhāyo gahetabbo at Kd.1.25.7 and ācariyo gahetabbo at Kd.1.32.2: “thus should a preceptor ... a teacher be chosen.” The reference in the above passage would appear to be back to this kind of choosing: choosing a preceptor or teacher, or both, to give guidance. If a pupil or preceptor leave one another then nissaya (guidance) is broken. ⁴ lahucittakatā no paññāyissati, a feather-brained (light minded) state will be apparent in us. ⁵ ogaṇena bhikkhusaṅghena. Vin-a.1003 explains ogaṇena as parihīnagaṇena, lacking a group, and as appamattaka bhikkhusaṅgha, only a small Order of monks. Usually a “group” consisted of from two to four monks or nuns, but above, Kd.1.31.2, a group of ten monks is referred to.

ON RELEASE FROM DEPENDENCE

Then the Lord, having stayed in Dakkhiṇāgiri for as long as he found suiting, came back again to Rājagaha. Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “How is it, Ānanda, that the Truthfinder set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri with an Order of monks numbering less than a group?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, an experienced competent monk to live five years in dependence (but) an inexperienced one all his life.

Kd.1.53.5

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he should not live independently¹ (of a preceptor or teacher): if he is not possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is not possessed of these five qualities he should not live independently. Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he is possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he may live independently.²

Kd.1.53.6

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he should not live independently: if he comes to be of no faith ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... Monks, he should not live independently. Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he comes to have faith ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... Monks, ... he may live independently.

Vin.1.81

“... five further qualities he should not live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he comes to have fallen away from moral habit ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he does not come to have fallen away ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... he may live independently.

Kd.1.53.7

BD.4.102

“... five further qualities he should not live independently: if he does not know what is an offence ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he knows what is an offence ... (=Kd.1.36.15) ... he may live independently.

Kd.1.53.8

Kd.1.53.9

¹ anissitena, in independence, without a teacher to give guidance. ² Cf. below, Kd.1.73.1–1.73.4 where other cases are given where a monk may live independently, anissita.

“... five further qualities he should not live independently: if he does not know what is an offence ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years’ standing ... Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he may live independently: if he knows what is an offence ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of five years’ standing or of more than five years’ standing ...

Kd.1.53.10

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of six qualities he should not live independently: if he is not possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years’ standing. Monks, if a monk is not possessed of these six qualities he should not live independently. Monks, if a monk is possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if he is possessed of an adept’s body of moral habit ... (=Kd.1.37.2) ... if he is of five years’ standing or more than five years’ standing ...

Kd.1.53.11

“... six further qualities he should not live independently: if he comes to have no faith ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years’ standing ... possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if he comes to have faith ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of five years’ standing or more than five years’ standing ...

Kd.1.53.12

“... six further qualities he should not live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he comes to have fallen away from moral habit ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years’ standing ... possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if, in regard to moral habit, he does not come to have fallen away ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of five years’ standing or more than five years’ standing.

Kd.1.53.13

BD.4.103

“... six further qualities he should not live independently: if he does not know what is an offence ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of less than five years’ standing ... possessed of six qualities he may live independently: if he knows what is an offence ... (=Kd.1.36.3) ... if he is of five years’ standing or more than five years’ standing. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these six qualities he may live independently.”

THE STORY OF RĀHULA

Then the Lord, having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Kapilavatthu. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Kapilavatthu.¹ The Lord stayed there among the Sakyans in Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery.² Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of Suddhodana the Sakyan; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat. Then the lady, Rāhula's mother, spoke thus to the boy Rāhula: "This, Rāhula, is your father, go and ask him for your inheritance."

Kd.1.54.2

Then the boy Rāhula approached the Lord; having approached, he stood in front of the Lord and said: "Pleasant is your shadow, recluse." Then the Lord, rising up from his seat, departed. Then the boy Rāhula, following close behind the Lord, said: "Give me my inheritance, recluse, give me my inheritance, recluse." Then the Lord addressed the venerable Sāriputta, saying: "Well then, do you, Sāriputta, let the boy Rāhula go forth."³

"How do I, Lord, let the boy Rāhula go forth?"

Kd.1.54.3

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "I allow, monks, the going forth for novices by the three goings for refuge. And thus, monks, should you let one go forth: first, having made him have his hair and beard cut off, having got (someone) to present him with yellow robes, having made him arrange his upper robe over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks' feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be told: 'Speak thus: "I go to the awakened one for refuge I go to dhmma for refuge, I go to the Order for refuge. And a second time I go ... And a third time I go ... to the Order for refuge"''.⁴ I allow, monks, the going forth for novices by these three goings for refuge."

BD.4.104

Kd.1.54.4

Then the venerable Sāriputta let the boy Rāhula go forth. Then Suddhodana the Sakyan approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance Suddhodana the Sakyan spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ Vin-a.1005 says it was a distance of sixty yojanas from Rājagaha; and going a yojana a day, the Lord's journey took two months. ² See BD.2.94, n.1. ³ Story of "Rāhula's conversion" also given at Dh-p-a.i.116f. ⁴ Same method employed at Kd.1.38.2 for granting probation to former members of other sects.

“I, Lord, ask the Lord for one boon.”

“But, Gotama,¹ Truth-finders are beyond (granting) boons.”²

“Lord, it is what is allowable, it is what is blameless.”

“Speak on, Gotama.”

Kd.1.54.5

“Lord, when the Lord went forth there came to be not a little sorrow, likewise when Nanda³ did; it was extreme when Rāhula did.⁴ Affection for a son, Lord, cuts into the skin, having cut into the skin it cuts into the hide, having cut into the hide it cuts into the flesh ... the ligaments ... the bones, having cut into the bones and reaching the marrow, it abides. It were well, Lord, if the masters did not let a child to go forth without the parents’ consent.”

Vin.1.83

Kd.1.54.6

Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Suddhodana the Sakyan with talk on dhamma. Then Suddhodana the Sakyan gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a child who has not his parents’ consent should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.55.1

BD.4.105

Then the Lord, having stayed in Kapilavatthu for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there in Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time the family who supported the venerable Sāriputta sent a youth to the venerable Sāriputta, saying:

¹ Gotama was the clan or family name. ² atikkaniavarā. Vinaya Texts, in translating above and parallel passages at Vin.1.280, Vin.1.292, adds “before they know what they are”. ROUSE, Jātaka translation, iv.198 (=Ja.iv.315, quoting Vin.1.292) has “the Tathāgatas have boons beyond measure”; Critical Pali Dictionary “above (granting) boons”. ³ The Lord’s half-brother, son of Mahāpajāpati. On Nanda’s going forth see Vin-a.1008f., Dhp-a.i.116. Verses at Thag.157. See Ud.21ff. ⁴ Vin-a.1010 says that Suddhodana thinking the family line broken because these three went forth, asked where a king could come from.

“May the elder let this youth go forth.” Then it occurred to the venerable Sāriputta: “A rule of training laid down by the Lord says that two novices should not attend one (monk),¹ and this Rāhula is my novice. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” He told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow, monks, two novices to attend one experienced, competent monk, or else as many to attend (him) as he is able to exhort, to instruct.”

ON TRAINING RULES

Then it occurred to the novices: “Now, how many rules for training are there for us and in which we are to train?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, I allow ten rules for training for novices² and novices to train in these:

1. Restraint from onslaught on creatures;³
2. Restraint from taking what is not given;⁴
3. Restraint from unchastity;⁵
4. Restraint from lying;⁶
5. Restraint from the occasion of sloth (induced by) fermented liquor, spirits and strong drink;⁷
6. Restraint from eating at the wrong time;⁸
7. Restraint from seeing shows⁹ of dancing, singing and music;¹⁰
8. Restraint from the occasion of using garlands, scents, unguents and wearing finery;
9. Restraint from using high beds, large beds;¹¹

Kd.1.56.1

BD.4.106

Vin.1.84

¹ Above, Kd.1.52.1. ² Novice is defined at Vin.4.122 (BD.2.412) as one conforming to ten rules for training; also female novice is so defined at Vin.4.343 (BD.3.411). ³ Bu-Pj.3, Bu-Pc.61. These restraints or abstinences occur at e.g. DN.i.4ff., AN.i.211, AN.ii.209, AN.iv.247ff., SN.v.469, Pp.58. Cf. DN-a.69ff. ⁴ Bu-Pj.2. ⁵ Bu-Pj.1. ⁶ Bu-Pj.4. ⁷ Cf. Bu-Pc.61. ⁸ Bu-Pc.37. ⁹ visūka appears to mean twisting, wriggling, restless motion. On the miming nature of singing, dancing and music see BD.3.xl, note and BD.4.298, n.2. These shows where movement was a feature were of quite a different character from shows of inanimate objects. Nuns were forbidden to visit these latter by their Bu-Pc.41. ¹⁰ A dukkata for monks to see these, Vin.2.108; a Pācittiya for nuns to see them, Bi-Pc.10. ¹¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.87.

10. Restraint from accepting gold and silver.¹

“I allow monks, these ten rules for training for novices and novices to train in these.”

THE STORY OF AN ACT OF PUNISHMENT

Kd.1.57.1

Now at that time novices were not respectful, not deferential not courteous towards the monks. Monks ... spread it about saying: “How can these novices not be respectful ... towards the monks?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, I allow you to impose a punishment² on a novice who is possessed of five qualities:

1. “If he tries for non-receiving (of gains)³ by monks.
2. “If he tries for non-profiting by monks.
3. “If he tries for non-residence for monks.
4. “If he reviles and abuses⁴ monks.
5. “If he causes monk to break with monk.

“I allow you, monks, to impose a punishment on a novice who is possessed of these five qualities.”

Kd.1.57.2

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, how should the punishment be imposed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition.”⁵ Now at that time monks made a prohibition for novices in respect of an Order’s entire monastery. The novices, on being unable to enter the monastery, went away, and left the Order, and went over to (other) sects. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, an Order’s entire monastery should not be made (the subject of) a prohibition. Whoever should make (it such), there is an offence of wrong-

¹ Bu-NP.18. ² daṇḍakamma; cf. above Kd.1.44.1, Kd.1.45.1, and Vin.2.262f. ³ So Vin-a.1013; “of requisites,” AN-a.iv.160. Cf. these with five qualities” at Vin.2.18, “eight qualities” at AN.iv.345, Vin.2.125. ⁴ Cf. Vin.4.52, Vin.4.309 where nuns may not revile or abuse a monk. ⁵ āvāraṇa, an obstacle, hindrance, barring off. Cf. Vin.2.262f.

doing. I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition in respect of wherever he is staying or wherever he is entering.¹⁷

Now at that time monks made a prohibition for novices in respect of nutriment taken by the mouth. People, making a drink of conje and also rice for an Order, spoke thus to the novices: “Come, honoured sirs, drink the conje, come, honoured sirs, partake of the rice.” The novices spoke thus: “It is not possible, sirs, the monks have made (this the subject of) a prohibition.” The people ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs make a prohibition for novices in respect of nutriment taken by the mouth?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nutriment taken by the mouth is not to be made (the subject of) a prohibition. Whoever should make (it such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.57.3

BD.4.107

Told is the Item on Punishment

THE STORY OF MAKING A PROHIBITION WITHOUT ASKING

Now at that time the group of six monks, without having asked preceptors (for permission), made a prohibition for novices. Preceptors hunted about, saying: “Now, where are our novices? They are not to be seen.” Monks spoke thus: “A prohibition was made, your reverences, by the group of six monks.” The preceptors ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, without asking us (for permission), make a prohibition for our novices?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a prohibition is not to be made without asking preceptors (for permission). Whoever should make one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.58.1

Vin.1.85

THE STORY OF LURING AWAY

Now at that time the group of six monks lured away¹ the novices of monks who were elders. The elders, getting their own tooth-wood and water for rinsing the mouth, were incommoded.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, another’s assembly should not be lured away. Whoever should lure it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.59.1

THE STORY OF KAṆḌAKA THE NOVICE

Kd.1.60.1

BD.4.108

Now at that time Kaṇḍaka,³ a novice of the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, seduced the nun Kaṇḍakā. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this novice indulge in a bad habit like this?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to expel a novice who is possessed of ten qualities:

1. “If he is one who makes onslaught on creatures.
2. “If he is one who takes what is not given.
3. “If he is one who is unchaste.
4. “If he is a liar.
5. “If he is a drinker of strong drink.
6. “If he speaks dispraise of the awakened one.
7. “If he speaks dispraise of Dhamma.
8. “If he speaks dispraise of the Order.
9. “If he is a holder of a false view.”⁴

¹ paṭikkamati, to return, Vin-a.1013 explains by pavisati, to enter. The meaning is entering a monastery in the sense of returning to it. ¹ apalāḷenti, to draw over (to themselves). Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1014 hints at bribery, the group of six saying they would give bowls and robes to the novices. ² kilamati, more usually to go short of; to be tired, fatigued. Those who shared cells and pupils should get tooth-wood and water for rinsing the mouth for their preceptors and teachers respectively, Kd.1.25.8, Kd.1.32.3. ³ See above, Kd.1.52.1 and BD.3.31. ⁴ At Vin.4.138 (BD.3.31) a novice, Kaṇḍaka, was expelled on this ground.

10. “If he is a seducer of nuns.”¹

“I allow you, monks, to expel a novice who is possessed of these ten qualities.”

THE STORY OF A EUNUCH

Now at that time a certain eunuch came to have gone forth among the monks. Having approached a number of young monks, he spoke thus: “Come, venerable ones, commit an offence with me.” The monks refused, saying: “Be off², eunuch, depart³, eunuch. What need have you?” Refused by the monks, having approached a number of large, fat⁴ novices, he spoke thus: “Come, your reverences, commit an offence with me.” The novices refused, saying: “Be off, eunuch, depart, eunuch. What need have you?” Refused by the novices, having approached mahouts and grooms⁵, he spoke thus: “Come, sirs, commit an offence with me.” The mahouts and grooms committed an offence with him.

Kd.1.61.1

These ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are eunuchs, and those of them who are not eunuchs, they too commit offences with eunuchs. Thus they are one and all unchaste.” Monks heard these mahouts and grooms who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.61.2

BD.4.109

¹ Vin-a.1015 explains that “one who is unchaste” may be ordained if he is willing to restrain himself in the future, but a seducer of nuns cannot even go forth. Cf. Vinaya Texts i.215, n.1. At AN.v.70, AN.v.71 among ten specified occasions where the Pātimokkha may be suspended are included the presence of a seducer of nuns, and the presence of a eunuch (see next paragraph below). ² nassa, disappear. ³ vinassa = nassa, Vin-a.871, which adds “go where we do not see you”. For cara pi re vinassa see Vin.4.139. ⁴ Moligalla; variant readings given at Vin.1.372: moḷigalla, mukalla. ⁵ hatthibhaṇḍa assabhaṇḍa. Vin-a.1015 explains bhaṇḍa by gopaka, guardian, watchman.

“Monks, if a eunuch is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”¹

THE STORY OF ONE IN COMMUNION BY THEFT

Kd.1.62.1

Now at that time a certain descendant of an ancient family which had come down in the world was delicately nurtured. Then it occurred to this descendant of the ancient family which had come down in the world: “Now, I am delicately nurtured, I am not able to acquire wealth not (already) acquired, nor to increase the wealth (already) acquired.² Now by what means could I live at ease and not be in want?” Then it occurred to this descendant ... in the world: “Now these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are of pleasant conduct, of pleasant character; having eaten good meals, they lie down to sleep on beds sheltered from the wind. Suppose that I, having prepared a bowl and robe for myself, having cut off my hair and beard, having clothed myself in yellow robes, having gone to a monastery, should be in communion together with monks?”

Kd.1.62.2

Then that descendant ... in the world, having prepared a bowl and robe for himself, having cut off his hair and beard, having clothed himself in yellow robes, having gone to a monastery, greeted the monks. The monks spoke thus: “Of how many years’ standing are you, your reverence?” “What does this mean, your reverences: ‘how many years’ standing’?”

“But who, your reverence, is your preceptor?”

“What does this mean, your reverences: ‘preceptor’?”

The monks spoke thus to the venerable Upāli³:

“Please, reverend Upāli, examine this one who has gone forth.”

Kd.1.62.3

BD.4.110

¹ Vin-a.1016 says he is to be expelled by the expulsion due to characteristic, liṅganāsana. Three kinds of expulsion are given at Vin-a.87of.: (1) expulsion from communion, meaning expulsion for not seeing an offence, not making amends for it, not giving up a false view; (2) expulsion due to characteristic, as an example of which the nun Mettiyā is cited (Vin.3.162-3); (3) expulsion as a punishment, with the words, ‘From today forth, reverend novice, the Lord cannot be referred to as your teacher’ (Vin.4.139=BD.3.31). ² This inability is at AN.i.129 given as a characteristic of a blind person (puggala), while the opposite, ability in this respect, is given as a characteristic of a one-eyed and of a two-eyed person. ³ No doubt the Vinaya expert.

Then as that descendant ... in the world was being examined¹ by the venerable Upāli, he told him this matter. The venerable Upāli told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if one who is in communion by theft² is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled. Monks, if one who has gone over to (another) sect³ is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF AN ANIMAL

Now at that time a certain serpent was troubled about his birth as a serpent, he was ashamed of it, loathed it⁴. Then it occurred to that serpent: “Now, by what means could I be freed quickly from birth as a serpent and get back⁵ human status?” Then it occurred to that serpent: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are dhamma-farers, even-farers, Brahma-farers, they are truth-speakers, they are of moral habit, of good conduct. Now if I were to go forth among the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, so would I be freed quickly from birth as a serpent and could get back human status.”

Then that serpent, in the form of a brahmin youth, having approached the monks, asked for the going forth. The monks let him go forth, they ordained him. Now at that time that serpent, together with a certain monk,

Kd.1.63.1

Vin.1.87

Kd.1.63.2

¹ Vin-a.1016: as he was being asked about cutting off the hair and beard, accepting yellow robes, going for refuge, choosing a preceptor, and about proclamations and guidance. At Vin.3.212 Upāli was asked to examine monks who, having come naked, were taken to be Naked Ascetics. Vin-a.665 gives the nature of these questions (see BD.2.45, n.6, n.7). He examines below Kd.1.64.2. ² theyyasaṃvāsaka. Word occurs also at Vin.1.307. Samvāsa is being in communion, see definition at end of each Pārājika rule (BD.1). Theyya is “by theft”, here of the signs or marks of a monk. ³ titthiyapakkantaka. This word also occurs with theyyasaṃvāsaka and others at Vin.1.307. All the words tell what monks, disappointed of robe-material, pretend to be. ⁴ Stock, as at AN.i.145; MN.i.423, MN.iii.300. ⁵ paṭilabhati. He had been unchaste (in a former birth), Vin-a.1022. If paṭilabhati does mean “to get back” here rather than to “acquire”, it indicates a belief in the possibility of losing human status for animal status.

was living in a dwelling-place on the boundary.¹ Then that monk, getting up in the night towards dawn, paced up and down in the open air. Then that serpent, confident that that monk had gone out, fell asleep. The whole dwelling-place was full of the snake, his coils were protruding through the windows.

Kd.1.63.3

Then that monk, thinking: “I will enter the dwelling-place,” opening the door,² saw the whole dwelling-place full of the snake, his coils protruding through the windows. Terrified at seeing this, he uttered a cry of distress. Monks, having run up, spoke thus to that monk: “Why did you, your reverence, utter a cry of distress?”

“Your reverences, this whole dwelling-place is full of a snake, his coils are protruding through the windows.” Then that serpent having awakened because of this noise, sat down on his own seat. Monks spoke thus: “Who are you, friend?”

“I am a serpent, honoured sirs.”

“But why did you, friend, act in this way?” Then that serpent told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.1.63.4

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, spoke thus to this serpent: “Indeed, you serpents are not liable to growth in this dhamma and discipline. You, serpent, go away, observe the Observance day precisely³ on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth day of the half-month. Thus will you be freed quickly from birth as a serpent and get back human status.”

Then that serpent, thinking: “It is said that I am not liable to growth in this dhamma and discipline,” pained, afflicted, shedding tears, departed having uttered a cry of distress.

Kd.1.63.5

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, there are these two cases of manifestation of a serpent’s true nature⁴: when he indulges in sexual intercourse with a female of his own species, and when he falls asleep in confidence. Monks, these are two cases of manifestation of a serpent's true nature. Monks, if an animal is not ordained, it should not be ordained; if it is ordained, it should be expelled."

¹ paccantima. Vinaya Texts i.218 say “(near the boundary wall of the Jetavana)”, and although this may be meant, there is no evidence for it at Vin-a.1022. Paccantima cannot well mean “neighbouring, adjoining” here, for the evidence is that monk and snake shared the same dwelling-place. ² kavāṭaṃ paṇāmento. On this phrase see BD.1.199, n.3. ³ tatth’eva.

⁴ Vin-a.1022 gives five cases: the time of its reinstatement, paṭisandhi, of its sloughing its skin, the two cases mentioned in the text, and the time of its passing away.

Vin.1.88

THE STORY OF A MATRICIDE

Now at that time a certain brahmin youth deprived his mother of life. He was troubled about his evil deed, he was ashamed of it, loathed it.¹ Then it occurred to that brahmin youth: "Now, by what means could I get rid of this evil deed?" Then it occurred to this brahmin youth: "These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are dhamma-farers, even-farers Brahma-farers, they are truth-speakers, of moral habit, of good conduct. Now, if I were to go forth among these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, so would I get rid of this evil deed."

Kd.1.64.1

BD.4.112

Then that brahmin youth, having approached (some) monks, asked for the going forth. The monks spoke thus to the venerable Upāli: "Formerly, indeed, reverend Upāli, a serpent in the form of a brahmin youth went forth among the monks. Please, reverend Upāli, examine this brahmin youth."² Then as that brahmin youth was being examined by the venerable Upāli he told him this matter. The venerable Upāli told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.64.2

"Monks, if a matricide is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled."

THE STORY OF A PARRICIDE

At that time a certain brahmin youth deprived his father of life. He was troubled about his evil deed ... (=Kd.1.64.1, Kd.1.64.2) ... The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.65.1

"Monks, if a parricide is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled."

¹ As at Vin.2.292. ² Cf. above Kd.1.62.2.

THE STORY OF A KILLER OF A PERFECTED ONE

Kd.1.66.1

Now at that time several monks were going along the highroad from Sāketa to Sāvathī. Thieves, having issued forth on the road, robbed some monks and killed other monks. Those in the royal service, having set out from Sāvathī, caught some thieves (but) other thieves ran away. Those who ran away went forth among the monks; those who were caught were led off to execution.

Kd.1.66.2

Those who had gone forth saw those thieves being led off to execution; seeing them, they spoke thus: “It is well that we ran away, for had we been caught then should we have been killed likewise.” Monks spoke thus: “But what have you done, your reverences?” Then those who had gone forth told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.113

Vin.1.89

“Monks, those monks were perfected ones. Monks, if a murderer of a perfected one is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF A RAPER OF NUNS

Kd.1.67.1

Now at that time several nuns were going along the high-road from Sāketa to Sāvathī. Thieves, having issued forth on the road, robbed some nuns and seduced other nuns. Those in the royal service, having set out from Sāvathī ... (=Kd.1.66.1, Kd.1.66.1) ... The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, if a seducer of a nun is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.¹ “Monks, if a schismatic is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.

“Monks, if a shedder of (a Truth-finder’s²) blood is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.³”

¹ Cf. above BD.4.108, where a novice who seduces a nun is to be expelled. ² So the Commentary., Vin-a.1024. ³ Other prohibitions in regard to these classes of persons given at Vin.1.136, Vin.1.320.

THE STORY OF A HERMAPHRODITE

Now at that time a certain hermaphrodite had gone forth among the monks. He acted and also made (another) act. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.68.1

“Monks, if a hermaphrodite is not ordained, he should not be ordained; if he is ordained, he should be expelled.”

THE STORY OF WITHOUT A PRECEPTOR, ETC.

Now at that time monks ordained one who had no preceptor. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.69.1

“Monks, one who has no preceptor should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks ordained one who had an Order as preceptor¹ ... He said:

Kd.1.69.2

“Monks, one who has an Order as preceptor should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.4.114

Now at that time monks ordained one who had a group as preceptor ... He said:

Kd.1.69.3

“Monks, one who has a group as preceptor should not be ordained ... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks ordained one who had a eunuch² as preceptor ... one who had one living in communion as it were by theft as preceptor ... one who had one who had gone over to (another) sect as preceptor ... one who had an animal as preceptor ... one who had a matricide as preceptor ... one who had a parricide as preceptor ... one who had a murderer of a perfected one as preceptor ... one who had a seducer of a nun as preceptor ... one who had a schismatic as preceptor ... one who had the shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood as preceptor ... one who had a hermaphrodite as preceptor. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.69.4

Vin.1.90

¹ It is to be gathered from Vin-a.1025 that an Order might (inadvertently) contain any of the types of malefactors mentioned above from a matricide down to a hermaphrodite. ² The following classes of persons mentioned also above, BD.4.108ff.

“Monks, one who has a eunuch as preceptor ... one who has a hermaphrodite as preceptor should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF WITHOUT A BOWL, ETC.

Kd.1.170.1

Now at that time monks (each) ordained one who had no bowl.¹ They walked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands.² People ... spread it about, saying: “Like followers of (other) sects.”³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who has no bowl should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.170.2

Now at that time monks (each) ordained one who had no robe. They walked naked for almsfood. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like followers of other sects.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.115

“Monks, one who has no robe should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.170.3

Now at that time monks (each) ordained one who had no bowl or robe. They walked naked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands ...

“Monks, one who has no bowl or robe should not be ordained. Whoever should ordain (one such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.1.170.4

¹ apattaka, see BD.2.123, n.6. ² hatthesu piṇḍāya caranti. Same expression at Vin.3.245; see BD.2.119, n.3, n.4. For same expression in next paragraph, Vin.1.372 gives five variant readings all reading carati. But at Nuns' Bu-Pc.63ff. we get a singular noun followed by a plural verb, as above, with the meaning that each nun ordained a woman, and that then these were considered all together as a plurality: in referring to their actions a plural verb was needed and was used. ³ Cf. Vin.3.245 \(BD.2.119\).

Now at that time monks (each) ordained by means of lending a bowl.¹ When they were ordained, they returned (each one) his bowl and walked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands ...

“Monks, one should not ordain by means of lending a bowl. Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) ordained by means of lending a robe. When they were ordained, they returned (each one) his robe and walked naked for almsfood ...

Kd.1.70.5

“Monks, one should not ordain by means of lending a robe. Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) ordained by means of lending a bowl and robe. When they were ordained, they returned the bowl and robe and walked naked for almsfood (to be put) into their hands ...

Kd.1.70.6

Vin.1.91

“Monks, one should not ordain by means of lending a bowl and robe. Whoever should (so) ordain, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Told is the Portion on Twenty (Cases) where one should not ordain

THE PORTION ON THIRTY-TWO (CASES) WHERE ONE SHOULD NOT LET GO FORTH

Now at that time monks (each) let go forth one who had his hands cut off ... his feet cut off ... his hands and feet cut off ... his ears cut off ... his nose ... his ears and nose ... his fingers ... his nails² cut off ... who had the

BD.4.116

¹ yācitakena pattena, by (using) a bowl that had been asked for, i.e. borrowed by the candidates for ordination. ² aḷa; see Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.71, 1886, p.105.

tendons (of his feet) cut ... one who had webbed fingers¹ ... a hunchback ... a dwarf ... one who had a goitre ... one who had been branded² ... one who had been scourged³ ... one who had been written about⁴ ... one who had elephantiasis ... one who was badly ill ... one who disgraced an assembly⁵ (by some deformity⁶) ... one who was purblind⁷ ... one with a crooked limb ... one who was lame ... one paralysed down one side ... a cripple ... one weak from old age ... one who was blind⁷... one who was dumb⁸ ... one who was deaf⁹... one who was blind and dumb ... one who was deaf and dumb ... one who was blind and deaf and dumb. They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.1.71.2

He said: “Monks, one who has had his hands cut off should not be let go forth; one who has had his feet cut off ... one who is blind and deaf and dumb should not be let go forth. Whoever should let (one such) go forth, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Told is the Portion on Thirty-two (Cases) where one should not let go forth

Told is the Ninth Portion for Repeating: that on Inheritance

¹ phaṇahatthaka, with a hand like a snake’s hood. Cf. hatthaphaṇaka at Vin.2.107, “hands used as an instrument shaped like a snake’s hood” for smoothing the hair. Vin-a.1027, “one whose fingers were grown together like a bat’s wings”. See note by A.K. COOMARASWAMY on the jālalakkhaṇa, “The ‘Webbed Finger’ of Buddha”, Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. VII, 1931, p.365, where he is of the opinion that jāla does not mean a webbing connecting the fingers, but refers to the thin lines of rosy light which may be seen between the fingers when they are held together and the hand held up to the light. The fingers of the Buddha, as Mahāpuruṣa, would be straight and regularly formed, of one measure, ekappamāṇā, according to this lakkhaṇa, or sign. “It is even possible”, as Coomaraswamy adds in a postscript, “that ‘having webbed fingers’ represents the exact opposite of the meaning of the original lakkhaṇa.”

² Cf. Vin.1.76 (above, BD.4.95). ³ Cf. Vin.1.75 (above, BD.4.95). ⁴ |emphCf. Vin.1.75 (above, BD.4.95) ⁵ parisadūsaka. ⁶ Given at length at Vin-a.1027ff. ⁷ The two words for blind: kāṇa and andha, are used. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1030 says that kāṇa means blind of one or both eyes (and not merely blind of one). He cites the Mahāpaccaṛī Commentary as asserting kāṇa to mean blind of one eye and andha of both, and he cites the Great Commentary, as saying that andha means blind from birth; he keeps this explanation at Vin-a.1031. “Purblind” and the next three terms occur at Vin.2.90, AN.i.107, AN.ii.85, AN.iii.385, SN.i.94, Pp.51.

⁸ Vin-a.1031 explains that if he were unable to say the complete formula for going for refuge, he could not go forth. ⁹ Vin-a.1031, if he could hear a loud noise he might go forth.

THE STORY OF GUIDANCE FOR THE UNCONSCIENTIOUS

BD.4.117

Now at that time the group of six monks gave guidance to those who were unconscientious. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, guidance should not be given to those who are unconscientious. Whoever should give it to (any such), there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

Now at that time monks lived under the guidance of those who were unconscientious; these soon also became unconscientious, depraved monks. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one should not live under the guidance of those who are unconscientious. Whoever should (so) live, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

Kd.1.72.2

Then it occurred to the monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that guidance should not be given to those who are unconscientious, and that one should not live under the guidance of those who are unconscientious. Now, how are we to know who is conscientious or who is unconscientious?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to wait for four or five days until (you can say), ‘I know what is the nature of the monks’¹.”

Vin.1.92

THE STORY OF GUIDANCE FOR ONE ON A JOURNEY, ETC.

Kd.1.73.1

Now at that time a certain monk was going along a highroad in the Kosala country. Then it occurred to that monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that one should not live independently.² I am in need of guidance³ but I am going along a high-road. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow a monk, monks, if he is going along a high-road and is not receiving guidance to live independently.”

¹ bhikkhusabhāgata. Vin-a.1031, “Until I know from monks that their conscientiousness is shared by the monk giving guidance”. Or, is sabhāgata equal to sabhāva, the nature (of a monk), as I take it to be? ² Above, BD.4.101. ³ ahañ c’amhi nissayakaraṇīyo.

Kd.1.73.2

Now at that time two monks were going along a high-road in the Kosala country. These arrived at a certain residence, and there one monk became ill. Then it occurred to that ill monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that one should not live independently. I am in need of guidance, but I am ill. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.118

“I allow a monk, monks, if he is ill and is not receiving guidance to live independently.”

Kd.1.73.3

Then it occurred to that monk who was tending the ill one: “It is laid down by the Lord ... I am in need of guidance but this monk is ill. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow a monk, monks, if he is tending an ill one and is not receiving guidance, to live independently although being requested.¹”

Kd.1.73.4

Now at that time a certain monk was staying in a forest and there came to be comfort² for him in this lodging. Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that one should not live independently. I am in need of guidance, but I am staying in a forest and there comes to be comfort for me in this lodging. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow a monk, monks, if he is a forest-dweller and is thinking about abiding in comfort³ and is not receiving guidance, to live independently, thinking: ‘If a suitable giver of guidance comes along, I will live under his guidance’.”

¹ By the ill one, Vin-a.1032. That is, as the Commentary says, the ill monk may ask the other to request him to give guidance; but if through pride he does not ask, he may go away. We must therefore assume that if he stays with the invalid but does not take guidance from him, he may live independently of guidance. ² phāsu. Vin-a.1032, “there comes to be comfort in regard to obtaining tranquillity and vision”. ³ Phāsuvihāra; cf. brahmavihāra, and the monk who was phāsuvihārika, below BD.4.373, Kd.vii.12.1.

PERMISSION TO PROCLAIM BY CLAN

Now at that time (a person) wished for ordination from the venerable Kassapa the Great.¹ Then the venerable Kassapa the Great sent a message to the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Let Ānanda come, he will proclaim² this (person).” The venerable Ānanda spoke thus:

Kd.1.74.1

“I am not able to pronounce³ the elder’s⁴ name (for) the elder is my teacher⁵.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.119

“I allow you, monks, to proclaim merely by clan (-name).”

Vin.1.93

THE STORY OF TWO EXPECTING ORDINATION, ETC.

Now at that time two (persons) wished for ordination from the venerable Kassapa the Great. These quarrelled, saying: “I will be ordained first, I will be ordained first.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.74.2

“I allow you, monks, to make two proclamations together.”

Now at that time there were those wishing for ordination from several elders. These quarrelled, saying: “I will be ordained first, I will be ordained first.” The elders spoke thus: “Come, your reverences, we are making all the proclamations together.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.74.3

¹ At AN.i.23 called “chief of those who uphold the ascetic practices”. Verses at Thag.1051–1090. He exchanged robes with Gotama, SN.ii.221. ² anussāveti, in technical meaning of proclaiming the resolution three times after the motion for ordaining a person had been put before an Order. Cf. Kd.1.28.3–Kd.1.28.6. ³ gahetuṃ, a word with a variety of meanings; here meaning “to pronounce” in sense of “to take”, cf. “to take his name in vain”. Since Ānanda calls Kassapa his guru (garu me), and if we equate guru with ācariya, spiritual teacher or father (cf. pitucitta, Vin.1.45, Vin.1.60), it was not suitable for Ānanda to “take” (pronounce) his “father’s” name. The use of the gotta (clan) name is less intimate and therefore permissible. Cf. Kauṣītakī Upaniṣad 2.11.7 where the father “takes his son’s name”, nāma asya gṛṇhati. I am indebted for this note to A.K. Coomaraswamy. Mahākassapa’s reference to Ānanda as kumāraka, young boy at SN.ii.218 should also be noted. ⁴ I.e. Mahākassapa’s, as stated at Vinaya Texts i.228. For in making the proclamations, Ānanda would have had to say that so-and-so wished to be ordained by Kassapa. ⁵ garu, probably equivalent to guru, spiritual teacher. Cf. garunissaya at Vin.2.303.

“I allow you, monks, to make two or three proclamations together if there is one preceptor, but not if there are different preceptors.”

PERMISSION FOR ORDINATION TWENTY YEARS FROM CONCEPTION

Kd.1.75.1

Now at that time the venerable Kassapa the Boy¹ became ordained twenty years after his conception. Then it occurred to the venerable Kassapa the Boy: “It is laid down by the Lord that an individual who is under twenty years of age should not be ordained,² and I am twenty years from my conception. Now am I ordained³ or am I not ordained?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.120

“When in his mother’s womb the first thought has arisen, the first consciousness appeared,⁴ his birth is (to be reckoned as) from that time. I allow you, monks, to ordain one who is twenty years of age from his conception.”

ORDINATION PROCEDURE

Kd.1.76.1

Now at that time ordained (monks) were to be seen who were (afflicted by) leprosy and boils and eczema and consumption and epilepsy.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, when one is being ordained to ask him about things which are stumbling-blocks⁶ for him.⁷ And thus, monks, should he be asked: Have you diseases like this: leprosy, boils, eczema, consumption, epilepsy?

¹ Kumāarakassapa. Kumāra has the meaning both of boy and of prince. Kumāarakassapa “went forth” when he was only seven years old and he had been reared by a king since his birth by a nun; see AN-a.i.284, MN-a.ii.120, Thag-a. (Psalms of the Brethren p.147f.), Dh-p-a.iii.144, Ja.i.148. Verses are ascribed to him at Thag.201–202. Called “chief of those who are versatile speakers” at AN.i.24. The Vammīki Sutta (MN.i.142) was spoken to Kumāarakassapa; the Nigrodhamigajātaka No.12 and Dh-p.160 on account of his mother. ² Bu-Pc.65, and above, BD.4.98. ³ Cf. Bu-Pc.65 where it is stated that if a person is ordained while he is under twenty he is not (really) ordained. He himself incurs no offence, but there is an offence for the monks who ordain him. ⁴ Cf. definition of manussaviggaha, human being, at Vin.3.73.

⁵ Cf. above, Kd.1.39.1. ⁶ antarāyike dhamme, cf. Vin.4.134 (BD.3.21, where see n.5). ⁷ Cf. Vin.2.271f. for the questions put to nuns on their ordination.

Are you a human being? Are you a man? Are you a freeman? Are you without debts? Are you not in the royal service? Have you your parents' consent? Are you full twenty years of age? Are you complete as to bowl and robes? What is your name? What is the name of your preceptor?"

Now at that time monks asked those wishing for ordination, but who were not instructed, about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to reply. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.76.2

"I allow you, monks, having instructed first, afterwards to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks."

Vin.1.94

They instructed just there in the midst of the Order. As before, those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to reply. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.76.3

"I allow you, monks, having instructed aside, to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks in the midst of the Order. And thus, monks, should one be instructed: First, he should be invited to choose¹ a preceptor; having invited him to choose a preceptor, a bowl and robes should be pointed out to him (with the words): 'This is a bowl for you, this is an outer cloak, this is an upper robe, this is an inner robe; go and stand in such and such a place'."

BD.4.121

Ignorant, inexperienced (monks) instructed them. Those wishing for ordination, but who were not (properly) instructed, were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to reply. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.1.76.4

"Monks, one should not be instructed by an ignorant, inexperienced (monk). Whoever (such) should instruct, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to instruct by means of an experienced, competent monk."

Kd.1.76.5

Those who were not agreed upon instructed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Monks, one should not be instructed by one who is not agreed upon. Whoever (such) should instruct, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to instruct by means of one who is agreed upon. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: oneself may be agreed upon by oneself or another may be agreed upon by another¹. And how is oneself to be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. So and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order, I would instruct so and so.’ Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself.

¹ gāhāpetabbo; cf. gāhāpaka at Vin.3.246 (BD.2.122, where see n.1).

Kd.1.76.6

“And how is another to be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. So and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order, so and so could instruct so and so.’ Thus may another be agreed upon by another.

Kd.1.76.7

“The monk who is agreed upon, having approached the one who wishes for ordination, should speak thus to him: ‘Listen, so and so. This is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking). When I am asking you in the midst of the Order about what is,² you should say, ‘It is,’ if it is so; you should say, ‘It is not,’ if it is not so. Do not be at a loss, do not be abashed. Thus I will ask³ you: ‘Have you diseases like this ... What is your preceptor’s name?’”

Kd.1.76.8

They⁴ arrived together. They should not arrive together. The instructor having come first, the Order should be informed by him, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. So and so wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. He has been instructed by me. If it seems right to the Order, let so and so come.” He should be told: “Come.” Having made him arrange his upper robe over one shoulder, having made him honour the monks' feet, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms, he should be made to ask for ordination, saying: "Honoured sirs, I ask the Order for ordination; honoured sirs, may the Order raise me up out of compassion.¹ And a second time, honoured sirs, ... And a third time, honoured sirs, I ask the Order for ordination; honoured sirs, may the Order raise me up out of compassion."

Vin.1.95

¹ Cf. below, Kd.2.15.6. ² yaṃ jātam. Vin-a.1033 says about that which is produced, jāta, has arisen, is existing in your body. This can only refer to the questions on the diseases. The Pali in such cases is idiomatic: “Is there for you a disease?” So one could say, “I am asking you about what exists, yaṃ jātam (as a disease for you), and you should say there is, atthi (such a disease for me) it being so, santaṃ; there is not, n’atthi, it being not so, asantaṃ”. But since in fact not all the questions are about diseases, I have translated as above, the better to emphasise the general necessity to answer all the questions truthfully in accordance with the preliminary reminder, “This is a time for truth and fact”. ³ pucchissam. ⁴ The instructor and his candidate. Nothing to show whether the Lord is supposed to continue to give these instructions, or whether they are incorporated without being attributed to him.

Kd.1.76.9

The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: "Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, so and so, wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. If it seems right to the Order I could ask so and so about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Listen, so and so. This is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking). I am asking you about what is. You should say, 'It is', if it is so; you should say, 'It is not,' if it is not so. Have you diseases like this: ... What is your preceptor's name?"

Bd.4.123

The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: "Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This one, so and so, wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. He is quite pure in regard to the things which are stumbling-blocks, he is complete as to bowl and robes. So and so is asking the Order for ordination by means of the preceptor so and so. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order ordain so and so by means of the preceptor so and so. This is the motion.

Kd.1.76.10

"Honoured sirs, let the Order hear me. This one, so and so, wishes for ordination from the venerable so and so. He is quite pure in regard to the things which are stumbling-blocks, he is complete as to bowl and robes. So and so is asking the Order for ordination by means of the preceptor so and so. The Order is ordaining so and so by means of the preceptor so and so. If the ordination of so and so by means of the preceptor so and so is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak.

Kd.1.76.11

"And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. "So and so is being ordained by the Order by means of the preceptor so and so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

Kd.1.76.12

¹ Cf. above, Bu-Pj.1.29.2.

Told is the (Formal) Act of Ordination

FOUR REQUISITES

The shadow should be measured¹ at once, the length of the season² should be explained, the portion of the day³ should be explained, the formula⁴ should be explained, the four resources should be explained (with the words): ‘Going forth is on account of meals of scraps ... (as at Kd.1.30.4) ... These are extra acquisitions: ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses.’

BD.4.124

Vin.1.96

Told are the Four Resources

FOUR THINGS NOT TO BE DONE

Now at that time monks, having ordained a certain monk, went away leaving him alone. Afterwards as he was going along alone, he met his former wife on the way. She spoke thus: “What, have you now gone forth?”

“Yes, I have gone forth.” She said:

“Sexual intercourse is difficult for those who have gone forth. Come and indulge in sexual intercourse.” Having indulged in sexual intercourse with her, he arrived late. Monks spoke thus: “What were you, your reverence, doing for such a long time?”

Kd.1.78.2

Then this monk told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ This must mean the shadow of the candidate, cast by the sun. Vin-a.1033 says the shadow should be measured with the words, It is the length of one man or of two men, ekaporisā dveporisā. Cf. porisa meaning “height of a man.” at MN.i.74, MN.i.187, MN.i.365. ² Vin-a.1033 “the seasons are the rains, the cold weather, the hot weather. If whichever season it is is not ended, that season is incomplete by so many days”, thus the number of days remaining in that season, or “the exact season” (Pali-English Dictionary) should be explained.

³ Vin-a.1033, morning or afternoon. ⁴ sangīti, chanting together. According to Vin-a.1034, having done all this together he should be asked about his measure, the season and portion of the day in order that he might give the correct answers and so make it clear that he has properly understood his age as a member of the Order.

“I allow you, monks, having ordained (a monk), to give him a companion and to explain four things which are not to be done. When a monk is ordained he should not indulge in sexual intercourse, even with an animal.¹ Whatever monk indulges in sexual intercourse, he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a man with his head cut off could not become one to live by that bodily connection, even so a monk, having indulged in sexual intercourse, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans.² This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.

Kd.1.78.3

“When a monk is ordained he should not take by theft what has not been given, even if it is only a blade of grass.³ Whatever monk takes by theft a *pāda*⁴ or the worth of a pāda or more than a pāda that has not been given, he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a withered leaf, freed from its stalk, could not become green again, even so a monk, having taken by theft a pāda or the worth of a pāda or more than a pāda that was not given, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans.⁵ This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.

BD.4.125

Vin.1.97

Kd.1.78.4

“When a monk is ordained he should not intentionally deprive a living thing of life, even if it is only an ant.⁶ Whatever monk deprives a human being of life even down to causing abortion,⁷ he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a flat stone, broken in half, becomes (something) not to be put together again, even so a monk, having intentionally deprived a human being of life, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans.⁸ This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.

Kd.1.78.5

“When a monk is ordained he should not lay claim to a state of further-men, even thinking: ‘I delight in solitude’.⁹ Whatever monk, of evil desires, filled with covetousness, lays claim to a state of further-men which is non-existent, not a fact¹⁰—to meditation or to a deliverance or to contemplation or to an attainment or to a way or to a fruit¹¹—he becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. As a palmyra palm, cut off at the crown, ¹ Bu-Pj.1, Vin.3.22. ² Vin.3.28. ³ Bu-Pj.2. ⁴ See note at BD.1.71. ⁵ Cf. Vin.3.47. ⁶ Bu-Pj.3 (for human beings) and Bu-Pc.61 (for animals). ⁷ Vin.3.83f. ⁸ Vin.3.74. ⁹ suññāgāra. See Vin.3.91. Where “delight in solitude for the mind devoid of the hindrances” occurs in definition of “state of further-men”. ¹⁰ Vin.3.90, where such a one is called the “chief great thief”. ¹¹ Cf. the longer list of concepts enumerated in definition of “state of further-men” at Vin.3.91, Vin.3.92.

could not become one for further growth,¹ even so a monk, of evil desires, filled with covetousness, having claimed a state of further-men which is nonexistent, not a fact, becomes not a (true) recluse, not a son of the Sakyans. This is a thing not to be done by you as long as life lasts.”

Told are the Four Things which are not to be done

THE STORY OF ONE SUSPENDED FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

Kd.1.79.1

Now at that time a certain monk, suspended² for not seeing an offence, left the Order, (but) having come back again, he asked the monks for ordination. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.4.126

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, suspended for not seeing an offence, leaves the Order, (but) having come back again, asks the monks for ordination. They should speak thus to him: ‘Will you see this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will see it’, he may be let go forth. If he says: ‘I will not see it’, he should not be let go forth.

Kd.1.79.2

“Having let him go forth they should say (to him): ‘Will you see this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will see it’, he may be ordained. If he says: ‘I will not see it’, he should not be ordained. Having ordained him, they should say: ‘Will you see this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will see it’, he may be restored.³ If he says: ‘I will not see it’, he should not be restored. Having restored him, they should say: ‘Do you see this offence?’ If he sees it, that is good; if he does not see it, he may be suspended again if it possible to obtain unanimity⁴; if it is not possible to obtain unanimity there is no offence in eating with, in being in communion with (him).⁵

Kd.1.79.3

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, suspended for not making amends for an offence, leaves the Order (but) having come back again, asks the monks for ordination. They should speak thus to him: ‘Will you make amends for this offence?’ If he says: ‘I will make amends’, he may be let go forth ... (as in Kd.1.79.2 reading make amends for instead of see) ... in being in communion with (him).

¹ Vin.3.92. ² ukkhitta. Cf. Vin.4.113, Vin.4.137, Vin.4.218 and see BD.3.28, n.4. ³ On osāreti, to restore after seeing an offence, making amends for it and giving up a false view, see BD.3.28, n.4. ⁴ I.e. among the monks, for this further suspension. ⁵ So Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1034, tena saddhim, and as may be deduced from Bu-Pc.69 and its Old Commentary’s definition of “has not acted according to the rule”.

Vin.1.98

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, suspended for not giving up a wrong view, leaves the Order (but) having come back again, asks the monks for ordination. They should speak thus to him: ‘Will you give up this wrong view?’ If he says: ‘I will give it up he may be let go forth ... (as in Kd.1.79.2 reading give up instead of see) ... in being in communion with (him).

Kd.1.79.4

The Great Section¹: the First

THIS IS ITS KEY

As to great matters in the Vinaya, to bringing ease to the well-behaved both in restraint of evil desires and in strivings for conscientiousness,
And also bearing in mind the instruction which is within the range of the all-knowing conqueror, in a realm which has no other,
in peace from bondage,
in what is well laid down,
in that which has no doubt,
In Section in Vinaya, as well as in Parivāra and in Heading(s), the good follows closely as though imitating.
Who does not understand cattle does not guard the herd,
so not knowing moral habit, how can he guard restraint?
Although the Suttantas and Abhidhamma be forgotten, for all time the teaching persists while Vinaya is not destroyed.
Therefore, because firmly supported,
I will declare the key in regular sequence
according to (my) knowledge.
Listen while I speak.
The matter, the provenance², the offence, the methods and the abbreviations—it is not easy not to leave something out; discern that from the method.

BD.4.127

Vin.1.99

¹ Mahākhandhaka. Called pabbajjākkhandhaka at DN-a.ii.363. ² nidāna. This usually appears in the Vinaya to mean the place where the Lord was staying when such conduct occurred as led to the framing of a rule or allowance, thus the “provenance” of a rule or allowance. See also ks.iii, Introduction xff.; ks.iv, Introduction xivf.

Awakening, and the Rājāyatana, the Goatherds', Sahampati
 Brahmā, Aḷara, Uddaka, and monks, Upaka the seer, Koṇḍañña, Vappa, Bhaddiya and Mahānāma, Assaji,
 Yasa, four, fifty, all, he sent out (on tour), the quarters,
 The subject,¹ as to Māra, and the thirty,
 at Uruvelā, three matted hair ascetics, fire-room, the Great Kings, Sakka, and Brahmā, the entire (population),
 Rag-robe, a tank, and a stone, kakudha- (tree),
 a stone, a rose-apple, and a mango, emblic myrobalam, he brought a flower from the Coral Tree,
 'Kassapa, let them be chopped, let them be kindled, and let them be extinguished',
 they plunged into, fire-vessels, rain, Gayā, and the Palm Grove, (King of) Magadha, Upatissa, Kolita, and distinguished (young men), the going forth, wrongly dressed, dismissal, and the lean wretched brahmin,
 He indulged in bad habits, the stomach,
 the brahmin youth, a group,
 year's standing, by the ignorant, going away,
 ten years' standing, guidance,
 They did not conduct themselves (properly), to dismiss, ignorant, nullification, five, six,
 and whoever else, and naked, not with (his hair) cut off, matted hair ascetic, a Sakyan.
 Five diseases among the Magadhese, service,² a thief (and) fingers, and (the King of) Magadha decreed, jail, written about, scourged, Branded, debtor, and a slave, close-shaving, Upāli, snake (-wind disease),³ a family with faith, and Kaṇḍaka, and then crowded up,
 About how to live,⁴ the boy, trainings, and they were,⁵ Now how?
 entire, by mouth, preceptors, luring away, Kaṇḍaka, Eunuch, theft,⁶ going over to,⁷ and a snake, on a mother, a father, perfected ones, a nun, schismatic, concerning blood,¹ hermaphrodite,²

¹ vatthum. Appearing to refer to Kd.1.12.2, Kd.1.12.4, the going forth and ordination formula by the three refuges. Going forth and Ordination form the subject matter of Section i of the Mahāvagga. ² Text reads eko. Oldenberg, Vin.1.373 thinks we ought to read bhaṭo (for rājabhāṭa in Kd.1.40.3). ³ See Kd.1.50.1; Kd.1.51.1. ⁴ vatthumhi, i.e. in dependence for five years or for life, Kd.1.53.4. Sinhalese edition vatthusmiṃ. ⁵ viharanti, as in Kd.1.57.1. ⁶ I.e. in communion by theft, Kd.1.62.3. ⁷ I.e. going over to (another) sect, Kd.1.62.3.

¹ ruhirena, here replacing lohittuppādako of Kd.1.67.1, the shedder of a (tathāgata's) blood.

² Here called only vyañjana (accompanying attribute, distinctive characteristic) instead of ubhatovyañjanaka as at Kd.1.68.1.

Without a preceptor, through an Order, a group, eunuch, without a bowl, without a robe, both these,
 then those three on what was lent, BD.4.129 Hands, feet, hands and feet, ears, nose, both these, fingers, nails, tendons, webbed hands, and a hunch-back, dwarf, Having goitre, and then a branded one,
 scourged, written about, elephantiasis, badly (ill), and one who disgraces an assembly, blind, and just then one with a crooked limb, Vin.1.100
 And then a lame one, paralysed down one side, with a cripple, old age, blind from birth, dumb, deaf, blind and dumb, and what is thereto,
 Whatever is called blind and dumb, and then dumb and deaf,
 And blind and dumb and deaf,
 and guidance to the unconscientious,
 And one should (not) live, what is done on a journey,³ being asked, wishing for,
 'let him come',⁴ they quarrelled,⁵ if there is one preceptor, Kassapa,
 And ordained (monks) were to be seen pressing about diseases,
 the uninstructed were at a loss, instruction just there,
 And then in the Order, then an ignorant one, and not agreed upon, together, the 'may-it-raise-(me-)up' ordination, resource, alone, the three.⁶
 In this Section are one hundred and seventy-two items.

Told is the First Key, that to the Great Section

Vin.1.101

³ kataddhāna, referring to Kd.1.73.1, Kd.1.73.2. Sinhalese edition reads tathāddhānaṃ. ⁴ Following āgacchatu of Sinhalese edition = Kd.1.74.1, instead of Text's āgacchantam. ⁵ vivadenti (with variant reading vivādentī, Vin.1.373). ⁶ Doubtless referring to (1) not seeing an offence, (2) not making amends for an offence, (3) not giving up a wrong view (each a ground for a monk's suspension; and their opposites, each being a ground for his restoration dealt with at Kd.1.79.1, Kd.1.79.4).

2. OBSERVANCE (UPOSATHA)

PERMISSION TO GATHER

Kd.2.1.1
BD.4.130

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying near Rājagaha on Mount Vulture Peak. Now at that time wanderers belonging to other sects, having collected together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month,¹ spoke dhamma,² People came up to them to hear dhamma. They gained affection for the wanderers belonging to other sects, they gained faith (in them), the wanderers belonging to other sects gained adherents.³

Kd.2.1.2

Then reasoning arose thus in the mind of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha as he was meditating in seclusion: “At present wanderers belonging to other sects, having collected together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month, speak dhamma. These people go up to them to hear dhamma. They gain affection for the wanderers belonging to other sects, they gain faith (in them), the wanderers belonging to other sects gain adherents. Suppose the masters should also collect together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month?”

Kd.2.1.3

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance, As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, as I was meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in my mind thus: ‘At present wanderers belonging to other sects ... should collect together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month?’”

Kd.2.1.4

Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, gladdened, ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.1.102

¹ On pakkha, cf. Vin.4.75 (BD.2.313, and q.v. n.3) where eating food given pakkhikam and uposathikam, “on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon” and “on an observance-day”, form exceptions to the rule prohibiting a group-meal. ² Vin-a.1034, what is and what is not to be done by them. ³ pakkha is literally a party, a side, a faction, not necessarily a schismatic one, as is shown by above context, and see BD.3.190, n.3.

“I allow you, monks, to assemble together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month.”

Now at that time monks, thinking: “It is allowed by the Lord to assemble together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month,” having assembled together, sat down in silence. Those people came up to hear dhamma. They looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, having assembled together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month, sit in silence, like dumb pigs¹? Ought not dhamma to be spoken when they are assembled together?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, having assembled together on the fourteenth, fifteenth and eighth days of the half-month, to speak dhamma.”

Kd.2.2.1

PERMISSION TO RECITE THE PĀTIMOKKHA

Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “What now if I were to allow those rules of training, laid down by me for monks, (to form) a recital of Pātimokkha² for them? It would be a (formal) act of observance³ for them.”

Kd.2.3.1

Then the Lord, having emerged from his seclusion in the evening, on this occasion, in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Now, monks, as I was meditating in seclusion a reasoning

Kd.2.3.2
BD.4.132

¹ mūgasūkarā; Vin-a.1034 explains by thūlasarīrasūkarā, pigs that are fat in body. ² RHYSDAVIDS (E.R.E., article on Pātimokkha) says that from “the manner in which the word is used” in this passage it is not surprising” to find that the early Buddhists ascribed the institution ... of the Pātimokkha itself to a date long antecedent to that of the Buddha. If that be correct, the word Pātimokkha must have been current in Kosala when Buddhism arose, and ... among members of the previous orders”. Rhys Davids refers to DN.ii.46–DN.ii.49, where tradition ascribes a Pātimokkha to the time when Vipassin was Buddha, and to the verse (D.ii.49), repeated at Dh.185, which contains the words: pātimokkhe ca saṃvaro ... etaṃ buddhānasāsanāṃ, “and restraint according to the Pātimokkha—this is the teaching of the Buddhas” (plural).

On suggested meanings of Pātimokkha, see BD.1, Introduction, p.xiff.; Vinaya Texts i., Introduction, p.xxvii. On the number of rules that the Pātimokkha contained, see WINTERNITZ, History of Indian Literature, ii.2, n.5, which gives further references, and also B.C. LAW, History of Pali Literature, i.48f. ³ uposathakamma. Uposatha stands for “observance” itself. The phrase tad-ah-uposathe, “on this day’s observance”, is usually used for an Observance day.

arose in my mind thus: ‘What now if I should allow those rules of training, laid down by me for monks, (to form) a recital of Pātimokkha for them? It would be a (formal) act of observance for them’. I allow you, monks, to recite a Pātimokkha.

Kd.2.3.3

“And thus, monks, should it be recited: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Today, the fifteenth (day), is an Observance (day). If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out Observance, it may recite the Pātimokkha. What is the Order’s first duty? Let the venerable ones announce entire purity.¹ I will recite the Pātimokkha (while) one and all of us present² listen properly and pay attention to it.³ He for whom there may be an offence should reveal⁴ it. If there is no offence, you should become silent. By your becoming silent I shall thus know that the venerable ones are quite pure. For as there is an answer for each question,⁵ so it is proclaimed⁶ up to the third time in an assembly like this. Whatever monk remembering while it is being proclaimed up to the third time that there is an existent offence and should not reveal it, there comes to be conscious lying⁷ for him.⁸ Now, conscious lying, venerable ones, is a thing called a stumbling-block⁹ by the Lord. Therefore the existent offence should be revealed by a monk who remembers that he has fallen (into an offence) and who desires purity; for when it is revealed there comes to be comfort for him.’”

Vin.1.103

BD.4.133

Kd.2.3.4

¹ pārisuddhi, i.e. that only those are present who have committed no offences, or who have acknowledged any committed, or who have fulfilled the penalty for them. Cf. below, BD.4.158.

² sabbeva santā. Cf. ubho va santā at Vin.3.218. ³ Vinaya Texts i.242 take these words (all of us ... to it) to be the answer of the monks then present. As there is no ti marking the end of a speech, I think Gotama is still supposed to be telling the monks the way in which the recitation is to be carried out. ⁴ āvikareyya. Āvikaroti is to make clear, to manifest, thus to disclose, to bring to light. This method of clearing oneself of an offence is perhaps a forerunner to the more formal confession, āpatti deseti, to an Order, a group or to one individual monk. ⁵ paccekapuṭṭhassa. ⁶ anussāvita. ⁷ Defined at Vin.4.2 \(BD.2.166\).

⁸ Quoted Atthasālinī 92. ⁹ antarāyiko dhammo; see BD.3.21, n.5.

Pātimokkha¹ means: this is the beginning, this is the head,² this is the foremost of states that are good; therefore it is called Pātimokkha.

The venerable ones means: this—‘the venerable ones’—is a term of esteem,³ this is a term of respect, this is a deferential and honorific designation.⁴

I will recite means: I will explain, I will teach, I will lay down, I will establish, I will make clear, I will analyse, I will make plain.⁵

To it means: to (what) is called the Pātimokkha.

One and all of us present means: as many as there are in this assembly—elders and newly ordained and those of middle standing—these are called ‘one and all of us present’.

(We) listen properly means: having applied ourselves, having attended,⁶ we concentrate with all our mind.⁷

(We) pay attention means: we listen,⁸ minds one-pointed, minds not distracted, minds not perturbed.⁹

He for whom there may be an offence means: a certain offence of the five classes of offence or a certain offence of the seven classes of offence¹⁰ for an elder or for a newly ordained one or for one of middle standing.

He should reveal means: he should tell, he should make clear, he should open up, he should make plain in the midst of an Order or in the midst of a group or to one individual.

If there is no offence means: either one comes not to be committed or, if fallen into, it is removed.¹¹

Kd.2.3.5

BD.4.134

¹ On the inclusion of this Commentary in the Mahāvagga, see Vinaya Texts i, Introduction, p.xv and S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.91. ² This derivative, Pātimokkha from mukha “is quite impossible”, WINTERNITZ, History of Indian Literature, ii.22, n.2. But punning is not to be taken as serious scientific etymology, for this was unknown so early. ³ Or, of endearment, of affection, piya. ⁴ Cf. Cnd.130, Snp-a.536. ⁵ Cf. SN.ii.25, SN.ii.154. SN.iii.132, SN.iv.166; AN.i.286, AN.ii.160. ⁶ aṭṭhikatvā manasikatvā; cf. Vin.4.144. ⁷ sabbam cetasā samannāharāma; cf. SN.i.112, SN.i.189, SN.N.ii.220; AN.ii.116, AN.iii.163, AN.iii.402, AN.iv.167; MN.i.325. ⁸ nisāmema. ⁹ Cf. AN.iii.174; Ds.11, Ds.15, Ds.24: Mnd.501. ¹⁰ The five classes of offence comprise the Pārājika, Saṅghādisesa, Aniyata, Nissaggiya, Pācittiya offences; the seven classes these five with the addition of the Pāṭidesaniyas and Sekhiyas. ¹¹ vuṭṭhitā, feminine, agreeing with its subject āpatti. Vin-a.1034 reasonably explains: “here, either, whatever monk there comes to be not falling into an offence, or, having fallen is removed from it, this is the meaning of ‘if there is no offence’”. Cf. āpattiyaṃ vuṭṭhāna in Kd.1.38.10.

You should become silent means: you should consent, you should not speak.

I shall know¹ that you are quite pure means: I will know, I will understand.

Kd.2.3.6

For as there is an answer for each question means: as one (person) if questioned about one (thing) would answer, so it should be known to that assembly: ‘He questions me’.

An assembly like this (means): it is called an assembly of monks.

It is proclaimed up to the third time means: it is proclaimed once and it is proclaimed a second time and it is proclaimed a third time.

Remembering means: knowing, perceiving.

There is an existent offence means: either one comes to be committed or if fallen into is not removed.

Should not reveal means: should not tell, should not make clear, should not open up, should not make plain in the midst of an Order or in the midst of a group or to one individual.

Vin.1.104

Kd.2.3.7

There comes to be conscious lying for him means: What is conscious lying? It is an offence of wrong-doing.²

A thing called a stumbling-block by the Lord means: a stumbling-block to what? It is a stumbling-block to the attainment of the first (stage in) meditation, it is a stumbling-block to the attainment of the second (stage in) meditation ... the third (stage in) meditation, ... the fourth (stage in) meditation, it is a stumbling-block to the attainment of the meditations, of the deliverances, of the contemplations, of the attainments³, of the renunciations, of the escapes,⁴ of the aloofnesses, of states that are good.

BD.4.135

Therefore means: for that reason.

By (a monk) who remembers means: by (one) knowing, by (one) perceiving.

¹ vedissāmi ... jānissāmi. ² In the *Pācittiya*s, however, conscious lying appears as the first offence in this class. Vinaya Texts i.245, note says that because of this “we cannot interpret here dukkāṭa in the technical sense of a dukkāṭa offence”. I think, however, that the difference in the penalties laid down for conscious lying may point to different stages in the growth of the legislation. ³ Cf. Vin.3.91, Vin.3.92, Vin.4.25. ⁴ nissaraṇa. ‘Escapes’ mentioned at Ud.80; It.p.37, It.p.61; DN.iii.275; AN.iii.245, DN.iii.239–DN.iii.240; AN.iii.290, DN.iii.247; MN.i.84ff., etc.

By (a monk) who desires purity means: by (one) wishing to remove (an offence), by (one) wishing to be purified.

Kd.2.3.8

Existent offence means: either one comes to be committed, or, if fallen into, is not removed.

Should be revealed means: it should be revealed in the midst of an Order or in the midst of a group or to one individual.

For when it is revealed there comes to be comfort for him means: In what is there comfort? There comes to be comfort in the attainment of the first (stage in) meditation, there comes to be comfort in the attainment in the second (stage in) meditation ... the third (stage in) meditation ... the fourth (stage in) meditation; there comes to be comfort in the attainment of the meditations, of the deliverances, of the contemplations, of the attainments, of the renunciations, of the escapes, of the aloofnesses, of states that are good.¹

Now at that time monks, thinking: “The recital of the Pātimokkha is allowed by the Lord,” recited the Pātimokkha daily. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.4.1

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited daily. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha on an Observance day.”

Now at that time monks, thinking: “The recital of the Pātimokkha on an Observance day is allowed by the Lord,” recited the Pātimokkha three times during the half-month—on the fourteenth, on the fifteenth and on the eighth (days) of the half-month. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.4.2

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited three times in the half-month. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha once in the half-month: either on this fourteenth or on the fifteenth (day).”

BD.4.136

¹ Cf. the forest or jungle dwelling monk who had comfort, phāsu, Kd.1.73.4. This example together with the one given above indicate that phāsu is by no means used exclusively to denote physical comfort.

Kd.2.5.1

Now at that time the group of six monks recited the Pātimokkha according to assembly, each one before his own assembly. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.1.105

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited according to assembly, each one before his own assembly, Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, a (formal) act of Observance for all together.”¹

Kd.2.5.2

Then it occurred to the monks: “A (formal) act of Observance for all together is allowed by the Lord. Now, how far does ‘being all together’² (go)? As far as one residence, or the whole earth?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.5.3

“I allow, monks, ‘being all together’ (to mean) as far as one residence.”

THE STORY OF MAHĀKAPPINA

Now at that time the venerable Kappina the Great³ was staying near Rājagaha at Maddakucchi in the deer-park. Then as the venerable Kappina the Great was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Should I go to an Observance or should I not go, should I go to a (formal) act of the Order or should I not go, I, nevertheless, am purified with the highest purification.”

Kd.2.5.4

Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind of the venerable Kappina the Great, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from Mount Vulture Peak appear in Maddakucchi in the deer-park before the venerable Kappina the Great. The Lord sat down on an appointed seat, and the venerable Kappina the Great, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance.

BD.4.137

¹ samaggānaṃ. Cf. samagga at Vin.4.52, “all come”, and see BD.2.267, n.7; and cf. samagga saṅgha at Vin.4.154, Vin.4.218, Vin.4.231 meaning a complete Order. ² sāmaggī. ³ At AN.i.25 called chief of the exhorters of monks. Verses at Thag.547–Thag.556. See Psalms of the Brethren p.254ff., and N.B. that on BD.4.256 “taught the sisters” (or nuns) should read “taught the brethren” (or monks), as noticed at Psalms of the Brethren p.417. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names ii.475, article: Mahākappina, should be corrected accordingly. See Sakya, p.140ff., for MRS. RHYS DAVIDS’ suggestion that Kappina was Assaji’s teacher.

As the venerable Kappina the Great was sitting down at a respectful distance the Lord spoke thus to him: “Now, Kappina, as you were meditating in seclusion did not a reasoning arise in your mind thus: ‘Should I go to an Observance or should I not go, should I go to a (formal) act of the Order or should I not go, I, nevertheless, am purified with the highest purification?’”

Kd.2.5.5

“Yes, Lord.”

“But if you brahmins¹ do not reverence, revere, esteem, honour the Observance, who is there who will reverence, revere, esteem, honour the Observance? You go along, brahmin, to the Observance, do not not go; go likewise to a (formal) act of the Order, do not not go.”

“Yes, Lord,” the venerable Kappina the Great answered the Lord in assent.

Kd.2.5.6

Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the venerable Kappina the Great with talk on dhamma, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from before the venerable Kappina the Great in Maddakucchi in the deer-park appear on Mount Vulture Peak.

Vin.1.106

PERMISSION FOR A BOUNDARY

Then it occurred to the monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that ‘being all together’ (means) as far as one residence. Now, how far does one residence (go)?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.6.1

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a boundary. And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: First, marks should be announced,² a mark consisting of a hillside, a mark consisting of a rock, a mark consisting of a grove, a mark consisting of a tree, a mark consisting of a road, a mark consisting of an anthill, a mark consisting of a river, a mark consisting of (a piece of) water. The Order, having announced the marks, should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen

BD.4.138

¹ Brahmin probably being used here in its Buddhist sense of “best, highest”. Kappina was older than Gotama. ² nimittā kittetabbā.

Kd.2.6.2 to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, if it seems right to the Order the Order may agree upon a boundary in accordance with these marks for the same communion for one Observance. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, the Order is agreeing upon a boundary in accordance with these marks for the same communion, for one Observance. If the agreement upon a boundary in accordance with these marks for the same communion, for one Observance, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The boundary in accordance with these marks is agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.2.7.1

Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: “An agreement upon a boundary is allowed by the Lord,” agreed upon very extensive boundaries, of four yojanas and five yojanas and six yojanas. Monks coming for Observance arrived while the Pātimokkha was being recited, and they arrived just after it had been recited, and they stayed (a night) on the way. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a very extensive boundary should not be agreed upon, of four yojanas or five yojanas or six yojanas. Whoever should (so) agree, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to agree upon a boundary of three yojanas at most.”¹

Kd.2.7.2

Now at that time the group of six monks agreed upon the other side of a river as a boundary. Monks coming for Observance were carried away and their bowls were carried away and their robes were carried away. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the other side of a river should not be agreed upon as a boundary. Whoever should (so) agree, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, when there may be a reliable boat¹ or a reliable bridge² to agree upon the other side of such a river as a boundary.”

BD.4.139

¹ According to Vin-a.1046 this means that having established the middle of the proposed residence, the boundary should not be more than one and a half yojanas from it in each direction. A triangle may be agreed upon, three yojanas from corner to corner.

ON AN OBSERVANCE HALL

Now at that time monks recited the Pātimokkha in successive cells without (making) a rendezvous.³ In-coming monks did not know or they thought, “Where will the Observance be carried out today?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.8.1

Vin.1.107

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in successive cells without (making) a rendezvous. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to carry out the Observance having agreed upon an Observance-hall that the Order desires: a dwelling-place or a curved house or a long house or a mansion or a cave.⁴ And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon:

Kd.2.8.2

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall. If the agreement upon such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such a dwelling-place as an Observance-hall is agreed upon by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.2.8.3

¹ dhuvanāvā. Vin-a.1046 gives various possibilities, one of which is a boat which plies regularly at the fords. ² dhuvasetu. Vin-a.1047 says “made of a collection of trees or boards joined together or a bridge where a caravan can go or what is suitable for the crossing over of elephants and horses is a large bridge; or a ‘reliable bridge’ means having even at that moment cut down a tree, a bridge that is suitable for people to cross over by one at a time. But it is not a ‘reliable bridge’ if it is not possible to cross by holding the jungle-rope and creepers twined above it”. ³ On samketa see BD.1.74, BD.1.88, BD.1.128, BD.1.135, BD.2.164, BD.2.239 (and n.3), BD.2.291, BD.2.294. ⁴ Cf. above, Kd.1.30.4 (and notes) and Vin.1.284.

BD.4.140 Now at that time in a certain residence two Observance-halls came to be agreed upon. Monks assembled together in both thinking: “Observance will be carried out here,” “Observance will be carried out here.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, two Observance-halls in one residence should not be agreed upon. Whoever should (so) agree, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, having abolished¹ one, to carry out the Observance in one place (only).

Kd.2.8.4

“And thus, monks, should it be abolished: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may abolish such and such an Observance-hall. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is abolishing such and such an Observance-hall. If the abolition of such and such an Observance-hall is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such an Observance-hall is abolished by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

ON A MAXIMUM FOR OBSERVANCE

Kd.2.9.1

Now at that time in a certain residence a very small Observance-hall came to be agreed upon. A large Order of monks came to be assembled together on an Observance-day. Monks, sitting on ground that had not been agreed upon, heard the Pātimokkha. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance is to be carried out having agreed upon an Observance-hall, but we heard the Pātimokkha while we were sitting on ground that was not agreed upon. Now was the Observance carried out for us or was it not carried out?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.1.108

¹ Vin-a.1039 explains this to mean “having abolished one of the proclamations”, i.e. having rescinded one of the agreements so that one of the places already agreed upon as an Observance-hall is no longer regarded in this light.

“Monks, if one is sitting on the ground, whether it has been agreed upon or not agreed upon, and hears the Pātimokkha from there, the Observance is carried out for him.

“Well then, monks, if an Order desires a maximum for Observance¹ of a certain size let it agree upon a maximum for Observance of that size. And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: First, marks should be announced. The Order, having announced the marks, should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, if it seems right to the Order the Order may agree upon a maximum for Observance in accordance with these marks. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. In as much as marks all round are announced, the Order is agreeing upon the maximum for Observance in accordance with these marks. If the agreement upon a maximum for Observance in accordance with these marks is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The maximum for Observance is agreed upon by the Order in accordance with these marks. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.2.9.2

Now at that time in a certain residence newly ordained monks,² being the first to have assembled together on an Observance day, saying: “The elders are not coming yet,” went away. The Observance was not at a right time.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.10.1

“I allow, monks, on an Observance day monks who are elders to assemble together first.”

Now at that time in Rājagaha several residences came to have the same boundary. Monks quarrelled about this, saying: “Let the Observance be carried out in our residence,” “Let the Observance be carried out in our residence.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.11.1

¹ uposathapamukhaṃ. Not noticed in Pali-English Dictionary. It must refer to the size of a site for hearing the Observance by a maximum number of monks of which an Order might consist. ² These navakā bhikkhū were only “newly ordained” or junior in comparison with the majjhimā bhikkhū, those of middle standing and ordained for as long as five years, and with the theras, elders, ordained for as many as ten years. A monk is called navaka or nava for the first four years of his religious life after the date of his ordination. ³ I.e. not on the fourteenth or fifteenth day of a half-month.

BD.4.142 “This is a case, monks, where several residences come to have the same boundary. Monks quarrel about this, saying: ‘Let the Observance be carried out in our residence’, ‘Let the Observance be carried out in our residence’. Monks those monks, one and all,¹ having assembled together in one place, should carry out the Observance, or, having assembled together they should carry out the Observance there where a monk who is an elder is staying. But the Observance should not be carried out by an incomplete Order.² Whoever should (so) carry it out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.1.109

PERMISSION FOR A “NOT SEPARATED” BOUNDARY

Kd.2.12.1

Now at one time the venerable Kassapa the Great, going from Andhakavinda³ to Rājagaha for Observance and crossing a river⁴ on the way, was nearly carried away, and his robes got wet. Monks spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Great: “Why are your robes wet, your reverence?”

“Now I, your reverences, coming from Andhakavinda to Rājagaha for the Observance and crossing a river on the way, was nearly carried away. Because of this my robes are wet.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Whatever boundary, monks, is agreed upon by an Order for the same communion, for one Observance, let the Order agree (to regard) that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes.⁶”

Kd.2.12.2

¹ sabbeḥ’ eva. ² na tv eva vaggena saṅghena, as below, Kd.2.22.2; Kd.2.23.2 and subsequently. On vagga, see BD.2.269, n.10. ³ According to Vin-a.1049 Andhakavinda was at least a gāvuta from Rājagaha. Around Rājagaha were eighteen large vihāras having the same boundary, but the “being all together” of an Order took place in the Bamboo Grove. ⁴ Vin-a.1049 says the Sappinī (Sippinī), which they say rises in Mt. Vulture Peak, and because it flows quickly so near its source that is why the elder was nearly carried away. ⁵ manam, also at Ja.i.149, Dh-p-a.iii.147. ⁶ ticīvarena avippavāsa. Cf. Bu-NP.2 where a monk incurs an offence if he is away from the three robes even for one night unless he has obtained the agreement of the monks. But one who is ill may obtain an agreement to be regarded as not separated from his robes, although in fact he is. The above ruling is to the same effect. See BD.2.14, n.

“And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary was agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance, if it seems right to the Order the Order may agree (to regard) that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary was agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance the Order is agreeing (to regard) that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes. If the agreement (to regard) this boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. This boundary is agreed upon the by Order (to be regarded as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

BD.4.143

Now at that time monks, thinking: “An agreement (for a monk to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is allowed by the Lord,” laid aside robes in a house.¹ These robes were lost and burnt and eaten by rats. The monks became badly dressed, their robes worn thin. Monks spoke thus: “Why are you, your reverences, badly dressed, your robes worn thin?”

Kd.2.12.3

“Now we, your reverences, thinking: ‘An agreement (for a monk to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is allowed by the Lord,’ laid aside robes in a house. These robes have been lost and burnt and eaten by rats. That is why we are badly dressed, our robes worn thin.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Whatever boundary, monks, is agreed upon by an Order for the same communion, for one Observance, let the Order agree (to regard) that boundary (as a place where a monk is) not away, separated from the three robes,

¹ In Bu-NP.29 monks, if staying in jungle lodgings are allowed to lay aside one of their three robes in a house. But, except with the agreement of the monks, they must not be away from their robes for more than six nights.

except it be a village and the precincts of a village.¹

Kd.2.12.4

Vin.1.110

BD.4.144

“And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon²: ... ‘... thus do I understand this’.

ABOLISHING A BOUNDARY

Kd.2.12.5

“When agreeing upon a boundary, monks, first the boundary for the same communion should be agreed upon, afterwards the (place where a monk is regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes should be agreed upon. In abolishing a boundary, monks, first the (place where a monk is regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes should be abolished, afterwards the boundary for the same communion should be abolished. And thus, monks, should the (place where the monk is regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes be abolished: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever was agreed upon by the Order (as a place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes, if it seems right to the Order, the Order may abolish that (place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever was agreed upon by the Order (as a place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes, the Order is abolishing (that place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes. If the abolition of (the place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. That (place where a monk is to be regarded) as not away, separated from the three robes is abolished by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.

Kd.2.12.6

¹ Defined at Vin.3.46; see BD.1.74, n.2. “Village having one precinct” defined at Vin.3.200, see BD.2.17 and note Vin-a.1051 says that the above ruling is not for nuns because they live in a village; see also Vinaya Texts i.256, n.1. ² The same as Kd.2.12.2 above, but after the words “away, separated from the three robes” add “except it be a village and the precincts of a village.”

“And thus, monks, should a boundary for the same communion¹ be abolished: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary has been agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance, if it seems right to the Order, the Order may abolish that boundary. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Whatever boundary has been agreed upon by the Order for the same communion, for one Observance, the Order is abolishing that boundary. If the abolition of that boundary for the same communion, for one Observance is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. That boundary for the same communion, for one Observance is abolished by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.

BD.4.145

A VILLAGE BOUNDARY, ETC.

“Monks, when a boundary is not agreed upon, not established, whatever village or little town² (a monk) lives depending on, whatever is the village boundary of that village or the little town boundary of that little town, this in that case is (the boundary) for the same communion, for one Observance. If, monks, he is in what is not a village, in a jungle,³ in this case the same communion, one Observance, is seven *abbhantarās*⁴ all round. No river, monks, is a boundary, no sea is a boundary, no natural lake is a boundary. Where there is a river, monks, or a sea or a natural lake, that which in this case is (the boundary) for the same communion, one Observance, is the distance that a man of average (height) can throw water all round.”

Kd.2.12.7

Vin.1.111

Now at that time the group of six monks combined boundary with boundary.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon first, that (formal) act of theirs is legiti-mate, it is irreversible, fit to stand.¹ Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon afterwards, that (formal) act of theirs is not legitimate, it is reversible, not fit to stand. Monks, boundary should not be combined with boundary. Whoever should (so) combine, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

Kd.2.13.1

¹ “For the same communion” omitted in Oldenberg’s text, but included in the Ceylon edition.

² nigama, see BD.2.63, n.2. ³ “Jungle” defined at BD.1.74, BD.1.85. ⁴ See BD.2, Introduction, p.1. ⁵ sīmāya sīmāṃ sambhindanti.

Kd.2.13.2

Now at that time the group of six monks placed boundary within boundary.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon first, that (formal) act of theirs is legitimate, it is irreversible fit to stand. Monks, those for whom a boundary was agreed upon afterwards, that (formal) act of theirs is not legitimate it is reversible, not fit to stand. Monks, a boundary should not be placed within a boundary. Whoever should (so) place within, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, when a boundary is being agreed upon, having left an interspace between boundaries,³ to agree upon a boundary.”

BD.4.146

INCOMPLETE OBSERVANCE, ETC.

Kd.2.14.1

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many Observance days are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these two Observance days, the fourteenth and the fifteenth. These, monks, are the two Observance days.”

Kd.2.14.2

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many (formal) acts for Observance are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these four (formal) acts for Observance: a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) not by rule when an Order is incomplete⁴; a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) not by rule when an Order is complete; a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is incomplete; a ¹ Cf. BD.3.161 (Vin.4.214), and Vin.1.313, Vin.1.316f. The last two, akuppa and thānāraha, are defined at Vb-a.330. ² sīmāya sīmañ ajjhottharanti. ³ sīmantarika. This may be quite small: a hattha (on which see BD.2, Introduction, p.li.) according to Vin-a.1056; a span or four finger-breadths according to the two Sinhalese commentaries cited at Vin-a.1056.

⁴ adhammena vaggam; cf. Vin.4.37, Vin.4.126, Vin.4.152, Vin.4.153, adhammena vā vaggena vā. See Kd.9.3 for elucidations of “not by rule” and “by rule”, and of “incomplete” and “complete assemblies”.

(formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is complete. Now, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance carried out not by rule when an Order is incomplete, such a (formal) act for Observance, monks, should not be carried out, nor is such a (formal) act for Observance allowed by me.

“Then, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) not by rule when an Order is complete, such a (formal) act for Observance, monks, should not be carried out nor is such a (formal) act for Observance allowed by me. Then, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is incomplete, such a (formal) act for Observance should not be carried out nor is such a (formal) act for Observance allowed by me. Then, monks, that which is a (formal) act for Observance (carried out) by rule when an Order is complete, such a (formal) act for Observance, monks, may be carried out and such a (formal) act for Observance is allowed by me. Therefore, monks, thinking: ‘We will carry out a (formal) act for Observance like this, that is to say by rule when an Order is complete’—thus you should train yourselves, monks.”

Kd.2.14.3

Vin.1.112

BD.4.147

RECITING THE PĀTIMOKKHA IN BRIEF, ETC.

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many ways for the recital of the Pātimokkha are there?”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these five (ways for the) recital of the Pātimokkha: having recited the provenance,¹ the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard²; this is the first (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. Having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving defeat, the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard; this is the second (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. Having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving defeat, having recited the thirteen offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard; this is the third (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. Having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving defeat, having recited the thirteen offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, having recited the two undetermined offences, the rest may be announced as though it had been (already) heard; this is the fourth (way for the) recital of the Pātimokkha. (Recital) in full is the fifth. Monks, these are the five (ways for the) recital of the Pātimokkha.”

Kd.2.15.1

¹ nīdāna, see above, BD.4.127. ² avasesaṃ sutena sāvetaḥham.

Kd.2.15.2

Now, at that time, monks, thinking: “Recital of the Pātimokkha in brief is allowed by the Lord,” all the time recited the Pātimokkha in brief. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in brief. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.2.15.3

BD.4.148

Now at that time in a certain residence in the Kosala country there came to be a menace from savages¹ on an Observance day. The monks were unable to recite the Pātimokkha in full. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a danger, to recite the Pātimokkha in brief.”

Kd.2.15.4

Now at that time the group of six monks, although there was no danger, recited the Pātimokkha in brief. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, if there is no danger the Pātimokkha should not be recited in brief. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, if there is a danger, to recite the Pātimokkha in brief. In this connection these are dangers: a danger from kings,² a danger from thieves, a danger from fire, a danger from water, a danger from human beings, a danger from non-human beings, a danger from beasts of prey, a danger from creeping things, a danger to life, a danger to the Brahma-faring.³ I allow you, monks, when there are dangers such as these, to recite the Pātimokkha in brief; in full if there is no danger.”

Vin.1.113

ON QUESTIONING REGARDING VINAYA

Kd.2.15.5

Now at that time the group of six monks, unbidden,¹ spoke dhamma in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, dhamma should not be spoken, by one who is not bidden (to do so), in the midst of an Order.² Whoever should (so) speak it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to speak dhamma by means of a monk who is himself an elder, or (for him) to bid another (to speak it).”³

Now at that time the group of six monks, (although) not agreed upon asked about discipline in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, discipline should not be asked about, by one not agreed upon, in the midst of an Order. Whoever should (so) ask, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ask about discipline, by means of one who is agreed upon, in the midst of an Order. And thus, monks, may he be agreed upon: either oneself may be agreed upon by oneself, or another may be agreed upon by another.”⁴

Kd.2.15.6

BD.4.149

And how may oneself be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I could ask so and so about discipline’. Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself. And how may another be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, so and so could ask so and so about discipline’. Thus may another be agreed upon by another.”

Kd.2.15.7

¹ savara-bhaya; cf. Vin.1.168. Vin-a.1057 reads sañcarabhaya. ² Same list again at Vin.1.169, Vin.2.244. Cf. also Vin.1.148–Vin.1.149. See also list of seven dangers at Divyāvādāna 544.

³ On brahmācariya, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Wayfarer’s Words ii.533, “A Technical Term”, where she regards it as a term taken over from the brahmins who used it to denote the student-day stage in their training. ¹ By the elders. Vin-a.1058. ² na bhikkhave saṅghama-jjhe anajjhīṭṭhena dhammo bhāsitaḥ. These cases probably mean that dhamma is not to be spoken or vinaya asked about (by one not qualified to do so) in the midst of an Order. They probably do not mean that one not bidden or not agreed upon in the midst of an Order might not speak or ask questions. ³ Cf. AN.iv.153 where if a monk “speaks dhamma himself or bids another (to do so)” it is one of the eight reasons for his development in the Brahma-faring.

⁴ Cf. above, BD.4.121, below, BD.4.150.

Kd.2.15.8

Now at that time well behaved monks who were agreed upon asked about discipline in the midst of the Order. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to ask about discipline in the midst of the Order by means of one who is agreed upon, although² having (first) looked round the assembly, having assessed³ (each) individual."⁴

ON ANSWERING REGARDING VINAYA

Kd.2.15.9

Now at that time the group of six monks (although) not agreed upon answered questions on discipline in the midst of the Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, questions on discipline should not be answered in the midst of the Order by one not agreed upon. Whoever should (so) answer, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to answer questions in the midst of the Order by means of one who is agreed upon. And thus, monks, may he be agreed upon: either oneself may be agreed upon by oneself, or another may be agreed upon by another.

BD.4.150

Kd.2.15.10

Vin.1.114

And how may oneself be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, asked about discipline by so and so, could answer.' Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself. And how may another be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, so and so, asked about discipline by so and so, could answer.' Thus may another be agreed upon by another."

Kd.2.15.11

¹ vadhena, also meaning with slaughter, with destruction. ² pi. ³ tulayitvā, literally having weighed. Cf. tulayitabbarā at Vin.4.142. Vin-a.1059 says the one who is asking, having looked round the assembly, may ask about discipline if there is no risk for himself. ⁴ This allowance is an elaboration of that given in Kd.2.15.6. This still holds good, but the above safeguard is added.

Now at that time well behaved monks who were agreed upon answered questions on discipline in the midst of the Order. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to answer questions on discipline in the midst of the Order by means of one who is agreed upon, although having (first) looked round the assembly, having assessed (each) individual.”

ON REPROVING

Now at that time the group of six monks reproved, on account of an offence, a monk who had not given (them) leave.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a monk who has not given leave should not be reprovved on account of an offence. Whoever should (so) reprove, there is an offence of wrong-dong. I allow you, monks, having obtained leave by saying: ‘Let the venerable one give me leave, I want to speak to you to reprove him on account of an offence.’”

Kd.2.16.1

Now at that time well-behaved monks, having obtained the leave of the group of six monks, reproved them on account of an offence. The group of six months took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, even if leave is given, to reprove for an offence after you have assessed the individual.”

Kd.2.16.2

Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: “Before² well-behaved monks obtain our leave,” themselves obtained the pure monks’ leave beforehand,³ but there was no ground, no reason, since they were not offenders⁴. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, leave should not be obtained from pure monks when there is no ground, no reason, since they are not offenders. Whoever should (so) obtain it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to obtain leave after you have assessed the individuals.”

Kd.2.16.3

¹ anokāsakata, “to make an occasion”, to give, to grant leave; okāsaṃ kārāpeti, to make to give, thus to obtain leave. Cf. Vin.4.344 where nuns must not question monks unless they have obtained their leave to do so, and where anokāsakata is defined by anāpucchā, without having asked (for permission). ² pure = paṭhamam, Vin-a.1059. Cf. Kd.4.16.3. ³ paṭigacc’eva = paṭhamataram, Vin-a.1059. ⁴ anāpattika.

PROTESTING AN ACT THAT IS NOT THE RULE, ETC.

Kd.2.16.4

Now at that time the group of six monks carried out a (formal) act that was not legally valid in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a (formal) act that is not legally valid should not be carried out in the midst of the Order. Whoever should (so) carry one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” Even so, they carried out a (formal) act that was not legally valid. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to protest¹ when a (formal) act that is not legally valid is being carried out.”

Vin.1.115

Kd.2.16.5

Now at that time well-behaved monks protested when a (formal) act that was not legally valid was being carried out by the group of six monks. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, merely to express an opinion.” They expressed an opinion to these themselves. The group of six monks took offence, they took umbrage, they threatened them with harm. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, when there are four or five, to protest, when there are two or three to express an opinion, when there is one, to determine: ‘I do not approve of this’.”

Kd.2.16.6

BD.4.152

Now at that time the group of six monks, when the Pātimokkha was being recited in the midst of the Order, intentionally did not hear. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a reciter of the Pātimokkha should not intentionally not be heard. Whoever should not hear, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ paṭikkosituṃ. Cf. BD.3.58.

REQUESTING THE RECITING OF THE PĀTIMOKKHA, ETC.

Now at that time the venerable Udāyin came to be reciter of the Pātimokkha for an Order, but his voice was like a crow's. Then it occurred to the venerable Udāyin: "It is laid down by the Lord that a reciter of the Pātimokkha should be heard, but my voice is like a crow's. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, the one who is the reciter of the Pātimokkha to exert himself, thinking: 'How can I be heard? 'There is no offence for one who exerts himself.'"

Kd.2.16.7

Now at that time Devadatta recited the Pātimokkha before an assembly that contained laymen. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited before an assembly that contains laymen. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Kd.2.16.8

Now at that time the group of six monks, unbidden, recited the Pātimokkha in the midst of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in the midst of an Order by one who is not bidden (to do so). Whoever (such) should recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, that the Pātimokkha be in charge of an elder."¹

Kd.2.16.9

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Members of Other Sects

ALLOWANCE TO LEARN THE COUNTING OF THE FORTNIGHTS, ETC.

Then the Lord, having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Codanāvattu. In due course, walking on a tour, he arrived in Codanāvattu. Now at that time several monks were staying in a certain residence; the monk who there was the elder was ignorant, inexperienced, he did not know the Observance or a (formal) act for Observance or the Pātimokkha or the recital of the Pātimokkha.

¹ therādhikam Pātimokkham. Vin-a.1059 says that the elder should recite it himself or call upon another to do so. Cf. the ruling which arose from speaking dhamma unbidden, above, BD.4.148.

Vin.1.116

BD.4.153

Kd.2.17.2

Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Pātimokkha be in charge of an elder, but this elder of ours is ignorant, inexperienced, he does not know the Observance ... or the recital of the Pātimokkha. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, the Pātimokkha to be discharged¹ by whoever there is an experienced, competent monk.”

Kd.2.17.3

Now at that time several ignorant, inexperienced monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. These did not know the Observance or a (formal) act for Observance or the Pātimokkha or the recital of the Pātimokkha. These called upon an elder, saying: “Honoured sir, let the elder recite the Pātimokkha.” He spoke thus: “Your reverences, I am not able to do so².” They called upon a second elder ... He also spoke thus: ... They called upon a third elder ... In this way they called upon (all the monks) down to the most newly ordained in the Order, saying: “Let the venerable one recite the Pātimokkha.” He also spoke thus: “Honoured sirs, I am not able to do so.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.17.4

Kd.2.17.5

“This is a case, monks, where several ignorant, inexperienced monks are staying in a certain residence ...³ ... ‘Honoured sirs, I am not able to do so’. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks, saying: ‘Do go, your reverence; having mastered the Pātimokkha in brief or in full, come back’.”

Kd.2.17.6

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should he be sent?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder.” Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not go. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is not ill should not not go when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.1.117

BD.4.154

¹ tassādheyyarū Pātimokkharū. Ādheyya means “to be appropriated”. ² na me vattati, it is not for me. ³ As in Kd.2.17.3 above, but told in the present tense.

Then the Lord, having stayed at Codanāvattu for as long as he found suiting, returned again to Rājagaha. Now at that time people asked the monks as they were walking for almsfood: “Which (day) of the half-month is it, honoured sirs?” The monks spoke thus: “We, sirs, do not know.” The people ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, do not even know the calculation¹ of the half-months, so how can they know anything else that is good?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, you, monks, to learn the calculation of the half-months.”

Kd.2.18.1

Then it occurred to monks: “Now by whom should the calculation of the half-months be learnt?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, one and all² to learn the calculation of the half-months.”

Kd.2.18.2

Now at that time people asked the monks as they were walking for almsfood: “How many monks are there, honoured sirs?” The monks spoke thus: “We, sirs, do not know.” The people ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, do not even know one another, so how can they know anything else that is good?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to count the monks.”

Kd.2.18.3

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how should the monks be counted?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, on an Observance day to count by way of groups³ or to take (a count) by ticket⁴.”

Kd.2.18.4

Now at that time monks, not knowing, “Today is an Observance day,” walked to a distant village for almsfood. Not only did these come back while the Pātimokkha was being recited, but they came back just after it had been recited. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce, ‘Today is an Observance day.’” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should it be announced?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce it in good time through a monk who is an elder.” Now at that time a certain elder did not remember in good time. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce it even at meal-time.” He did not remember even at mealtime. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to announce it at whatever time he¹ remembers.”

Kd.2.19.1

BD.4.155

¹ gaṇanā, see BD.2.176, n.5. ² sabbeh’eva. ³ gaṇamaggena gaṇetuṃ. ⁴ salākaṃ gaṇetuṃ.

Vin.1.118

ALLOWANCE FOR PRELIMINARY DUTIES

Kd.2.20.1

Now at that time the Observance-hall in a certain residence came to be soiled. Incoming monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks not sweep the Observance-hall?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sweep the Observance-hall.”

Kd.2.20.2

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should an Observance-hall be swept?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder.” Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not sweep. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is not ill should not not sweep when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not sweep, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.2.20.3

Now at that time a seat was not prepared in an Observance-hall. Monks sat on the ground. Their limbs and robes became covered with dust. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to prepare a seat in the Observance-hall.” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should a seat in the Observance-hall be prepared?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder.” Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not prepare (a seat). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is not ill should not not prepare (a seat) when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not prepare (a seat), there is an offence of wrong doing.”

BD.4.156

Kd.2.20.4

Now at that time there came to be no light in an Observance-hall. Monks trod on (one another’s) bodies and robes in the dark. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a light¹ in an Observance-hall.” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom is the light to be made in an Observance-hall?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder.” Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not light a lamp.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is not ill should not not light a lamp when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not light a lamp, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ I.e. the elder.

Kd.2.20.5

At that time in a certain residence resident monks neither set out drinking water nor did they set out water for washing. Incoming monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these resident monks neither set out drinking water nor set out water for washing?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to set out drinking water and water for washing.”

Vin.1.119

Kd.2.20.6

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should drinking water and water for washing be set out?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to enjoin a newly ordained monk through a monk who is an elder.” Newly ordained monks, (although) enjoined by an elder, did not set out (the water). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is not ill should not not set out (water) when enjoined by an elder. Whoever should not set it out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

THE STORY OF THOSE TRAVELLING TO DISTANT PARTS, ETC.

Now at that time ignorant inexperienced monks, travelling to distant parts,³ did not ask teachers and preceptors (for permission). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where several ignorant inexperienced monks, travelling to distant parts, do not ask teachers and preceptors (for permission). Monks, they should be asked by these teachers and preceptors: ‘Where will you go? With whom will you go?’ If, monks, these igno- rant inexperienced ones should cite other ignorant inexperienced ones, then, monks, they should not be allowed to go by the teachers and preceptors. If they should allow them (to go), there is an offence of wrong-doing. And if, monks, these ignorant inexperienced ones should go (although) not allowed by¹ the teachers and preceptors, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.21.1

BD.4.157

¹ padīpaṃ kātuṃ. ² padīpeti, to light up, to light a lamp. ³ disaṅgamikā; cf. Vin.1.263; and Kd.1.25,24 where those who share cells may not leave the district (disā) without asking the preceptors for permission.

Kd.2.21.2

“This is a case, monks, where several ignorant inexperienced monks are staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. These do not know the Observance or a (formal) act for Observance or the Pātimokkha or the recital of the Pātimokkha. A certain monk arrives there. He has heard much, he is one to whom the tradition has been handed down,² he is an expert on dhamma, an expert on discipline, an expert on the summaries³; he is wise, experienced, clever; he is conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. Monks, that monk should be furthered⁴ by those monks, he should be helped,⁵ he should be encouraged,⁶ he should be supported⁷ in regard to chunam, clay, tooth-wood, water for washing the face. If he should not be furthered, helped, encouraged, supported in regard to chunam, clay, tooth-wood, water for washing the face, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.21.3

“This is a case, monks, where several ignorant, inexperienced monks are staying in a certain residence on an Observance-day. These do not know the Observance ... or the recital of the Pātimokkha. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks, saying: ‘Do go, your reverence, having mastered the Pātimokkha in brief or in full, come back’. If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, those monks, one and all, should go to a residence where they know the Observance ... or the recital of the Pātimokkha. If they should not go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

BD.4.158

Vin.1.120

Kd.2.21.4

This is a case, monks, where several ignorant, inexperienced monks are spending the rains in a certain residence. These do not know ... (as above in Kd.2.21.4) ... If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, one monk should be sent off for seven days (with the words): ‘Do go, your reverence, having mastered the Pātimokkha in brief or in full, come back’. If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, these monks should not spend the rains in that residence. If they should spend them (there), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ ananuññatā, defined at Vin.4.335 as anāpucchā, not asking (for permission). Permission has to be asked for before it can be given. ² āgatāgama. See BD.3.71, n.1. ³ Cf. AN.i.117, AN.ii.147, AN.iii.179f. ⁴ saṃgahetabbo. This word is used with the next (anuggahetabbo) above, BD.4.67. ⁵ anuggahetabbo. See definition of anuggaṇheyya at Vin.4.325 (BD.3.376). The word occurs above, BD.4.67. ⁶ upalāpetabbo. Cf. definition of upalāpeyya at Vin.4.140 (BD.3.34). ⁷ upaṭṭhāpetabbo. Cf. definition of upaṭṭhāpeyya at Vin.4.140 (BD.3.34).

ON GIVING ENTIRE PURITY

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Gather together, monks, the Order will carry out the Observance.” When he had spoken thus, a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: “There is, Lord, a monk who is ill. He has not come.” He said: “I allow you, monks, to declare¹ entire purity² on behalf of a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be declared: That ill monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I will declare entire purity; convey entire purity for me, announce entire purity for me.’ If he makes it understood by gesture, if he makes it understood by voice, if he makes it understood by gesture and voice, the entire purity comes to be declared. If he does not make it understood by gesture, if he does not make it understood by voice, if he does not make it understood by gesture and voice, the entire purity does not come to be declared.

“If he thus manages this, it is good; if he does not manage it, then, monks, that ill monk, having been brought to the midst of the Order on a couch or a chair, the Observance may be carried out. If, monks, it occurs to the monks who are tending the ill one: ‘If we move the ill one from (this) place, either the disease will grow much worse or he will die³’, monks, the ill one should not be moved from (that) place; the Order, having gone there, should carry out the Observance. The Observance should not be carried

¹ dātuṃ, literally to give. Cf. chandaṃ dātuṃ at Vin.4.151 (BD.3.58) and below, BD.4.161.

² pārisuddhi, cf. above, BD.4.132. It means that the ill monk believes that he has committed none of the offences specified in the Pātimokkha, or that, if he has, he has confessed them, so that in regard to them he is pure.

³ kālaṃkiriya bhavissati, literally there will be a doing of (his) time.

Kd.2.22.1

BD.4.159

Kd.2.22.2

out by an incomplete Order.¹ If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.22.3

“If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity goes away then and there,² although the entire purity was declared (to him)³, the entire purity should be declared to another. If, monks, the conveyor of the entire purity leaves the Order then and there although the entire purity was declared (to him), if he passes away, if he pretends to be a novice,⁴ if he pretends to be a disavower of the training,⁵ if he pretends to be a committer of an extreme offence,⁶ if he pretends to be mad,⁷ if he pretends to be unhinged,⁸ if he pretends to have bodily pains,⁹ if he pretends to be one who is suspended¹⁰ for not seeing an offence, if he pretends to be one who is suspended for not making amends for an offence, if he pretends to be one who is suspended for not giving up a wrong view, if he pretends to be a eunuch,¹¹ if he pretends to be one living in communion as it were by theft,¹² if he pretends to be one who has gone over to another sect¹³, if he pretends to be an animal,¹⁴ if he pretends to be a matricide,¹⁵ if he pretends to be a parricide,¹⁶ if he pretends to be a slayer of one perfected,¹⁷ if he pretends to be a seducer of a nun,¹⁸ if he pretends to be a schismatic,¹⁹ if he pretends to be a shedder of (a Truth-finder’s) blood,²⁰ if he pretends to be a hermaphrodite,²¹ the entire purity should be declared to another.

Vin.1.121

BD.4.160

Kd.2.22.4

¹ As above, BD.2.11.i, and several times below. ² tatth’eva. Vin-a.1062, if he goes elsewhere, not to the midst of the Order. ³ The one who has undertaken to convey the entire purity shelves his responsibility and does not carry out the message entrusted to him. ⁴ Cf. the following sequence and the three preceding items: going away and leaving the Order and passing away, with Vin.1.135, Vin.1.167–Vin.1.168, Vin.1.307, Vin.1.320, Vin.2.173. ⁵ See BD.1.4Off. At AN.v.71 the presence of a “disavower of the training” is given as one of the reasons why the Pātimokkha may be suspended. ⁶ antimavatthūṃ ajjhāpannako, meaning a Pārajika offence; cf. BD.4.180. ⁷ Reasons for exemption from the penalty for an offence as given in Suttavibhaṅga. ⁸ Reasons for exemption from the penalty for an offence as given in Suttavibhaṅga. ⁹ Reasons for exemption from the penalty for an offence as given in Suttavibhaṅga. ¹⁰ ukkhitta, cf. BD.3.28, n.4. ¹¹ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.109. ¹² theyyasamvāsaka; not to be ordained, cf. above, BD.4.110. ¹³ titthiyapakkantaka; not to be ordained, see above, BD.4.110. ¹⁴ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.111. ¹⁵ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.112. ¹⁶ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.112. ¹⁷ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.113. ¹⁸ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.113. ¹⁹ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.113. ²⁰ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.113. ²¹ Not to be ordained, above BD.4.113.

“If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity goes away while he is on the road,¹ although the entire purity was declared (to him), the entire purity comes to be not conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity leaves the Order while he is on the road, although the entire purity was declared (to him), if he passes away ... if he pretends to be a hermaphrodite, the entire purity comes to be not conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, after the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order, then goes away, the entire purity comes to be conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, after the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order, then leaves the Order, passes away, ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite, the entire purity comes to be conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, after the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order does not announce it because he has fallen asleep, does not announce it because he is indolent, does not announce it because he is attaining (what is higher²), the entire purity comes to be conveyed; there is no offence for the conveyer of the entire purity. If, monks, the conveyer of the entire purity, although the entire purity was declared (to him), having arrived at the Order, intentionally does not announce it, the entire purity comes to be conveyed (but) there is an offence of wrong-doing for the conveyer of the entire purity.”

ON GIVING CONSENT

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Gather together, monks, the Order will carry out a (formal) act.” When he had spoken thus a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, there is a monk who is ill; he has not come.” He said: “I allow you, monks, to give the consent³ for a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I will give the consent, convey the consent for me, announce the consent for me'. If he makes it understood by gesture, if he makes it understood by voice, if he makes it understood by gesture and voice, the consent comes to be given. If he does not make it understood by gesture, if he does not make it understood by voice, if he does not make it understood by gesture and voice, the consent does not come to be given.

Kd.2.23.1

¹ While he is on the way to the Order; if he goes elsewhere. ² samāpanno, a term which has the technical sense of attaining the attainments, samāpatti. See BD.2.177, n.5, n.6. ³ chandam dātum, see BD.3.58, BD.3.61. It is here the ‘consent’ to send leave of absence by proxy.

Kd.2.23.2

Vin.1.122

"If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it, then, monks, having taken that ill monk to the midst of the Order on a couch or a chair, a (formal) act may be carried out. If, monks, it occurs to the monks who are tending the ill one: 'If we move the ill one from (this) place, either the disease will grow much worse or he will die', monks, the ill one should not be moved from (that) place; the Order, having gone there, should carry out the (formal) act. A (formal) act should not be carried out by an incomplete Order. If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.23.3

"If, monks, the conveyer of the consent goes away then and there although the consent was given (to him), the consent should be given to another. If, monks, the conveyer of the consent leaves the Order then and there, although the consent was given (to him), if he dies ... if he pretends to be a hermaphrodite, the consent should be given to another. If, monks, the conveyer of the consent goes away while he is on the road, although the consent was given to him, the consent comes to be not conveyed. If, monks, the conveyer of the consent leaves the Order while he is on the road ... (as in Kd.2.22.4) ... there is an offence of wrong-doing for the conveyer of the consent. I allow you, monks, on an Observance day, to give the consent also, by declaring the entire purity; they are the Order's business¹."

BD.4.162

ON BEING GRABBED BY RELATIVES

Kd.2.24.1

Now at that time his relations got hold of a certain monk on an Observance day. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "This is a case, monks, where his relations get hold of a monk on an Observance day. These relations should be spoken to thus by the monks: 'Please will you, venerable ones,¹ let go of this monk for a short time² while this monk carries out the Observance?’

¹ santi saṅghassa karaṇīyaṃ. Same expression occurs at beginning of Kd.2.25.1. Karaṇīya is something to be done, a duty; cf. Kd.4.3.5.

Kd.2.24.2

“If they manage this thus, it is good. If they do not manage it, these relations should be spoken to thus by the monks: ‘Please will you, venerable ones, stand at a respectful distance for a short time while this monk declares his entire purity?’ If they manage this thus, it is good. If they do not manage it, these relations should be spoken to thus by the monks: ‘Please will you, venerable ones, take this monk outside the boundary³ for a short time while the Order carries out the Observance?’ If they manage this thus, it is good. If they do not manage it the Observance should not be carried out by an incomplete Order. If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.24.3

“This is a case, monks, where kings get hold of a monk on an Observance day ... thieves ... men of abandoned life⁴ ... monks who are opponents of monks⁵ get hold of a monk on an Observance day. These monks who are opponents of monks should be spoken to thus by the monks: ‘Please will you ... (as in Kd.2.24.1, Kd.2.24.2) ... the Observance should not be carried out by an incomplete Order. If it should be (so) carried out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

AGREEMENT FOR THE MAD

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Gather together, monks, there is business for the Order.”⁶ When he had spoken thus a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: “There is, Lord, the mad monk Gagga⁷; he has not come.” He said: “There are, monks, these two (kinds of) madmen: there is the mad monk who now remembers the Observance, now does not remember it; who now remembers a (formal) act of the Order, now does not remember it. He is one who does not remember aright.⁸ (And there is the one) who

Vin.1.123

Kd.2.25.1

BD.4.163

¹ An occasion where monks address lay people with the honorific title āyasmā. ² muhuttaṃ, for a moment. ³ While outside an Order’s boundary a monk would not be a member of that Order, and so his absence or his failure to get his entire purity declared would not render that Order “incomplete”. ⁴ dhutta. See BD.1.234, n.1. ⁵ Cf. BD.1.49f. ⁶ atthi saṅghassa karaṇīyaṃ. ⁷ Cf. Vin.2.8off. ⁸ eva.

now comes for the Observance, now does not come for it, who now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it. He is one who does not come aright.

Kd.2.25.2

“In a case, monks, where this madman now remembers the Observance, now does not remember it ... now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it, I allow you, monks, to give the agreement for a madman¹ to such a madman.

Kd.2.25.3

And thus, monks, should it be given: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The mad monk Gagga now remembers the Observance, now does not remember it, now remembers a (formal) act of the Order, now does not remember it; he now comes for the Observance, now does not come for it; now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should give the agreement for a madman to the mad monk Gagga, so that whether the monk Gagga² remembers the Observance or does not remember it, whether he remembers a (formal) act of the Order or does not remember it, whether he comes for the Observance or does not come for it, whether he comes for a (formal) act of the Order or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga can carry out the Observance, can carry out a (formal) act of the Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The mad monk Gagga now remembers the Observance ... now comes for a (formal) act of the Order, now does not come for it. The Order is giving the agreement for a madman to the mad monk Gagga so that whether the monk Gagga remembers ... or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga will carry out the Observance, will carry out a (formal) act of the Order. If the giving of the agreement for a madman to the mad monk Gagga so that whether he remembers ... or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga will carry out the Observance, will carry out a (formal) act of the Order, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The agreement for a madman is given by the Order to the mad monk Gagga, so that whether he remembers ... or does not come for it, the Order either with Gagga or without Gagga will carry out the Observance, will carry out a (formal) act of the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent; thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.2.25.4

BD.4.164

¹ ummattakasammuti. ² “mad” omitted here in text.

Vin.1.124

THE OBSERVANCE BY AN ORDER, ETC.

Now at that time four monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance should be carried out, but we are (only) four persons.¹ Now how can the Observance be carried out by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (of you).”

Kd.2.26.1

Now at that time three monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is allowed by the Lord to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (of us), but we are (only) three persons. Now how can the Observance be carried out by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity² when there are three (of you).³”

Kd.2.26.2

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: These monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. Today is an Observance day, the fifteenth. If it seems right to the venerable ones, let us carry out the Observance with one another by way of entire purity’. A monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to these monks: ‘I, your reverences,⁴ am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverences, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverences, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure’.

Kd.2.26.3

BD.4.165

“A newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms

Kd.2.26.4

¹ See the scope of the powers of the “five (kinds of) Order” at Vin.1.319.

² pārisuddhiuposatham. ³ See next two paragraphs. ⁴ āvuso. It is apparently assumed that there is one elder at least and one or two juniors, otherwise the elder would doubtless have addressed the others as bhante.

should speak thus to these monks: ‘I, honoured sirs,¹ am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, honoured sirs, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, honoured sirs, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure.’”

Kd.2.26.5

Now at that time two monks were staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is allowed by the Lord to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (persons), to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are three, but we are (only) two persons. Now how can the Observance be carried out by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are two (of you).

Kd.2.26.6

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: The monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to the newly ordained monk: ‘I, your reverence, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverence, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, your reverence, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure.’

Vin.1.125

Kd.2.26.7

BD.4.166

“The newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to the monk who is an elder: ‘I, honoured sir, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, honoured sir, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure; I, honoured sir, am quite pure, understand that I am quite pure.’”

Kd.2.26.8

Now at that time one monk was staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to this monk: “It is allowed by the Lord to recite the Pātimokkha when there are four (persons), to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are three, to carry out the Observance by way of entire purity when there are two, but I am alone. Now how can the Observance be carried out by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.2.26.9

¹ bhante, because it appears to be assumed that at least one elder was present.

“This is a case, monks, where one monk is staying in a certain residence on an Observance day. That monk, having swept that place to which monks return—an attendance hall or a pavilion or the root of a tree—having put out drinking water and water for washing, having made ready a seat, having made a light, should sit down. If other monks arrive, the Observance should be carried out together with them; if they do not arrive, it should be determined¹, ‘Today is an Observance day for me’. If he should not (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.26.10

“Monks, there where four monks are standing, the Pātimokkha should not be recited by three (persons), having conveyed the entire purity for one. If they should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, there where three monks are staying, the Observance by way of entire purity should not be carried out by two, having conveyed the entire purity for one. If they should (so) carry it out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, there where two monks are staying, it should not be determined upon by one having conveyed the entire purity for the other. If he should (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS FOR OFFENCES

Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into an offence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance should not be carried out by an offender,² but I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have fallen into an offence on an Observance day. Monks, that monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I, your reverence, have fallen into such and such an offence, I confess³ it’. It should be said by him⁴: ‘Do you see it?’ ‘Yes, I see it’. ‘You should be restrained in the future’.

Kd.2.27.1

BD.4.167

Vin.1.126

Kd.2.27.2

¹ adhiṭṭhātabbāṃ; see BD.1.128, n.3. ² See Kd.19.2. ³ paṭidesemi. ⁴ I.e. by the monk whom the offender approached.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk becomes doubtful of an offence on an Observance day. Monks, that monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I, your reverence, am doubtful as to such and such an offence. When I come to be without doubt, then will I make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.”

Kd.2.27.3

Now at that time the group of six monks confessed¹ a collective² offence. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a collective offence should not be confessed. Whoever should confess it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” At that time the group of six monks acknowledged a collective offence. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a collective offence should not be acknowledged. Whoever should acknowledge (such), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

PROCEDURE FOR AN OFFENCE WITHOUT MAKING OBSTACLE

Kd.2.27.4

BD.4.168

Now at that time a certain monk remembered an offence while the Pātimokkha was being recited. Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that the Observance should not be carried out by an offender, and I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk remembers an offence while the Pātimokkha is being recited. Monks, this monk should speak thus to the monk next to him: ‘I, your reverence, have fallen into such and such an offence. Having removed from here I will make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.”

Kd.2.27.5

¹ desenti. ² sabhāgā, shared in by them all, but whether acting together or singly is not clear. Vin-a.1064 instances eating at the wrong time or eating what has not been left over.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk becomes doubtful as to an offence while the Pātimokkha is being recited. Monks, this monk should speak thus to the monk next to him: ‘I, your reverence, am doubtful as to such and such an offence. When I come to be without doubt, then will I make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.”

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS FOR A SHARED OFFENCE

Now at that time the whole Order in a certain residence came to have fallen into a collective offence on an Observance day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that a collective offence should not be confessed, that a collective offence should not be acknowledged, but this whole Order has fallen into a collective offence. Now what line or conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the whole Order comes to have fallen into a collective offence on an Observance day. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks, with the words: ‘Go along, your reverence, and come back having made amends for that offence, and we will make amends for the offence in your presence’.

Kd.2.27.6

Vin.1.127

“If they thus manage this, it is good. If they do not manage it, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This whole Order has fallen into a collective offence. When it shall see another monk, a pure one, not an offender, then it shall make amends for that offence in his presence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.

Kd.2.27.7

BD.4.169

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the whole Order comes to be doubtful about a collective offence on an Observance day. The

Kd.2.27.8

Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This whole Order is doubtful about a collective offence. When it comes to be without doubt, then will it make amends for that offence’. When he has spoken thus, the Observance may be carried out, the Pātimokkha may be heard, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Observance from such a cause.

Kd.2.27.9

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the Order, entered on the rains, has fallen into a collective offence. Monks, one monk should immediately be sent to a neighbouring residence by these monks with the words ... (as in Kd.2.27.6, Kd.2.27.7) ... If they do not manage it, one monk should be sent away for seven days, with the words: ‘Go along, your reverence, and come back having made amends for that offence, and we will make amends for that offence in your presence’.”

Kd.2.27.10

Now at that time in a certain residence the whole Order came to have fallen into a collective offence. It did not know the name or the class¹ of that offence. A certain monk came there; he had heard much, he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down²; he was an expert on dhamma, an expert on discipline, an expert on the summaries; he was wise, experienced, clever; he was conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training.³ A certain monk approached that monk; having approached, he spoke thus to him: “What kind of an offence does he fall into, your reverence, who does such and such a thing?”

Kd.2.27.11

BD.4.170

He spoke thus: “Whoever does such and such a thing, your reverence, falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverence, have fallen into; make amends for this offence.” He spoke thus: “I, your reverence, have not fallen into this offence altogether alone; this whole Order has fallen into this offence.” He spoke thus: “What has it to do with you, your reverence, whether another has fallen or has not fallen? Please do you, your reverence, remove⁴ your own offence.”

Vin.1.128

Kd.2.27.12

Then that monk, having at that monk’s bidding made amends for that offence, approached those monks; having approached them, he spoke thus to those monks: “It is said, your reverences, that whoever does such and such a thing falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverences, have fallen into; make amends for this offence.” But these monks did not want to make amends for that offence at that monk’s bidding. They told this matter to the lord. He said:

¹ gotta. ² Cf. above, BD.4.157. ³ Cf. above, BD.4.157. ⁴ vuṭṭhaha.

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence the whole Order comes to have fallen into a collective offence. It does not know the name or the class of that offence. A certain monk comes there; he has heard much ... desirous of training. A certain monk approaches that monk; having approached, he speaks thus to that monk: ‘What land of offence does he fall into, your reverence, who does such and such a thing?’

Kd.2.27.13

“He speaks thus: ‘Whoever does such and such a thing, your reverence, falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverence, have fallen into; make amends for this offence’. He speaks thus: ‘I, your reverence, have not fallen into this offence altogether alone; this whole Order has fallen into this offence’. He speaks thus: ‘What has it to do with you, your reverence, whether another has fallen or has not fallen? Please do you, your reverence, remove your own offence.’

Kd.2.27.14

“Then if that monk, having at that monk’s bidding made amends for that offence, approaches those monks and having approached them speaks thus to those monks: ‘It is said, your reverence, that whoever does such and such a thing falls into this kind of offence. This is the kind of offence that you, your reverences, have fallen into; make amends for this offence’; and if, monks, these monks should make amends for that offence at that monk’s bidding, that is good. But if they should not make amends for it, then, monks, these monks need not be spoken to by that monk if he is not willing¹.”

Kd.2.27.15

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Codanāvattu

¹ akāmā, cf. Vin.3.186 (BD.1.328). If the offending monks do not wish to make amends, the other monk need not speak to them—perhaps meaning that he need not speak to them in the words given at the end of Kd.2.27.14 above. But cf. AN.ii.113, “For this is destruction ... where a Truthfinder or his fellow Brahma-farers deem that he is one who should not be spoken to”.

FIFTY CASES OF NO OFFENCE

Now at that time in a certain residence several resident monks, four or more, collected together on an Observance day. They did not know that there were other resident monks who had not arrived. Thinking¹ of the rule,² thinking of discipline, thinking that they were complete, they carried out the Observance, they recited the Pātimokkha while they were incomplete. While the Pātimokkha was being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number,³ arrived. They told this matter to the Lord.

Vin.1.129

Kd.2.28.2

He said: “This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence ... (as in Kd.2.28.1 above) ... recite the Pātimokkha while they are incomplete. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by these monks,⁴ and there is no offence for the reciters.

Kd.2.28.3

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence ... (as in Kd.2.28.2 above) ... While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should be heard, and there is no offence for the reciters.

BD.4.172

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd.2.28.2 above) ... While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should be heard, and there is no offence for the reciters.

Kd.2.28.4

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha may be recited again by these monks, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them, other resident monks, a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence,⁵

¹ saññīno. ² dhamma, i.e. the rules that Observance should be carried out by a complete assembly. ³ I.e. than those already assembled. ⁴ Presumably meaning by those already assembled together, and who have already recited part of it; cf. Kd.2.29.1 below, where they incur an offence of wrong-doing for reciting it when they know that they are incomplete.

⁵ This means that the monks arriving late must announce their entire purity to the ones already assembled and who had recited the Pātimokkha.

and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks, ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is no offence for the reciters.

Kd.2.28.5

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and the assembly has not risen, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha may be recited again by those monks, and there is no offence for the reciters.

“This is a case, monks ... a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is no offence for the reciters.

Vin.1.130

“This is a case, monks, ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is no offence for the reciters.

Kd.2.28.6

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and part of the assembly has risen, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive ... (as in Kd.2.28.5 above) ... a like number ... a smaller number ...

Kd.2.28.7

“This is a case, monks, ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and the whole assembly has risen, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive ... (as in Kd.2.28.6 above) ... a like number ... a smaller number ...

BD.4.173

Told are the Fifteen Cases in which there is No Offence

FIFTY CASES OF PERCEIVING IT IS A GROUP OR NOT A GROUP

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence several resident monks, four or more, collect together on an Observance day. They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Thinking of the rule, thinking of discipline, thinking that they are incomplete, they carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha while they are incomplete. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by those monks, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Kd.2.29.1

Kd.2.29.2

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd.2.29.1) ... a like number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should be heard, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

This is a case, monks (as in Kd.2.29.1) ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the rest should be heard, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Kd.2.29.3

“This is a case, monks ... When the Pātimokkha has just been recited by them and the assembly has not risen ... part of the assembly has risen ... the whole assembly has risen, and other resident monks, a larger number ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. What has been recited is duly recited, the entire purity should be announced in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Vin.1.131

Told are the Fifteen Cases on thinking that (an Assembly) is incomplete when it is incomplete

FIFTY CASES OF DOUBT

Kd.2.30.1

“This is a case, monks ... They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Thinking: ‘Now, is it allowable for us to carry out the Observance or is it not allowable?’ they carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha (although) they are in doubt. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by those monks ... (cf. Kd.2.29.2, Kd.2.29.3) ... an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

BD.4.174

Kd.2.30.2

“This is a case, monks, ... (cf. Kd.2.29.2, Kd.2.29.3) ... an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Told are the Fifteen Cases on being in Doubt

FIFTY CASES OF ACTING BADLY

Kd.2.31.1

“This is a case, monks, ... They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Thinking: ‘Indeed, it is allowable for us to carry out the Observance, it is not unallowable for us’, they, acting badly,¹ carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha. While the Pātimokkha is being recited by them, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, the Pātimokkha should be recited again by these monks, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Kd.2.31.2

“This is a case, monks, ... (cf. Kd.2.29.2, Kd.2.29.3) ... an offence of wrong-doing for the reciters.

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Acting Badly

FIFTY CASES OF AIMING AT SCHISM

“This is a case, monks, ... They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Saying, ‘These are perishing, these are being destroyed, what good are these to you?’ they carry out the Observance and recite the Pātimokkha aiming at a schism, ... (as in Kd.2.29.2, Kd.2.29.3; instead of offence of wrong-doing read grave offence.)

Kd.2.32.1

Kd.2.32.2

Vin.1.132

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Aiming at a Schism

Told are the Seventy-five Cases.²

ABBREVIATED REPETITIONS ON ENTERING A BOUNDARY

“This is a case, monks, ... They know that other resident monks are entering within the boundary. They know that other resident monks have entered within the boundary. They see other resident resident monks entering within the boundary. They see other resident monks entered within the boundary. They hear that other resident monks are entering within the boundary. They hear that other resident monks have entered within the boundary.

¹ kukkucapakatā, explained at Vin-a.1065 as overcome, doing as they wished. ² Five times fifteen cases, in Kd.2.28-Kd.2.32.

BD.4.175

“From a hundred and seventy-five triads referring to resident (monks) with resident (monks); to incoming (monks) with resident (monks); to resident (monks) with incoming (monks); to incoming (monks) with incoming (monks), there come to be seven hundred triads by means of (these) sets.¹

Kd.2.34.1

“This is a case, monks, where the fourteenth is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the fifteenth for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the incoming ones should accommodate themselves to the resident ones. If they are equal in number, the incoming ones should accommodate themselves to the resident ones. If the incoming ones are larger in number, the resident ones should accommodate themselves to the incoming ones.

Kd.2.34.2

“This is a case, monks, where the fifteenth is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the fourteenth for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the incoming ones should accommodate themselves to the resident ones. If ... (as in Kd.2.34.1 above) ...

Kd.2.34.3

“This is a case, monks, where the first day of a lunar fortnight² is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the fifteenth for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the resident ones, if they are not willing, need not hold a meeting³ with the incoming ones. The Observance should be carried out by the incoming ones having gone outside the boundary. If they are equal in number, the resident ones, if they are not willing, need not hold a meeting with the incoming ones. The Observance should be carried out by the incoming ones having gone outside the boundary. If the incoming ones are larger in number, the resident ones should hold a meeting with the incoming ones or they should go outside the boundary.

Kd.2.34.4

“This is a case, monks, where the fifteenth is (the Observance day) for resident monks, the first day of the lunar fortnight for incoming ones. If the resident ones are larger in number, the incoming ones should hold a meeting with the resident ones or they should go outside the boundary. If they are equal in number, the incoming ones should hold a meeting with the resident ones or they should go outside the boundary. If the incoming ones are larger in number, the incoming ones, if they are not willing, need not hold a meeting with the resident ones. The Observance should be carried out by the resident ones having gone outside the boundary.

Vin.1.133

BD.4.176

¹ peyyālamukhena, as at Vism.46. Peṅyāla = pariyāya, and is arrangement, order, disposition. Each “set” refers to each pair (resident with resident ... incoming with incoming) of triads in all its permutations and combinations: they know, they see, they hear, and they do not know, see and hear. ² pāṭipada, cf. BD.2.314, n.1. ³ na dātābbā sāmaggī, need not give completion to.

SEEING CHARACTERISTICS, ETC.

“This is a case, monks, where incoming monks see signs of residence of resident monks, features of residence, marks of residence, indications of residence, carefully prepared couches and chairs, mattresses and squatting mats, carefully arranged water for drinking and water for washing, carefully swept cells; but having seen (these signs) they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there resident monks, or are there not?’

Kd.2.34.5

“If these, being doubtful, do not search and, not having searched, carry out the Observance, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched do not see (any monks), and if not having seen (any) they carry out the Observance, there is no offence. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched see (some monks), and if having seen (them) they carry out the Observance together, there is no offence. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched see (some monks), and if having seen (them) they carry out the Observance apart, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If these, being doubtful, search and having searched see (some monks), and if having seen (them) they say: ‘You are perishing, you are being destroyed, what is the good of these to you?’¹ and carry out the Observance aiming at a schism, there is a grave offence.

Kd.2.34.6

“This is a case, monks, where incoming monks hear signs of residence of resident monks, features of residence, marks of residence, indications of residence, the sound of footsteps as they are pacing up and down, the sound of studying, the sound of coughing, the sound of sneezing; but having heard they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there resident monks or are there not?' If these, being doubtful, do not search ... (=Kd.2.34.6) ... there is a grave offence.

Kd.2.34.7

BD.4.177

¹ As in BD.2.32 above.

Kd.2.34.8

“This is a case, monks, where resident monks see signs of incoming of incoming monks, features of incoming, marks of incoming, indications of incoming, unknown bowls, unknown robes, unknown pieces of cloth to sit upon, water for washing the feet sprinkled about; but having seen (these signs), they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there incoming monks or are there not?’ If these, being doubtful, do not search ... (=Kd.2.34.6) ... there is a grave offence.

Kd.2.34.9

“This is a case, monks, where resident monks hear signs of incoming of incoming monks, features of incoming, marks of incoming, indications of incoming, the sound of footsteps as they are arriving, the sound of sandals tapping, the sound of coughing, the sound of sneezing; but having heard they come to be doubtful, thinking: ‘Now are there incoming monks or are there not?’ If these, being doubtful, do not search ... (=Kd.2.34.6) ... there is a grave offence.

Vin.1.134

PERFORMING OBSERVANCE WITH THOSE OF A DIFFERENT COMMUNION, ETC.

Kd.2.34.10

“This is a case, monks, where incoming monks see resident monks belonging to a different communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to the same communion; having got the (wrong) view that they belong to the same communion, if they do not ask, and not having asked carry out the Observance together, there is no offence. If they ask, and having asked pay no attention,¹ and having paid no attention carry out the Observance together, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they ask, and having asked pay no attention, and having paid no attention carry out the Observance apart, there is no offence.

Kd.2.34.11

¹ nābhivitaranti. Vin-a.1066 says “they are not able to neglect the status of a differing communion; the meaning is: they do not make them give up that wrong view”. Cf. Vin.3.73 where abhivitaritvā appears to mean “having committed”. Pali-English Dictionary gives for abhivitarati “to pay heed, to observe”, Critical Pali Dictionary merely says “to come to an end”.

“This is a case, monks, where incoming monks see resident monks belonging to the same communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to a different communion. Having got the (wrong) view that they belong to a different communion, if they do not ask, and not having asked carry out the Observance together, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they ask, and having asked pay attention, and having paid attention carry out the Observance apart, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If they ask, and having asked pay attention, and having paid attention carry out the Observance together, there is no offence.

BD.4.178

“This is a case, monks, where resident monks see incoming monks belonging to a different communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to the same communion ... (=Kd.2.34.10) ... there is no offence.

Kd.2.34.12

“This is a case, monks, where resident monks see incoming monks belonging to the same communion. They get the (wrong) view that they belong to a different communion ... (=Kd.2.34.11) ... there is no offence.

Kd.2.34.13

PORTION ON SHOULD NOT GO

“Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks except with an Order,¹ except there be a danger.² Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence³ where there are no monks except with an Order, except there be a danger. Monks, you should not go ... either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks except with an Order, except there be a danger.

Kd.2.35.1

“Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks except ... Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from what is not a residence where, there are monks to what is not a residence where there are no monks except ... Monks, you should not go ... from what is not a residence where there are monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with an Order, except there be a danger.

Kd.2.35.2

¹ Unless there go sufficient monks to form an Order. Cf. 35 with Kd.12.1.3, Kd.12.1.4. ² See above, Kd.2.15.4, where ten “dangers” are enumerated. ³ Vin-a.1066 says to a place where a hall and so forth are undergoing repairs.

Kd.2.35.3

“Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from either a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks except with an Order, except there be a danger. Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are no monks to what is not a residence where there are no monks except ... a danger. Monks, you should not go ... either from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are no monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except ... a danger.

Vin.1.135

Kd.2.35.4

“Monks, you should not go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with an Order, except there be a danger. Monks, you should not go ... from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion ... a danger. Monks, you should not go ... from a residence where there are monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks ... (cf. Kd.2.35.1, Kd.2.35.2, Kd.2.35.3) ... Monks, you should not go ... either from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks either to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there belong to a different communion, except with an Order, except there be a danger.

PORTION ON SHOULD GO

Kd.2.35.5

“Monks, you may go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks should the monks there belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day’. Monks, you may go on an Observance day from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks should the monks there belong to the same communion, and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day’ ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks ... from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... to what is not a residence where there are monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks ... Monks, you may go on an Observance day from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... to what is not a residence where there are monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks should the monks there belong to the same communion and if he knows, 'I am able to arrive this very day'.

BD.4.180

SEEING A BLAMEWORTHY PERSON

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly (of monks) before a nun. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly (of monks) before a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... one who has disavowed the training ... one who has committed an extreme offence. Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.36.1

“The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before one suspended for not seeing an offence. Whoever should (so) recite it should be dealt with according to the rule.¹ The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before one suspended for not making amends for an offence ... before one suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Whoever should (so) recite it should be dealt with according to the rule.²

Kd.2.36.2

“The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before a eunuch.³ Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. The Pātimokkha should not be recited in a seated assembly before one living in communion as it were by theft ... before one who has gone over to a sect ... before an animal ... before a matricide ... before a parricide ... before a slayer of one perfected ... before a seducer of a nun ... before a schismatic ... before a shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood

Kd.2.36.3

Vin.1.136

¹ Probably referring to Bu-Pc.69. See BD.3.28, n.4. ² Probably referring to Bu-Pc.69. See BD.3.28, n.4. ³ As in Kd.2.22.3 above.

... before a hermaphrodite.¹ Whoever should (so) recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.2.36.4

“Monks, Observance should not be carried out by declaring the entire purity of one on probation² unless the assembly has not risen. And, monks, Observance should not be carried out on a non-Observance day unless the Order be unanimous”³

The Third Portion for Repeating in the Section on Observance

IN THIS SECTION ARE EIGHTY-SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

Other sects and Bimbisāra, they assembled together in silence,
 on dhamma, in private,
 on the Pātimokkha, daily, thenceforth once,
 According to assembly, for all together, being all together, and Maddakucchi,
 a boundary, extensive, about a river, successive, two, and small ones,
 Newly ordained (monks), and then in Rājagaha, a boundary (as a place where a monk) is not away from (his robes), in agreeing first on the boundary,
 afterwards on abolishing the boundary,
 When not agreed upon a village boundary,
 the throwing of water in river,
 sea, lake, they combined,
 and likewise they placed within,
 How many? (formal) acts, recital, savages, and if there is not,
dhamma, discipline, they threatened, again a threat to discipline,
 Reproof, if leave is given,
 a protest against what is not legally valid,
 more than four or five, opinion, intentionally, and if he would exert himself,
 With laymen, unbidden, in Codanā (vatthu),
 he did not know,
 several did not know, immediately,
 and if he should not go,
 Which? how many? and to announce at a distance,

¹ As in Kd.2.22.3 above. ² pārivāsika. Rules for monks under probation detailed in Kd.12, Kd.13. ³ See Kd.10.5.14.

he did not remember,
 Soiled, a seat, a light, distant parts,
 another who has heard much,
 Immediately, Observance day and the rains,
 and a (formal) act of entire purity, relations, Gagga, four and three, two and one,
 an offence, collective (offence), he remembered,
 The whole Order, doubtful, they did not know,
 one who has heard much,
 a larger, a like, a smaller (number),
 and when the assembly has not risen,
 Some have risen, all,
 and they know, they are doubtful,
 Those (acting) badly say, 'Indeed it is allowable', knowing, seeing, and they hear,
 Let them come if (a monk) is residing,
 the four (sets of) fifteen (cases) again,
 the first day of a fortnight (and) the fifteenth,
 both communions (by) mark,
 One on probation (and) a non-Observance day, unless the Order be unanimous.
 These partitioned keys are needed for distinguishing the items.

BD.4.182

Vin.1.137

3. RAINS (VASSA)

ALLOWANCE TO ENTER THE RAINS

Kd.3.1.1

BD.4.183

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time (the use of) a rains-residence for monks had not come to be laid down by the Lord. So these monks¹ walked on tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains.

Kd.3.1.2

People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, walk on tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains, trampling down the crops and grasses, injuring life that is one-facultied and bringing many small creatures to destruction²? Shall it be that those members of other sects, whose rules are badly kept, cling to and prepare a rains-residence, shall it be that these birds, having made their nests in the tree-tops, cling to and prepare a rains-residence,³ while these recluses, sons of the Sakyans walk on a tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains, trampling down the crops and grasses, injuring life that is one-facultied and bringing many small creatures to destruction?"

Kd.3.1.3

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "I allow you, monks, to enter upon the rains."⁴

Kd.3.2.1

¹ te'dha bhikkhū. Vin-a.1067 says that idha is only a conjunction; this is borne out by the several variant readings given at Vin.1.376. ² Cf. Vin.4.296 (BD.3.320) where it is made a pācittiya for nuns to walk on tour during the rains. ³ Quoted AN-a.ii.97. ⁴ vassarū upaganturū.

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, when should the rains be entered upon?” They told this matter to the Lord.

BD.4.184

He said: “I allow you, monks, to enter upon the rains in the rainy season¹.”

Kd.3.2.2

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, how many (periods) are there for beginning the rains²?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these two (periods) for beginning the rains: the earlier and the later.³ The earlier may be entered upon the day after (the full moon of) Āsāḷhī, the later may be entered upon a month after (the full moon of) Āsāḷhī.⁴ These, monks, are the two (periods) for beginning the rains.”

Vin.1.138

ON TOUR IN THE RAINS, ETC.

Now at that time the group of six monks, having entered upon the rains, walked on tour during the rains. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, walk on tour during the cold weather and the hot weather and the rains, trampling down ... (as in Kd.3.1.2) ... bringing many small creatures to destruction?”

Kd.3.3.1

Kd.3.3.2

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, having entered upon the rains, walk on tour during the rains?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, having entered upon the rains, but not having kept either the first three months or the last three months, one should not set out on tour. Whoever should (thus) set out, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

Kd.3.4.1

¹ vassāna. Cf. Vin.4.74, Vin.4.100, Vin.4.286. Vassāna, the rainy season, lasts for four months. Vassa, as meaning the rains-retreat for monks, had to be kept for three out of the four months of the rainy season. ² vassupanāyikā. See Gs.i.47, n.1, and Vinaya Texts i.299, n.1.

³ Cf. AN.i.51. AN-a.ii.97 says that this was laid down twenty years after the lord had attained enlightenment. ⁴ These are two out of the three dates for allotting lodgings, Vin.2.167.

Now at that time the group of six monks did not want to enter upon the rains. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one should not enter upon the rains. Whoever should not enter upon (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.3.4.2
BD.4.185

Now at that time the group of six monks, on a day for beginning the rains, not desiring to enter upon the rains, intentionally passed a residence by.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, on a day for beginning the rains, a residence should not be intentionally passed by one who does not desire to enter upon the rains. Whoever should pass one by, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.3.4.3

Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, desiring to postpone the rains, sent a messenger to the monks, saying: “What if the masters could enter upon the rains at the next full-moon day?”² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to obey kings.”

ALLOWANCE FOR SEVEN DAYS BUSINESS

Vin.1.139
Kd.3.5.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour, in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. Then the Lord stayed there in Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anātha-piṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time in the Kosala country a lay-follower, Udena,³ had had a dwelling-place built for an Order.⁴ He sent a messenger to monks, saying: “Let the revered sirs come; I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks.”

Kd.3.5.2

Monks spoke thus: “It is laid down by the Lord, sir, that one should not set out on tour, having entered upon the rains and not having kept the first three months or the last three months. Let Udena, the lay-follower, wait until the monks have kept the rains; when they have finished the rains they will go. But if there is something urgent to be done,¹ let him establish² the dwelling-place in the presence of resident monks who are already there.³”

¹ āvāsaṃ atikkamanti. ² juṇhe, explained at Vin-a.1068 as māse, month, and would therefore mean at the next period (a month later) for beginning the rains-retreat. This seems a better interpretation of juṇhe here than does the Pali-English Dictionary’s “bright fortnight of the month”. Cf. kāḷe and juṇhe below, BD.4.231. ³ Heard of nowhere but here I think.

⁴ Cf. Vin.4.287 (BD.3.302), where “a certain lay follower” did likewise and wanted to give robe-material to both the Orders.

Kd.3.5.3
BD.4.186

The lay-follower, Udena, ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs, when sent for by me, not come, for I am a benefactor, a builder,⁴ a supporter of the Order?” Monks heard the lay-follower, Udena, as he ... spread it about Then these monks told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.3.5.4

Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to go if you are sent for by seven (classes of people), and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for: by a monk, a nun, a probationer, a novice, a woman novice, a lay-follower, a woman lay-follower. I allow you, monks, to go if you are sent for by these (seven classes of people) and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.5.5

This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place for an Order comes to have been built by a lay-follower. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks’, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.5.6

“This is a case, monks, where a curved house⁵ for an Order comes to have been built by a lay-follower ... a long house⁶ ... a mansion⁷ ... a cave⁸ ... a cell⁹ ... a porch ... an attendance hall¹⁰ ... a fire-hall ... a hut for what is allowable¹¹ ... a privy ... a place for pacing up and down in¹² ... a hall in the place for pacing up and down in¹³ ... a well ... a hall at the well ... a bathroom ... a hall in the bathroom ... a lotus pond ... a shed ... a monastery¹⁴ ... a site for a monastery comes to have been built by a lay-follower. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying:

Vin.1.140

¹ accāyika karaṇīya, see BD.2.151, n.6 for explanation and references. ² paṭiṭṭhāpetu. At Vin.4.287 there was a “festival (maha) for the dwelling-place”, but paṭiṭṭhāpeti probably does not imply this. ³ tatth’eva. ⁴ kāraka, also a worker and a doer of good works. ⁵ Cf. above, BD.4.75. ⁶ Cf. above, BD.4.75. ⁷ Cf. above, BD.4.75. ⁸ Cf. above, BD.4.75. ⁹ This occurs again at Vin.2.159 with all except the last two of the following buildings. ¹⁰ upaṭṭhānasāla. See BD.2.194, n.4. ¹¹ kappiyakuṭi. Cf. same word at Vin.2.159, and see kappiyabhūmi at Vin.1.239 (below, BD.4.328.) Note that this is replaced in Kd.3.5.9 by “kitchen”. ¹² caṅkama, monk’s walk. See Kd.15.14.2, Kd.15.14.3. ¹³ caṅkamanasāla. ¹⁴ ārāma, translated “park” in Kd.3.5.9 below. See BD.2.2, n.2.

BD.4.187

‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks’, you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.5.7

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... a curved house ... a long house ... a site for a monastery (=Kd.3.5.6) ... for several monks, ... for one monk comes to have been built by a lay-follower ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.5.8

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... a site for a monastery¹ for an Order of nuns, ... for several nuns ... for one nun ... for several probationers ... for one probationer ... for several novices ... for one novice ... for several women novices ... for one woman novice comes to have been built by a lay-follower. If he should send a messenger to monks² saying: ‘Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.5.9

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling comes to have been built by a lay-follower for himself ... a sleeping-room ... a stable³ ... a watch-tower⁴ ... a quadrangular building⁵ ... a shop ... a hall for a shop ... a long house ... a mansion ... a cave ... a cell ... a porch ... an attend-ance ball ... a fire hall ... a kitchen⁶ ... a privy ... a place for pacing up and down in ... a hall in the place for pacing up and down in ... a well ... a hall at the well ... a bathroom ... a hall in the bathroom ... a lotus pond ... a shed ... a park⁷ ...

BD.4.188

¹ Same as the edifices given in Kd.3.5.6, except for the privy, bathroom and hall in a bathroom, the two former of which nuns are not to use (Vin.2.280). Editors of Vinaya Texts i.304, n.1 say that they think the two cases referring to women novices should be excepted.

² Apparently monks had to accept gifts on behalf of the nuns. ³ uddosita. See BD.2.16, n.2, BD.3.177, n.2. ⁴ aṭṭa, see BD.2.16, n.3. Mentioned also, with the next (māla) as a “lodging” at DN-a.209. ⁵ māla, see BD.2.16, n.4. ⁶ rasavatī, “possessing flavours”. Very likely the word occurs nowhere but here. Vin-a.1068 calls it bhattageha, food-house, perhaps “larder”. It replaces the kappiyakuṭi, hut for what is allowable, which in Kd.3.5.6 a lay follower may build for an Order. ⁷ ārāma, also meaning a monastery.

a site for a park comes to have been built by a lay-follower for himself, or there comes to be his son's marriage, or there comes to be his daughter's marriage, or he becomes ill, or he speaks a well known discourse.¹ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Let the revered sirs come, they will master this discourse before this discourse falls into oblivion'; or if he has some business, something to be done, and should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks', you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

Vin.1.141

Kd.3.5.10

"This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place for an Order comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower. If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Let the revered sirs come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks', you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.5.11

"This is a case, monks, where a curved house for an Order comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower ... (=Kd.3.5.6) ... a site for a monastery comes to have been built for an Order by a woman lay-follower. If she should send a messenger ... (=Kd.3.5.10) ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.5.12

"This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... a site for a monastery for several monks ... for one monk ... for an Order of nuns ... for several nuns ... for one nun ... for several probationers ... for one probationer ... for several novices ... for one novice ... for several women novices ... for one woman novice comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower. If she should send a messenger ... (=Kd.3.5.8) ... The return should be made in seven days.

"This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place comes to have been built by a woman lay-follower for herself ... (=Kd.3.5.9) ... or if she comes to be ill, or if she speaks a well known discourse. If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Let the masters come, and they will master this discourse before this discourse falls into oblivion or if she has some business, something to be done, and should send a messenger to monks, saying: “Let the masters come, I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.

BD.4.189

¹ suttanta.

Kd.3.5.13

“This is a case, monks, where a dwelling-place ... (=Kd.3.5.8) ... a site for a monastery for an Order ... for several monks, ... for one monk ... for an Order of nuns ... for several nuns ... for one nun ... for several probationers ... for one probationer ... for several novices ... for one novice ... for several women novices ... for one woman novice ... for him- (her-) self is built by a monk ... a nun ... a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice. If he (she) should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Let the revered sirs (masters) come. I want to give a gift and to hear dhamma and to see the monks you should go, monks, if you are sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, but not if you are not sent for. The return should be made in seven days.’”

Vin.1.142

ALLOWANCE FOR FIVE EVEN WHEN NOT SENT FOR

Kd.3.6.1

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill. He sent a messenger to monks, saying: “I, now, am ill, let monks come, I want monks to come”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, to five (classes of people): to a monk, a nun, a probationer, a novice, a woman novice. I allow you, monks, to go to these five (classes of people) even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘I, now, am ill, let monks come, I want monks to come’, you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will look about for a meal for the invalid, or I will look about for a meal for the one who is tending the invalid, or I will look about for medicine for the invalid, or I will ask (after) him¹, or I will tend him'. The return should be made in seven days.

BD.4.190

"This is a case, monks, where dissatisfaction comes to have arisen in a monk. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Dissatisfaction has arisen in me, let monks come, I want monks to come you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will allay his dissatisfaction or get (someone) to allay it, or I will give him a talk on dhamma'.² The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.3

"This is a case, monks, where remorse comes to have arisen in a monk. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Remorse has arisen in me ... I want monks to come', you should go, monks, ... if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will dispel his remorse or get (someone) to dispel it, or I will give him a talk on dhamma'.³ The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.4

"This is a case, monks, where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a monk. If he should send ... if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will dissuade him from the wrong view or get (someone) to dissuade him, or I will give him a talk on dhamma'. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.5

Vin.1.143

"This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed an offence against an important rule and to deserve probation.⁴ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'I have committed an offence against an important rule, I deserve probation, let monks come, I want monks to come', you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will make an effort for placing (him) on probation, or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group'.⁵ The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.6

Kd.3.6.7

¹ pucchāmi, I think meaning to inquire after his health here (cf. "monks asking after ill ones", BD.2.341, BD.2.399, BD.2.402), and not to "ask him (questions referring to the Dhamma)", as at Vinaya Texts i.306, and which is more usually paripucchati. ² Cf. Kd.1.25, Kd.1.20, Kd.1.21; Kd.12.1-3. ³ Cf. Kd.1.25, Kd.1.20, Kd.1.21; Kd.12.1-Kd.12.3. ⁴ Cf. Kd.1.25, Kd.1.20, Kd.1.21; Kd.12.1-Kd.12.3. ⁵ For placing him on probation, for granting or giving it, parivāsādāna.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk deserves to be sent back to the beginning.¹ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘I deserve to be sent back to the beginning, let monks come, I want monks to come you should go monks, even if not sent for, ... if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will make an effort for sending (him) back to the beginning, or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group’. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.8

“This is a case, monks, where a monk deserves mānatta (discipline)². If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘I desire mānatta (discipline), let monks come, I want monks to come’, you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will make an effort for inflicting mānatta discipline (on him), or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group’. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.9

“This is a case, monks, where a monk deserves rehabilitation.³ If he should send a messenger ... thinking: ‘I will make an effort for (his) rehabilitation, or I will make a proclamation, or I will become one who completes a group’. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.10

“This is a case, monks, where an Order becomes desirous of carrying out a (formal) act against a monk—either one of censure or one of guidance or one of banishment or one of reconciliation or one of suspension.⁴ If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘The Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against me, let monks come, I want monks to come’, you should go ... if the return can be made in seven days, thinking: ‘How then may the Order not carry out a (formal) act or may change it to something lighter?’ The return should be made in seven days.

Vin.1.144

BD.4.192

Kd.3.6.11

“Or a (formal) act comes to be carried out against him by the Order—either one of censure ... or one of suspension. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘The Order carried out a (formal) act against me ... I want monks to come’, you should go monks, ... thinking: ‘How then may he conduct himself properly, be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order can revoke that (formal) act?’⁵ The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.12

¹ mūlāya paṭikassanāraho. Cf. Kd.1.25.21; and Vin.2.7, Vin.2.34, Vin.2.162, AN.i.99. ² Cf. Kd.1.25.21, Kd.12.5. ³ Cf. Kd.1.25.21; Kd.12.9. ⁴ Cf. Kd.1.25.22. ⁵ Cf. Kd.1.25.22.

“This is a case, monks, where a nun comes to be ill ... (=Kd.3.6.2.)
 ... where dissatisfaction comes to have arisen in a nun ... (=Kd.3.6.3.)
 ... where remorse comes to have arisen in a nun ... (=Kd.3.6.4.)
 ... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a nun ... (=Kd.3.6.5.)
 ... where a nun comes to have committed an offence against an important rule and to deserve mānatta (discipline).¹ If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘I have committed an offence against an important rule and deserve mānatta (discipline), let the masters come, I want the masters to come’, you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: ‘I will make an effort for inflicting mānatta discipline) on her.’² The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a nun deserves to be sent back to the beginning. If she should send a messenger ... (=Kd.3.6.7) ... thinking: ‘I will make an effort for sending (her) back to the beginning’. The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a nun deserves rehabilitation (=Kd.3.6.9) ... thinking: ‘I will make an effort for (her) rehabilitation’. The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where an Order becomes desirous of carrying out a (formal) act against a nun, either one of censure ... or one of suspension ... (=Kd.3.6.10) ... The return should be made in seven days.

“Or a (formal) act comes to be carried out against her by an Order—either one of censure ... or one of suspension ... (=Kd.3.6.11) ... The return should be made in seven days.

“This is a case, monks, where a probationer comes to be ill ... (cf. Kd.3.6.2) ... in seven days.

“This is a case, monks where dissatisfaction comes to have arisen in a probationer ... where remorse comes to have arisen in a probationer ... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a probationer ... where a probationer’s training comes to be interrupted.³ If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘My training is interrupted, let the masters come, I want the masters to come', you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will make an effort for her to undertake the training'.¹ The return should be made in seven days.

¹ Nuns did not undergo probation, parivāsa; cf. their Saṅghādisesas. ² The monk does not say that he will make a proclamation or become one to complete a group. ³ kupitā, see BD.3.366.

Kd.3.6.23

"This is a case, monks, where a probationer becomes desirous of being ordained.² If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'I am desirous of being ordained ... I want the masters to come', you should go, monks, ... thinking: 'Either I will make an effort for her ordination or I will make a proclamation or I will become one who completes a group'.³ The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.24

"This is a case, monks, where a novice becomes ill ... Kd.3.6.2 ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.25

"... where dissatisfaction ... where remorse ... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a novice ... where a novice becomes desirous of asking about his year's standing.⁴

BD.4.194

If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'I am desirous of asking about my year's standing ... I want monks to come', you should go ... thinking: 'I will ask or I will explain'. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.26

"... where a novice becomes desirous of being ordained ... (as in Kd.3.6.22) ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.27

"This is a case, monks, where a woman novice comes to be ill ... Kd.3.6.2 ... The return should be made in seven days.

Vin.1.147

Kd.3.6.28

"... where dissatisfaction ... where remorse ... where a wrong view comes to have arisen in a woman novice ... where a woman novice becomes desirous of asking about her year's standing ... Kd.3.6.25 ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.6.29

"... where a woman novice becomes desirous of undertaking the training.⁵ If she should send a messenger to monks, saying: 'Now I am desirous of undertaking the training, let the masters come, I want the masters to come', you should go, monks, even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, and if the business can be done in seven days, thinking: 'I will make an effort for her to acquire the training'. The return should be made in seven days."

¹ sikkhāsamādānaṃ. ² With the upasampadā ordination. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xlivff.

³ Nuns' upasampadā ordination takes place before an Order of monks. ⁴ vassa. See above, BD.4.109. This must be the technical meaning of vassaṃ pucchitum, which editors of Vinaya Texts i.310, note say "is unknown to us". ⁵ Balancing the "to be ordained" of probationers and male novices. The woman novice had to become a probationer and spend two years in training in the six rules for probationers before she could become ordained.

ALLOWANCE FOR SEVEN WHEN SENT FOR

Now at that time a certain monk's mother became ill. She sent a messenger to her son, saying: "Now I am ill, let my son come, I want my son to come." Then it occurred to that monk: "It is laid down by the Lord that, if the business can be done in seven days, one can go if sent for but not if not sent for to seven (classes of people); and, if the business can be done in seven days, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for to five (classes of people)¹; and my own mother² is ill, but she is not a lay-follower. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.3.7.1

He said: "I allow you, monks, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, if the business can be done in seven days, to seven (classes of people): to a monk, a nun, a probationer, a novice, a woman novice, a mother, a father. I allow you, monks, to go even if not sent for, all the more if sent for, if the business can be done in seven days, to these seven (classes of people). The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.7.2
BD.4.195

"This is a case, monks, where a monk's mother comes to be ill. If she should send a messenger to her son, saying: 'Now I am ill, let my son come, I want my son to come', you should go, monks, ... (=Kd.3.6.2) ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.7.3

"This is a case, monks, where a monk's father comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to his son, saying: 'Now I am ill, let my son come, I want my son to come', you should go ... (=Kd.3.6.2) ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.7.4
Vin.1.148

¹ See above, BD.4.189. ² ayañ ca me mātā, and this my mother.

ALLOWANCE ONLY WHEN SENT FOR

Kd.3.7.5

“This is a case, monks, where a monk’s brother comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to his brother, saying: ‘Now I am ill, let my brother come, I want my brother to come’, you should go, monks, if sent for, but not if not sent for, if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.7.6

“This is a case, monks, where a monk’s sister comes to be ill. If she should send a messenger to her brother, saying: ‘Now I am ill, let my brother come, I want my brother to come’, you should go ... (= Kd.3.7.5) ... The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.7.7

“This is a case, monks, where a monk’s relative comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Now I am ill, let the revered sir come, I want the revered sir to come’, you should go, monks, if sent for, but not if not sent for, if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.

Kd.3.7.8

“This is a case, monks, where a person living with monks¹ comes to be ill. If he should send a messenger to monks, saying: ‘Now I am ill, let monks come, I want monks to come’, you should go, monks, if sent for, but not if not sent for, if the business can be done in seven days. The return should be made in seven days.”

BD.4.196

Kd.3.8.1

Now at that time an Order’s dwelling-place was falling to pieces. A certain lay-follower had the goods² removed into the jungle. He sent a messenger to monks, saying: “If the revered sirs would fetch away³ these goods, I would give them back these goods.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go away on business connected with an Order. The return should be made in seven days.”

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Rains-residence

¹ bhikkhugatika. Vin-a.1069 and Sinhalese edition read bhatika; Vin-a explains as “a man (purisa) living in one dwelling-place together with monks”. ² bhaṇḍam chedāpitam hoti. No justification for “had a quantity of wood cut” as at Vinaya Texts i.312. Vin-a.1069 explains by dabbasambhārabhaṇḍa, goods forming a substantial collection. Cf. bhaṇḍaka at Vin.4.304 referring to the goods or “things”, property that some nuns wanted to receive from Thullanandā’s burning dwelling. ³ Oldenberg’s text avahareyyum; Sinhalese edition avahāpeyyum.

PORTION ON NO OFFENCE FOR CUTTING SHORT THE RAINS WHEN THERE IS DANGER

Now at that time in the Kosala country monks who had entered upon the rains in a certain residence came to be molested by beasts of prey who seized them and attacked them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains come to be molested by beasts of prey who seize them and attack them. This is indeed a danger,¹ and you should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains come to be molested by creeping things which bite them and attack them. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where monks ... are molested by thieves who rob them and thrash them. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks ... are molested by demons² who take possession of³ them and sap their vitality.⁴ This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where the village of monks who have entered upon the rains comes to be burnt by fire and the monks go short of almsfood. This is indeed a danger ... in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where the lodgings of monks who have entered upon the rains come to be burnt by fire and the monks go short of lodgings. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where the village of monks who have entered upon the rains comes to be carried away by water and the monks go short of almsfood. This is indeed ... in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where the lodgings of monks who have entered upon the rains come to be carried away by water and the monks go short of lodgings. This is indeed a danger, and you should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.”

Vin.1.149

Kd.3.9.2

Kd.3.9.3

BD.4.197

Kd.3.9.4

Kd.3.10.1

¹ See above, BD.4.148, where this and some of the following dangers are enumerated although not in quite the same order. ² pisāca. Not among the “ten dangers”. ³ āvisanti, explained at Vin-a.1070 as “they enter into the body”. ⁴ ojaṃ haranti, they carry off the life-strength.

Now at that time the village of certain monks who had entered upon the rains in a certain residence was removed¹ on account of thieves. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go to that village.” The village was split in two. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go where there are the more (people).” The majority came to be of little faith, not believing. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to go to those who have faith and are believing.”

Kd.3.11.1

Now at that time in the Kosala country monks who had entered upon the rains in a certain residence did not obtain a sufficiency, as much as they needed, of coarse or of sumptuous food. They told this matter to the Lord. He said “This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains do not obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food. This is indeed a danger,² and they should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food, but they do not obtain beneficial foods. This is indeed a danger ... in cutting short the rains.

BD.4.198

Kd.3.11.2

“This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food, they obtain beneficial foods, but they do not obtain beneficial medicines. This is indeed a danger ... the rains. This is a case, monks, where monks who have entered upon the rains obtain a sufficiency, as much as they need, of coarse or of sumptuous food, they obtain beneficial foods, they obtain beneficial medicines, but they do not obtain a suitable attendant. This is indeed a danger ... in cutting short the rains.

Vin.1.150

Kd.3.11.3

“This is a case, monks, where a woman invites a monk who has entered upon the rains, saying: ‘Come, honoured sir, I will give you gold³ or I will give you gold ornaments⁴ or I will give you a field or I will give you a site⁵ or I will give you a bull⁶ or I will give you a cow or I will give you a slave or I will give you a slave woman or I will give you (my) daughter as wife or I will be your wife or I will lead another wife to you.’ If it then occurs to the monk: ‘The mind is called quickly-changing¹ by the Lord, and this may be a danger to my Brahma-faring’, he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

¹ vuṭṭhāsi, arose, got up; thus, went away. ² This is a “danger to life”, the ninth danger listed at Vin.1.113. ³ hirañña suvaṇṇa. See BD.1.28, n. ⁴ hirañña suvaṇṇa. See BD.1.28, n. ⁵ vatthu. Probably meaning a site for a hut or a dwelling-place, as in Bu-Ss.6, Bu-Ss.7.

⁶ gāvurū.

“This is a case, monks, where a low class woman ... a grown girl² ... a eunuch invites a monk who has entered upon the rains ... where relations invite ... kings ... thieves ... men of abandoned life invite a monk who has entered upon the rains, saying: ‘Come, honoured sir, we will give you gold ... or we will give you a daughter as wife or we will lead another wife to you’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘The mind is called quickly-changing by the Lord ...’ ... There is no offence in cutting short the rains. This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains sees a treasure³ without an owner. If then it occurs to the monk: ‘The mind is called quickly changing ...’ ... There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

Kd.3.11.4

BD.4.199

PORTION ON NO OFFENCE FOR CUTTING SHORT THE RAINS WHEN THERE IS SCHISM IN THE SAṄGHA

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains sees several monks striving for a schism in the Order. If then it occurs to the monk: ‘A schism in an Order is called serious by the Lord,⁴ do not let the Order be divided in my presence’, he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

Kd.3.11.5

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several monks are striving for a schism in the Order’. If then it occurs to that monk ... in cutting short the rains.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several monks in a certain residence are striving for a schism in the Order’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these monks are my friends. I should speak to them, saying: Indeed, your reverences, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord, please do not let a schism in the Order be promoted by the venerable ones and if he thinks: ‘They will do my bidding, they will attend, they will give ear he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

Kd.3.11.6

¹ lahuparivatta citta. For this sentiment, cf. SN.ii.95, Thag.4; also the expression vibbhantacitta at It.p.91; and lahucittakata, BD.4.101, above. ² thullakumārī; cf. above, BD.4.87, n.6. ³ nidhi; store, hoardings, treasure at Snp.285, Dh.p.76, Kp.8.2, Kp.8.9. At Ja.vi.79 explained as vācakāranivāsana, putting on a bark dress. Cf. the ruling as to picking up treasure (ratana) at Bu-Pc.84. ⁴ At Vin.2.198, in speaking to Devadatta.

Kd.3.11.7

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several monks in a certain residence are striving for a schism in the Order’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these monks are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them,¹ saying: Indeed, your reverences, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord ...’ (=Kd.3.11.6) ... in cutting short the rains.

Vin.1.151

Kd.3.11.8

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that the Order in a certain residence is divided by several monks’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these monks are friends of mine. I should speak to them, saying: ...’ (=Kd.3.11.6) ... in cutting short the rains.

BD.4.200

Kd.3.11.9

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that an Order in a certain residence is divided by several monks’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these monks are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them, saying: Indeed, your reverences, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord ...’ (=Kd.3.11.6) ... There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

Kd.3.11.10

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several nuns in a certain residence are striving for a schism in the Order’. If it then occurs to the monk: ‘Now these nuns are friends of mine. I should speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order is called serious by the Lord, please do not let a schism in the Order be promoted by the sisters’, and if he thinks: ‘They will do my bidding, they will attend, they will give ear’, he should depart. There is no offence in cutting short the rains.

Kd.3.11.11

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: ‘It is said that several nuns in a certain residence are striving for a

¹ I.e. to the schismatic monks.

schism in the Order'. If it then occurs to the monk: 'Now these nuns are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order ...' (=Kd.3.11.10) ... there is no offence in cutting short the rains.

Kd.3.11.12

"This is a case, monks, where a monk who has entered upon the rains hears: 'It is said that the Order in a certain residence is divided by several nuns'. If it then occurs to the monk: 'Now these nuns are friends of mine. I should speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order ...' (=Kd.3.11.10) ... in cutting short the rains.

Kd.3.11.13

"This is a case ... hears: 'It is said that the Order in a certain residence is divided by several nuns'. If it then occurs to the monk: 'Now these nuns are not friends of mine, but those who are friends of theirs are friends of mine; to these I shall speak, and when I have spoken to them, they will speak to them, saying: Sisters, a schism in the Order ...' (=Kd.3.11.10) ... in cutting short the rains."

BD.4.201

ENTERING THE RAINS IN A COW PEN, ETC.

Now at that time a certain monk became desirous of entering on the rains in a cow-pen.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to enter on the rains in a cow-pen." The cow-pen was removed.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to go to that cow-pen."

Kd.3.12.1

Vin.1.152

Now at that time, as the beginning of the rains was approaching, a certain monk became desirous of going in a caravan. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to enter on the rains in a caravan." Now at that time, as the beginning of the rains was approaching, a certain monk became desirous of going in a boat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to enter on the rains in a boat."

Kd.3.12.2

¹ vajā. Vin-a.1071 explains as the dwelling-place of cowherds. Word occurs at AN.iii.393, Vism.166, Vism.279 in meaning of "cow-pen". ² vuṭṭhāsi; cf. above BD.4.197, n.1.

PLACES FOR NOT ENTERING THE RAINS

Kd.3.12.3

Now at that time monks entered on the rains in hollow trees. People looked down on, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like demon-worshippers.”¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in hollow trees. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.3.12.4

Now at that time monks entered on the rains in forks of trees. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like hunters.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in the forks of trees. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.3.12.5

Now at that time monks entered on the rains in the open air. When the gods rained they ran up to the foot of trees and to the shelter of a nimb tree.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in the open air. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.4.202

Kd.3.12.6

Now at that time monks entered on the rains without lodgings. They suffered from cold and they suffered from heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains without lodgings. Whoever should (so) enter on them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.3.12.7

Now at that time monks entered on the rains in a charnel-house. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like those who burn corpses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in a charnel-house. Whoever ... wrong-doing.”

¹ pisācillika, or perhaps aborigines. See Vinaya Texts i.318, n., and Kd.15.10.2; Kd.15.27.5. Cf. pisāca above, BD.4.196. ² nimbakosa. Kosa can mean cavity, thus the hollow of a tree, or it might mean a sheath or enclosure, thus the shelter, the cover of a tree.

Now at that time monks entered on the rains under a sunshade.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like cowherds”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains under a sunshade. Whoever ... wrong-doing.”

Kd.3.12.8

Vin.1.153

Now at that time monks entered on the rains in a water-jar.² People ... spread it about, saying: “Like followers of other sects”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter on the rains in a water-jar. Whoever ... of wrong-doing.”

Kd.3.12.9

UNLAWFUL AGREEMENT

Now at that time an agreement came to be made by an Order in Sāvattthī that no one should be allowed to go forth during the rains. A nephew of Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, having approached monks, asked for the going forth. Monks spoke thus: “Sir, an agreement was made by the Order that during the rains no one should be allowed to go forth. Wait, sir, until the monks have kept the rains; when they have kept the rains they will allow you to go forth.” Then these monks, having kept the rains, spoke thus to the nephew of Visākhā, Migāra’s mother: “Come now, sir, go forth.” He spoke thus: “Honoured sirs, if I could have gone forth, I should have been pleased. But now, I, honoured sirs, will not go forth.”

Kd.3.13.1

BD.4.203

Kd.3.13.2

Visākhā, Migāra’s mother ... spread it about, saying: “How can the masters make an agreement to the effect that no one should be allowed to go forth during the rains? At what time should dhamma not be followed?” Monks heard Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, as she ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, an agreement that no one should be allowed to go forth during the rains should not be made. Whoever should make (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ chatta is the regular word for sunshade. It can also mean a canopy. ² cāṭi, some big vessel; used for containing and transporting water at Ja.i.99. Ja.i.101. Perhaps above the long bath-like stone vessels still to be seen at Anurādhapura.

OFFENCE OF WRONG-DOING IN ASSENT

Kd.3.14.1

Now at that time a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala came to be assented to for the earlier period¹ by the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans. As he was going to that residence, he saw on the way two residences with many robes. It occurred to him: “Now, suppose I should spend the rains in these two residences? Thus would many robes accrue to me.” He spent the rains in these two residences. King Pasenadi of Kosala ... spread it about, saying: “How can this master Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having assented to our rains-residence, break his word? Is not lying condemned in many a figure by the Lord and restraint from lying extolled?”

Kd.3.14.2

Monks heard King Pasenadi of Kosala as he ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having assented to a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala, break his word? Is not lying condemned in many a figure by the Lord and restraint from lying extolled?”

Vin.1.154

Kd.3.14.3

Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, saying: “Is it true, as is said, Upananda, that you, having assented to a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala, broke your word?”

BD.4.204

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord, rebuked him, saying:

“How can you, foolish man, having assented to a rains-residence belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala, break your word? Foolish man, is not lying condemned in many a figure by me and restraint from lying extolled? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.3.14.4

“This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the earlier period. As he is going to that residence he sees on the way two residences with many robes. It occurs to him: ‘What now if I should spend the rains in these two residences? Thus would many robes accrue to me.’ He spends the rains in these two residences. Monks, the earlier period is not valid for that monk, and also there is an offence of wrong-doing in the assent.

¹ purimikāya, that is, for the first three months of the rainy season.

Kd.3.14.5

“This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the earlier period. As he is going to that residence he carries out Observance outside it, he reaches a dwelling-place on the day after the Observance day, he prepares a lodging, he sets out drinking-water and water for washing, he sweeps a cell, and, having nothing to do, he departs that self-same day. Monks, the earlier period is not valid for that monk, and also there is an offence of wrong-doing in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... (=Kd.3.14.5) ... he sweeps a cell, and, having something to do, he departs that self-same day. Monks, ... in the assent.

Kd.3.14.6

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having nothing to do, he departs, having spent two or three days. Monks, ... in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having something to do he departs, having spent two or three days. Monks, ... in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having stayed two or three days, he departs on some business that can be done in seven days. But he passes those seven days outside. Monks, ... in the assent.

“This is a case, monks, ... and, having stayed two or three days, he departs on some business that can be done in seven days. He returns within seven days. Monks, the earlier period is valid for that monk, and there is no offence in the assent.

BD.4.205
Vin.1.155

Kd.3.14.7

“This is a case, monks, ... and having something to do before the Invitation,¹ he departs for seven days. Monks, whether that monk returns or whether he does not return to that residence, the earlier period is valid for that monk, and also there is no offence in the assent.

Kd.3.14.8

- “This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the earlier period. Having arrived at that residence he carries out the Observance, he reaches a dwelling-place on the day after the Observance day²...

Kd.3.14.10

Kd.3.14.11

¹ Pavāraṇā, a ceremony held at the end of the third month of the rains. See Kd.4.

² Kd.3.14.5-Kd.3.14.7 are repeated, the only difference being that there the monk held Observance outside the residence to which he was going; here he holds it when he has arrived.

“This is a case, monks, where a rains-residence comes to be assented to by a monk for the later period. As he is going to that residence he carries out Observance outside it ... (*the whole passage is identical with Kd.3.14.5–Kd.3.14.10; for earlier period read later period; for before the Invitation read before the komudī cātumāsini*¹) ... and also there is no offence in the assent.”

The Third Section: that on beginning the Rains

THIS IS ITS KEY

To enter on (the rains), and just when? how many?
 and during the rains,
 and they did not want to, intentionally,
 to postpone, a lay-follower,
 Ill, and a mother, a father, and a brother, then a relation,
 a person living with monks, a dwelling-place,
 and also beasts of prey, creeping things,
 And so thieves, and demons, burnt,
 and in regard to both², carried away by water, was removed,
 and the majority, benefactors³,
 And about coarse and sumptuous (foods), beneficial medicines, an attendant,
 a woman, a low class woman,
 and a grown girl, a eunuch, and about a relation,
 Kings, thieves, men of abandoned life,
 a treasure, schisms, and by what is eightfold⁴,
 a cow-pen, and a caravan,
 and a boat, in a hollow, and in a fork,

¹ Cf. BD.4.231, below. This is the full moon day of the month Kattika, marks the end of the later period for keeping the rains, and thus the end of the fourth month of the rainy season. See Vinaya Texts i.324. n.2 and Dialogues of the Buddha i.66, n.1. According to DN-a.139 the white lotus, kumuda, blooms then. ² tadubhayena. Word is not in the text. Reference is to Kd.3.9.3, where the case is taken of both a village and monks' lodgings being burnt.

³ dāyaka. Word not in the text, but it probably refers to the minority who, because believing, may be presumed to have given alms to the monks, Kd.3.10.1. Indeed these three headings: “was removed, and the majority, benefactors” refer to one and the same episode, and should therefore not be counted as separate items in reckoning the total of “fifty-two items” in this Chapter. ⁴ I.e. the eight ways of making a schism which the monk hears about, Kd.3.11.6–Kd.3.11.13. The first way which he sees, Kd.3.11.5, has as its key-word the word “schisms” which also includes the next heading—“by what is eightfold”.

A rains-residence in the open air, and about one who had no lodgings,
 a charnel-house, and under a sunshade, and these went upon (the rains) in a water-jar,
 An agreement, having assented, and Observance days outside,
 the earlier, the later,
 one should combine them after the same fashion¹,
 He departs having nothing to do,
 and likewise because he has something to do, spending two or three days²,
 and on business that can be done in seven days,
 And then going away for seven days,
 whether he should return or should not come back,
 In the key to the items the order³ should observe the woven way.⁴

BD.4.207

*In this Chapter there are fifty-two items.*⁵

Vin.1.157

¹ yathānayena yojaye, referring to the similar permutations of events which are repeated for the later as for the earlier period of the rains. ² The Sinhalese reading of dvihatīham vasitvāna is to be preferred to Oldenberg's dvihatīhā ca puna, "after two or three days and again", as it corresponds more closely to Kd.3.14.6. The latter, however, might be justified by the three cases there mentioned of "two or three days". ³ antarikā, sphere, compass; interval, i.e. the intervals between the items, the range they cover, hence their order. ⁴ tantimaggā, the way that is strung or woven together, so the sacred text or tradition. Cf. DN-a.2, MN-a.i.2. Tantibhadda at Vin.1.312, tantidhara at Vism.99. ⁵ This number is perhaps arrived at by (1) omitting "in regard to both" as a separate heading, being already included under "burnt"; (2) taking "was removed, majority, benefactors" as one heading (see BD.4.206 n.2); (3) taking line 7 as one heading referring to Kd.3.11.1, Kd.3.11.2; (4) taking "schisms, and what is eightfold" as one heading (see BD.4.206 n.3); (5) taking "the earlier, the later, one should combine them after the same fashion" as one heading (see BD.4.206 n.4); (6) taking the last line but one as referring to one and the same eventuality, in Kd.3.14.7.

4. INVITATION (PAVĀRAṆĀ)

DWELLING NOT IN COMFORT

Kd.4.1.1
BD.4.208

At one time the enlightened one, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time several monks, friends and associates, entered on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now by what means can we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood?”

Kd.4.1.2

Then it occurred to these monks: “If we should neither address one another nor converse, but whoever should return first from the village for almsfood¹ should make ready a seat, should put out water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a footstand, having washed a refuse-bowl² should set it out, should set out drinking water and water for washing.

Kd.4.1.3

Whoever should return last from the village for almsfood, if there should be the remains of a meal and if he should so desire, he may eat them; but if he does not so desire, he may throw them away where there is but little green grass³ or he may drop them into water where there are no living creatures,⁴ he should put up the seat, he should put away the water for (washing) the feet, the footstool, the footstand, he should put away the refuse-bowl having washed it, he should put away the drinking water and the water for washing, he should sweep the refectory.

Kd.4.1.4

¹ From here to near the end of Kd.4.1.4 cf. Kd.10.4.5; Kd.8.5.3; MN.i.207. ² This is a receptacle for the leavings of meals. ³ appaharita, or few crops, or no green grass, MN-a.i.94 explaining by tiṇāni, grasses, and referring to Bu-Pc.11. ⁴ This sentence occurs also at Kd.6.26.6, SN.i.169, Snp.p.15, MN.i.13.

Whoever should see a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after evacuation,¹ void and empty, should set out (water); if it is impossible for him (to do this) he should set out (water) by signalling with his hand, having invited a companion (to help him) by a movement of his hand²; but he should not for such a reason break into speech. Thus may we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood.”

BD.4.209

Kd.4.1.5

Then these monks neither addressed one another nor conversed. Whoever returned first from the village for almsfood made ready a seat, put out water for (washing) the feet, a foot-stool, a footstand, set out a refuse-bowl having washed it, set out drinking water and water for washing.

Vin.1.158

Kd.4.1.6

Whoever returned last from the village for almsfood, if there were the remains of a meal ate them if he so desired; if he did not so desire he threw them away where there was but little green grass or he dropped them into water where there were no living creatures, he put up the seat, he put away the water for (washing) the feet, the footstool, the footstand, he put away the refuse-bowl having washed it, he put away the drinking water and the water for washing, he swept the refectory.

Kd.4.1.7

Whoever saw a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after evacuation, void and empty, set out water. If it was impossible for him (to do this) he set out water by signalling with his hand, having by a movement of his hand invited a companion (to help him); but not for such a reason did he break into speech.

Kd.4.1.8

Now it was the custom for monks who had kept the rains to go and see the Lord.³ Then these monks, having kept the rains, at the end of the three

¹ Cf. MN-a.ii.242. ² MN-a.ii.242 says that if any of these vessels is empty, having taken it to a pond and washed it inside and outside, having filtered water (into it), having set it down on the bank, they invite another monk (to help them) by a movement of the hand.

I think that hatthavikārena (“by a movement of the hand”) and hatthavilaṅghakena (“by signalling with the hand”) are complementary and are used to emphasise the gesture-language needed in place of speech. I therefore think that there should be no comma, as in Oldenberg’s edition, after hatthavikārena (there is none at MN.i.207) since this makes the passage read “if it is impossible for him (to do this) by a movement of the hand”, i.e. if he is not able to move the vessel single-handed. This is of course a possible reading, but it is not elegant Pali and balance and emphasis are lost. ³ For following passage, cf. BD.1.153f.

BD.4.210 months packed away their lodgings and taking their bowls and robes, set out for Sāvattthī. In due course they approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anātha-piṇḍika’s monastery and the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for Lords to exchange friendly greetings with in-coming monks.
Kd.4.1.9

Then the Lord spoke thus to these monks: “I hope that you were well, monks, I hope that you kept going, I hope that, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, you passed a comfortable rainy season and did not go short of almsfood?”

“We were well, Lord, we kept going, Lord, and we, Lord, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, passed a comfortable rainy season and did not go short of almsfood.”
Kd.4.1.10

Now, Truthfinders (sometimes) ask knowing, and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask, knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask, knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truthfinders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal; there is bridge-breaking for Truthfinders in whatever does not belong to the goal. In two ways do awakened ones, Lords question monks, either: “Shall we teach dhamma?” or “Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?”¹ Then the Lord spoke thus to these monks:

“But in what way did you, monks, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood?”
Kd.4.1.11

“In that connection did we, Lord, several friends and associates, enter on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. Then it occurred to us, Lord: ‘Now by what means can we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood?’ Then it occurred to us, Lord: ‘If we should neither address one another² ... Thus could we, all together, on friendly terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood.’ So we, Lord, neither addressed one another nor conversed. Whoever returned first from the village for almsfood made ready a seat³ ... but not for such a reason did he break into speech. Thus did we, Lord, all together, on friendly
Vin.1.159

¹ As at Vin.1.59, Vin.1.250, Vin.3.6, Vin.3.88–Vin.3.89. ² As in Kd.4.1.2–Kd.4.1.4. ³ As in Kd.4.1.5–Kd.4.1.7.

terms and harmonious, spend a comfortable rainy season and not go short of almsfood.”

BD.4.211

Kd.4.1.12

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Indeed, monks, these foolish men, having spent an uncomfortable time, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. Indeed, monks, these foolish men, having spent communion like beasts, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. Indeed ... like sheep, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. Indeed ... having spent communion in indolence, pretend to have spent an equally comfortable time. How, monks, can these foolish men observe an observance of members of (other) sects: the practice of silence?¹

Kd.4.1.13

“It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, an observance of members of other sects, the practice of silence, should not be observed. Whoever should observe it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, monks who have kept the rains to ‘invite’² in regard to three matters: what has been seen or heard or suspected. That will be what is suitable for you in regard to one another, a removal of offences³, an aiming at (grasping) the discipline.⁴

Kd.4.1.14

And thus, monks, should one invite. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Today is an Invitation day.⁵ If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite.’ A monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak to it thus: ‘Your reverences, I invite the Order in respect of what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable ones speak to me out of compassion, and seeing I will make amends.¹ And a second time ... And a third time, your reverences, I invite the Order in respect of what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable ones speak to me out of compassion, and seeing I will make amends.' A newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak to it thus: 'Honoured sirs, I invite the Order in respect of what has been seen ... And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing I will make amends.'"

BD.4.212

¹ mūgabbata, custom of being dumb (mūga), according to Vin-a.1073, for three months. Cf. the monks who sat like dumb swine, mūgasūkarā, when they might have been speaking dhamma, above, BD.4.131. ² pavāretum, a technical term used for a monk to “invite” others at the end of the rains to tell him if he has been seen or heard or suspected to have committed any offences. If they do so, and he acknowledges an offence by seeing it and making amends for it, he becomes rid of it, and is therefore pure to take his place in the Order’s business. ³ āpattivuṭṭhānatā, or a rising up from an offence (or offences). Cf. āpatti vuṭṭhitā at Kd.2.3.5, and vuṭṭhāsi at Kd.3.10.1, a village was removed. ⁴ vinayapurekkhāratā. Cf. atthapurekkhāra dhammapurekkhāra at e.g. Vin.3.130, Vin.4.11, Vin.4.277. ⁵ pavāraṇā, invitation. MN-a.i.93 distinguishes four kinds of pavāraṇā and places first this one held at the end of the rains.

Vin.1.160

Kd.4.2.1

Now at that time the group of six monks remained² on seats while monks who were elders, sitting down on their haunches, were themselves inviting. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six monks remain on seats while monks who are elders, sitting down on their haunches, are themselves inviting?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks remained on seats ... were themselves inviting?"

"It is true, Lord." The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can these foolish men remain on seats ... are themselves inviting? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, you should not remain on seats while monks who are elders, sitting down on their haunches, are themselves inviting. I allow you, monks, to invite while each and every one is sitting down on his haunches."

Kd.4.2.2

Now at that time a certain elder, feeble with age, thinking: "Until all have invited", while sitting down on his haunches and waiting, fell down in a faint. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, (each one) to sit down on his haunches during the period until he invites, and having invited, to sit down on a seat."

¹ I.e. for the offence imputed to him and "seen" by him. ² acchanti. Vin-a.1074 says they were sitting down, they did not stand up.

DIVISION OF THE INVITATION

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many Invitation (days) are there?” They told this to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these two Invitation (days), the fourteenth and the fifteenth. These, monks, are the two Invitation (days).”¹

Kd.4.3.1
BD.4.213

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how many (formal) acts for the Invitation are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these four (formal) acts for the Invitation: a (formal) act for the Invitation (carried out) not by rule and when an assembly is incomplete... (=Kd.2.14.2, Kd.2.14.3; read act for the Invitation instead of act for Observance) ... you, monks, should train yourselves thus”.

Kd.4.3.2

ALLOWANCE TO GIVE INVITATION

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Gather together, monks, the Order will invite.”² When he had spoken thus a certain monk spoke thus to the Lord: “There is, Lord, a monk who is ill. He has not come.” He said: “I allow you, monks, to give the Invitation on behalf of a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I will give the Invitation, convey the Invitation for me, invite on my behalf.’ If he makes it understood by gesture, if he makes it understood by voice, if he makes it understood by gesture and voice, the Invitation comes to be given. If he does not make it understood by gesture ... by gesture and voice, the Invitation does not come to be given.

Kd.4.3.3

Vin.1.161

If he thus manages this, it is good. If he does not manage it then, monks, that ill monk, having been brought to the midst of the Order on a couch or a chair, should invite. If, monks, it occurs to the monks who are tending the ill one ... (=Kd.2.22.2) ... the ill one should not be moved from (that) place; the Order having gone there may invite, but one should not invite if an Order is incomplete. Whoever should so invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.4.3.4

¹ Cf. Kd.2.14.1. ² Cf. Kd.2.22.1.

Kd.4.3.5

“If, monks, the conveyor of the Invitation goes away then and there ... (= Kd.2.22.3, Kd.2.22.4; read Invitation, although the Invitation, the conveyor of the Invitation instead of entire purity, although the entire purity, the conveyor of the entire purity) ... there is an offence of wrong-doing for the conveyor of the Invitation. I allow you, monks, on an Invitation day to give the consent also by giving the Invitation; they are the Order’s business.”¹

BD.4.214

ON BEING GRABBED BY RELATIVES

Kd.4.4.1

Now at that time his relations got hold of a certain monk on an Invitation day ... (as in Kd.2.24.1–Kd.2.24.3; read Invitation day for Observance day, and gives the Invitation for declares his entire purity, and invites for carries out the Observance) ...

Vin.1.162

DIVISION OF INVITATION BY SAṄGHA, ETC.

Kd.4.5.1

Now at that time five monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that an Order may invite², but we are (only) five persons. Now, how can we invite?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite in an Order of five.”³

Kd.4.5.2

Now at that time four monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five, but we are (only) four persons. Now, how can we invite?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite one another when you are (only) four.

¹ Cf. Kd.2.23.3. ² Cf. Kd.4.1.14. ³ The procedure for inviting an Order has been given in Kd.4.1.14 and is not repeated here. “Inviting one another” when there are only four, three or two persons has not yet been explained, and so directions for the right method are given in the next paragraphs. Various sizes of saṅghas are given at Kd.9.4.1, with the formal acts they may not carry out. This whole passage should be compared with Kd.2.26.1–Kd.2.26.10.

“And thus, monks, should one invite: These monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. Today is an Invitation day. If it seems right to the venerable ones, let us invite one another.’ These monks should be spoken to thus by a monk who is an elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms: ‘I, your reverences, invite the venerable ones in regard to what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable ones speak to me out of compassion, and seeing, I will make amends. And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.’ These monks should be spoken to thus by a newly ordained monk, having arranged ... ‘I, honoured sirs, invite the venerable ones in regard to what has been seen or heard or suspected ... And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.’”

Kd.4.5.3

BD.4.215

Now at that time three monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five persons, and to invite one another when there are four, but we are (only) three persons. Now how can we invite?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite one another when you are (only) three. And thus, monks, should one invite: These monks should be informed ... (= Kd.4.5.3) ... I will make amends.”

Kd.4.5.4

Vin.1.163

Now at that time two monks were staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five (persons), to invite one another when there are four, to invite one another when there are three, but we are (only) two persons. Now, how can we invite?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite one another when you are (only) two.

Kd.4.5.5

“And thus, monks, should one invite: The monk who is the elder, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to the newly ordained monk: ‘I, your reverence, invite the venerable one in regard to what has been seen or heard or suspected. Let the venerable one speak to me out of compassion, and seeing, I will make amends. And a second time ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.’ The newly ordained monk, having arranged his upper robe ... with joined palms, should speak thus to the monk who is the elder: ‘I, honoured sir, invite the venerable one ... And a third time ... and seeing, I will make amends.’”

Kd.4.5.6

Kd.4.5.7

BD.4.216

Now at that time one monk was staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Then it occurred to that monk: “It is allowed by the Lord to invite in an Order of five (persons), to invite one another ... when there are (only) two, but I am alone. Now, how can I invite?” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.4.5.8

He said: “This is a case, monks, where one monk is staying in a certain residence on an Invitation day. Monks, that monk, having swept the place to which monks return—an attendance hall or a pavilion or the root of a tree—having put out drinking water and water for washing, having made ready a seat, having made a light, should sit down. If other monks arrive, he may invite together with them; if they do not arrive, he should determine: ‘Today is an Invitation day for me’. If he should not (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.4.5.9

“Monks, there where five monks are staying, four should not invite in an Order, having conveyed the invitation for one. If they should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“Monks, there where four monks are staying, three should not invite one another, having conveyed the invitation for one. If they should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Vin.1.164

“Monks, there where three monks are staying, two should not invite one another, having conveyed the invitation for one. If they should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

“Monks, there where two monks are staying, one should not determine, having conveyed the invitation for the other. If he should (so) determine, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS

Kd.4.6.1

Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into an offence on an Invitation day.¹ Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that an offender should not invite,² and I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, ... (cf. Kd.2.27.1, Kd.2.27.2; read Invitation day for Observance day) ... When he has spoken thus, he may invite, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Invitation from such a cause.”

PROCEDURE FOR NO OBSTACLE FROM OFFENCE

Kd.4.6.2
BD.4.217

Now at that time a certain monk, as he was himself inviting, remembered an offence.³ Then it occurred to this monk: “It is laid down by the Lord that an offender should not invite, and I have fallen into an offence. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk, as he is himself inviting, remembers an offence. Monks, this monk should speak thus to the monk next to him: ‘I, your reverence, have fallen into such and such an offence; removing from here,⁴ I will make amends for that offence.’ When he has spoken thus, he may invite, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Invitation from such a cause.

Kd.4.6.3

“This is a case, monks, where a monk as he is himself inviting, becomes doubtful about an offence. Monks ... (cf. Kd.2.27.5) ... When he has spoken thus he may invite, but no obstacle should be put in the way of the Invitation from such a cause.”

¹ Cf. Kd.2.27.1. ² Cf. below, BD.4.223. ³ Cf. Kd.2.27.4. ⁴ Or, having risen up from here.

⁵ OLDENBERG, Vin.1.164, and Vinaya Texts i.336 compare this to Kd.2.27.4–Kd.2.27.8, which would mean that a monk also invited the Order collectively.

PROCEDURE FOR MAKING AMENDS FOR SHARED OFFENCE

(Note by Sujato: this section, which repeats the material from the corresponding section of the Uposathakkhandhaka, is not included in Horner's translation. See previous footnote.)

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

FIFTY CASES OF NO OFFENCE

Now at that time several resident monks, five or more, collected together in a certain residence on an Invitation day.¹ They did not know that the other resident monks had not arrived. Thinking of the rule, thinking of discipline, thinking that they were complete, they invited while they were incomplete. While they were inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrived. They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.4.7.2

Vin.1.165

He said: "This is a case, monks, where several resident monks ... (as in Kd.4.7.1 above) ... While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, those monks should invite again; there is no offence for those who have invited."²

Kd.4.7.3

BD.4.218

Kd.4.7.4

"This is a case, monks, ... other resident monks, a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; the remainder should invite, and there is no offence for those who have invited.

"This is a case, monks, where several resident monks, five or more, collect together in a certain residence on an Invitation day ... When they have just finished inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, those monks should invite again; there is no offence for those who have invited.

"This is a case, monks, ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; they³ should invite in their presence, and there is no offence for those who have invited.

Kd.4.7.5

¹ Cf. Kd.2.28.1–Kd.2.28.7. ² pavāritānaṃ, for the inviters, corresponding to the "reciters" of Kd.2.28.2. ³ I.e. the resident monks who arrive late.

“This is a case, monks, ... When they have just finished inviting but the assembly has not risen ... (=Kd.4.7.5) ... no offence for those who have invited.

“This is a case ... and part of the assembly has risen ... (=Kd.4.7.5) ... no offence for those who have invited.

“This is a case, monks, where ... the whole assembly has risen, and other resident monks, a larger number ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; they should invite in their presence, and there is no offence for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases in which there is No Offence

FIFTY CASES OF PERCEIVING IT IS A GROUP OR IS NOT A GROUP

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence several resident monks, five or more, collect together on an Invitation day.¹ They know that other resident monks have not arrived. Thinking of the rule, thinking of discipline, thinking that they are incomplete they invite while they are incomplete. While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, these monks should invite again, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

Kd.4.8.1

“This is a case, monks, ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; the remainder should invite and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

Kd.4.8.2

Vin.1.166

“This is a case, monks, ... When they have just finished inviting ... and the assembly has not risen ... part of the assembly has risen ... the whole assembly has risen, and other resident monks, a larger number ... a like number ... a smaller number, arrive. Those who have invited have duly invited; they should invite in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

Kd.4.8.3

Bd.4.219

Told are the Fifteen Cases on being Aware that an Assembly is incomplete when it is incomplete

¹ Cf. Kd.2.29.

FIFTY CASES OF DOUBT

Kd.4.9.1

“This is a case, monks, where several resident monks five or more, collect together on an Invitation day.¹ They know that other resident monks have not arrived. Thinking: ‘Now, is it allowable for us to invite or is it not allowable?’ they invite (although they are in doubt). While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, these monks should invite again, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

Kd.4.9.2

“This is a case, ... (cf. Kd.4.8.2, Kd.4.8.3) ... they should invite in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Being in Doubt

FIFTY CASES OF ACTING BADLY

Kd.4.10.1

“This is a case,² ... (as in Kd.4.9.1) ... Thinking, ‘Indeed, it is allowable for us to invite, it is not unallowable for us’, they, acting badly, invited. While they are inviting ... offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.

Kd.4.10.2

“This is a case,³ ... (cf. Kd.4.8.2, Kd.4.8.3) ... they should invite in their presence, and there is an offence of wrong-doing for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases on Acting Badly

FIFTY CASES OF AIMING AT SCHISM

Kd.4.11.1

Vin.1.167

“This is a case,⁴ ... They know that there are other resident monks who have not arrived. Saying: ‘These are perishing, these are being destroyed, what good are these to you?’ they invite, aiming at a schism. While they are inviting, other resident monks, a larger number, arrive. Monks, those monks should invite again, and there is a grave offence for those who have invited.

Kd.4.11.2

BD.4.220

“This is a case, ... (cf. Kd.4.8.2, Kd.4.8.3; Read grave offence instead of offence of wrong-doing; in the case of a like number a smaller number read those who have invited have duly invited, the rest should invite.) ... they should invite in their presence, and there is a grave offence for those who have invited.”

Told are the Fifteen Cases on aiming at a Schism

Told are the Seventy-five Cases

ABBREVIATED REPETITIONS ON ENTERING A BOUNDARY

“This is a case,¹ ... They know that other resident monks are entering within the boundary. They know that other resident monks have entered within the boundary. They see other resident monks entering within the boundary. They see other resident monks entered within the boundary. They hear other resident monks entering within the boundary. They hear other resident monks who have entered within the boundary.

“From a hundred and seventy-five triads referring to resident (monks) with resident (monks); to incoming (monks) with resident (monks); to resident (monks) with incoming (monks); to incoming (monks) with incoming (monks), there come to be seven hundred triads by means of (these) sets.

VARIOUS DAYS

“This is a case, monks, where the fourteenth is (the Invitation day) for resident monks, the fifteenth for incoming monks ... (= Kd.2.34.1-2.35.5. Read they should invite, they invite, on an Invitation day instead of Observance should be carried out, they carry out the Observance, on an Observance day.) ... if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day’.

Kd.4.13.1

¹ Cf. Kd.2.30. ² Cf. Kd.2.31.1. ³ Cf. Kd.2.31.2. ⁴ Cf. Kd.2.32. ¹ Cf. Kd.2.33.

VISIBLE CHARACTERISTICS

(Note by Sujato: this section, which repeats the material from the corresponding section of the Uposathakkhandhaka, is not included in Horner's translation.)

INVITATION WITH THOSE OF DIFFERENT COMMUNION, ETC.

(Note by Sujato: See previous note.)

PORTION ON SHOULD NOT GO

(Note by Sujato: See previous note.)

PORTION ON SHOULD GO

(Note by Sujato: See previous note.)

SEEING A BLAMEWORTHY PERSON

Kd.4.14.1
Kd.4.14.3
Vin.1.168
Kd.4.14.4

“Monks, one should not invite in a seated assembly before a nun ...¹ ...

“Monks, one should not invite by giving the Invitation of one on probation unless the assembly has not risen.² And, monks, one should not invite on a non-Invitation day unless the Order be unanimous.”

INVITATION WITH TWO STATEMENTS, ETC.

Kd.4.15.1
BD.4.221

Now at that time in a certain residence in the Kosala country there came to be a menace from savages on an Invitation day.³ The monks were unable to invite by using the threefold formula.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite by using a two-fold formula.” The menace from the savages became even greater. The monks were unable to invite by using the two-fold formula. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite by using a onefold formula.” The menace from the savages became even greater. The monks were unable to invite by using the onefold formula. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to invite those who keep the rains (all) together.”

¹ See Kd.2.36.1, Kd.2.36.3. ² Cf. Kd.2.36.4. ³ Cf. Kd.2.15.3.

Now at that time in a certain residence people were giving gifts on an Invitation day until the night was almost ended. Then it occurred to those monks: “People are giving gifts until the night is almost ended. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.4.15.2

He said: “This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd.4.15.2) ... before dawn breaks’. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. People are giving gifts until the night is almost ended. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’

Kd.4.15.3

Vin.1.169

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence on an Invitation day monks are speaking dhamma, those versed in the discourses are chanting a discourse, the discipline experts are propounding discipline, the talkers on dhamma are discussing dhamma, monks are quarrelling² until the night is almost ended. If it then occurs to these monks: ‘Monks are quarrelling until the night is almost ended. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks’, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Monks are quarrelling ... the Order will not be invited before dawn breaks. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’”

Kd.4.15.4

BD.4.222

¹ See Kd.4.1.14. As Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1077 seems to imply the motion (ñatti) could be shelved if the Order approves. Then the inviting monk had merely three times to repeat his request to invite the Order. Above, he is allowed to curtail the number of times he makes the request. Cf. dvevācika and tevācika above Kd.1.4.5, Kd.1.7.10. ² “Quarrelling” really means arguing and disputing about points of dhamma and discipline.

Kd.4.15.5

Now at that time in a certain residence in the Kosala country a large Order of monks came to have collected together on an Invitation day, and (only) a small (place) was sheltered from the rain and a great cloud had come up. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now this large Order of monks has collected together, and (only) a small (place) is sheltered from the rain and a great cloud has come up. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before this cloud pours down rain. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.4.15.6

He said: “This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence a large Order of monks has collected together on an Invitation day, and (only) a small (place) ... (as in Kd.4.15.5 above) ... If it then occurs to these monks: ‘Now this large Order of monks ... pours down rain’, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This large Order of monks ... pours down rain. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’

Kd.4.15.7

“This is a case, monks, where in a certain residence on an Invitation day there comes to be a danger from kings ... from thieves ... from fire ... from water ... from human beings ... from non-human beings ... from beasts of prey ... from creeping things ... to life ... to the Brahma-faring.¹

Vin.1.170

It then occurs to these monks: ‘Now this is a danger to the Brahma-faring. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before there is a danger to the Brahma-faring.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This is a danger to the Brahma-faring. If the Order invites by the threefold formula, then the Order will not be invited before there is a danger to the Brahma-faring. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite those who keep the rains together by a twofold formula, by a onefold formula.’”

BD.4.223

¹ Cf. above BD.4.148.

SETTING ASIDE THE INVITATION

Now at that time the group of six monks invited (while they were) offenders. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, an offender should not invite. Whoever (such) should invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, having obtained leave from whatever offender is inviting, to reprove him for the offence.”¹

Kd.4.16.1

Now at that time the group of six monks, (although) obtaining leave, did not wish to give leave. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to suspend the invitation² of one not giving leave. And thus, monks, should it be suspended: If on an Invitation day, whether the fourteenth or the fifteenth, one should say in the presence of that individual, in the midst of the Order: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The individual so-and-so is an offender; I am suspending his invitation; one should not invite in his presence’, the invitation comes to be suspended.”

Kd.4.16.2

Now at that time the group of six monks, saying: “Before well behaved monks suspend our invitation”³, themselves suspended beforehand, without ground, without reason, the invitation of pure monks who were not offenders, and they also suspended the invitation of those who had (already) invited. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one should not suspend without ground, without reason, the invitation of pure monks who are not offenders. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should one suspend the invitation of those who have invited. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.4.16.3

¹ Cf. Kd.2.16.1. ² pavāraṇaṃ ṭhapetuṃ, cf. Vin.2.5, Vin.2.22, Vin.2.32. ³ Cf. Kd.2.16.3.

Kd.4.16.4
BD.4.224

“Monks, an invitation comes to be (duly) suspended thus, not (duly) suspended thus. And how, monks, does an invitation come to be not (duly) suspended? If, monks, one suspends an invitation when the invitation has been spoken, uttered and brought to a close by the threefold formula, the invitation comes to be not (duly) suspended. If, monks, one suspends an invitation when the invitation has been spoken, uttered and brought to a close by a twofold formula ... by a onefold formula ... by those keeping the rains together, an invitation comes to be not (duly) suspended. It is thus, monks, that an invitation comes to be not (duly) suspended.

Vin.1.171

Kd.4.16.5

“And how, monks, does an invitation come to be (duly) suspended? If, monks, one suspends an invitation when the invitation has been spoken, uttered, but not brought to a close¹ by the threefold formula, the invitation comes to be (duly) suspended. If, monks, one suspends ... but not brought to a close by the twofold formula ... by the onefold formula ... by those keeping the rains together, the invitation comes to be (duly) suspended. It is thus, monks, that an invitation comes to be (duly) suspended.

Kd.4.16.6

“This is a case, monks, when on an Invitation day a monk suspends (another) monk’s invitation. If other monks know concerning this monk: ‘This venerable one is not pure in the conduct of his body, he is not pure in the conduct of his speech, he is not pure in his mode of livelihood; he is ignorant, inexperienced; he is not competent when being himself questioned to give an explanation²,’ and if having snubbed³ him, they say: ‘That’s enough, monk, let there be no strife, let there be no quarrel, let there be no dispute, let there be no contention’, the Order may invite.

Kd.4.16.7

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd.4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body, but he is not pure in the conduct of his speech, he is not pure in his mode of livelihood) ... to give an explanation’, ... the Order may invite.

Kd.4.16.8

BD.4.225

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd.4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body, he is pure in the conduct of his speech, but he is not pure in his mode of livelihood) ...’. the Order may invite.

Kd.4.16.9

“This is a case, monks ... (as in Kd.4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body, pure in the conduct of his speech, pure in his mode of livelihood;

¹ Correct in the Pali text pariyositāya to apari-, as noted at Vinaya Texts i.342, n.1. ² anuyogam dātum. ³ omadditvā, having crushed. Vin-a.1078 says that it is here a verbal crushing.

but he is ignorant, inexperienced; he is not competent when himself being questioned) ...' ... the Order may invite.

“This is a case, monks, ... (as in Kd.4.16.6 above ‘... is pure in the conduct of his body) ... pure in his mode of livelihood; he is learned, experienced; he is competent when being himself questioned to give an explanation’, one should speak thus to him: ‘If you, your reverence, suspend this monk’s invitation, why do you suspend it? Do you suspend it on account of a falling away from moral habit¹? Do you suspend it on account of a falling away from good habits²? Do you suspend it on account of a falling away from (right) view³?’

Kd.4.16.10

Vin.1.172

Kd.4.16.11

“If he should speak thus: ‘I suspend it on account of a falling away from moral habit ... a falling away from (right) view’, one should speak thus to him: ‘But does your reverence know what is a falling away from moral habit ... a falling away from (right) view?’ If he should speak thus: ‘I know, your reverence, what is a falling away from moral habit ... a falling away from (right) view’, one should speak thus to him: ‘But which, your reverence, is a falling away from moral habit, which is a falling away from good habits, which is a falling away from (right) view?’

Kd.4.16.12

“If he should speak thus: ‘This is a falling away from moral habit: the four offences involving defeat, the thirteen offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. This is a falling away from good habits: a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech. This is a falling away from (right) view: a wrong view, taking up an extreme view⁴’, one should speak

BD.4.226

¹ Defined at AN.i.268 as onslaught on creatures, taking what is not given, wrong conduct in sense-pleasures, lying, slandering, using harsh words, babbling. These three “falling aways” or failures are mentioned above BD.4.82f. ² AN.i.268 has cittavipatti for ācāravipatti of above. ³ Defined at AN.i.268 in the terms of Ajita Kesakambalin’s annihilationist views (cf. DN.i.55).

thus to him: ‘But if you, your reverence, suspend this monk’s invitation, do you suspend it on account of what was seen, do you suspend it on account of what was heard, do you suspend it on account of what was suspected?’

Kd.4.16.13

“If he should speak thus: ‘I am suspending it on account of what was seen, or, I am suspending it on account of what was heard, or, I am suspending it on account of what was suspected’, one should speak to him thus: ‘But, if you, your reverence, are suspending this monk’s invitation on account of what was seen, how have you seen, when have you seen, where have you seen? Have you seen him committing an offence involving defeat? Was he seen committing an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order? Was he seen committing a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech? And where were you? And where was this monk? And what were you doing? And what was this monk doing?’

Kd.4.16.14

“If he should speak thus: ‘But I, your reverences, am not suspending this monk’s invitation on account of what was seen, but I am suspending the invitation on account of what was heard’, one should speak to him thus: ‘But, if you, your reverence, suspend this monk’s invitation on account of what was heard, what have you heard, how have you heard, when have you heard, where have you heard? Did you hear that he had committed an offence involving defeat? Did you hear that he had committed an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order? Did you hear that he had committed a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed,

BD.4.227

⁴ antaggāhikā diṭṭhi. See MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society, 1884, p.70, “the (heretical) doctrine of maintaining or holding the three antas or goals, which, according to the Sangīti Suttanta (DN.iii.216) are sakkāyo anto, sakkāyasamuddo anto, sakkāyanirodho anto”. With DN.iii.216, cf. AN.iii.401, and see Pali-English Dictionary which questions Morris’ interpretation of anta as goal. Antaggāhikā diṭṭhi also occurs at DN.iii.45, AN.i.154, AN.ii.240, AN.iii.130, Vb.367. Various such “extreme views” are mentioned at SN.ii.17, SN.ii.19, SN.ii.63, Ps.i.151ff. DN-a.iii.839 explains: “this view is called ‘taking up an extreme’ through taking up the extreme (anta) of the annihilationists.” AN-a.ii.254 explains “a view established having taken up the extreme (anta) of what is founded on the ten” (“doctrines of the annihilationist”, GS.i.138, n.1). AN-a.iii.279 explains: “established having taken up (the position of) the eternalist or the annihilationist.” Ten “diverse views” are mentioned at SN.iii.258, while ten “extreme views” are differentiated from ten “wrong views” at Nd-a.i.162. These two sets of ten are mentioned at Mnd.113, with twenty sakkāyadiṭṭhi (Mnd.112).

an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech? Did you hear from a monk? Did you hear from a nun ... a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... a lay-follower ... a woman lay-follower ... kings ... king's ministers ... from leaders of (other) sects ... from disciples of (other) sects?' Kd.4.16.15

"If he should speak thus: 'But I, your reverences, am not suspending this monk's invitation on account of what was heard, but I am suspending the invitation on account of what was suspected one should speak to him thus: 'But, if you, your reverence, are suspending this monk's invitation on account of what was suspected, what did you suspect, how did you suspect, when did you suspect, where did you suspect? Did you suspect that he had committed an offence involving defeat? Did you suspect that he had committed an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order? Did you suspect that he had committed a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong speech? Did you suspect, having heard from a monk ... from disciples of (other) sects?' Vin.1.173

"If he should speak thus: 'But I, your reverences, am not suspending this monk's invitation on account of what was suspected, moreover I do not know on account of what I am suspending this monk's invitation', and if, monks, the reproving monk does not satisfy his intelligent fellows in the Brahma-faring with his explanation, it is sufficient to say that the reproved monk is blameless. But if the reproving monk satisfies his intelligent fellows in the Brahma-faring with his explanation, it is sufficient to say that the reproved monk is blameworthy. Kd.4.16.16

"If that reproving monk, monks, admits that he has defamed (another monk) with an unfounded charge of an offence involving defeat, then the Order, having charged him with an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order,¹ may invite. If, monks, that reproving monk admits that he has defamed (another monk) with an unfounded charge of an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the Order, having had him dealt with according to the rule,² may invite. If, monks, that reproving monk admits that he has defamed (another monk) with an unfounded charge involving a grave offence, an offence of expiation, an offence which ought to be confessed, Kd.4.16.17

¹ See Bu-Ss.8. ² See Bu-Pc.76. BD.4.228

an offence of wrong doing, an offence of wrong speech, the Order, having had him dealt with according to the rule,¹ may invite.

Kd.4.16.18

“If, monks, that reprovved monk admits that he has committed an offence involving defeat, the Order, having expelled him, may invite. If, monks, that reprovved monk admits that he has committed an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the Order, having charged him with an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, may invite. If, monks, that reprovved monk admits that he has committed a grave offence ... an offence of wrong speech, the Order, having had him dealt with according to the rule, may invite.

BASIS FOR A GRAVE OFFENCE, ETC.

Kd.4.16.19

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed a grave offence on an Invitation day. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. Monks, those monks who view it as a grave offence, having led that monk to one side, having had him dealt with according to the rule, having approached the Order, should speak to it thus: ‘Your reverences, the monk who has fallen into that offence has made amends for it according to rule. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may invite.’

Kd.4.16.20

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed a grave offence on an Invitation day. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence of expiation. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence which ought to be confessed. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence of wrong-doing. Some monks view it as a grave offence, other monks view it as an offence of wrong speech. Monks, those monks who view it as a grave offence ... (= Kd.4.16.19) ‘... the Order may invite’.

Vin.1.174

Kd.4.16.21

BD.4.229

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed an offence of expiation on an Invitation day ... an offence which ought to be confessed ... an offence of wrong-doing ... an offence of wrong speech. Some monks view it as an offence of wrong speech, other monks view it as an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. Monks, those monks who view it as an offence of wrong speech ... (= Kd.4.16.19) ‘... the Order may invite’.

¹ Cf. Bu-Ss.9 (Vin.3.170). Vin-a.1078 says that offences incurred in all these cases are those of wrong-doing.

Kd.4.16.22

“This is a case, monks, where a monk comes to have committed an offence of wrong speech on an Invitation day. Some monks view it as an offence of wrong speech, other monks view it as a grave offence; some monks ... as an offence of wrong speech, other monks ... of expiation; some monks ... offence of wrong speech, other monks ... which ought to be confessed; some monks view it as an offence of wrong speech, other monks view it as an offence of wrong-doing. Monks, those monks who view it as an offence of wrong speech ... (= Kd.4.16.19) ‘... the Order may invite’.

Kd.4.16.23

“This is a case, monks, where if on an Invitation day a monk should speak in the midst of the Order, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This matter is known but not the individual¹’. If it seems right to the Order, the Order, having set aside the matter, may invite²’, and he should be spoken to thus: ‘Your reverence, Invitation is laid down by the Lord for those who are pure. If the matter is known but not the individual, speak about that now at once.’

Kd.4.16.24

“This is a case, monks, where if on an Invitation day a monk should speak in the midst of the Order, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This individual is known but not the matter. If it seems right to the Order, the Order, having set aside the individual, may invite; and he should be spoken to thus: ‘Your reverence, Invitation is laid down by the Lord for those who are complete.³ If the individual is known but not the matter, speak about that now at once.’

Kd.4.16.25

“This is a case, monks, ... ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This matter is known and the individual. If it seems right to the Order, the Order, having set aside the matter and the individual, may invite’, and he should be spoken to thus: ‘Your reverence, Invitation is laid down by the Lord for the pure and for those who are complete. If the matter is known and also the individual, speak about that now at once.’

BD.4.230

Kd.4.16.26

¹ I.e., the person who committed the offence or “matter”, vatthu. ² Vin-a.1078 says “when we know the person, then we will reprove him, but let the Order invite now”. ³ A complete Order.

Vin.1.175 “If, monks, the matter is known before an Invitation day, the individual afterwards, it is right to say so. If, monks, the individual is known before an Invitation day, the matter afterwards, it is right to say so. If, monks, both the matter and the individual are known before an Invitation day, and (a monk) opens up (the cases) after the Invitation is finished, there is an offence of expiation for opening up.”¹

THE STORY OF MAKERS OF STRIFE

Kd.4.17.1 Now at that time several monks, friends and associates, entered on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. In their neighbourhood other monks, makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of dispute, makers of contention, makers of legal questions in an Order, entered on the rains, saying: “When these monks have kept the rains we will suspend the invitation on an Invitation day.” But those monks heard: “It is said that in our neighbourhood other monks ... entered on the rains, saying: ‘When these monks ... on an Invitation day. ‘Now, what line of conduct should be followed by us?’” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.4.17.2 He said: “This is a case, monks, where several monks, friends and associates, enter on the rains in a certain residence. In their neighbourhood ... (as in Kd.4.17.1) ‘... on an Invitation day’ I allow you, monks, to carry out two or three Observances with these monks on the fourteenth (day),² thinking: ‘How can we invite before those monks (invite)?’ If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, arrive at a residence, then, monks, those resident monks, having gathered together quickly, may invite; and having invited, they should say (to the others): ‘We, your reverences, have invited; let the venerable ones do what seems fitting.’”

BD.4.231

Kd.4.17.3

¹ See Bu-Pc.63, where, it is an offence to open up for further discussion a matter already settled. ² Vin-a.1079 says, “here, the fourth and fifth are the two ‘fourteen (days)’, but there is usually a third ‘fourteenth’; therefore the third and fourth, or the third, fourth and fifth are the two or three ‘fourteenths’ that should be carried out. Thus there come to be two ‘fourteenths’. Proceeding thus—the thirteenth or fourteenth for the makers of strife—these will invite on an Invitation day that is a fifteenth (day)”.

“If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, arrive unexpectedly at that residence, those resident monks should make ready a seat, they should bring forward water for washing the feet, a footstool, a footstand, having gone to meet them they should receive their bowls and robes, they should offer them drinking water; having looked after them, (then) having gone outside the boundary, they may invite; having invited, they should say (to the others): ‘We, your reverences, have invited; let the venerable ones do what seems fitting.’

Kd.4.17.4

“If they should thus manage this, it is good. But if they do not manage it, the resident monks should be informed by an experienced, competent resident monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones who are residents listen to me. If it seems right to the venerables ones, we may now carry out the Observance, we may recite the Pātimokkha, we may invite on the next new-moon day¹. If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, should speak thus to these monks: ‘All right, your reverences, but let us invite now at once’, they should be spoken to thus: ‘But you, your reverences, are not masters of our Invitation (-day), we will not invite yet’.

Vin.1.17.6

“If, monks, these monks who are makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, should stay on until that new-moon day, then, monks, the resident monks should be informed by an experienced, competent resident monk ... ‘... let us invite on the next full-moon day²’ ... (as in Kd.4.17.4) ‘... we will not invite yet’.

Kd.4.17.5

“If, monks, those monks who are makers of strife ... should stay on until that full-moon day, then monks, these monks, each and every one, must invite on the next full-moon day of the komudī cātumāsini,³ (even if) they are unwilling.

Kd.4.17.6

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, an ill one suspends the invitation of one who is not ill, he should be spoken to thus: ‘The venerable one is ill, and it is said by the Lord that one who is ill is not able to endure being questioned. Wait, your reverence, until you are well, when you are well you can reprove him if you desire to do so’. If being spoken to thus, he (nevertheless) reproves him, in disrespect there is an offence of

Kd.4.17.7

BD.4.232

¹ kāḷe. ² junḥe; cf. above, BD.4.185. ³ See above, BD.4.205, n.3.

expiation.¹

Kd.4.17.8

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, one who is not ill suspends an ill one’s invitation, he should be spoken to thus: ‘Your reverence, this monk is ill, and it is said by the Lord that one who is ill is not able to endure being questioned. Wait, your reverence, until this monk is well; when he is well you can reprove him if you desire to do so’. If being spoken to thus, he (nevertheless) reproves him, in disrespect there is an offence of expiation.

Kd.4.17.9

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, an ill one suspends an ill one’s invitation, he should be spoken to thus: ‘The venerable ones are ill ... being questioned. Wait, your reverence, until you are (both) well; when he is well you can reprove him if you desire to do so’. If, being spoken to thus, he (nevertheless) reproves him, in disrespect there is an offence of expiation.

Kd.4.17.10

“If, monks, while these monks are themselves inviting, one who is not ill suspends the invitation of (another) who is not ill, the Order having questioned both closely and cross-questioned them, having had them dealt with according to the rule, may invite.”

HARMONIOUS INVITATION

Kd.4.18.1

Vin.1.177

Now at that time several monks, friends and companions, entered on the rains in a certain residence in the Kosala country. While these were staying together on friendly terms and harmonious, a certain comfort was arrived at. Then it occurred to these monks: “While we are staying together ... arrived at. But if we should invite now, it may be that (some) monks, having invited, may set forth on tour, and so we will come to lose² this comfort. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.4.18.2

BD.4.233

He said: “This is a case, monks, where several monks friends and companions, enter on the rains in a certain residence. While these are staying together ... arrived at. If it then occurs to these monks: ‘While we are staying together so we will come to lose this comfort'. I allow you, monks, to make a protection of an Invitation day.¹

¹ Cf. also Bu-Pc.54. ² paribāhirā, external to, outside; as a noun, outsiders.

“And thus, monks, should it be made: Each and every one should gather together in the same place; when they have gathered together, the Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were staying together ... so will we come to lose this comfort. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may make a protection of an Invitation day, it may carry out the Observance, it may recite the Pātimokkha now; the Order may invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day. This is the motion.

Kd.4.18.3

“‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were staying together ... so will we come to lose this comfort. The Order is making a protection of the Invitation day; it will carry out the Observance, it will recite the Pātimokkha now; it will invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day. If the making a protection of the Invitation day (by the Order) is pleasing to the venerable ones (so that) it will carry out the Observance, will recite the Pātimokkha now, and will invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day, you should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. A protection of the Invitation day is made by the Order, it will carry out the Observance, it will recite the Pātimokkha now, and it will invite on the next komudī cātumāsini day. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

Kd.4.18.4

“If, monks, when these monks have made a protection of an Invitation day, any monk should speak thus: ‘I want, your reverences, to set forth on a tour of the country, I have business to do in the country’, he should be spoken to thus: ‘Very well, your reverence, you can go when you have invited.’ And if, monks, that monk, while he is inviting, suspends another’s invitation, he should be spoken to thus: ‘You, your reverence, are not master of my Invitation day, I will not invite yet’. And if, monks, any monk

Kd.4.18.5

BD.4.234

Vin.1.178

¹ pavāraṇāsamgaha. Vin-a.1080 says that “when the pavāraṇāsamgaha has been given, there comes to be as it were an avoidance during the rains; incoming monks can not take their (the resident ones’) lodgings, nor should the rains be cut short by them, for, having invited, they get the chance to set out on tour even during (the rains)”. The monks protect their harmony by postponing the Invitation day to the end of the rainy season.

suspends that monk's invitation while that monk is inviting, the Order, having questioned both closely and cross-questioned them, should have them dealt with according to the rule.

Kd.4.18.6

“If, monks, that monk, having concluded his business in the country, returns again to that residence before the komudī cātumāsini day and if, monks, while those monks are inviting, any monk suspends that monk's invitation, he should be spoken to thus: ‘You, your reverence, are not master of my Invitation day, I have invited (already)’. If, monks, while those monks are inviting, that monk suspends any monk's invitation, the Order, having questioned both closely and having cross-questioned them, and having had them dealt with according to the rule, may invite.”

The Fourth Section: that on Invitation

THIS IS ITS KEY

Having kept the rains they went to see the teacher in Kosala, communion that was uncomfortable (and) like beasts, suitable in regard to one another,
 Inviting on a seat,¹ and two, (formal) act, ill one,
 relations, kings, and thieves, and men of abandoned life, likewise monks who are enemies of monks,
 Five, four, three, two, one, fallen,
 he doubted, he remembered,
 the whole Order, being in doubt, greater, like, smaller (number),
 Resident monks, the fourteenth,
 the two communions by mark,
 should arrive, not in a seated (assembly), giving leave of absence, non-invitation,
 About savages, almost ended, great cloud, and an obstacle, invitation,
 they do not give (leave), ‘in case our’,
 and not (duly) suspended, for a monk,
 ‘Or on what?’, and which in regard to what is seen, heard, suspected, reproof and reproved, grave offence, matter, strife,
 And a protection of an Invitation day, not master, may invite.

BD.4.235

Vin.1.179

¹ pavārentāpaṇā. I follow the reading pavārent āsane of Sinhalese edition, and as suggested by OLDENBERG at Vin.1.379 (see Kd.4.19.2).

5. LEATHER (CAMMA)

THE STORY OF SOṆA KOḶIVISA

At one time the awakened one, the Lord, was staying at Rājagaha on Mount Vulture Peak. Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha ruled with supreme authority over eighty thousand villages. Now at that time, at Campā, a merchant's son called Soṇa Koḷivisa¹ was delicately nurtured and down came to have grown on the soles of his feet. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having had those eighty thousand village overseers² convened, sent a messenger to Soṇa Koḷivisa on some business, saying: "Let Soṇa come, I want Soṇa to come."

Kd.5.1.1
BD.4.236

Then Soṇa Koḷivisa's parents spoke thus to Soṇa Koḷivisa: "The king, dear Soṇa, wants to see your feet. Do not you, dear Soṇa, stretch out your feet towards the king; sit down cross-legged in front of the king, and as you are sitting down the king will see your feet." Then they sent Soṇa Koḷivisa away in a palanquin. Then Soṇa Koḷivisa approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having approached, having greeted. King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, he sat down cross-legged in front of the king. So King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha saw the down that was growing on the soles of Soṇa Koḷivisa's feet.

Kd.5.1.2

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having instructed those eighty thousand village overseers in matters concerning this world, dismissed them, saying: “You, good sirs, are now instructed by me in matters concerning this world; go along, pay homage to this Lord, and our Lord will instruct you in transcendental matters.” Then those eighty thousand village overseers approached Mount Vulture Peak.

Kd.5.1.3

¹ This Soṇa episode recurs, in a shorter form, at AN.iii.374-AN.iii.379. Soṇa's verses at Thag.632-644. Legend of how he came to be called Soṇa (golden) given in Thag A. (see Psalms of the Brethren p.275f.), and AN-a.i.233f. At AN.i.24 he is called foremost of those who put forth energy; his clan name is there spelt Koḷivīsa. ² Vin-a.1081 speaks of these as sons of (respectable) families living in these villages.

Kd.5.1.4

Now at that time the venerable Sāgata¹ was the Lord’s attendant. Then those eighty thousand village overseers approached the venerable Sāgata; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Sāgata: “Honoured sir, these eighty thousand village overseers are approaching here to see the Lord. It were good, honoured sir, if we might have a chance to see the Lord.”

BD.4.237

Vin.1.180

“Well, then, do you, venerable ones, remain² here for a moment until I have let the Lord know.”

Kd.5.1.5

Then the venerable Sāgata, having stepped down³ from the moonstone (step)⁴ in front of the eighty thousand watching village overseers, having stepped up in front of the Lord, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, these eighty thousand village overseers are approaching here to see the Lord. Lord, does the Lord think it is now the right time for this?”

“Well, then, do you, Sāgata, make a seat ready in the shade of the dwelling-place.”

Kd.5.1.6

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Sāgata having answered the Lord in assent, having taken a chair, having stepped down from in front of the Lord, having stepped up on the moonstone (step) in front of the eighty thousand watching village overseers, made ready a seat in the shade of the dwelling-place. Then the Lord, having issued from the dwelling-place, sat down on the seat made ready in the shade of the dwelling-place.

Kd.5.1.7

Then those eighty thousand village overseers approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Then those eighty thousand village overseers paid respect only to the venerable Sāgata, not likewise to the Lord. Then the Lord, knowing by reasoning of mind the minds of those eighty thousand village overseers, addressed the venerable Sāgata, saying: “Well then, do you, Sāgata, abundantly show a state of further-men,¹ a wonder of psychic power.”

¹ Cf. Vin.4.108, where Sāgata’s behaviour gave rise to the offence of drinking strong drink. See BD.2.382, n.6. ² hotha. ³ nimujjitvā ... ummujjitvā. These two verbs are often used of plunging into and emerging from water. Here they seem to mean getting off one step and on to another. ⁴ pāṭikā, such as is (in the old cities of Ceylon) an architectural feature placed at the bottom of a short flight of steps leading up to a vihāra or a “temple”. See Mahāvamsa 31, Mahāvamsa 61. Nowadays it is called “moonstone step”, although in shape it is half a circle. It is called “half-moon stone”, aḍḍhacandapāsāna, at Vin-a.1081.

BD.4.238

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Sagata, having answered the Lord in assent, having risen above the ground,² paced up and down in the air, in the atmosphere, and he stood, and he sat down, and he lay down, and he smoked³ and he blazed,⁴ and then he vanished.

Kd.5.1.8

Then the venerable Sagata, having shown in the air, in the atmosphere, various states of further-men and wonders of psychic power, having inclined his head towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple; Lord, the Lord is my teacher, I am a disciple”. Then those eighty thousand village overseers, saying: “Indeed it is marvellous, indeed, it is wonderful, that even a disciple can be of such great psychic power, of such great might. What must the teacher be?” paid respect only to the Lord, not likewise to the venerable Sagata.

Kd.5.1.9

Then the Lord, knowing by reasoning of mind the minds of those eighty thousand village overseers, talked a progressive talk,⁵ that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that their minds were ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to them that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as those eighty thousand village overseers were (sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose: that, “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop.”

Vin.1.181

Kd.5.1.10

These, having seen dhamma,⁶ attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, Lord, it is excellent, Lord. Just as, Lord, one should set upright what has been upset or should uncover what is covered or should point out the way to one who is astray or should bring a lamp into the darkness so that those with eyes might see forms, even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. We, Lord, are those going to the Lord for refuge, to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord receive us as lay-followers gone for refuge on this day for as long as life lasts.”

¹ uttarimanussadhamma. See BD.1, Introduction, p.xxivff. ² See BD.1.79, n.6. ³ dhūpāyati. At Vin.4.109 a verb used to describe his activities is padhūpāsi, he blew forth smoke. ⁴ He is also said to have blazed at Vin.4.109 ⁵ Cf. Vin.1.15–Vin.1.16. ⁶ Cf. Vin.1.12.

BD.4.239

Kd.5.1.11

Then it occurred to Soṇa Koḷivisa: “In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord it is not easy for those who live in a house to lead the Brahma-faring that is wholly complete, wholly pure, and polished like a conch-shell. What now if I, having cut off hair and beard, having donned yellow robes, should go forth from home into homelessness?” Then those eighty thousand village overseers, delighted with the Lord’s speech, having given thanks for it, having risen from the seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping their right sides towards him.

Kd.5.1.12

Then Soṇa Koḷivisa, soon after those eighty thousand village overseers had departed, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Soṇa Koḷivisa spoke thus to the Lord: “In so far as I, Lord, understand dhamma taught by the Lord it is not easy for those who live in a house to lead the Brahma-faring that is wholly complete, wholly pure and polished like a conch-shell. I want, Lord, having cut off hair and beard, having donned yellow robes, to go forth from home into homelessness. Lord, may the Lord let me go forth.” So Soṇa Koḷivisa received the going forth in the Lord’s presence, he received ordination. And soon after he was ordained the venerable Soṇa stayed in the Cool Grove.

Vin.1.182

Kd.5.1.13

Because of his great output of energy in pacing up and down his feet broke, the place for pacing up and down in became stained with blood as though there had been slaughter of cattle. Then as the venerable Soṇa was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Those who are the Lord’s disciples dwell putting forth energy; I am one of these, yet my mind is not freed from the cankers with no grasping, and moreover there are my family’s possessions. It might be possible to enjoy the possessions and to do good. Suppose that I, having returned to the low life, should enjoy the possessions and should do good?”

BD.4.240

Kd.5.1.14

Then the Lord, knowing by mind the venerable Soṇa’s reasoning of mind, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, or might bend back his outstretched arm, so did he, vanishing from Mount Vulture Peak, appear in the Cool Grove.¹ Then the Lord, touring the lodgings together with several monks, approached the venerable Soṇa’s place for pacing up and down in. The Lord saw that the venerable Soṇa’s place for pacing up and down in was stained with blood, and seeing (this), he addressed the monks, saying:

“Now why, monks, is this place for pacing up and down in stained with blood as though there has been slaughter of cattle?”

“Lord, because of the venerable Soṇa’s great energy in pacing up and down his feet broke, and this place for pacing up and down in is stained with his blood as though there had been slaughter of cattle.”

Kd.5.1.15

Then the Lord approached the venerable Soṇa’s dwelling-place, and having approached he sat down on an appointed seat. And the venerable Soṇa, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord spoke thus to the venerable Soṇa as he was sitting at a respectful distance:

“Soṇa, as you were meditating in private did not a reasoning arise in your mind like this: ‘Those who are the Lord’s disciples dwell putting forth energy ... (as in Kd.5.1.13) ... Suppose that I, having returned to the low life, should enjoy the possessions and should do good?’”

“Yes, Lord.”

“What do you think about this, Soṇa? Were you clever at the lute’s stringed music when formerly you were a householder?”

“Yes, Lord.”

“What do you think about this, Soṇa? When the strings of your lute were too taut, was your lute at that time tuneful and fit for playing?”

“No, indeed, Lord.”

What do you think about this, Soṇa? When the strings of your lute were too slack, was your lute at that time tuneful and fit for playing?”

Kd.5.1.16
BD.4.241

“No, indeed, Lord.”

¹ AN.iii.374 adds, after Cool Grove, “in front of the venerable Soṇa”. This would balance end of Kd.5.1.17 below.

“What do you think about this, Soṇa? When the strings of your lute were neither too taut nor too slack, but were keyed to an even pitch,¹ was your lute at that time tuneful and fit for playing?”

“Yes, Lord.”

Vin.1.183

“Even so, Soṇa, does too much output of energy conduce to restlessness, does too feeble energy conduce to slothfulness.

Kd.5.1.17

“Therefore do you, Soṇa, determine upon evenness² in energy and pierce the evenness of the faculties³ and reflect upon it.⁴”

“Yes, Lord,” the venerable Soṇa answered the Lord in assent. Then the Lord, having exhorted the venerable Soṇa with this exhortation,⁵ as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, so did he, vanishing from in front of the venerable Soṇa in the Cool Grove, appear on Mount Vulture Peak.

Kd.5.1.18

After that⁶ the venerable Soṇa determined upon evenness in energy and he pierced the evenness of the faculties and reflected upon it. Then the venerable Soṇa, dwelling alone, aloof, earnest, ardent, self-resolute, having soon realised here and now by his own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, abided in it, and he understood: Destroyed is birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, there is no more of being such and such. And so the venerable Soṇa became one of the perfected ones.

BD.4.242

Kd.5.1.19

When the venerable Soṇa had attained perfection, it occurred to him: “Suppose I were to declare profound knowledge⁷ in the Lord’s presence?” Then the venerable Soṇa approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Soṇa spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ same gaṇe patiṭṭhitā. ² On the readings samataṃ (as here) and samathaṃ, see GS.iii.267, n.3. The former is perhaps the more likely to be meant, and would carry out the idea of the “even pitch”. ³ indriyānaṃ ca samataṃ paṭivijjha. Commentary says: “pierce the evenness, the even nature of the faculty of faith and so on, the evenness of the faculties that are connected: so faith with wisdom and wisdom with faith, energy with contemplation and contemplation with energy.” ⁴ tattha ca nimittaṃ gaṇhāhi. Nimittaṃ gaṇhāti can mean to grasp a sign, a salient feature; or to reflect on a mental object. Vin-a.1081 says: mindfulness as to this evenness should arise; seize on that characteristic of (or, reflect on) tranquillity, insight, the ways, the fruits, and practise these. ⁵ Referred to at AN-a.i.237 as vīnovāda, the exhortation on the lute; cf. Psalms of the Brethren p.276. ⁶ aparena samayena. ⁷ aññā, gnosis.

Kd.5.1.20

“Lord, that monk who is one perfected, who has destroyed the cankers, lived the life, done what was to be done, shed the burden, won his own goal, destroyed utterly the fetter of becoming, and is wholly freed by profound knowledge, he comes to be intent upon¹ six matters: he comes to be intent upon renunciation, he comes to be intent upon aloofness, he comes to be intent upon non-harming, he comes to be intent upon the destruction of grasping, he comes to be intent upon the destruction of craving, he comes to be intent upon non-confusion.

Kd.5.1.21

“Perhaps, Lord, one of the venerable ones here might think: ‘Could it be that this venerable one is intent upon renunciation depending upon mere faith alone?’ But this, Lord, is not to be regarded thus. Lord, the monk who has destroyed the cankers, has lived the life, done what was to be done, not seeing aught in himself to be done or to be added to what has been done, being passionless comes to be intent on renunciation because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred comes to be intent on renunciation because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion comes to be intent on renunciation because of the destruction of confusion.

Kd.5.1.22

“Perhaps, Lord, one of the venerable ones here might think: ‘Could it be that this venerable one is intent on aloofness while hankering after gains, honour, fame?’ But this, Lord, is not to be regarded thus. Lord, the monk who has destroyed the cankers ... or to be added to what has been done, being passionless comes to be intent on aloofness because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred ... being without confusion comes to be intent on aloofness because of the destruction of confusion.

Vin.1.184

BD.4.243

Kd.5.1.23

“Perhaps, Lord, one of the venerable ones here might think: ‘Could it be that this venerable one is intent on non-harming, is backsliding from the essence to the contagion of habit and custom²?’ But this, Lord, is not to be regarded thus. Lord, the monk who has destroyed the cankers ... or to be added to what has been done, being passionless comes to be intent on non-harming because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred ... being without confusion comes to be intent on non-harming because of the destruction of confusion.

¹ adhimutta, striving for. ² silabbataparāmāsa. Vin-a.1082 explains: silāñ ca vatañ ca parāmasitvā gahitañ gahaṇamattañ, “the mere holding on to what is held to, having rubbed up against (come into contact with) moral habit (or, good works) and custom” (as though this were enough).

Kd.5.1.24

“Being passionless he comes to be intent on the destruction of grasping because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred he comes to be intent on the destruction of grasping because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion he comes to be intent on the destruction of grasping because of the destruction of confusion; being passionless he comes to be intent on the destruction of craving because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred he comes to be intent on the destruction of craving because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion he comes to be intent on the destruction of craving because of the destruction of confusion; being passionless he comes to be intent on non-confusion because of the destruction of passion, being without hatred he comes to be intent on non-confusion because of the destruction of hatred, being without confusion he comes to be intent on non-confusion because of the destruction of confusion.

Kd.5.1.25

“Thus, Lord, even if¹ shapes cognisable by the eye come very strongly into the field of vision of a monk whose mind is wholly freed, they do not obsess his mind for his mind comes to be undefiled,² firm, won to composure, and he notes its passing hence.³ If sounds cognisable by the ear ... if scents cognisable by the nose ... if tastes cognisable by the tongue ... if touches cognisable by the body ... if mental objects⁴ cognisable by the mind⁵ come very strongly into the field of thought of a monk whose mind is wholly freed, they do not obsess his mind for his mind comes to be undefiled, firm, won to composure, and he notes its passing hence.

BD.4.244

Kd.5.1.26

“It is as if, Lord, there were a rocky mountain slope without a cleft, without a hollow, of one mass, and as if wild wind and rain should come very strongly from the eastern quarter—it would neither tremble nor quake nor shake violently; and as if wild wind and rain should come very strongly from the western quarter ... from the northern quarter ... from the southern quarter—it would neither tremble nor quake nor shake violently. Even so, Lord, if shapes cognisable by the eye come very strongly into the field of vision of a monk whose mind is wholly freed ... if mental objects cognisable by the mind come very strongly into the field of thought of a monk whose mind is wholly freed, they do not obsess his mind, for his mind comes to be undefiled, firm, won to composure, and he notes its passing hence.”

¹ As also at AN.iv.404. ² amissikata. Vin-a.1082 explains this to mean unmixed with (or, undefiled by) the kilesas (obstructions). ³ Vin-a.1083 says this means: “he sees the arising and passing away of that mind”, tassa cittassa uppādam pi vayam pi passati. ⁴ dhammā.

⁵ mano.

If one is intent upon renunciation and mind’s aloofness¹,
 If one is intent upon non-harming and destruction of grasping,
 If one is intent on destruction of craving and mind’s non-confusion,

Kd.5.1.27

Vin.1.185

Having seen sensations’ rise, his mind is wholly freed.

For that monk whose mind is calmed and wholly freed
 There is nothing to add to what has been done, there is naught to be done.

As a rock of one mass by wind is never moved,²
 So shapes, tastes, sounds, scents, touches and all
 Pleasant and unpleasant mental objects³ stir not a man like this.

BD.4.245

His mind is firm, well freed,⁴ and he notes its passing hence.

REJECTION OF DOUBLE-LINED SANDALS

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Thus, monks, do young men of family declare profound knowledge. The goal is spoken of but the self is not obtruded. But then it seems to me that there are some foolish men

Kd.5.1.28

¹ These lines, to the end, form the conclusion of the verses ascribed to Soṇa Kōḷivisa at Thag.640–Thag.644. They also occur at AN.iii.378f. Metrical translations are at Psalms of the Brethren 277 and GS.iii.269f. Version above, and that at Vinaya Texts ii.12 are rather more literal in places; but none of the others recognises that dhammā means mental objects (last line but one), and already referred to by Soṇa (as the sixth “sense-datum”). ² This line occurs at Dh.81. ³ See note at Kd.1.11.2 (above) for further references. ⁴ Thag.644 reads visaññuttam instead of vippamuttam (as above and at AN.iii.379).

here who declare profound knowledge for fun; these afterwards come to disaster.”¹

Kd.5.1.29

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Soṇa, saying: “You, Soṇa, have been delicately nurtured. I allow for you, Soṇa, sandals with one lining.”

“But I, Lord, gave up eighty cartloads of gold² when I went forth from home into homelessness, and a herd of seven elephants.³ Because of this there will be speakers against me, saying: ‘Soṇa Koḷivisa gave up eighty cartloads of gold when he went forth from home into homelessness, and a herd of seven elephants; and now this very (person) is clinging on to⁴ sandals with one lining.’

Kd.5.1.30

“If the Lord will allow them to the Order of monks, I too will make use of them, but if the Lord will not allow them to the Order of monks, neither will I make use of them.” Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, I allow sandals with one lining. Monks, doubly lined⁵ sandals should not be worn, trebly lined⁶ sandals should not be worn, sandals with many linings⁷ should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.4.246

REJECTION OF ALL DARK GREEN, ETC.

Kd.5.2.1

“Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals that were entirely dark green⁸ ... that were entirely yellow ... that were entirely red ... that were entirely crimson ... that were entirely black ... that were dyed entirely

¹ This paragraph occurs at AN.iii.359. Cf. AN.i.218; GS.i.198, n.2; MN.i.396. Vin-a.1083 explains “the goal is spoken of” by saying “if he is called an arahant, that is the goal spoken of. But properly (eva) it should be taken as ‘the meaning of a sutta from the explanation of a suddanta’” (attha means both goal and meaning). It explains “the self is not obtruded” as “if (the profound knowledge) is declared thus, ‘I am an arahant’, the self is not obtruded” (or mentioned or brought forward, na upanīta). ² Misprint at Vin.1.185 has been corrected at Vinaya Texts ii.13, n.3 to asīsakaṭavāhe hiraññam. ³ Vin-a.1083 says that here this herd (retinue, array, anīka) is called six cow-elephants and one bull-elephant. ⁴ satto (with instrumental), or ‘is enamoured of’. ⁵ diguṇa ... tiguṇa. ⁶ diguṇa ... tiguṇa. ⁷ gaṇaṅgaṇupāhanā: Vin-a.1083 says “sandals with upwards of four linings”. ⁸ nīlika. See BD.2.407, n.2, BD.2.408, n.1, n.2.

orange¹ ... that were dyed entirely multi-coloured.² People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, sandals that are entirely dark green are not to be worn ... sandals that are dyed entirely multi-coloured are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals with dark green straps³ ... with yellow straps ... with red straps ... with crimson straps ... with black straps ... with dyed orange straps ... with dyed multi-coloured straps. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, sandals with dark green straps ... sandals with dyed multi-coloured straps are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals with heel-coverings⁴ ... sandals that were knee-boots⁵ ... sandals that were top-boots⁶ ... sandals that were filled with cotton⁷ ... sandals of (many hues., like) partridges’ wings⁸ ... sandals pointed with rams’ horns ... sandals pointed with goats’ horns ... sandals (ornamented) with scorpions’ tails ... sandals sewn round with peacocks’ tail feathers ... embroidered⁹ sandals. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ mahārangaratta. Vin-a.1083, “the colour of a centipede’s back”. ² mahānāmaratta. Vin-a.1083 says, “it is when the colours are mixed, the colours of pale foliage, but the Kurundiya calls it the colours of the paduma-lotus flowers”. These could be red or white. Mahānāma may be the name of a plant, however. ³ vaṭṭikā. Vin-a.1084 reads vaḍḍhikā, and explains by vaddha. ⁴ khallakabaddha. Cf. Pv-a.127. See note at Vinaya Texts ii.15 on doubtful meaning of the nature of all these forms of foot-covering, so curiously called upāhana, sandals or slippers. ⁵ puṭabaddha. Vin-a.1084 says “it is called a Greek (yonaka) sandal; it covers the whole foot as far as the knee”. ⁶ pāliḡuṇṭhima. These covered the upper pāda, foot or leg, but not the knee, Vin-a.1084. ⁷ tūlapuṇṇika. On the three kinds of cotton, tūla, see BD.3.92, and n.2 there. ⁸ tittirapattika. Vin-a.1084 explains by tittirapattasadisā vicittavaddhā, which is followed in above translation, although “dyed multi-coloured” has already been dealt with. ⁹ citra; often means variously coloured or gaily coloured. Cf. citrūpāhana at DN.i.7.

“Monks, sandals with heel-coverings should not be worn ... embroidered sandals should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.5.2.4

Now at that time the group of six monks wore sandals decorated with lion-skins¹ ... with tiger-skins ... with panther-skins ... with black antelope-skins ... with otter²-skins ... with cat-skins ... with squirrel-skins ... with owl-skins³. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, sandals decorated with lion-skins ... with owl-skins are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these) there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ALLOWANCE FOR CAST OFF SANDALS WITH MANY LININGS

Kd.5.3.1

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood with a certain monk as his attendant. Then that monk went limping along behind the Lord. A certain lay follower, having put on sandals with many linings, saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him, having taken off his sandals, he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he approached that monk; having approached, having greeted that monk, he spoke thus:

BD.4.248

“Why, honoured sir, does the master limp?”

“My feet are split, sir.”

Kd.5.3.2

“See, honoured sir, here are sandals.”

Vin.1.187

¹ Vin-a.1084 “they are made having joined the lion-skin to the edges, as to a seam of a robe”.

² udda. Meaning uncertain, see Vinaya Texts ii.16, n.5. Both COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, Vol. 4, No.2, p.133, and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names sub. article Dabbapuppha Jātaka, take udda as otter. Cf. uddapota at Cariyāpīṭaka 1.x.2. ³ Vin-a.1084 explains ulūka, owl, by pakkhibiḷāla, flying fox.

“No, sir, sandals with many linings are objected to¹ by the Lord.”

“Take these sandals, monk.”² Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, sandals with many linings that have been cast off. Monks, new sandals with many linings are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

REJECTION OF SANDALS INSIDE A MONASTERY

Now at that time the Lord was pacing up and down without sandals in the open air. Monks who were elders, thinking: “The teacher is pacing up and down without sandals”, also paced up and down without sandals. The group of six monks, while the teacher was pacing up and down without sandals and while monks who were elders were pacing up and down without sandals, paced up and down with sandals on. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: How can this group of six monks, while the teacher is pacing up and down without sandals, and while monks who are elders are pacing up and down without sandals, pace up and down with sandals on?”

Kd.5.4.1

Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, while the teacher ... with sandals on?”

Kd.5.4.2

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How monks, can these foolish men, while the teacher was pacing up and down without sandals, and while monks who are elders were pacing up and down without sandals, pace up and down with sandals on? For, monks, even these white-froked householders, on account of procuring a craft for their livelihood, will be respectful, deferential, courteous³ towards their teachers.

BD.4.249

Kd.5.4.3

¹ paṭikkhittā. Note that he does not say “not allowed”. ² As pointed out at Vinaya Texts ii.17, n.1, this must be understood as spoken by Gotama. A layman did not address a monk as “monk” but Gotama is constantly recorded to do so. ³ These three words also at Vin.1.45; AN.iii.15.

“Herein, monks, let your light shine forth so that you who have thus gone forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught may be¹ respectful, deferential, courteous towards teachers,² grades of teachers,³ preceptors, grades of preceptors.⁴ It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not pace up and down with sandals on while teachers, grades of teachers, preceptors, grades of preceptors are pacing up and down without sandals. Whoever should (so) pace up and down, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And, monks, you should not wear sandals within a monastery. Whoever should wear them (there), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.5.5.1

Now at that time a certain monk came to have an affliction of corns on his feet.⁵ Having taken hold of that monk, they made him go out to relieve himself. As the Lord was touring the lodgings he saw those monks who, having taken hold of that monk, were making him go out to relieve himself, and seeing (this), he approached those monks, having approached, he spoke thus to those monks:

Vin.1.188

Kd.5.5.2

“What, monks, is this monk’s disease?”

BD.4.250

“Lord, this venerable one has an affliction of corns on the feet, and having taken hold of him, we are making him go out to relieve himself.” Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ Cf. Kd.10.2.20. ² The four teachers meant here, according to Vin-a.1085, are those for the going forth, for ordination, for the resources, for the recitation (of the Pātimokkha). Cf. Vism.94. ³ ācariyamatta. Vin-a.1085 says that one of six years’ standing is for one (i.e. to teach one) of no (full) year’s standing; so one of seven years’ standing will be for one of one year’s standing, one of eight for one of two, one of nine for one of three, one of ten for one of four years’ standing. ⁴ upajjhāyamatta. Vin-a.1085: these are monks who are friends and companions of a preceptor, or of any who are ten years one’s senior (in the Order). ⁵ pādakhilābādha. Khīla may here mean an eruption. Vin-a.1085: the flesh comes to have stood out from (or left, nikkhanta) the foot, like a stake (reading khīla; cf. Ja.v.204 khīlāni, variant reading khilāni, meaning “sharp stakes”).

“I allow, monks, he whose feet are painful or he whose feet are split or he who has an affliction of corns on the feet, to wear sandals.”

Now at that time monks got up on to couches and chairs with unwashed feet, and robes and lodgings were soiled.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.5.6.1

“I allow you, monks, when you think: ‘I will get up now on to a couch or a chair’, to wear sandals.”

Now at that time, monks, going to an Observance-hut² and to a meeting-place at night, in the dark trod upon stumps of trees and on thorns, and their feet became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.5.6.2

“I allow you, monks, to use sandals within a monastery, a torch, a light, a staff.³”

REJECTION OF WOODEN SANDALS

Now at that time the group of six monks, getting up in the night towards dawn, having put on wooden shoes,⁴ paced up and down in the open air talking in high, loud, rasping⁵ tones a variety of worldly talk,⁶ that is to say talk of kings, talk of thieves, talk of great ministers, talk of armies, talk of dangers, talk of battles, talk of food, talk of drink, talk of clothes, talk of beds, talk of garlands, talk of scents, talk of relations, talk of vehicles, talk of villages, talk of little towns, talk of towns, talk of the country, talk of women, talk of heroes,⁷ talk of streets, talk of wells, talk of those departed before, talk of diversity, speculation about the world, speculation about the sea, talk on becoming and not becoming thus or thus; and they both killed insects, having trodden on them, and also made monks fall away from contemplation.⁸

Kd.5.6.3

¹ Cf. Vin.2.174. ² uposathagga; cf. Vin.3.66. There is also uposathāgāra, translated above, e.g. Kd.2.9.1 as “Observance-hall”. ³ kattaradaṇḍa; cf. Vin.2.76, Vin.2.217, Vin.3.160. The last part of the rule of Kd.5.4.3 appears to be nullified by this rule at Kd.5.6.2. ⁴ kaṭṭhapāduka. ⁵ khaṭakhaṭasaddā, sounds of clearing the throat. ⁶ tiracchānakathā; cf. BD.3.82 for notes. ⁷ sūrakathā here; see BD.3.82, n.5. ⁸ Cf. AN.iii.343, AN.iv.343.

Kd.5.6.4

BD.4.251 Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticized, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks getting up in the night towards dawn, having put on wooden shoes, pace up and down in the open air talking in high, loud rasping tones a variety of worldly talk ... and both kill insects, having trodden on them, and also make monks fall away from contemplation?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, getting up in the night towards dawn ... and made monks fall away from contemplation?”

Vin.1.189 “It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, wooden shoes are not to be worn. Whoever should wear (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.5.7.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Benares. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Benares. The Lord stayed there near Benares at Isipatana in the deer-park. Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking, “Wooden shoes are objected to by the Lord”, having had young palmyra palms¹ cut, wore shoes of palmyra palm leaves; those young palmyra palms which were cut, withered. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, having had young palmyra palms cut, wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves? These young palmyra palms which were cut, are withering. These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are harming life that is one-facultied²”.

Kd.5.7.2

Monks heard these people who looked down upon, criticised, spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, having had young palmyra palms cut, wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves, and that those young palmyra palms which were cut are withering?” “It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

BD.4.252

“How, monks, can these foolish men, having had young palmyra palms cut, wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves (so that) the young palmyra palms

¹ tālataruṇa, possibly meaning the shoots of the palm trees; but I think not, for it was probably the young trees themselves that withered once the monks had had some of their leaves cut off, and not just the cut leaves or sprouts or shoots. ² Cf. BD.2.223, BD.2.226, BD.3.320.

wither? For, monks, people think that there are living things in a tree.¹ It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not wear shoes of palmyra palm leaves. Whoever should wear (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: “Shoes of palmyra palm leaves are objected to by the Lord”, having had young bamboos cut, wore shoes of bamboo leaves; those young bamboos that were cut withered ... (as in Kd.5.7.1, Kd.5.7.2. Read bamboo instead of palmyra palm) ...”
Monks, you should not wear shoes of bamboo leaves. Whoever should wear (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.5.7.3

Then the Lord, having stayed at Benares for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Bhaddiya. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Bhaddiya. The Lord stayed there at Bhaddiya in the Jātiyā Grove.² Now at that time the monks of Bhaddiya were addicted to the practice of ornamenting their shoes in a variety of ways. They made tiṇa-grass shoes and had them made ... muñja-grass shoes and had them made ... shoes of reeds and had them made ... marshy date-palm³ shoes and had them made ... kamala-grass⁴ shoes and had them made, they made woollen shoes and had them made; they neglected the recitation, the interrogation, the higher morality, the higher thought, the higher wisdom.⁵

Kd.5.8.1

Vin.1.190

BD.4.253

Kd.5.8.2

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks of Bhaddiya be addicted to the practice of ornamenting shoes in a variety of ways, and make tiṇa-grass shoes and have them made ... and neglect the recitation, the interrogation, ¹ Cf. BD.2.223, BD.2.227. (omitted by mistake: insert before “It is not, foolish men ...”).

² Mentioned at Vin.1.241, Vin.3.37; AN.iii.36. ³ hīntāla. Monier Williams gives: “the marshy date tree, a species of palm, Phoenix or Elate Paludosa.” Vin-a.1085 says they are shoes made of the leaves of khajjūri (not in Pali-English Dictionary, but Childers gives “the wild date palm tree, Phoenix Sylvestris”), but not the leaves of the hīntāla itself. ⁴ kamala seems not to be “lotus” here. Vin-a.1085 says, there is a grass (tiṇa) called kamalavaṇṇa (kamala-coloured, with variant reading of -tiṇa for -vaṇṇa), therefore they call the made-up shoes khus-khus shoes. For khus-khus, usīra, see BD.2.228, n.1. ⁵ Cf. BD.2.94.

the higher morality, the higher thought, the higher wisdom?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monks of Bhaddiya are addicted to the practice of ... and neglect the recitation ... the higher wisdom?"

"It is true, Lord." The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them saying:

"How, monks, can these foolish men be addicted to the practice of ornamenting shoes ... and neglect the recitation ... the higher wisdom? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..."

Kd.5.8.3

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, tiṇa-grass shoes should not be worn, muñja-grass shoes ... shoes of reeds ... marshy date-palm shoes ... kamala-grass shoes ... woollen shoes should not be worn, shoes made with gold ... shoes made with silver ... shoes made with gems¹ ... shoes made with lapis lazuli² ... shoes made with crystal³ ... with bronze ... with glass⁴ ... with tin⁵ ... with lead⁶ ... shoes made with copper should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing. And any shoes, monks, that can be handed on⁷ should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, three (kinds of) shoes that are in fixed places and that cannot be handed on⁸: privy shoes, urinal shoes, rinsing shoes.⁹"

BD.4.254

Kd.5.9.1

Then the Lord, having stayed in Bhaddiya for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattthī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there in Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks caught hold of cows, which were crossing the river Aciravatī, by their horns, and they caught hold of them by their ears, and they caught hold of them by their dewlaps, and they caught hold of them by their tails, and they mounted on their backs, and they touched their privy parts with lustful thoughts, and having ducked young calves, they killed them.

¹ At DN.i.7 it is said that Gotama abstains from using maṇi, gems or precious stones. Sometimes meaning crystal. At Vin.2.112 bowls made of any of these materials are not allowed.

² veḷuriya, or beryl. See Vinaya Texts iii.82, n.1. Ja.iv.141 speaks of veḷuriya as vaṃsarāga, and Vb-a.64 as vaṃsavaṇṇamaṇi, a jewel the colour of bamboo. A word-play on veḷuriya and veḷu (bamboo) is probably the origin of such definitions. ³ phalika, or quartz. ⁴ kāca. See Vinaya Texts iii.82, n.2. ⁵ tipu. At Vin.2.112 tin and lead supports for bowls are allowed. At SN.v.92 tin and lead are among the five corruptions (alloys) of gold, jātarūpa. Vb-a.63 classifies gold (suvanṇa as above), tin, lead, and the next, copper (tambuloḥa) under jātiloha, (seven) natural metals. It calls tipu white tipu, and sīsa dark tipu. ⁶ sīsa. ⁷ kāci saṃkamanīyā pādukā. ⁸ Vin-a.1085 says: well fixed to the ground, immovable, not to be folded up (or put away, collected, gathered up, asaṃhāriya). ⁹ For further references, see Vinaya Texts ii.24, n.3.

Vin.1.191

People ... spread it about, saying: "How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, catch hold of cows, which are crossing the river Aciravatī, by their horns ... like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?" Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.5.9.2

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks caught hold of cows ... and having ducked young calves, killed them?"

"It is true, Lord."

Kd.5.9.3

Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, you should not catch hold of cows by their horns, nor should you catch hold of them by their ears, nor should you catch hold of them by their dewlaps, nor should you catch hold of them by their tails, nor should you mount on their backs. Whoever should (so) mount, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor should you touch their privy parts with lustful thoughts. Whoever should (so) touch them, there is a grave offence. Nor should you kill young calves. Whoever should kill them should be dealt with according to the rule.¹"

BD.4.255

REJECTION OF VEHICLES, ETC.

Now at that time² the group of six monks went in a vehicle, and there was a bull in the middle yoked with cows and there was a cow in the middle

Kd.5.9.4

¹ Bu-Pc.61. ² From here to end of Kd.5.10.3 cf. Vin.2.276, which refers to the group of six nuns.

yoked with bulls.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “As at the festival of the Ganges and Mahī²”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, you should not go in a vehicle. Whoever should (so) go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”³

Kd.5.10.1

Now at that time a certain monk, going through the Kosala country to Sāvattthī in order to see the Lord, became ill on the way. Then that monk, stepping aside from the road, sat down at the root of a certain tree. People, seeing that monk, spoke thus: “Where, honoured sir, will the master go?”

Kd.5.10.2

“I will go to Sāvattthī, sirs, in order to see the Lord.”

“Come, honoured sir, we will go along.”

“I am not able to, sirs, I am ill.”

“Come, honoured sir, get into a vehicle.”

“No, sirs, a vehicle is objected to by the Lord,” and being scrupulous, he did not get into a vehicle. Then that monk, having arrived at Sāvattthī, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.5.10.3

“I allow, monks, a vehicle to one who is ill.”

Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, should (the vehicle be) yoked with cows or yoked with bulls⁴? “They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.1.192

BD.4.256

“I allow you, monks, a handcart yoked with a bull.”⁵

Now at that time a certain monk became extremely uncomfortable owing to the jolting of a vehicle. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ As Vinaya Texts ii.25, n.2 remarks: “Buddhaghosa explains this passage in a different way.” He says, Vin-a.1085: itthiyuttanā ti dhenuyuttana (yoked with milch cows); purisantarenā ti purisasārathinā (with a male charioteer or driver); purisayuttanā ti goṇayuttana (yoked with oxen); itthantarenā ti itthisārathinā (with a female charioteer). ² Gangā-mahiyāya. Vinaya Texts ii.25, n.3 says that by Mahī is probably meant “the well-known affluent of the Ganges”. Vin-a.1085 explains by Gangā-Mahikīlikā (variant reading kīlikāya). ³ At Vin.4.339 \(BD.3.403\) any nun who was not ill fell into an offence of expiation if she went in a vehicle. “Vehicle” is defined e.g. at Vin.3.49, Vin.4.201. ⁴ itthiyuttam nu kho purisayuttam nu kho. ⁵ purisayuttam hatthavaṭṭakam. Vin-a.1085 says: here yoked with men (of a man or bulls or a bull, purisa), a woman (itthi) or a man (purisa) may be the driver. For a handcart rolls along whether itthiyo or purisā move it.

“I allow, monks, a palanquin,¹ a sedan-chair².”

REJECTION OF HIGH AND BROAD SEATS

Now at that time the group of six monks used high and broad things to recline upon,³ that is to say: a sofa,⁴ a divan,⁵ a long-haired coverlet,⁶ a many-coloured coverlet,⁷ a white coverlet,⁸ a wool coverlet besprent with flowers,⁹ a cotton quilt,¹⁰ a wool coverlet decorated with animals' forms,¹¹ a wool covering with hair on the upper side,¹² a wool covering with hair at one side,¹³ a silken sheet studded with jewels,¹⁴ a sheet made with silk threads and studded with jewels,¹⁵ a dancer's carpet¹⁶, an elephant rug, a horse rug, a chariot rug, rugs of black antelope skins, a splendid sheeting of the hide of the kadali-deer,¹ a sheet with an awning above², a couch with a red cushion at either end.³ People, engaged in touring the dwelling-places, having seen (all this), looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.5.10.4

BD.4.257

¹ sivikā. Vin-a.1085: piṭaka-sivikā, basket palanquin. ² pāṭaṅki. Vin-a.1085: a woven cloth (? paṭapoṭṭalika, variant reading paṭalika) made up having hung it out on bamboos; perhaps what in South India is called a dooly. ³ uccāsayanamahāsayana. List recurs at Vin.2.163, DN.i.7, AN.i.181; some of the items only at MN.i.76 = AN.i.137. Cf. also MN-a.ii.39. Vin-a.1086 says “uccāsayana is a couch exceeding the (right) measure” (the height of the legs of a couch is given as eight finger-breadths at Vin.4.168), and “mahāsayana is a sheet (paccattharaṇa) that is not (made) allowable”. ⁴ āsandī, see BD.3.326, n.1, Dialogues of the Buddha i.11, n.4. The use of this and of a divan is forbidden to nuns at Vin.4.299 (BD.3.326f.). ⁵ pallaṅka. See BD.3.271, n.3, Dialogues of the Buddha i.11, n.5. ⁶ gonaka (also spelled goṇaka). Vin-a.1086 says a long-haired wide kojava (fleecy counterpane or cover with long hair). On kojava, see below, BD.4.397, n.5, ⁷ cittaka, Vin-a.1086 says a coverlet (attharaka) made of wool of various colours (citta) (embroidered with) wild beasts (vāla, variant reading vāna; DN-a.86 reads vāna, with variant readings cāna, vāta). ⁸ paṭikā. Vin-a.1086: a white (seta) coverlet made of wool. ⁹ paṭalikā. I follow WOODWARD's translation at GS.i.164. Vin-a.1086 gives the meaning as “a covering made of wool, a mass of flowers”, and further calls it a “cloth of the Greeks (Yonaka) and Tamils”, with variant reading (as at AN-a.ii.293) yo āmalakapaṭṭo ti pi vuccati. Perhaps a better reading for āmalaka (emblic myrobalan) occurs at DN-a.i.87: āmīlāka (“a woollen cover into which a floral pattern is woven,” Pali-English Dictionary). ¹⁰ tūlikā. Vin-a.1086 says “just an ordinary tūlikā”, while DN-a.87 and AN-a.ii.293 say “a tūlikā stuffed with a certain one of the three kinds of cotton”. These three kinds are given at Vin.2.150, Vin.4.170 as cotton from trees, from creepers and from the poṭaki-grass; see BD.3.93, n.2. ¹¹ vikatikā. Vin-a.1086 says, “a covering made of wool, ornamented (vicitta) with forms of lions, tigers, etc.”. ¹² Vin.1.192 and Vin-a.1086 both read uddha- (upper) lomin as against udda- (both) of DN.i.7, AN.i.181. ¹³ ekantalomin. ¹⁴ kaṭṭhissa. Commentaries say “a sheet (paccattharaṇa) made of kaṭṭhissa (?) and silk and sewn round with (parisibbīta) jewels (ratana)”. ¹⁵ koseyya. I take above rendering from Vin-a.1086. ¹⁶ Vin-a.1086, “a sheet made of wool suitable for the dances of sixteen dancing girls”.

Kd.5.10.5

He said: “Monks, high and broad things to recline upon should not be used, that is to say: a sofa ... a couch with a red cushion at either end. Whoever should use (any of these) there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

REJECTION OF ALL LEATHER

Kd.5.10.6

Now at that time the group of six monks thinking, “High and broad things to recline upon are objected to by the Lord”, used large hides: a lion’s hide, a tiger’s hide, a panther’s hide, These were cut to the measurement of a couch and they were cut to the measurement of a chair, and they were laid inside the couches and they were laid outside the couches and they were laid inside the chairs and they were laid outside the chairs. People, touring the dwelling-places, having seen (this), looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, large hides should not be used: a lion’s hide, a tiger’s hide, a panther’s hide. Whoever should use (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.5.10.7

Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: “Large hides are objected to by the Lord”, used cow-hides. These were cut to the measurement of a couch ... (as in Kd.5.10.6 above) ... and they were laid outside the chairs.

¹ kadalimigapavarapaccattharaṇa. Vin-a.1086, “it is called the hide of the kadali-deer; a splendid (pavara) sheet is made from this. It means the best (uttama) kind of sheet. They say they make it having spread out the deerhide and sewn it above white hangings” (vattha, also meaning clothes). ² sauttaracchada. Vin-a.1086 explains as “together with a dyed (or red, ratta) awning attached above”, and mentions sheet (paccattharaṇa) in this connection.

³ ubhatolohitakūpadhāna. Vin-a.1087 explains as above.

A certain depraved monk came to be dependent upon a certain depraved lay-follower. Then that depraved monk, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of that depraved lay-follower; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. Then that depraved lay-follower approached that depraved monk; having approached, having greeted that depraved monk, he sat down at a respectful distance.

BD.4.258

Vin.1.193

Kd.5.10.8

Now at that time that depraved lay-follower had a young calf, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; it was marked¹ like a panther cub. Then that depraved monk gazed longingly at and thought about² that calf. Then that depraved lay-follower spoke thus to that depraved monk: “Why, honoured sir, does the master gaze longingly at and think about this calf?”

“Sir, this calf’s hide is of use to me.” Then that depraved lay-follower, having slaughtered that calf, having skinned it, bestowed the hide upon that depraved monk. Then that depraved monk, having hidden the hide in his outer cloak, went away.

Kd.5.10.9

Then that cow, longing for her calf³, followed close after that depraved monk. Monks spoke thus: “Why, your reverence, is this cow following close after you?”

“I don’t know, your reverences, why this cow is following close after me.”

Now at that time this depraved monk’s outer cloak became stained with blood. Monks spoke thus: “But this outer cloak of yours, your reverence—what has happened to it?” Then that depraved monk told this matter to the monks. They said:

“But did you, your reverence, incite (someone) to onslaught on creatures?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this monk incite (someone) to onslaught on creatures? Is not onslaught on creatures condemned in many a figure by the Lord, restraint from onslaught on creatures extolled?” Then these monk told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.5.10.10

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned that depraved monk, saying:

BD.4.259

¹ citra, variegated, beautiful. ² Cf. BD.2.30 and n.3 there. ³ vacchagiddhinī, cf. SN.iv.181.

“Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, incited (someone) to onslaught on creatures?”

“It is true, Lord.”

“How can you, foolish man, incite (someone) to onslaught on creatures? Foolish man, has not onslaught on creatures been condemned by me in many a figure, restraint from onslaught on creatures extolled? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, there should be no inciting (anyone) to onslaught on creatures. Whoever should (so) incite, should be dealt with according to the rule.¹ Nor, monks, should a cow-hide be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should any hide be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.1.194

ALLOWANCE FOR WHAT IS DISPLAYED BY HOUSEHOLDERS, ETC.

Kd.5.11.1

Now at that time people’s couches and chairs came to be covered up² with hides, covered over with hides. Monks being scrupulous, did not sit down on them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to sit down on what is displayed by householders³, but not to lie down on it.”

¹ Bu-Pj.1, where it is as bad to incite someone to cause the death of a human being as oneself to murder one. Cf. also Bu-Pc.11, Bu-Pc.61, Bu-Pc.62. ² onaddha ... vinaddha. Cf. Vin.2.150 where onaddhamañca and onaddhapīṭha are allowed. Cf. also Vin.2.270; and tūlonaddha at Vin.2.163. ³ gihivikata. “To display” is one of the meanings of vikartum given by Monier-Williams. Same “allowance” made at Vin.2.163.

Now at that time dwelling-places were lashed together¹ with thongs of hide. Monks, being scrupulous, did not sit down (in them). They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to sit down against² what is used only for lashing³ (things together).”

BD.4.260

Now at that time the group of six monks entered a village with their sandals on. People looked down upon, criticised spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter a village with your sandals on. Whoever should (so) enter it, there is an offence of wrongdoing.”

Kd.5.12.1

Now at that time a certain monk became ill; he was not able to enter the village without his sandals. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a monk if he is ill to enter a village with his sandals on.”

THE STORY OF SOṆA KUṬIKANṆA

Kd.5.13.1

Now at that time¹ the venerable Kaccāna the Great² was staying among the people of Avantī³ at Osprey's Haunt⁴ on Steep Rock mountain slope.⁵ Now at that time the lay-follower, Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa⁶, was a supporter of the venerable Kaccāna the Great. Then the lay-follower, Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa, approached the venerable Kaccāna the Great; having approached, having greeted the venerable Kaccāna the Great, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the lay-follower, Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa, spoke thus to the venerable Kaccāna the Great:

BD.4.261

“In so far as I, honoured sir, understand dhamma taught by the master, Kaccāna the Great, it is no easy matter for one living in a house to lead the Brahma-faring which is utterly complete, utterly pure and polished like a conch-shell. I want, honoured sir, having cut off hair and beard, having donned yellow robes, to go forth from home into homelessness. Honoured sir, may the master Kaccāna the Great let me go forth.”

¹ ogumphiyanti. Vin-a.1087 (reading ogupphiyanti, a variant reading not noticed in Pali-English Dictionary) says bhittidaṇḍakādīsu veṭhetvā bandhanti, having twisted them (the thongs) round, they tie them to wall-posts, etc. A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Early Indian Architecture, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p.266, says “this would seem to have been natural in the case of the wattle and daub walls of the simple paṇṇasālās; but we do also find early pillars decorated with designs of interlacing ropes or thongs which may be vestigial ornament ... Atharva Veda, 9.3 refers to the parts of a house that are knotted and tied”. ² Vin-a.1087, to sit leaning against. ³ bandhanamatta. Cf. Vin.1.254. Word occurs also at Vin.2.135, but there seems to have a different meaning. See also its use at Kd.7.1.5, “only by tacking”. ⁴ To end of Kd.5.13.10, cf. Ud.5.6, Dh-p-a.iv.101ff. ⁵ At AN.i.23 called foremost of the expounders in full of what was spoken in brief. Verses at Thag.494. One of the eleven or twelve leading theras; cf. Vinaya Texts, ii.317, Vinaya Texts, ii.359, BD.2.295, gs.iii.215. See Gotama the Man, p.113. ⁶ See S. DUTT, Early History of the Spread of Buddhism, Vol.1, p.187ff. He points out that Avantī “under the guidance of Mahākaccāyana helped by Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa ... became an important centre of Buddhism” (p.189). On Avantī see also B.C. LAW, Geography of Early Buddhism, p.3, n.1, 22f., p.61. ⁷ Kuraraghara, the name of a town (nagara) or village where Kaccāna went for alms (gocaragāma), Vin-a.1087. ⁸ He is recorded to stay here also at SN.iii.9, SN.iii.12, SN.iv.115, AN.v.46, Ud.57. Our text reads papāte pabbate; the others pavatte (with variant readings) pabbate. At Vin-a.1087, papāta is said to be the name of a mountain slope. Cf. however SN-a.ii.258, which recognises the two readings, papāte and pavatte, and says of papāte pabbate that “it was steep (or had a precipice) on one side: it was as though one flank had been hewn off”. ⁹ Chief of those of clear utterance, AN.i.24. Verses at Thag.365. Vin-a.1087, AN-a.i.237 say he wore ornaments worth a crore (koṭi) in his ears, and also give the reading koṭikaṇṇa, which can mean equally “Crore-eared” or “Pointed-eared, Prick-eared”; see Vinaya Texts ii.32, n.3, Psalm of the Brethren p.202, gs.i.18, n.4, Verses of Uplift, p.68.

Kd.5.13.2

He said: “Difficult, Soṇa, for as long as life lasts are the solitary sleeping-place,¹ the one meal (a day), the Brahma-faring. Please do you, Soṇa, being a householder as before,² practise the instruction of the awakened ones for a short time³: the solitary sleeping-place, the one meal (a day), the Brahma-faring.”

Then that abated which had been the lay follower Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa’s strong aspiration for the going forth.⁴ But a second time did the lay follower Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa ... But a third time did the lay follower Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa approach the venerable Kaccāna the Great ... (as in Kd.5.13.1) “... Honoured sir, may the master Kaccāna the Great let me go forth.” Then the venerable Kaccāna the Great let the lay-follower Soṇa Kuṭikaṇṇa go forth. Now at that time the southern region of Avanti⁵ came to be short of monks. Then did the venerable Kaccāna the Great at the end of three years, with difficulty, with trouble, having had convened from here and there an Order of monks consisting of ten,⁶ ordain the venerable Soṇa.

Vin.1.195

BD.4.262

¹ ekaseyyā, exact significance obscure. At BD.2.196 a monk is allowed to lie down in a sleeping place for two or three nights with one who is not ordained. It seems as if he might also do so with an ordained monk, for on this occasion there is no offence if he thinks a person is ordained and he is. At BD.2.201 there is an offence if a monk so lies down with a woman.

² tatth’eva. ³ kālayutta. This is to show how difficult these things are. Kālayutta could also signify connected with the right time (for doing things), and would then emphasise that now is not a right time for Soṇa to go forth, being not sufficiently ready spiritually to do so.

⁴ pabbajjābhisaṅkhāra. Cf. gamikābhisaṅkhāra at Vin.1.233. ⁵ Avantidakkhiṇāpatha, as at Vin.2.298, Ja.iii.463. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names under Dakkhiṇāpatha, RHYS DAVIDS, Buddhist India, p.30, and B.C. LAW, Geography of Early Buddhism, p.22. At the time of the Council of Vesālī, about eighty-eight monks of Avantidakkhiṇāpatha, some of them followers of ascetic practices, dhutanga, are said to have collected on the Ahogaṅgā mountain slope, Vin.2.299. ⁶ Vin.1.319 says that an Order may consist of four, five, ten, twenty or more than twenty monks, and that various maximum numbers are required for carrying out various specific formal acts, ten monks being able to perform them all, except rehabilitation; but five monks were not able to ordain in the Middle Districts.

THE FIVE BOONS FOR MAHĀKACCANA

Kd.5.13.3

Then as the venerable Soṇa was keeping the rains and meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “I have only heard that this Lord is such and such a one, but I have not seen him face to face. I would go and see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one, if a preceptor would allow me.” Then the venerable Soṇa, emerging from seclusion towards the evening, approached the venerable Kaccāna the Great; having approached, having greeted the venerable Kaccāna the Great, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable

Kd.5.13.4

Soṇa spoke thus to the venerable Kaccāna the Great:
 “Now, as I, honoured sir, was meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in my mind thus: ‘I have only heard that this Lord is such and such a one, but I have not seen him face to face. I would go to see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one, if a preceptor would allow me.’ I, honoured sir, would go to see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one, if the preceptor allows me.”

Kd.5.13.5

“Good, it is good, Soṇa. Do you, Soṇa, go to see this Lord, the perfected, the all-awakened one.

BD.4.263

“You, Soṇa, will see this Lord, who is pleasant and inspires one to be pleased,¹ who is calmed in his sense-organs, calmed in mind, who has attained the uttermost taming and peace, the hero² tamed, guarded, controlled in his sense-organs. Well then, do you, Soṇa, in my name salute the Lord’s feet with your head, saying: ‘Lord, my preceptor, the venerable Kaccāna the Great, salutes the Lord’s feet with his head’,³ and then speak thus: ‘Lord, the southern region of Avantī is short of monks. At the end of three years (he), with difficulty, with trouble, having had convened for me from here and there an Order of monks consisting of ten, I received ordination. Perhaps the Lord would allow ordination by a smaller group in the southern region of Avantī.

Kd.5.13.6

¹ pasādaniya, i.e. to be pleased with his teaching. ² nāga, explained at Vin-a.1087 as “empty of guilt (āgu), empty of the obstructions (kilesa)”. Cf. Snp.522: āgu na karoti ... nāgo, and Cnd.337. ³ Udāna version omits from here to end of Kd.5.13.7 and then proceeds much as Vinaya version to end of Kd.5.13.10.

“Lord, in the southern region of Avantī the surface-soil is dark, hard, trampled by the hooves of cattle.¹ Perhaps the Lord would allow sandals with many linings in the southern region of Avantī. Lord, in the southern region of Avantī people attach importance to bathing, to purification by water.² Perhaps the Lord would allow constant bathing³ in the southern region of Avantī. Lord, in the southern region of Avantī hides (are used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide. As, Lord, in the middle districts,⁴ eragu, moragu, majjhāru, *jantu*⁵ (are used), so, Lord, in the southern region of Avantī hides (are used as) coverings. Perhaps the Lord would allow hides (to be used as) coverings in the southern region of Avantī: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide.

Vin.1.196

Kd.5.13.7

“At present, Lord, people give robe-material to monks who have gone outside the boundaries, saying: “We are giving this robe-material for so and so.” When these have come back (the others) announce: “Your reverences, robe-material was given for you by the people so and so”. But these, being scrupulous, do not consent to it, thinking: “Let there not be an offence involving forfeiture for us.”⁶ Perhaps the Lord would explain the procedure⁷ in regard to robe-material.’”

“Yes, honoured sir”, and the venerable Soṇa having spoken in assent to the venerable Kaccāna the Great, rising from his seat, having greeted the venerable Kaccāna the Great, having kept his right side towards him, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Sāvattthī.

BD.4.264

Kd.5.13.8

In due course he approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Ānanda, make ready a lodging for this incoming monk”. Then the venerable Ānanda thought:

¹ kharā gokaṇṭakahatā; cf. AN.i.136. ² udakasuddhika. Cf. SN.i.182 (KS.i.231); also Vin.4.262, where however “purification by water” is not a rite, but a necessary ablution. ³ Cf. Bu-Pc.57, where it is an offence for a monk to bathe at intervals of less than a fortnight except “at a right time”, specified. ⁴ Not Majjhimesu here, but majjhimesu janapadesu. ⁵ Vin-a.1088 says these are four kinds of grasses, tiṇa, from which are made kaṭasāraka (?), part of a monk’s lodging or bedding, see Vin-a.1088 under senāsanam paññāpesi) and straw mats. Eragu is also called erakatiṇa and is coarse. Moragu is copper coloured at the head, fine, pliable and pleasant to touch, and straw mats are made from it. They make upper cloaks from majjāru (Vin-a.1088 reading majjāru). The colour of jantu is like pearls. ⁶ Cf. Bu-NP.1, where if a monk’s kaṭhina privileges have been removed he may use an extra robe for ten days. One of the grounds for removal of the privileges depends on a monk’s having gone outside the boundary, Vin.1.255. ⁷ pariyāya.

“The Lord desires to stay in the same dwelling-place together with this monk, the Lord desires to stay in the same dwelling-place together with the venerable Soṇa; it is he in regard to whom the Lord enjoined me, saying: ‘Ānanda, make ready a lodging for this incoming monk’,” and he made ready a lodging for the venerable Soṇa in that dwelling-place where the Lord was staying.

Kd.5.13.9

Then the Lord, having spent a great part of that night in the open air, entered the dwelling-place. The venerable Soṇa also, having spent a great part of that night in the open air, entered the dwelling-place. Then the Lord, getting up in the night towards dawn, requested the venerable Soṇa, saying:

“May (some) dhamma occur to you to speak, monk.”¹

“Very well, Lord”, and the venerable Soṇa, having replied in assent to the Lord, spoke from memory everything belonging to the Divisions in the Eights.² Then the Lord at the end of the venerable Soṇa’s recital³ expressed his approbation saying:

BD.4.265

¹ paṭibhātu taṃ bhikkhu dhammo bhāsituṃ, as at Ud-a.312, AN-a.i.241. WOODWARD, Verses of Uplift, p.71, n.1, would translate this as “let dhamma arise in your mind for recital”. He notes that paṭibhātu is “let it occur to you, placeat”, but owing to dhamma being in the nominative the sentence cannot mean “let it occur to you to speak dhamma”. Vin-a.1088 says, “may there be (or become, bhavatu) an inclination (abhimukha) to speak of knowledge; of what is called understanding”. Ud-a.312 says “Monk, may dhamma to speak arise in you, let it come to the forefront of knowledge, recite dhamma as you have heard it, as you have learnt it”. Cf. Vin.2.200, Ud.59, SN.i.155. N.B. The Lord addresses Soṇa as “monk” and not by his name. ² Aṭṭhakavaggikāni. Aṭṭhakavagga is the name of the fourth Vagga in the Sutta Nipāta. Cited at SN.iii.12, Ud.59. This latter (and also Dh-p-a.iv.101–Dhp-a.iv.102) have the “specific amplification that Soṇa recited (or ‘intoned’) ‘all the sixteen’ Aṭṭhakavaggika Suttas”, as CHALMERS remarks, Buddha’s Teachings, p.xvi, n.1; and Ud-a.312 the still further amplification that the sixteen Suttas begin with the Kāmasutta. AN-a.i.241 reads Aṭṭhakavaggiyāni, one manuscript adding suttāni. See Journal of the Pali Text Society 1895, p.93 on identification of Divyāvādāna’s (p.20) arthavadgiyāni (recited by Soṇa) with the “sixteen poems”, aṭṭhakavaggikāni, of the Aṭṭhakavagga. The work is also mentioned at Divyāvādāna 35. For references to Chinese versions see ANESAKI, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1906–1907, p.50; and ÉTIENNE LAMOTTE, Le Traité de la Grande Vertu de Sagesse, Vol.i, p.39, n.2.

“Good, it is good, monk, that by you, monk, the Divisions in the Eights are well learnt, well attended to, well reflected upon, and that you are endowed with lovely speech, distinct, without hoarseness, so as to make the meaning clear.¹ Of how many years’ standing are you, monk?”²“I, Lord, am of one year’s standing.”

Vin.1.197

Kd.5.13.10

“But what have you, monk, done thus long?”

“For long, Lord, I have seen peril in pleasures of the senses, but household lives are crowded,³ there is much to be done, much business.” Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

“Having seen peril in the world, having known dhamma without attachment, / the noble one delights not in evil, the pure one delights in instruction.”⁴

Kd.5.13.11

Then the venerable Soṇa, thinking: “The Lord is much pleased with me, this is the time for that for which the preceptor prepared⁵ me,” rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having inclined his head to the Lord’s feet, spoke thus:

“Lord, my preceptor, the venerable Kaccāna the Great, salutes the Lord’s feet with his head, and speaks thus: ‘The southern region of Avanti, Lord ... (as in Kd.5.13.5, Kd.5.13.6) ... perhaps the Lord would explain the procedure in regard to robe-material.’” Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, the southern region of Avanti is short of monks. I allow, monks, in all border districts ordination by a group¹ with, as fifth, an expert on discipline.

BD.4.266

³ sarabhañña. Pali-English Dictionary calls this “intoning, a particular mode of reciting”. Cf. Vin.2.108, where the Lord “allows” sarabhañña, but not the singing of dhamma in a singing voice. Oldenberg quotes Vin-a at Vin.2.316: sarabhaññan ti sarena bhaṇanam, which means “sarabhañña is called repeating (or reciting) by intonation (sara)”. There is perhaps in the text a play upon the word sara, which also means remembering. ¹ Stock as at DN.i.114, SN.i.189, SN.ii.280, AN.ii.51, AN.iii.114. ² I.e. how many years since his ordination. Cf. above, BD.4.76f. ³ sambādhā gharāvāsā. Ud.59, SN.ii.219, SN.v.350, DN.i.63, DN.i.250 read sambādhō gharāvāso. ⁴ sāsane ramati sucī; Ud.59 reading pāpe na ramati sucī, ⁵ paridassi. Vin-a.1088, “this should be the time for that which the preceptor made known to me, saying: ‘You should say this and that’; come, I will give the message now”.

Kd.5.13.12

“For this purpose,² these are the border districts³: the little town⁴ called Kajaṅgala⁵ is in the eastern direction, beyond it is Mahāsālā,⁶ further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The river called Sallavati⁷ is in the south-eastern direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The little town called Setakaṇṇika is in the southern direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The brahmin village called Thūna⁸ is in the western direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). The mountain slope called Usīraddhaja⁹ is in the northern direction, further than that are border districts, on this side are the middle (districts). I allow, monks, in such border districts as these, ordination by a group with, as fifth, an expert on discipline.

Kd.5.13.13

“In the southern region of Avantī, monks, the surface-soil is dark, hard, trampled by the hooves of cattle. I allow, monks, in all border districts, sandals with many linings. In the southern region of Avantī, monks, people attach importance to bathing, to purification by water. I allow, monks, in all border districts, constant bathing. In the southern region of Avantī, monks, hides (are used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide. As, monks, in the middle districts eragu, moragu, majjhāra, jantu (are used), so, monks, in the southern region of Avanti hides (are used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide.¹ I allow, monks, in all border districts, hides (to be used as) coverings: sheep-hide, goat-hide, deer-hide. And moreover, monks, people give robe-material for monks who have gone outside the boundaries, saying: ‘We are giving this robe-material for so and so’. I allow you, monks, to consent (to it). That reckoning is not necessary until it reaches the hand.²”

BD.4.267

Vin.1.198

¹ Usually two to four monks. ² tatra. ³ This passage is quoted at Ja.i.49, DN-a.173, Kh-a.132, MN-a.ii.200, AN-a.i.97 in order to define the boundaries of majjhima (pa)desa, the Middle Country, i.e. the middle of Jambudīpa (India). See B.C. LAW Geography Of Early Buddhism, p.2, for some of the place-names mentioned below. ⁴ nigama, see BD.2.63, n.2. ⁵ Occurring at AN.v.54, MN.iii.298, DN-a.429. Also Ja.iii.226, Ja.iv.310 The scholiast tells us (Ja.iv.311) that it was a town where materials were easily got, dabbasambhārā sulabhā, not where they “were hard to be got” (Jātaka translation iv.195, n.1). ⁶ Called Mahāsālā at Ja.i.49. ⁷ Spelled Salalavati at Ja.i.49, DN-a.173, Kh-a.132, Salaṭavati at MN-a.ii.200 (with variant readings) and in Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. See variant readings at DN-a.173; these do not include Sallavatti as at AN-a.i.97. ⁸ Mentioned at Ud.78, Ud-a.377 as belonging to the Mallas: also at Ja.vi.62 (with variant reading Dhunna). B.C. LAW, India as Described in Early Texts of Buddhism and Jainism, p.21, n.1 says “Consult CUNNINGHAM, Ancient Geography of India, Introduction xliii, n.2 as to the identification of Thūna with Sthānesvara”. ⁹ According to B.C. LAW, India as Described in Early Texts, p.21, n.2, “it may be said to be identical with Usiragiri, a mountain to the north of Kaṅkhal, I.A., 1905, 179”.

The Fifth Section: that on Hides

IN THIS SECTION THERE ARE SIXTY-THREE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

The King of Magadha, Soṇa, and eighty-thousand chieftains,
Sāgata showed much that was further on Vulture Peak, /
They were broken by his output (of energy) on going forth, the lute, with one lining, dark green, yellow, red, crimson, and indeed black, / Orange, multi-coloured, and he objected to edgings, heels, knee-boots, top-boots, cotton, partridges, rams, goats, /
Scorpions, peacocks, and embroidered, decorated with lions, tigers and panthers, antelopes, beavers and cats, squirrels, owls, /
Sandals for split (feet), corns, unwashed, tree-stumps, rasping, palm, bamboo, and indeed grass, munja; babbaja, marshy date-palm, /
Kamala, woollen, golden, silver, gems, lapis lazuli, crystal, bronze, and glass, and tin, lead, copper, /

¹ Vin-a.1088 here gives a list of six kinds of deer, and says their hides may be used, but not the hides of other kinds of deer, miga, including the kadalīmiga, nor (with a play on words) the hides of beasts of prey, vālamiga, which it defines as lions, tigers, panthers, bears and hyenas. Skins of cows, buffaloes, hares and cats may not be used either. ² na tāva taṃ gaṇanūpaḡaṃ yāva na hatthaṃ gaççhati. This refers to Bu-Pc.1, where an extra robe may be worn for at most ten days. The above phrase means that a monk need not begin to count these ten days until he has actually received the robe-material. Vin-a.1089 says, “So long as having conveyed but not given, or (so long as) having sent but not announced that ‘This robe-material has accrued for you, honoured sirs’; he does not begin the reckoning (gaṇanaṃ na upeti), it (i.e. the robe-material) is not allotted, one does not begin to take up what is not allotted. But when, having conveyed it it is given, or when having sent it it is announced, or when having heard that it has accrued, from then on there is occasion for attention to the ten days”. On upaga, see BD.2.7, n.4; and on anadhittihita, “not allotted” see ibid., n.1.

BD.4.268 Cows, a vehicle and ill, yoked with bulls, a palanquin, things to recline on, large hides, and the depraved one with a cowhide, /
 On what belongs to householders, with thongs of hide, they enter, on one being ill,¹ Kaccāna the Great, Soṇa (recites) from memory what belongs to the Divisions in the Eights, /
 A group of five for ordination, many linings, constant bathing,² he allowed hides (to be used as) coverings, reckoning not necessary until:
 Vin.1.199 The leader gave these five boons to the Elder Soṇa.

¹ gilāyano; Sinhalese edition gilānakā. ² Sinhalese edition upasampadārṇ pañcahi gaṇam-gaṇā dhuvasināyanā.

6. MEDICINE (BHESAJJA)

ON FIVE MEDICINES

At that time the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anātha-piṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time monks, afflicted by an affection occurring in the autumn, brought up the conje^y they had drunk and brought up the rice they had eaten; because of this they became lean, wretched, of a bad colour, yellowish, the veins standing out on their limbs. The Lord saw these monks who were lean ... standing out on their limbs; seeing them, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Now, how is it Ānanda, that at present monks are lean ... standing out on their limbs?”

Kd.6.1.1
BD.4.269

“At present, Lord, monks, afflicted by an affection occurring in the autumn, bring up the conje^y they have drunk and bring up the rice they have eaten; because of this they are lean ... standing out on their limbs.”

Kd.6.1.2

Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion, a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “At present monks, afflicted by an affection occurring in the autumn, bring up ... standing out on their limbs. What now if I should allow medicine for monks—whatever is medicine as well as what may be agreed upon as medicine—and although it may serve as nutriment for people¹ yet could not be reckoned as substantial food?” Then it occurred to the Lord: “These five medicines, that is to say ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses, are medicines² and are also agreed upon as medicines, and although they serve as nutriment for people yet they cannot be reckoned as substantial food. What now if I should allow monks to make use of these five medicines at the right time, if they have accepted them at a right time?”

¹ lokassa. ² Cf. Bu-NP.23, where a monk, having accepted these five medicines may keep them in store for at most seven days. They are defined at Vin.3.251.

Kd.6.1.3

Then the Lord, having emerged from seclusion towards the evening, having given reasoned talk on this occasion, addressed the monks, saying:

BD.4.270

“Now, monks, as I was meditating in seclusion ...’... yet could not be reckoned as substantial food’. Monks, concerning this, it occurred to me: ‘These five medicines, that is to say ... Suppose I were to allow monks to make use of these five medicines at the right time, if they have accepted them at a right time?’ I allow you, monks, to make use of these five medicines at the right time, if you have accepted them at a right time.”

Vin.1.200

Kd.6.1.4

Now at that time monks, having accepted these five medicines at a right time, made use of them at the right time. But even with these they did not digest ordinary coarse meals, much less greasy ones. And because of this they were afflicted by the affection occurring in the autumn, and in consequence there was also a loss of appetite, and as a result of both these (factors) they became increasingly lean, wretched, of a bad colour, yellowish, with the veins standing out on their limbs. The Lord saw these monks who were increasingly lean ... standing out on their limbs; seeing them, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

“Now, why is it, Ānanda, that at present monks are increasingly lean ... standing out on their limbs?”

Kd.6.1.5

“At present, Lord, monks, having accepted those five medicines at a right time, make use of them at the right time ... and as a result of both of these (factors) they are increasingly lean ... standing out on their limbs.”

Then the Lord, having given reasoned talk on this occasion, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, having accepted these five medicines,¹ to make use of them both at the right time and also at the wrong time.”²

Kd.6.2.1

Now at that time ill monks had need of tallows as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make use of tallows

¹ N.B. “at a right time” does not occur here. ² This must refer to the right time and the wrong time for eating solid foods and soft foods. When “solid food” is defined at Vin.4.83 by excluding “food that may be eaten during a watch of the night, during seven days, during life”, there is reason to suppose that these expressions refer to medicines, see BD.2.330, n.1, n.2, n.3.

as medicines by using them with oil: tallow from bears, tallow from fish, tallow from alligators, tallow from swine, tallow from donkeys,¹ (if each) is accepted at a right time, cooked at a right time, mixed at a right time.²

BD.4.271

Kd.6.2.2

“If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a wrong time, cooked at a wrong time, mixed at a wrong time, there is an offence of three wrong-doings. If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a right time, cooked at a wrong time, mixed at a wrong time, there is an offence of two wrong-doings. If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a right time, cooked at a right time, mixed at a wrong time, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, monks, one should make use of that which is accepted at a right time, cooked at a right time, mixed at a right time, there is no offence.”³

ON ROOT MEDICINE, ETC.

Now at that time ill monks had need of roots as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of roots as medicines: turmeric,⁴ ginger, orris root, white orris root, garlic, black hellebore, khus-khus, nut-grass, or whatever other roots there are that are medicines, if they do not serve, among solid foods, as a solid food, if they do not serve, among soft foods, as a soft food; and having accepted them, to preserve⁵ them for as long as life lasts.⁶ If there is no reason, there is an offence of wrong-doing for one who makes use of (any of these medicines).”

Kd.6.3.1

Vin.1.201

Kd.6.3.2

¹ Quoted at Vin-a.714. This passage explains that tallow from the flesh of all animals which it is allowable to eat is allowed, and also, with the exception of human tallow, the tallow of the ten animals which it is not allowable to eat. These ten are prohibited at Vin.1.218ff.

² Quoted at Vin-a.714, which, in reference to tallow, regards “the right time” as before a meal, “the wrong time” as after. ³ Quoted at Vin-a.714. ⁴ This list of roots also given at Vin.4.35. For notes, see BD.2.227f. Cf. also Vin-a.833. ⁵ pariharitum. ⁶ Passage quoted at Vin-a.833. See BD.2.330, n.3, on this expression, “as long as life lasts”. The medicines mentioned in Bu-NP.23 may, unlike the root medicines which may be stored for life, be stored for at most seven days.

BD.4.272 Now at that time ill monks had need, as medicines, of what was pounded off roots. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a (lower) grindstone, a (small) grindstone.¹”

Kd.6.4.1

Now at that time ill monks had need of astringent decoctions as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of astringent decoctions as medicines: astringent decoctions from the nimb-tree, astringent decoctions from the kuṭaja,² astringent decoctions from the pakkava,³ astringent decoctions from the nattamāla,⁴ or whatever other astringent decoctions there are that are medicines if they do not serve, among solid foods, as a solid food, if they do not serve, among soft foods, as a soft food; and having accepted them, to preserve them for as long as life lasts. If there is no reason, there is an offence of wrong-doing for any one who makes use of (any of these medicines)”.

Kd.6.5.1

Now at that time ill monks had need of leaves as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of leaves as medicines: nimb-leaves, kuṭaja-leaves, cucumber⁵-leaves, basil⁶-leaves, cotton-tree leaves, or whatever other leaves there are that are medicines if they do not serve ... (any of these medicines).⁷”

Kd.6.6.1

BD.4.273 Now at that time ill monks had need of fruits as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason to make use of fruits as medicines: vilaṅga,⁸ pepper,⁹ black pepper,¹⁰ yellow myrobalan,¹¹ beleric myrobalan,¹² emblic myrobalan, goṭha-fruit¹³ or whatever other fruits there are that are medicines if they do not serve ... (any of these medicines).”

¹ nisada nisadapota. Vin-a.1090 says piṃsanasilā ca piṃsanapotako ca, a stone for grinding and a small (thing) for grinding. This latter must be a pounder to use in the hand on the larger grindstone. ² Wrightia antidysenterica or Nericum antidysentericum (Pali-English Dictionary), Holarrhena antidysenterica (Watt's Commercial Products of India). ³ A creeper, Vin-a.1090 reading paggava as at Ja.ii.105, where it is called vallī, a creeping plant). ⁴ At Vin-a.1090 called karañja which, according to Pali-English Dictionary, is the tree Pongamia glabra. ⁵ paṭola, a kind of cucumber, Trichosanthes Dioeca. ⁶ sulasī; cf. Sanskrit surasī, given by Böhtlingk-Roth as “basilienkraut”. The word translated as “basil” at BD.2.228 is ajjuka. ⁷ Quoted at Vin-a.835. ⁸ Erycibe paniculata. ⁹ pippala, see Vinaya Texts ii.46, n.6. ¹⁰ marica. ¹¹ haritaka, cf. BD.3.245, n.4 (Vin.4.259).

Now at that time ill monks had need of resins as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of resins as medicines: hiṅgu,¹ hiṅgu-resin, hiṅgu-gum,² gum,³ gum-patti,⁴ gum-paṇṇī, or whatever other resins there are that are medicines if they do not serve ... (any of these medicines)”⁵.

Kd.6.7.1

Vin.1.202

Now at that time ill monks had need of salts as medicines. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to make use of salts as medicines: sea(-salt), black salt,⁶ rock-salt,⁷ culinary-salt, red-salt⁸ or whatever other salts there are that are medicines if they do not serve, among solid foods, as a solid food, if they do not serve, among soft foods, as a soft food; and having accepted them, to preserve them for as long as life lasts. If there is no reason, there is an offence of wrong-doing for one who makes use of (any of these medicines).”

Kd.6.8.1

Now at that time⁹ the venerable Belaṭṭhasāsa,¹⁰ the venerable Ānanda’s preceptor, had an affliction of thick scabs.¹¹ Because of the discharge his robes stuck to his body. Monks, having repeatedly moistened these with water, loosened them. As the Lord was touring the lodgings he saw these

Kd.6.9.1

BD.4.274

¹² vibhītaka, also at Ja.vi.529. WATT, Commercial Products of India, under Terminalia belerica, says “it has various medicinal qualities ascribed to it; and the oil expressed from the seed is used by the Natives”. Under Phyllanthus emblica Watt says “the fresh ripe fruits are largely employed as astringent and laxative medicines”. ¹³ goṭhaphala. Pali-English Dictionary says “medicinal seed”. Monier Williams, under gotravṛiksha compares to dhanvana. This he gives as the “plant Alhagi Maurorum which grows in a dry soil”. ¹ Assafoetida. ² hiṅgu-sipāṭikā. Pali-English Dictionary says that this is a sipāṭikā (pod pericarp) yielding gum. Monier Williams says it is the same as vaṁsa-patṭrī. This he calls a “particular kind of grass = nāḍī-hiṅgu”. Vin-a.1090 says that hiṅgu, hiṅgu-jatu, hiṅgu-sipāṭikā are just kinds of hiṅgu. ³ taka, a medicinal gum. ⁴ Vin-a.1090 says that taka and these two varieties are all of them kinds of lac or resin. ⁵ Quoted at Vin-a.835. ⁶ Vin-a.1090 calls this common salt. ⁷ This is white in colour, Vin-a.1090. ⁸ Vin-a.1090: cooked together with all kinds of ingredients, it is red in colour. ⁹ Opening part of this story = Vin.1.295. ¹⁰ See BD.2.338, n.1. ¹¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.90.2.

monks loosening the robes, having repeatedly moistened them with water; and seeing (this) he approached these monks; having approached, he spoke thus to these monks: “What, monks, is this monk’s affliction?”

“Lord, this venerable one has an affliction of thick scabs; because of the discharge, his robes stick to his body; having repeatedly moistened them with water, we are loosening them.”

Kd.6.9.2

Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, for one who has itch¹ or a small boil or a running sore or an affliction of thick scabs or for one whose body smells nasty, chunams as medicines; for one who is not ill dung, clay, boiled colouring matter.² I allow you, monks, a pestle and mortar.³”

Kd.6.10.1

Now at that time ill monks had need of sifted chunams as medicines ... “I allow you, monks, a chunam-sifter.⁴” They had need of very fine ones. “I allow you, monks, a cloth sifter.”

Kd.6.10.2

Now at that time a certain monk had an non-human affliction. Teachers and preceptors, although nursing him, were unable to get him well. He, having gone to the swine’s slaughter-place, ate raw flesh and drank raw blood, and his non-human affliction subsided.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, when one has a non-human affliction, raw flesh and raw blood.”

Vin.1.203

Kd.6.11.1

BD.4.275

Now at that time a certain monk came to have an illness affecting his eyes. Having taken hold of that monk, they made him go out to ease himself.

¹ At Vin.4.172 (BD.3.97) “itch-cloth” is defined as: for covering anyone who has any of these afflictions. ² rajana-nipakka. Vin-a.1090 says rajana-kasaṭa, acrid colouring matter or dye-stuff. But kasaṭa can also mean dregs or leavings, and this sense is more likely here. Vin-a.1090 explains: “having ground ordinary chunam, having moistened it with water, one may wash (or bathe with it).” These three things were for applying to the body and not for taking as a medicine. ³ dukkhala musala, different from the grinding stones of Kd.6.3.2. ⁴ cuṇṇacālanī. ⁵ There seems at Vin-a.1090 the idea that a non-human being “possessed” the monk. For it explains that it was not the monk who ate and drank the raw things, but the non-human being; on its departing, his (the monk’s) non-human affliction is said to have subsided.

As the Lord was touring the lodgings, he saw those monks who, having taken hold of that monk, were making him go out to ease himself; seeing (this) he approached those monks; having approached, he spoke thus to those monks:

“What, monks, is this monk’s affliction?”

“Lord, this venerable one has an illness affecting his eyes; we, having taken hold of him, are making him go out to ease himself.” Then the Lord in this connection having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, these ointments¹: black collyrium,² rasa-ointment,³ sota-ointment,⁴ yellow-ochre,⁵ lamp-black.”⁶ They had need of ointment-powders.⁷ ... “I allow, monks, the use of sandal-wood, rosebay, black gum,⁸ tālisa,⁹ nut-grass.”¹⁰

Kd.6.11.2

Now at that time monks used to place pulverised ointments in small bowls and saucers. They were littered with powdered grass and dust ... “I allow, monks, an ointment-box.”¹¹ Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of ointment-boxes, made of gold, made of silver. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses”. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.6.12.1

“Monks, various kinds of ointment-boxes should not be used. Whoever should use (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone,¹² made of reed, made of bamboo, made of a piece of stick, made of lac, made of crystal,¹ made of copper, made of the centre of a conch-shell.”

BD.4.276

¹ añjana is here a generic term, as is clear from the first three to be specified: kāḷañjana rasañjana sotañjana. Vin-a.1090 also says of añjana, “comprising all”. ² Vin-a.1090 says “one kind of añjana, cooked with all ingredients”. ³ Vin-a.1090 says “made from a variety of ingredients”. Böhtlingk-Roth say it is made with vitriol. ⁴ Vin-a.1090–91 says “an ointment originating in rivers and streams”. Böhtlingk-Roth say it is made with antimony. ⁵ geruka, or red chalk. ⁶ kapalla taken from the flame of a lamp, Vin-a.1091. Pali-English Dictionary says kapalla is here in error for kajjala. ⁷ añjanupapisana, as at Vin.2.112. ⁸ See GS.v.17, n.1. ⁹ Flacourtia cataphracta. ¹⁰ As in Kd.6.3.1, and Vin.4.35. See BD.2.228, n.2. ¹¹ añjanī. See BD.3.89, n.2. Allowed also at Vin.2.135. ¹² At Vin.4.167 these three materials are allowed for making needle-cases. “Bone” is there defined as whatever is bone. But Vin-a.1091 says “made of bone” means of every kind of bone with the exception of human bone. This list recurs at Vin.2.117.

Kd.6.12.2

Now at that time ointment-boxes were not covered. They were littered with powdered grass and dust ... “I allow, monks, a lid.”² A lid fell off ... “I allow you, monks, having tied it with thread, to tie it to the ointment-box.” An ointment-box split open.³ ... “I allow you, monks, to sew it round with thread.”

Kd.6.12.3

Now at that time monks put on ointment with (their) fingers. (Their) eyes became painful ... “I allow, monks, an ointment-stick.”⁴ Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of ointment-sticks, made of gold, made of silver. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” ... “Monks, various kinds of ointment-sticks should not be used.”⁵ Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the centre of a conch-shell.”

Vin.1.204

Kd.6.12.4

Now at that time an ointment-stick, falling to the ground, became rough ... “I allow, monks, a case for the sticks.”⁶ Now at that time monks carried about ointment-boxes and ointment-sticks in their hands ... “I allow, monks, a bag for the ointment-box.” There was no strap at the edge⁷ ... “I allow, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying⁸.”

BD.4.277

¹ Pali-English Dictionary suggests that phalamaya “stands in all probability for phalikamaya”.

² Allowed also at Vin.2.122 for a well. ³ Reading phalati with Sinhalese edition instead of Oldenberg’s nipalati. ⁴ Allowed again, with ointment-box, at Vin.2.135. At Vin.4.168 there is “no offence” if an ointment-stick is used as a needle-case. ⁵ Cf. above Kd.6.12.1.

⁶ Vin-a.1091 says, “because they put down the sticks, I allow a piece of hollow wood or a bag for them”. ⁷ aṃsa-bandhaka (variant readings vadhaka, vaddhaka). Vin-a.1091 says this is for (or, on) the ointment-bag. The same thing allowed at Vin.2.114 for a bowl. At Kd.6.13.2 there is a similar “allowance” for a bag for tubes for steam. Thus the monks had different bags for different portable articles. It would seem as if each bag had a strap attached to its edge, rather than that monk, carried the bags by means of straps going over the shoulder (also called aṃsa). ⁸ bandhana-suttaka, probably for tying the box to the strap. Cf. Vin.2.114.

THE STORY OF PILINDAVACCHA

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha¹ had a head-ache² ... “I allow, monks, a small quantity of oil for the head.” He did not get better ... “I allow, monks, (medical) treatment through the nose”.³ His nose ran ... “I allow, monks, a nose-spoon.”⁴ Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of nose-spoons, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” ... Monks, various kinds of nose-spoons should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the centre of a conch-shell.”

Kd.6.13.1

They poured it up the nose in uneven quantities.⁵ ... “I allow, monks, a double nose-spoon.”⁶ He did not get better ... “I allow you, monks, to inhale steam.”⁷ So they inhaled it after they had lit a wick.⁸ It burnt their throats ... “I allow you, monks, a tube for the steam.”⁹ Now at that time the group of six monks used all kinds of tubes for the steam ... (as in Kd.6.13.1) ... “I allow (them), monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the centre of a conch-shell.” Now at that time tubes for the steam were not covered, and small creatures got in. “I allow, monks, a lid.” Now at that time monks carried about tubes for the steam in their hands. “I allow, monks, a bag for the tubes for the steam.” They got rubbed together ... “I allow, monks, a double bag.” There was no strap at the edge.¹⁰ ... “I allow, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”

Kd.6.13.2

BD.4.278

¹ See BD.1.112, n.2. ² A “certain monk” had this, sisābhitāpa, at Vin.3.83 (BD.1.143).

³ natthukamma. Cf. natthuṃ adaṃsu at Vin.3.83 (see BD.1.143, n.2). Mentioned also at MN.i.511.

⁴ natthu-karaṇī. I translate as at Vinaya Texts ii.54. Pali-English Dictionary gives “pocket-handkerchief”, but next sentence makes this unlikely. ⁵ natthuṃ visamaṃ āsiṅcanti. In pouring the medicament up the nose, monks probably poured more up one nostril than the other. The spoon, therefore, was not to catch the discharge from the nose but was to hold it up “so that the medicinal oil does not run out” (Vinaya Texts ii.54, n.1); it was an instrument with which to pour up the medicinal oil itself. ⁶ I.e. one giving an equal stream in respect of its two measures, Vin-a.1091. ⁷ dhūmaṃ pātuṃ, literally to drink steam, or smoke. Below, Kd.6.14.5, cf. dhūmaṃ kātuṃ. Cf. “drinking” (not smoking) a huqqa, by reason of the water in it. ⁸ Cf. Vinaya Texts ii.54, n.3, which states that they smeared a wick with the drugs and then burnt them. ⁹ dhūmanetta. Also at Ja.iv.363; translated Jātaka Translation iv.229 as “smoking-pipe”. ¹⁰ As in Kd.6.12.4.

Kd.6.14.1

Vin.1.205

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha had an affliction of wind. Physicians spoke thus: “Oil must be boiled.” ... “I allow, monks, a decoction of oil.” Now strong drink had to be mixed in that decoction of oil. “I allow you, monks, to mix strong drink in a decoction of oil.” Now at that time the group of six monks boiled oils mixed with too much strong drink. Having drunk these, they were intoxicated.¹ “Monks, oil mixed with too much strong drink should not be drunk. Whoever should (so) drink should be dealt with according to the rule.² I allow you, monks, if neither the colour nor the smell nor the taste of strong drink³ appears in any decoction of oil, to drink oil mixed with strong drink if it is like this.”

Kd.6.14.2

Now at that time monks came to have much boiled oil mixed with too much strong drink. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now what course of conduct should be followed when there is oil mixed with too much strong drink?” ... “I allow you, monks, to employ it as an unguent.”⁴ Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha came to have a quantity of boiled oil, but there was no receptacle for oil. “I allow you, monks, three kinds of vessels: a copper vessel, a wooden vessel, a vessel (made of) fruit.”

Kd.6.14.3

BD.4.279

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha had rheumatism in the limbs. “I allow, monks, the sweating-treatment.”⁵ He got no better ... “I allow, monks, sweating by the use of all kinds of herbs.”⁶ He got no better. “I allow, monks, the great sweating.”⁷ He got no better. “I allow, monks

¹ majjanti, or “were elated”. ² Bu-Pc.51. ³ Cf. Bu-Pc.51.2.3. ⁴ abbhañjana, an oiling. Cf. the same word in the “key” at Vin.3.79 used in referring to abbhañjimsu, they oiled or rubbed (an ill monk), on BD.4.83. ⁵ sedakamma. ⁶ sambhāraseda. Vin-a.1091, “sweating by the use of hemp and a variety of leaves”. ⁷ mahāseda. Vin-a.1091 explains that they heap charcoal into a pit the size of a man, cover it with dust, sand and leaves, and the patient lies down there with his limbs smeared with oil and sweats by rolling round.

(the use of) hemp-water.”¹ He got no better. “I allow monks, (the use of) a water-vat.”²

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha had rheumatism in the joints. “I allow you, monks, to let blood.”³ He got no better. “I allow you, monks, having let blood, to cup with a horn.”⁴ Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha’s feet came to be split. “I allow you, monks, an unguent for the feet.” He got no better. “I allow you, monks, to prepare a foot-salve.”⁵ Now at that time a certain monk came to have boils. “I allow, monks, treatment with a lancet.”⁶ There was need of astringent water. “I allow, monks, astringent water.” There was need of sesamum paste. “I allow, monks, sesamum paste.”

Kd.6.14.4

There was need of a compress.⁷ “I allow, monks, a compress.” There was need of a piece of cloth for tying over the sore. “I allow, monks, a piece of cloth for tying over the sore.” The sore itched. “I allow you, monks, to sprinkle it with mustard-powder.”⁸ The sore festered. “I allow you, monks, to make a fumigation.”⁹ The flesh of the sore¹⁰ stood up. “I allow you, monks, to cut it off with a piece of salt-crystal.” The sore did not heal. “I allow, monks, oil for the sore.” The oil ran. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a linen bandage¹¹ (and) every treatment for curing a sore.”

Kd.6.14.5

Vin.1.206

Now at that time a certain monk was bitten by a snake.¹² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give the four great irregular things¹: (a decoction of) dung, urine, ashes, clay.”² Then it occurred to the monks: “(May they be used) even if they are not (formally) received, or should they be (formally) received?”³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make use of them if someone to make them allowable⁴ is there (formally) to offer⁵ them to you; having taken them yourselves, if there is no one to make them allowable.”

Kd.6.14.6
BD.4.280

¹ bhaṅgodaka, i.e. hemp leaves boiled in water. The patient should sweat by repeatedly sprinkling himself with this preparation, Vin-a.1091. See Vinaya Texts ii.57, n.1. ² udakakoṭṭhaka. “I allow the application of the sweating treatment (sedakammakaraṇa), having got into a vessel or vat filled with hot water.” Vin-a.1091. Koṭṭhaka is usually a store-room. ³ By using a knife (or lancet), Vin-a.1091. ⁴ See Vinaya Texts ii.57, n.3, which, quoting Wise, says, “bad blood may be removed by means of cupping, which is performed by a horn”. ⁵ pajja, cf. DN.ii.240. ⁶ satthakamma. ⁷ kabaḷikā. ⁸ sāsapakuṭṭa. Cf. Vin.2.151 sāsapakuḍḍa, as at Vin-a.1092, where explained as “ground (piṭṭha) mustard”. ⁹ dhūmaṃ kātuṃ. Cf. Kd.6.13.2. ¹⁰ vaṇamaṃsa, Vin-a.1092 reading vaḍḍhamaṃsa, and saying that the upper or covering (adhika) flesh stood up like a peg. ¹¹ vikāsika; Vin-a.1092, “a piece of cloth for covering up the sore”. ¹² Cf. Vin.4.166.

Now at that time a certain monk came to have drunk poison. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make him drink (a concoction of) dung.” Then it occurred to the monks: “(May it be drunk) even if it is not (formally) received, or should it be (formally) offered?”⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, that if he receives (formally) that which (someone) is making allowable,⁷ when he has once (formally) received it that it need not be (formally) offered again.”

Kd.6.14.7

Now at that time a certain monk had an affliction resulting from drinking something poisonous.⁸ “I allow you, monks, to make him drink (a decoction of) mud turned up by the plough.”⁹

Now at that time a certain monk was constipated. “I allow you, monks, to make him drink raw lye.”

Now at that time a certain monk had jaundice. “I allow you, monks, to make him drink (a compound of cow’s¹⁰) urine and yellow myrobalan.”¹¹

BD.4.281

¹ mahāvikaṭāni. Mentioned at Vin.4.90, where a monk may himself take these even if there is no one to make them “allowable”, for they do not count as “nutriment”. Also at MN.1.79, DN.1.167. ² These things are, or are by Indians, regarded as great purifiers. ³ paṭiggahetabbāni. Oldenberg proposes to read paṭiggahāpetabbāni, Vin.1.382. ⁴ Cf. BD.2.346, n.1, n.2. ⁵ paṭiggahāpetuṃ. ⁶ paṭiggahāpetabbo; see BD.2.122. ⁷ yaṃ karonto paṭiggahāti. ⁸ Vin-a.1092 takes this to mean he was suffering from the results of sorcery, i.e. from a disease arising from drinking under the mastery of another. ⁹ sītāloḷi, explained at Vin-a.1092 as “I allow you to make him drink, mixed with water, the clay clinging to the ploughshare when tilling with a plough”. ¹⁰ So Vin-a.1092. ¹¹ Cf. Vin.1.276 where Jīvaka gave ghee as a cure for jaundice.

Now at that time a certain monk had a skin disease. “I allow you, monks, to make a perfume-paste.”

Now at that time a certain monk’s body came to be full of (bad) humours.¹ “I allow him, monks, to drink a purgative.” There was need of clarified conje. “I allow, monks, clarified conje.” There was need of unprepared broth.² “I allow, monks, unprepared broth.” There was need of prepared and unprepared.³ “I allow, monks, prepared and unprepared.” There was need of meat-broth.⁴ “I allow, monks, meat-broth.”

Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha,⁵ desiring to make a cave, had a (mountain) slope cleared near Rājagaha. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the venerable Pilindavaccha; having approached, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the venerable Pilindavaccha: “What, honoured sir, is the elder having made?”

“Sire, desiring to make a cave, I am having a (mountain) slope cleared.”

“Honoured sir, does the master require an attendant for a monastery?”

“Sire, an attendant for a monastery is not allowed by the Lord.”

“Well, honoured sir, having inquired of the Lord, you should tell him of me.”

“Very well, sire,” the venerable Pilindavaccha answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent.

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha gladdened, roused, rejoiced, delighted King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha with talk on dhamma. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, gladdened ... delighted by the venerable Pilindavaccha’s talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the vener-

¹ abhisannakāya. Cf. Vin.2.119, also Kd.8.130, kāya dosābhisanna. ² akāṭayūsa. Vin-a.1092 says “a beverage cooked with beans but not oily”. ³ kaṭākaṭa. Vin-a.1092 reads so’va thokaṃ (variant reading dhota) siniddho, this is only a little oily. ⁴ paṭicchādaniya. Cf. below, Kd.6.23.3. Vin-a.1092 explains by maṃsarasa, flavour of meat. ⁵ From here towards end of Kd.6.15.10 = Vin.3.248–Vin.3.251. See BD.2.126ff. for notes.

Kd.6.15.1

Vin.1.207

Kd.6.15.2

BD.4.282

able Pilindavaccha sent a messenger to the Lord to say: “Lord, King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha desires to present an attendant for a monastery. Now, Lord, what line of conduct is to be followed?” Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks saying:

“I allow, monks, a monastery attendant.”

Kd.6.15.3

And a second time did King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approach the venerable Pilindavaccha; having approached, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was fitting down at a respectful distance King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to the venerable Pilindavaccha:

“Honoured sir, has the Lord allowed a monastery attendant?”

“Yes, sire.”

“Well then, honoured sir, I will give the master a monastery attendant.”

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, having promised the venerable Pilindavaccha a monastery attendant, (but) having forgotten, having recalled it after a time, addressed a chief minister who was concerned with all the affairs, saying: “My good sir, has that monastery-attendant whom I promised to the master been given?”

“Your majesty, a monastery attendant has not been given to the master.”

“My good sir, how long is it since it was considered?”

Kd.6.15.4

Then that chief minister, having counted up the days, spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “It is five hundred days, your majesty.”

“Well then, give five hundred monastery attendants to the master.”

“Yes, your majesty,” and the chief minister having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, bestowed five hundred monastery attendants on the venerable Pilindavaccha, and a distinct village established itself. They called it “The Village of the Monastery Attendants” and they also called it “Pilinda Village”. Now at that time the venerable Pilindavaccha frequented families in that village. Then the venerable Pilindavaccha, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Pilinda Village for almsfood.

Vin.1.208

BD.4.283

Kd.6.15.5

Now at that time there came to be a festival in this village; young girls wearing ornaments, adorned with garlands, were celebrating it. Then the venerable Pilindavaccha as he was walking for almsfood on unbroken round¹ in Pilinda Village, approached the dwelling of a certain monastery attendant; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. Now at that time the daughter of the monastery attendant's wife, having seen other little girls wearing ornaments, adorned with garlands, cried and said: "Give me a garland, give me an ornament."

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha said to that monastery attendant's wife: "Why is this little girl crying?"

"Honoured sir, this little girl is crying because, having seen other little girls wearing ornaments, adorned with garlands, she says: 'Give me a garland, give me an ornament.' Whence is there a garland for us who are poor, whence an ornament?"

Kd.6.15.6

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha, having taken a roll of grass, spoke thus to that monastery attendant's wife: "Now set this roll of grass on this little girl's head." Then that monastery attendant's wife, having taken that roll of grass, set it on that little girl's head. It became a golden chaplet, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; there was no golden chaplet like it even in the king's women's quarters. People spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

"Your majesty, in the house of a certain monastery attendant there is a golden chaplet, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; there is no golden chaplet like it even in your majesty's women's quarters. As he is poor, where (could he have got it) from? Undoubtedly it was taken by theft." Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha had that monastery attendant's family imprisoned.

Kd.6.15.7
BD.4.284

And a second time did the venerable Pilindavaccha, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, enter Pilinda Village for almsfood. As he was walking in Pilinda Village on unbroken round for almsfood he approached the dwelling of that monastery attendant; having approached, he asked the neighbours: "Where has this monastery attendant's family

¹ sapadānam, derivation uncertain. Enjoined at Bu-Sk.33. Explanations given at Vin-a.893 (cited BD.3.129, n.3); SN-a.i.205: the houses reached, one walking to them successively (in succession, in order); Snp-a.118: one who walks successively, not having rejected (departed from) the order (succession) of the houses, entering a rich household and a poor household without interruption (without a break, "just as it comes"), for almsfood.

gone?”

“Honoured sir, they have been imprisoned by the king on account of that golden chaplet.”

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha approached the residence of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha approached the venerable Pilindavaccha; having approached, having greeted the venerable Pilindavaccha he sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Pilindavaccha spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

“How is it, sire, that the monastery attendant’s family is imprisoned?”

“Honoured sir, in that monastery attendant’s house there was a golden chaplet, beautiful, good to look upon, charming; there is no golden chaplet like it even in our women’s quarters. Where (could he have got it) from, as he is poor? Undoubtedly it was obtained by theft.”

Then the venerable Pilindavaccha exercised volitional force, and said: “The palace of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha is golden,” and it became made all of gold. He said: “Now, sire, from where have you got so much gold?”

Saying: “I understand, honoured sir, this is the master’s majesty of psychic power,” he set free the monastery attendant’s family.

People, delighted, full of satisfaction because they heard that a state of further men, a wonder of psychic power had been shown by master Pilindavaccha to the king and his retinue, presented the five (kinds of) medicine to the venerable Pilindavaccha, that is to say ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey and molasses. Now the venerable Pilindavaccha was customarily a receiver, so whenever he received the five (kinds of) medicine he gave them away among his company. And his company came to live in abundance; whatever they received, filling pots and pitchers, they put them away, and filling water strainers and bags, they hung them up in the windows. These (pots, etc.) leaked, and the dwelling-places became beset and overrun by rats. People, having seen (this) as they were touring the dwelling-places, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, are storing up goods indoors, like King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.”

Monks heard these people who were ... spreading it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks strive after abundance like this?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks are striving after abundance such as this?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them,¹ having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Those medicines which may be partaken of by ill monks, that is to say ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, molasses—having accepted these, they may be used as a store for at most seven days. He who exceeds that (period) should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

The First Portion for Repeating: that on Medicines that are Allowed

ALLOWANCE FOR SUGAR, ETC.

Then the Lord, having stayed at Sāvattthī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha. And on the way the venerable Revata the Doubter³ saw a sugar-factory; having stepped aside, (he saw the men) putting flour and syrup⁴ into the sugar; seeing this and thinking: “Sugar with food⁵ is unallowable; it is not allowable to make use of sugar at a wrong time,” being ¹ Vin.3.251 (BD.2.131) reads: The lord rebuked them saying: “... this rule of training should be set forth ...” ² Bu-NP.23. ³ Kankhārevata. At AN.i.24 called “chief of musers”; verses at Thag.3, Thi-ap.491. Mentioned at Ud.5.7, MN.i.212, MN.i.462. He was scrupulous about and doubted what was allowable, kappiya. Cf. Thag-a.37, Ud-a.314, AN-a.i.230, MN-a.ii.247, GS.i.18, n.2. ⁴ chārikaṃ cannot here be ashes, which is its most usual meaning. But cf. Sanskrit ṣāra, treacle, molasses. Perhaps some confused reference back to the “four irregular things” of Kd.6.14.6 is intended here. The allowability of the first two has been emphasised in specific cases (in Kd.6.14.6 and Kd.6.14.7), and “mud turned up by the plough” (of Kd.6.14.7) is probably intended as an example of the fourth irregular thing, namely clay. Here occurs the same word as is used for the third irregular thing, chārika, there translated “ashes” where syrup or treacle would hardly fit; but here translated “syrup”, as people would not put ashes into sugar to stiffen it, nor would ashes be called “food”, āmisa. ⁵ sāmisa; cf. Vin.4.198.

scrupulous,¹ he and his company did not make use of the sugar, neither did those make use of the sugar who deemed that he should be listened to. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Why, monks, did they put flour and syrup into the sugar?”

“So as to make it firm, Lord.”

“If, monks, they put flour and syrup into the sugar so as to make it firm, and if it is still called ‘sugar’, I allow you, monks, to make use of as much sugar as you like.”²

Kd.6.16.2

Then on the way the venerable Revata the Doubter saw a kidney-bean growing on a dunghill; having seen it and thinking: “Kidney-beans are not allowable, for ripe kidney-beans are also growing,”³ being scrupulous he and his company did not make use of the kidney-bean, neither did those who deemed that he should be listened to make use of the kidney-bean. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, even if ripe kidney-beans are growing, I allow you to make use of kidney-beans as much as you like.”

Kd.6.16.3

Now at that time a certain monk had an affliction of wind in the stomach. He drank salted sour gruel.⁴ Because of this his affliction of wind in the stomach subsided. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, salted sour gruel for one who is ill; when one is not ill to make use of it by using it as a beverage mixed with water.”

ON REJECTION OF WHAT IS PREPARED INDOORS, ETC.

Kd.6.17.1

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there in Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place. Now at that time the Lord came to have an affliction of wind in the stomach. Then the venerable Ānanda, thinking: “On a former occasion the ¹ kukkuccāyanta. AN-a.i.230, in explanation of Kaṅkhārevata’s name, says “doubting means, having scruples; the meaning is being scrupulous”. ² yathāsukham. ³ Meaning of this passage is not clear. Vin-a.1092 says, “if ripe kidney-beans are also growing they may be used as much as you like, for these are allowed just because they are ripe”. On mugga see BD.1.83, n.4. ⁴ *loṇasovīra*ka. At Vin.3.86 it is called *suṅvīra*ka. See BD.1.149, n.3.

Lord's affliction of wind in the stomach was eased by conje containing the three pungent ingredients,"¹ having himself prepared sesamum and rice-grain and kidney-bean, having cured² them indoors, having himself cooked them indoors, brought them to the Lord, saying: "Lord, drink the conje containing the three pungent ingredients."

BD.4.287

Now Truth-finders (sometimes) ask knowing,³ and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truth-finders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal; bridge-breaking for Truth-finders is among what does not belong to the goal. Awakened ones, Lords question monks concerning two matters: either, "Shall we teach dhamma?" or "Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?" Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: "Where does this conje come from, Ānanda?" Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.6.17.2

Vin.1.211

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: "It is not becoming, Ānanda, it is not fitting, it is not suitable, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. And how can you, Ānanda, strain after abundance such as this? Moreover, Ānanda, that which is cured indoors is unallowable, and that which is cooked indoors is also unallowable, and that which is cooked by oneself is also unallowable. It is not, Ānanda, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.6.17.3

"Monks, one should not make use of what is cured indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself. Whoever should make use (of any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.6.17.4

"If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of three wrong-doings. If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked indoors, (but) cooked by others, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of two wrong-doings. If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked out of doors, cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of two wrong-doings.

BD.4.288

¹ tekaṭulayāgu. See BD.1.111, n.1. ² vāsetvā. I follow Pali-English Dictionary (under vāseti) rather than the "kept" of Vinaya Texts ii.68. Monks are allowed to cure (or purify) clay at Vin.2.120. ³ Cf. BD.1.12, and see there n.3 for further references.

Kd.6.17.5

“If, monks, it is cured out of doors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of two wrong-doings. If, monks, it is cured indoors, cooked out of doors, cooked by others, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, monks, it is cured out of doors, cooked out of doors, (but) cooked by oneself, and one should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If, monks, it is cured out of doors, cooked out of doors, cooked by others, and one should make use of it, there is no offence.”

Kd.6.17.6

Now at that time, monks, thinking: “Cooking for oneself¹ is objected to by the Lord,” were doubtful about² a second cooking.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cook a second cooking.”

Kd.6.17.7

Now at that time Rājagaha became short of food. People conveyed salt and oil and husked rice and solid food⁴ to the monastery. The monks cured these out of doors, but vermin⁵ ate them and also thieves carried them off.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cure indoors.”⁷ When they had cured (the things) indoors, they cooked them out of doors, (but) those who live on the remains of food⁸ crowded round. The monks, not trusting them, made use of (the food). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cook indoors.” When food was short those who made it allowable carried away the larger (portion) and gave the monks the lesser (portion). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, yourselves to cook. I allow you, monks, what is cured indoors, what is cooked indoors, what is cooked by yourselves.”

Vin.1.212

BD.4.289

¹ sāmaṅpāka. ² kukkuccāyanti. ³ punapāka, i.e. a reheating of food already cooked once. ⁴ These four items are mentioned also at Vin.1.220, Vin.1.238, Vin.1.243, Vin.1.249.

⁵ ukkapiṇḍaka. Vin-a.1093 explains as cats, mice, lizards, mongeese (? maṅgusā). ⁶ As at Vin.1.239. ⁷ This, and subsequent allowances, refer only to times of scarcity, and were all rescinded for times of plenty, see Kd.6.32.1, Kd.6.32.2.

⁸ Here called damakā. Vin-a.1093 explains by vighāsādā, a word which occurs at e.g. Kd.6.24.1 below, and Vin.4.91. See BD.2, Introduction, p.xliii and BD.4.347, n.3.

PICKED UP AND RECEIVED

Now at that time several monks, having spent the rains in Kāsi, going to Rājagaha to see the Lord, did not obtain on the way sufficient mediocre or fine meals, as much as they needed. Yet there was much solid food that was fruit,¹ but there was no one to make it allowable.² So these monks weary in body, approached Rājagaha, the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding place, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for Lords, to exchange friendly greetings with incoming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to these monks: "I hope, monks, things are going well with you, I hope you are keeping going, I hope you have come here with but little fatigue on the journey? And where, monks, do you come from?"

Kd.6.17.8

"Things are going well with us, Lord, but we, Lord, having spent the rains in Kāsi, coming to Rājagaha to see the Lord ... no one to make it allowable; thus we have come on the journey weary in body."

Kd.6.17.9

Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

"I allow you, monks, if one anywhere sees solid food that is fruit, but if there is no one to make it allowable, having taken³ it oneself, having carried it away, having seen someone to make it allowable, having laid it down on the ground, to make use of it, (he) having (formally) offered⁴ it to you. I allow you, monks, to receive (formally) what you have picked up."⁵

Now at that time fresh sesamum and fresh honey had accrued to a certain brahmin. Then it occurred to that brahmin: "Suppose I were to give the fresh sesamum and fresh honey to the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head?"

Kd.6.18.1

Then that brahmin approached the Lord; having approached, he exchanged friendly greetings with the Lord. Having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy he stood at a respectful distance; and standing at a respectful distance, that brahmin spoke thus to the Lord:

BD.4.290

¹ phalakhādaniya. See note on piṭṭhakhādaniya at Kd.6.36.6 below. ² kappiyakāraka. These make things allowable by offering them. See Kd.6.21.1; Kd.6.38.1. ³ gahetvā. ⁴ paṭig-gahāpetvā. Cf. note on patta-gāhāpaka at BD.2.122, and above, BD.4.280. ⁵ uggahitaṃ. This is an "allowance" only for a time of scarcity. See the much simpler "allowance" at Kd.6.21.1 for more normal times.

“Lord, may the revered¹ Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me to-morrow.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then that brahmin departed, having understood the Lord’s consent.

Vin.1.213

Kd.6.18.2

Then that brahmin having had, towards the end of that night, sumptuous solid food and soft food prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready”. Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached that brahmin’s dwelling; having approached, he sat down together with the Order of monks on the appointed seat. Then that brahmin, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous solid food and soft food the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. While that brahmin was sitting down at a respectful distance the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted him with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

Kd.6.18.3

Then it occurred to that brahmin soon after the Lord had departed: “I forgot to give those things for the sake of which I invited the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, thinking: ‘I will give fresh sesamum and fresh honey.’ Suppose I were to have the fresh sesamum and the fresh honey conveyed to the monastery in pots and pitchers?” Then that brahmin, having had the fresh sesamum and the fresh honey conveyed to the monastery in pots and pitchers, approached the Lord; having approached, he stood at a respectful distance; and as he was standing at a respectful distance this brahmin spoke thus to the Lord:

Kd.6.18.4

“I forgot to give those things, good Gotama, for the sake of which I invited the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, thinking: ‘I will give fresh sesamum and fresh honey’. May the revered Gotama accept from me fresh sesamum and fresh honey?”

BD.4.291

“Well, then, brahmin, give them to the monks.”

¹ bhavaṃ, as at Vin.3.2.

Now at that time because food was scarce¹ and they offered them only a little, monks considerably refused. But a whole Order was offered (food); the monks, being scrupulous, did not accept it.² (The Lord said:)

“Accept (the food), monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, having eaten and being satisfied,³ to make use of food that is not left over,⁴ if it was taken back from there”.⁵

ALLOWANCE FOR WHAT IS RECEIVED, ETC.

Now at that time the family who supported the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, sent solid food for the Order,⁶ saying: “Having pointed it out as for master Upananda, it should be given to the Order.” Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, had entered the village for almsfood. Then these people, having gone to the monastery, asked the monks: “Where, honoured sirs, is master Upananda?”

“Sirs, this venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, has entered the village for almsfood.”

“Honoured sirs, having pointed out this solid food as for master Upananda, it should be given to the Order.”

They told this matter to the Lord.⁷ He said: “Well, then, monks, having accepted it, put it aside until Upananda comes back.”

Then the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having visited the families before the meal, came back during the day.⁸ Now at that time

¹ dubbhikkhā means scarcity of food and of (in consequence) almsfood. ² See Bu-Pc.32 and its definition of “great scarcity”, and its saying that at such a time a “group-meal” may be eaten (BD.2.312). ³ See BD.2.326, n.2 and definitions at BD.2.328. ⁴ See Bu-Pc.35, to which the above allowance is an exception made in a time of scarcity. See BD.2.328, n.4, and definition of “what is not left over” at BD.2.329. ⁵ tato nihatam, i.e. having taken the food to the monastery from the place where it was received. Cf. tato niharitvā at Vin.4.80 and its “definition” at Vin.4.81. ⁶ As at Vin.4.98–Vin.4.98 \(BD.2.363f.\). ⁷ Here Vin.4.99 inserts: “Then the Lord on that occasion, in that connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Well then ...” ⁸ At Vin.4.99 Upananda is represented as thinking it to be forbidden by the Lord to call upon families before a meal, so having visited them after a meal he returned during the day. “Before a meal”, “after a meal” are defined at Vin.4.100, and differently at Vin.iv,272, Vin.iv,273. Nuns’ Bu-Pc.15, Bu-Pc.16 seem to take it for granted that nuns approach families before and after meals.

Kd.6.19.1

Vin.1.214

Kd.6.19.2

BD.4.292

because food was scarce and they offered them only a little, monks considerably refused; but a whole Order was offered (food); the monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:)

“Accept (the food), monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, having eaten and being satisfied, to make use of (food) that is not left over if it was accepted before a meal.”

Kd.6.20.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on a tour for Sāvattihī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvattihī. Then the Lord stayed there at Sāvattihī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta had fever. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great approached the venerable Sāriputta; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta:

“When you, reverend Sāriputta, previously had fever, by what means was it eased?”

“I had lotus fibres and stalks, your reverence.”

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from the Jeta Grove appear on the banks of the Mandākinī lotus-tank.¹

Kd.6.20.2

A certain elephant² saw the venerable Moggallāna the Great coming in the distance; seeing him he spoke thus to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

“Honoured sir, let master Moggallāna the Great come; there is a welcome, honoured sir, for master Moggallāna the Great. What, honoured sir, does the master need? What can I give him?”

“I need lotus fibres and stalks, friend.” Then that elephant commanded another elephant, saying:

BD.4.293

“Well now, good fellow, give the master as many lotus fibres and stalks as he needs.” Then that elephant, having plunged into the Mandākinī lotus-tank, having with his trunk pulled lotus fibres and stalks, having washed them clean,³ having tied them into a bundle, approached the venerable

Vin.1.215

¹ One of the seven great lakes of the Himalayas, part of it being covered with white lotuses. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ² nāga, elephant, rather than serpent here; the sonḍā, trunk, is mentioned a little later. ³ Cf. Vin.2.201, SN.ii.269.

Moggallāna the Great.

Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from the bank of the Mandākinī lotus-tank, appear in the Jeta Grove. And that elephant too, vanishing from the bank of the Mandākinī lotus-tank, appeared in the Jeta Grove. Then that elephant, having offered the venerable Moggallāna the Great the lotus fibres and stalks, vanishing from the Jeta Grove, appeared on the bank of the Mandākinī lotus-tank. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great brought the lotus fibres and stalks to the venerable Sāriputta. Then as the venerable Sāriputta was making use of the lotus fibres and stalks, his fever abated. Many lotus fibres and stalks came to be left over.

Kd.6.20.3

Now at that time because food was scarce and they offered them only a little,¹ monks considerably refused; but a whole Order was offered (food). The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:)

Kd.6.20.4

“Accept (the food), monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, having eaten and being satisfied, to make use of (food) that is not left over if it grows in a wood, if it grows in a lotus-tank.”²

Now at that time there was a great quantity of solid food that was fruit³ at Sāvattthī, but there was no one to make it allowable. The monks, being scrupulous, did not make use of the fruit. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.6.21.1

“I allow you, monks, to make use of fruit that is without seed (or) whose seed is discharged,⁴ (even if) it is not made allowable.”

BD.4.294

¹ As above, Kd.6.18.4 and Kd.6.19.2. ² This therefore seems an exception to Bu-Pc.11, which makes the destruction of vegetable growth an offence. ³ Cf. above Kd.6.17.8; below Kd.6.38.1, and note on piṭṭhakhādaniya at Kd.6.36.6. ⁴ nibbattabija. Vin-a.1093 says bijam nibbatetvā (variant reading nippaṭṭetvā) apanetvā, having got rid of the seed, having discharged it. The idea seems to be that monks must not eat the seeds of fruits. At Kd.6.38.1 all solid food that is fruit is allowed.

ON REJECTION OF SURGERY

Kd.6.22.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Sāvattthī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Rājagaha. And the Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time a certain monk was afflicted by an ulcer.¹ The surgeon, Ākāsagotta,² lanced it. Then the Lord, as he was touring the lodgings, approached this monk's dwelling-place.

Kd.6.22.2

The surgeon, Ākāsagotta, saw the Lord coming in the distance; seeing him, he spoke thus to the Lord: "Let the revered Gotama come, let him see this monk's orifice; it is like a lizard's mouth." Then the Lord, thinking, "This foolish man is making fun of me", becoming silent, having turned back, having had the Order of monks convened, on this occasion, in this connection, questioned the monks, saying: "Is there, as is said, monks, an ill monk in such and such a dwelling-place?"

Vin.1.216

"There is, Lord."

"What, monks, is this monk's affliction?"

"Lord, the venerable one's affliction is an ulcer. The surgeon, Ākāsagotta, lanced it."

Kd.6.22.3

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

"It is not becoming, monks, in this foolish man, it is not suitable, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it should not be done. How, monks, can this foolish man let a lancing be done on the private parts? The skin, monks, is tender at the private parts, a wound is hard to heal, a knife hard to guide. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, one should not let a lancing be done on the private parts. Whoever should let it be done (there), there is a grave offence."

Kd.6.22.4

BD.4.295

Now at that time the group of six monks, thinking: "Lancing is objected to by the Lord", let a clyster be used. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six monks let a clyster be used?" Then monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Cf. Vin.1.272. ² Mentioned, I think, nowhere but here.

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks let a clyster be used?"

"It is true, Lord." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, one should not have lancing done within a distance of two finger-breadths of the private parts nor a clyster-treatment. Whoever should have (either of these things) done, there is a grave offence."

ON REJECTION OF HUMAN FLESH

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Benares. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Benares. The Lord stayed there near Benares at Isipatana in the deer-park. Now at that time in Benares the lay-follower, Suppiya, and the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā,¹ were both pleased²; they were benefactors, servitors,³ supporters of the Order. Then the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā, having gone to the monastery, having approached dwelling-place after dwelling-place, cell after cell, asked the monks: "Who, honoured sirs, is ill? What may be conveyed for whom?"

Kd.6.23.1

Now at that time a certain monk had drunk a purgative. Then that monk spoke to the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā, thus:

Kd.6.23.2

"I have drunk a purgative, sister. I need meat-broth."⁴ She said:

Vin.1.217

"Very well, master, it shall be conveyed (to you)," and having gone to her house, she enjoined a servant,⁵ saying:

BD.4.296

¹ Suppiyā is at AN.i.26 called chief of the laywomen disciples who tend the sick, a position she had resolved to achieve during a life in the time of Padumuttara Buddha, AN-a.i.453-AN-a.i.454. Her name occurs in a list of eminent women at AN.iv.348. At Mi.115 she is mentioned with seven other persons as experiencing ease (sukha) here and now.

² I.e. with the teaching. ³ kārakā, literally doers. ⁴ Allowed at Kd.6.14.7. ⁵ antevāsin. Cf. Bu-Pc.84 (Vin.4.162) where Anāthapiṇḍika enjoins his antevāsin to prepare rice for the monks.

“Go, good fellow, find meat that is to hand.”¹

“Yes, lady,” but that man, having answered the woman lay-follower Suppiya in assent, touring the whole of Benares, saw no meat that was to hand. Then that man approached the woman lay-follower Suppiyā; having approached the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, he spoke thus: “There is no meat, lady, that is ready to hand; today is a non-slaughter (day).”²

Kd.6.23.3

Then it occurred to the woman lay-follower, Suppiyā: “If that ill monk is unable to obtain meat-broth his affliction will greatly increase or he will pass away. It is not fitting in me, that I, having answered him in assent, should not have meat-broth conveyed”, and having taken a butcher’s knife,³ having cut flesh from her thigh, she gave it to a slave-woman, saying:

“Come now, having prepared⁴ this meat—in such and such a dwelling-place there is an ill monk, you may give it to him, and if anyone asks for me, let it be known that I am ill,” and having wrapped her upper robe round her thigh, having entered an inner room, she lay down on a couch.

Kd.6.23.4

Then the lay-follower, Suppiya, having gone to the house, asked the slave-woman, saying: “Where is Suppiyā?”

“She, master, is lying down in an inner room.” Then the lay-follower Suppiya, approached the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, and having approached he spoke thus to the woman lay-follower Suppiyā:

“Why are you lying down?”

“I am ill,” she said.

“What is your affliction?” Then the woman lay-follower Suppiyā told this matter to the lay-follower Suppiya. Then the lay-follower Suppiya, thinking: “Indeed, it is marvellous, indeed, it is wonderful, that this Suppiyā is so faithful and believing that she gives up even her own flesh. What other thing could there be that she would not give?” and joyful, elated, he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

BD.4.297

¹ pavattamaṃsa, i.e. already killed, and not to be killed on purpose for the monk. For monks might eat no fish or meat which they saw, heard or suspected had been specially killed for them, Vin.3.172. ² māghāta. Cf. Ja.iii.428, Ja.iii.434; also Asoka’s Pillar Edict V, where “on fifty-six days in the year the capture and sale of fish was prohibited, and on the same days, even in game-preserves, animals might not be destroyed (VINCENT SMITH, Asoka, 3rd edition, p.57). Vin-a.1094 says “on this day it is not possible for anyone to deprive anything of life”. ³ potthanikā. At Vin-a.1094 it is called “a knife for cutting meat”. ⁴ sampādetvā, as at Vin.3.208.

As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the lay-follower Suppiya spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks”. The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the lay-follower Suppiya, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the lay-follower Suppiya, towards the end of that night, having had sumptuous solid foods, soft foods, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready”. Then the Lord, dressing in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the lay-follower Suppiya; having approached, he sat down together with the Order of monks on the appointed seat.

Kd.6.23.5

Vin.1.218

Kd.6.23.6

Then the lay-follower Suppiya approached the lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As the lay-follower Suppiya was standing at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him:

“How is Suppiyā?”

“She is ill, Lord.”

“Well then, let her come.”

“She is not able to do so, Lord.”

“Well then, having taken hold of her, bring her along.” Then the lay-follower Suppiya, having taken hold of the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, brought her along. When the Lord saw her, even that great wound became healed, the skin was (made) good with (small) hairs growing on it.

Kd.6.23.7

Then the lay-follower Suppiya and the woman lay-follower Suppiyā, saying: “Wonderful indeed, marvellous indeed are the great psychic power and the great potency of the Truth-finder, inasmuch as when the Lord sees (someone) even a great wound will be healed, the skin (made) good with (small) hairs growing on it,” and joyful, elated, having with their own hands served, and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, they sat down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the lay-follower Suppiya and the woman lay-follower Suppiya with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

BD.4.298

Kd.6.23.8

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Who, monks, asked the woman lay-follower Suppiyā for meat?” When he had spoken thus, that monk spoke thus to the Lord:

“I, Lord, asked the woman lay-follower Suppiyā for meat.”

“Has it been conveyed (to you), monk?”

“It has been conveyed, Lord.”

“Did you, monk, make use of it?”

“I, Lord, made use of it.”

“Did you, monk, inquire about¹ it?”

Kd.6.23.9

“I, Lord, did not inquire about it.”

The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “How an you, foolish man, make use of meat without having inquired about it? Foolish man, human flesh has been made use of by you. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“There are, monks, people who are faithful and believing; even their own flesh is given up by these. Monks, you should not make use of human flesh. Whoever should make use of it, there is a grave offence. Nor, monks, should you make use of flesh without inquiring about it. Whoever should (so) make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ON REJECTION OF ELEPHANT FLESH

Kd.6.23.10

Vin.1.219

Now at that time a king’s elephant died. Because food was scarce people made use of elephant-flesh; they gave elephant-flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood, and the monks made use of the elephant-flesh. The people looked down upon,¹ criticised, spread it about, saying:

¹ paṭivekkhi, which Vin-a.1094 explains by vīmaṃsi, examined, considered, and by paṭipucchi, questioned. It explains appaṭivekkhitvā by appaṭipucchitvā not having questioned.

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make use of elephant-flesh? Elephants are a king’s emblem; if the king should find out, not for these would be his favour.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, you should not make use of elephant-flesh. Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.4.299

Now at that time a king’s horses died ... (same as Kd.6.23.10 reading horses, horse-flesh for elephants, elephant-flesh) “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.6.23.11

Now at that time, because food was scarce people made use of dog-flesh; they gave dog-flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood, and the monks made use of the dog-flesh. The people looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

Kd.6.23.12

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make use of dog-flesh? A dog is loathsome, disgusting.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, dog-flesh should not be made use of.² Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time, because food was scarce people made use of snake-flesh; they gave snake-flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood, and the monks made use of the snake-flesh. The people ... spread it about, saying:

Kd.6.23.13

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make use of snake-flesh? A snake is loathsome, disgusting.”

¹ From this passage it would appear that the people did not as a rule eat elephants’ flesh; and it is to my mind not clear whether any did so even in a time of scarcity, but merely used it for offering to monks. Those who criticised monks could hardly have eaten it themselves. The same applies to the cases following.

Above at Kd.6.23.9 a monk is blamed for accepting uncritically what was offered him. In the case of robes, on the contrary, monks might put forward no suggestions (see Bu-NP.8, Bu-NP.9, Bu-NP.27). ² Vin-a.1094 says the flesh of jungle wolves may be used; but the flesh of the offspring of a wolf and village dog may not be used.

Then Supassa, the serpent-king, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance Supassa, the serpent-king, spoke thus to the Lord:

“There are, Lord, serpents who are without faith, unbelieving, and these might do harm to monks even for a trifle. It were good, Lord, if the masters did not make use of snake-flesh.”

Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Supassa, the serpent-king, with talk on dhamma; and Supassa, the serpent-king, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, snake-flesh should not be made use of. Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.4.300
Vin.1.220

Kd.6.23.14

Now at that time hunters, having killed a lion, made use of its flesh; they gave the lion’s flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood. The monks, having made use of the lion’s flesh, stayed in a jungle (but) lions attacked the monks because they smelt of lion’s flesh. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, lion’s flesh should not be made use of. Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.6.23.15

Now at that time hunters, having killed a tiger ... having killed a panther ... having killed a bear ... having killed a hyena,¹ made use of its flesh; they gave the hyena’s flesh to monks who were walking for almsfood. The monks, having made use of the hyena’s flesh, stayed in a jungle (but) hyenas attacked the monks because they smelt of hyena’s flesh. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, hyena’s flesh should not be made use of. Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Names of wild animals occur in this order at Vin.3.151, AN.iii.101. Cf. Vin.3.58 where “bears” drop out and “wolves” follow hyenas. There is a longer list at Mi.267=Ja.v.416.

ALLOWANCE FOR CONJEY AND HONEY-LUMPS

Then the Lord, having stayed in Benares for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Andhakavinda¹ together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Now at that time the country people, having loaded much salt and oil and husked rice and solid food into wagons, followed close after the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, saying:

Kd.6.24.1

“When we get our turn, then we will make a meal (for them),”² and there were at least five hundred of those who eat the remains of food. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Andhakavinda.

Kd.6.24.2
BD.4.301

Then it occurred to a certain brahmin who did not receive his turn: “For the last two months I have been following the Older of monks with the awakened one at its head, thinking: ‘When I get my turn, I will make a meal (for them),’ but I do not get my turn. I am alone, and many of my household affairs are going to ruin. Suppose I were to look into the refectory³ and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?” Then that brahmin, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: conjey and honey-lumps.⁴

Kd.6.24.3

Then that brahmin approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Now, it occurred to me, good Ānanda, as I did not get a turn: ‘For the last two months ... Suppose I were to look into the refectory and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?’ So I, good Ānanda, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: conjey and honey-lumps. If I, good Ānanda, were to prepare conjey and honey-lumps, would the revered Gotama accept them from me?”

Vin.1.221

“Well then, brahmin, I will ask the Lord.”

Kd.6.24.4

Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, Ānanda, let him prepare them.” (Ānanda) said: “Well then, brahmin, prepare them”. Then that brahmin towards the end of that night, having had a quantity of conjey and honey-lumps prepared, brought them to the Lord saying: “May the revered Gotama accept conjey and honey-lumps from me.”

¹ A village in the Magadha country. ² Cf. Kd.6.33.1. ³ Cf. Kd.6.36.6-Kd.6.36.8. ⁴ madhugolaka, perhaps honey-combs. At Mahāvamsa 22.42; Mahāvamsa 34.52 we find madhugaṇḍa, translated by Geiger as “honey-combs”.

“Well then, brahmin, give them to the monks.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept them. (The Lord said:) “Accept them, monks, make use of them.” Then that brahmin, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with a quantity of conje and honey-lumps, when the Lord had washed his hand¹ and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance.

Kd.6.24.5
BD.4.302

Then as this brahmin was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him:

“Brahmin, there are these ten advantages from conje. What ten? In giving conje one gives life, one gives beauty, one gives ease, one gives strength, one gives intelligence; conje when it is drunk checks hunger, keeps off thirst, regulates wind, cleanses the bladder, digests raw remnants of food.² These, brahmin, are the ten advantages of conje.”

Kd.6.24.6

“To the discerning whoso gives conje duly
At the right time to one who lives on others’ food,
It confers ten things on him:
Life and beauty, ease and strength;³

“For him intelligence arises from it,
It dispels hunger, thirst and wind,
It cleanses the bladder, it digests food;
This medicine is praised by the well-farer.

“Therefore conje should be given constantly
By a man longing for ease,
By those aspiring to deva-like joys
Or wanting human prosperity.”

Vin.1.222
Kd.6.24.7

Then the Lord having given thanks to that brahmin in these verses, rising from his seat, departed. Then the Lord, having on this occasion given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ dhotahattha, an unusual expression occurring at Kd.6.35.4; Kd.6.36.8. Used in explanation of allapāṇi at Pv-a.116. Technically hattha is the forearm from elbow to finger-tip, see BD.2, Introduction, p.li. Perhaps pāṇi is the hand itself. ² The last five advantages occur also at AN.iii.250. ³ Cf. AN.ii.64, where a similar verse occurs, but reading bhojana, food, instead of yāgu, conje, and “four things” instead of “ten”.

“I allow, monks, conje and honey-lumps.”

THE STORY OF THE MINISTER YOUNG IN FAITH

The people heard: “It is said that conje is allowed by the Lord and honey-lumps.” These prepared eating-conje¹ and honey-lumps early in the morning. The monks, (each) satisfied² in the early morning with eating-conje and a honey-lump, did not eat as much as expected in the refectory. Now at that time a certain chief minister, young in faith came to have invited the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head for the morrow. Then it occurred to that chief minister, young in faith: “Suppose I were to prepare twelve hundred and fifty bowls of meat for the twelve hundred and fifty monks, and should take one bowl of meat up to each monk?”

Kd.6.25.1

BD.4.303

Then that chief minister, young in faith, towards the end of that night, having had sumptuous solid food, soft food, prepared and twelve hundred and fifty bowls of meat, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “Lord, it is time, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of that great minister, young in the faith; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

Kd.6.25.2

Then that chief minister, young in faith, attended on the monks in the refectory. The monks spoke thus: “Give a little,³ sir, give a little, sir.” (He said) “Do not you, honoured sirs, accept so very little thinking: ‘This chief minister is young in faith.’ Much solid food, soft food, and twelve hundred and fifty bowls of meat have been prepared by me, thinking: ‘I will take one bowl of meat up to each monk’. Accept, honoured sirs, as much as you want.”

Kd.6.25.3

“Sir, it is not for this reason that we are accepting so very little, but we were (each) satisfied in the early morning with eating-conje and a honey-lump; that is why we are accepting so very little.”

Kd.6.25.4

¹ bhojjayāgu, apparently as opposed to the more ordinary, and presumably more liquid, conje which was drunk. Bhojja therefore here must be meant to stand for stiff, set, firm.

² dhātā, in the sense of having eaten their fill, rather than in the sense of having been offered, and therefore satisfied, as is the meaning conveyed by pavārita. ³ Cf. Vin.3.66, Vin.4.76, Vin.4.81.

Then that chief minister, young in faith, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs make use of someone else’s¹ eating-conjey? It is not that I am not competent to give as much as they want”² and angry, displeased, longing to insult the monks, he went round filling their bowls and saying: “Eat it or take it away”. Then that chief minister, young in faith, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl. As this chief minister, young in faith, was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted him with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

Vin.1.223
BD.4.304

Kd.6.25.5

But soon after the Lord had departed, that chief minister, young in faith, became remorseful and conscience-stricken and thought: “For me it is unprofitable, for me it is not profitable, for me it is ill-gotten, for me it is not well-gotten, that I, angry, displeased, longing to insult the monks, went round filling their bowls and saying: ‘Eat it or take it away’. Now, is much merit produced for me or demerit?”

Then that chief minister, young in faith, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that chief minister, young in faith, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Now I, Lord, soon after the Lord had departed, became remorseful and conscience-stricken, thinking: ‘For me it is unprofitable ... Now, Lord, is much merit produced for me or demerit?’”

Kd.6.25.6

“From the time when, sir, the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head was invited by you for the morrow much merit was produced for you; from the time when one of your lumps of boiled rice³ was accepted by each monk much merit was produced for you. Heaven worlds are assured for you.”

Then that chief minister, young in faith, thinking: “It is said that it was ¹ Here aññasa, not aññatra, “elsewhere”, as in the cases cited in the previous note. ² Reading here na cāham na paiṭbalo; see BD.2.317, n.2. ³ sittha, instead of, as before, maṃsapāti. Cf. sitthāni at Vin.2.165 and sa-sittha-ka at Vin.2.214, and sitthāvākāraka at Vin.2.214, Vin.4.196.

profitable for me, it is said that it was well-gotten by me, it is said that much merit was produced for me, it is said that heaven worlds are assured for me,” joyful, elated, rising up from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Kd.6.25.7

Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks, (although) invited elsewhere,¹ made use of someone else’s eating-conjey?”

BD.4.305

“It is true, Lord.”

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men, invited elsewhere, make use of someone else’s eating-conjey? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.1.224

“Monks, if one is invited elsewhere, someone else’s eating-conjey should not be made use of. Whoever should (so) make use of it should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

THE STORY OF BELAṬṬHAKACCĀNA

Then the Lord, having stayed at Andhakavinda for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha together with the large order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks. Now at that time Belaṭṭha Kaccāna³ was going along the highroad from Rājagaha to Andhakavinda with five hundred wagons all filled with jars of sugar. Then the Lord saw Belaṭṭha Kaccāna from afar, and seeing him, he stepped aside from the road and sat down at the root of a certain tree.

Kd.6.26.1

Kd.6.26.2

¹ aññatra here. ² Vin-a.1095 says “he should be dealt with for the offence of paramparabhojana,” an out-of-turn meal, i.e. not taking the invitations in the order in which they were issued; made an offence in Bu-Pc.33. See BD.2.317, n.3. ³ Mentioned, I think, nowhere but here. Buddhaghosa has no note. The absence of a descriptive epithet is unusual. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names calls him “a sugar-dealer”, which seems likely.

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna approached the Lord, having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, Belaṭṭha Kaccāna spoke thus to the Lord:

“I, Lord, want to give one jar of sugar to each monk.”

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, bring just one jar of sugar.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having answered the Lord in assent, bringing just one jar of sugar approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “The jar of sugar is brought, Lord. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, give the sugar to the monks.”

Kd.6.26.3
BD.4.306

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, having given the sugar to the monks, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, the sugar is given to the monks, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, Kaccāna, give the monks as much sugar as they want.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, having given the monks as much sugar as they wanted, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, as much sugar as they wanted has been given to the monks, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, serve the monks with sugar.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, served the monks with sugar. Some monks filled bowls and they filled water-strainers and bags.

Kd.6.26.4

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having served the monks with sugar, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the monks are served with sugar, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

Vin.1.225

“Well then, do you, Kaccāna, give sugar to those who eat the remains of food.”¹

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, having given sugar to those who eat the remains of food, spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ Mentioned above in Kd.6.24.1. It seems as if they had attached themselves to the company of monks, doing the journeys from Benares to Andhakavinda and from there to Rājagaha.

“Lord, sugar has been given to those who eat the remains of food, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“Well then, Kaccāna, give those who eat the remains of food as much sugar as they want.”

Kd.6.26.5

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having answered the Lord in assent, having given those who eat the remains of food as much sugar as they wanted, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, as much sugar as they wanted has been given to those who eat the remains of food, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

BD.4.307

“Well then, Kaccāna, do you serve with sugar those who eat the remains of food.”

“Yes, Lord,” and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, served with sugar those who eat the remains of food. Some of those who eat the remains of food filled pots and pitchers and they filled baskets and (their) clothes.¹

Kd.6.26.6

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, having served with sugar those who eat the remains of food, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, those who eat the remains of food have been served with sugar, and I have much sugar over. What line of conduct do I follow, Lord?”

“I do not see anyone,² Kaccāna, in the world with its devas, Māras, and Brahmās, nor in the race of recluses and brahmins, devas and men who having made use of that sugar could digest it properly except a Truth-finder or a Truth-finder’s disciple.³ Well then, Kaccāna, throw away that sugar where there is but little green grass or drop it into water where there are no living creatures.”⁴

“Yes, lord”, and Belaṭṭha Kaccāna having answered the Lord in assent, dropped that sugar into water where there were no living creatures.

Kd.6.26.7

Then that sugar, thus placed in the water, sizzled and hissed and sent forth steam and smoke. As a ploughshare heated the live-long day if placed in water sizzles and hisses and sends forth steam and smoke, so did this sugar when placed in the water sizzle and hiss and send forth steam and smoke. Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, alarmed and with his hair standing on end, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance.

¹ ucchaṅga, lap or hip. Here probably meaning that they knotted the sugar into the cloths they were wearing. This is still a customary way of carrying packages in India. At MN.i.366 the word appears to have the same meaning as above. ² For following passage, cf. SN.i.168–9, Snp.p.15. ³ For explanation of this “curious reply” see KS.i.211, n.3. ⁴ Cf. Kd.4.1.3, where this sentence also occurs.

Kd.6.26.8

As Belaṭṭha Kaccāna was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk to him,¹ that is to say, talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven; he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of Belaṭṭha Kaccāna was ready, pliable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop”.

BD.4.308

Vin.1.226

Kd.6.26.9

Then Belaṭṭha Kaccāna, as one who had seen dhamma,² attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, who had crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, who had attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Even, Lord, as one might set upright what had been upset ... even so is dhamma explained by the Lord in many a figure. I myself, Lord, am going to the Lord for refuge, to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

Kd.6.27.1

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place. At that time there was abundant sugar in Rājagaha. Monks, thinking, “Sugar is allowed by the Lord only to one who is ill, not to one who is not ill”, being scrupulous, did not partake of sugar. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ From here to end of Kd.6.26.8 cf. above, e.g. Kd.1.7.5–Kd.1.7.6. ² For this passage see Kd.1.6.32, etc.

“I allow, monks, sugar for one who is ill, sugar-water for one who is not ill.”¹

THE STORY OF PĀṬALIGĀMA

Then the Lord,² having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Pāṭaligāma³ together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Pāṭaligāma. Lay-followers at Pāṭaligāma heard: “It is said that the Lord has reached Pāṭaligāma.” Then the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma with talk on dhamma as they were sitting down at a respectful distance.

Kd.6.28.1
BD.4.309

Then the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, spoke thus to the Lord⁴: “Lord, may the Lord consent (to come) to our rest-house⁵ together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, having understood the Lord’s consent,⁶ rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, having kept their right sides towards him, approached that rest-house; having approached, having spread that test-house so that a spreading was spread everywhere,⁷ having made ready seats,⁸ having had a water-jar set up, having prepared an oil lamp, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they stood at a respectful distance.

Kd.6.28.2

Vin.1.227

Kd.6.28.3

¹ Note that above, when the monks received a quantity of sugar from Belaṭṭha, the verb used was paribhuñjati, (to make use of). In the story of Kd.6.27.1, it is said that they did not partake of, (na bhuñjanti,) any sugar. ² Chapters 28–30 are, with a few unimportant variations, word for word the same as the Mahāparinibbāna Sutta DN16.1.19–DN16.2.3; DN16.2.16–DN16.2.24. See RHYS DAVIDS’ Introduction to his translation of the Mahāparinibbāna Sutta, pp.xxxiv seq., and his note there at DN16.2.16, thus Vinaya Texts ii.97, n. Also from here to end of 28 is, again with a few minor variations, the same as Ud.85–Ud.90. ³ The modern Patna. On pāṭali, see below, BD.4.312, n.4. ⁴ This passage occurs also at DN.ii.84ff. ⁵ āvasathāgāra, as at Vin.4.17; see BD.2.198 for Buddhaghosa’s interpretation. ⁶ For preamble to the discourse see also MN.i.354, SN.iv.182. ⁷ sabbasanthariṃ santhataṃ āvasathāgāraṃ santharivā. On santharati and santhata see BD.2, Introduction, p.xxiiif. Ud.86 omits santhataṃ. ⁸ All these processes are described at MN-a.iii.18f., Ud-a. 409f.

As they were standing at a respectful distance, the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma spoke thus to the Lord: “The rest-house is spread with a spreading everywhere, Lord, seats are made ready, a water-jar is set up, an oil lamp is prepared; Lord, the Lord does that for which it is now the right time.” Then the Lord, dressing in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached that rest-house together with the Order of monks; having approached, having washed his feet, having entered the rest-house, he sat down leaning against a central pillar facing the east. The Order of monks too, having washed their feet, having entered the rest-house, sat down leaning against the western wall facing the east with the Lord in view. The lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma too, having washed their feet, having entered the rest-house, sat down leaning against the eastern wall, facing the west with the Lord in view.

BD.4.310

Kd.6.28.4

Then the Lord addressed the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, saying: “There are these five disadvantages,¹ householders, to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit. What five? Now, householders, one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, suffers great diminution of wealth owing to sloth; this is the first disadvantage to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit.

Then again, householders, an evil reputation is noised abroad of one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit; this is the second disadvantage ...

Then again, householders, if one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, approaches any company, whether a company of nobles, a company of brahmins, a company of householders, a company of recluses, he approaches it diffidently, being ashamed; this is the third disadvantage

...

“Then again, householders, one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, passes away bewildered; this is the fourth disadvantage ...

“Then again, householders, one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit, at the breaking up of the body after dying arises in the waste, the Bad-bourn, the Downfall, Niraya Hell; this is the fifth disadvantage to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit. These, householders, are the five disadvantages to one of wrong moral habit, falling away from moral habit.

¹ As at AN.iii.252f., DN.ii.85–DN.ii.86, DN.iii.236, Ud.86. Noticed at Vism.54.

“There are these five advantages, householders, to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit. What five? Now, householders, one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, acquires a great mass of wealth owing to zeal; this is the first advantage to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit.

Kd.6.28.5

Vin.1.228

“Then again, householders, a lovely reputation is noised abroad of one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit; this is the second advantage ...

BD.4.311

“Then again, householders, if one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, approaches any company, whether a company of nobles, a company of brahmins, a company of householders, a company of recluses, he approaches it confidently, not being ashamed; this is the third advantage ...

“Then again, householders, one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, passes away unbewildered; this is the fourth advantage ...

“Then again, householders, one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit, at the breaking up of the body after dying arises in the Happy-bourn, in a heaven-world; this is the fifth advantage to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit. These, householders, are the five advantages to one of moral habit, accomplished in moral habit.”

Kd.6.28.6

When the Lord had gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma far into the night with talk on dhamma, he dismissed them, saying: “The night is now far spent, householders; now do that for whatever it is the right time.”

“Yes, Lord,” and the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma, having answered the Lord in assent, rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping their right sides towards him.

Kd.6.28.7

Then the Lord, soon after the lay-followers of Pāṭaligāma had departed, entered into solitude.¹

¹ suññāgāra, see above, Kd.1.78.5, and Minor Anthologies ii, p.107, n.1.

THE STORY OF SUNIDHA AND VASSAKĀRA

Now at that time Sunidha¹ and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, were building a (fortified) town² at Pāṭaligāma for repelling the Vajjis. Then the Lord, getting up at the end of that night towards dawn, saw with deva-sight, pure and surpassing that of men, many³ devatās occupying the sites at Pāṭaligāma. Now in whatever region powerful devatās occupy sites, they bend the minds of powerful kings and the kings' chief ministers to build dwellings there; in whatever region devatās of middling (power) occupy sites, they bend the minds of kings of middling (power), and the kings' chief ministers to build dwellings there; in whatever region devatās of lowly (power) occupy sites, they bend the minds of kings of lowly (power) and the kings' chief ministers to build dwellings there.

BD.4.312

Kd.6.28.8

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: "Now, who, Ānanda, are these who are building a (fortified) town at Pāṭaligāma?"

Vin.1.229

"Sunidha and Vassakāra, Lord, chief ministers in Magadha, ... for repelling the Vajjis."

"As though, Ānanda, having consulted together with the Devas of the Thirty, even so, Ānanda, do Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, build a (fortified) town at Pāṭaligāma for repelling the Vajjis. Now I, Ānanda, getting up at the end of this night towards dawn, saw with deva-sight ... in whatever region devatās of lowly (power) occupy sites, they bend the minds of kings of lowly (power) and the kings' chief ministers to build dwellings there. Ānanda, as far as the ariyan region⁴ (extends), as far as there is trading,⁵ this will be a leading town, Pāṭaliputta,⁶ (where there was) the breaking of the seed-boxes.¹ But, Ānanda, there will be three dangers to Pāṭaliputta: from fire or from water or from internal dissension.”²

¹ Sunidha at DN.ii.86 and Ud.87. ² nagara, see BD.2.63, n.2. ³ sambahulā, often in Vinaya when used of monks being equivalent to gaṇa, a group of from two to four monks. DN.ii.87, Ud.88 say sambahulā devatāyo saḥassassa, many devatās (in companies) of a thousand.

⁴ ariya āyatana. Cf. AN.iii.441. Vin-a.1095 says "as far as the place where ariyan people go to". ⁵ vaṇṇipatha. ⁶ The modern Patna. The name is omitted at Ud.88.

Kd.6.28.9

Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, approached the Lord; having approached they exchanged friendly greetings with the Lord; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, they stood at a respectful distance. As they were standing at a respectful distance, Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, spoke thus to the Lord: “May the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with us today.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, departed³ having understood the Lord’s consent.

BD.4.313

Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, having had sumptuous solid food and soft food prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the food distribution⁴ of Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha; having approached, he sat down together with the Order of monks on the appointed seat. Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, having with their own hands served and satisfied with sumptuous food, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance; and as Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, were sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord gave thanks in these verses:

Kd.6.28.10

¹ I follow Pali-English Dictionary (under puṭa) in thinking that the translation of puṭabhedana at Dialogues of the Buddha, ii.92 is wrong: “centre for interchange of all kinds of wares”, although Pāṭaliputta had a reputation as a trading centre, on which moreover the Commentaries lay stress, Vin-a.1096 reading bhaṇḍapuṭabhedanaṭṭhānaṃ, bhaṇḍagaṇḍikānaṃ mocanaṭṭhānānaṃ, a place for undoing goods and merchandise, a place for opening goods and wares; DN-a.ii.541, Ud-a.422 say much the same and add: “if people do not get goods in all Jambudīpa they will get them here.” But Pāṭaligāma was so called “because on the day of its foundation several patali-shoots sprouted forth from the ground” (Dictionary of Pali Proper Names). According to Waddell (E.R.E., art: Patna) the pāṭali-tree is the trumpet-flower tree (Bignonia suaveolens). Pāṭaliputta is also called “the city of flowers”, Pupphapura (Mahāvamsa iv.31, Dipavamsa xi.28), and Kusumapura (Mahābodhivaṃsa p.153). Vinaya Texts ii.102 does not attempt a translation. Minor Anthologies ii.108 has “the place where men shall open up their bales of merchandise.” ² On the event prophesied here. Pāṭaliputta’s becoming the capital of the Magadha empire, and the possibility of the notice of the event’s late insertion into the text, see Vinaya Texts ii.102, n and Dialogues of the Buddha ii.92, n.3. ³ DN.ii.88, Ud.89 say they went to their own residence, āvasatha. ⁴ parivesanā; DN.ii.88, Ud.89 read āvasatha. Cf. Snp.p.13, SN.i.172.

Kd.6.28.11

“Wherever the prudent man shall take up his abode, Having offered food to those here of moral habit,
 good Brahma-farers,
 If he makes an offering to those¹ devatās who may be there—
 These revered, do revere, honoured, do honour him.
 Hence they sympathise with him,
 as a mother with her own child.
 The man with whom devatās sympathise, ever sees good luck.”

Vin.1.230

Then the Lord, having in these verses given thanks to Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, rising from his seat, departed.

Kd.6.28.12

BD.4.314

Then Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers in Magadha, following close behind the Lord, thought: “By whichever gate the recluse Gotama goes out today, that shall be called Gotama’s Gate; by whichever ford he crosses the river Ganges, that shall be called Gotama’s Ford.” Accordingly the gate by which the Lord departed came to be called Gotama’s Gate.

Then the Lord approached the river Ganges. Now at that time the river Ganges was full, level with the banks, so that a crow could drink² (from it). Since they were desirous of going from the hither to the further (bank),³ some people looked about for a boat, some looked about for a float,⁴ others put together a raft.⁵

Kd.6.28.13

The Lord saw these people, of whom some were looking about for a boat, some were looking about for a float, others were putting together a raft since they were desirous of going from the hither to the further (bank). Seeing them, as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so did he, vanishing from the hither

¹ Cf. Thig.307, Thig.211; Mi.294. ² As at MN.i.435; SN.ii.134; DN.i.244; AN.iii.27. ³ orā pāraṃ; DN: aparāparaṃ; Ud: apārā paraṃ, which WOODWARD (Minor Anthologies ii.109, n.4) proposes to correct to DN reading. ⁴ uḷumpa. This may be a wooden or a bamboo raft. Vin-a.1096 says that it is made, having knocked in pegs. ⁵ kulla. Vin-a.1096 says that it is made, having put together reeds and so on.

bank¹ of the river Ganges, reappear² on the further bank together with the Order of monks. Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this solemn utterance:

“Those cross the deeps, the rivers,³ making a bridge, spanning the swamps.
See! people tie their rafts—but crossed over⁴ are the wise.”⁵

ON THE TRUTHS AT KOṬIGĀMA

Then the Lord approached Koṭigāma. The Lord stayed there at Koṭigāma. Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, it is by not understanding, not penetrating the four ariyan truths that there is this long long running-on and faring-on both for me and for you. What four? Monks, it is through not understanding, not penetrating the ariyan truth of ill that there is this long long running-on and faring-on both for me and for you. Monks, it is through not understanding, not penetrating the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill, the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill, the ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill that there is this long long running-on and faring-on both for me and for you.

“Therefore, monks, if the ariyan truth of ill is understood, is penetrated, if the ariyan truth of the uprising of ill ... if the ariyan truth of the stopping of ill ... if the ariyan truth of the course leading to the stopping of ill is understood and penetrated, then cut off is the craving for becoming,⁶ destroyed is the conduit for becoming,⁷ there is not now again-becoming.”

Not seeing the four ariyan truths as they really are Long is the journey fared-on in birth after birth;

¹ orimatīre. ² paccuṭṭhāsi, instead of the more usual pāturahosi. ³ sara, here a river, Vin-a.1096. ⁴ tiṇṇa, a technical term frequent in the Suttas, meaning “crossed over” the four-fold flood of sense-pleasures, becoming, false view and ignorance, or over some other undesirable state, and so “crossed over” Māra’s stream, a river of death. See my Man Perfected, Ch. 8. ⁵ To here, from beginning of Kd.6.28.1, the same as Ud.85, with a few minor variations. ⁶ bhavataṇhā. ⁷ bhavanetti.

Kd.6.29.1

BD.4.315

Kd.6.29.2

Vin.1.231

When these are seen, removed is the conduit for becoming,
The root of ill cut off, there is not now again-becoming.¹

THE STORY OF AMBAPĀLĪ

Kd.6.30.1

Then the courtesan Ambapālī² heard³: “They say that the Lord has reached Koṭṭigāma”. Then the courtesan Ambapālī, having had very magnificent vehicles harnessed, having mounted a magnificent vehicle, went off with the very magnificent vehicles from Vesālī to see the Lord. Having gone by vehicle as far as the ground was (suitable) for a vehicle, she alighted from the vehicle and approached the Lord on foot; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance.

Kd.6.30.2

The Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the courtesan Ambapālī with talk on dhamma as she was sitting down at a respectful distance. The courtesan Ambapālī, having been, gladdened ... delighted with talk on dhamma by the Lord, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. The courtesan Ambapālī, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from her seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him.

BD.4.316

THE STORY OF THE LICCHAVĪS

Kd.6.30.3

Then the Licchavis of Vesālī heard: “They say that the Lord has reached Koṭṭigāma”. Then the Licchavis of Vesālī, having had very magnificent vehicles harnessed, having (each) mounted a magnificent vehicle, went off with the very magnificent vehicles from Vesālī to see the Lord. Some Licchavis were dark green,¹ dark green in colour, their clothes were dark green, their ornaments were dark green. Some Licchavis were yellow, yellow in colour ... their ornaments were yellow. Some Licchavis were red, red in colour ... their ornaments were red. Some Licchavis were white, white in colour, their clothes were white, their ornaments were white. Then the courtesan Ambapālī drove up against the many young Licchavis, pole to pole, yoke to yoke, wheel to wheel, axle to axle.

¹ To here from 28.1=DN.ii.84–91. ² Her verses are at Thig. 252–Thig.270. See also Thig-a.206–Thig-a.7, Thig-a.213; Thi-ap.613ff. She was the mother of Vimala-Koṇḍañña, while Bimbisāra is said to have been his father, Thag-a.156. Mentioned below, BD.4.379. ³ From here to Kd.6.30.6=DN.ii.95. See Dialogues of the Buddha ii.102, n. for some remarks on the discrepancies shown by the two versions in their localisation of the incidents narrated.

Then these Licchavis spoke thus to the courtesan Ambapālī: “Now then,² why do you, Ambapālī, drive up against the many young Licchavis pole to pole, yoke to yoke, wheel to wheel, axle to axle?”

“Indeed, young gentlemen,³ it is because the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head is invited by me for the morrow.”

“Now then, Ambapālī, give up this meal to us for a hundred thousand.”⁴

“But if, young gentlemen, you were to give up Vesālī with its produce,⁵ I would not give up this meal.”

Then these Licchavis snapped their fingers,⁶ saying: “Truly we are beaten by this mango-girl,⁷ truly we are defeated by this mango-girl.”

Then these Licchavis approached the Lord. The Lord saw these Licchavis coming from afar, and seeing them, he addressed the monks, saying:

“By whatever monks, monks, the Devas of the Thirty have not been seen before, look, monks, at the Licchavi company, look again, monks, at the Licchavi company, compare, monks, the Licchavi company to the company of the Devas of the Thirty.” Then these Licchavis, having gone by vehicle as far as the ground ... (as in Kd.6.30.1, Kd.6.30.2 down to:) “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with us on the morrow?”

“I have promised, Licchavis, (to take) a meal with the courtesan Ambapālī to-morrow.” Then these Licchavis snapped their fingers, saying:

¹ nila is defined at Vin.4.120. Vin-a.1096 says that these colours are for the sake of distinguishing the Licchavis. They are not “dark green” and so on by nature, but are coloured with a dark green cosmetic—as some of the faces of the Ajanta frescoes are meant to be. ² je. ³ ayyaputta. ⁴ Probably kahāpaṇas are to be understood. ⁵ sāhāra = sa-āhāra, with its food. Vin-a.1097, DN-a.545 explain by sa-janapada. No justification for “with its subject territory” of Vinaya Texts ii.107, Dialogues of the Buddha ii.103. ⁶ aṅguli pothesurū. Vin-a.1097 explains by cālesurū, to move, to shake. ⁷ ambakā, with probably intended a play on her name, itself connected with the mango-grove she owned. See Dialogues of the Buddha ii.103, n.1; Vinaya Texts ii.107, n.

“Truly we are beaten by this mango-girl; truly we are defeated by this mango-girl.”

Then these Licchavis, having approved of what the Lord had said and having given thanks for it, rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping their right sides towards him.

Kd.6.30.6

Then the Lord, having stayed in Koṭigāma for as long as he found suiting, approached Nātikā. The Lord stayed there at Nātikā in the Brick Residence. Then the courtesan Ambapālī, having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night in her own park, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: ... (as in Kd.6.28.10 down to:¹) ... sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, the courtesan Ambapālī spoke thus to the Lord: “I, Lord, would give this Ambapālī Grove to the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head.”

Vin.1.233

The Lord accepted the park. Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the courtesan Ambapālī with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat,² approached the Great Grove. The Lord stayed there at Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Hall with the Peaked Gable.

BD.4.318

Told is the Portion for Repeating on the Licchavis

THE STORY OF GENERAL SĪHA

Now at that time³ many distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in a mote-hall, were in many a figure speaking praise of the awakened one, praise of dhamma, praise of the Order. Now at that time the general Sīha,⁴ a disciple of the Jains,⁵ came to be sitting in that company. Then it occurred to the general Sīha: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, a perfected one, a wholly awakened one, since these distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in the mote-hall, are in many a figure speaking praise of the awakened one, praise of dhamma, praise of the Order. Suppose I were to go up to see this Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened one?”

¹ Replace “Sunidha and Vassakāra, chief ministers of Magadha” by “the courtesan Ambapālī,” and “good Gotama” by “Lord”. ² To here from Kd.6.30.1 is in all material respects the same as DN.ii.95. The DN version says the Lord went to Beluva. ³ From there to nearly the end of Kd.6.31.14 = AN.iv.179. ⁴ Cf. AN.iii.38f., AN.iv.79. His interest in giving gifts may have been due to Gotama’s talk to him (below Kd.6.31.11) just after he became a lay-follower.

⁵ Nigaṇṭhas. Literal meaning “without bonds”. See GS.iv.124, n.2.

Kd.6.31.2

Then the general Sīha approached Nātaputta the Jain¹; having approached, he spoke thus to Nataputta the Jain: “I want, honoured sir,² to go along to see the recluse Gotama.”

“But how can you, Sīha, being one who asserts an ought- to-be-done,³ go along to see the recluse Gotama who asserts an ought-not-to-be-done⁴? For, Sīha, the recluse Gotama asserts an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done and in that he trains⁵ disciples.” Then that which had been the strong aspiration of general Sīha for going⁶ to see the Lord abated.

BD.4.319

Kd.6.31.3

Then a second time did the distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in the mote-hall ... And a second time did it occur to the general Sīha: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, a perfected one ... Suppose I were to go up to see this Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened one?” And a second time did the general Sīha approach Nātaputta the Jain “... and in that trains disciples”. And a second time did that abate which had been the strong aspiration of the general Sīha for going to see the Lord. And a third time it occurred to the general Sīha: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened one, since these distinguished Licchavis, sitting together assembled in the mote-hall, are in many a figure speaking praise of the awakened one, praise of dhamma, praise of the Order. What can these Jains do to me whether I have asked for permission or have not asked for permission? Suppose that I, although I have not asked for permission from the Jains, were to go along to see this Lord, perfected one, wholly awakened

Vin.1.234

¹ The leader of the Nigaṇṭhas, identified by Bühler and Jacobi with Mahāvīra (Vinaya Texts ii.109, n.1). His views are given at DN.i.57. ² bhante. ³ kiriyaṅvāda. This and akiriyaṅvāda each had its own adherents. Gotama put his own interpretation on each theory, see below Kd.6.31.6 and Vin.3.2. Thus he is able to say, as at AN.i.62, kiriyaṅvādī c’ahaṃ akiriyaṅvādī ca. At Vin.1.71 he is reputed to say of the Jaṭilas that they are kiriyaṅvādino and kammavādino, and it is apparently for this reason that he grants them a concession. ⁴ akiriyaṅvāda. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Some Pali Words, Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies, vol.iv, No.2, July 1939, p.119ff. ⁵ vineti, to lead away, and so to pervert, divert, avert. Cf. below Kd.6.34.12, where in the same terms leaders of other sects try to dissuade Meṇḍaka from going to see the Lord. ⁶ gamikābhisamkhāra. Cf. pabbajjābhisamkhāra at Vin.1.194 (above, Kd.5.13.2).

one?”

Kd.6.31.4

Then the general Sīha with some five hundred chariots departed from Vesālī in broad daylight to see the Lord. Having gone by vehicle as far as the ground was (suitable) for a vehicle, having alighted from the vehicle, he approached the Lord on foot; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, general Sīha spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, I have heard this: ‘The recluse Gotama affirms an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done, and in that trains disciples.’ I assume that these, Lord, who say: ‘The recluse Gotama affirms an ought-not-to-be-done ... and in that trains disciples,’ are, Lord, asserting (fairly) what the Lord affirms,¹ and are not misrepresenting the Lord by what is not fact, but are putting forth a doctrine which conforms to² his doctrine. I assume that no one who is his fellow dhamma-man, a holder of his views, comes to a position incurring blame. Indeed, we, Lord, do not want to misrepresent the Lord.”³

BD.4.320

Kd.6.31.5

“There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say⁴: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts an ought-to-be-done⁵ ... trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts annihilation ... trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who detests, he teaches a doctrine of detestation, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is a leader away, he teaches a doctrine of leading away, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is a “burner up”, he teaches a doctrine of “burning up”, and in this he trains disciples.’ There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is not destined to another (kind of) becoming, he teaches a doctrine of no other kind of becoming, and in this he trains disciples. There is, Sīha, a way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is confident,¹ he teaches a doctrine of confidence,² and in this he trains disciples.’

¹ bhagavato vuttavādī. ² anudhamma, explained by anukāraṇa, perhaps meaning “minor tenet”, at Vin-a.1097, DN-a.349, MN-a.iii.46. ³ Stock, e.g. at DN.i.161, DN.iii.115; MN.i.368, MN.i.482; AN.i.161; SN.ii.33. SN.iii.6, SN.iv.340; Vin.2.297. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.2-Vin.3.3 for this passage, and for notes see BD.1.4-BD.1.6. ⁵ Not included at Vin.3.2. Cf. AN.i.62.

Kd.6.31.6

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who asserts an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, assert of misconduct in body, speech and thought that it ought not to be done; I assert of manifold evil and wrong states (of mind) that they ought not to be done. This is the way, Sīha, in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts what ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of what ought-not-to-be-done and in this he trains disciples.’

Vin.1.235

BD.4.321

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts what ought-to-be-done ... trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, assert of good conduct in body, speech and thought that it ought to be done; of manifold right states (of mind) that they ought to be done. This is the way, Sīha ...

Kd.6.31.7

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama asserts annihilation ... trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, assert the annihilation of passion, hatred, stupidity; I assert the annihilation of manifold evil and wrong states (of mind). This is the way, Sīha ...

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who detests, he teaches a doctrine of detestation and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed, Sīha, I detest misconduct in body, speech and thought; I teach a doctrine of detestation for entering upon manifold evil wrong states (of mind). This is the way, Sīha ...

Kd.6.31.8

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who is a leader away, he teaches a doctrine of leading away and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, teach a doctrine of the leading away of passion, hatred, stupidity; I teach a doctrine of the leading away of manifold evil wrong states (of mind). This is the way, Sīha ...

¹ Not included at Vin.3.2. “Confident” is Pali assattha, rendered at Gs.iv.127 “found consolation”. ² assāsa. Cf. one who has assāsa in dhammavinaya at Sn.ii.50; translated at ks.ii.38 as “comfort”.

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who is a “burner-up”, he teaches a doctrine of burning up and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, speak of evil wrong states which are searing: misconduct in body, speech and thought. He for whom, Sīha, evil wrong states that axe searing are destroyed, cut off at the root, made like a palm-tree, so utterly done away with that they can come to no future existence—him I call one who is a ‘burner-up’. For a Truth-finder, Sīha, evil wrong states that are searing ... existence. This is the way, Sīha, in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who is a “burner-up”, he teaches a doctrine of burning-up, and in this he trains disciples.’

BD.4.322

Vin.1.236

Kd.6.31.9

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one ... could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who is not destined to another (kind of) becoming, he teaches a doctrine of no other (kind of) becoming and in this he trains disciples’? He for whom, Sīha, future conception in a womb, becoming again and rebirth are destroyed, cut off at the root, made like a palm-tree, so utterly done away with that they can come to no future existence—him I call one not destined to another (kind of) becoming. For a Truth-finder, Sīha, future conception ... can come to no future existence. This is the way, Sīha ...

“And what, Sīha, is the way in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is one who is confident, he teaches a doctrine of confidence and in this he trains disciples’? Indeed I, Sīha, am confident with the highest confidence,¹ I teach a doctrine of confidence and in this I train disciples.² This is the way, Sīha, in which one speaking truly of me could say: ‘The recluse Gotama is confident, he teaches a doctrine of confidence and in this he trains disciples.’”

Kd.6.31.10

And when he had spoken thus,³ Sīha, the general, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! ...⁴ May the Lord accept me as a ¹ AN-a.iv.98 says “with the highest confidence in the four ways and the four fruits”. ² Cf. DN.iii.39 where wanderers are recorded to ask Gotama the name of the doctrine in which he trains disciples and in which they, trained and attained to confidence, assāsa, acknowledge a desire for (or a support in) the Brahma-faring. DN-a.iii.835 explains assāsa by tutṭhi, joy, and somanassa, happiness. ³ From here to middle of Kd.6.31.12 = MN.i.378f., in connection with Upāli the householder. ⁴ Stock; as at Kd.1.7.10.

lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

“Now, Sīha, make a proper investigation. Proper investigation is good in the case of well-known men like yourself.”¹

“I, Lord, am even exceedingly pleased, satisfied with that which the Lord said to me: ‘Now, Sīha, make a proper investigation ... like yourself.’ For if, Lord, members of other sects had secured me as a disciple, they would have paraded a banner all round Vesālī, saying: ‘Sīha, the general, has joined our discipleship.’ But then the Lord spoke to me thus: ‘Now, Sīha, make a proper investigation ... like yourself.’ So I, Lord, go for a second time to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

BD.4.323

“For a long time, Sīha, your family² has been a well-spring³ to the Nigaṇṭhas. You will bethink you to give alms to those who approach you?”

Kd.6.31.11

“I, Lord, am even exceedingly pleased, satisfied with that which the Lord said to me: ‘For a long time, Sīha, your family ... those who approach you? I have heard, Lord: The recluse Gotama speaks thus: ‘Gifts should be given to me only, not to others should gifts be given; gifts should be given to my disciples only, not to the disciples of others should gifts be given. What is given to me is alone of great fruit, what is given to others is not of great fruit; what is given to my disciples is alone of great fruit, what is given to the disciples of others is not of great fruit.’ But then the Lord urged upon me giving to the Nigaṇṭhas too. Indeed, Lord, we shall know the right time for that. So I, Lord, go for a third time to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

Vin.1.237

Then the Lord talked a progressive talk⁴ to Sīha, the general, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven; he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of Sīha, the general, was ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened

Kd.6.31.12

¹ As at MN.i.379, AN.iv.185. ² kula, explained by nivesana, a dwelling, at Vin-a.1097, MN-a.iii.89. ³ opānabhūta. See Dialogues of the Buddha i.177, n.3 for further references.

⁴ As at Kd.1.75–Kd.1.76.

ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Sīha, the general, that “whatever is of the nature to uprise all that is of the nature to stop”. Then Sīha, the general, as one who¹ had seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, who had crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, who had attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord²: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Sīha, the general, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, departed keeping his right side towards him.

BD.4.324

Then Sīha, the general, enjoined a certain man, saying: “Go, good fellow, find out if there is meat to hand.”³ Then Sīha, the general, towards the end of that night having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of Sīha, the general; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

Kd.6.31.13

Now at that time many Nigaṇṭhas, waving their arms, were moaning⁴ from carriage road⁵ to carriage road, from cross road⁶ to cross road in Vesālī: “Today a fat beast,⁷ killed by Sīha, the general, is made into a meal for the recluse Gotama, the recluse Gotama makes use of this meat, knowing that it was killed on purpose (for him),⁸ that the deed was (done) for his sake.”⁹ Then a certain man approached Sīha, the general; having approached he whispered into Sīha, the general’s ear:

“Please, honoured sir, you should know that many of these Nigaṇṭhas, waying their arms, are moaning from carriage road to carriage road, from cross road to cross road in Vesālī:

BD.4.325

¹ As at Kd.1.6.32. ² To here from Kd.6.31.10 = MN.i.378. ³ As at Vin.1.217 (above, Kd.6.23.2). ⁴ kandanti. ⁵ Defined at Vin.4.271 (BD.3.268). ⁶ Defined at Vin.4.271 (BD.3.268). ⁷ pasu, meaning uncertain, but not necessarily an animal of the cow-tribe. AN-a.iv.102 says: “a fat beast with a large body such as an elk or buffalo or pig”. Vin-a.363 says of pasuka that all four-footed animals beginning with the elephant should be called pasuka. ⁸ Cf. Ja.ii.262: the Telovādājātaka was spoken concerning Sīha. ⁹ paṭiccakamma.

‘Today a fat beast ... the deed was (done) for his sake’.”

“Enough, master, for a long time now these venerable ones have been desiring dispraise of the awakened one, have been desiring dispraise of dhamma, have been desiring dispraise of the Order. But these venerable ones, bad, vain, lying, do not harm this Lord because they are misrepresenting him by what is not fact—why, even we, for the sake of our livelihood, would not intentionally deprive a living thing of life.”¹

Kd.6.31.14

Then Siha, the general, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Siha, the general, with talk on dhamma as he was sitting down at a respectful distance, rising from his seat, departed.² Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.1.238

“Monks, one should not knowingly make use of meat killed on purpose (for one). Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, fish and meat that are quite pure in three respects: if they are not seen, heard, suspected (to have been killed on purpose for a monk).”³

ALLOWANCE FOR A PLACE FOR WHAT IS ALLOWABLE

Now at that time Vesālī was well off for food, crops were good, almsfood was easy to obtain, and it was easy to keep oneself going by gleaning and by favour. Then as the Lord was meditating in seclusion a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Those things which were allowed by me to monks when food was scarce, crops bad, and almsfood difficult to obtain: what was cured

Kd.6.32.1

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.61. ² To here from Kd.6.31.1=AN.iv.179. ³ Cf. Vin.3.172 (BD.1.298) where Devadatta, wanting a schism, tries to make the Lord say that monks should eat no fish or meat. But Gotama answers him that fish and meat are “pure” if they have the three points which are also mentioned above. Macchamaṃsa is I think not “the flesh of fish” (as at GS.iv.130, n.1) but “fish and meat”. The story leading up to this allowance is concerned with meat; and many instances show that monks ate this without incurring criticism or blame.

BD.4.326 indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by oneself¹; receiving (formally) what was picked up²; what was taken back from there³; what was accepted before a meal⁴; what grows in a wood, what grows in a lotus-tank⁵—do the monks still make use of these things today?”

Then the Lord, arising from his meditation towards evening, addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Those things which were allowed by me to monks when food was scarce ... do the monks still make use of these things today?”

Kd.6.32.2 “They make use of them, Lord.”

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Those things, monks, allowed by me to monks when food was scarce, crops bad and almsfood difficult to obtain: what was cured indoors ... what grows in a lotus-tank—these things I object to from this day forth. Monks you should not make use of what is cured indoors, cooked indoors, cooked by yourselves; of (formally) receiving what is picked up (by you). Whoever should make use of (any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor should you, monks, having eaten, being satisfied, make use of food that is not left over if it is brought back from there; if it is accepted before a meal; if it grows in a wood, grows in a lotus-tank. Whoever should make use of (any of these things) should be dealt with according to the rule.”⁶

Kd.6.33.1

Now at that time country people, having loaded much salt and oil, and husked rice and solid food into wagons,⁷ having made an enclosure for the wagons in a porch outside a monastery, waited, thinking: “When our turn comes, then we will make a meal,”⁸ but a great cloud came up. Then these people approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

Vin.1.239

“Now, honoured Ānanda, having loaded much salt ... solid food into wagons, they are standing (there), but a great cloud has come up. What line of conduct, honoured Ānanda, should be followed by us?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.6.33.2

BD.4.327

¹ Kd.6.17.7. ² Kd.6.17.9. ³ Kd.6.18.4. ⁴ Kd.6.19.2. ⁵ Kd.6.20.4. ⁶ Bu-Pc.35. ⁷ As at Kd.6.24.1, Kd.6.34.17. ⁸ As at Kd.6.24.1, Kd.6.34.17.

“Well then, Ānanda, the Order having agreed upon a place for what is allowable¹ near² a dwelling-place: a dwelling-place or a curved house or a long house or a mansion or a cave,³ let there be kept⁴ there whatever the Order desires. And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon such and such a dwelling-place as a place for what is allowable. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon such and such a dwelling-place as a place for what is allowable. If the agreement on such and such a dwelling-place as a place for what is allowable is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such a dwelling-place is agreed upon by the Order as a place for what is allowable. Therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Now at that time the people boiled conjeys, boiled rice, prepared soups, cut up meats, chopped wood, just there at a place for what was allowable and which had been agreed upon. As the Lord was getting up at the end of the night towards dawn he heard a loud noise, a great noise, a noise (like) the cawing of crows,⁵ and hearing it, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “What, Ānanda, is this loud noise, this great noise, this noise (like) the cawing of crows?”

Kd.6.33.3

Kd.6.33.4

¹ kappiyabhūmi. The commentary does not explain this word, but in commenting on the three kinds of places allowed at the end of Kd.6.33.4. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1098f., uses the word kappiyakuṭi, hut for what is allowable. It seems probable that the kappiyabhūmi was a place for doing certain operations some of which were allowable only in times of scarcity: cooking for oneself, cooking indoors and curing indoors. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1099 appears to connect these with a kappiyabhūmi. It should however be noticed that at Kd.3.5.9 the “kitchen” which a lay follower may build for himself replaces the kappiyakuṭi which he may build for an Order or a member of it at Kd.3.5.6. For in normal times monks did not cook, and hence a place for doing allowable operations (of this nature) would be superfluous. A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p.260 calls kappiyabhūmi an “outhouse site”. ² paccantima. Vin-a.1098 says this is only an expression. ³ For these five “abodes” cf. above, Kd.1.30.4 and notes. ⁴ vāsetu. ⁵ = Vin.4.82.

BD.4.328 “At present, Lord, people boil conjeys ... chop sticks just there at a place for what is allowable and which has been agreed upon. It is this loud noise, great noise, noise (like) the cawing of crows that the Lord (hears).”¹ Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one should not make use of a place for what is allowable that has been agreed upon.² Whoever should make use of it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, three places for what is allowable: that depending upon a proclamation,³ that connected with what is fortuitous,⁴ that (given by) a householder.”⁵

Kd.6.33.5

¹ so eso bhagavā uccāsaddo ... kākoravasaddo. One would have expected bhante here instead of bhagavā, and the sentence then to be translated: it is this, Lord, that is the loud noise ... ² Presumably there is the risk of being in the lay-people’s way and also of being disturbed by the noise they make. ³ ussāvanantika. Ussāvana is not a proclamation in a technical sense and has nothing to do with proceedings at formal acts of the Order. But Buddhaghosa explains, Vin-a.1098, that having made all preparations with pillars, walls and stones, the people utter the phrase (vācam nicchārenti) “We are making a kappiyakuṭi”. The two Commentaries which he quotes also mention a kappiyakuṭi as being spoken about or resolved upon. Antika is used in the same sense as above at Kd.7.1.7. ⁴ gonisādika. Cf. gonisādi at Vin.3.46, where a village arranged “fortuitously” comes into the definition of village. Gonisādi is not an ox-stall (Vinaya Texts ii.121). Vin-a.298 explains that as two or three cows sit down here and there, so, having built two or three houses, they are arranged here and there. The idea is that something is left to a haphazard element. Vin-a.1099 explains that there are two kinds of gonisādika: one of the monastery (type), one of the dwelling-place. Wherever neither the monastery itself is fenced in nor the lodgings, this is the monastery-type of what is “fortuitous”. Wherever all or some of the lodgings are fenced in but not the monastery, this is the dwelling-place type. So in both kinds the non-fencing in of the monastery is a criterion. The commentary does not say which kind is intended here; perhaps both are. ⁵ gahapati. Vin-a.1099 says, “people having built a residence say, ‘we are giving a kappiyakutl, make use of it’—this is called gahapati. It means this too if they say, ‘We are giving (something) to build a kappiyakuṭi’”. Vin-a on this whole passage uses kappiyakuṭi and never kappiya-bhūmi. Cf. kappiyakuṭiyo which, among other things, Anāthapiṇḍika caused to be built in the Jeta Grove, at Vin.2.159, and the kappiyakuṭi which a lay disciple might cause to be built for an Order, at Vin.1.139 (above, BD.4.186).

Now at that time the venerable Yasoja¹ came to be ill. Medicines were conveyed for him. Monks put these outside, but vermin ate them and also thieves carried them off.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to make use of a place for what is allowable³ and which has been agreed upon. I allow four places for what is allowable: that depending upon a proclamation, that connected with what is fortuitous, that given by a householder, that which is agreed upon."

BD.4.329

Vin.1.240

Told is the Twenty-fourth Portion for Repeating

THE STORY OF THE HOUSEHOLDER MENḌAKA

Now at that time the householder Menḍaka⁴ lived in the town of Bhaddiya.⁵ He came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: having washed his head, having had a granary swept, he sat down just outside the door, and a shower of grain, having fallen down through the air, filled the granary. His wife⁶ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: having sat down beside only one bowl of the capacity of an *ālḥaka*¹ and one helping of curry and condiments, she served food² to slaves, workmen and servants³; not until she got up was it exhausted. His son⁴ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: having taken hold of only one purse containing a thousand,⁵ he gave six months' wages to (each) slave, workman and servant; not until he removed his hand was it⁶ exhausted.

¹ Verses at Thag.243–Thag.245. There is a story about five hundred monks with Yasoja at their head at Ud.24–Ud.27. The lord dismissed them for making a great noise; they spent the rains in earnest endeavour and realised the three knowledges; they were then able to spend a whole night in as concentrated meditation as the Lord himself. Vin-a.1098 says "At the conclusion of the Kapilasutta he (Yasoja) was the chief person of the five hundred who had gone forth". Snp-a.i.312, Dhp-a.iv.45 call these five hundred "fishermen's sons". See Dhp-a.iv.37ff. (Kapilamacchavatthu), Snp-a.i.305ff. (both of which tell about the golden fish, Kapila), Ud-a.179. Psalms of the Bretheren, p.166 for the circumstances in which the Kapilasutta was spoken to Yasoja. This Sutta is referred to at Dhp-a.iv.42 as being in the Suttanipāta. Kapilasutta is there (Snp.p.49) a variant reading for Dhammacariyasutta, but the Commentary (Snp-a.i.312) refers to it as Kapilasutta. ² As at Kd.6.17.7. ³ This paragraph probably refers to allowable medicines. See too Vin-a.1101 which refers to sappi, ghee, which was a medicine. ⁴ Father of Dhanañjaya, who was Visākhā's father. At Dhp-a.i.384 Menḍaka is called "householder", at Dhp-a.i.385, Vism.383 "merchant", setṭhi, and he and his wife, son, daughter-in-law and slave are said to be five people of great merit. His story is told in detail at Dhp-a.iii.363ff. Cf. Dhp-a.iv.203, Dhp-a.iv.217. According to Dhp-a.iii.363 the Dhammapada verse (252) was spoken by the Lord while he was staying in the Jātiyā Grove at Bhaddiya concerning Menḍaka. ⁵ In the Aṅga kingdom. ⁶ Her name was Candapadumā (because she came to have the moon and the lotus represented on the palms of her hands and the soles of her feet), Dhp-a.i.385, Dhp-a.iii.363; or Candapadumasirī at Vism.383. Her meritorious act is noticed at Dhp-a.iii.369.

BD.4.330

Kd.6.34.2

His daughter-in-law⁷ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power; having sat down beside only one basket of the capacity of four *doṇas*⁸ she gave six months' food⁹ to (each) slave, workman and servant; not until she got up was it exhausted. His slave¹⁰ came to have this kind of eminence in psychic power: when he ploughed with one ploughshare seven furrows came from (it).¹¹

Kd.6.34.3

Kd.6.34.4

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha heard: "They say that the householder Meṇḍaka is living in our kingdom in the town of Bhaddiya. He has this kind of eminence in psychic power ... (as in Kd.6.34.1, Kd.6.34.2) ... when he ploughs with one ploughshare seven furrows come from (it)."

Kd.6.34.5

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha addressed a certain chief minister who was concerned with all the affairs,¹² saying: "It is said, my good man,¹ that the householder Meṇḍaka is living in our kingdom in the town of Bhaddiya; he has this kind of psychic power: having washed his head ... seven furrows come from (it). Go along, my good man, and find out. When you have seen, it will be the same as if I myself saw.”

¹ ālḥakathālikā. See BD.1.103, n.1. ² bhatta can also mean rice, the staple dish, but here in all likelihood meaning food, for probably no implication that she served rice without the curry and condiments is intended. ³ dāsa-kammakara-porisā. Same compound at AN.i.145, AN.i.206, AN.ii.78, AN.iii.45 (puttadārādāsa-), AN.iii.260. AN-a.ii.241 explains as "slaves as well as workmen earning a daily wage of food, and people living in dependence on (one)", jīvamānapurisā. See definitions of "slave" and "workman" at BD.3.180. ⁴ Called Dhanañjaya the merchant, setṭhi, at Dhp-a.i.386ff., Dhp-a.iii.363, Vism.383, and Meṇḍaka's eldest son at Dhp-a.i.385. His psychic power is referred to at Dhp-a.iii.370. He was lent by Bimbisāra to Pasenadi; and the latter built Sāketa to house Dhanañjaya's retinue during the night's halt on the way to Sāvathī, Dhp-a.i.386f. Dhanañjaya was the father of Visākhā and of her youngest sister, Sujātā, in respect of whom the Sujāta-Jātaka Ja.269 was told. ⁵ The word kahāpaṇa supplied at Dhp-a.iii.370. ⁶ I.e., the contents of the purse. ⁷ Called Sumanādevī at Dhp-a.i.384, Sumanadevī at Dhp-a.iii.363, Vism.383. She was Dhanañjaya's chief wife, aggamahesi, Dhp-a.i.384, and Visākhā's mother, SN-a.i.148. Her act of psychic power referred to at Dhp-a.iii.370. ⁸ A measure of capacity, generally equivalent to four ālḥakas, see BD.1.103, n.. ⁹ bhatta, see above, BD.4.329, n.7. ¹⁰ Called Puṇṇa at Dhp-a.i.385, Dhp-a.iii.363, Vism.383. His psychic gift referred to at Dhp-a.iii.370. ¹¹ According to Dhp-a.iii.370 one in the middle and three at each side. ¹² sabbatthaka mahāmatta as at Vin.3.249.

Vin.1.241

“So be it, your majesty”, and that chief minister, having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, marched forth² for Bhaddiya with a four-winged army.³

Kd.6.34.6

BD.4.331

In due course he approached Bhaddiya and Meṇḍaka the householder; having approached he spoke thus to Meṇḍaka the householder: “Now I, householder, have been enjoined by the King, saying: ‘It is said, my good man, that the householder Meṇḍaka is living in our kingdom ... When you have seen, it will be the same as if I myself saw.’ Let us see, householder, your eminence in psychic power.” Then the householder Meṇḍaka, having washed his head, having had a granary swept, sat down outside the door, and a shower of grain, having fallen down through the air, filled the granary. “Your eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your wife’s eminence in psychic power.”

Kd.6.34.7

Then the householder Meṇḍaka enjoined his wife, saying: “Well now, serve this four-winged army with food.” Then the wife of Meṇḍaka the householder, having sat down beside only one bowl of the capacity of an ālḥaka and one helping of curry and condiments, served food to the four-winged army; not until she got up was it exhausted. “Your wife’s eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your son’s eminence in psychic power.”

Kd.6.34.8

Then the householder Meṇḍaka enjoined his son, saying: “Well now, my dear, give this four-winged army six months’ wages.” Then the son of Meṇḍaka the householder, having taken hold of only one purse containing a thousand, gave the four-winged army six months’ wages; not until he removed his hand was it exhausted. “Your son’s eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your daughter-in-law’s eminence

¹ bhaṇe, as at Vin.3.249 where Bimbisāra is again recorded to be addressing a chief minister concerned with all the affairs. Bhaṇe is a common mode of address from a superior to an inferior. ² pāyāsi. Cf. payāta at Vin.4.105. ³ Elephants, horses, chariots and infantry. See definition of army at Vin.4.105; and BD.2.375, n.3.

in psychic power.”

Kd.6.34.9

Then Meṇḍaka the householder enjoined his daughter-in-law, saying: “Well now, give this four-winged army six months’ food.” Then the daughter-in-law of Meṇḍaka the householder, having sat down beside only one basket of the capacity of four doṇas, gave six months’ food to the four-winged army; not until she got up was it exhausted. “Your daughter-in-law’s eminence in psychic power has been seen, householder. We will see your slave’s eminence in psychic power.”

BD.4.332

“Our slave’s eminence in psychic power, sir,¹ can be seen in the field.”

“Enough, householder, your slave’s eminence in psychic power has been seen.”

Then that chief minister went back again to Rājagaha with the four-winged army, and approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, he told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.

Vin.1.242

Kd.6.34.10

Then the Lord, having stayed in Vesālī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Bhaddiya with the large Order of monks, together with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Bhaddiya. The Lord stayed there in Bhaddiya in the Jātiyā Grove.²

Kd.6.34.11

Then the householder Meṇḍaka heard: “Verily,³ the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, who has gone forth from a Sakyan family, has reached Bhaddiya and is staying at Bhaddiya in the Jātiyā Grove. A lovely reputation has gone forth concerning the Lord Gotama, thus: he is indeed Lord, perfected one, fully awakened one, endowed with knowledge and conduct, well-farer, knower of the worlds, unrivalled charioteer of men to be tamed, teacher of devas and mankind, the awakened one, the Lord. Having realised by his own super-knowledges, he makes known this world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, a race with recluses and brahmins, with devas and men. He teaches dhamma, lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle and lovely at the ending. He explains with the spirit and the letter the Brahmā-life completely fulfilled and wholly pure. Good indeed it were to see perfected ones like this.”

¹ sāmi. ² Mentioned at Vin.1.189f., Vin.3.37; AN.iii.36. ³ To end of Kd.6.34.11 is stock and recurs at e.g. Vin.1.35, Vin.1.245, Vin.3.1. DN.i.87. For notes on above passage, see BD.1.1ff.

Kd.6.34.12

Then the householder Meṇḍaka, having had many magnificent vehicles harnessed,¹ having mounted a magnificent vehicle, went off with the magnificent vehicles from Bhaddiya to see the Lord. But many members of (other) sects² saw the householder Meṇḍaka coming in the distance, and seeing him they spoke thus to the householder Meṇḍaka: “Where are you going, householder?”

BD.4.333

“I am going, honoured sirs, to see the Lord, the recluse Gotama.”

“But how can you, householder, being one who asserts an ought-to-be-done,³ go along to see the recluse Gotama who asserts an ought-not-to-be-done? For, householder, the recluse Gotama asserts an ought-not-to-be-done, he teaches a doctrine of an ought-not-to-be-done and in this he trains disciples.”

Kd.6.34.13

Then it occurred to the householder Meṇḍaka: “Undoubtedly this will be a Lord, a perfected one, a fully awakened one⁴ inasmuch as these members of (other) sects are jealous of him,” and having gone by vehicle as far as the ground was (suitable) for a vehicle, having alighted from the vehicle, he approached the Lord on foot; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As Meṇḍaka the householder was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord talked a progressive talk⁵ to him, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... Then the householder Meṇḍaka, as one who had ... attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord!⁶ ... May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts; Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Vin.1.243

Kd.6.34.14

Then the householder Meṇḍaka, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then Meṇḍaka the householder towards the end of that night having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the householder Meṇḍaka; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

¹ As in Kd.6.30.1, Kd.6.30.3. ² A highly compressed version of the following incidents occurs at Dhp-a.iii.374f. ³ As in Kd.6.31.2. ⁴ As in Kd.6.31.1. ⁵ As in Kd.6.31.12. ⁶ Stock, as at Kd.1.7.10; Kd.6.31.10.

Kd.6.34.15

Then the wife and son and daughter-in-law and slave of the householder Meṇḍaka approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord talked a progressive talk to these, that is to say talk on giving ... Then these as ones who had ... attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! ... We, Lord, are going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept us as lay-followers going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

BD.4.334

Kd.6.34.16

Then the householder Meṇḍaka, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous food, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Meṇḍaka the householder spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, for as long as the Lord stays at Bhaddiya, for so long will I (supply) with perpetual food the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head.” Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the householder Meṇḍaka with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

ALLOWANCE FOR FIVE DAIRY PRODUCTS, ETC.

Kd.6.34.17

Then the Lord, having stayed at Bhaddiya for as long as he found suiting, without asking the householder Meṇḍaka (for permission)¹ set out on tour for Aṅguttarāpa² together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Then Meṇḍaka the householder heard: “They say that the Lord is setting out on tour for Aṅguttarāpa together with a large Order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks.” Then Meṇḍaka the householder enjoined slaves and workmen saying: “Well now, my good men, having loaded much salt and oil and husked rice and solid food into wagons,¹ come along, and let there come along twelve hundred and fifty cowherds bringing twelve hundred and fifty milch cows. Wherever we see the Lord there will we offer him fresh milk.”

¹ anāpucchā, not asking (for permission) is defined, at Vin.4.343, by anapaloketvā, not having obtained permission, while this is defined at Vin.4.226, Vin.4.232, Vin.4.316 by anāpucchā.

² An Aṅga country north of the river Mahī (MN-a.iii.34, Snp-a.437). Mentioned at Snp.p.102, MN.i.359, MN.i.447, Dh-p-a.iii.363.

Kd.6.34.18
BD.4.335
Vin.1.244

Then Meṇḍaka the householder met the Lord on a wilderness road. Then Meṇḍaka the householder approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, Meṇḍaka the householder spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Meṇḍaka the householder, having understood the Lord’s consent, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then Meṇḍaka the householder, towards the end of that night having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.”

Kd.6.34.19

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the food distribution of Meṇḍaka the householder; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then Meṇḍaka the householder enjoined the twelve hundred and fifty cowherds, saying: “Well now, my good men, let each one (of you) having each taken a milch cow, look after a monk, and we will offer them fresh milk.” Then Meṇḍaka the householder with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, and (offered² them) fresh milk. The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept the milk. (The Lord said:) “Accept it, monks, make use of it.”

Kd.6.34.20

Then Meṇḍaka the householder, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft and with fresh milk, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance Menḍaka the householder spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ As at Kd.6.24.1; Kd.6.33.1. ² I think this verb, bhojeti (literally to make to eat, to feed, so to offer, to regale, to entertain with), which Meṇḍaka has already used, should be inserted here. For the monks refused the milk until told, as recorded, to accept it. So long as they refused it, it cannot be said that they were “served and satisfied with” it.

BD.4.336 “There are, Lord, wilderness roads with little water, with little food¹; it is not easy to go along them without provisions for the journey.² It were good, Lord, if the Lord allowed monks provisions for the journey.” Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the householder Menḍaka with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

Kd.6.34.21

Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, five products of the cow: milk, curds, butter-milk, butter, ghee. There are, monks, wilderness roads with little water, with little food; it is not easy to go along them without provisions for the journey. I allow you, monks, to look about for provisions for a journey: husked rice for him who has need of husked rice; kidney-beans for him who has need of kidney-beans; beans for him who has need of beans; salt for him who has need of salt; sugar for him who has need of sugar; oil for him who has need of oil; ghee for him who has need of ghee. There are, monks, people who have faith and are believing; these deposit gold (coins)³ in the hands of those who make things allowable,⁴ saying: ‘By means of this give the master that which is allowable.’ I allow you, monks, thereupon⁵ to consent to that which is allowable. But this, monks, I do not say: that by any method⁶ may gold and silver⁷ be consented to, may be looked about for.”

Vin.1.245

THE STORY OF KEṆIYA THE MATTED-HAIR ASCETIC

Kd.6.35.1

Then the Lord, walking on tour,¹ in due course arrived at Āpaṇa.² The matted hair ascetic Keṇiya³ heard: “Verily, the recluse Gotama, the son of the Sakyans, who has gone forth from a Sakyan family, has reached Āpaṇa and is staying in Āpaṇa. A lovely reputation⁴ has gone forth concerning the Lord Gotama, thus: ... He explains with the spirit and the letter the Brahma-faring completely fulfilled and wholly pure. Good indeed it were to see perfected ones like this.” Then it occurred to Keṇiya the matted hair ascetic: “Now, what could I get conveyed to the recluse Gotama?”

BD.4.337

Then it occurred to Keṇiya the matted hair ascetic: “Now, those who were⁵ formerly seers of the brahmins, makers of mantras,⁶ preservers of mantras, whose ancient mantras as sung, taught,⁷ and composed the brahmins of today still sing, still speak; they still speak what was spoken, they still teach what was taught, that is to say (by) Aṭṭhaka,⁸ Vāmaka,⁹ Vāmadeva,¹⁰ Vessāmitta, Yamataggi,¹¹ Angirasa, Bhāradvāja, Vāseṭṭha, Kas-

Kd.6.35.2

¹ To these kinds of wilds, kantāra, three others are added at Ja.i.99 (which gives a short explanation of each), SN-a.ii.103: cora°, vāla°, amanussa°. See BD.1.147, n.1. ² As at Vin.1.270. Cf. Vin.4.79f. ³ hirañña, see BD.1.28, n. ⁴ kappiyakāraka, see Kd.6.17.8. ⁵ tato. ⁶ pariyāya, perhaps here “in any circumstances”. ⁷ jātarūparajata. See BD.1.28, n.; BD.2.100, n.2, BD.2.102, n.1. If a monk takes gold and silver or gets another to do so for him or consents to its being kept in deposit for him, he incurs a Nissaggiya offence (No.18). ¹ From here to end of Kd.6.35.5, cf. Snp.102ff. = MN.ii.146ff. ² This is called a market town, nigama, of Aṅga at SN.v.225; a market town of Aṅguttarāpa at Snp.103, MN.i.359, MN.i.447. Āpaṇa was so named because it had a quantity of shops, Snp-a.ii.440, MN-a.iii.37. ³ Spelt Keṇiya at Snp.p.103, MN-a.iii.399. He is mentioned at Tha-ap.318. According to Snp-a.440, MN-a.iii.399 he was a very wealthy (mahāsāla) brahmin who became a jaṭila (matted hair) ascetic so as to protect his wealth, and he was also the protector of five thousand families; but although he wore the yellow robes by day, by night he indulged in pleasures of the senses. At DN-a.i.270 he is given as an example, among eight types of ascetics, of the type who supports wife and children (sa-puttabhāriya). See also Dhp-a.i.323, Ud-a.241. ⁴ As above, BD.4.332. ⁵ Down to the name Bhagu = DN.i.104, DN.i.238, DN.i.242; AN.iii.224, DN.i.229; MN.ii.169, DN.i.200. ⁶ I.e. the Vedas. ⁷ pavutta, explained at DN-a.273 as “spoken for others,” taught (vācīta, made to speak). ⁸ On the names of these ṛṣis or seers, see Vinaya Texts ii.130, n.3. Aṭṭhaka is usually identified with Aṣṭaka, mentioned as author of Ṛg Veda 10.104. ⁹ Cf. Ṛg Veda 10.99. ¹⁰ Cf. Ṛg Veda 4.26. ¹¹ Under Jamadagni in Vedic Index he is connected with Ṛg Veda 362, Ṛg Veda 318; Ṛg Veda 8101, Ṛg Veda 88; Ṛg Veda 962, Ṛg Veda 924; Ṛg Veda 965, Ṛg Veda 925.

sapa,¹ Bhagu—these abstaining from food at night, restrained from eating at the wrong time,² (yet) consented to such things as drinks.

Kd.6.35.3

“The recluse Gotama also abstains from food at night and is restrained from eating at the wrong time³; the recluse Gotama also is worthy⁴ to consent to such things as drinks,” and having had abundant drinks prepared, having had them taken on carrying-poles,⁵ he approached the Lord; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the Lord; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy with the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, Keniya the matted hair ascetic spoke thus to the Lord: “Let the revered Gotama accept drink from me.”

BD.4.338

“Well then, Keniya, give it to the monks.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept it. (The Lord said:) “Accept it, monks, make use of it.”

Kd.6.35.4

Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the enlightened one at its head with abundant drinks sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had washed his hand⁶ and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. Then as Keniya the matted hair ascetic was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted him with talk on dhamma. Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, spoke thus to the Lord: “May the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me on the morrow.”

Vin.1.246

Kd.6.35.5

“But, Keniya, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and you are in favour of the brahmins.” Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic spoke a second time to the Lord thus: “Although, good Gotama, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and I am in favour of the brahmins, (yet) may the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me on the morrow.”

“But, Keniya, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and you are in favour of the brahmins.” Then Keniya the matted

¹ Cf. Rg Veda 9.114,2. ² “Wrong time” for eating defined at Vin.4.86 as “after noon has passed until sunrise”. ³ Cf. DN.i.5. ⁴ arahati samaṇo pi Gotamo. The meaning is that he is worthy enough to confer a boon on the giver of the things which he consents to accept.

⁵ kāja, cf. MN.iii.148. ⁶ As at Kd.6.24.4; Kd.6.36.8.

hair ascetic spoke a third time to the Lord thus:

“Although, good Gotama, the Order of monks is large, twelve hundred and fifty monks, and I am in favour of the brahmins, (yet) may the revered Gotama together with the Order of monks consent to a meal with me on the morrow.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat departed.

Kd.6.35.6

Then the Lord, on this occasion having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

BD.4.339

“I allow you, monks, eight (kinds of) drinks¹: mango drink,² rose-apple drink, plantain³ drink, banana⁴ drink, honey drink, grape drink, edible lotus root drink,⁵ *phārusaka*⁶ drink. I allow you, monks, the juice of all fruits except the juice of the fruit of corn.⁷ I allow you, monks, the juice of all leaves except vegetable⁸ juice. I allow you, monks, the juice of all flowers except liquorice⁹ juice. I allow you, monks, sugarcane juice.”¹⁰

Kd.6.35.7

Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, towards the end of that night

¹ At Mnd.372 two lists of eight drinks each are given, the first being the same as this Vinaya list. These drinks occur in a controverted point at Kv.552. ² Made from raw or cooked mangoes. Vin-a.1101. ³ coca, which may however be coconut or cinnamon. But Vin-a.1102=Nd-a.ii.396 declare this to be a drink made from the fruit of bananas (or plantains, kadali) which have kernels, aṭṭhika (stone or kernel of a fruit). The meaning therefore is not clear, and is further confused by the next drink, moca, which Vin-a.1102=Nd-a.ii.396 say is made of plantain fruits without kernels, anaṭṭhika. See Vinaya Texts ii.132, n. ⁴ moca, Musa sapientum. ⁵ sāluka-pāna. Vin-a.1102=Nd-a.ii.396 say it is a drink that is made having crushed the edible roots of the red and the blue lotuses and so on. ⁶ Vinaya Texts ii.133, n.2 says “this is Grewia Asiatica of Linnaeus”, Monier Williams (under parūsha(ka)) adding “from the berries of which a cooling beverage is prepared”. Phārusaka occurs also at Dh-p-a.iii.316. ⁷ Vin-a.1102 refers to the seven kinds of grain or corn, dhañña, which probably are those enumerated at Vin.4.264, Nd-a.ii.396. See BD.1.83, n.4. Toddy and arrack are prepared from grain. The use of toddy was one of the ten points not allowed by the Council of Vesālī, Vin.2.301. ⁸ ḍāka (=Sanskrit sāka), vegetable, herb, potherb. Vin-a.1102 explains as cooked ḍāka. See below, Kd.6.36.8 where all kinds of vegetables are allowed. ⁹ madhuka. This is the tree Bassia latifolia. ¹⁰ Vin-a.1103 says “in allowing these drinks (mango drink and so on), these four (kinds of) juices are allowed as well”.

having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared in his own hermitage,¹ had the time announced to the Lord saying: “It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the hermitage of Keniya the matted hair ascetic; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then Keniya the matted hair ascetic, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with sumptuous food, solid and soft, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl.

BD.4.340
Kd.6.35.8

As Keniya the matted hair ascetic was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord thanked him in these verses:

“Sacrifices² are chief in fire-worship,³
Sāvitrī⁴ chief of (Vedic) metres,
A king is chief of men,
the ocean chief of waters,

“The moon is chief of the lamps of night,⁵ the sun chief of luminaries,⁶
For those giving alms, desiring merit, the Order is indeed the chief.”

Then the Lord, having thanked Keniya the matted hair ascetic in these verses, rising from his seat, departed.

Vin.1.247

¹ Snp.p.104 here breaks off the account, although it adds, before going on to the Sela story, that Keniya’s friends, servants and relations helped him in all kinds of ways in the preparation of the meal. Snp.p.110 then takes up the account again, as Vinaya above, and thus includes the two verses appearing below. The Sutta Nipāta version naturally does not include the “allowances” of Kd.6.35.6. ² These two verses = Snp.568–Snp.569. ³ The Jaṭilas were fire-worshippers. Yañña, sacrifice, became under Buddhist usage an alms-gift to an Order or to monks, a deyyadhamma, gift of faith, Cnd.523. ⁴ A Vedic metre. Cf. Snp.457, “three lines (pada) twenty-four syllables”. Snp-a.ii.403 states that Sāvitrī in the discipline of the nobles would be: buddhaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi / dhammaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi / saṅghaṃ saraṇaṃ gacchāmi. ⁵ nakkhatta, usually meaning a constellation or lunar mansion. Snp-a.ii.456 says, “According to the conjunction of the moon, so that from a sign, from its brightness (ālokakaraṇa) and from its gentleness one can say, ‘Today is Kattikā, today is Rohini’ (name of two months or lunar mansions) it is said ‘The moon is chief of the nakkhattas’”. ⁶ tapataṃ = tapantānaṃ, of shining, of bright, of radiant (things).

THE STORY ROJA THE MALLA

Then the Lord, having stayed in Āpaṇa for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Kusinārā with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. The Mallas of Kusinārā heard: “It is said that the Lord is coming to Kusinārā¹ together with a large Order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks.” These made a compact that, ‘Whoever does not go out to meet the Lord is fined five hundred’.² Now at that time Roja the Malla was a friend of the venerable Ānanda.³ Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Kusinārā.

Kd.6.36.1

Then the Mallas of Kusinārā went out to meet the Lord. Then Roja the Malla, having gone out to meet the Lord approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, he stood at a respectful distance. As Roja the Malla was standing at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to him: “This is splendid of you, friend Roja, that you have come out to meet the Lord.”

Kd.6.36.2

BD.4.341

“I, honoured Ānanda, am not much impressed by⁴ the awakened one or dhamma or the Order, but a compact was made among the kinsfolk that whoever does not go out to meet the Lord is fined five hundred. It was only from fear of the kinsfolk’s compact that I, honoured Ānanda, went out to meet the Lord.” Then the venerable Ānanda was disappointed and thought: “How can this Roja the Malla speak thus?”

Kd.6.36.3

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this Roja the Malla is a distinguished, well-known man. Surely the faith⁵ in this dhamma and discipline of well-known men like this is very efficacious.¹ It were well, Lord, if the Lord acted in such a way that Roja the Malla could have faith in this dhamma and discipline.”

¹ One of the two capitals of the Malla country, the other being Pāvā. The Lord died at Kusinārā, and the Pāveyyaka Mallas sent to claim their share of his relics (DN.ii.165), showing that the Malla country was divided into two separate parts (see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names). ² Doubtless kahāpaṇas. ³ As at Vin.1.296. The Vacchanakha-jātaka (Ja.235) is said to have been spoken concerning Roja. ⁴ bahukata. Vin-a.1103 says this means, “I have not come here out of respect for and belief in the awakened one and the rest” (i.e. dhamma and the Order). ⁵ pasāda. This phrase is the same as that put into the mouth of Anāthapiṇḍika concerning Prince Jeta, Kd.16.4.10.

“But, Ānanda, it is not difficult for a Truthfinder (to do) that by which Roja the Malla could have faith in this dhamma and discipline.”

Kd.6.36.4

Then the Lord, having suffused Roja the Malla with a mind of love,² rising from his seat, entered a dwelling-place. Then Roja the Malla, suffused by the Lord with a mind of love, even as young calves (follow) kine, so having approached dwelling-place after dwelling-place, cell after cell, he asked the monks: “Where, honoured sirs, is this Lord staying at present. the perfected one, the fully awakened one? For I long to see this Lord, perfected one, all awakened one.”³

BD.4.342

“This,⁴ friend Roja, is his dwelling-place, the door is closed; having approached quietly, having entered the verandah⁵ (but) without crossing it, having coughed, tap on the door-bolt.⁶ The Lord will open the door to you.”

Vin.1.248

Kd.6.36.5

Then Roja the Malla, having quietly approached that dwelling-place with its closed door, having entered the verandah (but) not crossing it, having coughed, tapped on the bolt. The Lord opened the door. Then Roja the Malla, having entered the dwelling-place, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord talked a progressive talk⁷ to Roja the Malla as he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of Roja the Malla was ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to Roja the Malla, that “whatever is of the nature to uprise, all that is of the nature to stop”. Then Roja the Malla, as one who had seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, who had crossed over doubt, put away uncertainty, who had attained without another’s help to full confidence in the teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ mahiddhiya. Here having no connection with psychic powers. Cf. iddha, effective, at Vin.4.50, Vin.4.54, Vin.4.313. ² See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, What was the Original Gospel in Buddhism?, p.92ff., Sakya, p.222ff., Outlines, p.30. Amity, mettā, is the first of the brahmavihāras.

³ As at MN.ii.119, AN.v.65; cf. DN.i.89. ⁴ As at DN.i.89, spoken by monks to Ambaṭṭha; MN.ii.119, AN.v.65 by monks to Pasenadi. ⁵ ālinda, terrace or verandah in front of the door of a dwelling-place. COOMARASWAMY questions this meaning (Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol.48, No.3, p.252) as used by GEIGER in Mahāvamsa translation, p.246. Geiger cites DN.i.89 (=above passage) as evidence that ālinda “is the terrace before the house-door”. There is also the word pamukha meaning verandah as at Vin.4.45. But DN-a.252 = MN-a.iii.351 explain ālinda by pamukha. Ālinda allowed at Vin.2.153, while at Vin.2.169 Visākhā wanted to build a palace with an ālinda supported on pillars with elephant capitals (hatthinakha); in this passage therefore ālinda may have the meaning of a gallery or balcony. ⁶ aggaḷa, bolt or crossbar, but explained at DN-a.252 = MN-a.iii.351 by kavāta, i.e. the door itself, that which closes the aperture. ⁷ As at Vin.1.15.

BD.4.343

“It were well, Lord, if the masters might receive the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick only from me, not from others.”

“But those, Roja, who with the knowledge of a learner with the vision of a learner have seen dhamma, as you have done, would also think: ‘Now indeed the masters should receive the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick only from us, not from others.’ Well then, Roja, they shall receive them from you as well as from others.”

Now at that time in Kusinārā a succession of meals of sumptuous foods came to be arranged.¹ Then because Roja the Malla did not obtain a turn,² he thought: “Suppose I were to look into the refectory and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?”³ Then Roja the Malla, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: vegetables¹ and solid food (made) with flour.² Then Roja the Malla approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

Kd.6.36.6

¹ As at Vin.1.57 (at Rājagaha), Vin.2.119, Vin.4.75 (at Vesālī). “Succession of meals” is bhattapaṭipāti. Paṭipāti is succession, order; but “turn” (place in the succession) is the better English rendering in the next sentence above and at Vin.1.220 (above, BD.4.300). Cf. paṭipātiya, one after the other, successively, in order, at Vin.4.91. ² paṭipāti. ³ Cf. Kd.6.24.2-6.24.4.

“Now, honoured Ānanda, it occurred to me because I did not obtain a turn: ‘Suppose I were to look into the refectory and prepare that which I do not see in the refectory?’ So I, honoured Ānanda, looking into the refectory, did not see two things: vegetables and solid food (made) with flour. If I, honoured Ānanda, were to prepare vegetables and solid food (made) with flour, would the Lord accept them from me?”

Kd.6.36.7 “Well then, Roja, I will inquire of the Lord.”

Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, Ānanda, let him prepare them.” (Ānanda said:) “Well then, Roja, prepare them.” Then Roja the Malla towards the end of that night having had a quantity of vegetables and solid food (made) with flour prepared, brought them to the Lord, saying: “Lord, may the Lord accept from me vegetables and solid food (made) with flour.”

Vin.1.249 “Well then, Roja, give them to the monks.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not accept them. (The Lord said:) “Accept them, monks, make use of them.”

Kd.6.36.8

Then Roja the Malla, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head with a quantity of vegetables and solid food (made) with flour, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had washed his hand³ and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. The Lord, rising from his seat, departed, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Roja the Malla with talk on dhamma as he was sitting down at a respectful distance. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

¹ ḍāka, as above in Kd.6.35.6. ² piṭṭha-khādaniya. Pali-English Dictionary gives “‘flour-eatables’, i.e. pastry”. But we cannot assume that the only thing made with flour is pastry. Khādaniya has two meanings, the technical one of “solid food”, and the untechnical one of what may be eaten, edible. The definition of solid food, Khādaniya, at Vin.4.83 by the exclusion of soft foods and certain medicines raises the question whether in many cases where khādaniya occurs it should not be translated as “solid” food in preference to “edible”. Thus at Vin.1.215 we should get “solid food that is fruit” (or “fruit that is solid food”) and not “edible fruit”. Vin-a.1193 explains piṭṭhakhādaniya as piṭṭhamayakhādaniya, “solid food (or something edible) made with flour”. ³ dhotahattha, as above, e.g. Kd.6.35.4.

“I allow you, monks, all (kinds of) vegetables¹ and all (kinds of) solid food (made) with flour.”

THE STORY OF ONE GONE FORTH WHEN OLD

Then the Lord having stayed in Kusinārā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Ātumā² together with the large Order of monks, with the twelve hundred and fifty monks. Now at that time a certain (person), formerly a barber,³ who had gone forth when old, was living in Ātumā. He had two boys, sweet-voiced,⁴ intelligent,⁵ skilled, accomplished in their craft,⁶ in the barber’s profession (as learnt from) their own teachers.⁷

Then that (man) who had gone forth when old⁸ heard: “They say that the Lord is coming to Ātumā together with a large Order of monks, with twelve

Kd.6.37.1

BD.4.345

Kd.6.37.2

¹ See Kd.6.35.6 where the juice of vegetables forms an exception to an “allowance”. Vin-a.1103 says “whatever is a vegetable, whether it is cooked or not with ghee”. ² Mentioned also at DN.ii.131. ³ vuḍḍhapabbajito nahāpitapubbo, identified by Buddhaghosa at DN-a.599 with the Subhadda mentioned at DN.ii.162 who felt relief at the Lord’s death. In neither the Dīgha Nikāya passage nor above is he called āyasmā, the venerable, and Dictionary of Pali Proper Names says that at the time of the Buddha’s visit to Ātumā he had been a sāmanera. DN-a.599f. refers to the above Vinaya episode at some length. ⁴ mañjuka. I see no reason to object, as does Vinaya Texts ii.140, n.2, to Buddhaghosa’s exegesis as madhuravacana, sweet-voiced. ⁵ paṭibhāneyyaka, explained at Vin-a.1103 as “endowed with paṭibhāna in their own craft”. Here again Vinaya Texts ii.140, n.3 objects to Buddhaghosa’s exegesis, and translates as “skilled in discourse”. Cf. AN.i.25, paṭibhāneyyakānaṃ (of Radha), translated at GS.i.21 as “of impromptu speakers”. CHILDERS, besides giving “understanding, intelligence, wisdom; readiness or confidence of speech, promptitude, wit”, refers to Ja.i.60 and translates paṭibhāna as “skill”, a rendering followed by RHYS DAVIDS in Buddhist Birth Stories, p.79. The whole Vinaya context above suggests the meaning of “persuasive”. ⁶ At Vin.4.6 the barber’s is placed among the “low crafts”. ⁷ sake ācariyake. Cf. sakaṃ ācariyakaṃ uggahetvā at DN.ii.104. DN-a.ii.556 explains as “the speech of their own teachers”, attano ācariyavādaṃ. ⁸ Vinaya Texts ii.140 now and henceforth calls him “dotard” on the grounds that “it is impossible to repeat this long phrase” (translated at Vinaya Texts ii.140 in the first instance as “a certain man who had entered the Order in his old age”), and that vuḍḍhapabbajita “connotes contempt, and even censure”, thus justifying the translation “dotard”. At AN.iii.78 there are two not entirely disparate lists of things hard to attain by one gone forth in old age. But it would be against the whole spirit of Buddhism to censure or penalise anyone for not having entered the Order when young.

hundred and fifty monks”. Then that (man) who had gone forth when old spoke thus to his boys: “It is said, my dears,¹ that the Lord is coming to Ātumā together with a large Order of monks, with twelve hundred and fifty monks. Do you go, my dears, and taking a barber’s equipment,² tour from house to house for nāti measures of offerings,³ and collect salt and oil and husked rice and solid food, and when the Lord comes we will make him a conje drink.”

Kd.6.37.3

“Very well, father,” and these boys, having answered him who had gone forth when old in assent, taking a barber’s equipment toured from house to house for nāti measures of offerings, collecting salt and oil and husked rice and solid food. Those people who, having seen these sweet-voiced, intelligent boys, but had not wanted to have (offerings) made, even they had them made, and having had them made, also gave much. So these boys collected much salt and oil and husked rice and solid food.

Kd.6.37.4

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Ātumā. The Lord stayed there in Ātumā in the House with the threshing-floor.⁴ Then he who had gone forth when old having had a quantity of conje prepared towards the end of that night, brought it to the Lord, saying: “Lord, may the Lord accept conje from me.” Now Truth-finders (sometimes) ask knowing,⁵ and knowing (sometimes) do not ask; they ask, knowing the right time (to ask), and they do not ask, knowing the right time (when not to ask). Truthfinders ask about what belongs to the goal, not about what does not belong to the goal; there is bridge-breaking for Truth-finders in whatever does not belong to the goal. Awakened ones, Lords, question monks concerning two matters,

BD.4.346

Vin.1.250

¹ tāta, not tātā, although more than one person is being addressed, as pointed out at Vinaya Texts ii.141, n.1. But tātā at DN-a.599 where this passage is quoted. ² khurabhaṇḍa. That this is not “a barbers’ lad” (Vinaya Texts ii.141) is made clear at Vin.2.134: “I allow a razor (khura), a whetstone (khurasilā), a razor-case (khurasipāṭikā), a piece of felt (namataka), a whole barber’s equipment (sabba khurabhaṇḍa).” It is a shaving set, the outfit for a razor. ³ nāḷiyāvāpakena. Vin-a.1103 says nāḷiyā ca āvāpakena ca, and adds that āvapaka is also wherever they offer (āvapanti), deposit what is received. On nāti see BD.1.12, n.2; BD.1.103, n.1. ⁴ Reading here and in Siamese edition bhūsāgāra. Sinhalese edition and DN.ii.131 read bhūsāgāra, as also Dictionary of Pali Proper Names under Bhūsāgāra, but bhūsāgāra under Ātumā; cf. bhūsāgāra at AN.i.241. DN-a.ii.569, AN-a.ii.355 explain by khala-sālā, hall with a threshing-floor, which I follow. Bhūsāgāra would mean the House with the Ornaments.

⁵ As at Vin.1.59, Vin.1.158, Vin.3.6, etc.

either: “Shall we preach dhamma?” or, “Shall we lay down a rule of training for disciples?” Then the Lord spoke thus to him who had gone forth when old:

“Where is this conje from, monk?” Then he who had gone forth when old told this matter to the Lord.

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not suitable, foolish man, it is not fitting, it is not becoming, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. For how can you, foolish man, one who has gone forth, cause (others) to take what is not allowable? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.6.37.5

“Monks, one who has gone forth should not make (others) take what is not allowable. Whoever should make (others) take (these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should one who was formerly a barber carry about a barber’s equipment. Whoever should carry it about, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Ātumā for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattḥī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvattḥī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anātha-piṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time there was a great quantity of solid food that was fruit¹ at Sāvattḥī. Then it occurred to monks: “Now, what solid food that is fruit is allowed by the Lord, what is not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, all solid food that is fruit.”

Kd.6.38.1

BD.4.347

Now at that time seeds belonging to an Order were sown on ground belonging to an individual, and seeds belonging to an individual were sown on ground belonging to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “When, monks, seeds belonging to an Order are sown on ground belonging to an individual, having given back a portion,¹ (the rest) may be made use of. When seeds belonging to an individual are sown on ground belonging to an Order, having given back a portion, (the rest) may be made use of.”

Kd.6.39.1

¹ phalakhādaniya. Cf. above, Kd.6.17.8, Kd.6.17.9; Kd.6.21.1, and cf. piṭṭhakhādaniya and note at above Kd.6.36.6.

ON THE FOUR GREAT REFERENCES

Kd.6.40.1

Now at that time scruples arose in the monks as to this and that occasion, thinking: “Now, what is permitted by the Lord? What is not permitted?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Whatever, monks, has not been objected to by me, saying: ‘This is not allowable’, if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, that is not allowable to you. Whatever, monks, has not been objected to by me, saying: ‘This is not allowable’, if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, that is allowable to you. And whatever, monks, has not been permitted by me, saying: ‘This is allowable’, if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, that is not allowable to you. Whatever, monks, has not been permitted by me, saying: ‘This is allowable if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, that is allowable to you.”

Vin.1.251

Kd.6.40.2

BD.4.348

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, is (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night² allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a short period,³ or it is not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during seven days⁴ allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a short period or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during life⁵ allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a short period or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during seven days allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during life allowable with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night or is it not allowable? Now, is (food that may be eaten) during life allowable with (food that may be eaten) during seven days or is it not allowable?” They told this matter to the Lord.

¹ bhāgaṃ datvā. There is no justification for Vinaya Texts ii.143 “half the produce, O bhikkhus, you may have”. Vin-a.1103 says “having given a portion that is a tenth. This, they say, is an old practice in India, therefore having made ten shares, one share should be given to the owners of the ground”. So presumably if the Order is the owner it gets one share. ² yāmakālika, see BD.2.330, n.1. These “foods” really refer to medicines. ³ yāvakālika, see BD.2.330, n.1.

⁴ sattāhakālika, see BD.2.330, n.2. ⁵ yāvajīvika, see BD.2.330, n.3.

Kd.6.40.3

He said: “Monks, (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night with (food that may be eaten) during a short period is allowable at the right time¹ on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable at the wrong time.² Monks, (food that may be eaten) during seven days with (food that may be eaten) during a short period is allowable at the right time on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable at the wrong time. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during life with (food that may be eaten) during a short period is allowable at the right time on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable at the wrong time. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during seven days with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night is allowable in a watch of the night on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable after the watch of the night is ended. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during life with (food that may be eaten) during a watch of the night is allowable in a watch of the night on the day it is accepted; it is not allowable after the watch of the night is ended. Monks, (food that may be eaten) during life with (food that may be eaten) during seven days is allowable for (the length of) seven days; it is not allowable after the seven days are ended.”

BD.4.349

The Section on Medicines: the Sixth

IN THIS SECTION THE ITEMS ARE ONE HUNDRED AND SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

In the autumn, also at the wrong time, tallow, roots, (they had need of) what was pounded off,
 of astringent decoctions, leaves, fruits, resin, salt, and dung, / chunam, sifter,³ and flesh, ointment, powder, ointment-box, all kinds,⁴ not covered,⁵ sticks, case for sticks, /
 A bag, strap at the edge, thread, oil for the head, and the nose, nose-spoon, and steam, a pipe, and a lid, a bag,⁶ /
 Decoction of oil, and strong drink, too much, an ointment, a vessel,

¹ Before noon from sunrise. ² After noon until sunrise, Vin.4.86, Vin.4.166. ³ Reading here cālinī, above cālanī. ⁴ Reading here ucca-parutā. ⁵ Reading here ucca-parutā. ⁶ Reading thavi. Sinhalese edition reads yamakattavā, double bag Kd.6.13.2.

sweating, and all kinds of herbs, thereupon the great (sweating), hemp-water, /
 Water-vat, and blood, a horn, foot-unguent, foot-salve, lancet, and astringent (water), sesamum paste, a compress, /
 Vin.1.252 Piece of cloth, and mustard-powder, fumigation, and crystal, oil for the sore, linen bandage, and the irregular things, and what is (formally) received, /
 A (decoction of) dung, is making,
 and mud turned up by the plough, lye, urine and yellow myrobalan, perfumes, and a purgative, clarified, unprepared, prepared-unprepared, /
 Meat-broth, (mountain-) slope, monastery attendant, and for seven days,¹ sugar, kidney-bean, sour gruel, cooking for oneself, one may cook again,² /
 He allowed it however,³ short of almsfood, and fruit, sesamum, solid food,
 before a meal, fever, and discharged, an ulcer, /
 And clyster-treatment and Suppi(yā),⁴ and indeed human flesh,
 BD.4.350 elephants, horses, and a dog, a snake, lion, tiger, leopard, /
 And the flesh of bears (and) hyenas, and a turn, and conjei, a certain one who was young, sugar, Sunidha, rest-house, /
 And Ambapālī, the Licchavis, the Ganges, the Koṭi(gāma) talk on truths,
 killed on purpose,
 he objected when (they were) well off again for food, /
 A cloud, Yasoja, and Meṇḍaka, products of the cow, and provisions for a journey,
 Keni(ya), mango, rose-apple, plantain, banana, honey, grape, edible lotus root, /
 Phārusakas, vegetables, flour, the barber at Ātumā, fruit and seed at Sāvattthī,
 Vin.1.253 and On what occasion?, as to the right time.

¹ Sinhalese edition ārāmā satā pañcahi, referring to the five hundred monastery attendants of Kd.6.15.4. ² punā pace, replacing the punapakā of Kd.6.17.6. ³ punānuññāsi. ⁴ Reading Suppi, as below Koti and Keni.

7. KAṬHINA

ALLOWANCE FOR KAṬHINA

At that time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time as many as thirty monks of Pāvā,¹ all forest-dwellers, all almsmen, all wearers of rag-robles,² all wearers of the three robes,³ going to Sāvattḥī so as to see the Lord when the beginning of the rains was approaching, were unable to reach Sāvattḥī for the beginning of the rains; they entered upon the rains on the way, at Sāketa. They spent the rains in a state of longing,⁴ thinking: "The Lord is

Kd.7.1.1
BD.4.351

¹ tīṃsamattā Pāṭṭheyyakā bhikkhū, mentioned also at SN.ii.187, where called Paveyyakā, and also described as sabbe sasāmyojanā, all (still) with the fetters; it is said that they all became freed from the āsavas (cankers) with no substrate remaining after the Lord had given them a discourse on the incalculability of the beginning of this faring-on, anamataggāyaṃ saṃsāro, which is part of the Anamatagga-sāmyutta. This event is referred to at Vin-a.1106; and also at Dh-p-a.ii.32 (called anamataggadhamadesanā), from which it appears that Dh-p.65 was uttered in connection with these monks. See also above, BD.4.31, n.2 for their identification with the tīṃsamattā bhaddavaggiyā sahāyakā.

Dictionary of Pali Proper Names takes Pāveyyakā (also a variant reading at Vin.1.253) as the right one and says that it is the "name given to the inhabitants of Pāvā". Pāvā is mentioned at e.g. DN.ii.162. At DN.iii.207 it is called a city of the Mallas, the people being referred to as Pāveyyakā Mallā. According to Vin-a.1105 Pāṭṭheyya is a kingdom situated to the west of the Kosala country. See Vinaya Texts ii.146, n. ² Cf. Vin.3.230ff., where it is specifically stated in an "allowance" ascribed to Gotama that the first three of these types of monks may, if they so wish, come up to see the Lord. Cf. also MN.iii.40ff. These three, combined with the monk who is tecīvariko, wearer of the three robes, occur at MN.i.214; and cf. AN.i.38. These four practices (aṅga) are explained in much detail at Vism.59ff. At AN.ii.26 it is said that "among robes, rag-robles are trifling, easy to get, blameless", quoted at Vism.64. ³ Prescribed at Bu-NP.1. The three robes would be made of rags. See also Kd.8.12. ⁴ ukkaṇṭhitarūpā.

staying close¹ to us, six yojanas from here, but we are not getting a chance to see the Lord.”

BD.4.352 Then these monks having, after the lapse of three months, kept the rains, after the Invitation² had been carried out, while the god was raining, while waters were gathering, while swamps were forming,³ with drenched robes and in a state of weariness approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anātha-piṇḍika’s monastery, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, Kd.7.1.2 they sat down at a respectful distance.

Now it is the custom⁴ for awakened ones, for Lords to exchange friendly greetings with in-coming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to these monks:

“I hope, monks, that things went well with you, I hope you had enough to support life, I hope that, in unity, being on friendly terms and harmonious, you spent a comfortable rainy season and did not go short of almsfood?”

Vin.1.254 “Things did go well with us, Lord, we had enough to support life, Lord, and in unity we, Lord, being on friendly terms and harmonious, spent the rainy season⁵ and did not go short of almsfood. Here are we, Lord, as many as thirty monks of Pāvā, coming to Sāvattthī so as to see the Lord, (but) when the beginning of the rains was approaching, we were unable to reach Sāvattthī for the beginning of the rains; we entered on the rains on the way, at Sāketa. We spent the rains, Lord, in a state of longing for you, thinking: Kd.7.1.3 ‘The Lord is staying close to us, six yojanas from here, but we are not getting a chance to see the Lord.’ Then we, Lord, having, after the lapse of three months, kept the rains, and after the Invitation had been carried out, while the god was raining, while waters were gathering, while swamps were forming, with drenched robes and in a state of weariness came along on the journey.”

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given dhamma-talk⁶ addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to make up kaṭhina-cloth⁷ when monks have com-

¹ āsanneva, right near. ² Pavāraṇā; see Kd.4; also BD.1.283, n.5; GS.iv.183, n.3.

³ udakacikkhale. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.88 (BD.1.154). ⁵ Vin-a.1106 says that on account of their longing to see the Lord, they did not say that they had spent a “comfortable” rainy season.

⁶ According to Vin-a.1106 this was the talk on the incalculability of the beginning of this faring-on, see above, BD.4.351, n.1. ⁷ kaṭhinaṃ attharituṃ, i.e. the formal or ceremonial making of the kaṭhina-cloth, given by the laity, into robes. See BD.2.5, n.1; BD.2.26, n.3.

pleted the rains. Five (things) will be allowable to you, monks, when the kaṭhina-cloths have been made up: going (to families for alms) without having asked for permission,¹ walking (for alms) not taking the three robes,² a group-meal,³ as many robes as you require,⁴ and whatever robe-material accrues⁵ there, that will be for them.⁶ These five (things) will be allowable to you, monks, when the kaṭhina-cloths have been made. And thus, monks, should kaṭhina-cloth be made:

BD.4.353

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This material for kaṭhina-cloth⁷ has accrued to the Order. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should give this material for kaṭhina-cloth to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth.⁸ This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to

Kd.7.1.4

¹ anāmantacāra. Vin-a.1106 says that “so long as the kaṭhina privileges are not removed, it is allowable to go (to families for alms) anāmantetvā”, i.e. not having asked for permission, “and it will be no offence in regard to the Cārittasiṅghapada”, i.e. Bu-Pc.46. In this Pācittiya, if a monk, although invited, nimantita, but not having asked (for permission, anāpucchā) if a monk be there, should call upon families, except at a right time, there is a Pācittiya offence. One of the right times is the time of making robes, although the making up of the kaṭhina-cloth is not specifically mentioned in this Pācittiya rule. Vinaya Texts ii.150, n.1 says that āmanteti must be equal to āpucchati; while Critical Pali Dictionary, under anāmantacāra, refers to Vin.4.100, santaṃ bhikkhūṃ anāpucchā. The Sanskrit Dictionaries give “invitation” and “interrogation” among the meanings of āmantraṇa. The word occurs at AN.iii.259; AN-a.iii.330 quotes Vin.4.100. ² asamādānacāra. Vin-a.1107 says “walking not taking with one the three robes, ticīvaraṃ asamādāya, the meaning is that it will be allowable to be away, separated from a robe”. This therefore is a relaxation of Bu-NP.2. At Vin.1.298 it is also said that an outer cloak may be laid aside when the kaṭhina cloth has been made. ³ gaṇabhojana; thus a relaxation of Bu-Pc.32, although as the formulation of this rule developed, one of the exceptions to its general terms came to be the legality of eating a group-meal at the time of making robes. ⁴ yāvadatthacīvaraṃ. Vin-a.1107 says that as many robes as are required will be allowable as long as they are not allotted, not assigned. Cf. Bu-NP.1 where it is said that an extra robe may be worn for at most ten days when the kaṭhina privileges have been removed and the robes settled. “Till that has taken place, a Bhikkhu may use (temporarily, and without actually appropriating them) as many robes as he likes” (Vinaya Texts ii.151, n.3. q.v.). According to Vism.64f. the strict wearer of the three robes, tecīvarika, should not accept a fourth robe, which, to less ascetic monks, would be of use when washing and dyeing the set of three robes. ⁵ cīvaruppāda. ⁶ nesaṃ bhavissati. Vin-a.1107 says that this may be the robe of a dead monk, or a gift to the Order, or a robe that accrues to the Order in any way. ⁷ kaṭhinadussa. ⁸ Vin-a.1109 says that neither a saṅgha, Order, nor a gaṇa, group, makes the kaṭhina cloth, but an individual.

me. This material for kaṭhina-cloth has accrued to the Order. The Order is giving this material for kaṭhina-cloth to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth. If the giving of this material for kaṭhina-cloth to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent. He to whom it is not pleasing should speak. This material for kaṭhina-cloth is given by the Order to the monk so and so for making kaṭhina-cloth. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this.’

BD.4.354

Kd.7.1.5

“Monks, kaṭhina-cloth becomes made thus, not made thus. And how, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth become not made? kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by marking it,¹ kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by washing it; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by calculating (the number of) robes (that it will make)²; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by cutting it; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by tacking it³; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by making the lengths⁴; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by marking with a piece of cloth⁵; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by strengthening the work⁶;

¹ ullikhitamattena, according to Vin-a.1110 for the purpose of measurement lengthwise and across. The monk marks it, ullikhati, with his nails, showing the measurement of each strip, padesa, so that he can recognise it. ² cīvaravicāraṇamattena, Vin-a.1110 saying, “let it be for five or seven nine or eleven”. ³ bandhanamattena ti moghasuttakāropanamattena, so Vin-a.1110, i.e. by putting false threads in (the material). Vinaya Texts ii.153 reading “when it has only been pieced together”, takes it that the false threads are “put in the cloth to show where it is to be cut or sewn”. But in the series of actions necessary for completing the making of kaṭhina-cloth “cutting”, or cutting out, has been done already. Moghasuttaka, allowed at Vin.2.116, is defined by Buddhaghosa in an exegesis on Kd.15.11.3, see Vin-a.1206. Cf. bandhanamatta above, BD.4.260, n.2; and also at Vin.2.135 although here it seems to have a different meaning. ⁴ ovaṭṭikakaraṇamattena ti moghasuttakānusārena dīghasibbitamattena, so Vin-a.1110, i.e. only by sewing a long (strip) by following the “false threads”. Ovaṭṭika allowed at Vin.1.290. ⁵ kaṇḍūsakaraṇamattena ti muddhiyapaṭabandhanamattena, so Vin-a.1110, i.e. only by putting on a piece of cloth as a sign. Kaṇḍūsaka allowed at Vin.1.290, on which Vin-a.1128 says kaṇḍūsakaṃ vuccati muddikā, a mark (or sign) (the disfigurement) is called kaṇḍūsaka. ⁶ dalhikammakaraṇamattena. This is apparently done by sewing the cloths, cimilikā, together, Vin-a.1110; Vinaya Texts ii.153 reading “when it has only been made strong (in the seams)”. Dalhikamma allowed at Vin.1.290.

kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by making a braiding¹; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by making a binding²; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by patching³; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made only by dyeing the garment⁴; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by insinuation⁵;

BD.4.355

¹ anuvātakaraṇamattena. It appears from Vin-a.1110 that the anuvāta was put along the back (of the cloth). See Vin.4.121 (=BD.2.409 q.v. n.7.) where the Commentary, on the rule for disfiguring a new robe says there is no offence if it is on a braiding, anuvāta. Anuvāta allowed at Vin.2.116. ² paribhaṇḍakaraṇamattena. The paribhaṇḍa appears to have been put inside the cloth. Again see Vin.4.121, and BD.2.409, n.8. Allowed at Vin.2.116. ³ ovaddheyyakaraṇamattena. Vin-a.1111 says, “only by putting it on the in-coming cloth. Or taking cloth from a kaṭhina-robe, only by putting the cloth on another kaṭhina-robe”. The variant reading for this last is akaṭhinacīvara, what is not kaṭhina-cloth. The whole meaning is obscure. It perhaps refers to the saṅghāṭī, the outer cloak, which had to be made of double cloth. On the other hand ovaddheyya may mean “patching”. ⁴ kambalamaddanamattena. Kambala, usually a garment or blanket made of wool, is allowed at Vin.1.281. But the kaṭhina material was of cotton cloth. Maddana too usually means crushing or kneading. But Vin-a.1111 says “throwing it once into the dye, rajana, for the colour of ivory, for the colour of withered leaves”. Monks’ robes are of the colour of old ivory, and russets, yellows, browns and reds. ⁵ nimittakatena. Pali-English Dictionary gives for nimittam karoti, “to pick out the aim, to mark out”, and Childers “to drop a hint”. There is nothing in the Commentary to support the rendering given at Vinaya Texts ii.154, and the alternative suggestion put forward, Vinaya Texts ii.154, n.5 is more pertinent: “Or perhaps according to some commentators, when it has been decided to accept the gift as a kaṭhina, that is, when it has been decided that the cloth is of a suitable kind to make robes out of.” For Vin-a.1111, defining nimittakatena, says “I will make a kaṭhina (-robe) with this cloth (dussena)’, this is called nimittakatena. For it is called just this in the Parivāra” (see Vin.5.172 which defines nimittakamma as nimittam karoti iminā dussena kaṭhinam attharissāmī ti). “But” Vin-a.1111 continues, “in some commentaries it is said that he (i.e. the monk) says, “this cloth (or cloak, sāṭaka) is excellent, it is possible to make a kaṭhina (-robe) with this”; this means: having thus insinuated (dropped a hint, or made a sign, nimittakammaṃ katvā) as to getting it.” Critical Pali Dictionary gives for a-nimittakata, “of which no decision has been made”.

Vism.23=Vb.352 asks, “What here is nemittakata?” i.e. insinuation. The answer is (following translation at Path of Purity, i.27) “What to others is a sign, nimitta, making a sign, nimittakamma, a hint, obhāsa, giving a hint, roundabout talk, winding speech, parikathā (see next term in Vinaya text and next note) on the part of one of evil desires”, etc. Vism.28 explains nimitta and nimittakamma so as to leave no doubt that by them “hinting” or “insinuating” is meant. Cf. also Vb-a.483.

kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by roundabout talking¹; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by its being temporary²; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made by postponement³; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it has to be abandoned⁴; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is not made allowable⁵; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is (made) except for the outer cloak⁶; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is (made) except for the upper robe; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made if it is (made) except for the inner robe; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made unless five parts⁷ or more than five parts⁸ (of kaṭhina-cloth) are cut out, are hemmed together¹ on that same day; kaṭhina-cloth does not become made unless the making is by an individual.² And even if kaṭhina-cloth comes to be quite properly made, but if no one gives thanks for it standing outside the boundary,³ thus also kaṭhina-cloth comes to be not made. And thus, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth come to be not made.

BD.4.356

Vin.1.255

¹ parikathākatena. Vin-a.1111 says “he ought to give kaṭhina cloth, the benefactor giving kaṭhina-cloth produces much merit”, thus is meant “by making parikathā”, roundabout talk. At Vism.23 = Vb.353 parikathā is included in definition of nemittikata, see previous note. It is defined at Vism.29 = Vb-a.484 as “speaking round and round until one gets what is wanted”. Vin.5.172 says “parikathā means that he makes roundabout talk, saying, ‘I will bring forth kaṭhina-cloth by this roundabout talk’”. Critical Pali Dictionary gives for a-parikathākata, not “obtained by speaking of its worth”. ² kukkukatenā ti tāvakālikena, Vin-a.1111. Vin.5.172 says that it is called a gift that is not appropriated. ³ sannidhikatena, so Vinaya Texts ii.154 and Pali-English Dictionary Vin.5.172 = Vin-a.1111 says that there are two “postponements” or “storings up”, sannidhi, that of karaṇa, doing or making, and that of nicaya, possessions. Vin-a.1111 further explains, “postponement of doing (or making) is not doing (or making) it today) putting the doing (or making) to one side; postponement of possessions means that the Order, receiving kaṭhina-cloth today, gives it (to the monks) the next day”. Sannidhikata occurs at Vin.2.270 in reference to food. ⁴ nissaggiyena. Vin.5.172 = Vin-a.1111 saying “while it is being made the dawn breaks”. All the various processes in the making of the kaṭhina robes had to be carried out on one and the same day. ⁵ akappakatena. Cf. Bu-Pc.58, where a new robe has to be disfigured so that the owner can identify it. The three modes of disfigurement consisted in applying some kind of smudge (bindu) to the robe. Cf. BD.2.409, n.5, and Vin-a.1111 anādinmakappabindunā, by not giving the smudge (that makes the robe) allowable. ⁶ aññatra saṅghāṭiya, if the outer cloak is lacking, not finished. ⁷ Cf. Vin.1.287 where each of the three robes of a monk was allowed to be worn chinnaka, cut up into pieces to resemble the divisions of a paddy field; and Vin.1.297 where it is said that one of the three robes might be worn acchinnaka, not cut up. Vin-a.1111 says that five or more parts are to be made by taking pieces, showing mahāmaṇḍala-aḍḍhamaṇḍala, i.e. either circular or semi-circular seams (see Critical Pali Dictionary under aḍḍhamaṇḍala) or “the greater circles and the lesser circles” (see Vinaya Texts ii.209 and Vin-a.1127), or “the seams and the short seams” (cf. Vin.1.287). Vin-a.1111 continues, “thus it (the robe) comes to be made with seams (or circles); setting that to one side there ought not to be another that is not cut up or that is in (only) two, three or four pieces”. ⁸ atirekapañcaka, Critical Pali Dictionary gives “more than one of the five parts”.

“And how, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth come to be made? Kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when it is unsoiled⁴; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when what is allowable is unsoiled⁵; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when it is (made) out of pieces of cloth⁶; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when it is (made) out of rag-robres⁷; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made when it is (made) out of (bits picked up near) a shop⁸; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is no insinuation; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is no roundabout talking; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if it is not temporary; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is no postponement; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if it has not to be abandoned; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if it is made allowable; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is the outer cloak; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if there is the upper robe; kaṭhina-cloth

Kd.7.1.6

BD.4.357

¹ samaṇḍalikatena, see last note but one. ² aññatra puggalassa atthārā. Vin-a.1111 says “setting to one side the making by an individual, it does not become made because of another making by either an Order or a group”. It seems that each monk must make up the kaṭhina cloth distributed to him by the Order, and not rely upon the Order or a group to do so for him; see above Kd.7.1.4 and cf. Vin-a.1109. ³ nissīmaṭṭho anumodati. Vin-a.1111 merely says, “if he (or, one) gives thanks standing, ṭhito, outside, bahu, the boundary of the precincts” (i.e. of the residence where the work is being done). Anumodati more likely refers to a monk thanking the Order than to an Order thanking the donors of the kaṭhina-cloth, for see Kd.7.1.4 where the Order gives the monks the material for making into kaṭhina-cloth. ⁴ ahatena, which Vin-a.1111 explains by aparibhuttana, not used. ⁵ ahatakappena. Vin-a.1111 says “by washing it once or twice (so as to make it) as though unsoiled”. ⁶ pilotikāya, which Vin-a.1111 explains by hatavattthakasāṭakena, out of a cloak or garment which are soiled; variant reading gatavatthukasāṭakena. ⁷ Vin-a.1112 says “when rag-robres have accrued in twenty-three fields”; the idea being that a monk must wander about in order to acquire his rags. Vin-a., quoting another commentary, says that the meaning there is that when a monk who is a rag-robe wearer is touring for alms and rags, colaka, then (kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made) when the robe is made up from the rags received. ⁸ pāpaṇikena. Vin-a.1112 saying “if taking pieces of cloth, pilotika, dropped at the door of a shop, he gives them for kaṭhina-cloth, the meaning is because of this”. Cf. Vin-a.1128, pāpaṇike ti antarāpaṇato patitapilotikacivare, robes of piles of cloth taken amidst a shop. At Vism.62, pāpaṇika, “shop-rag” is included under paṃsukūla, rag-robres.

comes to be made if there is the inner robe; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if five parts or more than five parts are cut out, are hemmed together on that same day; kaṭhina-cloth comes to be made if the making is by an individual. And if kaṭhina-cloth comes to be quite properly made, and if one gives thanks for it standing on the boundary, kaṭhina-cloth thus also comes to be made. And thus, monks, does kaṭhina-cloth come to be made.

Kd.7.1.7

BD.4.358

“And how, monks, do the kaṭhina (privileges) become removed¹? Monks, there are these eight grounds² for the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges): that depending on (a monk) going away; that depending on (his robe) being settled³; that depending on his resolves⁴ (not to have it made up and not to come back); that depending on (the robe) being lost; that depending on his hearing (of the general removal of the privileges in the residence to which he has gone); (that depending on) the disappointment of his expectation⁵ (that a special gift of a robe would be made to him); that depending on his having crossed the boundary⁶; (that depending on) the removal (of the kaṭhina privileges) together with (those of the other monks)”.⁷

SEVEN ON BRINGING

Kd.7.2.1

“A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking a robe that is made up,¹ goes away, thinking: “I will not come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his going away.² A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material³ goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary,⁴ it occurs to him,⁵ “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

BD.4.359

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will not get this robe-material made up nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina

¹ ubbhataṃ kaṭhinam. See Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.2, Bu-NP.3, and BD.2.5, n.3; BD.2.6, n.5; BD.2.13, n.2.

² mātikā, channels, headings. See Vinaya Texts ii.157 for these eight grounds for the removal of the five kaṭhina privileges being “closely connected” with the description in Kd.7.13 of the two so-called palibodhas. “Palibodha seems to mean the continued existence of a claim on the Bhikkhu’s side to a share in the distribution of the kaṭhina”. There are in this connection two palibodhas, that concerned with the monk’s residence, āvāsa, and that concerned with his robes, cīvara. The mātikā are exemplified in the following stories. See also Vin.5.177 and BD.2.5, n.3; BD.2.6, n.5. ³ niṭṭhāna. Cf. niṭṭhita, “settled”, BD.2.6. ⁴ sanniṭṭhāna.

Word occurs at Ja.1187, Ja.iv.167 + katvā. ⁵ āsāvachedikā. Cf. BD.2.6, n.4. ⁶ I.e. of the residence to which kaṭhina-cloth had been given, and where he should have made up his portion. ⁷ Editors of Vinaya Texts ii.156, n.4 thinks that this section should have begun

“the new chapter”. I hold it to be correct as it is, for with it cease the words ascribed to Gotama. The stories that follow, Kd.7.2–Kd.7.12 inclusive, are not supposed to have been told by him, but are exemplifications of the grounds for removing the kaṭhina privileges, and which some later person or persons apparently thought wise to incorporate in the “text”. ¹ katacīvara, a robe that is finished, ready to wear. Cf. BD.2.p.6, n.2. ² Vin-a.1112 says that in this removal of the kaṭhina privileges on the ground of his going away, first the robes-impediment, cīvarapalibodha, is cut off, afterwards the residence-impediment, āvāsapalibodha. For by going thus, the robes-impediment is cut off inside the boundary, the residence-impediment when he has crossed the boundary. See also Vin.5.177. ³ Vin-a.1112 calls this akatacīvara, a robe, or robe-material, that is not made up, not ready to wear.

⁴ Vin-a.1112, “when he has gone to another neighbouring residence”. ⁵ Ibid., “it occurs to him seeing comfortable lodgings or the happiness of friends. In this removal of the kaṭhina privileges on the ground of (the robes) being settled, first the residence-impediment is cut off, for he thinks, ‘I will not come back’; when no more than the thought has arisen, it is cut off”. Cf. Vin.5.178 cīvare niṭṭhite cīvara-palibodho chijjati, when the robes are settled the impediment to robes is cut off.

(privileges) are removed because of his resolves.¹

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe-material) being lost.²

Kd.7.2.2

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up; when that robe has been made up,³ he hears: “The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed in this residence.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his hearing (this news).⁴

Vin.1.256

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up; when that robe has been made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back”, spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back”, (his return) coincides with⁵ the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.⁶

BD.4.360

*Told are the seven cases on Taking.*⁷

¹ Vin-a.1113 says “because of the resolves, sanniṭṭhānantike, “I will not have this robe-material made up” and “I will not come back”, the two impediments are both cut off when no more than these thoughts have arisen”. Vin.5.178 says that they are cut off simultaneously.

² Vin-a.1113 says of this that first the residence-impediment is cut off; the robes-impediment is cut off when the robe is lost. Cf. Vin.5.178. ³ katacivara. ⁴ Vin-a.1113 says that first the robes-impediment is cut off; the residence-impediment is cut off with his hearing (the news). Cf. Vin.5.178. ⁵ sambhuṇāti. ⁶ This must mean a general removal for all monks resident within one sīma, boundary. ⁷ ādāyasattakaṃ niṭṭhitaṃ.

SEVEN ON TAKING

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking with him¹ a robe that is made up, goes away, thinking, “I will not come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his going away ...²

Told are the seven cases on Taking with him.

Vin.1.257

SIX ON BRINGING

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking a robe that is imperfectly executed,³ goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina, (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled ... (=Kd.7.2; read taking a robe that is imperfectly executed instead of taking a robe) ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

*Told are the six cases on Taking*⁴

SIX ON TAKING

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled ... (=Kd.7.3; read taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed instead of taking with him a robe) ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with

BD.4.361

¹ samādāya. ² Vinaya Texts ii.160, n.1 says, “This chapter is word for word identical with Chapter 2: only instead of ‘takes’ (ādāya) read ‘takes with him’ (samādāya). We cannot say what different meanings these two words are intended to convey”. ³ vippakatacīvara. Cf. vippakata at Vin.3.155, Vin.3.225, Vin.3.227, Vin.3.229. ⁴ “Six of the seven cases specified in Kd.7.2 (with the exception of the first of the seven) ... The first case is necessarily omitted, because it is essential to that case, that the Bhikkhu going away takes with him a robe ready for wear”, so Vinaya Texts, ii.160, n.3.

(those of the other) monks.¹

The six cases on Taking with him

FIFTY ON BRINGING

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled ...²

Kd.7.6.2

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs, to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.³

Vin.1.258

Kd.7.6.3

¹ Again the first case is omitted. If there is, on the monk’s part, no going away with a robe ready to wear, there is no ground for removing the kaṭhina privileges depending on “going away”. These can only be removed if the monk has gone away taking, or taking with him, a robe that is (already) made up, ready to wear. ² “This case is word for word identical with the second case in Kd.7.2.1. After it follow the third and fourth case of Kd.7.2.1, which it is unnecessary to print here again in full extent. The triad of these cases is repeated here in order to serve as a basis for the variations which are to follow in Kd.7.2.2, Kd.7.2.3,” so Vinaya Texts ii.161, n.1. ³ In these clauses, the monk, before he has got to the boundary and not after, as in Kd.7.6.1 thinks that he will not return.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away without having determined,¹ for it neither occurs to him that “I will come back” nor does it occur to him that “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

BD.4.362

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away without having determined, for it neither occurs to him that “I will come back”, nor does it occur to him that “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him: “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away without having determined, for it neither occurs to him that “I will come back”, nor does it occur to him that “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up; but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.²

Kd.7.6.4

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back.” When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come

¹ anadhittitena. ² The same as Kd.7.6.1 except for the words added in each case in Kd.7.6.3, “without having determined ... ‘I will not come back’.”

BD.4.363 back,” and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up. When that robe is made up he hears, “The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed in this residence.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his hearing this news).¹

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up. When that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back,” spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.²

Vin.1.259 A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he gets that robe-material made up. When that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back,” (his return) coincides with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

FIFTY ON TAKING, ETC.

Kd.7.7.1 A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking with him robe-material, goes away ... it should be given in full thus, like the portion on “going away, taking” ... A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth is made, taking a robe that is imperfectly executed, goes away ... it should be given in full thus, like the portion on “going away, taking with him” ... A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth is made, taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed, goes away ...

¹ =Kd.7.2.2. ² =Kd.7.2.2.

FIFTY ON TAKING WHAT IS IMPERFECTLY EXECUTED

(=Kd.7.6; read taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed instead of taking robe-material) ... That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.¹

BD.4.364

Told is the Portion for Repeating on Taking

TWELVE CASES CONTRARY TO EXPECTATION

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe.² When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to³ that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe ... It occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him.¹ That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.²

¹ "The whole Chapter 6 is repeated here three times, the first time replacing the words 'takes a robe' by 'takes a robe with him' (cf. Chapter 3); the second time replacing 'takes a robe' by 'takes a robe not ready' (imperfectly executed) (cf. Chapter 4); and the third time with these two modifications combined (cf. Chapter 5)" — so Vinaya Texts, ii.162, n.2. ² see Bu-NP3, BD.2.26, and Bu-NP3, BD.2.27, definition of "expectation". ³ payirupāsati.

Kd.7.7.2
BD.4.365

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.

Vin.1.260

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

Kd.7.7.3

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, "I will come back", nor does it occur to him, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of

¹ tassa sā cīvarāsā upacchijjati. ² āsāvachedikā. Vin-a.1113 says that first the residence-impediment is cut off; the robes-impediment is cut off when the expectation of a robe is disappointed. Cf. above, BD.4.358, n.3.

(his robe) being settled.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

BD.4.366

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (the robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, “I will come back”, nor does it occur to him, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

*Told are the twelve cases on Contrary to Expectation.*¹

TWELVE CASES IN ACCORDANCE WITH EXPECTATION

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will not have this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

¹ anasādoḷāsakaṃ niṭṭhitam.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

BD.4.367

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will come back". When he has gone outside the boundary it occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

Kd.7.9.2

Vin.1.261

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will come back". When he has gone outside the boundary he hears that "In this residence the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed". It occurs to him, "Inasmuch as in this residence the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed, I will attend to this expectation of a robe here", and he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, "I will come back" ... It occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

Kd.7.9.3

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expect-tation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. He gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he hears, “The kaṭhina (privileges) are removed in this residence”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his hearing (this news).

BD.4.368

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe, I will not come back”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. He gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back”, spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away with the expectation of a robe, thinking, “I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary he attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one in accordance with his expectation, he does not obtain one contrary to his expectation. He gets that robe-material made up; when that robe is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back”, (his return) coincides with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

*Told are the six cases on Taking*¹

¹ “Six of the seven cases specified in Kd.7.2 (with the exception of the first of the seven) ... The first case is necessarily omitted, because it is essential to that case, that the Bhikkhu going away takes with him a robe ready for wear”, so Vinaya Texts, ii.160, n.3.

TWELVE ON BUSINESS

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business. When he has gone outside the boundary there arises¹ the expectation of a robe. He attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being settled.

BD.4.369

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business. When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. It occurs to him, “I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back”, and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

Kd.7.10.2

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, thinking, “I will not come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. He attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolve.

A monk ... It occurs to him, “I will get this robe-material made up here”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

¹ uppajjati.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, thinking, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. It occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

BD.4.370

Kd.7.10.3

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, "I will come back", nor does it occur to him, "I will not come back". When he has gone outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. He attends to that expectation of a robe; he obtains one contrary to his expectation, he does not obtain one in accordance with his expectation. It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back". That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

Vin.1.263

A monk ... It occurs to him, "I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back", and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away on some business, (but) without having determined, for it neither occurs to him, "I will come back", nor does it occur to him, "I will not come back". When he has gone back outside the boundary there arises the expectation of a robe. It occurs to him, "I will attend to this expectation of a robe here, I will not come back", and he attends to that expectation of a robe, but that expectation of a robe is disappointed for him. That monk's kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of the disappointment of his expectation.

Told are the twelve cases on Business

NINE CASES ON WITHOUT COLLECTING

BD.4.371

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away, travelling to distant parts,¹ without collecting² his share of the robe-material. While he is thus travelling to distant parts, monks ask him, “Where have you, your reverence, spent the rains, and where is your share of the robe-material?”

He speaks thus, “I spent the rains in such and such a residence, and my share of the robe-material is there.”

These speak thus, “Go, your reverence, fetch that robe-material. We will make up that robe-material for you here.”

He, going to that residence, asks the monks: “Where, your reverences,³ is my-share of the robe-material?”

These speak thus: “This, your reverence, is your share of the robe-material. Where are you going?”

He speaks thus: “I am going to such and such a residence. The monks will make up the robe-material for me there.”

These speak thus: “No, your reverence, do not go; we will make up the robe-material for you here.”

It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

Kd.7.11.2

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away, travelling to distant parts without collecting his share of the robe-material ...

“This, your reverence, is your share of the robe-material.”

¹ disaṅgamika. Cf. Vin.1.119. ² apacinayamāno. Pali-English Dictionary, Critical Pali Dictionary, Vinaya Texts ii.166 all suggest “guarding his claim”, as from apacināti. It would seem however to be the negative of pacinati, “to take up, to collect”. The monk, according to the context, leaves his robe-material behind, he then goes away without gathering it up and taking it with him. It is true however that in going away he does not renounce his claim to his share of the robe-material. ³ This seems the only time that this monk uses a form of address, āvuso, in speaking to other monks.

He, taking that robe-material, goes to that residence. On the way (some monks ask him: “Your reverence, where are you going?”

BD.4.372

He speaks thus: “I am going to such and such a residence. The monks will make up the robe-material for me there.”

These speak thus: “No, your reverence, do not go; we will make up the robe-material for you here.”

It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

Vin.1.264

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

Kd.7.11.3

A monk, after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, goes away, travelling to distant parts without collecting his share of the robe-material ...

“This, your reverence, is your share of the robe-material.”

He, taking the robe-material, goes to that residence; while he is going to that residence, it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back.” That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... It occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back”, and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

Told are the nine cases on Without collecting

FIVE ON LIVING IN COMFORT

BD.4.373

A monk, one who lives in comfort,¹ after kaṭhina-cloth has been made, taking robe-material, goes away, thinking, “I will go to such and such a residence; if there comes to be comfort for me there, I will stay, but if there does not come to be comfort for me, I will go to such and such a residence; if there comes to be comfort for me there, I will stay, but if there does not come to be comfort for me, I will go to such and such a residence; if there comes to be comfort for me there, I will stay, but if there does not come to be comfort for me, I will come back”. When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him, “I will not get this robe-material made up, nor will I come back”. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his resolves.

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, it occurs to him: “I will get this robe-material made up here, I will not come back,” and he gets that robe-material made up, but while that robe-material is being made up, it is lost. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robe) being lost.

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, he has that robe-material made up; when that robe-material is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back”, spends the time outside (the boundary) until the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed. That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of his having crossed the boundary.

Vin.1.265

A monk ... When he has gone outside the boundary, he has that robe-material made up; when that robe-material is made up, he, thinking again and again, “I will come back (his return) coincides with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). That monk’s kaṭhina (privileges) are removed together with (those of the other) monks.

BD.4.374

¹ phāsuvihārika. “Intent on finding a comfortable place (to live in)” of Vinaya Texts ii.168, although justified by the context, ascribes both more and less to the compound, phāsuvihārika, than it actually contains. Cf. the jungle-dweller who, if he was thinking about phāsuvihāra, might live independently of guidance, at Kd.1.73.4 (above BD.4.118).

Told are the five cases on Living in comfort

ON OBSTACLES AND NOT-OBSTACLES

“Monks, there are these two impediments,¹ these two non-impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges). And what, monks, are the two impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges)? The residence-impediment and the robes-impediment. And how, monks, does the residence-impediment come to be? Monks, in this case a monk who is either staying in or who is longing for that residence, goes away, thinking, ‘I will come back’.² Thus, monks, does the residence-impediment come to be. And how, monks, does the robes-impediment come to be? Monks, in this case, a monk’s robe-material comes to be not made up or it is imperfectly executed or the expectation of a robe is not fulfilled. Thus, monks, does the robes-impediment come to be. Monks, these are the two impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges).

Kd.7.13.2

¹ palibodha, obstruction, hindrance, obstacle, impediment, drawback. Ten palibodhas are enumerated at Kh-a.39, and explained in detail at Vism.90ff. But in its explanation of āvās-apalibodha, the first on the list, the Visuddhimagga makes no reference to kaṭhina; cīvara-palibodha does not occur here or in Kh-a.

The idea of the palibodhas and apalibodhas is somewhat difficult to follow. After kaṭhina-cloth is made, five privileges are allowable to monks (Kd.7.1.3), and there are eight grounds for the removal of these privileges (Kd.7.1.7). But then, it seems, these eight grounds are in turn subject to the two impediments and the two non-impediments. That is to say, the kaṭhina privileges cannot be removed if there is present an impediment to the grounds for removing them, but only if there is no impediment to these grounds. Vin-a.1114 says, “Having shown the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges), now whatever are impediments are said to be cut off in regard to these kaṭhina (privileges).” See Vinaya Texts ii.149, n. and Vinaya Texts ii.157, n.2. ² The first of the grounds for removing the kaṭhina privileges is that depending on a monk having gone away. But here, although he goes away, he intends to come back. Thus the ground for removing the privilege meets with an obstruction.

Text here reads, idha bhikkhave bhikkhu vassati vātasmiṃ āvāse sāpekkho vā pakkamati (with variant reading vesati) which has led translator at Vinaya Texts ii.169 to render, “A Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, goes away (for a time), when it is raining or storming, with the intention of returning to that residence.” But Sinhalese edition 1933, ii.322 and Siamese edition both read, idha bhikkhave bhikkhu vassāti vā tasmim āvāse sapekho vā pakkamati, which I follow as making more sense.

“And what, monks, are the two non-impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges)? The residence-non-impediment and the robes-non-impediment. And how, monks, does the residence-non-impediment come to be? In this case, monks, a monk goes away from that residence because of giving up, because of renunciation, because of sacrifice, because of indifference, thinking, ‘I will not come back’.¹ Thus, monks, does the residence-non-impediment come to be. And how, monks, does the robes-non-impediment come to be? In this case, monks, a monk’s robe-material comes to be made up or it is lost or destroyed or burnt or the expectation of a robe is disappointed.² Thus, monks, does the robes-non-impediment come to be. These, monks, are the two non-impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina (privileges).”

The Section on kaṭhina³: the Seventh

IN THIS SECTION ARE TWELVE ITEMS, THE WORDS OF ABRIDGEMENT ARE ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEEN. THIS IS ITS KEY

Thirty monks of Pāvā stayed longing in Sāketa, at the end of the rains they went with drenched (robes) to see the Conqueror. /

This item of kaṭhina-cloth, and the five things called allowable.⁴

Without asking permission, nor taking three robes, a joint-meal likewise, /

As much as is required, and one that accrues will be for the makers.

The motion, and just what is made and just what is not made. /

Marking, washing, and calculating, and cutting, tacking, making lengths, using a piece of cloth, and strengthening, braiding, /

Binding, patching, dyeing, talk with hints,⁵ temporary, postponement, abandonment, not (made) if it is not allowable, but for these three, /

Unless five parts or more when they are cut out are hemmed together,

¹ As he does not intend to return there is no reason why his kaṭhina privileges should not be removed. His intention provides the non-impediment. ² These are no impediments to the grounds for removing the kaṭhina privileges. They may be removed, as we have seen, because a monk’s robe is made up, because he resolves not to have it made up, because it is lost, or because his expectation of a robe is disappointed. Cf. Bu-NP.1, definition of “when the robes are settled”, and see BD.2.6, BD.2.15. ³ Kaṭhinakkhandhaka. Cf. Kaṭhinavagga, Vin.3.195-223.

⁴ kappiyan ti; Sinhalese edition kappissanti, will be allowable. ⁵ nimitta-kathā here. It may be a composite word for nimittakata and parikathākata; otherwise the latter is not included in this part of the “key”, although it is mentioned lower down.

BD.4.375

Vin.1.266

BD.4.376

not (made) unless by an individual, if properly (made) he gives thanks standing outside the boundary: / kaṭhina-cloth comes to be not made, thus it is taught by the awakened one.
 Unsoiled, when what is allowable (is unsoiled), pieces of cloth, rags, and bits near a shop, /
 Not insinuation, nor roundabout talking, not temporary and no postponement, not abandoned, made allowable, and inasmuch as it is for (a set of) three robes, /
 If five parts or more are cut out and hemmed together, if the making is by an individual,
 if properly (made) he gives thanks standing on the boundary: /
 Thus the making of kaṭhina-cloth.
 Eight grounds for removal:
 that depending on going away,
 on being settled, on resolve and on loss, /
 On hearing, on disappointment of an expectation, over the boundary,
 and the eighth is with the removal (of other monks').
 Taking a robe that is made up, he goes away, thinking,
 "I will not come back", /
 His kaṭhina (privileges) become removed because of his going away.
 Taking robe-material he goes away,¹ when he is outside the boundary, he thinks, /
 "I will have it made up here,
 I will not come back";
 his kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled.
 Taking it, when he is outside the boundary, he intends, thinking, "Neither that nor will I come back", /
 His kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that² of resolve.
 Taking robe-material he goes away, when he is outside the boundary, he thinks, /
 "I will have it made up here, I will not come back," but while it is being made up, it is lost;
 his kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that of loss. /
 Taking it, he goes away, thinking, "I will come back",
 and has the robe-material made up outside,
 when the robe has been made up,
 he hears that the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed there; /
 His kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that of hearing.
 Taking it, he goes away, thinking, "I will come back",

BD.4.377

¹ yāti. ² taṃ, doubtless "ground" is to be understood.

and has the robe-material made up outside, /
 When the robe has been made up, (staying) outside he does not go back¹
 until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges);
 his kaṭhina (privileges) become removed depending on that of having crossed the boundary. /
 Taking it, he goes away, thinking, “I will come back”,
 and has the robe-material made up outside,
 when the robe has been made up,
 thinking, “I will come back”,
 (his return) coincides² with the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges); /
 The removal of his kaṭhina (privileges) is because it occurs³ with (that of) the other monks.
 Taking and taking with him, the going away⁴ is seven times sevenfold. /
 There is no sixfold⁵ going away,
 (the robes) imperfectly executed depending on “going away”.
 Taking it, this arises, “I will have it made up when I am outside the boundary”; /
 Settled and resolves and loss, these three.
 Taking it, thinking, “I will not come back”,
 “I am making it up outside the boundary”; /
 Settled, then resolves, then loss, this is three (fold).
 Without having determined, for it does not (occur) to him, the threefold meaning below.⁶ /
 Taking it, he goes away, thinking, “I will come back”,
 “I am making it up outside the boundary”, thinking, “I will not come back”, he gets it made up; his kaṭhina (privileges) are removed because of (his robes) being settled. /
 Resolves and loss, hearing, having crossed the boundary, it may arise with (those of the other) monks;
 thus there is going away fifteen times. /
 Taking with him, imperfectly executed, taking it with him likewise again,
 these are four turns⁷ where all is fifteen-fold. /
 And contrary to expectation, in accordance with expectation, and business, these three.
 One should understand this from what has been said:⁸
 there are three that are each twelve (-fold). /

Vin.1.267
 BD.4.378

¹ nāmeti, cf. Snp.1143, nāpenti with variant reading nāmenti. ² sambhoti. ³ jāyati. ⁴ gati.

⁵ chaccā. Sinhalese edition chaṭṭhe. ⁶ Pali has “below”, referring to the leaves of the palm-leaf manuscripts, where we say “above”. ⁷ vārā, i.e. for recitation. ⁸ Nayato, perhaps “from the method”.

Here are nine on “without collecting”, there is a set of five on comfort;
impediments, non-impediments;
the key is made from what has been said.

8. ROBES (CĪVARA)

THE STORY OF JĪVAKA

Kd.8.1.1
BD.4.379

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeling-place. Now at that time Vesālī was prosperous and flourishing, full of folk, thronged with people,¹ and it was well off for food; and there were seven thousand seven hundred and seven long houses,² and seven thousand seven hundred and seven gabled buildings, and seven thousand seven hundred and seven parks,³ and seven thousand seven hundred and seven lotus-tanks. There was the courtesan Ambapālī,⁴ beautiful, good to look upon, charming, she was possessed of the utmost beauty of complexion, was clever at dancing and singing and lute-playing, much visited by desirous people and she went for a night for fifty,⁵ and through her Vesālī shone forth all the more.

Kd.8.1.2

Then the urban council⁶ of Rājagaha went to Vesālī on some business. The urban council of Rājagaha saw that Vesālī was prosperous and flourishing, full of folk, thronged with people, and well off for food; and (they saw) the seven thousand seven hundred and seven long houses ... seven thousand seven hundred and seven lotus-tanks, and Ambapālī, the courtesan, beautiful, good to look upon, charming ... and (they saw) that through her Vesālī shone forth all the more. Then the urban council of Rājagaha, having transacted that business in Vesālī, came back again to Rājagaha;

¹ Cf. DN.i.211, DN.ii.146, MN.i.377, AN.iii.215. ² pāsāda, cf. BD.2.16, n.5. ³ ārāma, not "monasteries" here. See BD.2.2, n.2. ⁴ Here called Ambapālikā. Mentioned above, BD.4.315.

⁵ Vin-a.1114 says, "taking fifty kahāpaṇas she goes night by night." ⁶ negama. Vin-a.1114 calls this a kuṭumbikagaṇa, a group of leading men. Cf. negama at Vin.3.220.

they approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached they spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

“Sire, Vesālī is prosperous and flourishing ... and through her Vesālī shines forth all the more. It were good, sire, if we too might establish a courtesan.” “Well now, good sirs,¹ do find such a girl as you might establish as a courtesan.”

BD.4.380

Now at that time there was in Rājagaha a girl called Sālavatī, who was beautiful, good to look upon, charming, she was possessed of the utmost beauty of complexion. Then the urban council of Rājagaha established the girl, Sālavatī,² as courtesan. And the courtesan Sālavatī soon came to be clever at dancing and singing and lute-playing; she was much visited by desirous people, and she went for a night for the fee of a hundred.³ Then the courtesan Sālavatī soon became pregnant. Then it occurred to the courtesan Sālavatī: “Men do not like a pregnant woman. If anyone should find out concerning me that ‘The courtesan Sālavatī is pregnant’, all respect for me would dwindle. What now if I should make it known that I am ill?”

Kd.8.1.3

Vin.1.269

Then the courtesan Sālavatī enjoined the door-keeper, saying: “Good door-keeper, do not let any man come in, and if anyone asks for me, make it known that I am ill.”

“Very well, lady,” that door-keeper answered the courtesan Sālavatī in assent.

Kd.8.1.4

Then the courtesan Sālavatī when (the child of) her womb was mature, gave birth to a son. Then the courtesan Sālavatī enjoined a slave-woman, saying: “Now then, come along, having put this boy into a winnowing-basket,⁴ having taken him out, throw him away on a rubbish-heap.”⁵

“Very well, lady,” and that slave-woman having answered the courtesan Sālavatī in assent, having put that boy into a winnowing-basket, having taken him out, threw him away on a rubbish-heap.

¹ bhaṇe, a form of address sometimes used by kings to their subjects. ² Cf. Snp-a.i.244.

³ paṭisatena. Vinaya Texts ii.172 takes this to mean that she asked for a hundred kaḥāpaṇas a night which undoubtedly balances Ambapālī’s price of fifty kaḥāpaṇas, see Vin-a.1114. The Commentary in its exegesis of paṭisatena does not mention coinage or currency. Paṭisatena however probably means “for a hundred in return”, “against a hundred”. ⁴ Vin-a.1114 calls this jiṇṇasuppa an old winnowing-basket. ⁵ Cf. Dh-p-a.i.174.

BD.4.381 Now at that time the king's son, Abhaya¹ by name, going in the morning to the royal audience, saw that boy surrounded by crows; seeing this, he asked the people: "Good sirs, what is this that is surrounded by crows?"

"It is a boy, sire."

"Is he alive, good sirs?"

"He is alive, sire."

"Well now, good sirs, having brought that boy to our women's quarters, give him to foster-mothers to care for."

"Very well, sire," and these people having answered Abhaya, the king's son, in assent, having brought that boy to the women's quarters of Abhaya, the king's son, gave him to foster-mothers saying, "Care for him".

Kd.8.1.5 Because it was said of him, "He is alive",² they gave him the name of Jīvaka; because the prince³ caused him to be cared for, they gave him the name of Komārabhacca.⁴

And before long Jīvaka Komārabhacca attained to years of discretion. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached Abhaya, the king's son, and having approached he spoke thus to Abhaya, the king's son:

"Who, sire, is my mother? Who my father?"

"Not even I, good Jīvaka, know your mother, but I am your father, for I had you cared for."

Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

Kd.8.1.6 "Without a craft, it is not easy to depend upon these royal families. Suppose I were to learn a craft?⁵" Now at that time there lived a world-famed⁶ doctor at Taxilā.

¹ See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ² jīvati. ³ kumāra. ⁴ Meaning perhaps "the Prince-fed" (so GS.i.24). See note at Vinaya Texts ii.174, at end of which it is said, "We believe therefore, that this surname Komārabhacca really means 'master of the kaumārabhṛiya science', i.e. a part of the medical science which comprises the treatment of infants. Short account of his history given at AN-a.i.398f. At DN-a.133, where brief synopsis of his story also appears, he is called Komārabhaṇḍa, and at Divyāvadāna 506ff. Kumārabhūta. At AN.i.26 he is called chief of lay followers who are liked by people. MN.v is addressed to him.

⁵ Vin-a.1114 says that he thought of the doctor's craft for this is on the side of amity towards men and their welfare, whereas elephant-lore and horsemanship are connected with the injury of others. ⁶ disāpāmokkha. Word occurs at Ja.i.166.

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, without having asked (permission) of Abhaya, the king's son, set out for Taxilā; in course of time he arrived at Taxilā and that doctor; having approached, he spoke thus to that doctor:

Vin.1.270

“I want, teacher,¹ to train in the craft.”

BD.4.382

“Well then, good Jīvaka, train in it.”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca learnt much and learnt it quickly, and he reflected upon it well, and he did not forget what he had learnt. Then at the end of seven years, it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “I am learning much and learning it quickly, and I am reflecting upon it well, and I do not forget what I have learnt, but after studying for seven years the end of this craft is not visible to me. When will the end of this craft be visible?”

Kd.8.1.7

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached that doctor; having approached he spoke thus to that doctor:

“I, teacher, am learning much and learning it quickly, and I am reflecting upon it well, and I do not forget what I have learnt, but after studying for seven years the end of this craft is not visible to me. When will the end of this craft be visible?”

“Well now, good Jīvaka, taking a spade, touring a yojana all round Taxilā, bring whatever you should see that is not medicinal.”

“Very well, teacher,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered that doctor in assent, taking a spade, touring a yojana all round Taxilā, did not see anything that was not medicinal. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached that doctor; having approached he spoke thus to that doctor:

“Teacher, while I was touring for a yojana all round Taxilā, I did not see anything that was not medicinal.”

“You are trained, good Jīvaka, this much is enough for a livelihood for you,” and he gave him trifling provisions for the journey.

Kd.8.1.8

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking those trifling provisions for the journey, set out for Rājagaha. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca's trifling provisions for the journey became used up on the way, at Sāketa. Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“These wilderness roads have little water, little food; it is not easy to go along them without provisions for the journey.² Suppose I were to look about for provisions for the journey?”

¹ ācariya. ² Cf. Vin.1.244, above, BD.4.335-BD.4.336.

THE STORY OF THE MERCHANT'S WIFE

BD.4.383 Now at that time in Sāketa a merchant's wife had had a disease of the head for seven years. Many very great, world-famed doctors who had come had not been able to cure her; taking much gold,¹ they went away. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, entering Sāketa, asked the people: “Who, good sirs, is ill? Whom shall I attend?”²

Vin.1.271 “Teacher, this merchant's wife has had a disease of the head for seven years; go, teacher, attend this merchant's wife.”

Kd.8.1.9

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca went up to the dwelling of that householder, the merchant, and having gone up, he enjoined the door-keeper, saying: “Go, good door-keeper, say to the merchant's wife, ‘Lady, a doctor is come who wants to see you’”.

“Very well, teacher,” and that door-keeper having answered Jīvaka Komārabhacca in assent, approached that merchant's wife; having approached, he spoke thus to that merchant's wife: “Lady, a doctor is come who wants to see you.”

“What sort of a doctor is he, good door-keeper?”

“He is young, lady.”

“That's enough, good door-keeper. What could a young doctor do for me? Many very great, world-famed doctors who have come have not been able to cure me; they have gone away taking much gold.”

Kd.8.1.10

Then that door-keeper went up to Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having gone up, he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “Teacher, the merchant's wife speaks thus: ‘That's enough, good door-keeper ... taking much gold’.”

“Go, good door-keeper, say to the merchant's wife: ‘Lady, the doctor speaks thus: Do not, lady, give anything beforehand; when you become well, then you may give what you like’.”

“Very well, teacher,” and that door-keeper having answered Jīvaka Komārabhacca in assent, went up to that merchant's wife; having gone up, he spoke thus to that merchant's wife: "Lady, the doctor speaks thus ... '... then you may give what you like'."

¹ hirañña. ² tikicchati, to treat medically, to cure.

"Well then, good door-keeper, let the doctor come."

BD.4.384

"Very well, lady," and that door-keeper having answered the merchant's wife in assent, went up to Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having gone up, he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

"The merchant's wife, teacher, summons you."

Kd.8.1.11

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca went up to that merchant's wife; having gone up, having observed her uneasiness,¹ he spoke thus to the merchant's wife:

"Lady, a handful² of ghee is wanted."

Then that merchant's wife had a handful of ghee given to Jīvaka Komārabhacca. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, cooking up that handful of ghee with various medicines, made that merchant's wife lie down on her back on a couch and gave it (to her) through the nose. Then that ghee, given through the nose, came out through the mouth. Then that merchant's wife, spitting it into a receptacle, enjoined a slave-woman, saying:

"Come, now, take up this ghee with cotton."³

Kd.8.1.12

Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: "It is astonishing how stingy this housewife⁴ is, in that she has this ghee, which ought to be thrown away, taken up with cotton; many of my very precious medicines went into it, and what kind of a fee⁵ will she give me?"

Vin.1.272

Then that merchant's wife, having observed Jīvaka Komārabhacca's uneasiness, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: "Teacher, why are you perturbed?"

"It occurred to me in this case: it is astonishing ... will she give me?"

"But, teacher, we householders know about this economy⁶; this ghee is excellent for the servants or workmen for rubbing their feet, or poured out into a lamp. Do not you, teacher, be perturbed, your fee will not be lacking."⁷

Kd.8.1.13

¹ vikāra. ² pasata, a small measure of capacity; explained at Vin-a.1116 as ekahatthapūṭa, what is contained in one hand. See Vinaya Texts ii.178, n.. ³ picu, which Vin-a.1116 explains by kappāsapaṭala, a cotton covering. ⁴ gharaṇī, see BD.2.203, n.1. ⁵ deyyadhamma. ⁶ sarṇyama. ⁷ hāyati, to waste away, to disappear, diminish, dwindle.

BD.4.385 Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca removed the merchant's wife's seven year old disease of the head by just the one treatment through the nose.¹ Then that merchant's wife, being well, gave four thousand² to Jīvaka Komārabhacca; her son, thinking, "My mother is well", gave four thousand; her daughter-in-law, thinking, "My mother-in-law is well", gave four thousand; the householder, the merchant, thinking, "My wife is well", gave four thousand and a slave and a slave-woman and a horse-chariot. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking these sixteen thousand and the slave and the slave-woman and the horse-chariot, set out for Rājagaha; in due course he approached Abhaya, the king's son, at Rājagaha; having approached he spoke thus to Abhaya, the king's son:

"Sire, this is for my first work: sixteen thousand and a slave and a slave-woman and a horse-chariot. May your highness³ accept it as a tribute for having had me cared for."⁴

"No, good Jīvaka, let it be for you yourself; but do build a dwelling in our palace⁵."

"Very well, sire," and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered Abhaya, the king's son, in assent, built a dwelling in the palace of Abhaya, the king's son.

THE STORY OF KING BIMBISĀRA

Kd.8.1.14

Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha came to suffer from a fistula; his outer garments were stained with blood. The queens, seeing this, made fun of him, saying: "Now the king is in his courses, the king is having a period, soon the king will give birth." On account of this the king became ashamed. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to Abhaya, the king's son:

"Good Abhaya, I have such a disease that my outer garments are stained with blood. The queens, seeing this, make fun of me, saying, '... the king will give birth'. Please, good Abhaya, do find a doctor such as could attend me."

¹ natthukamma. Allowed to monks at Vin.1.204. Cf. Vin.3.83 and BD.1.143, n.2. At DN.i.12 called by some recluses and brahmins a low or worldly lore from which Gotama abstains.

² probably kahāpaṇas. ³ deva, masculine singular here. ⁴ posāvanika. ⁵ antepura, not women's quarters here.

"Sire, there is this Jīvaka of ours, a young doctor of high repute, he will attend your majesty."

"Very well, good Abhaya, command the doctor, Jīvaka, so that he shall attend me."

Vin.1.273

Then Abhaya, the king's son, commanded Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: "Go, good Jīvaka, attend the king."

Kd.8.1.15
BD.4.386

"Very well, sire," and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered Abhaya, the king's son, in assent, taking medicine under his nail, approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, he spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

"Sire, let me see the disease."

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca removed King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha's fistula with just the one ointment. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, being well, having had five hundred women adorned with all kinds of ornaments, having made them take (these) off, having had them made into a pile, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: "Let all these ornaments of the five hundred women be yours, good Jīvaka."

"No, sire, may your majesty remember my office."

"Well then, good Jīvaka, may you tend me and the women¹ and the Order of monks with the awakened one at its head."

"Very well, sire," Jīvaka Komārabhacca answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent.

THE STORY OF THE MERCHANT OF RĀJAGAHA

Now at that time a merchant of Rājagaha had had a disease of the head for seven years. Many very great, world-famed doctors who had come had not been able to cure him. Taking much gold, they went away. Moreover he came to be given up by the doctors. Some doctors spoke thus: "The householder, the merchant will pass away² on the fifth day." Some doctors spoke thus:

Kd.8.1.16

¹ itthāgāra. ² kālaṃ karissati, will complete his time (here, in this birth), will die.

“The householder, the merchant will pass away on the seventh day.” Then it occurred to the urban council of Rājagaha: “This householder, the merchant is very useful to the king as well as to the urban council, but yet he has been given up by the doctors. Some doctors speak thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the fifth day.’ Some doctors speak thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the seventh day.’ Now, this Jīvaka, the king’s doctor, is young and of good repute. Suppose we should ask Jīvaka, the king’s doctor, to attend the householder, the merchant?”

Kd.8.1.17
BD.4.387

Then the urban council of Rājagaha approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached they spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

“Sire, this householder, the merchant is very useful to your majesty as well as to the citizens; but then he is given up by the doctors ... ‘... will die on the seventh day’. It were good if your majesty were to command Jīvaka, the doctor, to attend the householder, the merchant.”

Vin.1.274

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Go, good Jīvaka, attend the householder, the merchant.”

“Very well, sire,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, approached that householder, the merchant; having approached, having observed the uneasiness of the householder, the merchant, he spoke thus to the householder, the merchant:

“If I, householder, should make you well, what would be my fee?”

“All my property shall become yours, teacher, and I will be your slave.”

Kd.8.1.18

“Now, householder, are you able to lie down on one side for seven months?”

“I am able, teacher, to lie down on one side for seven months.”

“Now, householder, are you able to lie down on the other side for seven months?”

“I am able, teacher, to lie down on the other side for seven months.”

“Now, householder, are you able to lie down on your back for seven months?”

“I am able, teacher, to lie down on my back for seven months.”

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, having made the householder, the merchant lie down on a couch, having strapped him to the couch, having cut open the skin of his head, having opened¹ a suture in the skull,² having drawn out two living creatures,³ showed them to the people, saying:

“Do you see, masters, these two living creatures, the one small, the other large? This large living creature was seen by those teachers who spoke thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the fifth day’; on the fifth day it would have destroyed the brain of the householder, the merchant, and when the brain had been destroyed the householder, the merchant would have passed away. It was rightly seen by those teachers. This small living creature was seen by those teachers who spoke thus: ‘The householder, the merchant will pass away on the seventh day’; on the seventh day it would have destroyed the brain of the householder, the merchant, and when the brain had been destroyed the householder, the merchant would have passed away. It was rightly seen by those teachers.” And having closed the suture of the skull, having sewn up the skin of the head, he applied an ointment.

BD.4.388

Kd.8.1.19

Then the householder, the merchant, when seven days had passed, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“I am not able, teacher, to lie down on one side for seven months.”

“But did you not, householder, answer me in assent, saying: ‘I am able, teacher, to lie down on one side for seven months’?”

“It is true, teacher, that I answered thus, but I will die, I am not able to lie down on one side for seven months.”

“Well then, householder, you lie down on the other side for seven months.”

Then the householder, the merchant, when seven days had passed, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“I am not able, teacher, to lie down on the other side for seven months.”

“But did you not, householder, answer me in assent, saying: ‘I am able, teacher, to lie down on the other side for seven months’?”

“It is true, teacher, that I answered thus, but I will die, I am not able to lie down on the other side for seven months.”

“Well then, householder, you lie down on your back for seven months.”

Then the householder, the merchant, when seven days had passed, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“I am not able, teacher, to lie down on my back for seven months.”

Vin.1.275

¹ vināmetvā, Vin-a.1117 explains by vivaritvā. ² sibbinī, cf. Ja.vi.339, sibbāni (plural).

³ pāṇaka.

BD.4.389 “But did you not, householder, answer me in assent, saying: ‘I am able, teacher, to lie down on my back for seven months’?”

Kd.8.1.20 “It is true, teacher, that I answered thus, but I will die I am not able to lie down on my back for seven months.”

“If I, householder, had not spoken to you thus, you would not have lain down so long (as this); but I knew beforehand that the householder, the merchant would become well in three times seven days. Rise up, householder, you are well; find what is my fee.”

“All my property shall become yours, teacher, and I will be your slave.”

“No, householder, do not give me all your property and do not be my slave; give a hundred thousand to the king and a hundred thousand to me.”

Then the householder, the merchant, being well, gave a hundred thousand to the king and a hundred thousand to Jīvaka Komārabhacca.

THE STORY OF THE MERCHANT’S SON

Kd.8.1.21

Now at that time the son of a merchant of Benares,¹ while playing at turning somersaults,² came to suffer from a twist in the bowels, so that he did not properly digest the conje³ that he drank nor did he properly digest the food that he ate or relieve himself regularly. Because of this he became thin, wretched, his colour bad, yellowish, the veins showing all over his body.³ Then it occurred to the merchant of Benares:

“Now what kind of affliction has my son? He does not properly digest the conje that he drinks and he does not properly digest the food that he eats and he does not relieve himself regularly. Because of this he is thin, wretched, of a bad colour, yellowish, the veins showing all over his body. What now if I, having gone to Rājagaha, should ask the king for Jīvaka, the doctor, to attend my son?”

Then the merchant of Benares, having gone to Rājagaha, approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, he spoke thus to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha:

¹ Bārāṇaseyyaka, an inhabitant of Benares, Bārāṇasī; on the analogy of Pāveyyaka, an inhabitant of Pāvā, see above, BD.4.31, n.2. ² mokkhacikāya kiḷantassa. Cf. BD.1.316, n.1, n.12.

³ stock-phrase.

“Sire, my son has this kind of affliction: he does not properly digest ... the veins showing all over his body. It were good if your majesty were to command Jivaka, the doctor, to attend my son.”

BD.4.390

Vin.1.276

Kd.8.1.22

Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded Jivaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Go, good Jivaka, having gone to Benares, attend the son of the merchant of Benares.”

“Very well, sire,” and Jivaka Komārabhacca having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, having gone to Benares, approached the son of the merchant of Benares; having approached, having observed the uneasiness of the son of the merchant of Benares, having caused the people to be turned away, having surrounded him with a curtain,¹ having tied him to a post, having placed his wife in front (of him), having cut open the skin of his stomach, having drawn out the twisted bowel, showed it to his wife, saying: “See, this was your husband’s affliction; because of this he did not properly digest the conjei that he drank and did not properly digest the food that he ate and did not relieve himself regularly; because of this he is thin, wretched, his colour bad, yellowish, the veins showing all over his body.” Having straightened out the twisted bowel, having put back the bowel again, having sewn up the skin of the stomach, he applied an ointment. Then the son of the merchant of Benares soon became well. Then the merchant of Benares, saying: “My son is well,” gave sixteen thousand to Jivaka Komārabhacca. Then Jivaka Komārabhacca, taking those sixteen thousand, went back again to Rājagaha.

THE STORY OF KING PAJJOTA

Now at that time King Pajjota² came to be suffering from jaundice.³ Many very great, world-famed doctors, who had come had not been able to cure him; taking much gold, they went away. Then King Pajjota sent a messenger to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha, saying: “I have this kind of disease; it would be good if your majesty were to command Jivaka, the doctor, so that

Kd.8.1.23

¹ tirokaraṇī, as at Vin.2.152. ² King of Avantī, capital Ujjenī; cf. Dhp-a.i.192.

³ paṇḍurogābādha. Cf. Vin.1.206 where a monk had this disease. The cure “allowed” him was different from the one administered to Pajjota.

he should attend me.” Then King Bimbisāra of Magadha commanded Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Go, good Jīvaka, having gone to Ujjenī, attend King Pajjota.”

BD.4.391

“Very well, sire,” and Jīvaka Komārabhacca having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, having gone to Ujjenī, approached King Pajjota, and having approached, having observed his uneasiness, he spoke thus to King Pajjota:

Kd.8.1.24

“Sire, I will cook up some ghee, and your majesty will drink it.”

“No, good Jīvaka, do what you can to make (me) well without ghee; ghee is abhorrent to me, loathsome.” Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “The king’s disease is of such a kind that it is not possible to make him well without ghee. Suppose I should cook up the ghee (so that it has) the colour of an astringent decoction, the smell of an astringent decoction, the taste of an astringent decoction¹?”

Vin.1.277

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca cooked up the ghee with various medicines (so that it had) the colour of an astringent decoction, the smell of an astringent decoction, the taste of an astringent decoction. Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “When the king has drunk and digested the ghee, it will make him sick. This king is violent,² he might have me killed. Suppose I should ask (for permission to go away) beforehand?” Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached King Pajjota; having approached he spoke thus to King Pajjota:

Kd.8.1.25

“Sire, we doctors at such a moment³ as this are pulling up roots, gathering medicines. It were good if your majesty were to command at the stables⁴ and at the gateways, saying: ‘Let Jīvaka go out by means of whatever conveyance⁵

¹ kasāvavaṇṇaṃ kasāvagandhaṃ kasāvarasaṃ. Vinaya Texts ii.187 reads “so that it takes the colour, lie smell and the taste of an astringent decoction”. Pali-English Dictionary suggests “of reddish-yellow colour, having a pungent smell, having an astringent taste.” Four kinds of kasāva, astringent decoctions, to be used as medicine in flavouring food, are allowed at Vin.1.201, and kasāvōdaka, a watery astringent decoction, at Vin.1.205. At Vin.2.151 the kasāva allowed was an astringent liquid to be applied to the colouring matter given to walls so as to make the colouring stick on. ² caṇḍa. Pajjota’s full name was Caṇḍapajjota. ³ muhutta is a short period of time, its use here presumably implying that it was urgent for him to get away on his business. ⁴ vāhanāgāra, the room for the conveyances, mounts, vehicles or beasts of burden, so stables, coach house. ⁵ vāhana, mount.

he desires, let him go out by whatever gateway he desires, let him go out at whatever time he desires, let him come in at whatever time he desires’.” Then King Pajjota commanded at the stables and at the gateways, saying: “Let Jīvaka go out by means of whatever conveyance he desires, let him go out by whatever gateway he desires, let him go out at whatever time he desires, let him come in at whatever time he desires.”

BD.4.392

Now at that time King Pajjota had a she-elephant, called Bhaddavatikā, who could do fifty yojanas.¹ Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca offered the ghee to King Pajjota, saying: “Let your majesty drink an astringent decoction.” Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca having made King Pajjota drink the ghee, having gone to the elephant stable, hastened out of the city on the she-elephant, Bhaddavatikā.

Kd.8.1.26

Then King Pajjota, when he had drunk and digested the ghee, was sick. Then King Pajjota spoke thus to the people: “Good sirs, the wicked Jīvaka has made me drink ghee. Well now, good sirs, look for the doctor, Jīvaka.” “Sire, he has hastened out of the city on the she-elephant, Bhaddavatikā.”

Now at that time King Pajjota came to have a slave called Kāka,² who could do sixty yojanas and who was born of a non-human being. Then King Pajjota commanded the slave, Kāka, saying: “Go, good Kāka, make Jīvaka, the doctor, return, saying, ‘The king, teacher, orders you to come back’.”³ Now, good Kāka, these doctors are full of cunning, so do not accept any thing from him.”

Kd.8.1.27

And the slave, Kāka, caught up Jīvaka Komārabhacca on the road to Kosambī as he was having breakfast. Then Kāka, the slave, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “The king, teacher, orders you to come back.”

Vin.1.278

“Wait, good Kāka, until we have eaten; come, good Kāka, you eat.”

“No, teacher, I am commanded by the king, saying: ‘Now good Kāka, these doctors are full of cunning, so do not accept anything from him’.”

¹ Vinaya Texts ii.188 adds “(in one day)”; this information is given at Dh-p-a.i.196: ekadivasaṃ paññāsa yojanāni gacchati. Above she is described as paññāsayojanikā. ² Mentioned at Dh-p-a.i.196. ³ nivattāpeti, “is having you sent back”.

BD.4.393 Now at that time Jīvaka Komārabhacca, having stripped off¹ the medicinal (part) with his nail, was eating an emblic myrobalan² and drinking water. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to Kāka, the slave: “Here, good Kāka, eat the emblic myrobalan and drink the water.”

Kd.8.1.28 Then Kāka, the slave, thinking: “This doctor is eating the emblic myrobalan and drinking the water, there should not be anything harmful,”³ ate half the emblic myrobalan and drank the water. But he ejected that half emblic myrobalan that he was eating, on the spot. Then Kāka, the slave, spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“Is there life for me, teacher?”

“Do not be afraid, good Kāka, for you will get well; but the king is violent, that king might have me killed, so I am not coming back,” and giving the she-elephant, Bhaddavatikā, into Kāka’s charge, he set out for Rājagaha; in due course he approached Rājagaha, and King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached he told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.

Kd.8.1.29 “You did well, good Jīvaka, in not going back, that king is violent, he might have you killed.”

Then King Pajjota, being well, sent a messenger to Jīvaka Komārabhacca, saying: “Let Jīvaka come, I will grant him a boon.”

“No, master, let his majesty remember my office.”

¹ olumpetvā, with variant reading (see Vin.1.390) ulumpetvā, odametvā, oḷumpetvā. Vin-a.1117 explains by odahitvā pakkhipitvā, having put in, having inserted. ² āmalaka, phyllanthus emblica. The fruit allowed as a medicine at Vin.1.201. ³ na arahati kiñci pāpakam hotum.

ON A PAIR OF SIVEYYAKA CLOTHS

Now at that time there accrued to King Pajjota a pair of Siveyyaka cloths¹ which were the chief and best and foremost and most excellent and loveliest of many cloths, of many pairs of cloths, of many hundred pairs of cloths, of many thousand pairs of cloths, of many hundred thousand pairs of cloths. Then King Pajjota sent this pair of Siveyyaka cloths to Jīvaka Komārabhacca. Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

BD.4.394

“This pair of Siveyyaka cloths, sent me by King Pajjota, is the most excellent and loveliest of many cloths ...; no one else is worthy of it but the Lord, the perfected one, the wholly awakened one, or King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha.”

ON EXACTLY THIRTY PURGES

Now at that time the Lord came to have a disturbance of the humours of his body.² Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Ānanda, the Truth-finder has a disturbance of the humours of his body; the Truth-finder

Kd.8.1.30

Vin.1.279

¹ Siveyyaka dussayuga. Vin-a.1117 gives two explanations of Siveyyaka: either it means the cloths used in the Uttarakuru country for covering the dead bodies brought to the cemeteries, sivathhika, in which case a certain kind of bird taking a piece of flesh to the Himalayas, eats it and throws aside the cloth; then a forest-wanderer seeing the cloth brings it to the king; this cloth was obtained by Pajjota in this way. Or, Siveyyaka means that the good women of the Sivi kingdom think, ‘thread is spun from these filicules’ and they speak of a cloth woven of this thread by this name. “Because of this siveyyaka means cemetery-cloth in the Uttarakuru country, and cloth produced in the Sivi kingdom”. Vinaya Texts ii.190 says “No doubt the latter explication is the right one”. Cf. Pāvā, Pāveyyaka, above, BD.4.31, n.2 and Bārāṇasī, Bārāṇaseyyaka, above, BD.4.389, n.1.

Dussayuga means the two cloths, the loin-cloth or dhoti, and the upper cloth, which are usually worn by laymen. ² kāyo dosābhisanno. Cf. Vin.1.206 where a certain monk was abhisannaskāya, “had a superfluity of humours in his body”; various purgative, were allowed. At Vin.2.119 some monks also became abhisannakāya. Vinaya Texts ii.60, n.6 says that dosa “is a disturbance of the so-called humours in the body.” Dosa is used in sense of some kind of sickness at Mi.43. At Mi.172 we get tikicchako abhisanne kāye kupite dose sinehaniyāni bhesajjāni deti, “does a physician give softening medicines when the body is full of humours and afflicted by them?”

desires to take¹ a purgative.”² Then the venerable Ānanda approached Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having approached he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“Jīvaka, sir, the Truth-finder has a disturbance of the humours of his body; the Truth-finder desires to take a purgative.”

“Well now, revered Ānanda, lubricate³ the Truth-finder’s body for a few days.” Then the venerable Ānanda, having lubricated the Truth-finder’s body for a few days, approached Jīvaka Komārabhacca; having approached he spoke thus to Jīvaka Komārabhacca:

“Jīvaka, sir, the Truth-finder’s body has been lubricated; what do you think is right for him now?”

Kd.8.1.31

Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca: “It is not suitable that I should give a strong purgative to the Lord,” and having had three handfuls of lotuses⁴ mixed⁵ with various medicines, he approached the Lord; having approached he offered the Lord one handful of lotuses, saying: “Lord, may the Lord sniff up⁶ (the scent of) this first handful of lotuses; this will purge the Lord ten times.” Then he offered the Lord the second handful of lotuses, saying: “Lord, may the Lord sniff up (the scent of) this second handful of lotuses; this will purge the Lord ten times.” Then he offered the Lord the third handful of lotuses, saying: “Lord, may the Lord sniff up (the scent of) this third handful of lotuses; this will purge the Lord ten times”; thus, he thought that the Lord would be purged all together thirty times.⁷ Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, having given the Lord a purgative for thirty times all together, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Kd.8.1.32

Then it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca when he had gone outside the porch: “A purgative has been given by me to the Lord for all together thirty times. The Lord has a disturbance of the humours of his body; it will not purge the Lord all together thirty times, it will purge the Lord twenty-nine times, but then the Lord, being purged, will bathe; when he has bathed, ¹ pātuṃ, literally to drink; cf. same phrase at Vin.1.206, where purging drinks are allowed.

² virecana. This and three other kinds are held (at DN.i.12) by some recluses and Brahmins to be worldly lore—abstained from by Gotama. ³ sinehetha. Cf. sinehaniyāni bhesajjāni at Mi.172. ⁴ uppalahatthāni. ⁵ paribhāvetvā, or supplied with, treated with. ⁶ upasiṅghatu, cf. SN.i.204. ⁷ Passive construction. Literally: thus will there be for the Lord a purge thirty times.

the Lord will purge once, thus the Lord will be purged all together thirty times.” Then the Lord, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind¹ of Jīvaka Komārabhacca, addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

“Now, Ānanda, it occurred to Jīvaka Komārabhacca when he had gone outside the porch: ‘A purgative has been given by me to the Lord ... thus the Lord will be purged all together thirty times.’ Well now, Ānanda, prepare (some) hot water.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda having answered the Lord in assent, prepared (some) hot water.

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, is the Lord purged?”

“I am purged, Jīvaka.”

“Now, Lord, it occurred to me after I had gone outside the porch: ‘A purgative has been given by me to the Lord ... thus the Lord will be purged all together thirty times.’ Lord, let the Lord bathe, let the well-farer bathe.” Then the Lord bathed in the hot water; when he had bathed the Lord purged once; thus the Lord purged all together thirty times. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, until the Lord’s body comes to be normal, almsfood of juices will be enough.”²

Vin.1.280
Kd.8.1.33

BD.4.396

ON ASKING FOR A BOON

And the Lord’s body soon became normal.

Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking that pair of Siveyyaka cloths, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, I ask one boon of the Lord.”

“Jīvaka, Truth-finders are beyond (granting) boons.”¹

¹ cetasā cetoparivittakam aññāya, stock; cf. SN.i.103, SN.i.178. ² alam yūsapiṇḍapātena. Vinaya Texts ii.193 translates “you had better abstain from liquid food”. Natural juices, akaṭayūsa, are allowed at Vin.1.206 as a purgative. ¹ atikhantavarā. Cf. Vin.1.82, Vin.1.292. See above, BD.4.104.

Kd.8.1.34

“Lord, it is what is allowable and what is blameless.”

“Speak on, Jīvaka.”

“Lord, the Lord and the Order of monks are wearers of rag-rob². Lord, this pair of Siveyyaka cloths was sent me by King Pajjota; of many cloths, of many pairs of cloths, of many hundred pairs of cloths, of many thousand pairs of cloths, of many hundred thousand pairs of cloths, it is the chief and best and foremost and most excellent and loveliest. Lord, may the Lord accept my pair of Siveyyaka cloths, and may he allow householders’ robes³ to the Order of monks.” The Lord accepted the pair of Siveyyaka cloths. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with dhamma-talk.⁴ And when Jīvaka Komārabhacca had been gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with dhamma-talk, rising from his seat, greeting the Lord, he departed keeping his right side towards him.

Kd.8.1.35

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given dhamma-talk, addressed the monks, saying:

BD.4.397

“I allow you, monks, householders’ robes. Whoever wishes may be a rag-robe wearer; whoever wishes may consent to (accept) householders’ robes.⁵ And I, monks, commend satisfaction with the one or the other.”⁶

Vin.1.281

People in Rājagaha heard: “Householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord,” and these people became joyful, elated, thinking: “Now we will give gifts, we will work merit,⁷ inasmuch as householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord.” And in just one day many thousand robes were produced in Rājagaha.

Country-people heard: “Householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord,” and these people became joyful and elated, thinking: ‘Now we will give gifts, we will work merit, inasmuch as householders’ robes are allowed to monks by the Lord.” And in just one day many thousand robes were produced in the country.

² Vin-a.1119 says that neither the Lord during the twenty years since his attainment of enlightenment until this event happened, nor any monk, had accepted householders’ robes; all were rag-robe wearers. ³ Vin-a.1119 makes the point that these were robes (or robe-material) given by householders. ⁴ Vin-a.1119 says “with talk connected with the advantage of giving clothes”. ⁵ Cf. Vin.3.172 (BD.1.298). ⁶ itaritarena. Cf. Kd.8.3.2. Vin-a.1119 says “with one of little value, with one of great value, with whatever it is”. Thus CHILDERS is, I think, right in understanding the phrase as “whether the robes are good or bad”, see Vinaya Texts ii.194, n.2. ⁷ puññam karissāma. This literal translation best preserves the Indian notion of karma, kamma, deeds, actions, or working whose result is held to be either good or bad, meritorious or lacking in merit.

Now at that time a mantle¹ accrued to the Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a mantle.” A silk mantle accrued. “I allow you, monks, a silk mantle,” he said. A fleecy coverlet accrued.² “I allow you, monks, a fleecy coverlet,” he said.

Kd.8.1.36

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

ON PERMISSION FOR WOOLLEN GARMENTS, ETC.

Now at that time the king of Kāsi³ sent woollen stuff⁴ that was worth half a kāsi, being valued at half a kāsi,¹ to Jīvaka Komārabhacca. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, taking that woollen stuff that was worth half a kāsi, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this woollen stuff that is worth half a kāsi, being valued at half a kāsi, was sent to me by the king of Kāsi. Lord, may the Lord accept the woollen stuff from me that it may be for me a blessing and a happiness for a long time.” The Lord accepted the woollen stuff. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with dhamma-talk. Jīvaka Komārabhacca, gladdened ... with dhamma-talk, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, woollen stuff.”

BD.4.398

¹ pāvāra, or cloak. Word occurs at Ja.v.409. Vin-a.1119 says salomako kappāsikapāvāro, a cotton pāvāra with something woolly—loma being the wool or hair of an animal. ² kojava. Pali-English Dictionary gives a “rug or cover with long hair, a fleecy counterpane”, and CHILDERS “a goat’s hair coverlet of fine workmanship,” (cf. Abhidhānappadīpa 312). Vin-a.1119 distinguishes between the ordinary kojava, meant here, and kojava which is mahāpiṭṭhiya, large at the back (?), and says that like a pāvāra it is made of wool. Word occurs again at Dhp-a.i.177, translated BURLINGAME, Buddhist Legends, i.259, “coverlet of goat’s hair”; and at Dhp-a.iii.297, as pāvāra kojava, translated Buddhist Legends iii.96, “cloak and goats’ hair coverlet”. Kojava occurs in definition of goṇaka, a woollen cover with long fleece, at Vin-a.1086, DN-a.86, Thig-a.253, SN-a.ii.325. ³ Kāsi was a mahājanapada, whose capital was Benares. Vin-a.1119 says that the king was brother to Pasenadi by the same father. ⁴ kambala, or a woollen blanket or garment.

Kd.8.3.1

At that time various kinds² of robe-material accrued to the Order. Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, what (kind of) robe-materials are allowed by the Lord, what are not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow six (kinds of) robe-materials³: linen, cotton, silk, wool, coarse hempen cloth, canvas.”

Kd.8.3.2

BD.4.399

Vin.1.282

Now at that time these monks consented to householders’ robes; (but) being scrupulous, they did not consent to rag-robes, thinking: “Only one

¹ aḍḍhakāsikaṃ kambalaṃ pahesi upaḍḍhakāsinaṃ khamamānaṃ. Vinaya Texts ii.195 has “a woollen garment made half of Benares cloth ...” with note that “our translation of aḍḍhakāsikaṃ kambalaṃ is merely conjectural.” Vin-a.1119 says “here kāsi means a thousand, a thing worth that is kāsiya, but this is worth five hundred, therefore it is called half-kāsi; for this same reason it is said upaḍḍhakāsinaṃ khamamānaṃ”. The whole passage is obscure. Benares was famous for its silks and muslins, but the stuff sent by the king was of wool. I am therefore following the Commentary’s lead in taking kāsi, kāsika and kāsinaṃ as representing worth, cost or value in the above passage. Critical Pali Dictionary under aḍḍhakāsika says that it “seems originally to mean a sort of ‘half-muslin’ (cf. kāsika), but here taken in the sense of a piece of stuff sufficient for half the people of Kāsi”. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names under Aḍḍhākāsī, the courtesan, for suggestions that she derived her name from the fact that she charged her patrons “five hundred” (i.e. probably kahāpaṇas). Pp-a.315 gives the value of brand new, neither new nor old, and worn Kāsi cloths. Ja.vi.151, Ja.vi.450 says that a garment of Kāsi cloth is worth a hundred thousand. ² uccāvacāni. Vin-a.1119 says “nice and nasty.” ³ At Vin.1.58, Vin.1.96 these six are called benefits extra to rag-robes. At AN.iv.394 the first four are mentioned as forming part of a rich gift. See BD.2.143 for notes. They are, naturally, identical with the six kinds of thread or yarn, Vin.3.256.

(kind of) robe is allowed by the Lord, not two (kinds).” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow him who consents to householders’ robes to consent also to rag-robes. And I, monks, commend satisfaction with both.”¹

ON SEARCHING FOR RAG-ROBES

Now at that time several² monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. Some monks went into a cemetery for rag-robes,³ other monks did not wait. Those monks who went into the cemetery for rag-robes obtained rag-robes; those monks who did not wait spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

Kd.8.4.1

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you not wait?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, you, monks, not to give a portion, if you are not willing, to those who do not wait.”

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. Some monks went into a cemetery for rag-robes, other monks waited. Those monks who went into the cemetery for rag-robes obtained rag-robes; those monks who waited spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

Kd.8.4.2

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you not go in?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give a portion, (even) if you are not willing, to those who wait.”

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. Some monks went into a cemetery for rag-robes first, other monks went in afterwards. Those monks who went into the cemetery for rag-robes first, obtained rag-robes. Those monks who went in afterwards did not obtain them; these spoke thus: “Your reverences, give

Kd.8.4.3

¹ Cf. Kd.viii.1.35. ² sambahulā. ³ At Vism.62 cemetery-rags, soṣānika, head the list of rags from which rag-robes can be made.

BD.4.400

us also a portion.”

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you go in afterwards?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, not to give a portion, if you are not willing, to those who go in afterwards.”

Kd.8.4.4

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. These went into a cemetery together¹ for rag-robes; some monks obtained rag-robes, other monks did not obtain them. Those monks who did not obtain them spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

Vin.1.283

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did not you obtain (any)?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give a portion, (even) if you are not willing, to those who go in together with (you).”

Kd.8.4.5

Now at that time several monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. These, having made an agreement,² went into a cemetery for rag-robes; some monks obtained rag-robes, other monks did not obtain them. Those monks who did not obtain them, spoke thus: “Your reverences, give us also a portion.”

These spoke thus: “Your reverences, we will not give you a portion; why did you not obtain (any)?”

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having made an agreement, to give a portion, (even) if you are not willing, to those who go in.”

ON AN AGREEMENT FOR THE RECEIVER OF CLOTH

Kd.8.5.1

Now at that time people, taking robe-material, came to a monastery; these, not finding an acceptor,¹ conveyed it back; little robe-material accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as acceptor of robe-material²: one who would not follow a wrong course through partiality, one who would not follow a wrong course through hatred, one who would not follow a wrong course through stupidity, one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is taken and what is not taken.³

BD.4.401

“And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon. First, a monk is to be requested. Having requested (him), the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon the monk so and so as acceptor of robe-material. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the monk so and so as acceptor of robe-material. If the agreement upon the monk so and so as acceptor of robe-material is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk so and so is agreed upon by the Order as acceptor of robe-material. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.8.5.2

Now at that time the monks who were acceptors of robe-material, having accepted robe-material, leaving it just there, went away; the robe-material was lost. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as keeper of robe-

Kd.8.6.1

Vin.1.284

¹ Sadisā okkamimsu, Vin-a.1120 gives two explanations: either they all, sabbe, went in, or, they went in at one part (or quarter), ekadisāya. ² Vin-a.1120 says that “the rag-robles obtained having been distributed to all, they say, ‘We will take them’”. ¹ paṭiggāhaka, or distributor. ² At Vin.2.176 it is said that at that time there was no acceptor of robe-material, cīvaraṭiggāhaka. One is to be agreed upon by the monks in precisely the same way as above, which was indeed the regular manner for appointing all the functionaries of the Older. Vin-a.1120 says that the cīvaraṭiggāhaka takes the robe-material which is being given to the Order by the householders. Cf. AN.iii.274. ³ For gahitāgahita. cf. Vin.2.167, Vin.2.176, Vin.3.246.

material¹: one who would not follow a wrong course through partiality ... one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is laid by and what is not laid by.²

Kd.8.6.2

BD.4.402

“And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ...” (as in Kd.8.5.2 reading keeper of robe-material instead of acceptor of robe-material.)

ON AN AGREEMENT FOR A STOREROOM, ETC.

Kd.8.7.1

Now at that time the monks who were keepers of robe-material kept the robe-material in a shed³ and at the root of a tree and in the hollow of a nimb-tree⁴; it was eaten by rats and white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.8.7.2

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a store-room that the Order desires: a dwelling-place or a curved house⁵ or a long house⁶ or a mansion⁷ or a cave.⁸

“And thus, monks, should it be agreed upon. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon such and such a dwelling-place as a store-room. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon such and such a dwelling-place as a store-room. If the agreement upon such and such a dwelling-place as a store-room is pleasing to the venerable ones let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Such and such a dwelling-place is agreed upon by the Order as a store-room. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.8.8.1

Now at that time an Order’s robe-material came to be unguarded⁹ in the store-room. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ cīvaranidāhaka, the one who lays aside or puts away the robe-material, until it is wanted.

² nihitānihita. ³ maṇḍapa. ⁴ nimbakosa. Cf. Vin.1.152. ⁵ aḍḍhayoga. See above, BD.4.75, n.4. ⁶ pāsāda, see BD.2.16, n.5. ⁷ hammiya, see BD.2.16, n.6. ⁸ guha. On these five, see above, BD.4.75. ⁹ Vin-a.1121 says from rain, mice, white ants, crumbling walls.

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as guardian of the store-room¹: one who would not follow a wrong course through partiality ... one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is guarded and what is not guarded.² And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ... ‘... The monk so and so is agreed upon by the Order as guardian of the store-room. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

BD.4.403

Vin.1.285

Now at that time the group of six monks turned away³ the guardian of a store-room. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a guardian of a store-room is not to be turned away.⁴ Whoever should turn him away, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.8.8.2

Now at that time robe-material came to be heaped up in an Order’s store-room. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to distribute it by means of the Order that is present.”⁵ Then the whole Order, distributing the robe-material, made a tumult.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.8.9.1

“I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as distributor of robe-material⁷: one who would not follow a wrong course

¹ bhaṇḍāgārika. Cf. AN.iii.274. At Vin.2.176 it is said that there was no bhaṇḍāgārika at that time. The Lord allowed one to be appointed, as above. ² According to Vin-a.1122 he should guard against the pests (note before the last above), should close the doors and window-holes in the cold weather and open them in the hot weather to let the wind come in. The accepter of robe-material—whether accepted at the right time or the wrong time, whether given for urgent reasons, whether robes for the rains, rugs, sheets or towels—should give these things to the keeper of robe-material, who should give them to the guardian of the storeroom. Thus, put by in the storeroom, when the time comes, they can be given to a monk as a set of three robes, or as two robes or as one. ³ vuṭṭhāpentī, made get up, removed; cf. Vin.4.42. ⁴ Vin-a.1122 says that there are four kinds of persons not to be turned away: an older monk (older than the one who would turn him out), a guardian of a storeroom, an ill monk, one who has received lodgings from the Order. ⁵ sammukhībhūta. Vin-a.1123 says “being within the precincts and boundary.” ⁶ Vin-a.1123 says that they made a great noise, saying, ‘Give for our teacher, give for our preceptor.’ ⁷ cīvarabhājaka. Cf. Vin.2.176 where it is said that at that time there was no distributor of robe-material; one was allowed to be appointed, as above.

through partiality ... one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is distributed and what is not distributed. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ... ‘... The monk so and so is agreed upon by the Order as distributor of robe-material. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.8.9.2
BD.4.404

Then it occurred to the monks who were the distributors of robe-material: “Now, how should we distribute the robe-material?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having first examined¹ it, having estimated² it, having equalised³ it, having counted the monks, having formed them into sections,⁴ to arrange⁵ a share of the robe-material (for each section).”

Then it occurred to the monks who were the distributors of robe-material: “Now, how should a share of the robe-material be given to novices?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give half a share to novices.”

Kd.8.9.3

Now at that time a certain monk became desirous of crossing over⁶ with his own portion. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give his own portion to one who is crossing over.” Now at that time a certain monk became desirous of crossing over with more than one portion. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monk, to give more than one portion if he gives a compensation.”¹

¹ uccinitvā, Vin-a.1123 saying: examining the clothes thus, saying, “This is thick, this is fine, this is massive, this is small, this is used, this is not used, this is so much in length, this is so much across”. ² tulayitvā, weighed or measured; estimated or assessed. Vin-a.1123 says, “thinking, ‘this is worth so much, this so much’, thus determining by value”. ³ vaṇṇāvaṇṇam katvā, having made it fair. Vin-a.1123 says, “if each (monk) obtains one (robe or piece of material) worth ten (kaḥāpaṇas?), that is right; but if he does not obtain it, then taking what is worth nine or eight together with another (piece) worth one or two, thus the meaning is: in this way arranging (or establishing) equal shares”. ⁴ vaggaṃ bandhitvā. Vin-a.1123 says that in case the robe-material cannot be given to each one on one day, then counting the monks by tens, the portions of robe-material by tens, having formed a section one by one, having made one collection (or heap of the material), he says, “I allow you to arrange one portion of robe-material”. When the portion of robe-material is arranged thus, lots should be cast, and when this is done the portion should be distributed among those monks who win the casting of the lots. ⁵ ṭhapetum, or to set aside. ⁶ uttaritukāma. Vin-a.1124 says a river or the wilds.

Kd.8.9.4

Then it occurred to the monks who were the distributors of robe-material: “Now, how should a share of the robe-material be given: in the order in which they came in,² or according to seniority?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having made good anything lacking,³ to cast lots with kusa-grass.”⁴

BD.4.405

ON DYING ROBES

Now at that time monks dyed robe-material with dung⁵ and with yellow clay⁶; the robe-material came to be a bad colour. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, six (kinds of) dyes: dye from roots, dye from stems,⁷ dye from bark, dye from leaves, dye from flowers, dye from fruits.”

Kd.8.10.1

Vin.1.286

Now at that time monks dyed robe-material with cold water;⁸ the robe-material came to smell nasty. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a little dye-pot in which to boil the dye.”⁹ The dye was spilt.¹⁰ They told this matter to the Lord.¹¹ He said: “I allow, you, monks, to

Kd.8.10.2

¹ anukkhepa. Word apparently only occurs here. Vin-a.1125 says it means, “whatever goods are allowable may be delivered in return, may be handed over”, i.e. by the monk receiving more than one portion. It seems like a system of barter. ² āgatapaṭipāṭiya. ³ vikalake tosetvā. Vin-a.1125 mentions two kinds of deficiencies, that of robes and that of individuals. Deficiency of robes is met by cutting up the robes that are left over into strips, so that the insufficiency is remedied. Deficiency of individuals is when monks have been counted ten by ten into sections, vagga, and one vagga is not complete, consisting of only eight or nine monks. Kusa lots should then be cast. ⁴ kusapātaṃ kātuṃ. If the deficiency of robes cannot be satisfied, lots may be cast for another requisite, Vin-a.1125. This would hardly get over the difficulty of inadequate clothing. ⁵ chakanenā ti gomayena, Vin-a.1126. Chakana allowed at Vin.1.202 to monks who are not ill for use on the body. ⁶ paṇḍumattikā. Vin-a.1126 explains by tambamattikā, copper-coloured clay. ⁷ mūla and khandha with bija at Vin.4.34f. ⁸ sītunnakāya, see Vinaya Texts ii.390 for variant readings also Sinhalese edition ii.343, sītundikāya. Vin-a.1126 says sītudakā ti apakkarajanam vuccati, cold water means that it is called unboiled dye. ⁹ rajanam pacituṃ cullarajanahumbhin ti. ¹⁰ uttariyati. Uttarati is to flow over (of water), to boil over. ¹¹ Omitted in text, inserted in Sinhalese edition

BD.4.406 arrange a basin (to prevent the dye from) spilling.”¹ Now at that time the monks did not know whether the dye had boiled or had not (fully) boiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to put a drop² into water or on to the back of your nail.”

Kd.8.10.3

Now at that time monks, pouring out the dye, upset the pot; the pot was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a ladle for the dye, a scoop with a handle.” Now at that time the monks did not have a dye-vessel.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said “I allow you, monks, a pitcher for the dye,⁴ a bowl for the dye.”⁵ Now at that time monks steeped robe-material in a dish⁶ and also in a bowl, the robe-material was split. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a trough for the dye.”⁷

Kd.8.11.1

Now at that time monks spread out robe-material on the ground; the robe-material became dusty. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a grass matting.”⁸ The grass matting was eaten by white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bamboo (for hanging up) robe-material, a cord for (hanging up) robe-material.” They hung it up⁹ by the middle; the dye dripped down¹⁰ on both sides. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to fasten it at a corner.”¹¹ The corner wore out. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a corner- thread.”¹² The dye dripped down on one side.

BD.4.407

¹ uttarāḷumpaṃ bandhituṃ, variant readings uttarāḷumpakaṃ, uttarāḷavaṃ uttarāḷuvaṃ. Passage is somewhat obscure. Vinaya Texts ii.205 has “I prescribe that you put basins (under the dye-pots) to catch the spilt (dye)”. Vin-a.1126 reads uttarāḷuvaṃ ti vaṭṭādhāraṃ ra-janakumbhiyā majjhe ṭhapetvā taṃ ādhāraṃ parikkhipitvā rajanaṃ pakkhipituṃ anujānāmi ti attho. evaṃ hi kate rajanaṃ na uttarati, i.e. “uttarāḷuva means a round basin. The meaning is, ‘I allow you to put in the dye, having placed it middle of the dye-pot, having enclosed that basin; having done this, dye does not spill’.” ² thevakaṃ dātuṃ. ³ rajanabhājana.
⁴ rajanakolamba. ⁵ rajanaghaṭa. ⁶ pāti. ⁷ rajanadoṇikā. At Vin.2.120 mattikādoṇikā are allowed; cf. udakadoṇikā at Vin.2.220. ⁸ tiṇa-santhāraka; also allowed at Vin.2.113 to protect bowls set down on the ground. ⁹ laggenti, cf. BD.2.130, n.5. ¹⁰ galati; cf. BD.2.130, n.6. ¹¹ kaṇṇa. See Vin.1.51, where the way in which one who shares a cell is to hang up his preceptor’s robe is briefly described.

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks to dye it, turning it and turning it, and not to go away if the drips have not ceased.”¹

Now at that time robe-material became stiff.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to put it into water.” Now at that time robe-material became harsh. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to beat it with the hands.”

Kd.8.11.2

Vin.1.287

Now at that time monks wore yellow robes, (the colour) of ivory,³ not cut up.⁴ People looked down, criticised, spread-it about, saying: “Like the householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, robes that are not cut up are not to be worn. Whoever should wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ALLOWANCE FOR CUT-UP CLOTH

Kd.8.12.1

BD.4.408

Then the Lord, having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Dakkhiṇāgiri.¹ The Lord saw the field of Magadha,² laid out in strips,³ laid out in lines,⁴ laid out in embankments,⁵ laid out in squares,⁶ and seeing this, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

¹² kaṇṇasuttaka, a thread or line, “a string from corner to corner, a clothes line”, so Pali-English Dictionary. This must differ therefore from raju, “a rope”, above, so that possibly raju there is in sense of “wicker”, thus in substance not differing greatly from vaṁsa, bamboo. But more likely kaṇṇasuttaka means a thread put in at the corner of the robe to prevent the corner from wearing out; previously the monks had hung up the robe-material at the middle, i.e. they had hung it over the raju and vaṁsa, so that the dye dripped down at both sides of these. If kaṇṇasuttaka were really a “clothes line,” surely the dye would still run down at both sides; but hanging something up by its corner would cause dye to run down at one side only. These allowances seem to be framed so as to prevent drops and splashes of dye spoiling the appearance of the place. ¹ na ca acchinne theve pakhamituṇi. Vin-a.1126 says that he is not to go elsewhere until the dripping drops of dye have been cut off (ceased). Cf. the same expression at Vin.1.50, Vin.1.53, Vin.2.227, Vin.2.230. ² patthinna, Vin-a.1126 says that it was hard from too much dye, too full (of dye). ³ dantakāsāvāni. Vin-a.1127 says “dyeing them once or twice, they wore them the colour of ivory (dantavaṇṇāni).” ⁴ acchinnakāni, or untorn. See above, BD.4.356, n.4, and next paragraph below. ¹ Dictionary of Pali Proper Names says “a janapada (district) in India, the capital of which was Ujjeni ... Dakkhiṇāgiri lay to the south of Rājagaha, beyond the hills that surrounded the city—hence its name”. See MN-a.iii.429, Snp-a.1.136, SN-a.i.242, SN-a.ii.176. ² Magadhakhetta. See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names for suggestion that this was “probably an extensive rice-field which at once caught the eye on account of its terraces,” and size, one might add; see Ja.iii.293. ³ accibandha, as Siamese edition. Sinhalese edition reads accibaddha, Vin-a.1127 acchibaddha. Acci is usually a “ray”, but does not mean that here, see Vinaya Texts ii.207, n.3. Pali-English Dictionary says “we should prefer the conjecture acchibaddha, ‘in the shape of cubes or dice’, i.e. with square fields”. Vin-a.1127 says acchibaddhan ti caturassakedārakabaddham, which means “divided (or set out) in square-shaped irrigated fields”. Bandha is much more “set out, placed, formed, arranged, united or put together” than the “divided” of Vinaya Texts ii.207. The analogy is that the pieces of a monk’s robe are to be arranged or put together (not “divided”) like the parts of the field. ⁴ pāḷibandha. Vin-a.1127 says “arranged (or linked, baddha) by boundaries that are long in length and breadth”. ⁵ mariyādabandha; perhaps terraces. The knowledge of terraced irrigation is very old. Vinaya Texts ii.208 gives (divided) “by outside boundaries (or ridges)”. Vin-a.1127 says mariyādabaddha is so called because of a short mariyāda at intervals. ⁶ siṅgātakabandha. Vin-a.1127 says that this is having pierced an embankment, mariyāda, with an embankment at the place where they meet, gataṭṭhānena; the meaning is, the form of a square, catukkasaṅṭhāna.

“Now, do you Ānanda, see the field of Magadha laid out in strips ... laid out in squares?”

“Yes, Lord.”

“Are you able, Ānanda, to provide¹ robes like this for the monks?”

“I am able, Lord.”

Then the Lord, having stayed at Dakkhiṇāgiri for as long as he found suitable, went back again to Rājagaha. Then the venerable Ānanda, having provided robes for several monks, approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, let the Lord see the robes provided by me.”

Kd.8.12.2

Then the Lord, on that occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, clever is Ānanda; monks, of great intelligence is Ānanda, inasmuch as he can understand in detail the meaning of that which was spoken of by me in brief, and can make a cross-seam² and can make a short cross-seam³ and can make a circular seam⁴ and can make a short circular seam⁵ and can make a central piece⁶ and can make side pieces⁷ and can make a neck-piece¹ and can make a knee-piece² and can make an elbow-piece,³ and what is cut up must be roughly darned together,⁴ suitable for recluses and not coveted by opponents. I allow you, monks, an outer cloak that is cut up, an upper robe that is cut up, an inner robe that is cut up.”

BD.4.409

¹ saṃvidahitum. Vin-a.1127 gives dātum; Vinaya Texts ii.208, n.4, quoting Buddhaghosa, reads kātum. ² kusi. This and the following words recur at Kd.16.21.3. ³ aḍḍhakusi. Critical Pali Dictionary gives “an intermediate cross-seam” following Vinaya Texts ii.209. ⁴ maṇḍala. Vin-a.1127 says maṇḍalan ti pañcakhaṇḍikacīvarassa ekekasmim khaṇḍe mahāmaṇḍalaṃ, a maṇḍala means there is a large maṇḍala (seam) to each piece of a robe of five pieces. Cf. above, BD.4.356, n.4. ⁵ aḍḍhamaṇḍalan ti khuddakamaṇḍalaṃ, Vin-a.1127. ⁶ vivaṭṭan ti maṇḍalañ ca aḍḍhamaṇḍalañ ca ekato katvā sibbitaṃ majjhima-khaṇḍaṃ, the middle piece is sewn putting together the circular seam and the short circular seam, Vin-a.1127. ⁷ anuvivaṭṭa. Vin-a.1127 says tassa ubhosu passesu dve khaṇḍāni ... athavā vivaṭṭassa ekapassato dvinnāṃ ekapassato tiṇṇaṃ pi catunnaṃ pi khaṇḍānaṃ etaṃ nāmaṃ, this is the name of the two or four pieces at each side of the vivaṭṭa, the central piece”. Critical Pali Dictionary adds another explanation: ubhosu passesu ekapassato dvinnāṃ ekapassato dvinnan ti catunnaṃ pi khaṇḍānaṃ nāmaṃ, with regard to both sides, if there are two at one side, two at the other side, it is called ‘of four pieces’. Critical Pali Dictionary says of anuvivaṭṭa that “according to Sp.designation of the (two or) four side-pieces of cloth in a monk’s cowl (cīvara), (one or) two on each side of the two central pieces (vivaṭṭa, i.e. maṇḍala and aḍḍhamaṇḍala)”. One must understand that the central piece, vivaṭṭa, comes whole, or in two pieces at the back, and that on each side are the two side-pieces, anuvivaṭṭa, and that the pieces are all joined together by the maṇḍala and aḍḍhamaṇḍala. On these last see above, BD.4.408, n.8, BD.4.408, n.9.

ALLOWANCE FOR THREE ROBES

Kd.8.13.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Vesālī. As the Lord was going along the high-road between Rājagaha and Vesālī he saw several monks coming along smothered up in robes, having put a mattress of robes⁵ on their heads and a mattress of robes on their backs and a mattress of robes on their hips, and seeing (them) it occurred to the Lord: “These foolish men are turned too quickly to abundance of robes;⁶ suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds⁷ as to robes for the monks?”

BD.4.410

Vin.1.288

Kd.8.13.2

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Vesālī. The Lord stayed there in Vesālī in the Gotamaka shrine.⁸ Now at that time on the cold winter nights between the “eights”,⁹ in a time of snowfall, the Lord sat down in the open air at night with (only) one robe; the Lord was not cold. As the first watch of the night was ending the Lord became cold. The Lord put on a second robe; the Lord was not cold. As the middle watch of the night was ending the Lord became cold. The Lord put on a third robe; the Lord was not cold. As the last watch of the night was ending, as the sun was rising, in the flush of dawn,¹ the Lord became cold. The Lord put on a fourth robe; the Lord was not cold.

¹ gīveyyakan ti gīvaveṭhanaṭṭhāne daḷhikaraṇaṭṭharā aññam suttasamsibbitam āgantukapaṭam, a gīveyyaka means an added (piece of) cloth sewn together with another thread for the sake of strengthening in the place going round the neck, Vin-a.1127. ² jaṅgheyyakan ti jaṅghapāpuṇaṭṭhāne tath’eva saṃsibbitam paṭam, it means a piece of cloth sewn together just in the place to which-the knee reaches, Vin-a.1127. ³ bāhantan ti anuvivaṭṭānam bahi ekekaṃ khaṇḍam. iti pañcakaṇḍikacivaren’etaṃ vicāritan ti, “a bāhanta means a piece outside each of the sidepieces. It is thought of thus in regard to the robe of five pieces”, so Vin-a.1127, to which it adds, bāhantan ti suppaṃāṇacivaram pārupantena saṃharitvā bāhāya upari ṭhapitā ubho antā bahimukhā tiṭṭhanti tesam tesam nāmaṃ, a bāhanta means, if one puts on a robe of good measure, folding it together and holding up the arms, both ends stand outside the face; it is the name of these (ends). ⁴ Text reads sattalūkha; Sinhalese and Siamese editions satthalūkha, rough knife, possibly referring to it as the instrument with which monks cut up the robes; while Vinaya Texts ii.209, on analogy of suttalūkha in Kd.8.21.1 below, adopts “that reading here” (see Vinaya Texts ii.209, n.10), and translates “roughly sewn together”. ⁵ cīvarabhisi. For bhisi see BD.2.47, n.1. Mattresses made of five kinds of material are mentioned in Bu-Pc.14. Bhisi is neither roll, bolster nor mat, see Vinaya Texts ii.210, n.2. ⁶ Cf. Vin.1.59 (above, BD.4.77). ⁷ sīmaṃ bhandeyyam mariyādam ṭhapeyyam. ⁸ Cf. BD.2.1, n.1. ⁹ antaraṭṭhakāsu. Cf. Vin.1.31, and see above, BD.4.41, n.3.

Kd.8.13.3

Then it occurred to the Lord: “Even those who in this dhamma and discipline² are sons of respectable families,³ susceptible to cold, afraid of cold, even these are able to keep themselves going with three robes. Suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds as to robes for monks—were to allow three robes?” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.8.13.4

“Now as I, monks, was going along the high-road between Rājagaha and Vesālī, I saw several monks coming along smothered up in robes, having put a mattress of robes on their heads and a mattress of robes on their backs and a mattress of robes on their hips; seeing them, it occurred to me: ‘These foolish men have turned too quickly to abundance of robes; suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds as to robes for monks?’

BD.4.411

Kd.8.13.5

“Then I, monks, on the cold winter nights between the ‘eights’, in a time of snowfall, sat down in the open air at night with (only) one robe; I was not cold. As the first watch of the night was ending I became cold. I put on a second robe; I was not cold. As the middle watch of the night was ending I became cold. I put on a third robe; I was not cold. As the last watch of the night was ending, as the sun was rising, in the flush of dawn, I became cold. I put on a fourth robe; I was not cold. Then, monks, it occurred to me: ‘Even those who in this dhamma and discipline are sons of respectable families, susceptible to cold, afraid of cold, even these are able to keep themselves

¹ nandimukhiyā rattiyā. Nandimukhī is literally “joy-faced”; cf. Homer’s “rosy-fingered dawn”. Same expression occurs at Vin.2.236. Vinaya Texts iii.299, n.1 quotes Buddhaghosa as saying nandimukhiyā rattiyā ti aruṇadhatakāle pītimukhā viya ratti khāyāti ten’ āha nandimukhiyā ti, “when the night is joy-faced means, at the time of sunrise the night appears like a face of delight, because of this it is called: when the night is joy-faced”. See also Vinaya Texts ii.211, n.2. ² Vin.1.391 says that “after dhammavinaye B inserts pabbajitā”, gone forth, as does the Sinhalese edition (B is of course a manuscript.) ³ ye pi kho te kulaputtā. Vinaya Texts ii.211, n.3 says “in the text read ye pi kho kulaputtā”, but this is not borne out by either the Sinhalese or the Siamese editions.

Vin.1.289 going with three robes. Suppose I were to set a limit, were to establish bounds as to robes for monks and were to allow three robes? I allow you, monks, three robes: a double outer cloak, a single upper robe, a single inner robe.”¹

ON EXTRA ROBES

Kd.8.13.6 Now at that time² the group of six monks, saying: “Three robes are allowed by the Lord,” entered a village in one set of three robes, remained in the monastery in another set of three robes, went down to bathe in another set of three robes. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the group of six monks wear an extra robe?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, an extra robe should not be worn; whoever should wear (one) should be dealt with according to the rule.”³

Kd.8.13.7

BD.4.412

Now at that time⁴ an extra robe accrued to the venerable Ānanda; and the venerable Ānanda wanted to give this robe to the venerable Sāriputta, but the venerable Sāriputta was staying at Sāketa. Then it occurred to the venerable Ānanda: “It is laid down⁵ by the Lord that an extra robe should not be worn. And this extra robe has accrued to me, and I want to give this robe to the venerable Sāriputta, but the venerable Sāriputta is staying at Sāketa. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” Then the venerable Ānanda told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“But how long, Ānanda, before Sāriputta will come (here)?”

“Lord, on the ninth or tenth day,” he said.

¹ See BD.2.i, n.2. Vin-a.1128 says that as the Lord kept himself going with four robes, he allowed the outer cloth to be double, the others single; thus there come to be four robes.

² = Bu-NP.1, where also the rule against wearing an extra robe and the penalty for doing so are laid down. ³ i.e. Bu-NP.1, suggesting that this, or at least the first draft of the rule, had been formulated by the time that this portion of the Vinaya was compiled. ⁴ This paragraph = a portion of Bu-NP.1 (Vin.3.195).

⁵ Vin.3.195 inserts sikkhāpadam (a rule for training) before paññattam (laid down).

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, to wear an extra robe for at most ten days.”¹

Now at that time an extra robe accrued to monks. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now what line of conduct should be followed in regard to an extra robe?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to assign an extra robe.”²

Then the Lord, having stayed at Vesālī for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Benares. Walking on tour, in due course he arrived at Benares. The Lord stayed there near Benares in the deer-park at Isipatana. Now at that time a certain monk’s inner robe came to be torn. Then it occurred to that monk: “Three robes are allowed by the Lord: the double outer cloak, the single upper robe, the single inner robe. But my inner robe is torn. Suppose I were to insert a patch,³ so that it⁴ will be double cloth all round, single in the middle?”

Then that monk inserted a patch. As the Lord was touring the lodgings he saw that monk inserting the patch; seeing (him) he approached that monk, having approached, he spoke thus to that monk:

“What are you doing, monk?”

“I am inserting a patch, Lord.”

“It is very good, monk, it is good that you, monk, insert a patch.”

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow you, monks, when clothes⁵ are unsoiled,⁶ when what is allowable is unsoiled,⁷ a double outer cloak, a single upper robe, a single inner robe;

¹ Cf. second draft of rule in Bu-NP.1, Vin.3.196. ² At Vin.3.196 an extra robe is defined as “one that is not allotted, not assigned”. Presumably if it is either allotted, or assigned, it ceases to be an extra robe. At Vin.1.297 the three robes (excluding any extra one) are allowed to be allotted but not assigned. ³ aggalaṃ acchupeyyaṃ. On aggala see BD.2.409, n.6. ⁴ i.e. the robe. ⁵ dussānam. DN-a.ii.403, citing this passage, reads vatthānaṃ (garments). ⁶ ahata and ahatakappa, see above, BD.4.356, n.9, BD.4.357, n.1. ⁷ ahata and ahatakappa, see above, BD.4.356, n.9, BD.4.357, n.1.

Kd.8.13.8

Kd.8.14.1

Vin.1.290

Kd.8.14.2

BD.4.413

when garments are thin from use¹ a fourfold outer cloak, a double upper robe, a double inner robe. As far as possible an effort² is to be made (to get patches) from a rag-robe, from (bits picked up near) a shop.³ I allow, monks, a patch, a means of fastening,⁴ a length,⁵ a marking (with a piece of cloth),⁶ a strengthening.”⁷

THE STORY OF VISĀKHĀ

Kd.8.15.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Benares for as long as he found suitable, set out on tour for Sāvattihī. Walking on tour, in due course he arrived at Sāvattihī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattihī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord gladdened ... delighted Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with dhamma-talk. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, when she had been gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with dhamma-talk, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, may the Lord consent (to accept) from me a meal on the morrow together with the Order of monks.”

The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from her seat, greeting the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him.

BD.4.414

Kd.8.15.2

Then towards the end of that night a great cloud rained down in the four continents.⁸ Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, even as it is raining in the Jeta Grove, so it is raining in the four continents. Let your bodies get wet with the rain,⁹ monks, this is the last great cloud over the four continents.”

¹ utuddhaṭṭa, literally drawn out by the seasons. ² ussāha, explained at Vin-a.1128 by pariyesanā, search. ³ pāpaṇika; see above, BD.4.357, n.4. ⁴ tunna. Vin-a.1128 says suttakena saṁsibbanam tunnam, “sewing together with threads is tunna”; it is a means of fastening, hence perhaps a needle, although suci is the more usual word. Cf. however tunnāvāya “needle-weaver”, tailor, at Vin.2.159. ⁵ For these expressions cf. above BD.4.354, and notes. ⁶ For these expressions cf. above BD.4.354, and notes. ⁷ For these expressions cf. above BD.4.354, and notes. ⁸ cātuddīpiko. ⁹ As at this time cloths for the rains had not been “allowed” monks could not incur the offence of wrong-doing mentioned at Vin.3.253, for letting their naked bodies get wet with the rain although they had cloths for the rains.

“Very well, Lord,” and these monks having answered the Lord in assent, with their robes laid aside let their bodies get wet with the rain.

Vin.1.291

Kd.8.15.3

Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, having had sumptuous food, solid and soft, prepared, commanded a woman-slave, saying:

“Go now,¹ having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying, ‘Lord,² it is time, the meal is ready’.”

“Very well, lady,” and this slave-woman, having answered Visākhā, Migāra’s mother in assent, having gone to the monastery, saw the monks, their robes laid aside, letting their bodies get wet with the rain. Seeing them, she thought: “There are no monks in the monastery, naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain.” She approached Visākhā, Migāra’s mother; having approached, she spoke thus to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother:

“Lady, there are no monks in the monastery, naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain.” Then it occurred to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother—she being clever, experienced, wise: “But undoubtedly it is the masters, their robes laid aside, who are letting their bodies get wet with the rain; this foolish woman thinks that there are no monks in the monastery, (but) that naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain.” She commanded the woman-slave, saying: “Go now, having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying, ‘Lord, it is time, the meal is ready’.”

Kd.8.15.4

BD.4.415

Then these monks, having cooled their limbs, being refreshed in body, having taken up their robes, entered (each) his own dwelling-place.³ Then that woman-slave, having gone to the monastery, not seeing the monks, thinking: “There are no monks in the monastery, the monastery is empty,” approached Visākhā, Migāra’s mother; having approached, she spoke thus to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother:

“Lady, there are no monks in the monastery, the monastery is empty.” Then it occurred to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother—she being clever, experienced, wise: “But undoubtedly the masters, having cooled their limbs, being refreshed in body, having taken up their robes, have (each) entered his own dwelling-place; this foolish woman thinks that there are no monks in the

¹ je, often used in speaking to female slaves. ² bhante, or perhaps here “honoured sir”.

³ yathāvihāra, as at Vin.4.15.

monastery, that the monastery is empty.” She commanded the woman-slave, saying: “Go now, having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying, ‘Lord, it is time, the meal is ready’.”

Kd.8.15.5

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, arrange your bowls and robes, it is time for the meal.”

“Very well, Lord,” these monks answered the Lord in assent.

Then the Lord, dressing in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, having vanished from the Jeta Grove, just as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, or might bend back his outstretched arm, became visible in the porch belonging to Visākhā, Migāra’s mother. Then the Lord sat down on an appointed seat together with the Order of monks.

Kd.8.15.6

Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, saying: “Wonderful, good sirs, marvelous, good sirs, is the great psychic power, the great majesty of the Truth-finder, in that although the floods are rolling on knee-deep, and although the floods are rolling on waist-deep, yet neither the feet nor the robes of a single monk have become wet,” and joyful, exultant, having with her own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the awakened one at their head with sumptuous solid and soft food, she sat down at a respectful distance after the Lord had eaten and had removed his hand from the bowl. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, spoke thus to the Lord:

BD.4.416

“Lord, I ask eight boons of the Lord.”

“Visākhā, Truth-finders are beyond (granting) boons.”¹

“Lord, they are those which are allowable and those which are blameless.”

Kd.8.15.7

“Speak on, Visākhā.”

“I, Lord, want to give for life to the Order cloths for the rains,² to give ¹ Cf. above, BD.4.104, BD.4.396. ² Bu-NP.24 and Bu-Pc.91 are both based on the assumption that an “allowance” to use cloths for the rains had already been given. The rule in Bu-NP.24 is against putting on cloths for the rains during all but the last part of the hot weather, for these cloths had become worn out and monks had gone naked during the rains. See BD.2.134, n.1. Bu-Pc.91 is concerned with the right measurements for the rain-cloths.

food for those coming in,¹ to give food for those going out, to give food for the sick,² to give food for those who tend the sick,³ to give medicine for the sick, to give a constant supply of conje, to give bathing-cloths for the Order of nuns.”⁴

“But having what special reason in mind,⁵ do you, Visākḥā, ask the Truth-finder for eight boons?”

“Now I, Lord, commanded a slave-woman, saying, ‘Go now, having gone to the monastery, announce the time, saying: Lord, it is time, the meal is ready’; but then, Lord, that slave-woman, having gone to the monastery, saw the monks, their robes laid aside, letting their bodies get wet with the rain; seeing them, she thought, ‘There are no monks in the monastery, naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain’. She approached me, having approached, she spoke thus to me, ‘Lady, there are no monks in the monastery, naked ascetics are letting their bodies get wet with the rain’. Impure, Lord, is nakedness,⁶ it is objectionable’ I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order cloths for the rains.

BD.4.417

Kd.8.15.8

“And again, Lord, an in-coming monk, not accustomed to⁷ the roads, not accustomed to the resorts for alms⁸ is (still) walking for alms (when he is) tired. But having eaten my food for those coming in, (then when) he is accustomed to the roads, accustomed to the resorts for alms, he will walk for alms without getting tired. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for those coming in.

¹ Cf. Vin.2.16 where the householder Citta invited in-coming monks who were elders to accept a meal with him. At Vin.2.209ff. certain regulations are laid down for the behaviour to be observed by and towards in-coming monks. ² At Vin.1.142 monks were allowed in the rains, as long as the business took no more than seven days, to visit ill monks; and they might look about for food for the sick, for food for those tending the sick, and for medicine for the sick. ³ At Vin.1.303ff. qualities necessary in those who tend the sick are enumerated. Moreover they are “allowed” to receive the bowl and robes of ill monks who have died. ⁴ In the instructions given at Vin.2.272 for teaching women who wish to receive the upasampadā, it is said that the bathing-cloth, together with the bowl, three robes and vest, should be pointed out to them. At Vin.4.279 the right measurements for nuns’ bathing-cloths are prescribed. ⁵ atthavasam sampassamānā. ⁶ Nakedness was disparaged; see below, BD.4.418, and Vin.3.212, Vin.3.252f., Vin.4.278. ⁷ na kusala, not expert in, clever, skilled. ⁸ gocara, literally a cow’s grazing, a pasturage, thus a place where a monk can obtain food, the houses at which food is put into his bowl.

“And again, Lord, an out-going monk, while looking about for food for himself, may be left behind by the caravan, or if he set out tired on a journey he may arrive at the wrong time¹ at the habitation to which he wishes to go. But having eaten my food for those going out, he will not be left behind by the caravan, nor will he set out tired on a journey (and so) he will arrive at the right time at the habitation to which he wishes to go. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for those going out.

Kd.8.15.9

“And again, Lord, if a monk who is ill does not obtain suitable meals, either his disease will grow very much worse, or he will pass away.² When he has eaten my food for the sick, the disease will not grow very much worse, he will not pass away. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for the sick.

Vin.1.293

“And again, Lord, a monk who tends the sick, looking about for food for himself, will bring back³ food for the sick after the sun is right up⁴ (and) he will miss his meal.⁵ But having eaten my food for those who tend the sick, he will bring back food for the sick during the right time (and) he will not miss his meal. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order food for those who tend the sick.

BD.4.418

Kd.8.15.10

“And again, Lord, if a monk who is ill does not obtain suitable medicines, either his disease will grow very much worse or he will pass away. When he has made use of my medicines for the sick, the disease will not grow very much worse, he will not pass away. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order medicines for the sick.

“And again, Lord, conje was allowed by the Lord at Andhakavinda when he had its ten advantages in mind.⁶ I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life to the Order a constant supply of conje.

Kd.8.15.11

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.85 where monks are forbidden to enter a village at the wrong time. ² As above, Vin.1.120. ³ i.e. to the monastery. ⁴ ussūre, after sun-turn, mid-day. In Bu-Pc.37 eating at the “wrong time”, i.e. “after noon has passed until sunrise” (Vin.4.86 = Vin.4.166) is an offence. Cf. at AN.iii.260 the five disadvantages to a family ussūrabhatte, who eat when the sun is right up. ⁵ bhattachedaṃ karissati, literally he will make a ‘cut’ in his food. For, since eating at the wrong time was an offence, a monk who could not take his meal during the right time, would have to miss it altogether. Cf. Ja.i.156, bhattachedaṃ katvā.

⁶ Enumerated at Vin.1.221; conje allowed at Vin.1.222.

“There was a case¹ (where nuns bathed) naked together with prostitutes at the same ford of the river Aciravatī.² Lord, these prostitutes made fun of the nuns, saying: ‘Why in the world, ladies, is the Brahma-faring led by you while you are young? Surely the pleasures of the senses should be enjoyed? When you become old, then you can fare the Brahma-faring; thus will both extremes be experienced by you.’³ Lord, these nuns, being made fun of by these prostitutes, became ashamed. Impure, Lord, is nakedness for women, it is abhorrent, it is objectionable. I, Lord, having this special reason in mind, want to give for life bathing-cloths for the Order of nuns.”

Kd.8.15.12

“But having what advantage in mind do you, Visākhā, ask the Truth-finder for eight boons?”

“Now, Lord, monks who have passed the rains in (various) places⁴ will come to Sāvattthī so as to see the Lord; having approached the Lord, they will ask: ‘Lord, such and such a monk has passed away; what is his bourn, what his future state?’⁵ The Lord will explain this saying: ‘It is in the fruit of stream-attaining or it is in the fruit of once-returning or it is in the fruit of not-returning or it is in the fruit of perfection.’ I, having approached these, will ask: ‘Honoured sirs, was Sāvattthī previously visited⁶ by this master?’

BD.4.419

Kd.8.15.13

“If they say to me: ‘Sāvattthī was previously visited by this monk,’ I shall come to the conclusion that undoubtedly cloths for the rains or food for those coming in or food for those going out or food for the sick or food for those who tend the sick or medicines for the sick or a constant supply of conjeys was enjoyed by this master. On my calling that to mind, delight will be born; from delight, joy will be born; because my mind is joyful my body will be calm; with the body calm I will experience ease; because I am at ease my mind will be contemplative; this will be for me growth as to the sense-organs, growth as to the powers, growth as to the factors of enlightenment. I, Lord, having this advantage in mind, am asking the Truth-finder for the eight boons.”

Vin.1.294

Kd.8.15.14

“It is very good, Visākhā, it is good that you, Visākhā, having this advantage in mind, are asking the Truth-finder for the eight boons. I allow you,

¹ idha. ² As in Bi-Pc.21. ³ This passage occurs again in Nuns’ Bi-Pc.21, where it is made an offence of expiation for nuns to bathe naked. ⁴ disāsu. ⁵ A conversation on these lines is recorded at DN.ii.91ff. to have taken place at Nāḍika. ⁶ āgatapubbā.

Visākhā, the eight boons.” Then the Lord blessed Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with these verses:

“Whatever (woman), much delighted, endowed with virtue, a disciple of the well-farer, food and drink

“Gives—having overcome avarice—the gift is heavenly,¹ dispelling sorrow, bringing happiness; (and)

“She gains a deva-like span² owing to the spotless, stainless way,

“She, desiring merit, at ease, healthy, delights long in a heavenly company.”³

Then the Lord, having blessed Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, with these verses, rising from his seat, departed.

Kd.8.15.15

Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

BD.4.420

“I allow, monks, cloths for the rains, food for those coming in, food for those going out, food for the sick, food for those who tend the sick, medicines for the sick, a constant supply of conjei, bathing-cloths for the Order of nuns.”

The Portion for Repeating on Visākhā

ALLOWANCE FOR A SITTING-CLOTH, ETC.

Now at that time⁴ monks, having eaten abundant food, fell asleep, thoughtless, careless. While they were sleeping, thoughtless, careless, impurity was emitted as the result of a dream; the lodging was stained by the impurity. Then the Lord, as he was touring the lodgings with the venerable Ānanda as his attendant,⁵ saw the lodging stained by impurity; seeing it, ¹ sovaggiham. Vin-a.1128 says “made for the sake of heaven”. ² dibba āyu. ³ saggamhi kāyamhi. ⁴ This introductory sentence = Vin.3.112. ⁵ pacchāsamaṇa; this was Ānanda also at Vin.3.10, Vin.4.78, and below, BD.4.431.

he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying “Why, Ānanda, is this lodging stained by impurity?”

“Now, Lord, monks having eaten abundant food fell asleep, thoughtless, careless ... as the result of a dream; that is why, Lord, the lodging is stained by impurity.”

Vin.1.295

Kd.8.16.2

“Thus it is, Ānanda, thus it is, Ānanda, that when they fell asleep, thoughtless, careless, impurity was emitted as the result of a dream. Ānanda, those monks who fall asleep calling up mindfulness, careful, by these impurity is not emitted; and, Ānanda, those who are ordinary people, passionless in regard to pleasures of the senses, by these impurity is not emitted. It is impossible, it cannot come to pass, Ānanda, that impurity should be emitted by one perfected.” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Now as I, monks, was touring the lodgings with Ānanda as my attendant, I saw a lodging stained by impurity, and seeing this I addressed Ānanda, saying: ‘Why, Ānanda, ... (= Kd.8.16.1, Kd.8.16.2) ... by one perfected.’”

Kd.8.16.3

“Monks,¹ there are these five disadvantages to one who falls asleep, thoughtless, careless: badly he sleeps, badly he wakes, he sees an evil dream, devatās guard him not, impurity is emitted. Monks, these are the five disadvantages to one who falls asleep, thoughtless, careless. And, monks, there are these five advantages to one who falls asleep calling up mindfulness, careful: well he sleeps,² well he wakes, he does not see an evil dream, devatās guard him, impurity is not emitted. Monks, these are the five advantages to one who falls asleep, calling up mindfulness, careful. I allow you, monks, a (piece of cloth) to sit upon³ for protecting the body, for protecting the robes, for protecting the lodgings.”

BD.4.421

Kd.8.16.4

Now at that time a (piece of cloth) to sit upon was too small,⁴ it did not protect the whole lodging. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a sheet⁵ is large as one desires.”

Kd.8.17.1

¹ = AN.iii.251. ² Cf. AN.iv.150; AN.v.342; Ja.ii.61. ³ nisīdana. Defined at Vin.3.232. Vin.4.123. See BD.2.87, n.2. ⁴ Bu-Pc.89 lays down a prescribed size. ⁵ paccattharaṇa. See BD.2.34, n.1.

Now at that time¹ the venerable Belaṭṭhasīsa, the venerable Ānanda's preceptor, came to have a disease of thick scabs. Because of its discharge his robes stuck to his body; monks laying moistened these again and again with water, loosened them. The Lord, as he was touring the lodgings, saw these monks loosening these robes, having moistened them again and again with water; seeing them, he approached these monks; having approached, he spoke thus to these monks:

“Monks, what disease has this monk?”

Vin.1.296

“Lord, this venerable one has a disease of thick scabs; because of its discharge his robes stick to his body, and we, having moistened these again and again with water, loosened them.” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, an itch-cloth² to one who has an itch or a small boil or a running sore or a thick scab disease.”³

Kd.8.18.1

Now at that time Visākhā, Migāra's mother, taking a cloth for wiping the face, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, Visākhā, Migāra's mother, spoke thus to the Lord:

BD.4.422

“Lord, may the Lord accept from me a cloth for wiping the face, that it may be for a blessing, a happiness for a long time.”

The Lord accepted the cloth for wiping the face. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Visākhā, Migāra's mother, with dhamma-talk. Then Visākhā, Migāra's mother, having been gladdened ... delighted with dhamma-talk by the Lord, rising up from her seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, a cloth for wiping the face.”

Kd.8.19.1

Now at that time Roja, the Mallan, was a friend of the venerable Ānanda.⁴ A linen cloth belonging to Roja, the Mallan, was placed in the venerable ¹ = Vin.1.202, where chunam was allowed as a medicine. ² Right measure prescribed in Bu-Pc.90. ³ Buddhaghosa's explanations of these words (Vin-a.884) are given at BD.3.98, notes. ⁴ Mentioned as a friend of Ānanda's also at Vin.1.247.

Ānanda's hand, and the venerable Ānanda had need of a linen cloth. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to take something on trust when it belongs to one endowed with five qualities: if he is an acquaintance and if he is a companion and if he has spoken about¹ it and if he is alive and if he knows, ‘When it is taken he will be pleased with me’. I allow you, monks, to take something on trust when it belongs to one endowed with these five qualities.”

Now at that time monks had complete sets of the three robes but they had need both of water-strainers² and bags. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a cloth for the requisites.”³

Kd.8.20.1

ON THE LEAST ROBE TO BE ASSIGNED, ETC.

Then it occurred to the monks: “Those things that are allowed by the Lord—the three robes or the cloths for the rains or the piece of cloth to sit upon or the sheet or the itch-cloth or the cloth for wiping the face or the cloth for the requisites (of water-strainers and bags)—are all these things to be allotted⁴ or are they to be assigned?”⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.8.20.2

“I allow you, monks, to allot the three robes, not to assign them;⁶ to allot the cloths for the rains during the four months of the rains, after that (time) to assign them; to allot a piece of cloth to sit upon, not to assign it; to allot a sheet, not to assign it; to allot an itch-cloth while the disease lasts, after that (time) to assign it; to allot a cloth for wiping the face, not to assign it; to allot a cloth for the requisites (of water-strainers and bowls), not to assign it.”

Vin.1.297
BD.4.423

Then it occurred to the monks: “Now what is the least robe to be assigned?”⁷ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.8.21.1

¹ ālapita. Vin-a.1129 says, “If he has said this, ‘whatever property of mine you may wish for, that you may take’”. ² parissāvana. Allowed at Vin.2.118. ³ parikkhāracolaka. Cf. Vin.2.118, where the colaka did not suffice. ⁴ adhiṭṭhātabbāni. See notes on an-adhiṭṭhita at BD.2.7, BD.2.121. ⁵ vikappetabbāni. See note on a-vikappita at BD.2.7. Vikappana, assignment, is defined at Vin.4.122. ⁶ Cf. Vin.3.196 where an extra robe is defined as one that is “not allotted, not assigned”. ⁷ See definition of robe (-material) at Vin.3.196 = BD.2.7.

“I allow you, monks, to assign as the least robe one that is eight finger-breadths in length and four finger-breadths wide according to the accepted finger-breadth.” Now at that time the made-up rag-robos of the venerable Kassapa the Great became heavy.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a rough darn.”² It became misshapen at the corner.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to pull off the misshapen corner.”⁴ The threads were frayed out.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to insert a braiding,⁶ a binding.¹ Now at that time the cotton cloth of the outer cloaks gave way.⁷ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a net-work.”⁸

BD.4.424

Kd.8.21.2

Now at that time when a set of three robes was being made by a certain monk, there was not enough for all (three) to be cut up (into pieces).

“I allow you, monks, two (robes that are) cut up, one that is not cut up.” There was not enough for two to be cut up and one not cut up.

“I allow you, monks, two (robes that are) not cut up, one that is cut up.” There was not enough for two to be not cut up and one cut up.

¹ According to Vin-a.1129 because of the patches sewn on to the worn places. Kassapa the Great always wore rag-robos. ² suttalūkhaṃ kātuṃ. Vin-a.1129 sutten’ eva aggaḷaṃ kātuṃ ti attho, “to make a patch only of thread”, so perhaps suttalūkha is a rough darn; cf. Kd.8.12.2.

³ vikaṇṇa. Vin-a.1129 says that when they had cut off the thread as they were sewing, one corner of the outer cloak became long. At Vin.2.116 cīvaraṃ vikaṇṇaṃ hoti, the robe-material became misshapen. See Vinaya Texts iii.92, n.7. ⁴ vikaṇṇam uddharituṃ. Vin-a.1129 says that this means to cut off the long corner. ⁵ okiriyanti. Vin-a.1129 mentions that the robe fell down, or hung down, at the cut corner. ⁶ See BD.2.409, n.7, n.8; and above, BD.4.354.

⁷ As at Kd.15.28.2. The word translated as “cotton cloth” is pattā. Vinaya Texts ii.231, n.3 says “we probably ought to read paṭṭā, not pattā,” and cf. Vinaya Texts iii.141, n.6. Paṭṭā are perhaps strips of cloth used as braidings and bindings. Vin-a.1129 says pattā lujjanti means that the threads put in front of the large pattā fall out, and thus the pattā give way.

⁸ aṭṭhapadaka, perhaps a “patch”, Pali-English Dictionary “Net-work” tentatively suggested in Critical Pali Dictionary Commentary simply says that aṭṭhapadakaṃ kātuṃ means to sew the front of a piece of cloth with an aṭṭhapadaka-covering (aṭṭhapadakacchannena). The word occurs at Vin.2.150 with vetuṃ, and is translated at Vinaya Texts iii.167 as “to weave the string across and across”; see Vinaya Texts iii.167, n.1

“I allow you, monks, to insert an extra supply.¹ But, monks, the whole (set of three robes) should not be worn not cut up. Whoever should so wear it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”²

Now at that time much robe-material accrued to a certain monk, and he was desirous of giving that robe-material to his parents. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Because he is himself giving to his parents, monks, what can we say? I allow you, monks, to give to parents.³ But, monks, a gift of faith should not be brought to ruin.⁴ Whoever should bring (one) to ruin, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk, laying aside a robe⁵ in the Blind Men’s Grove,⁶ entered a village for almsfood with (only) his upper and inner robes.⁷ Thieves carried off that robe. That monk became badly dressed, wearing shabby robes. Monks spoke thus:

“Why are you, your reverence, badly dressed, wearing shabby robes?”

“Now I, your reverences, laying aside a robe in the Blind Men’s Grove, entered a village for almsfood with (only) the upper and inner robes. Thieves carried off that robe; that is why I am badly dressed, wearing shabby robes.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a village should not be entered by (a monk wearing only) the upper and inner robes; whoever should so enter (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”⁸

¹ anvādhikarṇi pi āropetuṃ. Vin-a.1129 says “to give an added (or extra, āgantuka) piece of cloth. This may be put in if there is not enough; if there is enough there must not be an added piece of cloth, (for then, what there is) should be cut up”. ² See above, Kd.8.11. ³ vinipātetabbari. Vin-a.1129, “if the parents stand begging in the dust it should be given”. The point is that the robe-material had been given to the monk, and should therefore, unless there is strong reason to the contrary, be retained by him. At all events it was not to be wasted. ⁴ Cf. Vin.4.286, where it is “no offence” for a nun to give recluses’ robe-material to her parents. ⁵ “cīvara (robe) must here be used for saṃghāṭi. See ... section 2, below, where saṃghāṭi occurs”, Vinaya Texts ii.232, n.3. See Bu-NP.29 on the laying aside of robes. ⁶ Cf. BD.2.36, n.3. ⁷ santaruttara. See BD.2.12, n.1. At Bu-NP.2 it is an offence for a monk to be away from his three robes, even for one night, unless there is the agreement of the monks. ⁸ Cf. Bu-Sk.1-Bu-Sk.4. At Kd.7.1.3, above, among the five kaṭhina privileges is included that of going for alms without wearing the three robes.

Kd.8.22.1

Vin.1.298

BD.4.425

Kd.8.23.1

Kd.8.23.2

Now at that time the venerable Ānanda, through unmindfulness, entered a village for almsfood with (only) his upper and inner robes. Monks spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

“Reverend Ānanda, has it not been laid down by the Lord that a village should not be entered (by a monk wearing only) the upper and inner robes? Why do you, your reverence, enter a village with (only) your upper and inner robes?”

“It is true, your reverences, that it was laid down by the Lord that a village should not be entered (by a monk wearing only) the upper and inner robes, but I entered through unmindfulness.”

They told this matter to the Lord.

He said: “Monks, there are five reasons for laying aside the outer cloak: if one becomes ill,¹ or if he comes to be spending the rains,² or if he comes to go to the other side of a river, or if the dwelling-place comes to be secured with a bolt,³ or if the kāṭhina-cloth has been made.⁴ These, monks, are the five reasons for laying aside the outer cloak. And, monks, there are five reasons for laying aside the upper robe, the inner robe: if one becomes ill ... or if the kāṭhina-cloth has been made. These, monks, are the five reasons for laying aside the upper robe, the inner robe. And, monks, there are five reasons for laying aside a cloth for the rains: if one becomes ill, or if he comes to go outside the boundary,⁵ or if he comes to go to the other side of a river, or if the dwelling-place comes to be secured with a bolt, or if a cloth for the rains comes to be not made or imperfectly executed.⁶ These, monks, are the five reasons for laying aside a cloth for the rains.”

¹ Then, according to Bu-NP.2 he has to get the agreement of the monks to be regarded as not away, separated from his three robes, although he is in actual fact separated from them, since he does not feel well enough to go on a journey taking all of them with him.

² vassikasamketa, at the rendezvous for the rains. During the rains monks are allowed to wear cloths for the rains instead of their usual three robes, in order to save these from the damp and wet. ³ aggalaḡutti. Aggala here in sense of “bolt”, not “patch”. ⁴ See Bu-NP.2 and above, Kd.7.1.3. ⁵ When, presumably he must put on his set of three robes. Travelling in the rains was allowed only if the business was urgent and if the monk was not absent from the rains-residence for more than seven days. See Kd.3 ⁶ Cf. Vin.3.155, Vin.3.225, Vin.3.229, etc., for vippakata, imperfectly executed. Cloths for the rains allowed at Kd.8.15.15.

ON WHEN A ROBE BECOMES THE SAṄGHA'S

Now at that time a certain monk spent the rains alone. People there, saying, "We are giving for an Order," gave robes. Then it occurred to that monk: "It is laid down by the Lord that the least Order is fourfold,¹ but I am solitary, and these people, saying, 'We are giving for an Order gave robes. What now if I should convey these robes belonging to an Order to Sāvattī?" Then that monk, taking those robes, having gone to Sāvattī, told this matter to the Lord. He said: "These robes, monk, are for you yourself² until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges)."³

Kd.8.24.1

Vin.1.299

BD.4.427

Kd.8.24.2

"This is a case, monks,⁴ where a monk is spending the rains alone. People there, saying, 'We are giving for an Order' give robes. I allow, monks, those robes (to be) for him himself until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges)."

Now at that time a certain monk spent a favourable time of year⁵ alone. People there, saying: "We are giving for an Order," gave robes. Then it occurred to that monk: "It is laid down by the Lord that the least Order is fourfold, but I am solitary, and these people, saying, 'We are giving for an Order', gave robes. What now if I should convey these robes belonging to an Order to Sāvattī?" Then that monk, taking those robes, having gone to Sāvattī, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to distribute (these robes) to the Order that is present.

Kd.8.24.3

"This is a case, monks, where a monk is spending a favourable time (of year) alone. People there, saying, 'We are giving for an Order', give robes. I allow, monks, that monk to allot⁶ those robes, saying: "These robes are for me.’ If, monks, that monk does not allot that robe-material¹ (and) another monk comes, an equal portion should be given (to him). If, monks, the kusa-lot was not cast while that robe-material was being distributed by those monks (and) another monk comes, an equal portion should be given (to him). If monks, the kusa-lot was cast while that robe-material was being distributed by those monks (and) another monk comes, a portion need not be given (to him) if they are not willing.”²

Kd.8.24.4

¹ At Vin.1.319 five kinds of saṅghas, classified by the number of their members, are given together with the official acts that each might perform. ² tuyh'eva, just for you. ³ See Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.2, Bu-NP.3. ⁴ Although the preceding sentence ends with iti, it appears from the vocative bhikkhave, no less than from the anujānāmi, just below, that Gotama is regarded as still addressing the monks. ⁵ utukāla. Vin-a.1130 says "another time than the rains". At Vin.2.167 utukāla stands in opposition to "the three months of the rains". AN.iv.138 discriminates between three seasons: gimha, the hot weather, vassa, the rains, and hemanta, the cold weather. Utukāla above doubtless means a time of year that was not the rains, thus balancing the preceding paragraphs. ⁶ See above, Kd.8.20.2.

Kd.8.24.5

Now at that time two brothers who were elders, the venerable Isidāsa³ and the venerable Isibhatta,⁴ having spent the rains at Sāvattthī, went to a certain village-residence. People, saying: “It is long since the elders came (here),” gave food with robes. The resident monks asked the elders:

BD.4.428

“Honoured sirs, thanks to the elders, these robes belonging to the Order, have accrued. Let the elders consent (to accept) a portion.” The elders spoke thus:

“In so far as we, your reverences, understand dhamma as taught by the Lord, these robes are for you yourselves until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges).”

Kd.8.24.6

Now at that time three monks were spending the rains in Rājagaha. People there, saying: “We are giving for an Order,” gave robes. Then it occurred to these monks: “It is laid down by the Lord that the least Order is fourfold, but we are three persons, and these people, saying, ‘We are giving for an Order’, gave robes. Now what line of conduct should be followed by us?” Now at that time several elders, the venerable Nilavāsīn⁵ and the venerable Sāṇavāsīn⁶ and the venerable Gopaka and the venerable Bhagu⁷

Vin.1.300

¹ Singular here; plural above. ² Cf. Kd.16.11.3. ³ Mentioned apparently nowhere but here, see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁴ Mentioned apparently nowhere but here, see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁵ Mentioned apparently nowhere but here, see Dictionary of Pali Proper Names. ⁶ Dictionary of Pali Proper Names says “an epithet of Sambhūta thera”. Vinaya Texts ii.238, n.1 thinks he is probably the same as the Sāṇavāsī who took part in the Council of Vesālī. ⁷ Dictionary of Pali Proper Names in its account of a Bhagu thera thinks that this one “is probably a different person” from the Bhagu of Vin.1.350, etc.

and the venerable Phalikasandāna, were staying at Pāṭaliputta¹ in the Cock's monastery.² Then these monks, having gone to Pāṭaliputta, asked the elders. The elders spoke thus: "In so far as we understand dhamma as taught by the Lord, it is that these robes are for you yourselves until the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges)."

THE STORY OF UPANANDA THE SAKYAN

Now at that time the venerable Upananda,³ the son of the Sakyans, having spent the rains at Sāvattthī, went to a certain village-residence. And there the monks assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These spoke thus: "These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?"

Kd.8.25.1

BD.4.429

"Yes, your reverences, I will consent," and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there, he went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus: "These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?"

"Yes, your reverences, I will consent," and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there too, he went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus: "These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?"

"Yes, your reverences, I will consent," and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there too, taking a great bundle of robe-material, he came back again to Sāvattthī.

Kd.8.25.2

¹ Or Patna, the capital of Magadha before Asoka's time. See above, BD.4.312; DN.ii.87; Buddhist India, p.262; B.C. LAW, Geography of Early Buddhism, p.10, p.11; C.H.I.i.189. ² Kukkuṭārāma. Referred to at SN.v.15ff., SN.v.171; AN.iii.57; AN.v.342 = MN.i.349. There was another ārāma of the same name at Kosambī, built by a seṭṭhi. It would have been an odd coincidence if the Pāṭaliputta one had also been built by a seṭṭhi, as Buddhaghosa says at MN-a.iii.13 and also in Commentary on AN.v.342 (see GS.v.220, n.2). C.H.I.i.189 observes that Asoka is said to have built a monastery on the site of the Kukkuṭārāma; cf. C.H.I.i.501, C.H.I.i.518. ³ See BD.2.42, n.1.

Monks spoke thus: “You, reverend Upananda, are of great merit;¹ much robe-material has accrued to you.”

“Whence, your reverences, is there merit for me? Now I, your reverences, having spent the rains at Sāvattthī, went to a certain village-residence. The monks were there assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. They spoke thus to me: ‘These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?’ ‘Yes, your reverences, I will consent,’ and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there, I went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus to me: ‘These robes, your reverence, belonging to the Order, will be distributed. Will you consent (to accept) a portion?’ ‘Yes, your reverences, I will consent,’ and taking up a portion of the robe-material from there too, I went to another residence. The monks there also assembled, wishing to distribute robe-material. These also spoke thus to me: ‘These robes ... a portion?’ ‘Yes, your reverences, I will consent,’ and I took up a portion of robe-material from there too. Thus much robe-material accrued to me.”

Vin.1.301

BD.4.430

Kd.8.25.3

“But is it that you, reverend Upananda, having spent the rains somewhere else, will consent (to accept) a portion of robe-material elsewhere?”²

“Yes, your reverences,” he said. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having spent the rains somewhere else, consent (to accept) robe-material elsewhere?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Upananda, having spent the rains somewhere else, consented (to accept) a portion of robe-material elsewhere?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him saying:

“How can you, foolish man, having spent the rains somewhere else, consent (to accept) a portion of robe-material elsewhere? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing (the number of) those who are pleased.”

Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ Same thing said to him at Vin.3.215. ² Cf. Vin.3.66, Vin.4.76f., Vin.4.81f.

“Monks, a portion of robe-material is not to be consented to elsewhere by one who has spent the rains somewhere else. Whoever should consent (to accept), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, spent the rains alone in two residences, thinking: “Thus will much robe-material accrue to me.” Then it occurred to these monks: “Now, how should a share of robe-material be given to the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.8.25.4

“Monks, give one share¹ to the foolish man. For this is a case, monks, where a monk is spending the rains alone in two residences, thinking, ‘Thus will much robe-material accrue me’. If he stays half (the time) at one, half (the time) at the other, half a share of robe-material should be given (to him) at the one, half at the other; or where he spends the more (time), from there is the share of the robe-material to be given (to him).”

BD.4.431

ON THE STORY OF ONE ILL

Now at that time a certain monk was suffering from dysentery; he lay fallen in his own excrements. Then the Lord, as he was touring the lodgings with the venerable Ānanda as his attendant,² approached that monk’s dwelling-place. The Lord saw that monk lying fallen in his own excrements; seeing him he approached that monk, and having approached he spoke thus to that monk:

Kd.8.26.1

“What is your disease, monk?”

“Lord, I have dysentery.”

“But, monk, have you anyone who tends you?”

“I have not, Lord,” he said.

“Why do not the monks tend you?”

Vin.1.302

“I, Lord, am of no use to the monks, therefore the monks do not tend me.”

Kd.8.26.2

¹ ekādhippāya, of which Vin-a.1132 says ekapuggalapaṭivimsa, one man’s share. ² Cf. above, BD.4.420.

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “Go, Ānanda, bring water, we will bathe this monk.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered the Lord in assent, when he had brought the water, the Lord sprinkled on the water, the venerable Ānanda washed him over; the Lord took him by the head, the venerable Ānanda by the feet, and having raised him up, they laid him down on a couch.

Kd.8.26.3

Then the Lord, on that occasion, in that connection, having had the Order of monks convened, asked the monks:

“Is there, monks, in such and such a dwelling-place a monk who is ill?”

“There is, Lord.”

“What, monks, is that monk’s disease?”

“Lord, the venerable one has dysentery.”

“But, monks, is there anyone who is tending that monk?”

“There is not, Lord.”

BD.4.432

“Why do not the monks tend him?”

“Lord, this monk is of no use to the monks, therefore the monks do not tend that monk.”

“Monks, you have not a mother, you have not a father who might tend you. If you, monks, do not tend one another, then who is there who will tend you? Whoever, monks, would tend me, he should tend the sick.

Kd.8.26.4

“If he has a preceptor he should be tended for life by the preceptor, who should wait for his recovery.¹ If he has a teacher he should be tended for life by the teacher, who should wait for his recovery. If he has one who shares a dwelling-place ... If he has a pupil ... If he has a fellow-preceptor ... If he has a fellow-teacher he should be tended for life by the fellow-teacher, who should wait for his recovery. If he has neither a preceptor nor a teacher nor one who shares a dwelling-place nor a pupil nor a fellow-preceptor nor a fellow-teacher, he should be tended by the Order. If it should not tend him, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.8.26.5

“Endowed with five qualities,² monks, does one who is ill become difficult to tend: he becomes one who does not do what is beneficial;¹ he does not know moderation in what is beneficial; he becomes one who does not take medicine;² he becomes one who does not make clear the disease just as it comes to be to one who tends the sick and who wishes him well, saying as it is getting worse, ‘it is getting worse’, or as it is getting better, ‘It is getting better’, or as it is stationary, ‘It is stationary’; he becomes not the kind (of man) who endures bodily feelings which, arising, are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly.³ Endowed with these five qualities, monks, does one who is ill become difficult to tend.

¹ At Vin.1.50 it is said that a preceptor should be tended by the one who shares his cell; one who shares the cell by his preceptor (Vin.1.53); a teacher by his pupil and a pupil by his teacher (Vin.1.61). ² From here to end of Kd.8.26 = AN.iii.143. The five qualities, arigā here, are called dhammā there.

BD.4.433

Vin.1.303

Kd.8.26.6

“Endowed with five qualities, monks, does one who is ill become easy to tend: he becomes one who does what is beneficial; he knows moderation in what is beneficial; he becomes one who takes medicine; he makes clear the disease just as it comes to be to one who tends the sick and who wishes him well, saying as it is getting worse, ‘It is getting worse’, or as it is getting better, ‘It is getting better’ or as it is stationary, ‘It is stationary’; he becomes the kind (of man) who endures bodily feelings which, arising, are painful, acute, sharp, shooting, disagreeable, miserable, deadly. Endowed with these five qualities, monks, does one who is ill become easy to tend.

Kd.8.26.7

“Endowed with five qualities, monks, is one who tends the sick not fit to tend the sick: he comes to be not competent to provide the medicine; he does not know what is beneficial and what is not beneficial; he brings forward what is not beneficial, he takes away what is beneficial; he tends the sick in the hope of gain,⁴ not (from) amity of mind;⁵ he becomes one who loathes to remove excrement or urine or sweat or vomit; he does not come to be competent to gladden, rejoice, rouse, delight the sick from time to time with dhamma-talk. Endowed with these five qualities, monks, one who tends the sick is not fit to tend the sick.

¹ asappāyakārin, a doer of what is not beneficial. Pali-English Dictionary gives for Mi.215, sappāyakiriyā, “giving a drug”. gs.iii.110 translates “he treats not himself with physic”, and doubtless that which is beneficial has come to have the sense of medicine, drug. But at Vin.1.292 sappāyāni bhojanāni must mean suitable or beneficial meals, and not meals that are medicines, for it comes under Visākha’s boon called “food for the sick”. There is also sappāyāni bhesajjāni, suitable, beneficial medicines, when she is asking to give medicines for the sick. ² bhesajjāṃ na paṭisevitā hoti. ³ Stock. For references see BD.3.12, n.2.

⁴ āmisantaro. Commentary on AN.iii.144 says “expecting (gifts of) robes, etc.” Vin-a.1133 mentions that antara means kāraṇa, and that āmisantara means āmisam assa antaram, gain is his motive. ⁵ no mettacitto, the mind, or heart, not in amity. Mettā at some time came to be one of the four brahmāvihāras, Brahma-abidings; See MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.216ff.

Kd.8.26.8

“Endowed with five qualities, monks, is one who tends the sick fit to tend the sick: he comes to be competent to provide the medicine; he knows what is beneficial and what is not beneficial; he takes away what is not beneficial, he brings forward what is beneficial; he tends the sick (from) amity of mind, not in the hope of gain; he does not become one who loathes to remove excrement or urine or sweat or vomit; he comes to be competent to gladden ... delight the sick from time to time with dhamma-talk. Endowed with these five qualities, monks, is one who tends the sick fit to tend the sick.”

BD.4.434

ON INHERITANCE

Kd.8.27.1

Now at that time two monks came to be going along a high-road in the Kosala country. They arrived at a certain residence where a certain monk was ill. Then it occurred to these monks: “Your reverences, tending the sick is praised by the Lord. Come, let us tend this monk,” and they tended him. While he was being tended by them he passed away. Then these monks, taking that monk’s bowl and robes, having gone to Sāvattḥī, told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.8.27.2

He said: “Monks, the Order is the owner of the bowl and robes of a monk who has passed away. But truly those who tend the sick are of great service. I allow you, monks, to give through the Order the three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick. And thus, monks, should they be given: that monk who tended the sick, having approached the Order, should say to it: ‘Honoured sirs, the monk so and so has passed away; these three robes and the bowl were his.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The monk so and so has passed away; these three robes and the bowl were his. If it seems right to the Order let the Order give these three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The monk so and so has passed away; these three robes and the bowl were his. The Order is giving these three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick. If the giving of these three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. These three robes and the bowl are given through the Order to those who tended the sick. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Vin.1.304

Now at that time a certain novice came to pass away. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the Order is the owner of the bowl and robes of a novice who has passed away. But truly those who tend the sick are of great service. I allow you, monks, to give through the Order the robe and the bowl to those who tended the sick. And thus, monks, should they be given: That monk who tended the sick, having approached the Order, should say to it: ‘Honoured sirs, the novice so and so has passed away; this robe and the bowl were his.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The novice so and so has passed away; this robe and bowl were his. If it seems right to the Order let the Order give this robe and bowl to those who tended the sick. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The novice so and so has passed away; this robe and bowl were his. The Order is giving this robe and bowl to those who tended the sick. If the giving of this robe and bowl to those who tended the sick is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. This robe and bowl are given through the Order to those who tended the sick. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Kd.8.27.3

BD.4.435

Now at that time a certain monk and a novice tended one who was ill. While he was being tended by these he passed away. Then it occurred to that monk who had tended the one who was ill: “Now what share of the robes is to be given to the novice who tended the one who was ill?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give an equal share to a novice who tended the sick.”

Kd.8.27.4

Vin.1.305

Kd.8.27.5

Now at that time a certain monk who had many goods, many requisites, came to pass away. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the Order is the owner of the bowl and robes of a monk who has passed away. But truly those who tend the sick are of great service. I allow you, monks, to give through the Order the three robes and the bowl to those who tended the sick; to distribute through the Order that is present whatever few goods, few requisites are there; but whatever many goods, many requisites are there, these are for the Order of the four quarters¹—those who have come in, those who have not come in—they are not to be disposed of,² not to be divided up.”³

BD.4.436

ON REJECTION OF NAKEDNESS

Kd.8.28.1

Now at that time a certain monk, having become naked, approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in many a figure is the Lord a speaker in praise of desiring little, of contentment, of expunging (evil), of punctiliousness, of graciousness, of decreasing (the obstructions), of putting forth energy.⁴ Lord, this nakedness is, in many a figure, useful for desiring little, for contentment, for expunging (evil), for punctiliousness, for graciousness, for decreasing (the obstructions), for putting forth energy. It were good, Lord, if the Lord were to allow nakedness for monks.”

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, observe nakedness, an observance of members of other sects?¹ It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...”

¹ cātuddisa saṅgha. For discussion on this see S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, 1924, p.83ff. Cf. same expression at Vin.2.147. ² avissajjika. Five classes of things that are avissajjīyāni, untransferable, not to be disposed of, are given at Vin.2.170. ³ avebhaṅgika. The same five classes of things that are avebhaṅgiyāni, inalienable, are given at Vin.2.171. If a monk disposes of or divides up any of these things he incurs a thullaccaya offence, and the disposal or division is reckoned to be null and void. ⁴ Stock in Vinaya. See BD.1.37 for notes and references.

Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks saying: “Monks, nakedness, an observance of members of other sects, is not to be observed.² Whoever should observe it, there is a grave offence.”

ON REJECTION OF GARMENTS OF GRASS, ETC.

Now at that time a certain monk, having put on a kusa-grass garment ... a bark garment ... a garment of wood-shavings³ ... a hair-blanket ... a horse-hair blanket ... (a dress of) owls’ wings ... (a cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide,⁴ approached the Lord; having approached he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in many a figure is the Lord a speaker in praise of desiring little ... of putting forth energy. Lord, this (cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide is, in many a figure, useful for desiring little ... for putting forth energy. It were good, Lord, if the Lord were to allow (cloaks made of strips of) black antelope hide for the monks.”

The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not becoming ... it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, wear (a cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide, an emblem of members of other sects?⁵ Foolish man, it is not for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...”

¹ titthiyāsamādāna. Word-play probably intended here; for samādāna means both going for alms without taking the three robes with one (cf. asamādānacāra at Vin.1.254), and also adopting, undertaking, taking upon oneself. Here the latter must be meant, for cf. Vin.1.159, where the same phrase is used with regard to the titthiyās’ ‘vow of silence’ mūgabbata.

² Cf. Kd.8.15.7, Kd.8.15.11. ³ Phalaka is usually a panel, board or plank. Vinaya Texts ii.246 and A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol.48, no.3, p.268 (referring to this passage) take it as a kind of cloth. ⁴ See BD.1.52f. for notes and references. The story at Vin.3.34 (= BD.1.52) preceding those of monks dressed in these kinds of garments, is about a naked monk; this itself is preceded by a story of a monk clothed in a layman’s dress. ⁵ titthiyādhaja. Cf. Vin.2.22, where it is said that titthiyādhaja is not to be worn by a monk who has been suspended for not seeing his offences. Commentary says (see Vinaya Texts ii.373, n.6) that titthiyādhaja means that garments of kusa-grass and the rest are not to be worn.; and cf. arahaddhaja at Ja.i.65.

Kd.8.28.2

BD.4.437

Vin.1.306

Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, (a cloak made of strips of) black antelope hide, an emblem of members of other sects, is not to be worn. Whoever should wear (one), there is a grave offence.”

Kd.8.28.3

Now at that time a certain monk, having put on (a garment made of) stalks of swallow-wort¹ ... having put on (a cloth of) fibre,² approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in many a figure is the Lord a speaker in praise of desiring little ... of putting forth energy. Lord, this (cloth of) fibre is, in many a figure, useful for desiring little ... for putting forth of energy. It were good, Lord, if the Lord were to allow (a cloth or) fibre for the monks.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying: “It is not becoming ... it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, put on (a cloth of) fibre? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

BD.4.438

“Monks, (a cloth of) fibre is not to be put on. Whoever should put (one) on, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ON REJECTION OF ALL DARK GREEN

Kd.8.29.1

Now at that time the group of six monks wore robes that were all dark green,³ they wore robes that were all yellow, they wore robes that were all red, they wore robes that were all crimson, they wore robes that were all black, they wore robes that were all dyed brownish-yellow,¹ they wore robes that were all dyed reddish-yellow,² they wore robes with borders that were not cut up, they wore robes with long borders, they wore robes with borders of flowers, they wore robes with borders of snakes' hoods, they wore jackets,³ they wore (garments of) the Tirīṭa tree,⁴ they wore turbans. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ akkanāla. Akka is the plant Calotropis gigantea. Word occurs at MN.i.429. ² potthaka. Vin-a.1135 says that it is made of makaci. This, according to Pali-English Dictionary is a “kind of cloth, material, fibre”. Potthaka occurs in a simile at AN.i.246, and there is no indication that monks should not wear it; it is called painful to handle and of little worth. AN-a.ii.359 describes it as vākamayavattham, “a cloth made of bark”. Also see Pp.33. Pp-a.216 calls potthaka: sāṇavākasāṭṭaka, a cloak of bark and coarse hemp. On sāṇa see BD.2.143, n.3. ³ nilaka, or blue; see BD.2.408, n.1, BD.2.408, n.2. For this sequence of colours cf. Vin.1.185 = Vin.2.267, and see Buddhaghosa’s explanations at Vin-a.1083. This passage, with the omission of the last item, recurs at Vin.2.267 for the group of six nuns.

"Monks, robes that are all dark green are not to be worn, robes that are all yellow are not to be worn ... a jacket is not to be worn, (a garment made from) the Tirīṭa tree is not to be worn, a turban is not to be worn. Whoever should wear (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

ON WHEN THERE IS NO ROBE AFTER THE RAINS

Now at that time monks, having spent the rains, and no robe-material having accrued, went away and left the Order⁵ and passed away; and they pretended to be novices and they pretended to be disavowers of the training and they pretended to be committers of an extreme offence and they pretended to be mad and they pretended to be unhinged and they pretended to have bodily pains and they pretended to be suspended for not seeing an offence and they pretended to be suspended for not making amends for an offence and they pretended to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view and they pretended to be eunuchs and they pretended that

Kd.8.30.1

Vin.1.307
BD.4.439

¹ mahāraṅgaratta, Vin-a.1083 saying that it is the colour of a centipede's back. ² mahānāmaratta, Vin-a.1083 saying that it is the colour of withered leaves, a mixed colour. ³ kañcuka, cf. AN.i.145. ⁴ tirīṭaka. Symplocos racemosa. Vin-a.1135 explains by rukkhachalimayaṃ taṃ pādapuñchanam kātuṃ vaṭṭati, made of the bark of a tree, one can make a foot-towel of it. Cf. AN.i.295 where the wearing of this comes among the practices of the "self-tormentors", or wasters-away. ⁵ This sequence = Vin.1.121 = Vin.2.173. Cf. also Vin.1.135, Vin.1.167, Vin.1.320.

they were living in communion, though it was by theft,¹ and they pretended that they had gone over to other sects² and they pretended to be animals³ and they pretended to be matricides⁴ and they pretended to be parricides⁵ and they pretended to be slayers of men perfected⁶ and they pretended to be seducers of nuns and they pretended to be schismatics⁷ and they pretended to be shedders of (a Truthfinder's) blood⁸ and they pretended to be hermaphrodites.⁹ They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.8.30.2

He said: "This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, goes away. If there is a suitable receiver,¹⁰ (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, leaves the Order, passes away, pretends to be a novice, pretends to be a disavower of the training, pretends to be a committer of an extreme offence. The Order is the owner. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, pretends to be mad ... pretends to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view. If there is a suitable receiver, (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, no robe-material having accrued, pretends to be a eunuch ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite. The Order is the owner.

BD.4.440

Kd.8.30.3

"This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, goes away. If there is a suitable receiver, (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, leaves the Order ... pretends to be a committer of an extreme offence. The Order is the owner. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, pretends to be mad ... pretends to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view. If there is a suitable receiver, (robe-material) should be given (to him). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued, but not having been distributed, pretends to be a eunuch ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite. The Order is the owner.

¹ theyyasamvāsaka. At Vin.1.86 it is said that if such a one has not been ordained, he should not be ordained; if he has been ordained he should be expelled. This passage makes it clear that a monk, called a theyyasamvāsaka in the rule, took on himself the attributes of a monk without undergoing the training, and tried to become a samvāsaka, one in communion (see definition of samvāsa in the Pārājikas) by theft, theyya, of a monk's attributes. Explained at Vin-a.1016ff. ² tittihiyapakkantaka. At Vin.1.86 same is said of this as of theyyasamvāsaka. Explanation given at Vin-a.1021. ³ Same is said as of the two previous terms, Vin.1.88. Explained at Vin-a.1022f. ⁴ Same is said as of the two previous terms, Vin.1.88. Explained at Vin-a.1022f. ⁵ Same is said as of the two previous terms, Vin.1.88. Explained at Vin-a.1022f. ⁶ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin.1.89. Explained at Vin-a.1022. ⁷ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin.1.89. Explained at Vin-a.1022f. ⁸ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin.1.89. Explained at Vin-a.1022f. ⁹ Same is said as of previous terms at Vin.1.89. Explained at Vin-a.1022f. ¹⁰ paṭirūpe gāhake. Vin-a.1135 says "if there is some monk who takes (robe-material), thinking, 'I am taking as for that monk', the meaning is that it should be given to him". Vin-a.1135 also points out that among these twenty-three types of men, sixteen do not receive the material and seven do.

ON A ROBE FOR A DIVIDED SAṄGHA

“This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided.¹ People there saying: ‘We are giving for an Order,’ give water² to one part,³ they give robe-material to the other part. This is for the Order.⁴ This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided. People there saying: ‘We are giving for an Order,’ giving water to one part, they give robe-material to the same part. This is for the Order.

Kd.8.30.4

BD.4.441

Vin.1.308

Kd.8.30.5

“This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided. People there saying: ‘We are giving for a part,’ give water to one part, they give robe-material to the other part. This is for a part. This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material not having accrued, the Order is divided. People there saying: ‘We are giving for a part,’ give water to one part, they give robe-material to the same part. This is for the part.

¹ bhijjati. Vin-a.1135 says that being divided, like the (quarrelsome) monks of Kosambī, there come to be two parts (or divisions). ² udaka. Vin-a.1135 saying that they give dakkhiṇodakaṇ ca gandhādāni ca, water that is dakkhiṇa (i.e. either ceremonial, or to wash in) and perfumes and so on. ³ pakkha, side, party, faction. Cf. pakkha at Vin.3.173 in definition of “should go forward with a schism”; and at Vin.3.175 in definition of “take his part”. See also BD.3.190, n.3. ⁴ Vin-a.1135 says that “this, etaṃ, is for the two divisions of the whole Order. It should be distributed among the two sides after a gong has been beaten”. By “whole Order” Buddhaghosa means that part of it which spent the rains together in the same residence.

Kd.8.30.6

“This is a case, monks, where monks, having spent the rains, robe-material having accrued (but) not being distributed, the Order is divided. It should be equally distributed among all.”

ON RIGHTLY AND WRONGLY ALLOTTED

Kd.8.31.1

Now at that time the venerable Revata sent robe-material for the venerable Sāriputta by the hand of a certain monk, saying: “Give this robe-material to the elder.” Then on the way that monk took that robe-material on trust¹ for the venerable Revata. Then the venerable Revata, having met the venerable Sāriputta, asked:

“I, honoured sir, sent robe-material for the elder. Has that robe-material arrived?” “I have not seen that robe-material, your reverence.” Then the venerable Revata spoke thus to that monk: “I, your reverence, sent robe-material by the venerable one’s hand for the elder. Where is that robe-material?”

“I, honoured sir, took that robe-material on trust for the venerable one.” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.8.31.2

He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk is sending robe-material by a monk’s hand, saying: ‘Give this robe-material to so and so.’ If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him who sends it, it is rightly taken. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk is sending robe-material by a monk’s hand, saying, ‘Give this robe-material to so and so’. If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is wrongly taken. If he takes it on trust for him who sent it, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. While he is on the way he hears that he who sent it has passed away. If he allots to him² the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is rightly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... ”

BD.4.442

¹ I.e. he used it himself. On vissāsam gaṇhāti, see Kd.8.19.1 and BD.2.10, n.5. ² tassa.

to so and so'. While he is on the way he hears that he to whom it was being sent has passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is wrongly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him who sent it, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... '... to so and so'. While he is on the way he hears that both have passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him who sent it—it is rightly allotted. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him to whom it was being sent—it is wrongly allotted.

Vin.1.309

Kd.8.31.3

“This is a case, monks, where a monk sends robe-material by the hand of a monk, saying, ‘I am giving this robe-material to so and so’. If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him who sends it, it is wrongly taken. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it is being sent, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. If he, while on the way, takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is rightly taken. If he takes it on trust for him who sends it, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. While he is on the way, he hears that he who sent it has passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is wrongly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him to whom it was being sent, it is rightly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. While he is on the way, he hears that he to whom it was being sent has passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased, it is rightly allotted. If he takes it on trust for him who sent it, it is wrongly taken. This is a case, monks, where a monk ... ‘... to so and so’. While he is on the way, he hears that both have passed away. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him who sent it—it is wrongly allotted. If he allots to him the robe-material of the one who is deceased—of him to whom it was being sent—it is rightly allotted.”¹

BD.4.443

EIGHT CHANNELS FOR THE ACCRUING OF ROBES

Kd.8.32.1

“There are, monks, these eight channels¹ for the accruing of robe-material:² if he gives on a boundary,³ if he gives on agreement, if he gives with an announcement of almsfood, if he gives for an Order, if he gives for both Orders, if he gives for an Order which has spent the rains, if he gives having offered,⁴ if he gives to an individual.

“He gives on a boundary: it should be distributed to as many monks as are within the boundary.

“He gives on agreement: several residences come to be equal receivers; what is given in each residence is given for all.

“He gives with an announcement of almsfood: they say, ‘We give it there where the Order’s constant services are done’.

“He gives for an Order: it should be distributed among the Order that is present.

“He gives for both Orders: even if there are many monks (but only) one nun, a half should be given; even if there are many nuns (but only) one monk, a half should be given.

“He gives for an Order which has spent the rains: it should be distributed to as many monks as have spent the rains in that residence.

Vin.1.310

“He gives, having offered: conjeys or rice or solid foods or robes or lodgings or medicines.

“He gives to an individual: he says, ‘I am giving this robe-material to so and so’.”⁵

The Section on Robe-material: The Eighth

THIS IS ITS KEY

BD.4.444

Urban council of Rājagaha, having seen the courtesan at Vesālī, having gone back to Rājagaha made this known to the king. /

¹ Vinaya Texts ii.253, n.1 says “The reason of all this is, that if the sender (A) says to the messenger (B), ‘Give this robe to the sendee (C)’, the property in the robe does not pass; if A says to B, ‘I give this robe to C’, it does pass.” ¹ mātikā, as in Kd.7.1.7. ² cīvarassa uppādāyā. ³ sīmāya. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1136 enumerates fifteen kinds of boundaries.

⁴ ādissa. Buddhaghosa at Vin-a.1144 explains as ādisitvā paricchinditvā, having dedicated, having decided. ⁵ Vin-a.1145, “he may say, ‘I am giving this to you, honoured sir’, or ‘I am giving this to you and to your pupils’”.

Indeed Sālavatīka's child was Abhaya's son,¹ known as Jivaka because the prince asked, "Is he alive?" /
 Then he, having gone to Taxila, having studied, very famous,² dispelled a seven year old disease by treatment through the nose, /
 He removed the king's fistula with an ointment (the king saying),
 "Tend me and the women and the awakened one's Order".³ /
 And the merchant of Rājagaha, the tending on the twist in the bowels.
 He dispelled Pajjota's great disease by a drink of clarified butter. /
 And office, Siveyya(ka cloths), he lubricated the humours, the purging thirty times all together with three handfuls of lotuses. /
 He asked for the boon of good behaviour,⁴ and he accepted Siveyya(ka cloths), and the Truth-finder allowed the gift of householders' robes. /
 Many robes accrued in Rājagaha (and) in the country.
 A mantle, and likewise a silken one,⁵ a fleecy coverlet, worth half a kāsi, /
 And various kinds, satisfaction, they did not wait and they waited, first, afterwards, together, and an agreement, they conveyed it back, / Store-room, and unguarded, and likewise they turned away, heaped up, and a tumult. How is it to be divided? How is it to be given? /
 About his own and more than one portion. How is a share to be given?
 With dung and with cold water, to overflow, they did not know, /
 Pouring out, and a vessel, and in a dish, and on the ground, BD.4.445 white ants, in the middle, they wore out, on one side, and about being stiff, / Harsh, not cut up, laid out in strips, he saw the bundles, having thought it over the Sakyan sage allowed three robes. /
 About another that is extra, it accrued, and then it was torn, the four quarters, she asked for the boon to give cloths for the rains, / (Food for) the incoming, the outgoing, the sick, those who tend the sick and medicine, constant supply, and bathing cloths, abundant, too small, / Thick scabs, for the face, linen, complete, what is allotted, the least, it was made heavy, the corner, the thread frayed out, /
 They gave way, and they were not enough, extra supply, and many, Vin.1.311 in the Blind Men's Grove, through thoughtlessness, the rains alone, and during a favourable time, /
 Two brothers, in Rājagaha, Upananda, again in two, dysentery, the ill one and the two, on what belongs to the sick,⁶ /
 Naked one, kusa-grass, bark garment, wood shavings, hair blanket,

¹ atraja, usually meaning "own son". ² mahābhisa, variant reading mahābhañña. ³ bud-dhasaṅgha, in place of text's (Kd.8.1.15) buddhapamukha bhikkhusaṅgha. It is not clear to me whether the king was enjoining Jivaka to tend the Buddha himself or only the Order.

⁴ pakatatta vara. ⁵ kosika, replacing koseyyapāvāra of Kd.8.1.36. ⁶ Text and Siamese edition read gilāyanā. Sinhalese edition reads gilānakā, which I follow.

horse-hair, and owls' wings, black antelope, and stalks of swallow-wort, / Fibre, green and yellow, red, and about crimson, black, brownish-reddish-yellow, then borders not cut up, / Long, flowers, snakes' hoods, jackets, Tiriṭa-tree, turbans, not having accrued, he went away,¹ the Order is divided at all the times, /
 They give to a part, for the Order, the venerable Revata sent, he takes on trust, if he allots, eight channels for robe-material.

Vin.1.312

¹ pakkamati; text, Vin.1.307, pakkamanti.

9. THE MONKS FROM CAMPĀ (CAMPEYYA)

THE STORY OF THE MONK KASSAPAGOTTA

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Campā¹ on the bank of the Gaggarā lotus-pool.² Now at that time in the Kāsi country there was a village named Vāsabha;³ a monk called Kassapagotta⁴ was a resident there, he was attached to the tradition,⁵ he had made an effort⁶ so that well behaved monks who had not come should come, and so that well behaved monks who had come should live in comfort,⁷ and so that that residence should attain growth, expansion, maturity. Now at that time several monks walking on tour among the Kāsi people arrived at the village of Vāsabha. The monk Kassapagotta saw these monks coming in the distance; seeing them he made ready a seat,⁸ he put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand, having gone out to meet them he received their bowls and robes, he offered them drinking water, he made an effort in the matter of bathing (for them), he also made an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice.

Kd.9.1.1
BD.4.446

¹ Capital of Aṅga. Called Campā according to MN-a.iii.1 because of its number of campaka (white jasmine) trees. ² MN-a.iii.1=DN-a.i.279 say that it was excavated by a chief consort (Vin-a.1145 by a woman) called Gaggarā. ³ Mentioned also at Pv.iii.1.2. ⁴ This as the name of a monk occurs at AN.i.236 and SN.i.198. Dictionary of Pali Proper Names suggests that the Saṃyutta one is to be identified with either the Vinaya or the Aṅguttara Kassapagotta. N.B. that here and at AN.i.236 he is called “a (the) monk called Kassapagotta”, while at SN.i.198 he is called “the venerable Kassapagotta”. The name may be a clan name or a personal one. ⁵ tantibaddha, Vin-a.1145 saying “he was fettered by the tanti (tradition, sacred text, thread, string) of things to be done (duties, obligations) in that residence”. Cf. tantimaggā at Vin.1.156 (see above, BD.4.206). ⁶ ussukkaṃ āpanno, cf. ussukhaṃ akāsi below and ussukkaṃ karoti at Vin.4.280, Vin.4.301. ⁷ phāsu vihareyyuṃ. Phāsuvihāra is perhaps a technical expression, see Vin.1.92 (above BD.4.118, n.2). ⁸ As at Vin.4.231, Vin.4.310.

Then it occurred to these incoming monks: “Good indeed is this resident monk, your reverences, he makes an effort in the matter of bathing (for us), he also makes an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us). Come now, let us, your reverences, settle down just here at Vāsabha village.”
 Then these incoming monks settled down just there at Vāsabha village.

BD.4.447

Kd.9.1.2

Then it occurred to the monk Kassapagotta: “What was travel-weariness in these incoming monks has abated; further they, who did not know which alms-resorts¹ were appointed,² now know these alms-resorts which were appointed. It is indeed arduous to make an effort all one’s life among strangers,³ and hinting is not liked by the people.⁴ Suppose I were to make no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice?” He made no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice. Then it occurred to those incoming monks:

Vin.1.313

“Formerly, your reverences, this resident monk made an effort in the matter of bathing (for us), he also made an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us), but now he makes no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us). This resident monk, your reverences, is now corrupt. Come now, your reverences, let us suspend⁵ the resident monk.”

Kd.9.1.3

Then these incoming monks, having assembled together, spoke thus to the monk Kassapagotta: “Now, formerly you, your reverence, used to make an effort in the matter of bathing (for us), you also used to make an effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us), but now you make no effort in the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for us). You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence; do you see this offence?”

“There is no offence of mine, your reverences, that I can see.”

Then these incoming monks suspended the monk Kassapagotta for not seeing the offence.⁶ Then it occurred to the monk Kassapagotta: “Indeed I do not know this: whether this is an offence or is no offence, and whether I have fallen or have not fallen, and whether I am suspended or am not suspended, or whether it is by (an act) that is legitimate¹ or that is not legitimate, or by (one) that is reversible² or that is irreversible, or by (one) that is fit to stand³ or that is not fit to stand. Suppose that I, having gone to Campā, were to ask the Lord about this matter?”

BD.4.448

¹ gocara, cf. Vin.1.292 (above, BD.4.417). ² appakataññu, cf. BD.2.390, n.3. ³ parakulesu. Probably “strangers” because they were not the families who supported Kassapagotta himself, but he went to them for alms for the “incoming monks”. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.144 (BD.1.246), Vin.3.227 (BD.2.79). ⁵ ukkipāma. Ukkipati is not to “pronounce expulsion” as translated at Vinaya Texts ii.257. See BD.3.28, n.4. ⁶ Cf. Kd.11.25-30.

Kd.9.1.4

Then the monk Kassapagotta, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Campā; in due course he approached Campā and the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for lords to exchange friendly greetings with incoming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to the monk Kassapagotta: “I hope, monk, that things went well with you, I hope you had enough to support life, I hope you have come on the journey with but little fatigue. But where, monk, have you come from?”

“Things did go well with me, Lord, I had enough to support life, Lord, and I, Lord, came on the journey with but little fatigue.

Kd.9.1.5

“There is, Lord, in the Kāsi country a village called Vāsabha. I, Lord, a resident there, attached to the tradition, had made an effort so that well behaved monks who had not come should come, and so that well behaved monks who had come should live in comfort, and so that that residence should attain growth, expansion, maturity. Then, Lord, several monks walking on tour among the people of Kāsi arrived at the village of Vāsabha. I, Lord, saw those monks coming in the distance; seeing them I made ready a seat ... Then, Lord, it occurred to these incoming monks: ‘Good indeed is this resident monk ...’ ... Then, Lord, these incoming monks settled down, just there in Vāsabha village. Then, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘... Suppose I were to make no effort in ... the matter of conje, solid food, rice (for them)?’ So then I made no effort ... Then, Lord, these incoming monks, having assembled together, spoke thus to me: ‘Now, formerly, your reverence ... Do you see this offence?’ Then, Lord, these incoming monks suspended me for not seeing the offence. Then, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘Indeed I do not know ... Suppose that I, having gone to Campā, were to ask the Lord about this matter?’ That is why, Lord, I have come.”

Vin.1.314

BD.4.449

Kd.9.1.6

¹ dhammika; cf. Vin.4.284-Vin.4.285; cf. “definition” of dhammikakamma at Vin.4.152; and see below, BD.4.453 (adhammikakamma). Possibly kamma is omitted above unintentionally.

² Kuppa; cf. Vin.4.153. ³ ṭhānāraha. These three expressions, and their opposites occur at Vin.1.111 (above, BD.4.146).

“This is no offence, monk, this is not an offence; you are unfallen, you have not fallen; you are unsuspending, you were not suspended; you were suspended by a (formal) act that was not legitimate, that was reversible, that was not fit to stand. Go you, monk, settle down there at Vāsabha village.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the monk Kassapagotta having answered the Lord in assent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, keeping his right side towards him, set out for Vāsabha village.

Kd.9.1.7

Then these incoming monks became doubtful, they became remorseful. They thought: “Indeed it was unprofitable for us, indeed it was not profitable for us, indeed it was ill-gotten by us, indeed it was not well-gotten by us, that we suspended a pure¹ monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason. Come now, your reverences, having gone to Campā, let us confess the transgression as a transgression to the Lord.” Then these incoming monks, having packed away their lodgings, taking their bowls and robes, set out for Campā; in due course they approached Campā and the Lord. Having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for awakened ones, for lords to exchange friendly greetings with incoming monks. So the Lord spoke thus to those monks: “I hope, monks, that things went well with you, I hope you had enough to support life, I hope you have come on the journey with but little fatigue. But where, monks, have you come from?”

“Things have gone well with us, Lord, we had enough to support life, Lord, and we came on the journey. Lord, with but little fatigue. There is, Lord, in the Kāsi country a village called Vāsabha. We come from there, Lord.”

Kd.9.1.8

“Did you, monks, suspend a resident monk?”

“Yes, Lord.”

BD.4.450

“For what cause, monks, for what reason?”

“There was no cause, Lord, no reason.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

Vin.1.315

“It is not fitting, monks, it is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish men, suspend a pure monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason? It is not, foolish men, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ suddha in such a connection means that a monk has committed no offences, or that if he has he has confessed them, and so is “pure” to take his place at the Pātimokkha recitation; Cf. Vin.1.114 (above, BD.4.151), and epilogue to each class of rules in the Vibhaṅgas.

“Monks, a pure monk, not an offender, is not to be suspended without cause, without reason. Whoever should suspend one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.9.1.9

Then these monks, rising from their seats, having arranged their upper robes over one shoulder, having inclined their heads towards the Lord’s feet, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, a transgression has overcome us,¹ in that we, foolish, misguided, wrong that we were, suspended a pure monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason. Lord, let the Lord acknowledge our transgression as a transgression for the sake of restraint in the future.”

“Truly, monks, a transgression has overcome you, in that you, foolish, misguided, wrong that you were, suspended a pure monk, not an offender, without cause, without reason. But if you, monks, having seen the transgression as a transgression, confess according to the rule, we acknowledge it for you; for, monks, in the discipline for an ariyan this is growth: whoever having seen a transgression as a transgression confesses it according to the rule, he attains restraint in the future.”

ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE IN AN INCOMPLETE ASSEMBLY, ETC.

Now at that time at Campā monks carried out (formal) acts like these: they carried out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act not by rule, in a complete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act by a rule, in an incomplete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act, by what had the appearance of a rule, in an incomplete assembly, they carried out a (formal) act by what had the appearance of a rule, in a complete assembly; and one² suspended one and one suspended

Kd.9.2.1

BD.4.451

¹ Cf. Vin.4.18–Vin.4.19, and see BD.2.200, notes. ² I.e. an individual monk.

two and one suspended several and one suspended an Order, and two suspended one and two suspended two and two suspended several and two suspended an Order, and several suspended one and several suspended two and several suspended several and several suspended an Order, and an Order suspended an Order.¹

Kd.9.2.2

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks at Campā carry out (formal) acts like these? How can they carry out a (formal) act by rule, in an incomplete assembly? ... How can they carry out a (formal) act by what has the appearance of a rule, in a complete assembly? And how can one suspend one ... and how can an Order suspend an Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.1.316

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks at Campā carry out (formal) acts like these? Do they carry out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... and does an Order suspend an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.” The awakened one, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“Monks, it is not fitting in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is unworthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men carry out (formal) acts like these? How can they carry out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly? ... and how can an Order suspend an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.9.2.3

“If, monks, a (formal) act is carried out not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. A (formal) act carried out not by rule, in a complete assembly, is not a formal act and ought not to be carried out ... A (formal) act carried out by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out; and if one suspends one it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out ... and if an Order suspends an Order it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

BD.4.452

Kd.9.2.4

“Monks, there are these four (formal) acts: a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule in a complete assembly; a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because it lacks reference to rule,¹ because of the incompleteness² (of the assembly), is reversible, is not fit to stand. Monks, a (formal) act like this should not be carried out, and a (formal) act like this is not allowed by me. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in a complete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because it lacks reference to rule, is reversible, is not fit to stand ... and a (formal) act like this is not allowed by me. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in an incomplete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because of the incompleteness (of the assembly), is reversible ... is not allowed by me. Herein, monks, that which is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in a complete assembly, this (formal) act, monks, because it has reference to rule, because of the completeness (of the assembly), is irreversible, it is fit to stand. Monks, a (formal) act like this may be carried out and a (formal) act like this is allowed by me. Therefore, monks, thinking: ‘We will carry out a (formal) act like this, that is to say by rule, in a complete assembly’—it is thus that you must train yourselves.”

¹ See Vinaya Texts ii.262, n.

ON AN ACT WITHOUT A MOTION, ETC.

Now at that time the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts like these: they carried out a (formal) act not by rule in an incomplete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act not by rule in a complete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act by rule in an incomplete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act by what had the appearance of a rule in an incomplete assembly; they carried out a (formal) act by what had the appearance of a rule in a complete assembly; they also carried out a (formal) act for which a motion had not been furnished³ although a proclamation had been furnished;⁴

Kd.9.3.1

BD.4.453

¹ adhammattā, not “wickedness” as Critical Pali Dictionary gives. ² vaggattā.

³ ñattivipanna. ⁴ anussāvanasampanna, i.e. a proclamation of a kammavācā, the resolution. See S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.150.

Vin.1.317 they also carried out a (formal) act for which a proclamation had not been furnished although a motion had been furnished; they also carried out a (formal) act for which a motion had not been furnished and for which a proclamation had not been furnished; they also carried out a (formal) act that was against the rule; they also carried out a (formal) act that was against discipline;¹ they also carried out a (formal) act that was against the Teacher's instruction;² they also carried out a (formal) act that had been protested against,³ that was not legitimate, reversible, not fit to stand. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

“How can this group of six monks carry out (formal) acts like these? How can they carry out a (formal) act not by rule in an incomplete assembly? ... How can they carry out a (formal) act that has been protested against, that is not legitimate,⁴ reversible, not fit to stand?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts like these; that they carried out a (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... a (formal) act that has been protested against, that is not legitimate, reversible, not fit to stand?”

Kd.9.3.2 “It is true, Lord.” ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

BD.4.454 “Monks, a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, in an incomplete assembly, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out ... A (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of a rule in a complete assembly is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act for which a motion is not furnished, although a proclamation is furnished, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act for which a proclamation is furnished, although a motion is not furnished, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act for which a motion is not furnished and for which a proclamation is not furnished, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act carried out against the rule ... against the discipline ... against the Teacher's instruction is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. Monks, a (formal) act that has been protested against, that is not legitimate, reversible, not fit to stand, is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

¹ Vin-a.1146 says that discipline here means “reproving, making (someone) remember”, i.e. giving the person against whom one is about to carry out a formal act a chance to confess his offence. ² Vin-a.1146 says that this provides for a motion and a proclamation.

³ paṭikuṭṭhakata. Vin-a.1146 says that it was protested against (paṭikuṭṭha) but was also carried out (kata)—it was carried out in spite of the protests of others. See paṭikkosati at beginning of Bu-Pc.79, where the monks protest when a formal act is being carried out.

⁴ Omitted in Oldenberg's text, but contained in the Sinhalese edition.

“Monks, there are these six (formal) acts: a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule, a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule in an incomplete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly, a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly.

Kd.9.3.3

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule? If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution,¹ one carries out the (formal) act by means of the one motion but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, one carries out the (formal) act by means of two motions but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, one carries out the (formal) act by means of the one resolution but does not propose the motion, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, one carries out the (formal) act by means of two resolutions but does not propose the motion, it is a (formal) act carried out not by rule.

Kd.9.3.4

BD.4.455

“If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times,² one carries out the (formal) act by means of one motion but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times, one carries out the (formal) act by means of two motions ... three motions ... four motions but does not proclaim the resolution, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule. If, monks, when it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times, one carries out the (formal) act by means of one proclamation ... two proclamations ... three proclamations ... four proclamations, but does not propose the motion, then it is a (formal) act carried out not by rule. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) not by rule.

Vin.1.318

¹ ñattidutiya. This is a formal act in two parts, the motion, ñatti, being the first; the second part, dutiya, which consists of one proclamation, has to be made before the decision of an Order can be arrived at. ² ñatticatuttha, a formal act in four parts: the motion, and then the resolution, but this has to be proclaimed not once, but three times, have no neat expressions for such procedure.

Kd.9.3.5

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act¹ are not come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave of absence is not sent, if those who are present protest, it is a (formal) act in an incomplete assembly. If, monks, ... as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act are come, if the leave for absence ... is not sent, if those who are present protest, it is a (formal) act in an incomplete assembly. If, monks, ... as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act are come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave for absence is sent, if those who are present protest, it is a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution put three times ... (the same three cases as above are repeated here) ... it is a (formal) act in an incomplete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) in an incomplete assembly.

Kd.9.3.6

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and as many monks as are (entitled to take part in the formal) act are come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave for absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, it is a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly.

BD.4.456

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times ... (the same three cases as above are repeated here) ... it is a (formal)

¹ kammappatta.

act (carried out) in a complete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) in a complete assembly.

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in a formal) act have not come, if the leave for absence of those fit (to declare their) leave for absence is not sent, if those who are present protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

Kd.9.3.7

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence ... is not sent, if those who are present protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave for absence of those (fit to declare) leave for absence is sent, if those who are present protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

Vin.1.319

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times ... (the same three cases as above are repeated here) ... This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

Kd.9.3.8

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and one first proclaims the resolution and afterwards proposes the motion, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence of those fit (to declare their) leave of absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly.

BD.4.457

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times ... (the same as above is repeated here) ... it is a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of the rule in a complete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly.

Kd.9.3.9

“And what, monks, is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly? If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution, and if one first proposes the motion and after one resolution carries out the (formal) act, if as many monks are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence of those fit (to declare their) leave of absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule in a complete assembly.

“If, monks, it is a (formal) act with a motion and a resolution to be put three times, and if one first proposes the motion and after (having put) the resolution three times, carries out the (formal) act, if as many monks as are entitled (to take part in the formal) act have come, if the leave of absence of those who are fit (to declare their) leave of absence is sent, if those who are present do not protest, then it is a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in a complete assembly. This, monks, is called a (formal) act (carried out) by rule, in a complete assembly.¹

CARRYING OUT BY A FOURFOLD ORDER, ETC.

Kd.9.4.1

“Five (kinds of) Orders: a fourfold Order of monks, a fivefold Order of monks, a tenfold Order of monks, a twentyfold Order of monks, an Order of monks that is more than twenty-fold. In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being fourfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete, excepting three (formal) acts: ordination,² invitation,³ rehabilitation.⁴ In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being fivefold,

BD.4.458

¹ Oldenberg’s edition omits this last sentence. It is contained, rightly, in the Sinhalese edition. ² See Vin.1.58. At Vin.4.130 if a monk wants to ordain an individual and looks about for a group, he incurs an offence of wrong-doing. ³ See Kd.4.5.2 where monks, if they number only four, are allowed to invite one another, but where they are five (Kd.4.5.1) they should invite in an Order. ⁴ See BD.3.28, n.4, and also BD.1.328.

it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete, excepting two (formal) acts: ordination in the middle districts,¹ rehabilitation. In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being tenfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete, excepting one (formal) act: rehabilitation. In the case, monks of an Order of monks being twentyfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete. In the case, monks, of an Order of monks being more than twentyfold, it is entitled (to take part) in all (formal) acts, if by rule, if it is complete.

Vin.1.320

CARRYING OUT BY A FOURFOLD (ORDER)

“If, monks, a fourfold Order, carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the fourth (member), then it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. If, monks, a fourfold Order, carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a probationer as the fourth (member) ... with a novice ... with a woman novice ... with a disavower of the training² ... with one who has committed an extreme offence ... with one who is suspended for not seeing an offence ... with one who is suspended for not making amends for an offence ... with one who is suspended for not giving up a wrong view ... with a eunuch ... with one living in communion as it were by theft³ ... with one who has gone over to a sect⁴ ... with an animal ... with a matricide ... with a parricide ... with a slayer of ones perfected ... with a seducer of a nun ... with a schismatic ... with a shedder of (a tathāgata’s) blood ... with a hermaphrodite ... with one belonging to a different communion ... with one staying in a different boundary ... with one standing above the ground⁵ by psychic potency ... with one against whom an Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the fourth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

Kd.9.4.2

BD.4.459

¹ In bordering districts a “group” (i.e. here four monks) may ordain with an expert on Vinaya as the fifth officiating monk, Vin.1.197. ² For the following sequence of terms, down to hermaphrodite, cf. Vin.1.121, Vin.1.135, Vin.1.167, and above, BD.4.160. ³ At Vin.1.86 not to be ordained. ⁴ At Vin.1.86 not to be ordained. ⁵ On vehāsa, as “above the ground”, see BD.1.79, n.5.

CARRYING OUT BY A FIVEFOLD (ORDER)

Kd.9.4.3 “If, monks, a fivefold (Order), carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the fifth (member) ... with one against whom the Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the fifth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

CARRYING OUT BY A TENFOLD (ORDER)

Kd.9.4.4 “If, monks, a tenfold (Order), carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the tenth (member) ... with one against whom the Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the tenth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

CARRYING OUT BY A TWENTYFOLD (ORDER)

Kd.9.4.5 “If, monks, a twentyfold Order, carrying out a (formal) act, should carry out the (formal) act with a nun as the twentieth (member) ... with one against whom the Order is carrying out a (formal) act as the twentieth (member), it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

ON ONE ON PROBATION, ETC.

Kd.9.4.6 “If, monks, one on probation as the fourth (member) should grant probation,¹ should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

“If, monks, one deserving to be sent back to the beginning as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) and ought not to be carried out.

“If, monks, one deserving mānatta as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member) should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out. “If, monks, one undergoing mānatta as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

¹ All these constitute part of the penalty for committing a Sāṅghadisesa offence. Those undergoing the penalty cannot inflict it on others, nor can they rehabilitate them when the penalty is duly over. Cf. Kd.12.1.4.

Vin.1.321
BD.4.460

“If, monks, one deserving rehabilitation as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta, if he, as the twentieth (member), should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.

Kd.9.4.7

“Monks, the protest of some (people) in the midst of an Order is valid, of others is not valid. And, monks, of whom is a protest in the midst of an Order not valid? Monks, the protest of a nun in the midst of an Order is not valid ... of a probationer ... of a novice ... of a woman novice ... of a disavower of the training ... of one who has committed an extreme offence ... of one who is mad ... of one who is unhinged ... of one who is in pain ... of one who is suspended for not seeing an offence¹ ... of one against whom an Order is carrying out a (formal) act. Monks, a protest of these in the midst of an Order is not valid.

Kd.9.4.8

“And, monks, of whom is a protest in the midst of an Order valid? Monks, a protest of a regular² monk in the midst of an Order is valid if he belongs to the same communion, if he is staying within the same boundary, even if he only informs the monk next (to him).³ Monks, his protest in the midst of an Order is valid.

ON TWO SENT AWAY, ETC.

“There are, monks, these two (kinds of) being sent away.⁴ There is, monks, the individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away,⁵ but if an

Kd.9.4.9

¹ Same list as that at Kd.9.4.2. ² pakatatta. Vin-a.1147 says he is one who has not fallen from moral habit and has not committed a pārajika offence. Cf. Vin.2.6, Vin.2.32f. ³ ānantarikassāpi bhikkhuno viññāpentassa. Vin-a.1147 says, “if he immediately sits down himself” (in the assembly). Cf. the anantarikā nun at Vin.4.234, i.e. the next nun in an almsfood procession. ⁴ nissāraṇā. Cf. Nuns’ Saṅghādīsesas, and see BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxvi. Vin-a.1147 explains that the Order sends away, nissāreti, by an act of banishment, censure and so on. ⁵ appatto nissāraṇaṃ; he is not guilty enough to be sent away.

Order sends him away he may be rightly sent away, or he may be wrongly sent away. And which, monks, is an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, but who, if an Order sends him away, is wrongly sent away? Now this is a case, monks, where there is a pure monk, not an offender; if the Order sends him away, he is wrongly sent away. This, monks, is called an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, and who, if the Order sends him away, is wrongly sent away. And which, monks, is an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, but who, if an Order sends him away, is rightly sent away? Now this is a case, monks, where there is an ignorant, inexperienced monk, full of offences, not rid of them,¹ one who lives in company with householders in unbecoming association with householders; if an Order sends him away, he is rightly sent away. This, monks, is called an individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away, but who, if the Order sends him away, is rightly sent away.

“There are, monks, these two (kinds of) restoration.² There is, monks, the individual who has not arrived at the point of restoration, but if an Order restores him, he may be rightly restored, or he may be wrongly restored. And which, monks, is the individual who has not arrived at the point of restoration, but who, if an Order restores him, is wrongly restored? A eunuch,³ monks, does not arrive⁴ at the point of restoration; if the Order restores him, he is wrongly restored. Monks, one living in communion, as it were by theft, ... one gone over to a sect ... an animal ... a matricide ... a parricide ... a slayer of one perfected ... a seducer of a nun ... a schismatic ... a shedder of (a Truthfinder’s) blood ... a hermaphrodite does not arrive at the point of restoration; if an Order restores him, he is wrongly restored. These, monks, are called individuals who do not arrive at the point of restoration, and who, if the Order restores them, are wrongly restored.

“And which, monks, is an individual who has not arrived at the point of restoration, and who if an Order restores him, is rightly restored? One with his hands cut off,¹ monks, who has not arrived at the point of restoration, if an Order restores him, is rightly restored. Monks, one with his feet cut off ... one with his hands and feet cut off ... his ears cut off ... his nose cut off ... his ears and nose cut off ... his fingers cut off ... his nails cut off ... one with his tendons cut ... one who has webbed hands ... a hunchback ... a dwarf ... one who had goitre ... one who has been branded ... one who has been scourged ... one who has been written about ... one who has elephantiasis ... one who is badly ill ... one who has disgraced an assembly (by some deformity) ... one who is blind ... one with a crooked limb ... one who is lame ... one paralysed down one side ... a cripple ... one weak through old age ... one who is blind from birth ... one who is dumb ... one who is deaf ... one who is blind and dumb ... one who is blind and deaf ... one who is deaf and dumb ... one who is blind and deaf and dumb who has not arrived at the point of restoration, if an Order restores him, is rightly restored. These, monks, are called individuals who have not arrived at the point of restoration, and who, if an Order restores them, are rightly restored.

¹ an-apadāna. Vin-a.1148 explains apadāna by pariccheda, and says that the meaning of anapadāna is “without the pariccheda of offences”. Cf. below. Kd.9.7.6. ² osāraṇā, see BD.3.28, n.4. ³ Same list recurs above, Kd.9.4.2. ⁴ Again, appatta; but none of these may be ordained, or, if ordained, they should be expelled, nāseti. They therefore cannot be restored, not being in a position to obtain restoration.

The First Portion for Repeating: that on Vāsabha village

ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE, ETC.

“This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk’s that should be seen.² If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing the offence,³ it is not a legally valid (formal) act. This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Make amends for this offence,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverences, an offence of mine for which I should make amends,’ and if the Order suspends him for not

Vin.1.323

BD.4.463

¹ Same list at Vin.1.91, where such people may not “go forth”. See above, BD.4.116 for notes.

² I.e. by him. ³ Cf. Kd.11.25-Kd.11.30.

making amends for the offence,¹ it is not a legally valid (formal) act. This is a case, monks, where there is not a wrong view of a monk's that should be given up.² If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'This is a wrong view of yours, your reverence. Give up this wrong view,' and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence, a wrong view of mine that I should give up,' and if the Order suspends him for not giving up the wrong view,³ it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

Kd.9.5.2

"This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk's that should be seen, not an offence for which amends should be made. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence,' and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see; there is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

Kd.9.5.3

"This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk's that should be seen, not a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view'; and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see; there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

Kd.9.5.4

"This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk's for which amends should be made, there is not a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence; make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours, give up this wrong view,' and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s) an offence of mine for which I should make amends; there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,' and if the Order suspends him for not making amends or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

BD.4.464

Kd.9.5.5

¹ Cf. Kd.11.31. ² paṭinissajjetā = paṭinissajjītabbā, Vin-a.1147. ³ Cf. Kd.11.32-Kd.11.35.

“This is a case, monks, where there is not an offence of a monk’s that should be seen, there is not an offence for which amends should be made, there is not a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see; there is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends; there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

Vin.1.324

Kd.9.5.6

“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?’ and if he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverence(s), I see it,’ and if the Order suspends him for not seeing the offence, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Make amends for this offence,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverence(s), I will make amends,’ and if the Order suspends him for not making amends for the offence, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

“This is a case, monks, where there is a wrong view of a monk’s that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘This, your reverence, is a wrong view of yours. Give up this wrong view,’ and if he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverence(s), I will give it up,’ and if the Order suspends him for not giving up the wrong view, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

BD.4.465

Kd.9.5.7

“This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made ... where there is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence of a monk's which should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view,' and if he speaks thus: 'Yes, your reverence(s), I see, yes, I will make amends, yes, I will give it up,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends or for not giving up, it is not a legally valid (formal) act.

Kd.9.5.8

"This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk's that should be seen. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?' and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine that I can see,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing, it is a legally valid (formal) act.

Vin.1.325

"This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk's for which amends should be made ... If he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends,' and if the Order suspends him for not making amends, it is a legally valid (formal) act.

"This is a case, monks, where there is a wrong view of a monk's that should be given up ... If he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), a wrong view of mine, that should be given up,' and if the Order suspends him for not giving up the wrong view, it is a legally valid (formal) act.

Kd.9.5.9

BD.4.466

"This is a case, monks, where there is an offence of a monk's that should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made ... where there is an offence that should be seen, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up ... where there is an offence that should be seen, where there is an offence for which amends should be made, where there is a wrong view that should be given up. If an Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence? Make amends for this offence. This is a wrong view of yours; give up this wrong view,' and if he speaks thus: 'There is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine which I should see, there is not, your reverence(s), an offence of mine for which I should make amends, there is not a wrong view of mine that I should give up,' and if the Order suspends him for not seeing or for not making amends or for not giving up, it is a legally valid (formal) act.”

ON THE QUESTIONS OF UPĀLI

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Does an Order, Lord, that is complete carry out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of¹ (an accused monk) if he is absent? Lord, is that a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”²

Kd.9.6.1

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

Kd.9.6.2

“Does an Order, Lord, that is complete carry out a (formal) act that should be carried out by the interrogation³ (of an accused monk) if there is no interrogation? Does it carry out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the acknowledgement⁴ (of an accused monk) if there is no acknowledgement? Does it give a verdict of past insanity⁵ to one who merits a verdict of innocence?⁶ Does it carry out a (formal) act for specific depravity⁷ against one who merits a verdict of past insanity? Does it carry out a (formal) act of censure⁸ against one who merits a (formal) act for specific depravity? Does it carry out a (formal) act of placing under guidance for one who merits a (formal) act of censure? Does it carry out a (formal) act of banishment against one who merits a (formal) act of placing under guidance? Does it

BD.4.467

Vin.1.326

¹ sammukhākaraṇīyaṃ. Cf. Vin.2.93. ² dhammakamma vinayakamma and their opposites (adhamma-, avinaya-) occur at AN.i.74, AN.i.75. AN-a.ii.149 explains adhamma- and avinaya- as uddhamma and ubbinaya, where ud- means “off” and therefore “wrong” as in ummagga.

³ paṭipucchākaraṇīyaṃ. ⁴ paṭiññāya. Cf. BD.3.153, n.5; AN.i.99; MN.ii.248. ⁵ amūḷhavinaya. See BD.3.153, n.5; AN.i.99; MN.ii.248. ⁶ sativinayārahassa. On sativinaya see BD.3.153, n.3; MN.ii.247. Word occurs at AN.i.99; GS.i.85 translates “proceedings about mindfulness”.

⁷ tassapāpiyyasikā. Cf. BD.3.154, n.1; AN.i.99; MN.ii.249, Vin.1.85f. ⁸ For this and the four following formal acts, cf. Vin.1.49 (above, BD.4.66) and AN.i.99.

carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for one who merits a (formal) act of banishment? Does it carry out a (formal) act of suspension against one who merits a (formal) act of reconciliation? Does it grant probation¹ to one who merits a (formal) act of suspension? Does it send back to the beginning one who merits probation? Does it inflict mānatta on one who merits being sent back to the beginning? Does it rehabilitate one who merits mānatta? Does it ordain one who merits rehabilitation? Is this a legally valid (formal) act, Lord, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

Kd.9.6.3

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of (an accused monk) if he is absent—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far.² Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act which should be carried out on the interrogation (of an accused monk) if there is no interrogation ... carries out a (formed) act which should be carried out with the acknowledgement (of an accused monk) if there is no acknowledgement ... ordains one meriting rehabilitation—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act”, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far.”

BD.4.468

Kd.9.6.4

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of (an accused monk) when he is present, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the interrogation (of an accused monk) when there is interrogation, if it carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the acknowledgement of (an accused monk) when there is his acknowledgement, if it gives a verdict of innocence to one who merits a verdict of innocence ... if it rehabilitates one who merits rehabilitation, if it ordains one who merits ordination, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

¹ This and the next three (not ordination) occur at AN.i.99. They are each part of the penalty incurred for a Saṅghādisesa offence. ² sātisāra, as at Vin.1.55 (above, BD.4.71).

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out in the presence of (an accused monk) when he is present—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act that should be carried out on the interrogation (of an accused monk) when there is interrogation ... ordains one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far.”

Kd.9.6.5

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of innocence, gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

BD.4.469

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of past insanity, if it gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity; if it carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity, if it carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a (formal) act of censure; if it carries out a (formal) act of placing under guidance against one meriting a (formal) act of censure, if it carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a (formal) act of placing under guidance; if it carries out a (formal) act of banishment against one meriting a (formal) act of placing under guidance, if it carries out a (formal) act of placing under guidance against one meriting a (formal) act of banishment; if it carries out a (formal) act of reconciliation against one meriting a (formal) act of banishment, if it carries out a (formal) act of banishment against one meriting a (formal) act of reconciliation; if it carries out a (formal) act of suspension against one meriting a (formal) act of reconciliation, if it carries out a (formal) act of reconciliation against one meriting a (formal) act of suspension; if it grants probation to one meriting a (formal) act of suspension, if it carries out a (formal) act of suspension against one meriting probation; if it sends back to the beginning one meriting probation, if it grants probation to one meriting being sent back to the beginning; if it inflicts mānatta on one meriting being sent back to the beginning, if it sends back to the beginning one meriting mānatta; if it rehabilitates one meriting mānatta, if it inflicts mānatta on one meriting rehabilitation; if it ordains one meriting rehabilitation, if it rehabilitates one meriting ordination, is that, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?

Vin.1.327

Kd.9.6.6

“This, Upāli, is not a legally valid (formal) act, it is not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of innocence, gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of past insanity—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of past insanity ... that rehabilitates one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, Upāli, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far.”

BD.4.470

Kd.9.6.7

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of innocence, if it gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act;”

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act.”

“If, Lord, an Order that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, if it carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity ... if it rehabilitates one meriting rehabilitation, if it ordains one meriting ordination—is this, Lord, a legally valid (formal) act, is it a disciplinarily valid (formal) act?”

Kd.9.6.8

“This, Upāli, is a legally valid (formal) act, it is a disciplinarily valid (formal) act. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of innocence, gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far. Whatever Order, Upāli, that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of past insanity, ... ordains one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, Upāli, a legally valid (formal) act, a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that does not go too far.”

Vin.1.328

Kd.9.6.9

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Whatever Order, monks, that is complete gives a verdict of past insanity to one meriting a verdict of innocence—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, monks, that is complete, carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of innocence, carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a verdict of innocence¹ ... ordains one meriting a verdict of innocence—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, monks, that is complete carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against one meriting a verdict of past insanity ... carries out a (formal) act of censure ... ordains one meriting a verdict of past insanity, gives a verdict of innocence to one meriting a verdict of past insanity—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that goes too far. Whatever Order, monks, that is complete, carries out a (formal) act of censure against one meriting a (formal) act for specific depravity ... rehabilitates one meriting ordination—it thus comes to be, monks, not a legally valid (formal) act, not a disciplinarily valid (formal) act, and thus the Order comes to be one that ¹ As explained at Vinaya Texts ii.279, n.2, in this paragraph all possible combinations of two different formal acts are arranged in this way: first, verdict of innocence is combined with verdict of past insanity and all the rest, down to ordination; then verdict of past insanity with all terms from specific depravity down to innocence, and so on; the whole series ends thus with the combination of meriting ordination with all terms from verdict of innocence down to rehabilitation.

BD.4.471

goes too far.”

The Second Portion for Repeating: that on Upāli's Questions

ON AN ACT OF CENSURE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife, a maker of dispute, a maker of contention, a maker of brawls, a maker of legal questions in an Order.¹ It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in the Order. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him not by rule, in a complete assembly. He then goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, not by rule, in a complete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, by rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly.

BD.4.472

Vin.1.329

Kd.9.7.2

¹ As at Vin.4.45, Vin.4.230. See BD.3.191, n.3 for further references.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in an Order. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in the Order. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, was carried out against this monk, not by rule, in a complete assembly. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He then goes from that residence ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly. He then goes from that residence ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of a rule, in a complete assembly. He then goes from that residence ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly.

Kd.9.7.3

“This is a case, monks, ... (as above) ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly ... not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly.

BD.4.473

Kd.9.7.4

“This is a case, monks, ... (as above) ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly, by rule, in an incomplete assembly.

Kd.9.7.5

“This is a case, monks, ... (as above) ... they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of a rule, in an incomplete assembly.

Vin.1.330

ON AN ACT OF GUIDANCE

“This is a case, monks, where an ignorant, inexperienced monk,¹ full of offences, not rid of them, lives in company with householders in unbecoming association with householders. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, ignorant, inexperienced, ... in unbecoming association with householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him’; and these carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence ... (as above in Kd.9.7.1) ... not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out as it is below.²

Kd.9.7.6

ON AN ACT OF BANISHMENT

Kd.9.7.7

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is one who brings families into disrepute and is of depraved conduct.³ It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, ... is of depraved conduct. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... (as in Kd.9.7.6) ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

BD.4.474

ON AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION

Kd.9.7.8

“This is a case, monks, where a monk reviles, abuses⁴ householders. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, reviles, abuses householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him’; and

¹ Cf. above, Kd.9.4.9. ² I.e. in Kd.9.7.1-Kd.9.7.5. The “wheel”, cakka, series, cycle, is the “arrangement of five categories on which this exposition is based ...” (as said in note at Vinaya Texts ii.281). “Below” stands for our “above”, from the fact that the palm-leaf manuscripts are arranged with the first leaf at the bottom of the pile of leaves of which any work or “book” is made up. ³ As in Bu-Ss.13, and see below, Kd.9.7.18. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.184; Vin.4.309; they carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... (as in Kd.9.7.6) ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

BD.3.344.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence.¹ It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not seeing the offence’; and they carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not seeing the offence, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

Kd.9.7.9

ON AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS FOR AN OFFENCE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into an offence, does not want to make amends for the offence.² It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, having fallen into an offence, does not want to make amends for the offence. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not making amends for the offence’; and they carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not making amends for the offence, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.

Kd.9.7.10

Vin.1.331

¹ Cf. Kd.11.25.1–Kd.11.25.30. ² Cf. Kd.11.31.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING

Kd.9.7.11 “This is a case, monks, where a monk does not want to give up a wrong view. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, does not want to give up a wrong view. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not giving up a wrong view’; and they carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not giving up a wrong view, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. The cycle should be worked out.”

BD.4.475

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF CENSURE

Kd.9.7.12 “This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by the Order, conducts himself properly,¹ is subdued, mends his ways,² and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order is conducting himself properly, is subdued, is mending his ways. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure³ against him’; and they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. He goes from that residence to another residence. It occurs to the monks there: ‘A (formal) act of censure, your reverences, against this monk was revoked by an Order, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure against him’; and they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly.”

Kd.9.7.13

“This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by an Order conducts himself properly, is subdued, mends his ways, and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by the Order, conducts himself properly ... asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure against him and they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly ... (as in Kd.9.7.2–Kd.9.7.5) ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly.

¹ “Proper conduct” given at Kd.11.5.1. ² Cf. Vin.1.49 (above, BD.4.66). ³ Cf. Kd.11.6.2–Kd.11.8.2.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF GUIDANCE

“This is a case, monks, where a monk for whom a (formal) act of guidance¹ has been carried out by an Order, conducts himself properly, is subdued, mends his ways, and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance ... (as in Kd.9.7.12, Kd.9.7.13)

Kd.9.7.14
BD.4.476

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF BANISHMENT

“This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of banishment ...²

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION

... a (formal) act of reconciliation ...³

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

... a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence ...⁴

¹ See Kd.11.9.1–Kd.12.2. ² See Kd.11.13.1–Kd.11.17.2. ³ See Kd.11.18.5–Kd.11.24.1. ⁴ See Kd.11.25.1–Kd.11.30.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS FOR AN OFFENCE

...a (formal) act of suspension for not making amends for an offence ...¹

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING

Vin.1.332 ... a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view ...² has been carried out by an Order.

The cycle should be worked out.

ON AN ACT OF CENSURE FOR DISPUTES

Kd.9.7.15 “This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife, a maker of disputes a maker of contention, a maker of brawls, a maker of legal questions in the Order. It then occurs to monks: ‘This monk, your reverences, is a maker of ... legal questions in the Order. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of censure against him’; and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. In this case the Order disputes saying: ‘A (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act not by rule, in a complete assembly; a (formal) act by rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly; a (formal) act by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly; the (formal) act is not carried out, the (formal) act is badly carried out, the (formal) act should be carried out again’³ Herein, monks, those monks who speak thus: ‘A (formal) act not by rule, in an incomplete assembly’, and those monks who speak thus: ‘The (formal) act is not carried out, the (formal) act is badly carried out, the (formal) act should be carried out again’, these monks are here speakers of what is right.⁴

Kd.9.7.16 “This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife ... and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly. In this case the Order disputes saying: ... Herein, monks, those monks who speak thus: 'A (formal) act not by rule, in a complete assembly' and those monks who speak thus: 'The (formal) act is not carried out, the (formal) act is badly carried out, the (formal) act should be carried out again these monks are here speakers of what is right. This is a case, monks, where a monk is a maker of strife ... and they carry out a (formal) act of censure against him by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... these monks are here speakers of what is right.

¹ See Kd.11.31. ² See Kd.11.32-Kd.11.35. ³ As at Vin.4.126 \(BD 3,5\). ⁴ dhammavādino.

BD.4.477

ON AN ACT OF GUIDANCE FOR DISPUTES

"This is a case, monks, where an ignorant, inexperienced monk, full of offences, not rid of them, lives in company with householders in unbecoming association with householders. It then occurs to monks: 'This monk, your reverences, ignorant, inexperienced, lives ... with householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him'; and they carry out a (formal) act of guidance for him, not by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly. In this case the Order disputes ... these monks are here speakers of what is right. These five occasions in brief.

Kd.9.7.17

ON AN ACT OF BANISHMENT FOR DISPUTES

"This is a case, monks, where a monk brings families into disrepute and is of depraved conduct.¹ It then occurs to monks: '... let us carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him ... These five, occasions in brief.

Kd.9.7.18

¹ Cf. Bu-Ss.13, and above Kd.9.7.7.

ON AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION FOR DISPUTES

“This is a case, monks, where a monk reviles, abuses householders. It then occurs to monks: ‘... let us carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him’
 Vin.1.333 ... These five occasions in brief.

ON AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE FOR DISPUTES

“This is a case, monks, where a monk having fallen into an offence does not want to see the offence ...

ON AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS FOR AN OFFENCE FOR DISPUTES

... having fallen into an offence does not want to make amends for the offence ...

ON AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING FOR DISPUTES

... does not want to give up a wrong view. It then occurs to monks: ‘... let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension against him for not giving up the wrong view’ ... These five occasions in brief.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF CENSURE

Kd.9.7.19
 BD.4.478

“This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by an Order conducts himself properly, is subdued, mends his ways, and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. It then occurs to monks: “This monk, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by the Order, conducts himself properly ... and asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. Come, let us revoke the (formal) act of censure against him', and these revoke the (formal) act of censure against him not by rule, in an incomplete assembly. In this case the Order disputes ... these monks here are speakers of what is right. This is a case, monks, where a monk against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out by an Order, conducts himself properly ... they revoke the (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule, in a complete assembly ... by rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly ... by what has the appearance of rule, in a complete assembly ... these monks are here speakers of what is right.

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF GUIDANCE

"This is a case, monks, where a monk for whom a (formal) act of guidance has been carried out by an Order ...

Kd.9.7.20

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF BANISHMENT

... of banishment ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF RECONCILIATION

... of reconciliation ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING FOR AN OFFENCE

... of suspension for not seeing an offence ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS FOR AN OFFENCE

... of suspension for not making amends for an offence ...

ON REVOKING AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING

... of suspension for not giving up a wrong view, has been carried out by an Order, conducts himself properly ... these monks are here speakers of what is right.”

The Ninth Section: that on (the monks) at Campā

IN THIS SECTION THERE ARE THIRTY-SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

The Lord was at Campā, case at Vāsabha village, he made an effort for in-coming monks in regard to what they wanted,¹ /
Having known “They are appointed” henceforth he made no effort,
Thinking “Suspended, one does not carry out”, he went to the Victor, /
A (formal) act not by rule,
in an incomplete assembly,
by rule in a complete assembly,
and a (formal) act by rule in an incomplete assembly, by what has the appearance of rule in an incomplete assembly, /
By what has the appearance of rule in a complete assembly, one suspends one,
and one two, several, one suspends an Order, /
Then two, then several, and an Order suspends an Order, the distinguished, omniscient one, having heard, objects, saying, “It is not the rule”, /
Whatever (formal) act for which the motion is not furnished
(although) a proclamation is furnished
And that for which the proclamation is not furnished although it is furnished with a motion, /
If neither is furnished and it is also not by rule, against the teacher’s (instruction), protested against, reversible, not fit to stand, /

Vin.1.334
BD.4.479

¹ Oldenberg’s text icchitabbake; Sinhalese edition -ko.

Not by rule, in an incomplete assembly—these two,
 but just this: by rule, in a complete assembly is allowed by the Truthfinder. / Fourfold, fivefold, tenfold and twenty and more than twentyfold—an Order is thus of five kinds. /
 Having excluded ordination and whatever (formal) act for Invitation (there is) together with the (formal) act of rehabilitation—the carrying out is by means of a fourfold Order, /
 Excluding two (formal) acts:
 ordination in the middle districts
 (and) rehabilitation—
 the carrying out is by means of a fivefold Order. / Excluding rehabilitation alone—
 these monks are tenfold,
 an Order of twenty carries out all (formal) acts, it is the carrier out of everything. /
 Nun, probationer and novice, woman novice, disavower, (one who has committed) an extreme offence, one suspended for not seeing an offence, /
 For not making amends for,
 (for not giving up) a wrong view, eunuch,
 one living in communion as it were by theft,
 (one gone over to) a sect, an animal, slayer of mother, of father, /
 Of one perfected, seducer of a nun, schismatic, shedder of (a Truthfinder's) blood,
 hermaphrodite, one belonging to a different communion,
 staying within a different boundary,
 (standing above the ground) by psychic power, /
 One against whom an Order is carrying out a (formal) act—these come to be twenty-four
 (and) they are objected to by the Awakened One for they are not completers of a group./
 If one undergoing probation should as the fourth member grant probation or should rehabilitate one (sent back to) the beginning or (undergoing) mānatta it is not a (formal) act and should not be carried out. /
 So too, if one deserving the beginning or mānatta (should rehabilitate) one deserving rehabilitation—this is not in accordance with a (formal) act—the five are explained by the All-awakened One. /

Nun, probationer, novice, woman novice, disavower, (one who has committed) an extreme (offence), who is mad, unhinged, in pain, (suspended) for not seeing, /
 For not making amends for, for (not giving up) a wrong view, and a eunuch and a hermaphrodite, one belonging to a different communion (or) boundary (or standing) above the ground (by psychic power) and one against whom a (formal) act is being carried out, /
 Vin.1.335 Of these eighteen the protest is not valid, the protest is valid of a regular monk. /
 A pure one may be wrongly sent away, and an ignorant one rightly sent away,
 eunuch, one living in communion as it were by theft, going over (to a sect), an animal, / (Slayer) of mother, of father, of one perfected, seducer (of a nun), schismatic of the Order,
 shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood and also a hermaphrodite and whichever /
 Of these eleven is not meant for restoration.
 Hands, feet, both these, ears, nose, both these, / Fingers, nails, tendons, one who has webbed hands, hunchback, and dwarf,
 one who has goitre, who has been branded, scourged, and who has been written about and one who has elephantiasis, /
 BD.4.481 One who is badly ill, who has disgraced an assembly, who is blind, and one with a crooked limb, lame, and also one who is paralysed, a cripple, one weak through age, blind from birth, dumb, and deaf, / Blind and dumb, (blind and) deaf, and dumb and deaf likewise, and blind-deaf-dumb: all these thirty-two—/
 Their restoration was explained by the all enlightened one.
 (An offence) that should be seen,
 for which amends should be made,
 (a wrong view) to be given up does not exist, /
 There are seven (formal) acts suspending him which are not legally valid,
 And these seven that are not legally valid for one complying with his falling, /
 Among (formal) acts there are seven that are legally valid for one not complying with his falling, in the presence of, interrogation, and according as it is and on the acknowledgement,
 Innocence, past insanity, depravity,¹ and on account of censure,

¹ Here pāpikā for tassapāpiyyasika.

banishment, reconciliation, and suspension, probation, /
 The beginning, mānatta, rehabilitation, and thus ordination:
 These sixteen¹ are not legally valid if it should carry out one for another,² /
 These sixteen are quite legally valid if it should carry out the appropriate one for that one,³ reciprocally they should explain how these sixteen are not legally valid, /
 When conditioned for it paired⁴:
 these sixteen are also legally valid,
 when conditioned (for it) singly:
 the conqueror said the cycle⁵ is not legal. /
 One who makes strife⁶:
 the Order carries out a (formal) act of banishment not by rule, in an incomplete assembly;
 he goes to another residence, /
 There they carried out a (formal) act of censure against him, not by rule,⁷ in a complete assembly, elsewhere they carried out a (formal) act of banishment against him by rule, in an incomplete assembly, /
 And they likewise carried out one which in both cases had the appearance of rule, in an incomplete assembly, in a complete assembly, and not by rule in a complete assembly,
 also by rule in an incomplete assembly, /
 And by what had the appearance of rule in an incomplete assembly, and in a complete assembly:
 these cases, having done what is conditioned singly, put the cycle together. /
 Guidance for one who is ignorant, inexperienced, banishment for one who brings a family into disrepute,
 And they carried out a (formal) act of reconciliation for a reviler, /
 And for whoever does not see, does not make amends for (an offence), does not give up a (wrong) view:
 for these a (formal) act of suspension was decreed by the leader of the caravan. /
 The wisdom of these (formal) acts of suspension

BD.4.482

Vin.1.336

¹ Only fifteen listed above: nissaya (placing under) guidance, is omitted. ² “It” is an Order, see Kd.9.6.2, but if it carries out a formal act that is not appropriate and does not fit the case, that formal act is not legally valid. ³ taṃ taṃ kareyya taṃ tassa soḷas’ete sudhammikā.
⁴ dvedvetamūlakam. ⁵ cakka wheel, cycle series. ⁶ OLDENBERG, at Vin.1.394, notes that “all three manuscripts read bhaṇḍanakārako”, where the accusative would have been expected. ⁷ OLDENBERG’s text reads dhammena; Sinhalese edition tatthādhammena and see Kd.9.7.1.

should be applied to censure, and if, being subdued, conducting himself properly, he has asked, /
 The revocation of these or those (formal) acts is according to the (formal) acts below.¹
 And if in this or that case he disputes some (formal) act /
 And says, "It was not carried out, it was badly carried out, it should be carried out again",
 further, concerning the revocation of the (formal) act:
 these monks are speakers of what is right. /
 The Great Sage, having seen falling away from shakiness² in one entitled (to take part in a formal) act prescribed revocation, as a surgeon medicine.

Vin.1.337

¹ heṭṭhā, "below" is equivalent to our "above". ² vipattivyādhite. Sinhalese edition -dhitā.

10. THE MONKS FROM KOSAMBĪ (KOSAMBAKA)

ON THE DISPUTE AMONG THE MONKS FROM KOSAMBĪ

At one time the awakened one, the Lord was staying at Kosambī in Ghosita's monastery. Now at that time a certain monk had fallen into an offence; he saw that offence as an offence but other monks saw that offence as no offence. After a time he saw that offence as no offence, while the other monks saw that offence as an offence. Then these monks spoke thus to that monk: "You, your reverence, have fallen into an offence. Do you see this offence?"

Kd.10.1.1
BD.4.483

"There is not an offence of mine, your reverences, that I can see." Then these monks, having obtained unanimity, suspended that monk for not seeing the offence.

Kd.10.1.2

But that monk had heard much,¹ he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down; he was an expert on dhamma, an expert on discipline, an expert on the summaries; he was wise, experienced, clever; he was conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. Then that monk, having approached monks who were his comrades and intimates, spoke thus: "This is no offence,² your reverences, this is not an offence; I am unfallen, I have not fallen; I am unsuspended, I am not suspended; I was suspended by a (formal) act that was not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. Let the venerable ones be my partisans on account of the rule, on account of discipline." And that monk gained as partisans the monks who were his comrades and intimates. And he sent a messenger to monks in the country who were his comrades and intimates, saying: "This is no offence, your reverences ... not fit to stand. Let the venerable ones be my partisans on account of the rule, on account of discipline.” And that monk gained as partisans those monks in the country who were his comrades and intimates.

¹ Cf. Vin.1.119 (above, BD.4.157). ² As above, BD.4.449.

Kd.10.1.3

Then these monks who took the part of the suspended one approached those monks who had suspended him; having approached, they spoke thus to the monks who had suspended him: “This is no offence, your reverences, this is not an offence; this monk is unfallen, this monk has not fallen; this monk is unsuspended, this monk is not suspended; he was suspended by a (formal) act that was not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand.” When they had spoken thus, the monks who had suspended him spoke thus to the monks who took the part of the suspended one:

BD.4.484

Vin.1.338

“This is an offence, your reverences, this is not no offence; this monk has fallen, this monk is not unfallen; this monk is suspended, this monk is not unsuspended; he was suspended by a (formal) act that was legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. Do not you, your reverences, take the part of this suspended monk, do not side with him.” But those monks who took the part of the suspended (monk), although being spoken to thus by the ones who had suspended him, still took the part of that suspended monk and sided with him.

Kd.10.1.4

Then a certain monk approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that monk spoke thus to the Lord: “This is a case, Lord, where a certain monk has fallen into an offence. He saw that offence as an offence but other monks saw that offence as no offence. After a time he saw that offence as no offence, while the other monks saw that offence as an offence. Then, Lord, those monks spoke thus to that monk: ... (as in Kd.10.1.1) ... ‘... Do you see this offence?’ He said: ‘There is not an offence of mine, your reverences, that I can see. Then, Lord, these monks, having obtained unanimity, suspended that monk for not seeing the offence. But, Lord, that monk had heard much, he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down ... desirous of training. Then, Lord, that monk, having approached monks who were his comrades and intimates ... (as in Kd.10.1.2) ... And, Lord, that monk gained as partisans the monks who were his comrades and intimates ... And, Lord, that monk gained as partisans those monks in the country who were his comrades and intimates. Then, Lord, those monks who took the part of the suspended one ... (as in Kd.10.1.3) ... When they had spoken thus, Lord, the monks who had suspended him spoke thus: ... But those monks, Lord, who took the part of the suspended (monk) although being spoken to thus by the ones who had suspended him, still took the part of that suspended monk and sided with him.”

BD.4.485

Kd.10.1.5

Then the Lord, thinking: “The Order of monks is divided, the Order of monks is divided”, rising from-his seat approached the monks who had suspended (that monk); having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. As he was sitting down, the Lord spoke thus to the monks who had suspended (that monk): “Do not you, monks, thinking: ‘It appears so to us, it appears so to us deem that a monk should be suspended on every occasion.

Kd.10.1.6

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence. He sees that offence as no offence; other monks see that offence as an offence. If, monks, those monks know concerning that monk: ‘This venerable one has heard much, he is one to whom the tradition has been handed down ... desirous of training. If we suspend this monk for not seeing the offence we cannot carry out the Observance together with this monk, we will carry out the Observance without this monk—from this source there will be strife, dispute, contention, brawls, for the Order, there will be schism in the Order, dissension in the Order,¹ altercation in the Order, differences in the Order.’ Monks, that monk should not be suspended for not seeing an offence by monks bent on a schism.

Vin.1.339

Kd.10.1.7

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence. He sees that offence ... (as in Kd.10.1.6) ... ‘... if we suspend this monk for not seeing the offence we cannot invite together with this monk, we will invite without this monk; we cannot carry out a (formal) act of the Order together with this monk, we will carry out a (formal) act of the Order without this monk; we cannot sit down on a seat together with this monk, we will sit down on a seat without this monk; we cannot sit down to drink conjei together with this monk, we will sit down to drink conjei without this monk; we cannot sit down in a refectory together with this monk, we will sit down in a refectory without this monk; we cannot stay under one roof together with this monk, we will stay under one roof without this monk;¹ we cannot, according to seniority, carry out greeting together with this monk, rising up before (one another), saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties, but we will, according to seniority, carry out greetings ... doing the proper duties without this monk—from this source there will be strife ... differences in the Order.’ Monks, that monk should not be suspended for not seeing an offence by monks bent on a schism.”

¹ For further references to saṅghabheda saṅgharāji see BD.2.233, n.3.

Then the Lord, having spoken on this matter with the monks who had suspended that monk, rising from his seat, approached those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (monk); having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat. As he was sitting down, the Lord spoke thus to the monks who were taking the part of the suspended (monk): “Do not you, monks, having fallen into an offence, deem that amends should not be made for the offence, thinking: ‘We have not fallen’. This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence; he sees that offence as no offence; other monks see that offence as an offence. If, monks, that monk knows concerning those monks: ‘These venerable ones have heard much ... (as in Kd.10.1.2) ... desirous of training. It is impossible for them, because of me or because of anyone else, to follow a wrong course through desire, through hatred, through stupidity, through fear. If these monks suspend me for not seeing the offence, if they do not carry out the Observance together with me, if they carry out the Observance without me ... if they do not invite together with me, if they invite without me ... if they, according to seniority, carry out greetings without me, rising up before (one another), saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties—from this source there will be for the Order strife ... differences in the Order’. Monks, the offence should be confessed even out of faith² in others by a monk who is bent on a schism.” Then the Lord, having spoken on this matter with the monks who took the part of the suspended (monk), rising from his seat, departed.

Now at that time monks taking the part of a suspended (monk) carried out the Observance just there within the boundary, and carried out a (formal) act of the Order; but the monks who had suspended (him), having gone outside the boundary, carried out the Observance and carried out a (formal) act of the Order (there). Then ascertain monk who had suspended him, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, that monk spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, these monks who are taking the part of a suspended (monk) are carrying out the Observance just there within the boundary, they are carrying out a (formal) act of the Order; but we, the monks who have suspended him, having gone outside the boundary, are carrying out the Observance, we are carrying out a (formal) act of the Order (there).”

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.69. ² Correct sandhāya of text to saddhāya, and cf. Vin.2.289 api cāyasmantānaṃ saddhāya desemi.

“Monk, if these monks who are taking the part of the suspended (monk) are carrying out the Observance just there within the boundary and are carrying out a (formal) act of the Order, these (formal) acts of theirs will be legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand because a motion and a proclamation have been laid down by me. If, monk, you monks who suspended him, carry out the Observance just there within the boundary, if you carry out a (formal) act of the Order, these (formal) acts of yours are also legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, because a motion and a proclamation have been laid down by me.

“What is the reason for this? These monks belong to a different communion from yours and you belong to a different communion from theirs. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to a different communion: either, of oneself one makes oneself belong to a different communion,¹ or a complete Order suspends one for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to a different communion. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to the same communion: either, of oneself one makes oneself belong to the same communion, or a complete Order restores one who was suspended for not seeing or for not making amends for or for not giving up. Monk, there are these two grounds for belonging to the same communion.”²

Kd.10.1.10

BD.4.488

Vin.1.341

¹ According to Vin-a.1149 he chooses to sit among those who speak dhamma and rather than among those who do not. ² End of this story given at Kd.10.5.11ff.

Kd.10.2.1

Now at that time monks, causing quarrels, causing strife, falling into disputes in a refectory amidst the houses, behaved unsuitably towards one another in gesture, in speech; they came to blows.¹ People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, causing quarrels ... come to blows?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks ... come to blows?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks ... came to blows?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, if an Order is divided, if it is behaving not according to the rule, if there is unfriendliness, you should sit down on a seat thinking: ‘At least we will not behave unsuitably to one another in gesture, in speech; we will not come to blows.’ Monks, if an Order is divided but if it is behaving according to the rule, if there is friendliness, you may sit down on a seat next (to one another).”

Kd.10.2.2

Now at that time² monks, making quarrels, making strife, falling into disputes in the midst of an Order, wounded one another with the weapons of the tongue;³ they were not able to settle that legal question. Then a certain monk approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, that monk spoke thus to the Lord: “This is a case, Lord, where monks, making quarrels ... are not able to settle that legal question. It would be good, Lord, if the Lord out of compassion were to approach those monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. The Lord approached those monks; having approached he sat down on the appointed seat. As he was sitting down, the Lord spoke thus to those monks:

BD.4.489

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.64, Bu-Pc.65. ² Kd.10.2.2 = MN.iii.152f., with slight differences. ³ mukhasattihi as at Ud.67, AN.i.70, Ja.i.341.

“Enough, monks; no strife, no quarrels, no contention, no disputing.” When he had spoken thus, a certain monk who spoke what was not-*dhamma*¹ spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord let the Lord, the dhamma-master² wait; Lord, let the Lord, unconcerned,³ live intent on abiding in ease here and now;⁴ we will be (held) accountable for this strife, quarrel, contention, disputing.” And a second time the Lord spoke thus to these monks:⁵ “Enough, monks; no strife ... no disputing.” And a second time the monks who spoke what was not-dhamma spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord, the dhamma-master wait; ... we will be (held) accountable for this ... disputing.”

Vin.1.342

THE STORY OF DĪGHĀVU

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Once upon a time,⁶ monks, at Benares Brahmādatta was king of Kāsi; he was rich, wealthy, opulent, of great strength, with many vehicles; he had large territories, full storehouses and granaries. Dīghīti was the name of the king of Kosala. He was poor, of little wealth, of few means, of little strength, with few vehicles, he had (only) small territories, storehouses and granaries that were not full. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having arrayed a fourfold army,⁷ marched against Dīghīti, the King of Kosala. Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, heard: ‘They say that Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having arrayed a fourfold army, is marching against me.’ Then, monks, it occurred to Dīghīti, the King of Kosala: ‘Now Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi, is rich, wealthy, opulent ... full storehouses and granaries. I am not competent to stand against even one attack of Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi. Suppose I were to flee from the town beforehand? ‘Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, taking his chief consort, fled from the town beforehand. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, conquering the troops¹ and vehicles and territory and storehouses and granaries of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, lived as the master. Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, set out for Benares with his wife. In due course he arrived at Benares. Monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, dwelt there with his wife in a certain place adjoining Benares in a potter's house, in disguise, clothed² as a wanderer.

Kd.10.2.3

BD.4.490

¹ adhammavādin, or, one adhering to or professing what was not-dhamma. Vin-a.1150 says: one of those taking the part of the suspended (monk). Word also occurs at MN.i.287=MN.iii.48=AN.ii.22=AN.v.265=AN.v.283, always in a formula with which cf. AN.i.202, DN.i.4. Cf. also the two assemblies, the dhamma- and the adhamma-vādinī at AN.i.75. ² dhammassāmī, as at SN.iv.94. ³ appossukka, as at MN.i.331, MN.i.459, Vin.2.188 in a similar sentence. Cf. appossukkatā above, Vin.1.5. ⁴ diṭṭhadhammasukhavihāra, as at AN.ii.23, MN.i.40, MN.i.331, MN.i.459, Vin.2.188, SN.ii.239. ⁵ He spoke the “third time” in Kd.10.2.20, below. ⁶ Cf. Ja.iii.211, Ja.iii.487ff. ⁷ See Vin.4.105 (BD.2.375 and notes).

Kd.10.2.4

“Then soon, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, became pregnant. She had a fancy of this kind: she wanted, at sunrise, to see a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground³ and to drink at the washing of the swords.⁴ Then, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, spoke thus to Dīghīti, the King of Kosala: ‘Sire, I am pregnant; a fancy of this kind has risen in me: I want, at sunrise, to see a fourfold army ... and to drink at the washing of the swords.’ He said: ‘Lady, whence is there for us who are in distress a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground and a washing of the swords?’ She said: ‘If I, sire, do not get a chance (to have my wish) I shall die.’

Kd.10.2.5

Vin.1.343

BD.4.491

“Now at that time, monks, the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, was a friend of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala. Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, approached the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi; having approached, he spoke thus to the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘A lady friend of yours, old dear,⁵ is pregnant; a fancy of this kind has risen in her: she wants, at sunrise to see a fourfold army ... and to drink at the washing of the swords.’ He said: ‘Well then, sire, ¹ bala, as above where rendered “strength”. ² channa can also mean concealed. ³ subhummiyaṃ ṭhitam. Cf. MN-a.ii.97 subhūmiyaṃ ti samabhūmiyaṃ. ⁴ khaggānaṃ dhovanaṃ pātuṃ, to drink the water with which swords were washed. Cf. Mahāvamsa xxii.42–Mahāvamsa xxii.45 where another pregnant queen “longed to drink (the water) that had served to cleanse the sword with which the head of the first warrior among king Eḷāra’s warriors had been cut off”. (Geiger’s translation). F.L. Woodward refers me to J. ABBOTT, Keys of Power, O.U.P., p.168, “The sword of the Marātha Sivaji, preserved at Satāra, has power, and water in which it has been washed is a cure for obstructed delivery”. See also T.R. GLOVER, Springs of Hellas, C.U.P., 1945, p.7, quoting SENECA, Naturales quaestiones iii.2, “‘There are waters wholesome, useful, and waters deadly and putrid ... some remove barrenness’—a belief found in other authors (ATHENAEUS, p.41f., quotes THEOPHRASTUS, History of Plants, to this effect).” ⁵ samma.

let us see the queen too.’ Then, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, approached the Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi. Then, monks, that Brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, saw the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, coming in the distance, and seeing her, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having with joined palms saluted the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, he three times uttered this utterance: ‘Indeed, a king of Kosala is in your womb, indeed, a king of Kosala is in your womb.’ And he said: ‘Do not be distressed, queen, you will get the chance at the time of sunrise to see a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground and to drink at the washing of the swords.’

Kd.10.2.6

“Then, monks, the brahmin priest of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, approached Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi; having approached, he spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘Sire, the signs that are visible are such that tomorrow at the time of sunrise a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, must stand on level ground and the swords must be washed.’ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, enjoined people, saying: ‘Good sirs, do as the Brahmin priest says.’ So, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, got the chance at the time of sunrise of seeing a fourfold army arrayed, armoured, standing on level ground, and of drinking at the washing of the swords. Then, monks, the chief consort of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, when the child in her womb had reached maturity, gave birth to a son. They gave him the name of Dīghāvu.¹ Then, monks, soon afterwards Prince Dīghāvu attained years of discretion.²

Kd.10.2.7
BD.4.492

“Then, monks, it occurred to Dīghīti, the King of Kosala: ‘This Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi, has done us much mischief; our troops and vehicles and territories and storehouses and granaries have been stolen by him. If he knew about us he would have all three of us put to death. Suppose I should make Prince Dīghāvu live outside the town?’ Then, monks, Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, made Prince Dīghāvu live outside the town. Then, monks, Prince

Vin.1.344

¹ Some manuscripts spell Dīghāyu. The meaning, in both spellings, is longevity, “Longeval” (Vinaya Texts ii.297). Dīghāvu’s story is given at Ja.iii.211f., Ja.iii.487ff.; at Ja.iii.490 he is identified with the Bodhisatta. Dh.p.109 is said to have been spoken on his account, Dh.p-a.ii.235.

² As at Vin.1.269. In the Jātaka this age is usually reckoned to be about sixteen.

Dīghāvu, while living outside the town, soon learnt every craft.

Kd.10.2.8

“Now at that time, monks, the barber of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, dwelt at (the court of) Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi. The barber of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, saw Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, with his wife in a certain place adjoining Benares, dwelling in a potter’s house, in disguise, clothed as a wanderer; seeing him, he approached Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi; having approached, he spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘Sire, Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, is dwelling with his wife ... clothed as a wanderer’.

Kd.10.2.9

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, enjoined the people, saying: ‘Well then, good sirs, bring along Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, with his wife.’ And, monks, these people having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, brought along Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, with his wife. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, enjoined the people, saying: “Well now, good sirs, having bound Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, and his wife with stout cord, their arms pinioned tightly behind their backs,¹ having shaved them bald,² having paraded them to a harsh-sounding kettle-drum from street to street, from cross-road to cross-road, having ejected them by the southern gate of the town, having at the south of the town³ chopped them into four pieces, discard the pieces to the four quarters.” And these people, monks, having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having bound Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, and his wife with stout cord, their arms pinioned tightly behind their backs, having shaved them bald, paraded them with a harsh-sounding kettle-drum from street to street and from cross-road to cross-road.

BD.4.493

Kd.10.2.10

“Then, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘It is a long time since I have seen my parents. Suppose now I should see my parents?’ Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having entered Benares, saw his parents bound with stout cord their arms pinioned tightly behind their backs, shaved bald, parading to a harsh-sounding kettle-drum from street to street, from cross-road to cross-road; and seeing them he approached his parents. Then, monks,

¹ Cf. DN.i.245. ² Cf. DN.i.98. ³ This whole passage is stock; cf. AN.ii.241, SN.ii.128, SN.iv.344.

Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, saw Prince Dīghāvu coming from afar, and seeing him he spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath.’¹

Vin.1.345

Kd.10.2.11

“When he had spoken thus, monks, these people spoke thus to Dīghāti, the King of Kosala: ‘This Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, is mad, he is talking gibberish. Who is Dīghāvu to him that he should speak thus: “Do not you ... by non-wrath”?’ He said: ‘I am not mad, good sirs, I am not talking gibberish; what is more, whoever is learned will understand.’ And a second time, monks, ... And a third time, monks, did Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, speak thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close ... by non-wrath.’ And a third time, monks, did these people speak thus to Dīghāti, the King of Kosala: ‘This Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, is mad ...’ And a third time, monks, did Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, speak thus to these people: ‘I am not mad ... whoever is learned will understand.’ Then, monks, these people having paraded Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, and his wife from street to street, from cross-road to cross-road, having ejected them by the southern gate, having chopped them into four pieces at the south of the town, having discarded the pieces to the four quarters, and having stationed troops² (there), departed.

Kd.10.2.12

“Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having entered Benares, having brought back strong drink, made the troops³ drink it. When these had fallen down, intoxicated, then (Dīghāvu) having collected sticks, having made a funeral pyre, having put his parents’ bodies on to the funeral pyre, having lit it, three times circumambulated the funeral pyre, his palms joined. Now at that time Brahmādatta, the King of Kāśī, was on an upper terrace of his palace. He saw Prince Dīghāvu, monks, three times circumambulating the funeral pyre, his palms joined, and seeing him it occurred to him: ‘Undoubtedly this man is a relation or a kinsman of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala. Alas, this spells misfortune for me, for no one will tell me what it means.’

BD.4.494

Kd.10.2.13

“Then, monks. Prince Dīghāvu, having gone to a jungle, having cried and wept, having dried his tears, having entered Benares, having gone to an elephant stable near the king’s palace, spoke thus to the elephant trainer:

¹ Cf. Dh.5. The meaning is explained at Kd.10.2.19. ² gumba. ³ gumbiye.

‘I want to learn the craft, teacher.’¹ He said: ‘Well then, my good youngster,² learn it.’ Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, rising in the night towards dawn, sang in a sweet voice in the elephant stable and played the lute.³ And monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, rising in the night towards dawn heard the singing in the sweet voice and the lute-playing in the elephant stable; having heard, he asked the people: ‘Who, good sirs, rising in the night towards dawn, was singing in a sweet voice and playing a lute in the elephant stable?’

Vin.1.346

Kd.10.2.14

“Sire, a youngster, a pupil of such and such an elephant trainer, rising in the night towards dawn, was singing in a sweet voice and playing a lute in the elephant stable.’ He said: ‘Well then, good sirs, bring that youngster along.’ And, monks, these people, having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, brought along Prince Dīghāvu. (The king said:) “Did you, my good youngster, rising ... sing in a sweet voice and play a lute in the elephant stable?’ ‘Yes, sire,’ he said. ‘Well, then, do you, my good youngster, sing and play the lute (before me).’ And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, longing for success, sang in a sweet voice and played the lute. Then, monks, Brahmādatta the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Do you, my good youngster, attend on me.’ Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu answered ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi. Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu became an earlier riser than Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, he lay down later, he was a willing servant, eager to please, speaking affectionately.⁴ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, soon established Prince Dīghāvu in a confidential position of trust.

BD.4.495

Kd.10.2.15

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Well now, good youngster, harness a chariot, I will go out hunting.’ And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having harnessed a chariot, spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘A chariot is harnessed for you, sire; for this you may think it is now the right time.’ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, ¹ ācariya, teacher or trainer. ² bhaṇe māṇavaka. ³ He may have learnt to sing and play when he learnt “every craft” (end of Kd.10.2.7), or he may have learnt these accomplishments as part of the elephant craft, elephants being notoriously fond of music. ⁴ As at SN.iii.113.

mounted the chariot, Prince Dīghāvu drove the chariot, and he drove the chariot in such a manner that the army went by one way and the chariot by another. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having gone far, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Well now, good youngster, unharness the chariot; as I am tired I will lie down.’ And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu having answered ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having unharnessed the chariot, sat down cross-legged on the ground. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, lay down having laid his head on Prince Dīghāvu’s lap, and because he was tired he fell asleep at once.

Kd.10.2.16

“Then, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘This Brahmādatta, King of Kāsi, has done us much mischief, he has stolen our troops and vehicles and territory and store-houses, and granaries, and he has killed my parents. This could be a time when I could show my wrath,’ and he drew his sword from its sheath. Then, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘My father spoke to me thus at the time of his dying: ‘Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close, for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath.’” It would not be suitable for me to transgress my father’s words,’ and he replaced his sword in its sheath. And a second time, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘This Brahmādatta ... when I could show my wrath,’ and he drew his sword from its sheath. And a second time, monks, it occurred to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘My father spoke to me thus ... It would not be suitable for me to transgress my father’s words,’ and again he replaced his sword in its sheath. And a third time ... and again he replaced his sword in its sheath. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, frightened, agitated, fearful, alarmed, suddenly got up. Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘Why do you, sire, frightened ... suddenly get up? ‘He said: ‘As I was dreaming here, my good youngster, the son of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala, attacked me with a sword. That is why I, frightened ... suddenly got up.’

Vin.1.347

BD.4.496

“Then, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having stroked the head of Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, with his left hand, having drawn his sword with his right hand, spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘I, sire, am Prince Dīghāvu, that son of Dīghīti, the King of Kosala. You have done us much mischief, our troops, vehicles, territory, storehouses and granaries were stolen by you, and my parents were killed by you. This could be a time when I could show my wrath.’ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, inclining his head towards Prince Dīghāvu’s feet, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Grant me my life, dear Dīghāvu, grant me my life, dear Dīghāvu.’

Kd.10.2.17

“‘How am I able to grant life to a king? It is a king who should grant me life.’

“‘Well then, dear Dīghāvu, you grant me life and I will grant you life.’ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, and Prince Dīghāvu granted life to one another and they took hold of (one another’s) hands and they made an oath to do (one another) no harm. Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Well then, dear Dīghāvu, harness the chariot; we will go away.’ And, monks, Prince Dīghāvu, having answered, ‘Yes, sire’, in assent to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having harnessed the chariot, spoke thus to Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi: ‘The chariot is harnessed for you, sire; for this you may think it is now the right time.’ Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, mounted the chariot. Prince Dīghāvu drove the chariot, and he drove the chariot in such a manner that soon it met the army.

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, having entered Benares, having had the ministers and councillors convened, spoke thus: ‘If, good sirs, you should see Prince Dīghāvu, the son of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala, what would you do to him? ‘Some spoke thus: ‘We, sire, would cut off his hands; we, sire, would cut off his feet; we, sire, would cut off his hands and feet; ... his ears, ... his nose, ... his ears and nose, ... we, sire, would cut off his head.’ He said: ‘This, good sirs, is Prince Dīghāvu, the son of Dīghāti, the King of Kosala; there is no occasion to do anything (against him); life was granted by him to me and life was granted by me to him.’

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, spoke thus to Prince Dīghāvu: ‘Concerning that, dear Dīghāvu, which your father said to you at the time of dying: “Do not you, dear Dīghāvu, look far or close, for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath”—what did your father mean?’ He said: ‘Concerning that, sire, which my father said to me at the time of dying—“not far” means: do not bear wrath long. This is what my father said to me, sire, at

Vin.1.348

BD.4.497

Kd.10.2.18

Kd.10.2.19

the time of dying when he said “not far”. Concerning that, sire, which my father said to me at the time of dying—“not close” means: do not hastily break with a friend. This is what my father said to me, sire, at the time of dying when he said “not close”. Concerning that, sire, which my father said to me at the time of dying—“for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath: wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath” means: my parents were killed by a king, but if I were to deprive the king of life those who desired the king’s welfare would deprive me of life and those who desired my welfare would deprive these of life; thus that wrath would not be settled by wrath.¹ But now that life is granted me by a king and life is granted a king by me, thus is wrath settled by non-wrath. This is what my father said to me, sire, at the time of dying when he said: ‘for, dear Dīghāvu, wrathful moods are not allayed by wrath; wrathful moods, dear Dīghāvu, are allayed by non-wrath’.

BD.4.498

Kd.10.2.20

Vin.1.349

“Then, monks, Brahmādatta, the King of Kāsi, thinking: ‘Indeed, it is marvellous, indeed, it is wonderful that this Prince Dīghāvu is so clever that he understands in full the matter which was spoken by his father in brief’, gave back his father’s troops and vehicles and territory and storehouses and granaries, and he gave him his daughter.

“Now, monks, if such is the forbearance and gentleness of kings who wield the sceptre,² who wield the sword, herein, monks, let your light shine forth so that you who have gone forth in this dhamma and discipline which are thus well taught³ may be equally forbearing and gentle.” And a third time⁴ the Lord spoke thus to these monks: “Enough, monks; no strife, no quarrels, no contention, no disputing.” And a third time that monk who spoke what was not dhamma spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord, the dhamma-master, wait; Lord, let the Lord, unconcerned, live intent on abiding in ease here and now; we will be (held) accountable for this strife, quarrel, contention, disputing.” Then the Lord, thinking: “These foolish men are as though infatuate; it is not easy to persuade them,” rising up from his seat, departed.

¹ Cf. similar sentiments at SN.i.85, Dh.p.256–Dhp.257. ² ādinna-daṇḍa, take up a stick. Daṇḍa also means punishment. So the phrase may mean, instead of “scepter”, “who use violence” or “who mete out punishment”. ³ Cf. Kd.5.4.3. ⁴ First and second times occur at Kd.10.2.2.

The First Portion for Repeating: that on Dīghāvu

Then the Lord,¹ having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Kosambī for almsfood; having walked for almsfood in Kosambī, bringing back his almsbowl after his meal, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe and standing in the midst of the Order,² he spoke these verses:

BD.4.499

“When all³ in chorus bawl, none feels a fool,
nor though the Order is divided,
thinks otherwise.

“With⁴ wandering wits
the wiseacres range all the held of talk;
with mouths agape to full extent, what leads them on they know not.

“They who⁵ (in thought) belabour this:
That man has me abused, has hurt,
has worsted me, has me despoiled:
in these wrath’s not allayed.

“They who do not belabour this:
That man has me abused, has hurt,
has worsted me, has me despoiled:
in them wrath is allayed.

“Nay, not by wrath are wrathful moods allayed here (and) at any time, but by not-wrath are they allayed:

¹ Cf. MN.iii.153. ² Omitted at MN.iii.153. ³ All these lines occur at MN.iii.154, Ja.iii.488.

⁴ This couplet also at Ud.v.9. I borrow Woodward’s translation of it. ⁵ This verse and the next three also occur at Dhp.3–Dhp.6=Ja.iii.212.

this is an (ageless) endless rule.

“People do not discern that here we straitened are (in life, in time),¹ but they who herein do discern, thereby their quarrels are allayed.

Vin.1.350

“Ruffians who maim and kill, steal cattle, steeds and wealth, who plunder realms—for these is concord.
Why should there not be for you?

“If one find² friend with whom to fare rapt in the well-abiding, apt, surmounting dangers one and all,
with joy fare with him mindfully.

BD.4.500

“Finding none apt³ with whom to fare,
None in the well-abiding rapt,
As rājā quits the conquered realm, fare lonely as bull-elephant in elephant jungle.

“Better⁴ the faring of one alone, there is no companionship with the foolish, fare lonely, unconcerned, working no evil, as bull-elephant in elephant-jungle.”

ON GOING TO BĀLAKALOṆAKA

Then the Lord,⁵ having spoken these verses as he was standing in the midst of the Order, approached Bālakaloṇākāra village.⁶ Now at that time the

Kd.10.4.1

¹ This line is also at Thag.275. ² This verse is also at Dhp.328 = Snp.45. I borrow E.M. HARE's translation. ³ This verse = Dhp.329 = Snp.46 (except for Sutta Nipāta last line).

⁴ This verse = Dhp.330. ⁵ MN.iii.154 continues in accordance with above, and cf. Ja.iii.489.

⁶ See Dictionary of Pali Proper Names for uncertainty of the reading (MN.iii.154, Ja.iii.489, MN-a.iii.55, MN-a.iv.206 read -gāma; Dhp-a.i.56, SN-a.ii.304, Thag-a.i.380 (Siamese edition) read -ārāma), and for the Majjhima Commentary's (MN-a.iii.55) two interpretations of the meaning of the name.

venerable Bhagu was staying in Bālakoṇakāra village. Then the venerable Bhagu¹ saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him, he made ready a seat, set out water for the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, and having gone to meet him, he received his bowl and robe. Then the Lord sat down on the seat made ready; as he was sitting down he had his feet bathed. And the venerable Bhagu, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. As the venerable Bhagu was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus to him: “I hope, monk, things are going well, I hope you are keeping going, I hope you are not short of almsfood.”

“Things are going well, Lord, I am keeping going, Lord, and, Lord, I am not short of almsfood.” Then the Lord, having delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened the venerable Bhagu with talk on dhamma,² rising from his seat, departed for the Eastern Bamboo Grove.³

ON GOING TO PĀCĪNAVAMSA DĀYA

Kd.10.4.2
BD.4.501

Now at that time the venerable Anuruddha⁴ and the venerable Nandiya⁵ and the venerable Kimbila⁶ were staying in the Eastern Bamboo Grove.⁷ The keeper of the Grove saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him he spoke thus to the Lord: “Do not, recluse, enter this Grove; there are three young men of respectable families staying here desiring self⁸; do not cause them discomfort.” The venerable Anuruddha heard the keeper of the Grove conferring with the Lord; having heard, he spoke thus to the keeper of ¹ His verses are at Thag.271–Thag.274. Mentioned at Vin.2.182, Ja.i.140, Ja.iii.489, Mi.107, Dh-p-a.i.56, Dh-p-a.i.133. According to Dictionary of Pali Proper Names he is probably not the same as the Bhagu mentioned at Vin.1.300. ² According to MN-a.iv.206 this was on the advantages of solitariness. ³ Pācīnavamsa (miga) dāya. See AN-a.iv.117 for interpretation of the name. Mentioned at (besides MN.iii.155) Thag.155, AN.iv.228, Dh-p-a.i.56, Thag-a.86.

⁴ Verses at Thag.892–Thag.919. He and his friends, Nandiya and Kimbila, are often mentioned together, as at MN.i.205, which although set in the Gosinga Wood, is similar to the above Vinaya passage. See also the six friends (not including Nandiya) who, with Upāli, the barber, are mentioned at Vin.2.182. ⁵ Verses at Thag.25. Thag-a.86 says that while Nandiya was in the Eastern Bamboo Grove, Māra appeared before him in a terrible form.

⁶ Verses at Thag.118, Thag.155. ⁷ For the following cf. MN.i.205ff. (where the scene is laid in the Gosinga Sāl-Woodland Grove). ⁸ On attakāmarūpa see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Buddhism (Home University Library) 2nd edition, p.81.

the Grove: “Do not, good grove-keeper, impede the Lord. It is our teacher, the Lord, who is arriving.” Then the venerable Anuruddha approached the venerable Nandiya and the venerable Kimbila; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Nandiya and to the venerable Kimbila: “Go forward, venerable ones, go forward, venerable ones; our teacher, the Lord is arriving.”

Vin.1.351

Then the venerable Anuruddha and the venerable Nandiya and the venerable Kimbila, having gone out to meet the Lord, one received his bowl and robe, one made ready a seat, one set out water for the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand. Then the Lord sat down on the seat made ready; as he was sitting down he had his feet bathed. Then these venerable ones, having greeted the Lord, sat down at a respectful distance. As the venerable Anuruddha was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Lord spoke thus: “I hope that things are going well with you, Anuruddhas,¹ I hope you are keeping going, I hope you are not short of almsfood.”

Kd.10.4.3

“Things are going well, Lord, we are keeping going, Lord, and, Lord, we are not short of almsfood.”

BD.4.502

“I hope that you, Anuruddhas, are living all together on friendly terms and harmonious, as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection?”²

“Yes, certainly, Lord, we are living all together on friendly terms and harmonious, as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection.”

“And how is it that you, Anuruddhas, are living ... of affection?”

Kd.10.4.4

“As to this, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘Indeed it is a gain for me, indeed it is well gotten by me, that I am living with such Brahma-farers.’ On account of this, Lord, for these venerable ones amity³ as to bodily conduct, whether openly or in private, has risen up in me, amity as to speech, amity as to thought, whether openly or in private, has risen up.⁴ Because of this, Lord, it occurred to me: ‘What now, if I, having surrendered my own mind, should live only according to the mind of these venerable ones?’ So I, Lord, having surrendered my own mind, am living only according to the mind of these venerable ones. Lord, we have divers bodies,¹ but assuredly only one mind.”

¹ The plural, Anuruddhā, is used instead of the names of the three separate monks. ² Stock, as at MN.i.206, MN.i.398, MN.iii.156, AN.i.70, AN.iii.67, AN.iii.104, SN.iv.225. ³ On amity, mettā, see MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Outlines of Buddhism, p.30ff. ⁴ Cf. MN.i.321, which after “amity as to speech” fills in “whether openly or in private has risen up”, as does MN.i.206.

And the venerable Nandiya too, and also the venerable Kimbila spoke thus to the Lord: “And it occurred to me too, Lord: ‘Indeed it is a gain for me ... only one mind’. It is thus, Lord, that we are living all together on friendly terms and harmonious, as milk and water blend, regarding one another with the eye of affection.”

Kd.10.4.5

“And I hope that you, Anuruddhas, are living zealous, ardent, self-resolute?”

Vin.1.352

“Yes, certainly, Lord, we are living ... self-resolute.”

“And how is it that you, Anuruddhas, are living ... self-resolute?”

BD.4.503

“As to this, Lord, whichever² of us returns first from the village for alms-food, he makes ready a seat, puts out water for washing the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand; having washed a refuse-bowl he sets it out, he sets out water for drinking and water for washing. Whoever returns last from the village for almsfood, if there are the remains of a meal and if he so desires, he eats them; if he does not desire to do so he throws them out where there are no crops or drops them into water where there are no living creatures; he puts up the seat, he puts away the water for the feet, the footstool, the foot-stand, having washed the refuse-bowl, he puts it away, he puts away the water for drinking and the water for washing, he sweeps the refectory. Whoever sees a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after an evacuation, void and empty, he sets out (water). If it is impossible for him (to do this) by a movement of his hand, having invited a companion to help us by signalling (to him) with the hand, we set out (water); but we do not, Lord, for such a reason break into speech. And then we, Lord, once in every five nights sit down together for talk on dhamma. It is thus, Lord, that we are living, zealous, ardent, self-resolute.”³

ON GOING TO PĀRILEYYAKA

Kd.10.4.6

Then the Lord, having delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened the venerable Anuruddha and the venerable Nandiya and the venerable Kimbila with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, set out on tour for Pārileyya.¹ Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Pārileyya. The Lord stayed there at Pārileyya in the Guarded Woodland Thicket² at the root of the lovely sāl-tree.³ Then as the Lord was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Formerly, beset by those monks of Kosambī, makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of brawls, makers of legal questions in the Order, I did not live in comfort; but now that I am alone with no other, I am living in comfort removed from those monks, makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order.”

BD.4.504

Now a certain large bull-elephant⁴ was beset by elephants and cow-elephants, by elephant calves and sucklings; he ate grass already cropped by them, and they ate bundles of branches as he broke them off; and he drank muddied water and when he crossed over at a ford the cow-elephants went pushing against his body. Then it occurred to that large bull-elephant: “Now I am living beset by elephants and cow-elephants ... I eat grass already cropped by them and they eat bundles of branches as I break them off; and I drink muddied water and when I cross over at a ford the cow-elephants go pushing against my body. Suppose I were to live alone secluded from the crowd?”

Vin.1.353

Then that large bull-elephant, leaving the herd, approached Pārileyya,

Kd.10.4.7

¹ We are many (or several) men, persons, kāyā. ² Cf. Kd.4.1. ³ The versions at MN.i.207, MN.iii.154, break off here, and both go on from here in different ways. ¹ Spelt Pārileyya; a village, although SN-a.ii.304 speaks of it as a nagara, town. DhP-a.i.51-63 takes Pārileyya to be the and describes in vivid detail the ways in which he waited upon the Lord. This elephant is identified with that in the Bhisī Jātaka (Ja.iv.314). Pārileyya(ka) mentioned at SN.iii.95, Ud.iv.5, Ja.iii.489. ² Rakkhitavanasaṇḍa. Mentioned at Ud.iv.5, but not at SN.iii.95. DhP-a.i.59 says that the thicket was so called because the elephant with a stick in his trunk, guarded the Lord from danger during the nights. ³ bhaddasāla. It was one tree, manāpa laṭṭhaka, according to Ud-a.250 and SN-a.ii.305, which say that the Lord stayed depending on that village (Pārileyya) in a leaf-room in the jungle thicket at the root of that tree. ⁴ hatthināga. Vin-a.1152 says mahāhatthi, a great elephant. Ud-a.250 adds that he was the leader of a herd. This passage recurs at Ud.iv.5. Cf. AN.iv.435.

the Guarded Woodland Thicket, the lovely sāl-tree and the Lord; having approached, he set out by means of his trunk drinking water for the Lord and water for washing, and he kept the grass down.¹ Then it occurred to that large bull-elephant: “Now formerly, beset by elephants and cow-elephants, by elephant calves and sucklings, I did not live in comfort; I ate grass already cropped by them and they ate bundles of branches as I broke them off; I drank muddied water and when I crossed over at a ford the cow-elephants went pushing against me; but now that I am alone with no other I am living in comfort removed from the elephants, the cow-elephants, the elephant calves and sucklings.”

Then the Lord, having understood his own seclusion and knowing by mind that bull-elephant’s reasoning of mind, at that time uttered this utterance:

“Herein agreeth mind with mind, of sage² and bull-elephant of plough-pole tusks,³ since each delights in forest (solitude).”⁴

Kd.10.5.1
BD.4.505

Then the Lord, having stayed at Pārileyya as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anātha-piṇḍika’s monastery. Then the lay-followers of Kosambī thought: ‘These masters the monks of Kosambī, have done us much mischief; the Lord is departing, harassed by these; come, we should neither greet the masters, the monks of Kosambī, nor should we stand up before them, nor should we salute them with joined palms or perform the proper duties; we should not revere, respect, esteem or honour them, and neither should we give them almsfood when they come (to us); thus they, when they are neither revered, respected, esteemed nor honoured by us, will depart unrevered, or they will leave the Order, or they will reconcile themselves to the Lord’.

Kd.10.5.2

Then the lay-followers of Kosambī neither greeted the monks of Kosambī, nor stood up before them, they did not salute them with joined palms or perform the proper duties, they did not revere, respect, esteem or honour them and they did not give them almsfood when they came (to them). Then the monks of Kosambī, as they were not being revered, respected, esteemed or honoured by the lay-followers of Kosambī, spoke thus: “Come now, your reverences, let us, having gone to Sāvattthī, settle this legal question in the Lord’s presence.”

Vin.1.354

¹ appaharitañ ca karoti. ² nāga. Vin-a.1152, Ud-a.251 explain by buddhanāga. ³ Cf. nāga īsādanta at MN.i.414, Vv.20.9, Vv.43.9. ⁴ Version at Ud.iv.5 also ends here.

ON EIGHTEEN CASES

Then the monks of Kosambī, having packed away their lodgings, taking their bowls and robes, approached Sāvattthī.

Kd.10.5.3

Then the venerable Sāriputta heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī, makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of brawls, makers of legal questions in the Order, are coming to Sāvattthī.” Then the venerable Sāriputta approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī, makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, are coming to Sāvattthī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?”

“Well now, Sāriputta, as dhamma is so must you stand.”¹

BD.4.506

“How am I, Lord, to find out what is dhamma and what is non-dhamma?”

Kd.10.5.4

“Now, Sāriputta, a speaker of non-dhamma is to be known by eighteen points: In such a case, Sāriputta, a monk explains² non-dhamma as dhamma, he explains dhamma as non-dhamma; he explains non-discipline as discipline, he explains discipline as non-discipline; he explains what was not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata as spoken, uttered by the tathāgata, explains what was spoken, uttered by the tathāgata as not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata; he explains what was not practised by the tathāgata as practised by the tathāgata, he explains what was practised by the tathāgata as not practised by the tathāgata; he explains what was not laid down by the tathāgata as laid down by the tathāgata, he explains what was laid down by the tathāgata as not laid down by the tathāgata, he explains what is no offence as an offence, he explains an offence as no offence; he explains a slight offence as a serious offence, he explains a serious offence as a slight offence; he explains an offence which can be done away with¹ as an offence which cannot be done away with, he explains an offence which cannot be done away with as an offence which can be done away with; he declares a very bad offence² as not a very bad offence, he explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. Sāriputta, a speaker of non-dhamma is to be known by these eighteen points.

¹ yathādhammo tathā tiṭṭhāhi. ² Cf. this passage with Vin.2.88, Vin.2.204. The first five pairs also occur at AN.v.77 as reasons why when there is strife, quarrelling, contention, dispute in an Order the monks do not live in comfort. These same five pairs are again given (AN.v.78) as ten roots of disputing. They are followed by another ten roots of disputing, namely the next four pairs as given above in the Vinaya with one added pair.

Kd.10.5.5

And, Sāriputta, a speaker of dhamma is to be known by eighteen points. In such a case, Sāriputta, a monk explains non-dhamma as non-dhamma, he explains dhamma as dhamma; he explains non-discipline as non-discipline, he explains discipline as discipline; he explains what was not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata as not spoken, not uttered by the tathāgata ... not practised ... practised ... not laid down ... laid down ... he explains an offence as an offence ... no offence as no offence ... a slight offence as a slight offence ... a serious offence as a serious offence an offence which can be done away with as an offence which can be done away with ... an offence which cannot be done away with as an offence which cannot be done away with ... a very bad offence as a very bad offence, he explains not a very bad offence as not a very bad offence. Sāriputta, a speaker of dhamma is to be known by these eighteen points.”

Vin.1.355

BD.4.507

Kd.10.5.6

The venerable Moggallāna the Great³ heard ... the venerable Kassapa the Great⁴ heard ... the venerable Kaccāna the Great heard ... the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great heard ... the venerable Kappina the Great heard ... the venerable Cunda the Great heard ... the venerable Anuruddha heard ... the venerable Revata heard ... the venerable Upāli heard ... the venerable Ānanda heard ... the venerable Rāhula heard: “They say that the monks of Kosambī ... (= Kd.10.5.3–Kd.10.5.5. Read Rāhula instead of Sāriputta.) “... Rāhula, a speaker of dhamma is to be known by these eighteen points.”

¹ sāvasesā āpatti, anavasesā āpatti. See Vinaya Texts iii.35, n.2, which explains that one which cannot be done away with is practically equivalent to a Pārājika. A Saṅghādisesa can be done away with by the penalties inflicted by the Order, most of the others by confession.

² duṭṭhullā āpatti. See BD.2.219, n.2. ³ These elders, including Sāriputta but not including Kassapa, are also mentioned at Vin.2.15–Vin.2.16, Vin.4.66. For notes see BD.2.295. Cf. a list of ten at AN.iii.299. ⁴ Verses at Thag.1051. At AN.i.23 called chief of those who uphold the ascetic practices.

Kd.10.5.7

Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī ... (as in Kd.10.5.3) ... are coming to Sāvattī.” Then Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance.¹ As she was standing at a respectful distance Mahāpajāpatī the Gotamid spoke thus to the Lord: “It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?”

“Well then, do you, Gotami, hear dhamma on both sides; having heard dhamma on both sides, choose the views and the approval and the persuasion and the creed² of those monks who are there speakers of dhamma, and whatever is to be desired by the Order of nuns from the Order of monks,³ all that should be desired only from one who speaks dhamma.”

BD.4.508

Kd.10.5.8

Anāthapiṇḍika the householder heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattī.” Then Anāthapiṇḍika the householder approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Anāthapiṇḍika the householder spoke thus to the Lord: “It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?”

“Well then, do you, householder, give gifts to both sides; having given gifts to both sides, hear dhamma on both sides; having heard dhamma on both sides, choose the views and the approval and the persuasion and the creed of those monks who are there speakers of dhamma.”

Kd.10.5.9

Vin.1.356

Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, heard: “It is said that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattī.” Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance

¹ Nuns must stand in the presence of monks; see Vin.4.52. ² Cf. Kd.1.38.7. ³ See e.g. Nuns Bi-Pc.59.

Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, spoke thus to the Lord: “It is said, Lord, that the monks of Kosambī ... are coming to Sāvattthī. How am I, Lord, to behave in regard to these monks?”

“Well then, do you, Visākhā, give gifts to both sides ... (as in Kd.10.5.8) ... choose the views ... of those monks who are there speakers of dhamma.”

Kd.10.5.10

Then in due course the monks of Kosambī arrived at Sāvattthī. Then the venerable Sāriputta approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “They say, Lord, that these monks of Kosambī, makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in the Order, have arrived at Sāvattthī. Now what line of conduct, Lord, should be followed in regard to lodgings for these monks?”

“Well now, Sāriputta, separate lodgings should be given (to them).”

BD.4.509

“But if, Lord, there are no separate lodgings what line of conduct should be followed?”

“Well then, Sāriputta, having made (some) separate they should be given. But I in no way say this, Sāriputta, that a senior monk’s lodging should be withheld (from him). Whoever should withhold it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

“But what line of conduct, Lord, is to be followed in regard to material gains?”¹

“Material gains, Sāriputta, should be distributed equally amongst all.”

ALLOWANCE TO RESTORE

Kd.10.5.11

Then while that monk who had been suspended was reflecting on dhamma and discipline, it occurred to him: “This is an offence, this is not no offence, I have fallen, I am not unfallen, I am suspended, I am not unsuspending, I am suspended by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand.” Then the suspended monk approached those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one); having approached, he spoke thus to those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one): “This is an offence, your reverences, it is not no offence ... fit to stand. Come, venerable ones, restore me.”

¹ āmisa, probably meaning here food and clothing.

Then those monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one), taking that suspended monk (with them) approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, those monks spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this suspended monk speaks thus: ‘This is an offence, your reverences ... Come, venerable ones, restore me’. What line of conduct, Lord, is to be followed in these circumstances?”¹

Kd.10.5.12

“This, monks, is an offence, this is not no offence, this monk has fallen, this monk is not unfallen, this monk is suspended, this monk is not unsus-suspended, he was suspended by a legally valid (formal) act, irreversible, fit to stand But since, monks, that monk who has fallen and was suspended sees (his offence)—well then, monks, restore that monk.”

Vin.1.357

ON HARMONY IN THE SAṄGHA

Then these monks who were taking the part of the suspended (one), having restored that suspended monk, approached the monks who had suspended (him), having approached, they spoke thus to the monks who had suspended (him): “Concerning that case, your reverences, about which there was for the Order strife, quarrels, contention, disputes schism in the Order, dissension in the Order, altercation in the Order, differences in the Order that monk has fallen and was suspended, but he sees and is restored. Now, your reverences, let us achieve unanimity in the Order for settling this case.” Then those monks who had suspended (him) approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, they spoke thus to the Lord: “These monks, Lord, who are taking the part of the suspended (monk) speak thus: ‘Concerning that case ... for settling this case.’ Now what line of conduct, Lord, is to be followed?”

Kd.10.5.13

BD.4.510

“Since, monks, that monk has fallen and was suspended but sees and is restored—well then, monks, achieve unanimity in the Order for settling that case. And thus, monks, should it be achieved: One and all should gather together, both the ill and the well, leave of absence should not be declared on account of anyone. Having gathered together, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Concerning that case about which there was for the Order strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, schism in the Order ... differences in the Order—that monk has fallen and was suspended, but he sees and is restored. If it seems right to the Order the Order should achieve unanimity in the Order for settling this case. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Concerning that case ... and is restored. The Order is achieving unanimity in the Order for settling this case. If the achieving of unanimity in the Order for settling this case is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Unanimity in the Order for settling that case is achieved by the Order. Dissension in the Order is put down, schism in the Order is put down. It is pleasing to the venerable ones; therefore they are silent. Thus do I understand this’. Observance may be carried out at once, the Pātimokkha recited.”

Kd.10.5.14

¹ tehi.

Vin.1.358

QUESTIONS OF UPĀLI ON HARMONY IN THE SAṄGHA

Kd.10.6.1
BD.4.511

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences for an Order, if the Order not having investigated that case, not having got to the root of it,¹ achieves unanimity in the Order, is that unanimity in the Order legally valid, Lord?”

“Upāli, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... that unanimity is not legally valid, Upāli.”

“But, Lord, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences in an Order, if the Order having investigated that case, having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, is that unanimity in the Order legally valid, Lord?”

¹ amūlā mūlaṃ gantvā.

“Upāli, in regard to a matter where there is strife for an Order, quarrels, contention, dispute, schism in an Order, dissension in an Order, altercation in an Order, differences in an Order, if the Order, having investigated that case, having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, that unanimity in the Order is legally valid, Upāli.”

Kd.10.6.2

“How many (kinds of) unanimity in an Order are there, Lord?”

“There are these two (kinds of) unanimity in an Order, Upāli. There is, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has not arrived at the meaning but has arrived at the letter; there is, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has both arrived at the meaning and arrived, at the letter. And what, Upāli, is unanimity in an Order that has not arrived at the meaning but has arrived at the letter? Upāli, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences in an Order, if the Order, not having investigated that case, not having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, this is called, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has not arrived at the meaning but has arrived at the letter. And what, Upāli, is unanimity in an Order that has both arrived at the meaning and arrived at the letter? Upāli, in regard to a case where there is strife for an Order ... differences in an Order, if the Order, having investigated that case, having got to the root of it, achieves unanimity in the Order, this is called, Upāli, unanimity in an Order that has both arrived at the meaning and arrived at the letter. These, Upāli, are the two (kinds of) unanimity in an Order.”

BD.4.512

Kd.10.6.3

Then the venerable Upāli, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, addressed the Lord with verses:

“In the Order’s affairs and deliberations and in matters arising for investigation, what kind of man is here most needed?
How is a monk fit for leadership here?”

Vin.1.359

“Above all, one blameless in moral habit, of careful conduct, his faculties well controlled, opponents do not censure him in respect of a rule, for there could be nothing to say against him.”

“Such a one, firm in purity of moral habit, is confident, he speaks ably,¹ he is not afraid at an assembly, he does not tremble, he does not sacrifice the meaning² to irrelevant talk.

“When asked a question in an assembly, he neither hesitates nor is ashamed,
his timely sensible words,
fitting as explanation, delight the learned assembly.

“With esteem for senior monks and confident in his own teachers, able to weigh, familiar with what should be spoken,
and skilled in obstructing his opponents,

“Opponents come under his control, and the many-folk come under his tuition,
and he does not neglect his own creed,
(skilful) at question and answer, unhurting.

BD.4.513

“Able in doing a messenger’s duty, and well-informed in what they tell him of the Order’s affairs, sent by a group of monks he is obedient,
but he does not therefore think, ‘I am doing this’.

“Into whatever matters one falls, whatever is an offence and how one removes it—both these analyses are well handed down to him.
He is skilled in the features of offences and removal, “Being sent away and good habits—he goes by these:

he is sent away and what are the grounds, restoration of a person who has completed this³—
he knows this too, skilled (as he is) in analysis.

“With esteem for senior monks, for newly ordained,

¹ visayha. ² attham na hāpeti, or, does not neglect the goal; cf. Snp.37, Ja.i.251. ³ tarivvusita, i.e. one who has been sent away but is now fit for restoration.

for elders and for those of middle standing,
 a helper of the multitude, clever herein, monk such as this is fit for leadership here.”

The Tenth Section: that on (the monks of) Kosambī

Vin.1.360

THIS IS ITS KEY

The splendid conqueror at Kosambī, dispute about seeing an offence,
 one may suspend for this or that, whatever is an offence of his it should be seen, /
 Within a boundary, just there, five, and only one, attainment, and Pārileyya, Sāvattthī, and Sāriputta, Kolita, / Kassapa the Great, Kaccāna, Koṭṭhita, and about Kappina, and Cunda the Great, Anuruddha, Revata, Upāli,¹ / Ānanda, and Rāhula too, Gotamī, Anāthapiṇḍika, and Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, and separate lodgings, and equal material gains also, / Leave for absence should not be granted to anyone, Upāli inquired, irreproachable as to moral habit, unanimity in the conqueror’s instruction.

Finished is the Great Division²

Vin.1.361

¹ Upālivhaya (Oldenberg and Siamese edition). Sinhalese edition reads Upālicūbhaye.

² OLDENBERG’S Vinaya Piṭakam, Vol. I, ends here.

TRANSLATOR'S INTRODUCTION

BD.5.v

The Cullavagga, the Less or Lesser Division of the Vinaya, consists of twelve Sections. The first three of these have been translated by H. OLDENBERG and T.W. RHYS DAVIDS in Sacred Books of the East, Volume XVII, 1882, and the remaining nine in Sacred Books of the East, Volume XX, 1885. The Pali Vinaya on which their translation as well as mine is based is that edited by OLDENBERG in 1880 as Volume II of his Vinaya Piṭakam.

The wealth of detail increases rather than diminishes in this Lesser Division, and as an instrument for use by monks and nuns is astonishing in its variety and the minute precision it lavishes on greater and smaller points alike.

It was no doubt ever more and more necessary to put the proper ways of meeting disturbances in the Order on a firm basis. This certainly appears to be the purpose of Section I which deals in turn with seven formal acts: (1) censure for quarrels, disputes and contention which perhaps arose from an earnest endeavour to act in conformity with what had been bid down and then finding that there were other and different opinions; or which perhaps were wantonly made in the Order by monks who, unable to master the higher practices, found time hang heavy; (2) guidance for a monk who had persisted in frequenting the laity and to guide him to consort instead with kalyāṇamittā and so become learned and expert in the dhamma and discipline; (3) banishment for a monk who had indulged in the numerous "bad habits" specified here and there in the Pali canon in a stereotyped passage; (4) reconciliation for a monk who had been rude to a householder, and who, when he went to ask for his forgiveness, was allowed to take a companion with him to act as messenger and spokesman in case the monk himself was overcome with shame and embarrassment—an allowance which in Kd.22 Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, asked to be extended to him when he was accused (wrongly) by the Vajjis of Vesālī of reviling and abusing lay-followers; (5, 6, 7) three acts of suspension for not seeing an offence, for not making amends for one, for not giving up a wrong view, respectively.

All these formal acts have been mentioned already in the Mahāvagga (BD.4). But only an indication is given there of the occasions for carrying them out (as summarised above). These, while tallying with the occasions given in the Cullavagga, specify neither the method to be followed in carrying out each one, nor any of the grounds held to be sufficient for its revocation. All this is however dealt with by the Cullavagga.

BD.5.vi

Some of the stories chosen to illustrate behaviour which calls for one of these formal acts to correct it appear also in other parts of the Vinaya. For example, the episode of the monk Ariṭṭha occurs both in Bu-Pc.68 and in Kd.11.32. The former gives the holder of wrong views a chance to renounce them while he is being admonished up to the third time. It is only, after this, if he persists in clinging to his views that he incurs an offence of expiation. But in the Cullavagga Ariṭṭha is given no final chance to clear himself. Once it is found that he holds to his views, the Order is told that it can carry out a formal act of suspension against him. He thereupon left the Order. As the text stands, Gotama is shown as saying that the formal act of suspension may be revoked. This would not only be an uncharacteristic weakness, but it does not fit the context. In fact, as Oldenberg remarks, we should have expected a negative here, and hence just the opposite: Let the Order not revoke the formal act of suspension for not giving up the wrong view (Kd.11.34.1). This would moreover have been in line with the injunction not to revoke the act of banishment when those against whom it had been carried out went away and left the Order (Kd.1.16.1).

At Vin-a.874 Ariṭṭha is called an enemy of the Buddha's dispensation, and although as a rule monks were not lightly let go of to return to the "world", his was a stubborn case where his absence might well have been preferred to his presence. The Order was by now well established both in the popular esteem and as an institution running efficiently by its own internal and developed organisation, and if a monk left it, this would be attributed to his own incompetence rather than to any deficiency in the teaching and training.

BD.5.vii

Apart from expulsion from the Order for having committed one of the four Pārājika offences, and apart from being expelled for any one of the reasons given at Kd.1.61–Kd.1.68, a monk left of his own choice. The formal act of banishment is not banishment from the Order, but from a particular place where a monk had, for example, either indulged in “bad habits”, been frivolous or harmful in body or speech, caused strife and contention, or spoken dispraise of the Awakened One, dhamma or the Order. If he conducted himself properly while the act of banishment against him was in force, he could be rehabilitated, a privilege impossible to extend to one who had been expelled.

Sections Kd.12 and Kd.13 of the Cullavagga deal in great detail with Probation. This is not probation preliminary to entering the Order; but probation imposed on one who is already a member of it, and consisting of “going back to the beginning” of his training and being subjected to mānatta discipline. Such probation falls under the four headings mentioned at Vin.a.1159: that for offences which have been concealed, that for unconcealed offences, the concurrent probation and the purifying probation. This last could be imposed on monks who did not know whether they had worked through this disciplinary period of probation or not. In view of the many references to “ignorant inexperienced monks”, such haziness in regard to the right day for the termination of a probationary period is no more surprising than is the ignorance monks manifested about the stars and the quarters (Kd.8.6.1) and which proved physically harmful to them.

Kd.14 is devoted to the different ways of settling legal questions. These legal questions have already been mentioned in the Suttavibhaṅga. In the first place, the case must be settled in the presence of the accused monk. But this verdict “in the presence of” is necessary to all legal settlements. Secondly there is the verdict of innocence given in favour of a monk who was wrongfully accused of an offence. Dabba the Mallian is taken as the example, and his story is told in the same words as in Bu-Ss.8. But in the Formal Meeting the interest, at the end, is shifted to the monks who accused him and who incur an offence for doing so; while in the Cullavagga the interest is centred on Dabba who is to have a verdict of innocence accorded him. We must therefore understand that this is a case where two separate actions of the Order were called for: one dealing with the monks who brought the false accusation against Dabba, and one for acquitting him.

Then comes the “verdict of past insanity”, to be given for monks who were mad when they committed an offence. As is usual, the properties that render the act legally valid or not are enumerated. Then follows the settlement of disputes or contention by the “decision of the majority” when a reliable monk is to be agreed upon as distributor of voting-tickets, an important post (Kd.14.14.26) and one which Devadatta arrogated to himself and abused in his attempts to split the Order (Kd.18.4.1). Next, there is the “decision for specific depravity” when a monk, on being examined for an offence, prevaricates and lies. Finally there was the settlement by the “covering up as with grass”, enacted when things had been done or said in the heat of a quarrel and which, if made into a legal question, would only lead to further trouble and perhaps schism. Legal questions such as this could be covered up by each contending side confessing through a competent monk whatever were the offences that had been committed, unless they were serious offences (involving Defeat or a Formal Meeting of the Order, according to Vin-a.1194), or ones that affected the laity (Kd.14.13.2, Kd.14.13.3). And moreover, such offences could not be settled in this way for anyone who objected or who was not present. Otherwise, a legal question arising from disputes could be settled by a committee or referendum (Kd.14.14.19) or, failing this, by the decision of the majority (Kd.14.14.24). The Venerable Revata called for a referendum of eight monks to settle the “ten points” promulgated by the Vajjis of Vesālī, and which formed the business before the Council of Vesālī (see Kd.22).

The whole subject of the legal questions and their settlement, although complicated, must be studied by anyone who wishes to grasp an important branch of the disciplinary proceedings of the Order together with the very exact machinery laid down for carrying them out. A certain pattern will be found to emerge. For the “Internal Polity of a Buddhist Saṃgha”, Chapter 6 of S. DUTT's Early Buddhist Monachism may be profitably consulted.

With Sections Kd.15, Kd.16, Kd.18 and Kd.19 we remain in the heart of the monastic life as it was to be lived normally. But with Section Kd.17, on Schisms, we arrive more definitely than in the Mahāvagga at that real and increasingly present danger of dissentient voices rising to a chorus in schismatic factions. Each Section, besides its scrupulous attention to every point that arises, also contains a certain amount of narrative material.

BD.5.ix

Section Kd.15 is so loaded with detail as to make it almost impossible to pick out salient points. But mention must be made of the “group of six monks”, which really means a number of monks under three pairs of leaders. For they are constantly referred to as the malefactors from whose conduct, often unsuitable because it resembled that of householders, springs the opportunity to regularise behaviour on all pertinent points. This is, in addition, a Section well worth studying for the light it throws on contemporary manners and the things in common usage. It is a Section where the laity are made important a wonder of psychic power is not to be displayed in front of them (Kd.15.8); their “bowls could be turned upside down”, a symbolic expression meaning that if they offered food to the monks, these could, after agreeing to a motion put before the Order, turn their bowls upside down to show that they held a layman in such disgrace they would accept no food from him (Kd.15.20), thereby depriving him of merit. There is also the allowance that monks may tread on cloths when being asked to do so by householders “for good luck’s sake” (Kd.15.21). Then there is the episode when people bring scents and garlands to a monastery. The monks are allowed to accept the scents on condition that they place the “five-finger mark” on a door. This has the appearance of a protective measure; and we know from the Buddhist charms or spells, parittā, one of which is to be found in this Section (Kd.15.6), that such runes or chants for self-guarding played a not negligible part in Early Buddhist life.

Section Kd.16 is a compendium of what is allowable or not in regard to dwelling-places. For narrative material, it contains the story of how Anāthapiṇḍika heard the words “Awakened One”, buddha, for the first time and determined to see the Lord, who addressed him by the name of Sudatta, unknown outside his family, and spoke to him on dhamma. The vision of dhamma thereupon arose in Anāthapiṇḍika, he became a lay-follower, and acquired Prince Jeta's Grove as a gift to the Order. The story of his first meeting with the Buddha is also told, but more briefly, in the Saṃyutta. In this Section is also to be found the Tittira-jātaka which came to be known as the Partridge Brahma-faring (Kd.16.6.3), told here to encourage monks to be courteous and polite to one another. Harmony in the Order was constantly being sought, as a number of episodes and allusions in the Vinaya indicate. It is by no means only in Section Kd.16 that passages occur that have parallels in other parts of the Pali canon or the Jātaka. Throughout the Vinaya this is the case, and probably a concordance of Vinaya stories would show only few to be peculiar to it.

BD.5.x

Section Kd.17 begins with the story of Anuruddha's going forth from home together with Bhaddiya, a Sakyan chieftain who, within a year, realised the threefold knowledge and acclaimed his happiness. Monks, hearing him, grew suspicious that he was remembering the former joys of rulership. But Bhaddiya was able to convince Gotama, in words reminiscent of SN.i.72–SN.i.73, that previously, although he had had a fully appointed guard, he had been nervous and frightened all the same; but, now, alone in a forest he is unconcerned and unruffled. An explanation of why this story is placed at the beginning of the Section on Schisms seems called for. I can only suggest that if the monks who alleged that Bhaddiya was dissatisfied with the Brahma-faring had turned out to be right, it is not unreasonable to suppose they would next have regarded him as a potential schismatic.

This was the role for which, however, Devadatta was cast, and for far more: he was also a potential murderer, prepared to go to great lengths to get rid of the Buddha. In his overweening ambition, Devadatta thought he should no longer be the leader and coveted this position for himself. Now, although those who have progressed some distance on the Way may feel themselves safe and immune to attacks (see Bhaddiya's story and also the Bhayabherava Sutta of the Majjhima), the tradition nevertheless recognises slayers of arahants (see e.g. BD.4.113, etc.), while various Commentaries hold that Moggallāna, an arahant of long standing, was actually murdered (Ja.v.125; Dhv-a.iii.65). At Kv.313, however, the untimely death of an arahant is a controverted point. Tathāgatas, Truth-finders, must be different, for although they may be hurt and their blood shed (BD.4.113, etc., and Kd.17.3.9), according to our Section Kd.17 they need no protection and cannot be deprived of life by aggression (Kd.17.3.10). Their attainment of nibbāna (with no residue remaining) is in fact a matter precisely of their own volition, as is also apparent from the episode (referred to in Kd.11.1.10) where Ānanda fails to ask the Buddha to prolong his life to the full. He died when he was in the eighties. The assumption is probably that he might have lived to be a hundred or so as the Pali canon states that people sometimes attain this age, while Sabbakāmin was so old at the time of the Council of Vesālī that it was 120 years since his ordination (Kd.22.2.4). He must probably have been at least 140 years of age then, for in Bu-Pc.65 it is said that ordination must not be conferred on any male less than twenty years old.

In Section Kd.17 we hear of another formal act, one that is extra to the seven dealt with in Kd.1. This is the formal act of Information, pakāsaniyakamma, which allowed it to be proclaimed that someone's nature or character had altered—for the worse (Kd.17.3.2). The causative form, pakāseti, “to give information” of the verb pakāsati (of which pakāsaniya is the gerundive), is used with at least a semi-technical sense by the Vajjis of Vesālī when speaking of Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, and who had been able to change the lay-followers' opinion as to who the true recluses really were (Kd.12.1.7).

Much of Section Kd.18 consists of passages of some considerable length, most of which have already occurred in the Mahāvagga, use also being made of Sekhiya material. But the contexts are different. For example, Kd.18.1.25 lays down the proper conduct for those who share cells towards their preceptors, while in Kd.18.1.2–Kd.18.1.5 this same conduct, laid down in almost identical words except for a few additions or omissions, is to be observed by a monk arriving at a monastery, and again in Kd.18.7.2–Kd.18.7.4 by monks in respect of their lodgings. These are three occasions where conduct is, rather naturally, to be the same, for all three concern monks actually in a monastery, even if only just arrived. Yet the instructions specifically for resident monks (Kd.18.2.2–Kd.18.2.3) are connected more with their behaviour to incoming monks than with any thing else. We have seen that the same story, for example that of Dabba and that of Ariṭṭha, may be told so as to introduce varying effects. So here, the same behaviour may be followed in varying circumstances. A great process of stabilisation was at work. As the mass of allowances and offences—in the Cuḷavagga mostly those of wrong-doing—pile up and increase, so the allusions become all the clearer. Thus, by the time we get to Kd.18.3.2 the nature of the clay goods and the wooden goods that have to be packed away by a monk who is leaving a residence, can be understood by referring to Kd.15.37. For it is here that Gotama “allows”, as recorded, all clay goods and all wooden ones with certain specified exceptions.

The ninth Section, concerned mainly with the legally valid and the legally invalid suspensions of the Pātimokkha, is introduced by the eight beautiful similitudes of the great ocean, a passage found also in the Aṅguttara and the Udāna. The third of these similes showing what, ideally, the monks ought to be, is particularly to the point: the Order does not live in communion with an impure monk, but, having assembled quickly, suspends him, with the result that he is far from the Order and the Order is far from him (Kd.19.1.4). Therefore, also to the point, is the story that precedes the similes of the sea. It is a story of how the Buddha refused, in spite of a plea made three times by Ānanda, to recite the Pātimokkha to the monks. For, “the assembly is not entirely pure, Ānanda”, having in it one individual of a depravity so grave that he is described in strongly derogatory, if stereotyped, terms. The Truth-finder cannot recite the Pātimokkha to an assembly containing a monk like this (Kd.19.1.2). Instead, he delegates his powers, now as it seems out of disappointment and disgust, whereas formerly he had delegated other powers in the full tide of success (Kd.1.12.1). In both cases it is reasonable to suppose that he did so because the Order was growing beyond the capacity of one man to handle; and because he had therefore increasingly to look to the monks themselves to maintain the Order on the lines laid down by him, both while he was alive and after he was with them no longer.

At the end of Section Kd.19 we are at the end of the discipline for monks. Many and exceedingly various are the points that have been raised, and a ruling given on each. The whole method of conducting Buddhist monasticism for those who follow the Pali Vinaya is contained in this and amounts to a very complete system. All doubts as to what is allowable and what is not, or all doubts as to how to act either in conclave or as an individual may be resolved by referring to the discipline that has been laid down. All misdoings, whether serious or nor, have their appropriate penalty attached to them. Behaviour is right if it promotes one's own progress along the Way or that of others. As such it is skillful, kusala.

As the Bhikkhunī-Pātimokkha or Vibhaṅga follows the Bhikkhu- (called the Great, mahā-) Vibhaṅga, so in the Cullavagga, at the close of the legalised rules and proceedings governing the life of monks, there follows a Section devoted to the Order of nuns. It begins with an account of the formation of this Order, and contains the important statement, attributed to Gotama, that women are capable of attaining arahantship. The eight important rules (found also in Monks' Bu-Pc.21) are then laid down, their adoption by Mahā-pajāpatī, the instigator of the Order of nuns, constituting her ordination. The remainder of this Section is taken up with regularising for nuns the recital of the Pātimokkha, the confession of offences, the settlement of legal questions, and their exhortation, and so forth. Then come incidents told so as to establish various offences of wrong-doing and various "allowances". There follows on this the method to be followed for the second ordination of nuns, that by monks, after they have been ordained by nuns as laid down in the Nuns' Pācittiyas. After more offences of wrong-doing, there is a reversion to ordaining, this time through a messenger, and finally more offences of wrong-doing and more "allowances".

In this Section there is included the prohibition of forest-dwelling for nuns (Kd.20.23), a prohibition not, I believe, precisely repeated elsewhere. This reduces the number of their "resources" to three, instead of four, as for monks. It is said that if a nun stays in a forest there is an offence of wrong-doing. But in Nuns' Formal Meeting 3 (Vin.4.230), it is said that a nun incurs a grave offence if, while she is in a forest, she goes out of sight or hearing of her companion nun, and an offence entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order once she has got outside. The whole of this amounts to saying that nuns may pass through a forest if they go two together, but that they must not stay in one either together or separately. This was for the sake of their security.

Another interesting point is that nuns, on returning to the Order after they had joined one of the other sects, should not be ordained again. This privilege could be extended to monks, provided that they first underwent a four months' probation (Kd.1.38.1). Life for nuns was probably harder than it was for monks. In spite of the sympathy and justice with which their troubles were met, they were to some extent discriminated against. I have referred to this on my Introduction at BD.3.xxxix; and in the notes to Volumes BD.4 and BD.6 have mentioned such discrepancies as occur between the penalties inflicted on monks and on nuns for similar behaviour. Possibly the only exception to the general trend of the heavier penalty being imposed on a nun is in the case of "giving a blow to a monk". Here, if a nun does so, her offence is ranked as one of wrong-doing while, if a monk strikes another monk, his offence is one of expiation (see below, Vin.5.371).

In the Monks' Bu-Pd.1, because "women obtain things with difficulty" (BD.3.104) it was made an offence to be confessed if a monk accepted, with certain reservations, food from the hand of a nun who was not a relation. But in the Cullavagga a nun is to offer any food there is in her bowl to a monk (Kd.20.13.2). On the other hand, monks could offer nuns food that had been stored (Kd.20.15.1) if they had more than they wanted for themselves; and if nuns were short of lodgings the monks might give them some temporarily, again if they had more than they wanted (Kd.20.16.1).

A great number of women are traditionally held to have flocked to the Order of nuns. It is conceivable that they were generally regarded as of poorer quality than the monks, and that therefore there had to be a severer testing in order to weed out those who had entered without having a real vocation. It is significant that in the Etad Aggas of the Aṅguttara there are for monks forty-seven classes of attainments and forty-one monks said to be chief in them (for some are chief in more than one attainment), while for nuns there are only thirteen classes of attainments, as many nuns being chief in them. Among the former Nandaka is called the chief of monks who exhort nuns. I have referred to the vicissitudes attendant upon the legalisation of the exhortation for nuns at BD.3.xli, and can here only mention what looks like a general injunction for nuns to follow when monks fail them: pāsādikena sampādetu, struggle on, labour on in friendliness (see below, Vin.5.366).

At the end of Section Kd.21, on the Council of Rājagaha, because exactly five hundred monks were there, it is said that this “chanting of the discipline” vinayasaṃgīti, is in consequence called that of the Five Hundred. To speak of a “chanting of discipline” is rather a curious and limited description.¹ For it is expressly said in Vin.5.118 that Ānanda undertook to answer questions on dhamma, and beginning with the Brahmajāla and the Sāmaññaphala Suttantas, did in fact answer corresponding questions about the five Nikāyas. This is no less a feat than that performed by Upāli, the great Vinaya expert, who, having answered questions about the four Pārājika offences, then went on to answer questions about the two disciplines, ubhatovinaye, as told in Kd.21.1.7. All the questions on dhamma and discipline were put by the learned Kassapa the Great. It seems that this elder, reacting to Subhadda’s unsatisfactory attitude to Gotama’s death, with great prevision suggested to the other monks that dhamma and discipline should be chanted before not-dhamma and not-discipline should shine out and dhamma and discipline be withheld (Kd.21.1.1). The final name: “chanting of the discipline” seems therefore to sum up only half the proceedings dealt with at the first Council. This Council or Conference was held shortly, some Commentaries say three months, after Gotama had died. The record of this Council is of the utmost importance as the tradition—oral only, it is true—of a dhamma that was taught and a discipline that was laid down if not wholly by the Founder himself, at all events while he was still alive.

How far their recital was well based and well carried out is brought into a little doubt by the episode of the monk Purāṇa, the Old One, who told the elders he would remember dhamma and discipline just as he had heard and learnt them in the Lord’s presence. His words: “Well chanted by the elders”, are polite, but he was apparently not quite convinced.

BD.5.xvi

According to Section Kd.21, discipline was recited before dhamma. The rather bald narrative gives no reason. The Commentaries however come forward with an explanation.² They say that Kassapa asked the monks whether dhamma or discipline should be chanted first, and the monks replied: “Discipline is called the āyu, the life or vitality, of the Buddha’s dispensation; while the discipline stands, the dispensation stands. Therefore let us chant discipline first.” The same sentiment is expressed in the verse inserted before the uddāna, the key, at the end of Section Kd.1 of the Mahāvagga. (BD.4.127). The underlying notion is that discipline is primarily concerned with sīla, or purification of the ways of acting in body and speech, and therefore with the first of the three categories into which the whole sāsana, dispensation or teaching, is graded.

¹ Noticed by OLDENBERG, Vinaya Piṭakam, vol.i, p.xxix, note. ² Vin-a.i.13; DN-a.i.11.

The remainder of Section Kd.21 is devoted to Ānanda. He is the central figure. Feeling that it was not suitable in him to go to the Council while he was still a sekha, a learner, he made an effort to realise arahantship and, at a moment when no part of him was touching the earth, his mind was freed from the cankers. As DN-a.i.10 rightly points out, when it is said: “in this teaching when a monk attains arahantship neither lying nor sitting down, neither standing nor pacing up and down”, it is to be said of Ānanda. The DN-a goes on to say that Ānanda, now thinking he was fit to enter the assembly, delighted and rejoicing, went there shining like a full moon on a cloudless night, like a lotus blooming at the sun’s touch, his face pure and radiant as though he were announcing his attaining of arahantship. But the Commentary (Vin-a.i.12–13) gives a different version, and one that at DN-a.i.11 is ascribed to the Majjhima-bhāṇakas, or repeaters, of how he went to the Council. According to this: “Ānanda, not wishing to tell of his attainment of arahantship, did not go with the monks. They asked whom an empty seat was for, and hearing it was for Ānanda, asked where he had gone. At this moment he thought: ‘Now is the time for me to go,’ and displaying his psychic power, plunging into the earth, he showed himself as it were in his own seat. Some say he sat down after going through the air.”

BD.5.xvii

His arahantship, however, did not appear to have commanded much respect. After the Council was over, he told the elders what the Lord had said at the time of his parinibbāna about abolishing the “lesser and minor rules of training”. This acted like a goad on the elders and they charged him with one offence of wrong-doing after another—all of which must have been committed before he attained arahantship, even the imputed offence of allowing women, to weep and lament beside Gotama’s body. I know of no other occasion recorded in the Pali canon where an arahant is asked to confess offences said to have been committed by him before gaining liberation. This episode therefore not only puts the accusing elders in a very dubious light, it also indicates that offences of wrong-doing could be invented after Gotama's death. But as the offences with which Ānanda was charged were all concerned with the Founder himself, they are not likely to be repeated.

What must be regarded as a more dignified and correct attitude was taken, later, by Ānanda himself when he was sent to inflict the supreme or highest penalty, brahmadaṇḍa, on Channa (Kd.21.1.15). Channa was so much overcome by the thought of submitting to this penalty of ostracism that he took himself seriously in hand and won arahantship—the second monk recorded in this Section to do so. Ānanda then tells him that from the moment he won it the highest penalty became revoked—automatically—for him. This is the Channa who was Gotama's charioteer while he was still the Bodhisatta. It was because of his affection for Gotama, and then because of his pride in "our Buddha, our dhamma", that he was unable to carry out the samaṇadhamma, the rule for recluses (Thag-a.i.166), until he had received the emotional shock, samvega, of the imposition of the supreme penalty on him.

Oldenberg states (Vinaya Piṭakam i.xxvii) that the story of the First Council as it has come down to us in the Cullavagga, "is not history, but pure invention and, moreover, invention of no very ancient date". He bases his argument on a comparison with the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta which, while it contains passages word for word the same as in the Cullavagga, yet makes no allusion either to Kassapa's proposal for holding a Council or to the Council itself. Oldenberg concludes that "the author" of the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta did not know anything of the First Council. Certainly his silence is otherwise hard to account for unless we allow that "he" (the author, who should rather be spoken of as the compiler or compilers) did not want to refer to it. We are accustomed in the Pali canon to finding the same stories running parallel up to a certain point and then turning off into different endings. It is possible that we have such a case here; and that the opening part of Kd.21 was told so as to lead up to the proposal to convene a Council, while the same story was told in the Dīgha (with the transposition of the Subhadda incident) so as to lead up to the account of the disposal of the relics. This affected the Buddha's body, whereas the Council of Rājagaha was held in the attempt to get clear precisely what had been his dhamma and discipline. Recited by 500 elders, it could carry weight.

Nevertheless, the Pali recension of the Council may be neither wholly correct nor wholly complete. It is one of several versions stemming from different schools and whose canons may vary from sect to sect. The late Professor PRZYLUŚKI was of the opinion that, in respect of this Council, the Sūtras may contain older material than the Vinayas. He collected a number of versions of both and presented them, translated into French, in his valuable work: Le Concile de Rājagṛha, Paris, 1926. The student is referred to this book; he will then be able to make any comparisons he wishes between the Pali Vinaya account and the others. For it is not a necessary function of this Sacred Books of the Buddhists Series to stray from the Pali texts themselves.

Section Kd.22, that on the Second Council, held at Vesālī a “century” after Gotama's parinibbāna—a century being “no doubt a round number”¹—is more truly characterised at its end as “a chanting of discipline” than is Section Kd.21. For this chanting by the 700 monks is concerned with ten points of discipline only, and whether these could not be relaxed. The very fact that they were called in question shows that, in the years that had passed since Gotama's death, a less austere attitude, a more demanding note had crept in. It was to determine which was to be followed—the less austere attitude or the more austere one—that this Council was held.

BD.5.xix

It was ultimately the monk Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, who was responsible for the “chanting of discipline” which, limited to the ten points, was the subject before the Council of Vesālī. Various Commentaries recognise this (e.g. AN-a.ii.10; MN-a.iv.114) by referring to this chanting as Yasattherassa saṃgīti, the Recital of the Elder Yasa. He got the laypeople on his side by telling them three stories where Gotama had denounced the acceptance of gold and silver by monks—the tenth point, and possibly the most important; and that he aroused much interest among the monks is clear from the records. The endless disputations that arose, the speeches made whose meanings were not clear (Kd.22.2.7), impelled the elder Revata, whose opinion on the ten points in question coincided with Yasa's, to select a referendum of eight monks to settle the points. Their decision still holds good today in Theravādin countries. In the traditional way of the democratic Order, all the monks present were asked to agree on the eight elders proposed by Revata. They further agreed on a ninth monk, Ajita, to appoint the seats for the elders who would be listening to the proceedings.

¹ Vinaya Texts i, Introduction, p.xxii.

The exact place in Vesālī where the Council was held is doubtful. The Vinaya (Kd.22.2.7) says it took place in the Vālika monastery, as does the Mahāvamsa; but the Dīpavamsa lays the scene in the Hall of the Gabled House. It is perhaps of no great importance, except as adding to the confusion which surrounds the legends of the Councils. What the Vinaya record of the Council of Vesālī clearly indicates is that there was enough dissatisfaction among certain monks to bring about a schism, if not checked, with the attendant danger of dhamma turning into not-dhamma and discipline into not-discipline.

It may be asked why the Cullavagga is rounded off by the Sections dealing with the first two Councils, and which make the Cullavagga longer by two Sections than the Mahāvagga. Whether they were a later addition or not, I can only suggest that they are included, reasonably and suitably as it seems to me, at the end of the enormously long compendium of discipline for monks and nuns so as to give a culminating authority and sanction to this discipline, which at the time of the Council of Vesālī, had been tested for a "century".

BD.5.xx

All the words spoken by the Buddha between his attainment of supreme self-awakening and his parinibbāna have but the one flavour, that of freedom (see Kd.9.1.4, etc., and Vin-a.i.16, DN-a.i.16). This is a characteristic of the Buddhavacana. Freedom is to be sought and realised by those who have entered on the Way. For their help and guidance there are two parts of the Buddhavacana, namely dhamma and discipline. It is no fault of the Pali canon if later generations have split the frequently occurring compound of dhammavinaya into its two component parts, and have treated each as if it functioned more or less in isolation from the other. Dhamma is rooted in discipline; and discipline is always bordering on dhamma, as sīla is on samādhi and both on paññā, intuitive wisdom, to give point and substance to all its rules, regulations, offences and allowances. All the time it is training disciples to attain sufficient habitual purity ultimately to enter into the goal of Wisdom, even of that “great wisdom” of which Sāriputta, “beloved” above all other disciples, was said to be the chief (AN.i.23). The Discipline, rigid and strict, is preliminary to and usually necessary to the flowering of Wisdom. Without the control of body and speech (discipline, moral habit), without mind-control (concentration), the full expansion of wisdom may never come to be. Discipline therefore, at the beginning of the training, “is a teaching of commands, āṇādesanā, being taught by the Lord in respect of a multitude of commands for those meriting commands” (Vin-a.i.21, DN-a.i.19).

Practically every conceivable thing affecting monastic life for monks and nuns, practically every conceivable relation with other human beings, whether fellow monks or nuns or the laity, are brought under review and legislated for in minutest detail through the seven classes of offence, through the “allowances”, and through the most important and the regularly recurring events in a monk’s life: Ordination, Observance, Invitation, the rains-residence, the making up of new robe-material; through the seven official formal acts of the Order, beginning with that of censure, and through the suspension of the Pātimokkha. It is a very complete system, a very precise organisation marked throughout by the humaneness and reasonableness of Gotama, the codifier to whom with but few exceptions every ruling is ascribed.

BD.5.xxi

I.B. HORNER

London, December 1951.

11. THE FOLLOWERS OF PAṄDUKA AND LOHITAKA (PAṄDULOHITAKA)

Praise to the Lord, the Perfected One, the Fully Self-Awakened One

ACT OF CENSURE

Kd.11.1.1
Vin.2.1
BD.5.1

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvattḥī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time monks who were followers of Paṅduka and Lohitaka¹ and who were themselves makers of strife,² makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of contention,³ makers of legal questions in an Order,⁴ having approached other monks who were also makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, spoke thus (to them): “Do not you, venerable ones, let this one defeat⁵ you; argue loud and long, for you are wiser and more experienced and have heard more and are cleverer than he is, do not be afraid of him, and we will be on your side.” Because of this, not only did strifes arise which had not arisen before, but also strifes which had arisen rolled on to increase and magnitude.

¹ These were two out of the group of six monks; cf. Vin.5.8ff. below. See BD.1.275, n.3; BD.1.314, n.2. Mentioned at Vin-a.614; MN-a.iii.187 says that having taken their own company (of followers) they lived in Sāvattḥī. The Satapatta Jātaka (Ja.279) was, so it is claimed, given in reference to these monks. ² Cf. Vin.4.45 and see BD.2.253, n.1, for further references to these five terms. Since they all refer to disputes about legal questions, the references given at Vinaya Texts ii.329, n.2, to various Pācittiyas hardly apply. See also BD.4.,224, BD.4.230f., BD.4.488f., BD.4.510f. ³ Cf. Vin.4.45 and see BD.2.253, n.1, for further references to these five terms. Since they all refer to disputes about legal questions, the references given at Vinaya Texts ii.329, n.2, to various Pācittiyas hardly apply. See also BD.4.224, BD.4.230f., BD.4.488f., BD.4.510f. ⁴ Cf. Bu-Ss.8, Bu-Ss.9, Bu-Ss.10, etc. ⁵ mā eso ajesi.

Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticized, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife, makers of quarrels, makers of disputes makers of contention, makers of legal questions in an Order, having approached other monks who are also makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, speak thus to them: ‘Do not you ... and we will be on your side.’ Because of this ... also strifes which had arisen rolled on to increase and magnitude.” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka are themselves makers of strife ... having approached other monks who are also makers of strife ... speak thus to them: ‘Do not you ... and we will be on your side’? And that because of this ... strifes which have arisen roll on to increase and magnitude?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“It is not suitable, monks, it is not becoming in these foolish men, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men who are themselves makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, speak thus: ‘Do not you ... and we will be on your side’? And because of this ... strifes which have arisen roll on to increase and magnitude. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased nor for increasing the number of those who are pleased, but, monks, it is displeasing to those who are not pleased as well as to those who are pleased, and it causes wavering in some.”

Then the Lord, having rebuked these monks, having in many a figure spoken in dispraise of difficulty in supporting and maintaining oneself, of great desires, of lack of contentment, of clinging (to the obstructions), of indolence; having in many a figure spoken in praise of ease in supporting and maintaining oneself, of desiring little, of contentment, of expunging (evil), of punctiliousness, of graciousness, of decreasing (the obstructions),

Kd.11.1.2

BD.5.2

Vin.2.2

Kd.11.1.3

of putting forth energy,¹ having given reasoned talk on what is becoming, on what is fitting for them, addressed the monks, saying:

“Well now, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of censure² against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka.

Kd.11.1.4

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out; First, the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka should be reprovved; having reprovved them, they should be made to remember; having remembered, they should be accused of an offence; having accused them of an offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, having approached other monks who are also makers of strife ... makers of legal questions in an Order, spoke thus (to them): “Do not you ... and we will be on your side”. Because of this, not only did strifes arise which had not arisen before, but also strifes which had arisen rolled on to increase and magnitude. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife ... rolled on to increase and magnitude. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. If the carrying out of a (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka and who are themselves makers of strife ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. A (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka is being carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

BD.5.3

¹ Cf. Vin.3.21 (BD.1.37), Vin.1.45, Vin.1.305 for this passage. ² tajjanīyakamma. Cf. Kd.1.25.22 and Kd.9.7.1–Kd.9.7.5.

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

“Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be not legally valid and not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out not in the presence of,¹ if it is carried out when there is no interrogation, if it is carried out without the acknowledgement.² Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be not legally valid, not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be one ... and one that is hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out when there is no offence, if it is carried out for an offence that does not lead on to confession,³ if it is carried out for an offence that has been confessed. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure ... one that is hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out without having reproved him, if it is carried out without having made him remember, if it is carried out without having accused him of an offence. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... one that is hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out not in the presence of, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... one that is hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out when there is no interrogation, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be ... hard to settle. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities a

Vin.2.3
Kd.11.2.1

BD.5.4

¹ See Kd.14.14.16ff., and Kd.9.6.1. Vin-a.vi.1155 says it is not carried out in the presence of the Order, dhamma and discipline, the individual, and is carried out without having reproved him, without having asked him (to consent) and without his having acknowledged it. ² I.e. of the accused monk. ³ adesanāgāminiya, i.e. a Pārājika or Saṅghādisesa, whose penalties do not include censure or confession.

(formal) act of censure ... hard to settle: (that is to say) if it is carried out without the acknowledgement, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is no offence, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out for an offence that does not lead on to confession, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out for an offence that has been confessed, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out without having reproved him, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out without having made him remember, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly ... if it is carried out without having accused him of an offence, if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out by an incomplete assembly. If, monks, a (formal) act of censure is possessed of these three qualities it comes to be not legally valid and not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle.”

Told are the Twelve Cases of (Formal) Acts that are not legally valid

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

Kd.11.3.1

“Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities a (formal) act of censure comes to be a (formal) act that is legally valid and a (formal) act that is disciplinarily valid and one that is easily settled: (that is to say) if it is carried out in the presence of, if it is carried out when there is interrogation, if it is carried out with the acknowledgement. Monks, if it is possessed of these three qualities ... easily settled. And, monks, if it is possessed of three further qualities ... easily settled: (that is to say) if it is carried out when there is an offence, if it is carried out when there is an offence which leads on to confession, if it is carried out when an offence has not been confessed ... if it is carried out, having reproved him, if it is carried out, having made him remember, if it is carried out, having accused him of the offence ... if it is carried out in the presence of, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is interrogation, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out with the acknowledgement, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is an offence, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when there is an offence that leads on to confession, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out when an offence has not been confessed, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out having reprimanded him, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out having made him remember, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly ... if it is carried out having accused him of an offence, if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out by a complete assembly. If, monks, a (formal) act of censure is possessed of these three qualities it comes to be a (formal) act that is legally valid and a (formal) act that is disciplinarily valid and one that is easily settled.

Vin.2.4

BD.5.6

Told are the Twelve Cases of (Formal) Acts that are legally valid

SIX ON DESIRES

“Monks, if a monk is possessed-of three qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him: if he is a maker of strife, a maker of quarrels, a maker of disputes a maker of contention, a maker of legal questions in an Order; if he is ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them¹; if he lives in company with householders in unbecoming association with householders.² Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities an Order ... against him: if, in regard to moral habit, he comes to have fallen away from moral habit³; if, in regard to good habits, he comes to have fallen away from good habits; if, in regard to (right) views, he comes to have fallen away from (right) views. Monks, if a monk is possessed ... against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him: if he speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, if he speaks dispraise of dhamma, if he speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against him.

Kd.11.4.1

¹ āpattibahulo anapadāno; cf. Vin.1.321 (BD.4.461, n.1). ² Cf. Vin.4.321-322, and BD.3.207, n.1. ³ Cf. Vin.1.63 (BD.4.82).

Kd.11.4.2

BD.5.7

Monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of censure against three (kinds of) monks: against the one who is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in the Order; against the one who is ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them; against the one who lives in company with householders in unbecoming association with householders. Monks, if the Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of censure against these three (kinds of) monks. And, monks, if the Order desires, it may carry out ... against three further (kinds of) monks: against the one who, in regard to moral habit, comes to have fallen away from moral habit, against the one who, in regard to good habits, comes to have fallen away from good habits, against the one who, in regard to (right) views, comes to have fallen away from (right) views. Monks, if an Order desires ... against these three (kinds of) monks. And, monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out ... against three further (kinds of) monks: against the one who speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, against the one who speaks dispraise of dhamma, against the one who speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of censure against these three (kinds of) monks.

Vin.2.5

Told are the Six Cases on Being Desirous

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

Kd.11.5.1

“Monks, when a (formal) act of censure has been carried out against a monk, he should conduct himself properly. This is the proper conduct in this case¹: he should not ordain, he should not give guidance,² a novice should not attend him,³ the agreement for him to exhort nuns⁴ should not be consented to, and even if he is agreed upon nuns should not be exhorted (by him), he should not fall into that (same) offence for which a (formal) act of censure came to be carried out against him by an Order, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, he should not find fault with the (formal) act,¹ he should not find fault with those who carry out the (formal) act, he should not suspend a regular monk's Observance,² he should not suspend his Invitation,³ he should not issue commands,⁴ he should not set up authority,⁵ he should not ask for leave,⁶ he should not reprove,⁷ he should not make remember, he should not quarrel⁸ with monks".

¹ Cf. below, Kd.12.1.2; Kd.20.20. ² Cf. Kd.1.36.1. ³ See Kd.1.36, Kd.1.37 for this trio. ⁴ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.21, and Kd.20.9.4.

BD.5.8

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Censure

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE SETTLED

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of censure against the monks who were followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. These, when the (formal) act of censure had been carried out against them by the Order, conducted themselves properly, were subdued, mended their ways, and having approached monks, they spoke thus: "We, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order, are conducting ourselves properly, we are subdued, we are mending our ways. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by us?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Well then, monks, let the Order revoke the (formal) act of censure against the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka.

Kd.11.6.1

"Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked: if he ordains, if he gives guidance, if a novice attends him, if he consents to the agreement for him to exhort nuns, if he exhorts nuns even although agreed upon. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked: if he falls into that (same) offence for which the (formal) act of censure was carried out against him by the Order, or into another that is similar, or into one that is worse, if he finds fault with the (formal) act, if he finds fault with those who carry out the (formal) act. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked.

Kd.11.6.2

¹ I.e. the act of censure, Vin-a.vi.1156. ² From here to end of Kd.11.5.2 recurs at Kd.11.27.1 (end). Cf. also Vin.5.1020. ³ Cf. Kd.4.16.2. ⁴ na savacaniyaṃ kātabbhaṃ. Vin-a.1156 says: "I am doing the savacaniya of the venerable ones in this matter, do not go one footstep back from this residence while the legal question is not settled." The word savacaniya occurs again at Kd.2.1.2. See Vinaya Texts ii.338, n.6; Vinaya Texts ii.386, n.2. ⁵ anuvāda. Vin-a.1156 says "in a vihāra he should not take the chief place." ⁶ I.e. to ask questions; see Kd.2.16.1, Kd.4.16.1, Kd.4.16.2. ⁷ Cf. Kd.20.9.5. ⁸ sampayojeti, also meaning to associate. Vin-a.1156 gives both meanings, saying: "having joined one another, a quarrel should not be made." The sense of "to quarrel" here would be of disputing about legal questions. The foregoing prohibitions indicate that a monk undergoing "censure" is not expected to have no dealings with his fellow monks.

BD.5.9

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of eight qualities a (formal) act of censure should not be revoked: if he suspends a regular monk’s Observance, if he suspends his Invitation, if he issues commands, if he sets up authority, if he asks for leave, if he reproves, if he makes remember, if he quarrels with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of censure should not be revoked.”

Vin.2.6

Told are the Eighteen Cases where (a Formal Act of Censure) should not be revoked

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities a (formal) act of censure may be revoked: if he does not ordain, if he does not give guidance, if a novice does not attend him, if he does not consent to the agreement for exhorting nuns, if, although agreed upon, he does not exhort nuns. Monks, if a monk is possessed ... may be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities a (formal) act of censure may be revoked: if he does not fall into that (same) offence for which the (formal) act of censure came to be carried out against him, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, if he does not find fault with the (formal) act, if he does not find fault with those who carry out the (formal) act. Monks, if a monk ... may be revoked.

Kd.11.7.1

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of eight qualities a (formal) act of censure may be revoked: if he does not suspend a regular monk’s Observance, if he does not suspend his Invitation, if he does not issue commands, if he does not set up authority, if he does not ask for leave, if he does not reprove, if he does not make remember, if he does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of censure may be revoked.”

Told are the Eighteen Cases (where a Formal Act of Censure) may be revoked

“And thus, monks, should it be revoked: Those monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka, having approached the Order, having (each) arranged the upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on their haunches, having stretched forth their joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘A (formal) act of censure, honoured sirs, was carried out against us by the Order; but we are conducting ourselves properly, we are subdued, we are mending our ways; and we ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure’. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying:

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks, followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order, are conducting themselves properly, they are subdued, they are mending their ways, and they ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may revoke the (formal) act of censure for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks, followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka, against whom a (formal) act of censure was carried out by the Order, are conducting themselves properly, they are subdued, they are mending their ways, and they ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of censure. The Order is revoking the (formal) act of censure for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. If the revocation of the (formal) act of censure for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... should speak. The (formal) act of censure is revoked by the Order for the monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

Kd.11.8.1

Bd.5.10

Kd.11.8.2

Vin.2.7

Told is the First (Formal) Act: that of Censure

ACT OF GUIDANCE

BD.5.11 Now at that time the venerable Seyyasaka¹ was ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them; he lived in company with householders, in unbecoming association with householders.² So much so that the monks were done up³ with granting him probation, sending him back to the beginning, imposing mānatta, rehabilitating him.⁴ Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monk Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“It is not suitable, monks, it is not becoming in this foolish man, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. For how, monks, can this foolish man, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased, nor for increasing the number of those who are pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.2.8 “Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of guidance⁵ for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: ‘You should live in dependence⁶’.

Kd.11.9.2

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Seyyasaka should be reprovved; having reprovved him, he should be made to remember;

¹ At Vin.3.110ff. he is represented as committing the offence for which the first Saṅghādisesa was formulated. ² Cf. above, Kd.11.4.1. ³ pakata, done away with; so, exhausted, worn out, “fed up.” ⁴ As Vinaya Texts ii.343, n.1 indicates, it is not clear why a Saṅghādisesa should be attributed to Seyyasaka, but it suggests that the answer may appear at Vinaya Texts ii.384, n.1. The text may have in mind Vin.3.110 (see above, BD.5.10, n). Certainly there is a tradition connecting Seyyasaka with the Saṅghādisesa type of offence. There was for monks no recognised offence incurring a penalty if they lived in association with householders.

⁵ nissayakamma. Cf. Kd.1.25.22; Kd.9.7.6, Kd.9.7.14. ⁶ nissāya. Cf. BD.4.79, BD.4.100f.

having made him remember, he should be accused of the offence; having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: “You should live in dependence.” This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, ignorant, inexperienced ... rehabilitating him. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: “You should live in dependence”. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of guidance, saying: “You should live in dependence”, for the monk Seyyasaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. A (formal) act of guidance, saying: “You should live in dependence,” is being carried out by the Order for the monk Seyyasaka. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

BD.5.12

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

“If a monk, monks, is possessed of three qualities ... (= Kd.11.2-Kd.11.5. Instead of (formal) act of censure, by carrying out a (formal) act of censure read (formal) act of guidance, by carrying out a (formal) act of guidance) ...

Kd.11.10.1

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

(Note by Sujato: This and following sections, which consist of variations on the preceding, were omitted in Horner’s translation.)

SIX ON DESIRING

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Guidance

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka, saying: “You should live in dependence.” After the (formal) act of guidance had been carried out by the Order, he, choosing, associating with, visiting friends who were lovely¹ (in deed), making them recite, interrogating them, came to be one who had heard much,² one to whom the tradition was handed down; an expert in dhamma, an expert in discipline, an expert in the headings; experienced, wise, modest, scrupulous, desirous of the training; he conducted himself properly, was subdued, and mended his ways; and, having approached monks, he spoke thus: “I, your reverences, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued and am mending my ways. What line of conduct should be followed by me? “They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.13

“Well then, monks, let the Order revoke the (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka.

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

Kd.11.11.2

Vin.2.9

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... (=Kd.11.6.2-Kd.11.7.1 Instead of (formal) act of censure read (formal) act of guidance) ... may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases (where a Formal Act of Guidance) may be revoked

Kd.11.12.1

“And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, the monk Seyyasaka, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways; I ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance’. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for.

Kd.11.12.2

¹ kalyāṇamitta; cf. Dh.375. Or the word may be in the technical sense of a spiritual adviser, as at SN.v.3. ² As at Vin.1.119, Vin.1.337, Vin.4.158, etc.

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways; he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may revoke the (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Seyyasaka, for whom a (formal) act of guidance was carried out by the Order, is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways; he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance. If the revocation of the (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The (formal) act of guidance for the monk Seyyasaka is revoked by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

BD.5.14

Told is the Second (Formal) Act: that of Guidance

ACT OF BANISHMENT

Now at that time¹ unscrupulous, depraved monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasu were in residence at Kiṭṭāgiri. They indulged in the following kinds of bad habits: they planted and caused to be planted small flowering trees; they watered them and had them watered; they plucked them and had them plucked; they tied them up into (garlands) and had them tied up; they made garlands and had them made with a stalk on one side; they made garlands and had them made with a stalk on both sides; they made and had a branching flower-stalk made; they made a wreath and had one made; they made a garland worn round the forehead and had one made; they made and had an ear-ornament made; they made and had a breast-plate made. These (monks) took or sent garlands having a stalk on one side to wives of reputable families, to daughters of reputable families, to girls of reputable families, to daughters-in-law of reputable families, to female slaves of reputable families. They took or sent garlands having a stalk on both sides; they took or sent a branching flower-stalk; they took or sent a wreath ... a garland worn round the forehead ... an ear-ornament ... a breastplate. These ate from one dish together with wives of reputable families, with daughters of reputable families, with girls of reputable families, with daughters-in-law of reputable families, with women slaves of reputable families; and they drank from the same beaker; they sat down on the same seat; they shared one couch; they shared one mat; they shared one coverlet; they shared one mat and coverlet. And they ate at the wrong time; and they drank intoxicants; and they wore garlands and used perfumes and cosmetics; they danced and sang and played musical instruments, and they sported. They danced when she danced; they sang when she danced; they played musical instruments when she danced; they sported when she danced; they danced when she sang ... they danced when she played musical instruments ... they danced when she sported ... they sported when she sported.

Vin.2.10

¹ The whole of 13 occurs at Bu-Ss.13.1.1-Bu-Ss.13.1.7. See BD.1.314-322 where notes are given.

BD.5.15

Kd.11.13.2

They played on a chequered board for gambling; they played on a draught-board: they played with imagining such boards in the air; they played a game of keeping stepping on to diagrams; they played with spillikans ... at dice ... tip-cat ... brush-hand ... with a ball ... at blowing through toy pipes made of leaves ... with a toy plough ... at turning somersaults ... with a toy windmill ... with a toy measure of leaves ... with a toy cart ... with a toy bow ... they played a game of guessing at letters ... a mind-reading game ... a game of mimicking deformities ... they trained themselves in elephant lore ... horse lore ... carriage lore ... archery ... swordsmanship ... then they ran in front of an elephant ... a horse ... a chariot; now they ran backwards, now they ran forwards; and they whistled and they snapped their fingers and they wrestled and they fought with fists; and, having spread out their upper robes as a stage, they said to a dancing-girl: "Dance here, sister", and they applauded, and they indulged in various bad habits.

Kd.11.13.3

Now at that time a certain monk, having spent the rains among the people of Kāsī, while going to Sāvattthī so as to see the Lord, arrived at Kiṭā-giri. Then this monk, dressing early and taking his bowl and robe entered Kiṭāgiri for almsfood. He was pleasing whether he was approaching or departing, whether he was looking forward or looking behind, whether he was drawing in or stretching out (his arm), his eyes were cast down, he was possessed of pleasant deportment. People, having seen this monk, spoke thus:

“Who can this be like an idiot of idiots, like a fool of fools, like a very supercilious person? Who will go up to him and give him alms? Our masters, the followers of Assaji and Punabbasu are polite, genial, pleasant of speech, beaming with smiles, saying: ‘Come, you are welcome’. They are not supercilious, they are easily accessible, they are the first to speak. Therefore alms should be given to them.”

Vin.2.11

A certain lay follower saw that monk walking for almsfood in Kiṭāgiri; seeing that monk, he went up to him, and having gone up to him and greeted him, he said: “Honoured sir, are alms obtainable?”

BD.5.16

“No, sir, alms are not obtainable.”

“Come, honoured sir, we will go to (my) house.”

Kd.11.13.4

Then that lay follower, having taken that monk to his house and made him eat, said:

“Where, honoured sir, will the master go?”

“I will go to Sāvattḥī, sir, to see the Lord.”

“Then, honoured sir, in my name salute the Lord’s feet with your head and say: ‘Lord, the residence at Kiṭāgiri has been corrupted. At Kiṭāgiri are residing unscrupulous, depraved monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu. They indulge in the following bad habits ... they indulge in a variety of bad habits. Lord, those men who formerly had faith and were believing now have no faith and are not believing. Those who formerly were channels for gifts to the Order are now cut off; they neglect the well behaved monks, and the depraved monks stay on. It were good, Lord, if the Lord would send monks to Kiṭāgiri, so that this residence at Kiṭāgiri may be settled.’

“Very well, sir,” and that monk having answered the lay follower in assent, rising from his seat departed for Sāvattḥī. Gradually he approached Sāvattḥī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery and the Lord; having approached and greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. Now it is the custom for Awakened Ones, for Lords to exchange greetings with in-coming monks. So the Lord said to this monk:

“I hope, monk, that it is going well with you, I hope that you are keeping going, I hope you have accomplished your journey with little fatigue? And where do you come from, monk?”

“Things go well, Lord, I am keeping going, Lord, and I, Lord, accomplished my journey with little fatigue. Now, I, Lord, having spent the rains among the people of Kāsī, and while coming to Sāvattthī to see the Lord, arrived at Kiṭāgiri. Then I, Lord, dressing early, and taking my bowl and robe, entered Kiṭāgiri for almsfood. Then, Lord, a certain lay follower saw me as I was walking in Kiṭāgiri for almsfood, and seeing me, he approached, and having approached, he greeted me and said: ‘Honoured sir, are alms obtainable?’ ‘No, sir, alms are not obtainable I said. ‘Come, honoured sir, we will go to (my) house he said. Then, Lord, that lay follower, taking me to his house and feeding me, said: ‘Where, honoured sir, will the master go?’ I said: ‘I will go to Sāvattthī, sir, to see the Lord.’ Then he said: ‘Then, honoured sir ... may be settled’. Therefore, Lord, do I come.”

Vin.2.12

BD.5.17

Kd.11.13.6

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, asked the monks, saying:

“Monks, is it true, as is said, that monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, residing in Kiṭāgiri, are unscrupulous and depraved and indulge in the following bad habits: they plant small flowering trees ... indulge in a variety of bad habits ... and those men ... and the depraved monks stay on?”

“It is true, Lord.”

The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men indulge in bad habits such as these? How can they plant and cause small flowering trees to be planted, and water them and have them watered, and pluck them and have them plucked, and how can they tie them up into (garlands) and have them tied up? How can they make and have garlands made ...? How can they take and send ...? How can they eat ... drink ... sit ... stand ... eat ... drink ... run ... dance and sing and play musical instruments and sport ... play ... train themselves ... run

... run round facing ...? How can they whistle and snap their fingers and wrestle and fight with fists, and having spread out their upper robes as a stage, say to a dancing-girl: ‘Dance here, sister,’ and applaud and indulge in a variety of bad habits? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...”, and having rebuked them and given reasoned talk, he addressed Sāriputta and Moggallāna, saying:

“Do you go, Sāriputta and Moggallāna, and having gone to Kiṭāgiri, carry out a (formal) act of banishment¹ from Kiṭāgiri against those monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu; these are those who share your cells.”

Bd.5.18

“How, Lord, do we carry out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭāgiri against those monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu? These monks are fierce and rough.”

“Well then, Sāriputta and Moggallāna, go together with many monks.”

“Very well, Lord,” Sāriputta and Moggallāna answered the Lord in assent.

Kd.11.13.7

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out. First, the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu should be reprovved; having reprovved them, they should be made to remember; having made them remember, they should be accused of an offence; having accused them of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu are those who bring families into disrepute and are of evil conduct; their evil conduct is seen and also heard and respectable families corrupted by them are seen and also heard. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should carry out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu should not remain in Kiṭāgiri. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are ... seen and also heard. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu should not remain in Kiṭāgiri. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which they should not remain in Kiṭāgiri is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. The (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭāgiri against the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu by which they should not remain in Kiṭāgiri is carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

Vin.2.13

¹ pabbājaniyakamma. Cf. Kd.1.25.22; Kd.9.7.7.

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

Kd.11.14.1

BD.5.19

“Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities a (formal) act of banishment comes to be not legally valid, not disciplinarily valid and one that is hard to settle ... ¹ ...

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

FOURTEEN ON DESIRING

... against the one who speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if an Order desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against these three (kinds of) monks.

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him: if he is possessed of bodily frivolity,² if he is possessed of verbal frivolity, if he is possessed of bodily and verbal frivolity. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities ... against him: if he is possessed of bodily bad habits,³ if he is possessed of verbal bad habits, if he is possessed of bodily and verbal bad habits. Monks, if a monk ... a (formal) act of banishment against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities ... against him: if he is possessed of harming¹ by means of body, if he is possessed of harming by means of speech, if he is possessed of harming by means of body and speech. Monks, if a monk ... against him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of three further qualities, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him: if he is possessed of a wrong bodily mode of livelihood, if he is possessed of a wrong verbal mode of livelihood, if he is possessed of a wrong bodily and verbal mode of livelihood. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against him.

¹ As in Kd.11.2-Kd.11.4, reading “act of banishment” for “act of censure”. Chapter 14 above does not occur in Bu-Ss.13 ² kāyikena davena; Vin-a.1157 says this means physical enjoyment. Perhaps he takes food for fun or amusement or in sport, cf. AN.i.114, AN.ii.40, AN.ii.145, AN.iv.167. ³ Vin-a.1157 says this means a transgression of the rules of training laid down concerning the doors of the body.

“Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against three (kinds of) monks: against the one who is a maker of strife ... (as in Kd.11.4.2) ... against the one who speaks dispraise of the Order. Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against these three (kinds of) monks. And, monks, if an Order so desires it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against three further (kinds of) monks: against the one who is possessed of bodily frivolity, against the one who is possessed of verbal frivolity, against the one who is possessed of bodily and verbal frivolity ... against the one who is possessed of wrong bodily and verbal mode of livelihood. Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against these three (kinds of) monks.

Vin.2.14
Kd.11.14.2

BD.5.20

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

“Monks, a monk against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out should conduct himself properly. This is the proper conduct in this case ... (as in Kd.11.5) ... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Kd.11.15.1

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Banishment

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna at the head of an Order of monks, having arrived at Kiṭṭāgiri,² carried out a (formal) act of banishment from Kiṭṭāgiri against the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, by which

Kd.11.16.1

¹ Vin-a.1157 says this is called injury through not being trained in the rules of training laid down concerning the doors of the body. It means expulsion, nāsana, and ruin, vināsana.

² From here to the words, “It is true, Lord” = Bu-Ss.13.1.8 (Vin.3.183-4, translated with notes at BD.1.322-BD.1.324).

the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasu should not stay in Kitāgiri. When the (formal) act of banishment had been carried out by the Order, these did not conduct themselves properly, they were not subdued, they did not mend their ways, they did not ask the monks for forgiveness, they abused them, they reviled them, they offended by following a wrong course through desire, by following a wrong course through hatred, by following a wrong course through stupidity, by following a wrong course through fear; and they went away and they left the Order. Those who were modest monks looked down on, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out by the Order, not conduct themselves properly, not be subdued, not mend their ways? Why do they not ask for forgiveness from the monks? Why do they abuse and revile them? Why do they, following a wrong course through desire ... hatred ... stupidity ... fear, go away and leave the Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying:

BD.5.21

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out by the Order, do not conduct themselves properly, are not subdued, ... and leave the Order?”

“It is true, Lord.”

“How, monks, can these foolish men, against whom a (formal) act of banishment has been carried out by the Order, not conduct themselves properly ... and leave the Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, do not let the Order revoke the (formal) act of banishment.

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

Kd.11.16.2

Vin.2.15

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities the (formal) act of banishment against him should not be revoked: if he ordains ... (as in Kd.11.6.2-Kd.11.6.2)

... if he does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of banishment may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases where a (Formal) Act of Banishment may be revoked

“And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, that monk against whom the (formal) act of banishment has been carried out, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘A (formal) act of banishment, honoured sirs, was carried out against me by the Order, but I am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways. I ask for the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment’. And a second time it should be asked for, and a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying:

Kd.11.17.1

BD.5.22

Kd.11.17.2

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so, against whom a (formal) act of banishment was carried out by an Order, is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways, and he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may revoke the (formal) act of banishment against the monk So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so ... and he asks for the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment. The Order is revoking the (formal) act of banishment for the monk So-and-so. If the revocation of the (formal) act of banishment for the monk So-and-so is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

ACT OF RECONCILIATION

Now at that time the venerable Sudhamma¹ was a resident in the householder Citta's² Macchikāsaṇḍa,³ an overseer of new buildings, a constant adviser.⁴ Whenever the householder Citta wished to invite an Order or a group or an individual⁵ he did not invite the Order or the group or the individual without having asked the venerable Sudhamma for permission. Now at that time several monks who were elders—the venerable Sāriputta and the venerable Moggallāna the Great and the venerable Kaccāna the Great and the venerable Koṭṭhita the Great and the venerable Kappina the Great and the venerable Cunda the Great, and the venerable Anuruddha and the venerable Revata and the venerable Upāli and the venerable Ānanda and the venerable Rāhula⁶—walking on tour in Kāsī arrived in Macchikāsaṇḍa. The householder Citta heard that these monks who were elders had reached Macchikāsaṇḍa. Then the householder Citta approached these monks who were elders; having approached, having greeted these monks who were elders, he sat down at a respectful distance. As the householder Citta was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Venerable Sāriputta delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened him with talk on dhamma. Then the householder Citta, delighted ... gladdened with the venerable Sāriputta's talk on dhamma, spoke thus to the monks who were elders: "Honoured sirs, let the elders consent to come to a meal with me on the morrow." The monks who were elders consented by becoming silent.

Vin.2.16
BD.5.23

Kd.11.18.2

Then the householder Citta, having understood the consent of the monks who were elders, rising from his seat, having I greeted the monks who were elders, keeping his right side towards them, approached the venerable Sudhamma; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sudhamma, he ¹ Cf. Dh-p-a.ii.74ff., AN-a.i.386ff. Dh-p.73 is said to have been spoken off Sudhamma's account.

² At AN.i.26 called chief of lay followers who are speakers on dhamma. He is fully described in the Citta-saṃyutta, SN.iv.281ff. At AN.i.88 = SN.ii.235 he is named as a standard by which to measure disciples who are lay followers.

³ A woodland grove, vanasaṇḍa, according to SN-a.iii.91; a town according to Dh-p-a.ii.74 and AN-a.i.386, the latter adding "in the realm of Magadha".

⁴ dhuvabhattika usually means a "regular or constant diner". But bhattika is given this other meaning at Thig-a.267 (cf. Pali-English Dictionary), and seems justified above.

⁵ puggala, here meaning "monk".

⁶ This same list of great theras also occurs at Vin.4.66. For notes and further references, see BD.2.295.

stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, the householder Citta spoke thus to the venerable Sudhamma:

“Honoured sir, may master Sudhamma consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the elders.”

Then the venerable Sudhamma thought: “Formerly, when I the householder Citta wished to invite an Order or a group or an individual, he did not invite the Order or the group or the individual without having asked me for permission; but now he invites monks who are elders without having asked me for permission. This householder Citta is now corrupted, he is indifferent to me, detached from me”, and he spoke thus to the householder Citta: “No, householder, I do not consent.” And a second time ... And a third time did the householder Citta speak thus to the venerable Sudhamma: “Honoured sir, may master Sudhamma consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the elders.”

“No, householder, I do not consent.”

BD.5.24

Then the householder Citta thinking: “What can master Sudhamma, either consenting or not consenting, do to me?” having greeted the venerable Sudhamma, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Kd.11.18.3

Then, towards the end of that night, the householder Citta had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared for the monks who were elders. Then the venerable Sudhamma, thinking: “Suppose I were to see what has been prepared on behalf of the householder Citta for the elders?” having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the householder Citta; having approached, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then the householder Citta approached the venerable Sudhamma; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sudhamma, he sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Sudhamma spoke thus to the householder Citta as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

Vin.2.17

“Truly abundant, householder, is this solid and soft food prepared by you, but one thing is not here, that is to say sesamum cake.”

“Although, honoured sir, much treasure is to be found in the Awakened One’s words, just this is mentioned by master Sudhamma, that is to say sesamum cake. Formerly, honoured sir, some merchants of the Deccan¹ went to an eastern district² for trading and from there they brought back a hen. Then, honoured sir, that hen mated with a crow and produced a chick. And whenever, honoured sir, that chick wanted to utter the cry of a crow it uttered a “cockadoodle-doo” whenever it wanted to utter the cry of a cock it uttered a “caw”. In the same way, honoured sir, although much treasure is to be found in the Awakened One’s words, just this is mentioned by master Sudhamma, that is to say sesamum cake.”³

Kd.11.18.4

“You, householder, are reviling⁴ me, you, householder, are abusing me; this is your residence, householder, I will go away.”

BD.5.25

“Honoured sir, I am not reviling and abusing master Sudhamma; honoured sir, let master Sudhamma remain in Macchikāsaṇḍa delightful is the Wild Mango Grove⁵; I will make an effort for master Sudhamma in respect of the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings and medicines for the sick.” And a second time ... And a third time did the venerable Sudhamma speak thus to the householder Citta: “You, householder, are reviling me ... I will go away.”

“Where, honoured sir, will master Sudhamma go?”

“I, householder, will go to Sāvattthī to see the Lord.”

“Well then, honoured sir, tell the Lord everything that was said by you and that was said by me. But this, honoured sir, will not be surprising: that master Sudhamma should come back again to Macchikāsaṇḍa.”

Kd.11.18.5

Then the venerable Sudhamma, having packed away his lodgings, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Sāvattthī. In due course he approached Sāvattthī, the Jeta Grove, Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery, the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sudhamma told the Lord everything that had been said by himself and that had been said by the householder Citta. The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked him,

Vin.2.18

¹ Dakkhiṇāpathakā. On the Southern region, Dakkhiṇāpatha, see B.C. LAW, India as described in Early Texts of Buddhism and Jainism, p.77ff. ² puratthīma janapada. ³ Vin-a.1158 says he speaks neither as a monk nor as a householder. ⁴ akkosati and paribhāsati are defined at Vin.4.309 (BD.3.344). ⁵ Ambātakavana. Pali-English Dictionary gives “hog-plum, Spondias Mangifera (a kind of mango)” for ambāṭaka, Critical Pali Dictionary adding “wild mango.” Cf. SN.iv.281ff.

saying:

“It is not suiting, foolish man, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, jeer at¹ the householder Citta, who has faith and is believing, who is a benefactor, a worker, a supporter of the Order, with a low thing, and scoff at him with a low thing? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” and having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation² for the monk Sudhamma, saying: ‘The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you.’”

Kd.11.18.6

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Sudhamma should be reproved, having reproved him, he should be made to remember, having made him remember, he should be accused of the offence, having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Sudhamma jeered at the householder Citta who has faith and is believing, a benefactor, a worker, a supporter of the Order, with a low thing, he scoffed at him with a low thing. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you”. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Sudhamma jeered at the householder Citta ... scoffed at him with a low thing. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you”. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you” is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... you should speak. A (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you” is carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

BD.5.26

¹ khurñseti, vambheti; occurring also at Vin.4.7 (BD.2.178). ² paṭisāraṇiyakamma. Cf. Kd.1.25.22, and Kd.9.7.8. At this latter passage the monk is said, not to jeer and scoff at the householder, but to revile and abuse him, while at Kd.1.18.5 above, it is the householder who is accused, by the monk, of reviling and abusing him.

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

Kd.11.19.1

“Monks, if it is possessed of three qualities, a (formal) act of reconciliation ... (=Kd.11.2, Kd.11.3) ...

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

... and is easily settled.

FOUR ON DESIRING

Kd.11.20.1

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities, the Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him¹: if he tries for non-receiving (of gains) by householders²; if he tries for non-profiting by householders; if he tries for non-residence for householders; if he reviles and abuses householders; if he causes householder to break with householder. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... act of reconciliation for him. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, the Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him: if he speaks dispraise of the Awakened One to householders, if he speaks dispraise of dhamma to householders, if he speaks dispraise of the Order to householders, if he jeers at a householder with a low thing, if he scoffs at him with a low thing, if he does not fulfil, according to rule, his assent (given) to householders.³ Monks, if a monk ... act of reconciliation for him. And, monks, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for five (kinds of) monks: for the one who tries for non-receiving (of gains) by householders; for the one who tries for non-profiting

Vin.2.19

BD.5.27

¹ Cf. AN.iv.345. ² Cf. Vin.1.84 (BD.4.106), BD.2.125 and AN.iv.345: Chapters 87 (monks), 88, 89 (householders). ³ On this last clause, see GS.iv.228, n.3. See especially Vin.1.153f., where the monk Upananda breaks his word and also tells a conscious lie to a householder. The particular type of offence incurred by this monk for breaking his word in regard to residence is formulated as one of wrong-doing. Vin-a.vi.1158 instances having accepted a rains-residence, and then not going to it.

by householders; for the one who tries for non-residence for householders; for the one who reviles and abuses householders; for the one who causes householder to break with householder. Monks, an Order ... for these five (kinds of) monks. And monks, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for five further (kinds of) monks: for the one who speaks dispraise of the Awakened One to householders ... of dhamma to householders ... of an Order to householders, for the one who jeers at a householder with a low thing, scoffs at him with a low thing, for the one who does not fulfil, according to rule, his assent (given) to householders. Monks, an Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation for these five (kinds of) monks.

Told are the Four times Five Cases on Being Desirous

EIGHTEEN DUTIES

“Monks, a monk for whom a (formal) act of reconciliation has been carried out should conduct himself properly ... (=Kd.11.5, reading act of reconciliation for act of censure) ... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Kd.11.21.1

Told are the Eighteen Observances connected with a (Formal) Act of Reconciliation

Then the Order earned out a (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma, saying: “The householder Citta should be asked to forgive you.” He, having gone to Macchikāsaṇḍa when the (formal) act of reconciliation had been carried out by the Order, becoming ashamed, was unable to ask the householder Citta to forgive him, and he went back again to Sāvattḥī. Monks spoke thus: “Did you ask the householder Citta to forgive you?”

Kd.11.22.1
BD.5.28

“Now, I, your reverences, having gone to Macchikāsaṇḍa, becoming ashamed, was unable to ask the householder Citta to forgive (me).” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.11.22.2

He said: “Well then, monks, let the Order give a companion messenger¹ to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him. And thus, monks should he be given: First, a monk should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the monk So-and-so as a companion messenger to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is giving the monk So-and-so as a companion messenger to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him. If the giving of the monk So-and-so as a companion messenger to the monk Sudhamma to ask the householder Citta to forgive him is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so is given by the Order to the monk Sudhamma as a companion messenger to ask the householder Citta to forgive him. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

Vin.2.20

Kd.11.22.3

“Monks, when the monk Sudhamma, together with the companion messenger monk, has reached Macchikasanda, the householder Citta should be asked to forgive him (Sudhamma using the words), ‘Forgive me, householder, I am at peace towards you’. If, while he is being spoken to thus, he forgives him, that is good; if he does not forgive, he should be spoken to by the companion messenger monk, saying: ‘Forgive this monk, householder, he is at peace towards you.’ If, while he is being spoken to thus, he forgives him, that is good; if he does not forgive, he should be spoken to by the companion messenger monk, saying, ‘Forgive this monk, householder, for I am at peace towards you.’ If ... that is good; if he does not forgive, he should be spoken to by the companion messenger monk, saying: ‘Forgive this monk, householder, (I ask it) in the name of the Order’. If ... that is good; if he does not forgive, the companion messenger monk, not having caused the monk Sudhamma to be dismissed from reach of the sight² of the householder Citta, not having caused him to be dismissed from reach of the hearing,

BD.5.29

¹ anudāta, travelling companion, and one with a definite function to fulfil in case of need, as appears below. Cf. Vin.2.295 where a monk Yasa for whom an act of reconciliation had been carried out, refers to this ruling and asks for an anudāta bhikkhu. ² Cf. BD.2.352, n.3.

having made him arrange his upper robe over one shoulder, having made him sit down on his haunches, having made him salute with joined palms,¹ should cause that offence to be confessed.”

Kd.11.23.1

Then the monk Sudhamma, together with the companion messenger monk, having reached Macchikāsaṇḍa, asked the householder Citta to forgive him. He conducted himself properly, he was subdued, he mended his ways, and having approached monks, he spoke thus: “I, your reverences, for whom a (formal) act of reconciliation was carried out by an Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order revoke the (formal) act of reconciliation for the monk Sudhamma.

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities, the (formal) act of reconciliation should not be revoked ... (= Kd.11.6.2–Kd.11.7) ...

Kd.11.23.2

EIGHTEEN CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

... does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities the (formal) act of reconciliation may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases (where a Formal Act of Censure) may be revoked

And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, that monk Sudhamma, having approached the Order ... (see Kd.11.12) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Kd.11.24.1
BD.5.30

Told is the Fourth (Formal) Act: that of Reconciliation

¹ Cf. Kd.4.5.6.

AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT SEEING AN OFFENCE

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Kosambī in Ghosita’s monastery. Now at that time the venerable Channa,¹ having fallen into an offence, did not want to see the offence.² Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Channa, having fallen into an offence, not want to see the offence?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monk Channa ... did not want to see the offence?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can this foolish man, having fallen into an offence, not want to see the offence? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of suspension³ against the monk Channa for not seeing his offence, (and there should be) no eating with an Order.⁴

Kd.11.25.2

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out. First, the monk Channa should be reprovved, having reprovved him, he should be made to remember, having made him remember, he should be accused of the offence; having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Channa, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act of suspension against the monk Channa for not seeing the offence (and there should be) no eating with an Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Channa, having fallen into an offence, does not want to see the offence. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of suspension against the monk Channa for not seeing the offence (and there should be) no eating with an Order. If the carrying out by the Order of a (formal) act of suspension against the monk Channa for not seeing his offence (and with) no eating with an Order, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, ... should speak. A (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence (and with) no eating with an Order, is carried out by the Order against the monk Channa. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’ And, monks, proclaim in residence after residence: ‘A (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence (and with) no eating with an Order has been carried out against the monk Channa.’

BD.5.31

¹ For further references, see BD.1.266, n.3. ² Cf. Kd.9.13, Kd.9.1.8. ³ ukkhapaniyakamma. Cf. Kd.1.25.22, and Kd.9.7.9. ⁴ asambhogarū saṃghena. Cf. Kd.1.79.2–Kd.1.79.4. At Vin.4.138 it is an offence of expiation to eat with a monk who is suspended. Two kinds of sambhoga, eating food and eating dhamma, are defined at Vin.4.137 (BD.3.29). The monk in the above Cullavagga passage is not deprived of “being in communion”, saṃvāsa, with the other monks for not seeing his offence. Cf. below, Kd.15.20.3.

Vin.2.22

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

“Monks, if a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence is possessed of three qualities it comes to be a (formal) act not by rule ... (see Kd.11.2–Kd.11.4) ...

Kd.11.26.1

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

SIX ON DESIRING

... Monks, if an Order so desires, it may carry out a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence against these three (kinds of) monks.”

Told are the Six Cases on Being Desirous in connection with a (Formal) Act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence

FORTY THREE DUTIES

“Monks, a monk against whom a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence has been carried out should conduct himself properly. This is proper conduct in this case¹: he should not ordain, he should not give

Kd.11.27.1

¹ This differs from the “proper conduct” of the other formal acts (Kd.11.5, Kd.11.10, Kd.11.15, Kd.11.21). Cf. Kd.22.1.2.

BD.5.32 guidance, a novice should not attend him, the agreement to exhort nuns should not be consented to (by him), even if he is agreed upon nuns should not be exhorted by him, he should not fall into that same offence for which the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence was carried out against him by an Order, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, he should not find fault with the (formal) act, he should not find fault with those who are carrying out the (formal) act, he should not consent to a regular monk's greeting him, standing up before him, saluting him with joined palms, performing the proper duties, bringing forward a seat, bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, the receiving of bowl and robe, treating his back by massaging, he should not defame a regular monk with falling away from moral habit, he should not defame him with falling away from good habits, he should not defame him with falling away from (right) views, he should not defame him with falling away from a right mode of livelihood, he should not cause monk to break with monk, he should not wear a householder's emblem, he should not wear an emblem of members of other sects,¹ he should not follow members of other sects, he should follow monks, he should train in the training for monks, he should not stay² in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk, he should not stay in what is not a residence³ under one roofing (with him), he should not stay in a residence or in what is not a residence under one roofing (with him), having seen a regular monk he should get up from his seat, he should not upbraid a regular monk either inside or outside,⁴ he should not suspend a regular monk's Observance,⁵ he should not suspend his Invitation, he should not issue commands, he should not set up authority, he should not ask for leave, he should not reprove, he should not make remember, he should not quarrel with monks.

Vin.2.23

Told are the Forty-Three Observances connected with a (Formal) act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence

Kd.11.28.1
BD.5.33

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence against the monk Channa (and with) no eating with an Order.

¹ Cf. Vin.1.306. ² Cf. below, Kd.12.1.4. ³ Cf. Vin.1.134, and BD.4.178, n.3. ⁴ Inside and outside a dwelling-place, according to Vin-a.1159. ⁵ From here to the end of Kd.11.27.1 = Kd.11.5.1.

He, when the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence had been carried out against him by the Order, went from that residence to another residence; there the monks neither greeted him, nor stood up before him, nor saluted with joined palms, nor performed the proper duties, nor revered, respected, esteemed or honoured him.¹ He, not being revered, respected, esteemed or honoured by these monks, then went unrevered from that residence to another residence; there too the monks neither greeted him ... he then went from that residence to another residence; there too the monks neither greeted him ... he, unrevered, went back again to Kosambī. He conducted himself properly, he was subdued, he mended his ways; having approached monks, he spoke thus: “I, your reverences, against whom a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing an offence was carried out by an Order, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways. What line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks let the Order revoke the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence against the monk Channa.

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

“If, monks, a monk is possessed of five qualities, a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence should not be revoked: if he ordains, if he gives guidance, if a novice attends him, if he consents to the agreement to exhort nuns, if, although agreed upon, he exhorts nuns. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... should not be revoked. And monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he falls into that same offence for which a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence was carried out against him by the Order, or into another that is similar, or into one that is worse, if he finds fault with a (formal) act, if he finds fault with those who carry out a (formal) act. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he consents to a regular monk’s greeting him, standing up before him, saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties, bringing forward a seat. Monks,

Kd.11.28.2

BD.5.34

¹ As at Kd.10.5.1.

if a monk ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he consents to a regular monk's bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, to receiving his bowl and robe, to treating his back by massaging. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities the (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence should not be revoked.

Vin.2.24

“And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he defames a regular monk with falling away from moral habit, if he defames him with falling away from good habits, if he defames him with falling away from (right) views, if he defames him with falling away from a (right) way of living, if he causes monk to break with monk. Monks, if a monk ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if he wears a householder's emblem, if he wears an emblem of other sects, if he follows members of other sects, if he does not follow monks, if he does not train in the training for monks. Monks, if a monk ... should not be revoked. And, monks, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be revoked: if, in a residence, he stays under one roofing with a regular monk, if in what is not a residence he stays under one roofing with him, if in either a residence or in what is not a residence he stays under one roofing with him, if, having seen a regular monk, he does not get up from his seat, if he upbraids a regular monk either inside or outside. Monks, if a monk ... should not be revoked. Monks, if a monk is possessed of eight qualities ... should not be revoked: if he suspends a regular monk's Observance, if he suspends his Invitation, if he issues commands, if he sets up authority, if he asks for leave, if he reproves, if he makes remember, if he quarrels with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence should not be revoked.

Told are the Forty-three Cases (where a Formal Act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence should not be revoked)

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

Kd.11.29.1
BD.5.35

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities, a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence may be revoked: if he does not ordain ... (This Chapter is the exact opposite of Kd.11.28.2) ... if he does not quarrel with monks. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities a (formal) act of suspension for not seeing his offence may be revoked.

Told are the Forty-three Cases (where a Formal Act of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence may be revoked)

“And thus, monks, should it be revoked: That monk Channa, having approached the Order ... (see Kd.12. Instead of act of censure read act of suspension for not seeing his offence) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Kd.11.30.1

Told is the Fifth (Formal) Act: that of Suspension for Not Seeing an Offence.

Vin.2.25

AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT MAKING AMENDS FOR AN OFFENCE

At that time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Kosambī in Ghosita’s monastery. Now at that time the venerable Channa, having fallen into an offence, did not want to make amends for the offence.¹ ... (= Kd.11.25-Kd.11.30. Instead of see read make amends for; instead of act of suspension for not seeing his offence read act of suspension for not making amends for his offence) ...

¹ Cf. Kd.9.5.1-Kd.9.5.9.

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

SIX ON DESIRING

FORTY-THREE DUTIES

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Told is the Sixth (Formal) Act: that of Suspension for Not making Amends for an Offence

AN ACT OF SUSPENSION FOR NOT RELINQUISHING A WRONG VIEW

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time a wrong view had arisen to a monk named Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, like this¹:

“In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord, it is that in following those things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, there is no stumbling-block at all.”

BD.5.36

Several monks heard: “A wrong view has arisen to the monk named Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, like this: ‘In so far as I understand ... there is no stumbling-block at all.’”

Then these monks approached the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, and having approached, they spoke thus to the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer:

¹ Down to the phrase, “It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” (towards the end of Kd.11.32.3) = Bu-Pc.68.1 (Vin.4.133-Vin.4.135) which then formulates a “rule of training.” Translated at BD.3.21-BD.3.24, with notes.

“Is it true, as is said, reverend Ariṭṭha, that a wrong view has arisen to you, like this: ‘In so far as I understand ... there is no stumbling-block at all?’”

“Undoubtedly, your reverences, as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord, it is that in following those things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, there is no stumbling-block at all.”

Kd.11.32.2

“Do not speak thus, reverend Ariṭṭha, do not misrepresent the Lord; misrepresentation of the Lord is not at all seemly, and the Lord certainly would not speak thus. Reverend Ariṭṭha, in many a figure are things that are stumbling-blocks called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, and in following these there is a veritable stumbling-block. Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be (things) affording little satisfaction, of much pain, of much tribulation, where in is more danger. Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be like a skeleton, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger. Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be like a lump of meat ... to be like a fire-brand of dry grass ... to be like a pit of glowing embers ... to be like a dream ... to be like something borrowed ... to be like the fruits of a tree ... to be like a slaughter-house ... to be like an impaling stake ... Sense-pleasures are declared by the Lord to be like a snake’s head, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger.”

Vin.2.26

Yet the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, on being spoken to thus by these monks, expressed that wrong view as before, obstinately holding to it, adhering to it: “Undoubtedly, your reverences, as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord, it is that in following those things called stumbling-blocks by the Lord, there is no stumbling-block at all.”

Kd.11.32.3

And since those monks were unable to dissuade the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer from that wrong view, then those monks approached the Lord; and having approached, they told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer, saying:

BD.5.37

“Is it true, as is said, that to you, Ariṭṭha, a wrong view like this arose: ‘In so far as I understand dhamma ... there is no stumbling-block at all?’”

“Undoubtedly, Lord, as I understand dhamma ... no stumbling-block at all.”

“To whom then do you, foolish man, understand that dhamma was taught thus by me? Are not, foolish man, things that are stumbling-blocks called in many a figure stumbling-blocks by me, and in following these is there not a veritable stumbling-block? Sense-pleasures are declared by me to be things affording little satisfaction, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger ... Sense-pleasures are declared by me to be like a snake’s head, of much pain, of much tribulation, wherein is more danger. And yet you, foolish man, not only misrepresent me because of your own wrong grasp, but you also injure yourself, and give rise to much demerit which for a long time will be for you, foolish man, of woe and pain. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view¹ against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, (and with) no eating with an Order.

Kd.11.32.4

“And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Ariṭṭha should be reprovved, having reprovved him he should be made to remember, having made him remember he should be accused of the offence, having accused him of the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. A wrong view has arisen to the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, like this: In so far as I understand dhamma taught by the Lord ... there is no stumbling-block at all. He does not give up this view. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. A wrong view has arisen ... He does not give up this view. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha

BD.5.38

Vin.2.27

¹ Cf. Kd.9.5.1-Kd.9.5.9.

who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order is pleasing to the venerable ones, let them be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this'. And, monks, proclaim in residence after residence: 'A (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view has been carried out against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer (and with) no eating with an Order.'

TWELVE ON AN ACT NOT BY RULE

"Monks, if a monk is possessed of three qualities ... (=Kd.11.2-Kd.11.5. Instead of did of censure read act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view) ...

Kd.11.33.1

TWELVE ON AN ACT BY RULE

SIX ON DESIRING

FORTY-THREE DUTIES

... if he does not quarrel with monks."

Told are the Eighteen Observances (connected with) a (Formal) Act of Suspension for Not Giving Up a Wrong View

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up his wrong view against the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer, (and with) no eating with an Order. He, when the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up his wrong view had been carried out against him by the Order, left the Order. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can this monk named Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer leave the Order when a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view is earned out against him by the Order?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying:

Kd.11.34.1

BD.5.39

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monk Ariṭṭha who was formerly a vulture-trainer left the Order when a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view was carried out against him by the Order?”

Vin.2.28

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can this foolish man leave the Order when a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view was carried out against him by the Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order revoke¹ the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view.

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD NOT BE REVOKED

Kd.11.34.2

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of five qualities ... (=Kd.11.6.2-Kd.11.6.7) ...

FORTY-THREE CASES THAT SHOULD BE REVOKED

... the (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view may be revoked.

Told are the Eighteen Cases where a (Formal) Act of Suspension for Not Giving Up a Wrong View may be Revoked

Kd.11.35.1

“And thus, monks, should it be revoked. Monks, that monk against whom a (formal) act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view has been carried out, having approached the Order ... (see Kd.11.12 Instead of act of censure read act of suspension for not giving up a wrong view. Instead of Seyyasaka read the monk So-and-so) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..’”

Told is the Seventh (Formal) Act: that of Suspension for Not Giving Up a Wrong View Told is the First Section: that on (Formal) Acts

IN THIS SECTION ARE SEVEN ITEMS: THIS IS ITS KEY

Monks who are followers of Paṇḍuka and Lohitaka,

BD.5.40

¹ As Oldenberg, Vin.2.310-Vin.2.311 remarks, “we should expect” mā (or na) paṭippassambhetu, let not revoke; cf. Kd.11.16.1.

11. THE FOLLOWERS OF PAṆDUKA AND LOHITAKA (PAṆDULOHITAKA)1901 themselves makers of strife, approached similar ones and incited them to strife, /

And strifes not arisen were born and those arisen expanded.
Modest, well behaved monks looked down upon. The expounder¹, /
The Awakened One, standing on what is verily dhamma, self-developing, foremost of men, conqueror, enjoined a (formal) act of censure at Sāvattḥī. /
And what is carried out not in the presence of,
when there is no interrogation, no acknowledgement, and what is carried out for no offence, for one not (leading on to) confession, for one confessed, /
And what is carried out not having reprov'd, not having made to remember, not having accused, and too what is carried out not in the presence of,
not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
Again what is carried out when there is no interrogation,
not by rule, by an incomplete assembly,
and too what is carried out not on the acknowledgement,
not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
And too what is carried out when there is no offence,
not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, and also for (an offence) which does not lead on to confession when it is not by rule and the assembly is incomplete, /
And likewise for one that is confessed, if also not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, and likewise not having reprov'd him, if also not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
And likewise not having made him remember,
not by rule, by an incomplete assembly, /
and likewise not having accused him,
not by rule, by an incomplete assembly. /
The bright occasions² should also be inferred exactly according to the dark occasions.
And the Order, so desiring, may carry out censure against this one: /
The quarrel (-maker), the ignorant, the liver in company with.
The Order may carry out a (formal) act of censure in regard to moral habit, good habits, against one who has fallen away from right views,³ /
And against whoever speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, dhamma, the Order, and the Order may also carry out a (formal) act of censure

Vin.2.29

BD.5.41

¹ padassaka (Sanskrit padarśaka). Sinhalese edition reads parassato; Siamese edition parisato (variant readings padassako, padassato). ² sukkavāra ... kaṇhavāra, figuratively pure and impure, right and wrong. ³ adhisilam ajjhācāre atidiṭṭhivipannassa.

against three (kinds of) monks: /
 The one who is a maker of strife, the ignorant one,
 the one intent on living in company;
 likewise in regard to moral habit, good habits, right views, /
 And against whoever speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, dhamma, the Order.
 The one against whom a (formal) act of censure has been carried out conducting himself properly, thus: / Ordination, guidance, attendance by a novice, the one against whom censure has been carried out should do nothing in regard to exhortation, even although agreed upon. /
 He should not fall into that same offence, into a similar one, or into one higher¹ than it, and such a one would neither find fault with a (formal) act, nor with those who carry it out, /
 He should not suspend a regular (monk's) Observance, Invitation, such a one should not have to do with commands, authority, /
 Leave, reproving, making remember and quarrels.
 Ordination, guidance, attendance by a novice, /
 Exhortation and even if agreed upon: the five qualities are not the end.²
 If he falls into that same offence and into a similar one and one that is higher than it, /
 And finding fault both with a (formal) act and with those who carry it out: this is not the end.
 Observance, Invitation, commands, authority, /
 Leave, reproving too, making remember, quarrelling, whoever is bound by these eight qualities, censure is not allayed for him.³ /
 The bright occasions should also be inferred exactly according to the dark occasions.
 And Seyyasaka too, ignorant, full of offences, living in company: /
 The Self-Awakened One, great sage, enjoined a (formal) act of guidance.
 (Followers of) the two monks, Assaji and Punabbasu, at Kiṭṭāgiri /
 Indulged in a variety of bad habits and were not talked round.
 The self-Awakened One, the Conqueror (enjoined) at Sāvattḥī (formal) act of banishment. /
 Sudhamma was a resident in Citta's Macchasanda,
 Sudhamma jeered at the lay follower Citta with talk on birth. /
 The Truth-finder enjoined a (formal) act of reconciliation.

BD.5.42

¹ Here tato param, higher, further, as against tato pāpiṭṭhatara of Kd.1.5.1. ² na sammanti, meaning does not cease, is not appeased, and signifying here that a formal act cannot be revoked because there are more than these five qualities to consider, and which may stand in the way of the revocation. Cf. sammanti at Dhp.5. ³ n' upasammanti.

11. THE FOLLOWERS OF PAṆDUKA AND LOHITAKA (PAṆDULOHITAKA) 1903

At Kosambī when the monk Channa, not wanting to see an offence, /
The incomparable Conqueror enjoined (the Order) to suspend him for not seeing.

Vin.2.30

Channa did not want to make amends for that same offence. /
The leader enjoined a (formal) act of suspension
for not making amends for.

The wrong view of Ariṭṭha was founded on ignorance. / Suspension for not giving up the wrong view was proclaimed by the Conqueror.

A (formal) act of guidance, banishment, likewise reconciliation, /
A (formal) act for not seeing, for not making amends for, and for not giving up a wrong view.

Frivolity, bad habits, harming, and also a wrong mode of livelihood: /
These are additional cases in the (formal) act of banishment.

Two fives (beginning): non-receiving, dispraise, are two pentads particularly named¹, /

These are additional cases in the (formal) act of reconciliation.

And two among the (formal) acts are similar: censure and guidance; /

And there are the remaining cases: banishment and reconciliation.

The three (formal) acts of suspension are alike in their division.

BD.5.43

What remains in any (formal) act is to understood as in the case of censure. /

¹ atināmaka; ati-, meaning very much, specially.

12. PROBATION (PARIVĀSA)

DUTIES ON ONE ON PROBATION

Vin.2.31
Kd.12.1.1
BD.5.44

At one time, the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time monks under probation¹ consented to regular monks greeting them, standing up before them, saluting with joined palms, doing the proper duties, bringing forward a seat, bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a foot-stand, receiving the bowl and robe, treating their backs by massaging. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who are under probation consent to regular monks greeting ... treating their backs by massaging?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are under probation consent to regular monks greeting ... treating their backs by massaging?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these monks who are under probation consent to regular monks ... treating their backs by massaging? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“A monk who is under probation, monks, should not consent to regular monks greeting him ... treating his back by massaging. Whoever should consent to (any of these actions), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, the mutual¹ greeting, standing up before ... treating of backs by massaging between monks who are under probation according to their seniority. I allow, monks, five things for monks under probation according to their seniority: Observance, Invitation, cloths for the rains, gifts (to the Order²) rice.

¹ Cf. Vin.1.143, also Vin.1.136, Vin.4.335-Vin.4.336. Vin-a.1159 notices four kinds of probation, parivāsa, all mentioned below: the unconcealed (as of former members of other sects, arid see Kd.3.1.1), the concealed (see Kd.3.3.1), the purifying (Kd.13.26.1ff.), and the concurrent (Kd.13.14.1ff.).

BD.5.45

Kd.12.1.2

Vin.2.32

“Well now, monks, I will lay down the conduct³ for monks under probation, so that monks under probation may conduct themselves⁴ according to it. A monk under probation, monks, should conduct himself properly.⁵ This is the proper conduct⁶ in this case⁷: he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him, he should not consent to an agreement to exhort nuns, even if agreed upon he should not exhort nuns, he should not fall into that same offence for which he was granted probation, nor into another that is similar, nor into one that is worse, he should not find fault with the (formal) act, he should not find fault with those who carry out the (formal) act, he should not suspend a regular monk’s Observance, he should not suspend his Invitation, he should not issue commands, should not set up authority, he should not ask for leave, he should not reprove, he should not make remember, he should not quarrel with monks. Nor, monks, should a monk under probation walk in front of a regular monk, nor sit down in front of him.⁸ Whatever is the Order’s last seat, last sleeping-place, last dwelling-place⁹—that should be given to him and he should consent to it. Monks, a monk under probation should not approach the families of a regular monk¹⁰ either as the novice who walks in front of him or as the novice who walks behind him. He should not undertake the forest-practice, he should not undertake the almsman’s practice,¹¹ he should not have almsfood taken back¹ for this reason:² that he thinks, ‘Do not let them find out about me’.³ Monks, a monk under probation should announce it⁴ when he is in-coming, he should announce it to (another who is) in-coming, he should announce it at the Observance, he should announce it at the Invitation, if he is ill he should also announce it by means of a messenger.⁵

BD.5.46

¹ mithu. ² oṇojana. Vin-a.1161 explains by vissajjana, bestowing. Cf. oṇojesi at Vin.1.39 and oṇojetha at Vin.4.156, both meaning “to give, to dedicate.” ³ vatta, custom, service, something to be done. Cf. Kd.1.27.1. ⁴ vattitabbam. ⁵ sammāvattitabbam. ⁶ sammāvattanā. ⁷ Cf. Vin.5.15. ⁸ These two actions are part of “intentional causing of discomfort” at Vin.4.290. ⁹ pariyanta. “Last” is used in the same sense at Bu-NP.22 See BD.2.120, n.5. In reference also to these three things “the last” would mean the last available as they were being assigned or distributed to members of the Order. But see āpattipariyanta, rattipariyanta, at Kd.13.26.1, and below, BD.5.76, n.1. ¹⁰ I.e. the families who support him and whom he visits for almsfood.

Kd.12.1.3

“Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger.⁶ Monks, a monk under probation should not go from, a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk under probation should not go from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks ... to what is not a residence where there are no monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence, or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks ... to what is not a residence where there are no monks ... to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger.

BD.5.47

“Monks, a monk under probation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk under probation should not go from residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks ... should not go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger.

¹¹ He should not stay alone in the forest and he should not go to a village for alms. These two aṅga or practices, part of the dhutaṅga, ascetic practices, are explained in detail at Vism.59ff. See Vin.1.253, and BD.4.351, n.2. ¹ nīharāpetabbo, i.e. from a village to a monastery. Cf. tato nīharitvā at Vin.4.80 (BD.2.324). ² tappaccayā. According to Vin-a.1165 monks returning to the monastery would see him sitting down are eating, and if he did not tell them he was under probation his period of probation might be curtailed. ³ I.e. that he is under probation. Vin-a.1165 says, “Do not let one monk find out about me’, and with this in mind he should not eat, having had it (i.e. the almsfood brought back) cooked in the dwelling-place by a novice. He must enter a village for almsfood.” ⁴ I.e. the fact that he is under probation. ⁵ Vin-a.1166 says that the messenger must not be anyone who is not ordained, he must be a monk. ⁶ Cf. Kd.2.35.

Vin.2.33

“Monks, a monk under probation may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’ Monks, a monk under probation may go from a residence where there are monks to what is not a residence where there are monks ... may go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’

“Monks, a monk under probation should not stay in a residence¹ under one roofing with a regular monk, he should not stay in what is not a residence² under one roofing (with him), he should not stay in a residence or in what is not a residence under one roofing (with him).³ Having seen a regular monk, he should get up from his seat. He should offer his seat to the regular monk. A monk under probation should not sit down on the same seat with a regular monk, he should not sit down on a high seat if he⁴ is sitting down on a low seat,⁵ he should not sit down on a seat if he is sitting on the ground, he should not pace up and down in the same place for pacing up and down in,⁶ he should not pace up and down in a high place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down in a low place for pacing

Kd.12.1.4

BD.5.48

¹ Vin-a.1167 here defines “residence”, āvāsa, as “a lodging made for staying in”. ² Vin-a.1167 here defines “not a residence” as a “shrine house (*cetiya*ghara), wisdom-house (*bodhi*ghara), a place (aṭṭaka) for sweepings, a place for wood, a building (māla, see BD.2.16, n.4) for drinking-water, a privy, a granary.” ³ Cf. Kd.1.27.1; Kd.1.28.2. ⁴ I.e. the regular monk. ⁵ Cf. Bu-Sk.69. ⁶ caṅkama, monks’ walk, cloister. At first, this seems not to have been prepared or leveled; then it was allowed to be made level or even, then to be roofed over. Cf. Kd.15.14.2, Kd.15.14.3.

up and down in, he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.¹

“Monks, a monk under probation should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a senior monk who is under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ... with a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation, he should not stay in what is not a residence under one roofing (with him) ... he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.

If, monks, one under probation as the fourth (member)² should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta (discipline), if, as twentieth (member) he should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.”

Told are the Ninety-four Observances for one under Probation

Kd.12.2.1

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, how many (kinds of) interruptions³ are there for a monk under probation?”

“There are three (kinds of) interruptions, Upāli, for a monk under probation: dwelling with⁴; dwelling away, separated from⁵; not announcing.⁶

Vin.2.34
BD.5.49

These, Upāli, are the three (kinds of) interruptions for a monk under probation.”

Kd.12.3.1

¹ Showing that “pacing up and down”, caṅkamanta, need not always have taken place in a caṅkama. ² Cf. Kd.9.4.6. One under probation does not complete a group or an Order, gaṇa and saṅgha. ³ ratticcheda, literally “breaking of nights”, time having been reckoned by nights instead of by days. ⁴ sahavāsa, which Vin-a.1168–Vin-a.1169 explains to mean any of the things given in Kd.12.1.4. ⁵ vippavāsa, as in Kd.12.1.3. Cf. vippavāsa in e.g. Bu-NP.2 See BD.2.13, n.1 and BD.2.14, n.1 for further references, and also Bu-NP.29 ⁶ anārocānā, as in the ways specified at end of Kd.12.1.2.

Now at that time a large Order of monks had gathered together at Sāvattḥī; monks under probation were not able to carry through¹ their probation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to postpone² probation. And thus, monks, should it be postponed: That monk who is under probation, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I am postponing probation’—probation comes to be postponed; ‘I am postponing the observance’,³—probation comes to be postponed.”⁴

Now at that time monks went away from Sāvattḥī to this place and that⁵; monks under probation were not able to carry through their probation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to take up⁶ probation. And thus, monks, should it be taken up: If that monk who is under probation, having approached one monk ... having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I am taking up probation’—probation comes to be taken up; ‘I am taking up the observance’—probation comes to be taken up.”

Told is the Observance for one under Probation

DUTIES OF ONE BEING SENT BACK TO THE BEGINNING

Now at that time monks who deserved to be sent back to the beginning⁷ consented to regular monks greeting them ... (= Kd.12.1.1, Kd.12.1.2. Instead of monks under probation read monks who deserve to be sent back to the

¹ sodhetum, to purify, cleanse, clear, so: to clear oneself of, to finish, to carry through. It was perhaps impossible for a monk to announce that he was under probation if the Order was very large or if it was dispersed. ² nikkhipitum, the Usual word for “to lay aside, to lay down, to deposit”, but here meaning to lay aside temporarily only, until a favourable time comes for undertaking the probationary period again. ³ vatta. See the 94 vattā to be observed by those under probation at Kd.12.1.2–Kd.12.1.4. ⁴ This and the corresponding phrase at end of Kd.12.3.2 below, although apparently meant to have been uttered by Gotama, do not end, as would be expected, with ti. ⁵ taham-taham, here and there. ⁶ samāditum, to take up or undertake again the probation imposed on the offending monk. ⁷ Cf. Kd.3.6.7.

beginning) ... ‘Do not let them find out about me’. Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’

Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk ... (=Kd.12.1.4) ... he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.

Vin.2.35

Monks, a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk under probation ... with a senior monk¹ ... with a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation ... he should not pace up and down in a place to pace up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground.

If, monks, one who deserves to be sent back to the beginning as the fourth (member) should grant probation, should send back to the beginning, should inflict mānatta (discipline), if, as the twentieth (member), he should rehabilitate, it is not a (formal) act and ought not to be carried out.²

DUTIES OF ONE DESERVING MĀNATTA

Kd.12.5.1

BD.5.51

Now at that time monks deserving mānatta (discipline)³ consented to regular monks greeting them ... (=Kd.12.1.1, Kd.12.1.2) ... “... ‘Do not let them find out about me’ Monks, a monk deserving mānatta (discipline) should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no

¹ For following items, see Kd.12.1.4. ² Cf. Kd.9.4.6. ³ Cf. Kd.3.6.8.

monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger ... (=Kd.12.1.3, Kd.12.1.4) ... he should not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground. Monks, a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk who is under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ... with a senior monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation ... and ought not to be carried out.”

DUTIES OF ONE UNDERGOING MĀNATTA

Now at that time monks undergoing mānatta (discipline) consented to regular monks greeting them ... (=Kd.12.1.1, Kd.12.1.2 Instead of under probation read undergoing mānatta (discipline)) “... ‘Do not let them find out about me’. Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should announce it when he is incoming, he should announce it to (another who is) incoming, he should announce it at the Observance, he should announce it at the Invitation, he should announce it daily,¹ if he is ill he should announce it by means of a messenger.

Kd.12.6.1

Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks, except with an Order,² unless there is a danger ... should not go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with an Order, unless there is a danger ... should not go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the monks there should belong to a different communion, except with an Order, unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks if the

Vin.2.36

BD.5.52

¹ This is an extra clause peculiar to the monk undergoing mānatta. ² Instead of “a regular monk”, as in the other cases.

monks there should belong to the same communion and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’

Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk ... (=Kd.12.1.4) ... he should not pace up and down in a place to pace up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground. Monks, a monk undergoing mānatta (discipline) should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ...with a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... with a senior monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... with a monk who deserves rehabilitation ... and ought not to be carried out.”

Kd.12.7.1

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, how many (kinds of) interruptions are there for a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline)?”

“There are four (kinds of) interruptions, Upāli, for a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline): dwelling with; dwelling away, separated from; not announcing; going about with less than a group.¹ These, Upāli, are the four (kinds of) interruptions for a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline).”

Kd.12.8.1

Now at that time a large Order of monks had gathered together at Sāvattihī; monks undergoing mānatta (discipline) were unable to carry through their mānatta (discipline) ... (see Kd.12.3.1, Kd.12.3.2) ... mānatta (discipline) comes to be taken up.”

DUTIES OF ONE DESERVING REHABILITATION

Kd.12.9.1

BD.5.53

Now at that time monks who deserved rehabilitation consented to regular monks greeting them ... (=Kd.12.1.1, Kd.12.1.2) ... “... ‘Do not let him find out about me.’ Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation should not go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are no monks ... from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are no monks, except with a regular (monk), unless there is a danger. Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation may go from a residence where there are monks to a residence where there are monks ... may go from a residence or from what is not a residence where there are monks to a residence or to what is not a residence where there are monks, if the monks there should belong to the same communion, and if he knows, ‘I am able to arrive this very day.’ Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a regular monk ... he should I not pace up and down in a place for pacing up and down in if he is pacing up and down on the ground. Monks, a monk who deserves rehabilitation should not stay in a residence under one roofing with a monk under probation ... with a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning ... with a monk who deserves mānatta ((discipline) ... with a monk undergoing mānatta ((discipline) ... with a senior monk who deserves rehabilitation ... and ought not to be carried out.”

¹ ūne gaṇe caraṇaṃ, a gaṇa, group usually consisting of two, three or four monks. But Vin-a.1170 says: “here a gaṇa means four (monks) or more. Therefore, if he is staying with three monks, that itself is an interruption.”

Vin.2.37

Told is the Second Section: that on Being under Probation

Kd.12.10.1

IN THIS SECTION ARE FIVE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

Those under probation consent to a regular monk’s greeting, standing up before, joined palms, proper duties,¹ seat, / Bringing forward a sleeping-place, water for the feet, a footstool, a footstand,
the bowl, treating the back by massaging, and well-behaved ones looked down upon.² /
If one consents there is wrong-doing,³ mutual, five things according to seniority⁴:

BD.5.54

¹ Oldenberg’s edition reads: añjali-sāmiyaṃ āsanam; Sinhalese edition reads: añjaliñ ca sāmīciyaṃ; Siamese edition reads: añjaliñ c’eva sāmīcim. Sinhalese and Siamese begin next line with āsanam. ² Oldenberg’s edition has a line less than Sinhalese and Siamese editions, which I follow. ³ Both Sinhalese and Siamese read dukkaṭam, as against Oldenberg’s dukkaṭa. ⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese read yathā vuḍḍham (as Kd.2.1.1); Oldenberg’s edition has punāpare; cf. punāpare at Snp.1004.

Observance, Invitation, (cloths for) the rains, gifts, food.¹ /
 And proper conduct, the carriage there, in regard to a regular monk,² and whatever is the last, neither as the novice in front of nor behind,³ / Forest, bringing back food, when coming in, at the Observance, and at the Invitation, and by a messenger,⁴ and he may go to where there are monks. /
 Under one roofing and getting up and likewise in regard to offering,⁵ / on a seat, in a high place for pacing up and down in, on the ground and not in a place for pacing up and down in, /
 With a senior— not a (formal) act, interruptions⁶ and carryings through, postponing, taking up should be stated (by) one under probation.⁷ /
 To the beginning, those deserving mānatta, likewise those undergoing mānatta, and also he who deserves rehabilitation—again the composing by the method. /
 Three⁸ for those under probation, four⁹ for one undergoing mānatta.
 As with the three interruptions,
 so there is ‘daily’ for those undergoing mānatta.¹⁰
 Two (formal) acts are similar,
 the remaining three (formal) acts are exactly the same.

BD.5.55

¹ Oldenberg’s and Sinhalese editions read vassik-oṇoja-bhojanam; Siamese edition vas-sikañcāvaṇojanam, and it begins the next line with bhattam (omitted by Oldenberg and Sinhalese), which is the word used at end of Kd.2.1.1, bhojana not occurring there at all.

² pakatattassa gacchanam, Oldenberg; pakatattena gacchare, Sinhalese and Siamese editions. This refers to not walking or sitting down in front of a regular monk (Kd.2.1.2).

³ Sinhalese and Siamese editions: na pure pacchā samaṇena; Oldenberg: pure pacchā tath’ eva ca.

⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese editions: dūtena; Oldenberg: dūto. ⁵ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read: ekacchanne na (Sinhalese ca) vatthabbaṃ na chamāyaṃ nisajjite.

⁶ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read: ratticchedā; Oldenberg: ratticchedo. ⁷ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read: nikkipanaṃ samādānaṃ nātappaṃ pārivāsikā; Oldenberg: nikkhipanaṃ samādānaṃ, ratti vā pārivāsike.

⁸ Referring to “interruptions”, as at Kd.12.2.1, Kd.12.7.1 ⁹ Referring to “interruptions”, as at Kd.12.2.1, Kd.12.7.1 ¹⁰ saman tiratticchedesu mānattesu ca devasi (Oldenberg and Sinhalese) meaning, I take it, that as there is an extra “interruption” for one undergoing mānatta, so he has to make an extra “announcement” (beginning of Kd.12.6.1). Siamese edition reads: na samenti ratticchedā mānattesu ca devāsikaṃ, “the interruptions do not agree (or, are not in accordance, not on all fours) and there is ‘daily’ for those undergoing mānatta”.

13. ACCUMULATION (SAMUCCAYA)

EMISSION OF SEMEN

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time the venerable Udāyin¹ came to have fallen into one offence: the intentional emission of semen,² not concealed. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, have fallen into one offence ... not concealed. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.2.38
Kd.13.1.1
BD.5.56

UNCONCEALED MĀNATTA

“Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights³ on the monk Udāyin for the one offence ... not concealed.

Kd.13.1.2

“And thus, monks, should it be inflicted: Monks, that monk Udāyin, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘Honoured sirs, I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed. I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... not concealed. And a second time I ask the Order ... not concealed. I, honoured

¹ A sensual monk. See Index to Names in BD.1, BD.2, BD.3. (Note: Not included in SuttaCentral edition.) ² Bu-Ss.1 (Vin.3.112, BD.1.196). Cf. also Bu-Pc.9, Bu-Pc.64, and Vin.4.194f., N.B. at BD.2.219 (Bu-Pc.9) the sentence, “He, being under probation, sat down in the refectory at the end of a seat” (āsanapariyante) should be corrected to “sat down ... on the last seat”, in accordance with Kd.2.1.2. ³ Vin-a.1170 mentions four kinds of mānatta: the unconcealed, the concealed, the fortnight’s duration, the concurrent.

sirs, fell into one offence ... not concealed. And a third time I ask the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed.'

Kd.13.1.3

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin fell into one offence ... not concealed. He is asking the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence not concealed. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin fell into one offence ... not concealed. He is asking the Order for mānatta (discipline) ... not concealed. The Order is inflicting mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed. If the infliction of mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... should speak. Mānatta (discipline) is being inflicted by the Order for six nights on the monk Udāyin for the one offence: intentional emission of semen, not concealed. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

BD.5.57

Vin.2.39

UNCONCEALED REHABILITATION

Kd.13.2.1

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed; so I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed; thus the Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me on account of the one offence ... not concealed. I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.13.2.2

“Well, then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udāyin.

“And thus, monks, should he be rehabilitated: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... not concealed; so I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed; thus the Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me on account of the one offence ... not concealed. Now I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline), ask the Order for rehabilitation. I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... So I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline), ask the Order a second time also for rehabilitation. I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... So I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline), ask the Order a third time also for rehabilitation.’

BD.5.58

Kd.13.2.3

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin, fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed; so he asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... not concealed. The Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed. He, having performed mānatta (discipline), is asking the Order for rehabilitation. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may rehabilitate the monk Udāyin. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin fell into one offence ... is asking the Order for rehabilitation. The Order is rehabilitating the monk Udāyin. If the rehabilitation of the monk Udāyin is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me ... should speak. The monk Udāyin is rehabilitated by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

Vin.2.40

PROBATION CONCEALED FOR ONE NIGHT

Kd.13.3.1

Now at that time the venerable Udāyin came to have fallen into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, concealed for one day. He announced to monks, saying: “I, your reverences, have fallen into one offence ... concealed for one day. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order impose probation for one day on the monk Udāyin on account of the offence ... concealed for one day.

Kd.13.3.2
BD.5.59
Vin.2.41

“And thus, monks, should it be imposed: ... (The matter which here follows is precisely as in Kd.13.1.2, Kd.13.1.3, with the necessary changes in the wording of (a) the offence, (b) the penalty) ...

MĀNATTA CONCEALED FOR ONE NIGHT

Kd.13.4.1

He, having stayed under probation, announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for one day; so I asked the Order for probation for one day on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day; thus the Order imposed probation for one day on me on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day. I have now stayed under probation. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day.

Kd.13.4.2
Kd.13.4.3

(Here follows precisely the same material as in Kd.13.1.2, Kd.13.1.3, reading concealed for one day instead of not concealed)

Vin.2.42

REHABILITATION CONCEALED FOR ONE NIGHT

Kd.13.5.1

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to the monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... (=Kd.13.4.1) ... I, having stayed under probation, asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... concealed for one day. I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udāyin.

(Here follows precisely the same material as in Kd.13.2.2, Kd.13.2.3, reading concealed for one day instead of not concealed)”

Kd.13.5.2

Kd.13.5.3

Vin.2.43

PROBATION CONCEALED FOR FIVE DAYS

Now at that time the venerable Udāyin fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, concealed for two days ... three days ... four days ... five days. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for two ... five days ... (= Kd.13.3 Instead of concealed for one day, probation for one day, read concealed for two) ... five days, probation for two ... five days ... Thus do I understand this.”

Kd.13.6.1

BD.5.60

SENDING ONE ON PROBATION BACK TO THE BEGINNING

While he was under probation he fell into one offence: the intentional emission of semen, not concealed. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days; so I asked the Order for probation for five days on account of this offence ... concealed for five days; thus the Order granted me probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days. Now while I was under probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.13.7.1

“Well then, monks, let the Order send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation).

Kd.13.7.2

“And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. So I asked the Order for probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days; thus the Order granted me probation for five days ... concealed for five days. While I was doing probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I am asking the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of this offence ... not concealed.’ And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ...

Vin.2.44

Kd.13.7.3

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... asked the Order for probation for five days ... (cf. Kd.13.2.3) ... The Order granted probation for five days ... While he was under probation he fell into one offence ... not concealed. He is asking the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation). If it seems right to the Order, the Order may send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of ... not concealed, while (he was under probation). This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... is asking the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation). The Order is sending the monk Udāyin back to the beginning ... while (he was under probation). If the sending back to the beginning of the monk Udāyin ... is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is sent back to the beginning by the Order. The sending back to the beginning for the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... not concealed is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

BD.5.61

SENDING ONE DESERVING MĀNATTA BACK TO THE BEGINNING

He, having stayed under probation, while he was deserving mānatta (discipline), fell into an offence ... not concealed. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days; so I asked the Order ... (= Kd.13.7.1). Now while I was under probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed. The Order sent me back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (I was under probation). Now I, having stayed under probation while I was deserving mānatta (discipline), fell into one offence ... not concealed. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.13.8.1

“Well, then, monks, let the Order send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while (he was under probation).”

Kd.13.8.2

“And thus, monks, should he be sent back¹: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... Having stayed under probation, while I was deserving mānatta (discipline), I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, having stayed under probation and while I was deserving mānatta (discipline).’ And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ...”

Vin.2.45

BD.5.62

Kd.13.8.3

“The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin ... asks for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... not concealed, while he was deserving mānatta (discipline), having stayed under probation. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may send the monk Udāyin back to the beginning ... having stayed under probation. This is the motion: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Udāyin asks ... The Order is sending the monk Udāyin back to the beginning ... If the sending back to the beginning for the monk Udāyin on account of ... is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is sent back to the beginning by the Order. The sending back to the beginning ... is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

MĀNATTA FOR THREE OFFENCES

He, having stayed under probation, announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... (as in Kd.13.4.2) ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.13.9.1

“Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of these offences.

Kd.13.9.2

Kd.13.9.3

¹ mūlāya, to the beginning, not in Oldenberg’s text here. Cf. Kd.13.7.2.

... (as in Kd.13.4.2, Kd.13.4.3) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Vin.2.46

SENDING ONE UNDERGOING MĀNATTA BACK TO THE BEGINNING

Kd.13.10.1

While he was undergoing mānatta (discipline) he fell into one offence ... not concealed. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... (as in Kd.13.8.1) ...” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.63

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence while he was undergoing mānatta (discipline), not concealed, inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... And thus, monks, should mānatta (discipline) for six nights be inflicted ... Mānatta (discipline) for six nights is inflicted by the Order on the monk Udāyin for the one offence ... It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

SENDING ONE DESERVING REHABILITATION BACK TO THE BEGINNING

Kd.13.11.1

He, having performed mānatta (discipline) and while he deserved rehabilitation, fell into one offence ... not concealed. He announced to monks ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... when he had performed mānatta (discipline) and while he deserved rehabilitation, inflict mānatta (discipline) on him for six nights. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... And thus, monks, should (discipline) for six nights be inflicted ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

REHABILITATION FOR ONE WHO HAS BEEN SENT BACK TO THE BEGINNING

Kd.13.12.1

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. ... (as in Kd.13.2.1).

Vin.2.47

I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Well then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udāyin.

Kd.13.12.2

"And thus, monks, should he be rehabilitated: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. So I asked the Order for probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days. Therefore the Order granted me probation for five days on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days. While I was doing probation I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... while I was doing probation, not concealed. The Order sent me back to the beginning ... But then I, having stayed under probation and while I deserved mānatta (discipline), fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning ... The Order sent me back to the beginning ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the three offences. Because of this, the Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me on account of the three offences. But while I was under-going mānatta (discipline) I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning ... Thus the Order sent me back to the beginning ... So I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... while I was undergoing mānatta (discipline), not concealed. The Order inflicted mānatta (discipline) for six nights on me. When I had performed mānatta (discipline) and while I deserved rehabilitation, I fell into one offence ... not concealed. So I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... while I deserved rehabilitation, not concealed. Thus the Order sent me back to the beginning ... And I asked the Order for mānatta (discipline) for six nights on account of the one offence ... while I deserved rehabilitation, not concealed. Because of this, the Order inflicted mānatta, (discipline) for six nights on me ... So I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta (discipline) ask the Order for rehabilitation.' And a second time should it be asked for ... And a third time should it be asked for ...

BD.5.64

Kd.13.12.3

"The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk,

Vin.2.48 saying: ‘Honoured sirs, ... (as in Kd.13.12.2) ... He, having performed mānatta (discipline), asks the Order for rehabilitation. If it seems right to the Order, ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is rehabilitated by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order ... Thus do I understand this.’”

PROBATION FOR ONE WHO HAS CONCEALED FOR A FORTNIGHT

Kd.13.13.1 Now at that time the venerable Udāyin fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month ... (as in Kd.13.3 Instead of concealed for one day, probation for one day read concealed for half a month, probation for half a month) ... ‘...Thus do I understand this.’”

SENDING ONE ON PROBATION FOR A FORTNIGHT BACK TO THE BEGINNING

Kd.13.14.1
BD.5.65 While he was under probation he fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month. So I asked the Order for probation for half a month on account of the one offence ... concealed for half a month. Because of this the Order granted me probation for half a month. Then while I was under probation, I fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, grant him probation concurrent¹ with the former offence.

Kd.13.14.2

¹ samodhānaparivāsa. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.169, says, “When another offence is committed during the continuance of the Parivāsa period, a fresh period begins to run from the date of the commission of the second offence and it extends over as many days as were covered by the Parivāsa period prescribed for the first offence or the Parivāsa period prescribed for the second offence, whichever period may be longer.” As Vinaya Texts ii.405, n.1 points out, “the penalties for this new offence and for the old one were not accumulative but concurrent. The offender lost the advantage of the probation he had already undergone, he was thrown back to the commencement of his term of probation, and had to begin again.” The mānatta to which he was liable for the first offence was not affected.

“And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning: ... (as in Kd.13.7.2, Kd.13.7.3. Read concealed for half a month, probation for half a month, and then concealed for five days instead of concealed for five days, probation for five days, and then not concealed) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

CONCURRENT PROBATION

“And thus, monks, should probation concurrent with the former offence be granted: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, asked the Order for sending back to the beginning ... (= Kd.13.14.2) ... Therefore the Order sent me back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... while I was under probation for half a month, concealed for five days. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for concurrent probation with the former offence ... while I was under probation for half a month, concealed for five days’. And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed ... ‘... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Concurrent probation with the former offence is granted by the Order to the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... while he was under probation for half a month, concealed for five days. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

Kd.13.14.3

BD.5.66

SENDING ONE DESERVING MĀNATTA BACK TO THE BEGINNING, ETC.

He, having stayed under probation, while deserving mānatta (discipline), fell into one offence ... concealed for five days ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.13.15.1

“Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, grant him probation concurrent with the former offence. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... (as in Kd.13.14.2, Kd.13.14.3) ... And thus, monks, should probation concurrent with the former offence be granted ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

MĀNATTA FOR THREE OFFENCES

Kd.13.16.1

He, having stayed under probation, announced to monks: ... (as in Kd.13.4.1 reading concealed for five days instead of concealed for one day) ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.2.50

“Well then, monks, let the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the three offences. And thus, monks, should it be inflicted: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order ... ‘... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Mānatta (discipline) is inflicted by the Order for six nights on the monk Udāyin on account of the three offences. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

SENDING ONE UNDERGOING MĀNATTA BACK TO THE BEGINNINGDI

Kd.13.17.1

While he was undergoing mānatta (discipline) he fell into one offence, concealed for five days. He announced to monks: I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month ...’ (and he told all that had happened from Kd.13.13 onwards) ... They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, having granted him probation concurrent with the former offence, inflict mānatta (discipline) on him for six nights. And thus, monks, should he be sent back to the beginning ... And thus, monks, should probation concurrent with the former offence be granted ... And thus, monks, should mānatta (discipline) for six nights be inflicted ... ‘Mānatta (discipline) for six nights is inflicted by the Order on the monk Udāyin on account of the one offence ... while he was undergoing mānatta (discipline), concealed for five days. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

BD.5.67

SENDING ONE DESERVING REHABILITATION BACK TO THE BEGINNINGDI

Kd.13.18.1

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), while he deserved rehabilitation fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. He announced to monks: ‘I, your reverences, fell into one offence, concealed for half a month

... (he repeats all that has happened from Kd.13.13 onwards) ... When I had performed mānatta (discipline) and while I deserved rehabilitation, I fell into one offence ... concealed for five days. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Well then, monks, let the Order, having sent the monk Udāyin back to the beginning on account of the one offence ... concealed for five days, having granted him probation concurrent with the former offence, inflict mānatta (discipline) for six nights on him ... (as in Kd.13.17.2.) ... Thus do I understand this."

REHABILITATION FOR ONE WHO HAS CONCEALED FOR A FORTNIGHT

He, having performed mānatta (discipline), announced to monks: "I, your reverences, fell into one offence ... concealed for half a month ... (as from Kd.13.13 onwards.) I have now performed mānatta (discipline). Now what line of conduct is to be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.2.51
Kd.13.19.1

"Well then, monks, let the Order rehabilitate the monk Udayin. And thus, monks, should he be rehabilitated: That monk Udāyin, having approached the Order, ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, fell into one offence, ... concealed for half a month. So I ... But I, honoured sirs, having performed mānatta discipline, ask the Order for rehabilitation ...' And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed ... '... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The monk Udāyin is rehabilitated by the Order. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.'"

BD.5.68

Concluded (are the proceedings connected with) Intentional Emission

PROBATION

CONCURRENT PROBATION WITH DEPENDENT DURATION

Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: one offence was concealed for one day, one offence was concealed for two days ... three ... four ... five ... six

... seven ... eight ... nine days, one offence was concealed for ten days. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day ... one offence was concealed for ten days. What line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, let the Order grant this monk concurrent probation, its duration depending¹ on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days.

Kd.13.20.2

“And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, revered sirs, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; ‘... one offence was concealed for ten days. So I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days’. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one was concealed for ... ten days. He is asking the Order for concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should grant the monk So-and-so concurrent probation ... for ten days. This is the motion ... Concurrent probation is being granted by the Order to the monk So-and-so, its duration depending on whichever was the offence among these offences that was concealed for ten days. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’”

Vin.2.52

BD.5.69

ALL LENGTHS CONCEALED WITH DEPENDENT DURATION

Kd.13.21.1

Now at that time a certain monk had fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day, two offences were concealed for two days, three offences were concealed for three days, four ... for four days, five ... for five days ... six for six days ... seven for seven days, eight ... for eight days, nine ... for nine days, ten offences were concealed for ten days. He announced to monks, saying: "I, your reverences, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day ... ten offences were concealed for ten days. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ tassā agghena, literally according to the value or worth, i.e. of the probationary period necessitated by the number of days the offence was concealed. Here probation had to be undergone for ten days, since this was the greatest number of days for which one of the offences had been concealed. Vin-a.1182 says there are three kinds of concurrent probation: odhāna, aggha, and missaka, all of which it explains.

"Well then, monks, let the Order grant this monk concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever were the offences among these offences that were each concealed the longest.¹ And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; one offence was concealed for one day ... ten offences were concealed for ten days. Therefore I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for concurrent probation, its duration depending on whichever were the offences among these offences that were each concealed the longest.' And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for ... The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: '... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Concurrent probation is granted by the Order to this monk, its duration depending on whichever were the offences among these offences that were each concealed the longest. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.'"

PROBATION FOR TWO MONTHS

Now at that time a certain monk fell into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; they were concealed for two months. It occurred to him: "I have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; they were concealed for two months. Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months?" He asked the Order for probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months. The Order granted him probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months. While he was under probation a feeling of shame overcame him, and he thought: "I fell into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; they were concealed for two months. It occurred to me: I have fallen into two offences ... Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months? I asked the Order ... The Order granted me probation for two months for one offence concealed for two months. While I was under probation a feeling of shame overcame me. Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months for that other offence concealed for two months?"

¹ sabbacirapaṭicchannāyo. This looks as if probation would have to last for ten times ten days.

Kd.13.22.2

He announced to monks: "I, your reverences, fell into two offences ... '... Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months for that other offence concealed for two months?' Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said.

Kd.13.22.3

"Well then, monks, let the Order grant this monk probation for two months on account also of that other offence concealed for two months. And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... (=Kd.13.22.2) ... Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months? So I, honoured sirs, am also asking the Order for probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months.' And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for.

Vin.2.54

Kd.13.22.4

"The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to him: ... He is also asking the Order for probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may also grant the monk So-and-so probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. Probation is also being granted the monk So-and-so by the Order for two months on account of this other offence concealed for two months.

BD.5.71

It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.' Well then, monks, that monk should do probation for two months from that date.¹

Kd.13.23.1

"This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months ... (as above) ... The Order also granted him probation for two months on account of that other offence concealed for two months. Well then, monks, that monk should do probation for two months from that date.

Kd.13.23.2

"This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He knows that one is an offence, he does not know that the other is an offence. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence, concealed for two months, which he knows to be an offence. The Order grants him probation for two months on account of that offence concealed for two months. While he is under probation, he finds that the other is also an offence. It occurs to him: 'I have fallen into two offences ... I knew that one was an offence, I did not know that the other was an offence. So I asked the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence which I knew to be an offence, concealed for two months. The Order granted me probation for two months on account of that offence, concealed for two months. But while I was under probation, I found that the other was also an offence. Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for two months on account of this other offence, concealed for two months?' He asks the Order for probation ... The Order grants him probation for two months on account of this other offence also, concealed for two months. Well then, monks, this monk should do probation for two months from that date.

Vin.2.55

BD.5.72

Kd.13.23.3

"This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He remembers one offence, he does not remember the other offence. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence, concealed for two months, which he remembers ... (= Kd.13.23.2. Read remembers, remembered instead of finds, found) ... for two months from this date.

Kd.13.23.4

"This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He is in no doubt that one is an offence, he is doubtful whether the other is an offence. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of that offence about which he is in no doubt ... (= Kd.13.23.2. Read is doubtful for does not know) ... for two months from this date.

¹ tadupādāya.

Kd.13.23.5

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One offence is knowingly concealed, the other offence is unknowingly concealed. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of those offences concealed for two months. The Order grants him probation for two months on account of those offences concealed for two months. While he is under probation, a certain monk arrives—one who has heard much, to whom the tradition had been handed down, expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the summaries, clever, experienced, wise, conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. He speaks thus: ‘What, your reverences, has this monk fallen into? Why is this monk doing probation?’ They speak thus: ‘This monk, your reverence, has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One offence was knowingly concealed, the other offence was unknowingly concealed. He asked the Order for probation for two months on account of these offences concealed for two months. The Order granted him probation for two months on account of these offences, concealed for two months. This monk your reverence, has fallen into these, this monk is under probation on account of these.’ He speaks thus: ‘The granting of probation, your reverences, for that offence which he knowingly concealed is legally valid¹; because it is legally valid² it is effective;³ but the granting of probation, your reverences, for that offence which he unknowingly concealed is not legally valid; because it is not legally valid it is not effective. For this offence, your reverences, the monk deserves mānatta (discipline).’

BD.5.73

Kd.13.23.6

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One offence is concealed, he remembering it, the other offence is concealed, he not remembering it ... One offence is concealed, he being not in doubt (about it), the other offence is concealed, he being in doubt (about it) ... ‘... For this offence, your reverences, this monk deserves mānatta (discipline).’”

¹ dhammikarū. ² dhammattā. ³ rūhati. As at Kd.3.25.3, Vin.5.327, etc. Cf. Vin.2.203 and Kd.6.14.5. Rūhati means something like “it counts”.

Vin.2.56

Now at that time a certain monk had fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to him: “I have fallen into two offences ... concealed for two months. Suppose that I were to ask the Order for probation for one month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months?” He asked the Order ... The Order granted him probation for one month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. As he was under probation shame overcame him, and he thought: “I have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to me: ... I asked the Order for probation for one month ... The Order granted me probation for one month on account of the two offences concealed for two months. As I was under probation shame overcame me. What now, if I should also ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences concealed for two months?”

Kd.13.24.1

He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, have fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months ... It occurred to me: ... What now if I should also ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences concealed for two months? Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord.

Kd.13.24.2

BD.5.74

He said: “Well then, monks, let the Order also grant this monk probation for a further month on account of these two offences concealed for two months. And thus, monks, should it be asked for: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, have fallen into two offences ... What now if I should also ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months? So I, honoured sirs, am also asking the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences concealed for two months.’ And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so fell into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurred to him: ‘... Suppose I were also to ask the Order for probation for a further month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months?’ He is asking ... If it seems right to the Order, the Order ... If the giving of probation to the monk So-and-so for a further month also on account of the two offences concealed for two months is pleasing to the venerable ones ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... Probation is granted by the Order to the monk So-and-so for a further month also on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’ Monks, that monk should do probation for two months from the earlier date.

Kd.13.24.3

Vin.2.57

PROCEDURE FOR ONE TO BE GIVEN PROBATION FOR TWO MONTHS

Kd.13.25.1

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. It occurs to him: ‘I have fallen into two offences ... concealed for two months. Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for one month on account of the two offences concealed for two months?’ ... (=Kd.13.25.1) ... The Order also grants him probation for a further month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. Monks, that monk should do probation for two months from the earlier date.

BD.5.75

Kd.13.25.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He knows the one month, he does not know the other month ... he remembers the one month, he does not remember the other month ... he is not doubtful about the one month, he is doubtful about the other month. He asks the Order for probation for that month on account of the two offences, concealed for two months, about which he is not doubtful. The Order grants him probation ... not doubtful. As he is doing probation he comes to be doubtful about the further month also. It occurs to him: ‘I have fallen into two offences ... concealed for two months. I was not doubtful about the one month, I was doubtful about the other month ... Suppose I were to ask the Order for probation for a further month also on account of the two offences concealed for two months?' He asks the Order ... The Order grants him probation for a further month also on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. Monks, that monk should do probation for two months from the earlier date.

Vin.2.58

Kd.13.25.3

This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. One month is knowingly concealed, the other month is unknowingly concealed ... One month is concealed, he remembering it, the other month is concealed, he not remembering it ... One month is concealed, he being not in doubt (about it), the other month is concealed, he being in doubt about it. He asks the Order for probation for two months on account of the two offences concealed for two months. The Order grants him probation for two months ... concealed for two months. As he is under probation, another monk arrives¹—one who has heard much ... desirous of training. He speaks thus: 'Into what, your reverences, has this monk fallen? Why is this monk under probation?' They speak thus: 'This monk, your reverence, has fallen into two offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, concealed for two months. He concealed one month (although) he was not doubtful (about it), he concealed the other month (because) he was doubtful (about it). He asked the Order for probation ... The Order granted him probation for two months on account of the two offences, concealed for two months. This monk, your reverence, has fallen into these, this monk is doing probation on account of these.' He speaks thus: 'The granting of probation, your reverences, for that month which he concealed (although) he was not doubtful (about it) is legally valid; because it is legally valid, it is effective; but the granting of probation, your reverences, for that month which he concealed because he was doubtful (about it) is not legally valid; because it is not legally valid, it is not effective. For that month, your reverences, that monk deserves mānatta discipline.'"

BD.5.76

PURIFYING PROBATION

Now at that time a certain monk came to have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; he did not know about the expiration of the offences, he did not know about the expiration of the nights¹ ... He did not remember ... He was doubtful about the expiration of the offences, he was doubtful about the expiration of the nights. He announced to monks: “I, your reverences, fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. I do not know about the expiration of the offences, I do not know about the expiration of the nights ... I am doubtful about the expiration of the nights. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.13.26.1

¹ As in Kd.13.23.5.

Vin.2.59

BD.5.77

“Well then, monks, let the Order grant the purifying probation² to this monk on account of those offences.

Kd.13.26.2

And thus, monks, should it be granted: That monk, having approached the Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. I do not know about the expiration of the offences ... I am doubtful about the expiration of the nights. So I, honoured sirs, am asking the Order for the purifying probation on account of these offences’. And a second time ... And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so has fallen into several offences ... he is doubtful about the expiration of the nights. He is asking the Order for the purifying probation on account of those offences. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may grant the monk So-and-so the purifying probation on account of those ¹ āpattipariyanta ... rattipariyanta. Pariyanta means literally limit, end, boundary, limitation. On the use of these words here Buddhaghosa leads us to suppose that a monk might be in a state of purification in regard to various offences that he had committed because he had undergone adequate probation. This might last for a day, a half-month, a month or a year. He should then consider for how many months he still has to do probation so as to secure his purification, that is, the removal of the offence. As offences are removed, the amount of time still to be spent on probation automatically becomes less. Moreover, whoever does not know or remember or is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights should, if he has undertaken to do probation, count the nights from that day back to the day of his ordination, and then do probation for this number of nights. In this way, it appears, he would be quite certain of doing probation for all the possible nights which might be necessary for the removal of the offence. See āpattipariyanta and kulapariyanta (“limited to families”) at Vin.4.31 (BD.2.220), where defined; and bhesajjapariyanta (“limited to medicines”) and rattipariyanta at Vin.4.103 (BD.2.371). See also above, Kd.12.1.2, where pariyanta seems used in a different sense. ² suddhantaparivāsa.

offences. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so ... The Order is granting the monk So-and-so the purifying probation on account of those offences. If the granting to the monk So-and-so of the purifying probation on account of those offences is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak: And a second time ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... The purifying probation is granted by the Order to the monk So-and-so on account of those offences. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.'

Kd.13.26.3

“Thus, monks, should the purifying probation be granted, thus should probation be granted. And how, monks, should the purifying probation be granted? If he does not know about the expiration of the offences, if he does not know about the expiration of the nights, if he does not remember about the expiration of the offences, if he does not remember about the expiration of the nights, if he is doubtful about the expiration of the offences, if he is doubtful about the expiration of the nights, the purifying probation may be granted.

BD.5.78

“If he knows about the expiration of the offences, if he does not know about the expiration of the nights, if he remembers about the expiration of the offences, if he does not remember about the expiration of nights, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, the purifying probation may be granted.

“If he knows the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he does not know the expiration of the nights, if he remembers the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he does not remember the expiration of the nights, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he is in no doubt as to it in others, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, the purifying probation may be granted.

“If he does not know the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he does not remember the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if in some cases he is in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, if he is not in doubt in others, the purifying probation may be granted.

Vin.2.60

“If he knows the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is in doubt in some cases as to the expiration of the nights, if he is not in doubt in others, the purifying probation may be granted.

“If he knows the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he knows the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the nights in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he is in doubt as to some offences, if he is not in doubt as to others, if he is in doubt as to some nights, if he is not in doubt as to others, the purifying probation may be granted.

BD.5.79

Kd.13.26.4

“And how, monks may probation be granted? If he knows the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights, if he remembers the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, probation may be granted.

“If he does not know the expiration of the offences, if he knows the expiration of the nights, if he does not remember the expiration of the offences, if he remembers the expiration of the nights, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, probation may be granted.

“If he knows the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not know it in others, if he knows the expiration of the nights, if he remembers the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he does not remember it in others, if he remembers the expiration of the nights, if he is in doubt as to the expiration of the offences in some cases, if he is not in doubt in others, if he is not in doubt as to the expiration of the nights, probation may be granted. Thus, monks, may probation be granted.”

Told is Probation

FORTY CASES

Now at that time a certain monk, while doing probation, left the Order. Having come back again, he asked the monks for ordination. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This is a case, monks, where a monk, doing probation, leaves the Order. Monks, the probation of one who leaves the Order is not effective. If he is ordained again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him:¹ whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, he must do probation (for any portion of time) remaining.

BD.5.80

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, becomes a novice. Monks, the probation of a novice is not effective. If he is ordained again ... (as in preceding paragraph) ... remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, becomes mad. Monks, the probation of one who is mad is not effective. If he becomes sane again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, he must do probation (for any portion of time) remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, becomes unhinged in mind. Monks, the probation of one who is unhinged in mind is not effective. If he becomes not unhinged in mind again ... This is a case, monks, where a monk, doing probation, becomes afflicted by pain. Monks, the probation of one afflicted by pain is not effective. If he becomes not afflicted by pain again ... he must do probation for (any portion of time) remaining.

Vin.2.61

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, is suspended for not seeing an offence ... for not making amends for an offence ... for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the probation of one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, he must do probation for (any portion of time) remaining.

¹ I.e. on being re-ordained, he is to take up his period of probation again where he left it off, so as to complete the number of nights for which probation was originally granted him. Probation is “not broken”, another meaning of rūhati.

Kd.13.27.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning leaves the Order. Monks, the sending back to the beginning is not effective for one who leaves the Order. If he is ordained again, the earlier granting of the probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, that monk must be sent back to the beginning.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves to be sent back to the beginning becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... (as in Kd.13.27.1) ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the sending back to the beginning of one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of the probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, that monk must be sent back to the beginning.

BD.5.81

Kd.13.27.3

This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) leaves the Order. Monks, the imposing of mānatta (discipline) on one who leaves the Order is not effective. If he is ordained again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly-granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the imposing of mānatta (discipline) on one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk.

Kd.13.27.4

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) leaves the Order ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, the undergoing of mānatta (discipline) for one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, whatever mānatta (discipline) is imposed is properly imposed, whatever mānatta (discipline) is undergone is undergone thoroughly, it must be undergone for (any portion of time) remaining.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves rehabilitation leaves the Order ... is suspended for not giving up a wrong view. Monks, rehabilitation of one who is suspended is not effective. If he is restored again, the earlier granting of probation is just as it was for him: whatever probation is granted is properly granted, whoever does probation does probation thoroughly, whatever mānatta (discipline) is imposed is properly imposed, whatever mānatta (discipline) is undergone is undergone thoroughly, that monk may be rehabilitated.

Kd.13.27.5

Vin.2.62

*Concluded are the Forty Cases.*¹

THIRTY-SIX CASES

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those not concealed not being many.² That monk should be sent back to the beginning. This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those concealed not being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

Kd.13.28.1
BD.5.82

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those concealed as well as those not concealed not being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those not concealed being many ... those concealed being many ... those concealed as well as those not concealed being many ... those not concealed not being many as well as being many ... those concealed not being many as well as being many ... those concealed as well as those not concealed not being many as well as being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

¹ There are eight possibilities (leaving the Order down to the three reasons for being suspended) under each of the five headings (doing probation, deserving to be sent back to the beginning, deserving mānatta, undergoing mānatta, deserving rehabilitation). ² parimāṇā, but the meaning is not at all clear. See also below: Vin.5.333.

Kd.13.28.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk who deserves mānatta (discipline) ... who is undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... who deserves rehabilitation meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, those not concealed not being many ... those concealed as well as those not concealed not being many and being many. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earliest offence of the offences thus concealed.

Concluded are the Thirty-six Cases

ONE HUNDRED ON MĀNATTA

Kd.13.29.1

BD.5.83

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order not having concealed them. He, being ordained again, does not conceal those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed upon that monk.

Vin.2.63

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order not having concealed them. He, on being ordained again, conceals those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen ... leaves the Order having concealed them. He, on being ordained again, does not conceal those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier concealed.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen ... leaves the Order, having concealed them. He, on being ordained again, conceals those offences. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

Kd.13.29.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. His offences are both concealed and not concealed. He, having left the Order, on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards he conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he concealed, does not¹ afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

BD.5.84

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

Kd.13.29.3

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He knows some to be offences, he does not know others to be offences. The offences which he knows to be offences he conceals, those offences which he does not know to be offences he does not conceal. He, having left the Order, on being ordained again, conceals those offences which earlier he had known, does not conceal those offences which later he had known, does not conceal those offences which earlier he had not known, does not conceal those offences which later he had known. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier concealed.

Vin.2.64

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, does not conceal those offences, (although) knowing them, which formerly, knowing them he concealed, afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, not knowing them, he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

¹ See Vinaya Texts ii.423, n.2, on the right way of making up the hundred cases mentioned at the end of Kd.13.30.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, knowing them he concealed, afterwards does not conceal those offences, knowing them, which formerly he did not conceal, not knowing them. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on this monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

“This is a case, monks ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, knowing them, he concealed; afterwards conceals those offences, knowing them, which formerly, not knowing them, he did not conceal. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on that monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier and later concealed.

Kd.13.29.4
BD.5.85

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He remembers some to be offences ... (= Kd.13.29.3. Instead of he knows, knowing, not knowing, read he remembers, remembering, not remembering) ... thus earlier and later concealed.

Kd.13.29.5

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He is in no doubt as to some of the offences, he is in doubt as to others of the offences ... thus earlier and later concealed.

Kd.13.30.1

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... becomes unhinged in mind ... this should be explained in detail as below.¹

He comes to be in pain. His offences are concealed as well as unconcealed. He knows that some are offences, he does not know that others are offences. He remembers that some are offences, he does not remember that others are offences. He is in no doubt that some are offences, he is in doubt as to whether others are offences. He conceals those offences about which he is in no doubt, he does not conceal those offences about which he is in doubt.

Vin.2.65

¹ I.e. in Kd.13.27, “below” corresponds to our “above” in such contexts, as it refers to the palm-leaf manuscripts

He comes to be in pain. Having come to be again not in pain, those offences which formerly he concealed because he was in no doubt, he afterwards does not conceal although he is in no doubt; those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards does not conceal although he is in doubt, those offences which formerly he concealed, being in no doubt, he afterwards does not conceal, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards conceals, not being in doubt, those offences which formerly he concealed, being in no doubt, he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards does not conceal, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he concealed, being in no doubt, he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt, those offences which formerly he did not conceal, being in doubt, he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt. Monks, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on this monk, having granted him probation on account of the set of offences thus earlier as well as later concealed.”

BD.5.86

The Hundred on Mānatta

FOUR HUNDRED ON CONCURRENT PROBATION AND BEGINNING

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order not having concealed them. On being ordained again, he does not conceal these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning.

“This is a case, monks ... not having concealed them. On being ordained again, he conceals these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account on the earlier offences among the offences thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks ... having concealed them. On being ordained again, he does not conceal these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... having concealed them. On being ordained again, he conceals these offences. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

Kd.13.31.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. His offences are both concealed and not concealed. Having left the Order, he, on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he concealed, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation should be granted him on account of the earlier offences of the offences thus concealed.

Vin.2.66

“This is a case, monks ... His offences are both concealed and not concealed. Having left the Order, he, on being ordained again, does not afterwards conceal those offences which formerly be concealed, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards does not conceal those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

BD.5.87

“This is a case, monks, ... on being ordained again, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he concealed, afterwards conceals those offences which formerly he did not conceal. That monk should be sent back to the beginning ... thus concealed.

Kd.13.31.3

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, while doing probation, falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order. He knows some are offences, he does not know that others are offences ... (=Kd.13.29.3, Kd.13.29.4, Kd.13.30. The penalty is always the same: that monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation granted him on account of the earlier offences of the offences thus concealed.) ...

Kd.13.32.1

“This is a case, monks, where a monk deserving mānatta (discipline) ... undergoing mānatta (discipline) ... deserving rehabilitation, having meantime fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, leaves the Order, not having concealed them ... The one deserving mānatta

(discipline) and the one undergoing mānatta (discipline) and the one deserving rehabilitation should be explained in detail similarly to the one doing probation.¹

“This is a case, monks, where a monk deserving rehabilitation, having meantime fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, and not having concealed them, becomes a novice ... becomes mad ... becomes unhinged in mind ... becomes afflicted by pain. His offences are both concealed and not concealed ... (=Kd.13.30) ... he afterwards conceals, being in no doubt. That monk should be sent back to the beginning and concurrent probation granted him on account of the earlier offences of the offences thus concealed.

Vin.2.67

THE PORTION WITH EIGHTEEN CASES MEASURED, ETC.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk having fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not having concealed not many, not having concealed many, not having concealed one kind, not having concealed different kinds, not having concealed those of a like division,² not having concealed those of the other division,³ not having concealed separate ones,¹ not having concealed connected ones,² leaves the Order.³

Kd.13.33.1

BD.5.88

¹ Vin.5.331. ² sabhāga ... visabhāga, possibly referring to the two divisions of offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; that where offences are offences at once, and that where offences become so after (unsuccessful) admonition up to the third time. ³ sabhāga ... visabhāga, possibly referring to the two divisions of offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order; that where offences are offences at once, and that where offences become so after (unsuccessful) admonition up to the third time.

THE PORTION WITH ELEVEN CASES ON TWO MONKS

Kd.13.34.1

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. They come to be of the opinion that the offence is one entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it, the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing, and having granted him probation for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. They are doubtful whether the offence is one entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it ... (as above) ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. In regard to this offence they are of the opinion that it is a mixed offence.⁴ One conceals it ... (as above) ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks come to have fallen into a mixed offence. In regard to this mixed offence they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it ... should be imposed on both.

BD.5.89

“Two monks come to have fallen into a mixed offence. In regard to that mixed offence they are of the opinion that it is a mixed offence. One conceals it ... should be imposed on both.

¹ vavatthitā. ² sambhinnā. For example, there are no other Formal Meetings similar to Bu-Ss.1, Bu-Ss.5, Bu-Ss.12, or Bu-Ss.13. These, therefore, are “separate”. Formal Meetings Bu-Ss.2, Bu-Ss.3, Bu-Ss.4 are “connected” because they deal with the same subject matter and to some extent use the same wording; the same is also true of Formal Meetings Bu-Ss.6, Bu-Ss.7 and Bu-Ss.8; Bu-Ss.9, Bu-Ss.10 and Bu-Ss.11. Vin-a.1191 says that vavatthitā and sambhinnā are pariyāyavacana of sabhāga and visabhāga. ³ This is the whole of this paragraph as it stands. See note at Vinaya Texts ii.431 which says that the conclusion should be supplied as in Kd.13.28.1, with the exception that the penalty in each case is “a probation corresponding in length to the period which has elapsed since the first of those offences which the re-ordained Bhikkhu has concealed. The details are only worked out in Kd.13.28.1, of the first of the several pairs here enumerated, and are intended to be supplied here for each of the other pairs in a similar way. All the pairs recur in Chapters Kd.13.35, Kd.13.36.”

⁴ missaka, which Vin-a.1191 says means “mixed with a grave offence and so on.”

“Two monks come to have fallen into a slighter offence.¹ In regard to this slighter offence they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it, the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing and both should be dealt with according to the rule.²

“Two monks come to have fallen into a slighter offence. In regard to this slighter offence they are of the opinion that it is a slighter offence. One conceals it ... according to the rule.

Kd.13.34.2

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. In regard to this offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. It occurs to one, ‘I will tell about it,’ it occurs to the other, ‘I will not tell about it’. He conceals it during the first watch and he conceals it during the second watch and he conceals it during the third watch. If the offence is (still) concealed after the sun has risen, whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing, and having granted him probation for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

Vin.2.68

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. In regard to this offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. They go away, thinking, ‘We will tell about it.’ On the way, backsliding arises in one and he thinks, ‘I will not tell about it.’³ He conceals it during the first watch and ... he conceals it during the third watch. If the offence is (still) concealed after the sun has risen, ... should be imposed on both.

“Two monks ... They become mad, and later they, having become sane again, one conceals it the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing and, having granted him probation for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

BD.5.90

¹ suddhaka. Vin-a.1191 says the group of lighter offences, not those entailing a formal meeting of the Order. ² I.e. the rule for whatever offence it was, for as it was not an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, probation and mānatta would not enter into the penalty. ³ makkhadhamma, hypocrisy. Perhaps it here means that he deceived the other monk.

“Two monks come to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. As the Pātimokkha is being recited, these speak thus: ‘Only now do we understand that the rule, as is said, is handed down in a clause, contained in a clause (and) comes up for recitation every half-month.’¹ In regard to that offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order they are of the opinion that it is an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order. One conceals it, the other does not conceal it. Whoever conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing, and having granted him probation for as long as it was concealed, mānatta (discipline) should be imposed on both.

NINE CASES ON IMPURE BEGINNING

Kd.13.35.1

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: many and not many and of one kind and of different kinds and of a like division and of a different division and separate and connected.² He asks the Order for concurrent probation on account of these offences. The Order grants him concurrent probation on account of these offences. While he is doing probation he falls into several intervening offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, many, not concealed. On account of the intervening offences, he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of the intervening offences the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, (but) it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

Vin.2.69

BD.5.91

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many and of one kind and of different kinds and of a like division and of a different division and separate ones and connected ones. He asks the Order for concurrent probation on account of these offences. The Order grants him concurrent probation on account of these offences. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed ... On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

¹ See the “rule” in Bu-Pc.73 (Vin.4.144). ² As in Vin.5.333. The details of the first pair, not many and many, are worked out in relation to “concealed, not concealed” at Vin.5.328.

Kd.13.35.2

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many ... and connected ones. He asks the Order ... While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: many, not concealed ... many, concealed ... many, concealed and not concealed I ... not many and many, not concealed. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk ... and connected ones. He asks the Order for concurrent probation on account of these offences. The Order grants him concurrent probation on account of these offences. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many and concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants him concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

Vin.2.70

“This is a case, monks, ... and connected ones. On account of these offences, he asks the Order for concurrent probation. On account of these offences, the Order grants him concurrent probation. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many and concealed and not concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand. It grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) not by rule, it rehabilitates him not by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

BD.5.92

Told are the Nine Cases where (a Monk on being sent back to) the Beginning is Not Pure

SECOND SET OF NINE CASES

Kd.13.36.1

“This is a case, monks, where a monk falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and many ... and separate ones and connected ones. On account of these offences he asks the Order for concurrent probation. On account of these offences, the Order grants him concurrent probation. While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many, not concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand, it imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

“This is a case, monks, ... While he is under probation he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many and concealed and not concealed ... not many, concealed ... On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand, it grants concurrent probation not by rule, imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

BD.5.93

Kd.13.36.2

“This is a case, monks, ... While he is under probation he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order: not many, concealed. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. It grants him concurrent probation not by rule. He, thinking: 'I am under probation', meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed. He, arrived at that stage, remembers among the earlier offences offences (fallen into) meantime, he remembers among the subsequent offence's offences (fallen into) meantime. It occurs to him, 'Now, I have fallen into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many and many ... and separate ones and connected ones. On account of these offences I asked the Order for concurrent probation. On account of these offences the Order granted me concurrent probation. While I was under probation, I meantime fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed. So on account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, I asked the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sent me back to the beginning by a (formal) act that was not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. It granted concurrent probation not by rule. Then I, thinking 'I am under probation,' meantime fell into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many, concealed. Then I, arrived at this stage, remembered among the earlier offences offences fallen into meantime, I remembered among the subsequent offences offences fallen into meantime. Suppose that I, on account of those offences among the earlier offences, and on account of those offences among the subsequent offences, should ask the Order for sending back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, for concurrent probation by rule, for mānatta (discipline) by rule, for rehabilitation by rule?' He asks the Order ... The Order, on account of those offences among the earlier offences and on account of those offences among the subsequent offences, sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is legally valid, irreversible, fit to stand, it grants concurrent probation by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is pure in regard to those offences.

Vin.2.71

BD.5.94

“This is a case, monks, ... (This case is identical with the preceding, but instead of concealed read concealed and not concealed) ...

Kd.13.36.3

“This is a case, monks ... While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, many, not concealed, many, concealed ... not many and many, not concealed. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime he asks the Order for sending back to the beginning. On account of the offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand. It imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, rehabilitates by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

Vin.2.72

THIRD SET OF NINE CASES

“This is a case, monks, ... While he is under probation, he meantime falls into several offences entailing a formal meeting of the Order, not many and many, and concealed ... not many and many and concealed and not concealed ... On account of these offences (fallen into) meantime, the Order sends him back to the beginning by a (formal) act that is not legally valid, reversible, not fit to stand, it grants him concurrent probation not by rule, it imposes mānatta (discipline) by rule, it rehabilitates him by rule. Monks, that monk is not pure in regard to those offences.

Kd.13.36.4

“This is a case, monks ... (The two cases given here are identical with those specified in Kd.13.36.2; instead of not many read many) ... Monks, that monk is pure in regard to those offences.”

Told is the Third Section: that on Accumulation (of Offences)

THIS IS ITS KEY

Not concealed, and one day, two days, three days, four days and five days, and for a fortnight, ten days¹: the Great Sage speaks of an offence, / And slighter ones, leaving the Order, about ‘not many’,² two monks there agree,

BD.5.95

¹ dasānam should perhaps read dasāha, or dasannam. The reference is probably to Kd.13.21.1: ten offences concealed for ten days. ² Reading with Sinhalese edition parimāṇāsa ca instead of Oldenberg’s parimāṇamukhaṇ, for -mukhaṇ is hard to account for.

two are doubtful, are of the opinion that it is a mixed offence, /
 They are of the opinion that it is a heavier offence when it is a slighter one,¹ likewise of the opinion that it is a slighter one.² /
 One conceals, and then about backsliding,³ and confessing for one who was mad,
 (sending back) to the beginning, he is pure.⁴ /
 The recitation⁵ is for the maintenance of true dhmma among the teachers of the Vibhajja doctrines,⁶ and who, dwellers in the Mahāvihāra,⁷ illuminate Tambapaṇṇidīpa.⁸

¹ Reading with Sinhalese edition suddhake garukadiṭṭhino, and referring to the end of Kd.13.34.1 where two monks think that they have fallen into a Saṅghādisesa offence when really it is a slighter one. ² Reading should probably be suddhakadiṭṭhino instead of suddhadiṭṭhino of Oldenberg's text, and suddadiṭṭhi of Sinhalese edition. ³ As Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.312) the pakkhamitena ca should perhaps read makkhadhammena as in Kd.13.34.2. The Sinhalese edition reads pakkami tena ca. ⁴ Reading with Sinhalese edition mūlāya paṭivissuddhako (for mūlāya paṭikassati + visuddhako) instead of Oldenberg's mūlā, pamarasa visuddhato. On the other hand, there seem to be fifteen cases of sending back to the beginning made up of nine to which reference is made at the end of Kd.13.35, with six in Kd.13.36. ⁵ vācanā. ⁶ vibhajjapadānaṃ, which Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.312) should read vibhajjavādānaṃ. Sinhalese edition reads vibhajjāvādānaṃ. ⁷ The great monastery at Anurādhapura, for many centuries the chief seat of Buddhism in Ceylon. ⁸ Tambapaṇṇidīpa was a district in Ceylon, with Anurādhapura as its centre. According to SN-a.ii.111, it was a hundred yojanas in extent, but Vb-a.444 says it was three hundred yojanas in extent. See also Vin-a.i.102 where Mahinda tells Tissa that although the sāsana is established in Tambapaṇṇidīpa, it will not take root until a boy, born in Tambapaṇṇidīpa of parents belonging there, goes forth there, learns the Vinaya there, and recites it there. Tambapaṇṇidīpa also came to be a name for the whole of the Island of Ceylon. It seems strange to insert references to Anurādhapura and Ceylon here, as though this were, even if not an ending, yet referring to the time when the sāsana had reached this Island.

14. SETTLEMENTS (SAMATHA)

VERDICT IN THE PRESENCE OF

Vin.2.73
Kd.14.1.1
BD.5.96

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts of censure and guidance and banishment and reconciliation and suspension against monks who were not present. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can this group of six monks carry out (formal) acts of censure ... and suspension against monks who are not present?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that these monks carried out (formal) acts of censure ... and suspension against monks who were not present?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

"It is not fitting, monks, in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not suitable, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men carry out (formal) acts of censure ... and suspension against monks who are not present? It is not monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, a (formal) act of censure or guidance or banishment or reconciliation or suspension should not be carried out against monks who are not present. Whoever should carry one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.14.2.1

"An individual who professes non-dhamma makes known to an individual who professes dhamma, disposes him favourably, makes him consider, makes him reconsider, teaches him, teaches him again, saying: ‘This is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, choose this, approve of this.’ If this legal question is settled thus, it is settled by what is not rule, by what has the appearance of a verdict in the presence of.¹

Vin.2.74

BD.5.97

“An individual who professes non-dhamma makes known to several who profess dhamma ... An individual who professes non-dhamma makes known to an Order which professes dhamma ... Several who profess non-dhamma make known to an individual who professes dhamma ... Several who profess non-dhamma make known to several who profess dhamma ... Several who profess non-dhamma make known to an Order which professes dhamma ... An Order which professes non-dhamma makes known to an individual who professes dhamma ... An Order which professes non-dhamma makes known to several who profess dhamma ... An Order which professes non-dhamma makes known to an Order which professes dhamma, disposes it favourably, makes it consider, makes it reconsider, teaches it, teaches it again, saying: ‘This is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, choose this, approve of this.’ If this legal question is settled thus, it is settled by what is not rule, by what has the appearance of a verdict in the presence of.”

Told are the Nine Cases of the Dark Faction

“An individual who professes dhamma makes known to an individual who professes non-dhamma ... An Order which professes dhamma makes known to an Order which professes non-dhamma ... If this legal question is settled thus, it is settled by rule, by a verdict in the presence of.”

Kd.14.3.1

Told are the Nine Cases of the Bright Faction

VERDICT BY MEMORY

Kd.14.4.1

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding-place.¹ At that time perfection had been realised by the venerable Dabba the Mallian seven years after his birth. All that should be attained by a disciple had been fully attained by him; for him there was nothing further to be done, no increase to (be added to) that which had been done. Then this reasoning arose in the mind of the venerable Dabba the Mallian as he was meditating in solitude:² "Perfection was realised by me seven years after my birth. All that should be attained by a disciple has been fully attained by me; for me there is nothing further to be done, no increase to (be added to) that which has been done. Now, what service could I render the Order?" Then it occurred to the venerable Dabba the Mallian: "Suppose that I were to assign lodgings to the Order and issue meals?"

BD.5.98

Vin.2.75

Kd.14.4.2

Then the venerable Dabba the Mallian, emerging from his meditation in the evening, approached the Lord, having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting at a respectful distance, the venerable Dabba the Mallian spoke thus to the Lord: "Now, Lord, as I was meditating in solitude, this reasoning arose in my mind: '... What service could I render the Order?' Then, Lord, it occurred to me: 'Suppose I were to assign lodgings to the Order and issue the meals?' I want, Lord, to assign lodgings to the Order and issue meals."

"It is good, it is good, Dabba. Well then, do you, Dabba, assign lodgings to the Order and issue meals."

"Very well, Lord," the venerable Dabba the Mallian answered the Lord in assent.

Kd.14.4.3

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: "Well then, monks, let the Order agree upon Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals.

¹ sammukhāvinayaapaṭirūpaka. On sammukhāvinaya., see Vin.2.93ff., and BD.3.153, n.2 for further references. ² From here to towards the end of Kd.14.9.1 is almost word for word the same as Vin.3.158–Vin.3.163; translated at BD.1.271–BD.1.281. I give the translation again in full here, but I have not repeated the notes, for which readers should refer to the earlier volume. ² The story is given in brief outline at Thag-a.i.44.

And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, Dabba should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the venerable Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the venerable Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals. If the agreement upon the venerable Dabba the Mallian as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The venerable Dabba the Mallian is agreed upon by the Order as assigner of lodgings and issuer of meals. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

BD.5.99

Kd.14.4.4

And the venerable Dabba the Mallian, (thus) agreed upon, assigned lodgings in the same place for those monks who belonged to the same company. For those monks who knew the Suttantas he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: “These will be able to chant over the Suttantas to one another.” For those monks who were expert in discipline he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: “They will decide upon discipline together.” For those monks who were talkers on dhamma he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: “They will discuss dhamma with one another.” For those monks who were musers he assigned lodgings in the same place, thinking: “They will not disturb one another.” For those monks who were talkers on inferior matters and who were athletic he assigned lodgings at the same place, thinking: “These reverend ones will live according to their pleasure.” For those monks who came in late at night, he, having attained the condition of heat, assigned lodgings by this light. So much so, that the monks came in late at night on purpose, thinking: “We will see a wonder of the psychic potency of the venerable Dabba the Mallian.” And these, having approached the venerable Dabba the Mallian, spoke thus: “Reverend Dabba, assign us lodgings.” The venerable Dabba the Mallian spoke thus to them; “Where do your reverences desire them? Where shall I assign them?” These (monks) would quote a distant place on purpose, saying:

Vin.2.76

“Reverend Dabba, assign us lodgings on the Vultures’ Peak; your reverence, assign us lodgings on the Robber’s Cliff; your reverence, assign us lodgings on the slopes of Isigili Hill on the Black Rock; your reverence, assign us lodgings on the slopes of Vebhāra at Sattapaṇṇi Cave; your reverence, assign us lodgings in Sītā's Wood on the slopes of the Snake Pool; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Gomaṭa Glen; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Tinduka Glen; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Tapodā Glen; your reverence, assign us lodgings at the Tapodā Park; your reverence, assign us lodgings at Jīvaka's Mango Grove; your reverence, assign us lodgings at Maddakucchi in the deer-park.”

The venerable Dabba the Mallian, having attained the condition of heat, went in front of these (monks) with his finger glowing, and they by this light went behind the venerable Dabba the Mallian. The venerable Dabba the Mallian assigned them lodgings thus: “This is the couch, this the chair, this the mattress, this the squatting mat, this a privy, that a privy, this the drinking water, this the water for washing, this the staff, this is (the form of) the Order's agreement, this is the time it should be entered upon, this the time it should be departed from.” The venerable Dabba the Mallian, having assigned lodgings to these, went back again to the Bamboo Grove.

Kd.14.4.5

Now at that time monks who were the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka were newly ordained and of little merit; they obtained whatever inferior lodgings belonged to the Order and inferior meals. At that time people in Rājagaha wanted to give the monks who were elders almsfood¹ having a specially good seasoning, and ghee and oil and dainties. But to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka they gave sufficient ordinary food, broken rice accompanied by sour gruel.² These, on returning from alms-gathering after their meal, asked the monks who were elders: “What did you, your reverences, get at the refectory? What did you?”

Vin.2.77

Some elders spoke thus: “There was ghee for us, your reverences, there was oil for us, there were dainties for us.”

But the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka spoke thus: “There was nothing for us, your reverences, except sufficient ordinary food, broken rice accompanied by sour gruel.”

¹ Almsfood, piṇḍapāta, is omitted at Vin.2.77 above, but occurs at Vin.3.160. ² At AN.i.145 called food given to servants.

Kd.14.4.6

Now at that time a householder who had nice food gave the Order in continuous food supply meals consisting of four ingredients.¹ He, with his wife and children, attended and served in the refectory. They offered boiled rice to some (monks), they offered curry to others, they offered oil to others, they offered dainties to others. Now at that time a meal given by the householder who had nice food was apportioned for the following day to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka. Then the householder who had nice food went to the monastery on some business or other and approached the venerable Dabba the Mallian; having approached, having greeted the venerable Dabba the Mallian, he sat down at a respectful distance. As the householder who had nice food was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Dabba the Mallian delighted, rejoiced, roused, gladdened him with talk on dhamma. Then when the householder who had nice food had been delighted ... gladdened by the venerable Dabba the Mallian with talk on dhamma, he spoke thus to the venerable Dabba the Mallian: "For whom, honoured sir, is the meal apportioned for tomorrow in my house?"

"Householder, the meal apportioned in your house for tomorrow is for monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka."

Then the householder who had nice food was sorry and said: "Why should these depraved monks enjoy themselves in my house?" And having gone to his house he enjoined a slave-woman, saying: "Having prepared a seat in the porch for those who come to eat Tomorrow, serve them with broken rice accompanied by sour gruel."

"Very well, master," the woman-slave answered to the householder who had nice food, in assent.

Kd.14.4.7

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka said to one another: "Yesterday, your reverences, a meal was apportioned to us by the householder who has nice food. Tomorrow the householder who has nice food attending with his wife and children, will serve us. They will offer boiled rice to some, they will offer curry to others, they will offer oil to others, they will offer dainties to others.” These, because of their happiness, did not sleep that night as much as expected.

Vin.2.78

¹ "A meal for four monks" at BD.1.276 should be corrected to the above rendering.

BD.5.102

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, dressing in the morning and taking their bowls and robes, approached the dwelling of the householder who had nice food. That woman-slave saw the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka coming from afar; seeing them, having prepared a seat in the porch, she said to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “Sit down, honoured sirs.” Then it occurred to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “But undoubtedly the food will not be ready as we are made to sit in the porch.” Then the woman-slave came up with the broken rice accompanied by sour gruel. “Eat, honoured sirs,” she said.

“But, sister, we are those who enjoy a continuous supply of food.”

“I know that the masters enjoy a continuous supply of food. But only yesterday I was enjoined by the householder: ‘Having prepared a seat in the porch for those who come for a meal Tomorrow, serve them with broken rice accompanied by sour gruel’. Eat, honoured sirs,” she said.

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka thought: “Yesterday, your reverences, the householder who has nice food went to Dabba the Mallian in the monastery. Doubtless, Dabba the Mallian has set the householder at variance with us.” These (monks), on account of their distress, did not eat as much as expected.

Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, returning from alms-gathering after the meal, having arrived at the monastery, having put away their bowls and robes, sat down outside the gateway of the monastery, squatting against their outer cloaks, silent, abashed, their shoulders bent, their heads lowered, brooding, speechless.

Kd.14.4.8

Then the nun Mettiyā approached the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka; having approached, she spoke thus to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “I salute you, masters.” When she had spoken thus, the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond. A second time ... A third time the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond.

“Do I offend against the masters? Why do the masters not respond to me?” she said.

“It is because you, sister, neglected us when we were being got into difficulties by Dabba the Mallian.”

“What can I do, masters?” she said.

“If you would like, sister, this very day you could make the Lord expel Dabba the Mallian.”

“What can I do, masters? How am I able to do that?”

“You come, sister, approach the Lord; having approached, say to the Lord: ‘Now, Lord, it is not proper, it is not becoming that this quarter which should be without fear, secure, without danger, is the very quarter which is full of fear, insecure, full of danger. Where there was a calm, now there is a gale. It seems the very water is blazing. I have been assaulted by master Dabba the Mallian.’”

“Very well, masters,” and the nun Mettiyā having answered the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the nun Mettiya spoke thus to the Lord: “Now, Lord, it is not proper ... I have been assaulted by master Dabba the Mallian.”

Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Dabba the Mallian, saying:

“Do you, Dabba, remember doing as this nun says?”

“Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me.” And a second time ... And a third time ... “Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me.”

“Dabba, the Dabbas do not give evasive answers like that.¹ If what was done was done by you, say so; if it was not done (by you), say it was not.”

“Since I, Lord, was born, I cannot call to mind ever indulging in sexual intercourse even in a dream, much less so when I was awake.”

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, expel the nun Mettiyā, and take these monks to task.” Having spoken thus, the ¹ Quoted Thag-a.1.45, which explains dabbo as drabyo, bhabbo (with a number of variant readings).

BD.5.103

Vin.2.79

Kd.14.4.9

Lord, rising from his seat, entered a dwelling-place. Then these monks expelled the nun Mettiyā. Then the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka spoke thus to these monks: “Your reverences, do not expel the nun Mettiyā; in no way has she offended; she was urged on by us because we were angry, displeased and wanted him out of the way.”

BD.5.104

“But are not you, your reverences, defaming the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit?”¹

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defame the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.14.4.10

“Well then, monks, let the Order give a verdict of innocence² to Dabba the Mallian who has remembered fully.³ And thus, monks, should it be given: Monks, Dabba the Mallian, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘Honoured sirs, these monks, followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, defamed me with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. But I, honoured sirs, having remembered fully, ask the Order for a verdict of innocence’. And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for: ‘Honoured sirs, these monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed me with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. So I, honoured sirs, having remembered fully, for a third time ask the Order for a verdict of innocence'. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. The venerable Dabba the Mallian, having remembered fully, is asking the Order for a verdict of innocence. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully, a verdict of innocence. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These monks who are followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka ... is asking the Order for a verdict of innocence. The Order is giving the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully, a verdict of innocence. If the giving of a verdict of innocence to the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... A verdict of innocence is given by the Order to the venerable Dabba the Mallian, who has remembered fully. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this'.

Vin.2.80

¹ At Bu-Ss.8.1.9 he is defamed with an unfounded charge involving defeat. The two versions proceed differently after the end of this paragraph. ² sativinaya. See BD.3.153, n.3. ³ See Vinaya Texts iii.16, n.1 on sativepullapatta. This means arrived at (or attained to) fullness of memory—thus one whose conscience is quite clean, as at Vinaya Texts iii.16. Cf. below, Kd.14.4.27.

BD.5.105

Kd.14.4.11

“Monks, there are these five legally valid properties in giving a verdict of innocence: if the monk is pure and without offences; and if they reproach him; and if he asks; if the Order gives him a verdict of innocence; if it is by rule, the assembly being complete. These, monks, are the five legally valid properties in giving a verdict of innocence.”

VERDICT BY FORMER MADNESS

Now at that time the monk Gagga¹ was mad, out of his mind,² and while he was mad, out of his mind he perpetrated much and spoke in a way³ that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reproved the monk Gagga because of offences done (by him) while he was mad, out of his mind, saying: “Does

Kd.14.5.1

¹ Typifying a mad monk, also at Vin.1.123. ² cittavipariyāsakata; cf. cetaso vipariyāsa at MN.ii.248; vipariyādikata citta at Thag.184, and vipariyattha citta at Ja.v.372. For this whole passage cf. MN.ii.248. ³ bhāsitarikanta. See Pali-English Dictionary, under parikanta. It says this passage is evidently faulty.

Vin.2.81
BD.5.106

the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?" He spoke thus: "I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken by me that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane."¹ Although being spoken to thus by him, they still reproved him, saying: "Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?" Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these monks reprove the monk Gagga because of offences done (by him) when he was mad, out of his mind, saying: 'Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?' and he spoke thus: 'I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken by me that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane'. And although being spoken to by him thus, they still reproved him, saying: 'Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?'" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Is it true, as is said, monks ...?"

"It is true, Lord." Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Well then, monks, let the Order give a verdict of past insanity² to the monk Gagga who is no longer insane.

Kd.14.5.2

"And thus, monks, should it be given: Monks, that monk Gagga, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having raised his joined palms in salutation, should speak thus to it: 'I, honoured sirs, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, I perpetrated much and spoke in a way that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reproved me because of offences done (by me) while I was mad, out of my mind, saying: "Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?" So I spoke thus: 'I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind. While I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken (by me) that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane'. And even although they were spoken to thus by me, they still reproved me, saying: "Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?" So I, honoured sirs, no longer insane, am asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity,' And a second time it should be asked for ... And a third time it should be asked for, saying: 'I, honoured sirs, was mad ... even a third time am I asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity'. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Gagga was mad, out of his mind. While he was mad, out of his mind, much was perpetrated and spoken (by him) that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reproved the monk Gagga for offences done (by him) while he was mad, out of his mind, saying: "Does the venerable one remember ...?" He spoke thus: "I, honoured sirs, do not remember ... This was done by me while I was insane." Even on being spoken to by him thus, they still reproved him, saying: "Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like thus?" He, no longer insane, is asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the monk Gagga, who is no longer insane, a verdict of past insanity. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Gagga ... is asking the Order for a verdict of past insanity. If the giving of a verdict of past insanity to the monk Gagga who is no longer insane is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. A verdict of past insanity is given by the Order to the monk Gagga who is no longer insane. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.'

¹ mūḷha, astray, erring. ² amūḷhavinaya. Cf. Vin.4.207 (BD.3.153, n.4).

BD.5.107

Vin.2.82

"Monks, there are these three not legally valid properties in giving a verdict of past insanity, three that are legally valid. What are the three properties that are not legally valid in giving a verdict of past insanity? This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: 'Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?' If he, although remembering, speaks thus: 'I do not, your reverences, remember having fallen into an offence like that,' and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is not legally valid.

Kd.14.6.1

BD.5.108

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence ... ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ If he, although remembering, speaks thus: ‘I, your reverences, remember it as though from a dream,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is not legally valid.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk has fallen into an offence ... ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ If he, although not mad, pretends to be mad, saying: ‘I act thus, do you also act thus, this is allowable for me, and it is also allowable for you,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is not legally valid. These three properties in giving a verdict of past insanity are not legally valid.

Kd.14.6.2

“What are the three properties in giving a verdict of past insanity that are legally valid? This is a case, monks, where a monk is mad, out of his mind. While he is mad, out of his mind, he perpetrates much and speaks in a way that is not worthy of a recluse. An Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this? If he, not remembering, speaks thus: ‘I do not, your reverences, remember having fallen into an offence like that,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is legally valid.

Vin.2.83

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is mad, ... ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ If he, not remembering, speaks thus: ‘I, your reverences, remember as though from a dream,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is legally valid.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk is mad ... ‘Does the venerable one remembers having fallen into an offence like this? If he is mad and pretends to be mad and says, ‘I act thus, do you also act thus, this is allowable for me, it is also allowable for you,’ and if the Order gives him a verdict of past insanity, the giving of the verdict of past insanity is legally valid. These three properties in giving a verdict of past insanity are legally valid.”

BD.5.109

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Now at that time the group of six monks carried out (formal) acts of censure and guidance and banishment and reconciliation and suspension against monks without their acknowledgement.¹ Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks carry out (formal) acts of censure and ... suspension against monks without their acknowledgement?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true as is said, monks ...?”

Kd.14.7.1

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a (formal) act of censure or of guidance or of banishment or of reconciliation or of suspension should not be carried out against a monk without his acknowledgement. Whoever should (so) carry (one) out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.14.8.1

“Monks, the carrying out (of a formal act) on the acknowledgement of (a monk) is not legally valid thus, it is legally valid thus. And how, monks, is the carrying out on the acknowledgement not legally valid? A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving defeat. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘The venerable one has fallen into an offence involving defeat.’ If he speaks thus: ‘I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence involving defeat, I have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

“A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving defeat ... If he speaks thus: ‘I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence involving defeat, I have fallen into a grave offence, into an offence involving expiation, into an offence which ought to be confessed, into an offence of wrong-doing, into an offence of wrong speech,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong speech, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

BD.5.110

¹ I.e. of their offence: apaṭiññāya. Cf. paṭiññāya kāretabbaṃ at Vin.4.207 (BD.3.153, n.5).

Vin.2.84

“A monk comes to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... into a grave offence, into an offence involving expiation, into an offence which ought to be confessed, into an offence of wrong-doing, into an offence of wrong speech. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘The venerable one has fallen into an offence of wrong speech’. If he speaks thus: ‘I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence of wrong speech, I have fallen into an offence involving defeat,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence involving defeat, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

Kd.14.8.2

“A monk comes to have fallen into an offence of wrong speech ... If he speaks thus: ‘I have not, your reverences, fallen into an offence of wrong speech, I have fallen into a grave offence, into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... into an offence involving expiation, into an offence which ought to be confessed, into an offence of wrong-doing,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong-doing, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is not legally valid.

“And how, monks, is the carrying out on the acknowledgement legally valid? A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving defeat. The Order or several (monks) or one individual reproves him for it, saying: ‘The venerable one has fallen into an offence involving defeat’. If he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverences, I have fallen into an offence involving defeat,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence involving defeat, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is legally valid.

“A monk comes to have fallen into an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... into a grave offence ... into an offence of wrong speech ... If he speaks thus: ‘Yes, your reverences, I have fallen into an offence of wrong speech,’ and if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong speech, the carrying out on the acknowledgement is legally valid.”

MAJORITY

Kd.14.9.1
BD.5.111

Now at that time monks were striving, quarrelling, disputing in the midst of an Order, they were wounding one another with the weapons of the tongue; they were unable to settle that legal question. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you monks, to settle this kind of legal question by the decision of the majority."¹ A monk possessed of five qualities should be agreed upon as distributor of (voting) tickets²; one who would not follow a wrong course through favouritism, who would not follow a wrong course through hatred ... through stupidity ... through fear, who would know what is taken and what is not.³ And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First a monk should be asked. Having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon the monk So-and-so as distributor of (voting) tickets. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the monk So-and-so as distributor of (voting) tickets. If the agreement upon the monk So-and-so as distributor of (voting) tickets is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is hot pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order as distributor of (voting) tickets. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.'

"Monks, there are ten distributions of (voting) tickets that are not legally valid, ten that are legally valid. What are the ten distributions of (voting) tickets that are not legally valid? When the legal question is only trifling, and when it has not gone its course,⁴ and when it is not remembered or caused to be remembered,⁵ and when he knows that those who profess non-dhamma are more (in number), when he even thinks that those who profess non-dhamma may be more (in number), if he knows that the Order will be divided, if he even thinks that the Order may be divided, if they take (the tickets) not by rule,⁶ if they take them in an incomplete assembly, and if they take them not according to their views.⁷ These ten distributions of

Vin.2.85
Kd.14.10.1

BD.5.112

¹ yebhuyyasikā. See Vin.4.207 (BD.3.153, n.6). "As long as the majority are speakers of dhamma," Vin-a.1192. ² salākaḡāhāpaka. Cf. below, Kd.14.14.24. ³ Referring to the voting tickets. ⁴ gatigata. See Vinaya Texts iii.26. Vin-a.1192 says, if it has not gone to two or three residences, or has not been detailed, avinicchita, here and there two or three times. ⁵ Vin-a.1192 says: "two or three times it is not remembered by these monks themselves, or caused to be remembered by others." ⁶ They each take two tickets, saying: "Thus we, speakers of what is not dhamma, will become the majority," Vin-a.1193. ⁷ Changing their views simply so as to be on the side of the majority.

(voting) tickets are not legally valid.

Kd.14.10.2

“What are the ten distributions of (voting) tickets that are legally valid? When the legal question is not merely trifling, and when it has gone its course, and when it is remembered and caused to be remembered, and when he knows that those who profess dhamma are more (in number), when he even thinks that those who profess dhamma may be more (in number), when he knows that the Order will not be divided, when he even thinks that the Order will not be divided, when they take (the tickets) by rule, when they take them in a complete assembly, and when they take them according to their views. These ten distributions of (voting) tickets are legally valid.”

BAD CHARACTER

Kd.14.11.1

Now at that time the monk Uvāḷa, on being examined for offences in the midst of the Order, having denied,¹ acknowledged, having acknowledged, denied, he shelved the question by (asking) another, he told a conscious lie. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this monk Uvāḷa, on being examined ... tell a conscious lie?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks ...?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity² against the monk Uvāḷa.

Kd.14.11.2

And thus, monks, should it be carried out: First, the monk Uvāḷa should be reprovved, having reprovved him, he should be made to remember, having made him remember, he should be made to confess³ the offence, having made him confess the offence, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Uvāḷa, on being examined for offences in the midst of the Order, having denied, acknowledged ... he told a conscious lie. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may carry out a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk Uvāḷa ... told a conscious lie. The Order is carrying out a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa. If the carrying out of a (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak ... And a third time I speak forth this matter ... A (formal) act for the decision for specific depravity is carried out by the Order against the monk Uvāḷa. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

BD.5.113

¹ As at Vin.4.1; see BD.2.164. ² tassapāpiyyasikā. See BD.3.154, n.1; MN.ii.249. ³ ropeti.

Vin.2.86
Kd.14.12.1

“Monks, these five grounds for a (formal) act for specific depravity are legally valid: if he becomes impure, and if he is unconscientious, and if he is fault-finding,¹ if an Order carries out a (formal) act for specific depravity against him, if it is by rule and in a complete assembly. These five grounds, monks, for a (formal) act for specific depravity are legally valid.

Kd.14.12.2

“Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of three qualities it comes to be a (formal) act not by rule, a (formal) act not by discipline, and one that is hard to settle: if it is carried out not in the presence of, if it is carried out without interrogation, if it is carried out not with the acknowledgement ...² if it is carried out not by rule, if it is carried out in an incomplete assembly. Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of these three qualities, it comes to be a (formal) act not by rule, a (formal) act not by discipline, and one that is hard to settle.

“Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of three qualities it come to be a (formal) act by rule and a (formal) act by discipline, and one that is easily settled if it is carried out in the presence of, if it is carried out on the interrogation, if it is carried out with the acknowledgement ...³ if it is carried out by rule, if it is carried out in a complete assembly. Monks, if a (formal) act for specific depravity is possessed of these three qualities, it comes to be a (formal) act by rule, a (formal) act by discipline, and one that is easily settled.

BD.5.114

“Monks, if a monk is possessed of three qualities,⁴ the Order, if it desires, may carry out a (formal) act for specific depravity against him: if he is a

Kd.14.12.3

¹ sānuvāda, cf. anuvāda at Vin.2.5. Buddhaghosa glosses by sa-upavāda. ² As at Kd.11.2.1.

³ As at Kd.11.3.1. ⁴ As at Kd.11.4.

maker of strife, if he is a maker of quarrels, if he is a maker of disputes if he is a maker of contention, if he is a maker of legal questions in the Order; if he is ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences, not rid of them; if he lives in association with householders in unbecoming association with householders. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these three qualities, the Order, if it desires, may carry out a (formal) act for specific depravity against him.

Kd.14.12.4

“A monk against whom a (formal) act for specific depravity¹ has been carried out should conduct himself properly. This is proper conduct in this case: he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him, he should not consent to the agreement to exhort nuns, even if he is agreed upon he should not exhort nuns ... he should not quarrel with monks.”

Kd.14.12.5

Then the Order carried out a (formal) act for specific depravity against the monk Uvāḷa.

COVERING OVER WITH GRASS

Kd.14.13.1

Now at that time, while monks were striving, quarrelling, disputing, much was perpetrated and spoken that was not worthy of a recluse.² Then it occurred to these monks: “While we were striving ... not worthy of a recluse. If we should deal with one another for these offences, it might even be that that legal question would conduce to harshness, to trouble, to schism. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by us?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.2.87

BD.5.115

“This is a case, monks, where while monks were striving ... much was perpetrated and spoken that was not worthy of a recluse. Then it occurred to these monks: ‘While we were striving ... it might even be that that legal question would conduce to harshness, to trouble, to schism.’ I allow, monks, a legal question such as this to be settled by the covering up (as) with grass.³

Kd.14.13.2

“And thus, monks, should it be settled: One and all should gather together in the same place; having gathered together, the Order should be informed

¹ As for an act of banishment carried out against a monk, at Kd.11.5. ² As at Kd.14.5.1.

³ tiṇavatthāraka. As at Vin.4.207, MN.ii.250. See BD.3.154.

by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... ‘... it might even be that this legal question would conduce to harshness, to trouble, to schism.’ If it seems right to the Order, the Order may settle this legal question by the covering up (as) with grass, unless it is a heavy sin,¹ unless it is connected with the laity.’² The one side³ should be informed by an experienced, competent monk from among the monks siding in with the one (side): ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. While we were striving ... not worthy of a recluse ... to schism. If it is pleasing to the venerable ones, I would confess whatever is the offence of the venerable ones as well as whatever is my own offence both for the sake of the venerable ones and for my own sake, unless it is a heavy sin, unless it is connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order.’ Afterwards, the other side should be informed by an experienced, competent monk from among the monks siding in with the other (side): ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. While we were striving ... a covering up (as with) grass in the midst of the Order.’

Kd.14.13.3

“The Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk siding in with the one (side): ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... not worthy of a recluse ... to schism. If it seems right to the Order, I would confess whatever is the offence of the venerable ones as well as whatever is my own offence, both for the sake of the venerable ones and for my own sake, unless it is a heavy sin, unless it is connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... not worthy of recluse ... to schism. I am confessing whatever is the offence of these venerable ones and whatever is my own offence ... unless it is a heavy sin, unless it is connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as with) grass in the midst of the Order. If the confession of these offences of ours, unless they are heavy sins, unless they are connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. These offences of ours are confessed (by me), except heavy sins, except those connected with the laity, (so as to obtain) a covering up (as) with grass in the midst of the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

BD.5.116

¹ thūlavajja, Vin-a.1194, explaining as Pārājika and Saṅghādisesa. ² Commentary says: unless it is an offence where he reviles and despises householders by means of a low thing; see under “insulting speech” at Vin.4.6 (BD.2.173ff.); also above, BD.5.25. ³ saka pakkha, one’s own side.

Vin.2.88

“Afterwards the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk from among the monks siding in with the other (side): ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were striving ... Thus do I understand this.’

Kd.14.13.4

“And thus, monks, do these offences come to be removed from these monks,¹ except for a heavy sin, except for what is connected with the laity, except for (those who make) an open statement of their views,² except for those who are not there.”³

ISSUES

Kd.14.14.1

Now at that time monks disputed with monks and nuns disputed with monks and the monk Channa, intruding into the nuns’ (quarters), disputed together with the monks and was prejudiced on the side of the nuns. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this monk Channa, intruding into the nuns’ (quarters), dispute together with monks and be prejudiced on the side of the nuns?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?”

BD.5.117

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.14.14.2

