¹ te bhikkhū tāhi āpattihi vuṭṭhitā honti, literally “these monks are risen up (or, removed) from these offences.” ² diṭṭhāvikkamma. Vin-a.1194 says “those who say, ‘It is not pleasing to me’ and explain their views to one another, or, having fallen into offence together with these who have not come there, or who have come and given (someone’s) leave for being absent while sitting down in cells and so on—these have not risen from those offences. Therefore it is said: except for (those who make) an open statement of their views, except for those who are not there.” ³ ṭhapetvā ye na tattha honti. See previous note.

“Monks, there are these four kinds of legal questions: legal questions arising out of disputes legal questions arising out of censure, legal questions arising out of offences, legal questions arising out of obligations.¹

“What is here a legal question arising out of disputes This is a case, monks, where monks dispute, saying²: ‘It is dhamma’ or ‘It is not dhamma’ or ‘It is discipline’ or ‘It is not discipline’ or ‘It is spoken, uttered by the Truth-finder’, or ‘It is not spoken, not uttered by the Truth-finder’ or ‘It is practised by the Truth-finder’ or ‘It is not practised by the Truth-finder’ or ‘It is laid down by the Truth-finder’ or ‘It is not laid down by the Truth-finder’ or ‘It is an offence’ or ‘It is not an offence’ or ‘It is a slight offence’ or ‘It is a serious offence’ or ‘It is an offence that can be done away with’ or ‘It is an offence that cannot be done away with’ or ‘It is a bad offence’ or ‘It is not a bad offence.’ Whatever here is strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, difference of opinion, other opinion, because the common appellation of heatedness³ is ‘quarrel,⁴’, this is called a legal question arising from disputes

“What is here a legal question arising from censure? In this case, monks, monks censure a monk for falling away from moral habit or for falling away from good habits or for falling away from right view or for falling away from a right mode of livelihood. Whatever here is censure, fault-finding, talking to, scolding, bickering, inciting, instigating, this is called a legal question arising from censure.

“What is here a legal question arising from offences? Both the five classes of offences⁵ (yield) legal questions arising from offences, and the seven classes of offences⁶ (yield) legal questions arising from offences. This is called a legal question arising from offences.

BD.5.118

“What is here a legal question arising from obligations? Whatever is an Order’s business and ought to be done (by it): a (formal) act for which leave

Vin.2.89

¹ As at Vin.3.164. ² Cf. the following with Vin.1.354. ³ vipaccatāya vohāro. Vin-a.1194 says “the common appellation is due to mental uneasiness, cittadukkha. The meaning is harsh speech.” ⁴ medhaka. ⁵ That is to say, those of Defeat, those entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order, those of Expiation, those which ought to be confessed and those of wrong-doing. ⁶ The above five, With grave offences and those of wrong speech added.

ought to be asked,¹ a (formal) act at which a motion is put, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by one resolution, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by a resolution made three times.² This is called a legal question arising from obligations.

Kd.14.14.3

“What is the source of a legal question arising from disputes Six sources of dispute are the source of a legal question arising from disputes there are three unskilled sources which are the source of a legal question arising from disputes as well as three skilled sources which are the source of legal questions arising from disputes

“Which are the six sources of dispute which are the source of a legal question arising from disputes In this case, a monk becomes angry and bears ill-will.³ Monks, whatever monk becomes angry and bears ill-will, he lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Teacher, and he lives without deference, disrespectful towards dhamma, and he lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Order, and he does not complete the training. Monks, whatever monk lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Teacher, dhamma, and the Order and does not complete the training, he causes dispute in an Order, and that dispute comes to be for the harm of the many-folk, for the lack of ease of the many-folk, for the lack of the goal for the many-folk, for the harm and dissatisfaction of devas and mankind. If you, monks, should perceive a source of dispute like this among yourselves or among others, you, monks, should strive therein for the destruction of precisely that evil source of disputes If you, monks, should perceive no source of dispute like this among yourselves or among others, you, monks, should therein follow a course (to stop) there being future effects of precisely that evil source of disputes Thus there comes to be destruction of that evil source of disputes thus there come to be no future effects of that evil source of disputes

BD.5.119

¹ apalokanakamma. Vin-a.1195 says “having purified the Order living in the boundary, having brought the leave of absence of those who deserve to send leave of absence, the (formal) act should be carried out, having announced it three times for the approval of a complete Order.” Vin-a.1195 refers for all these types of formal acts to the Parivāra, i.e. to Vin.5.229ff.

² These types of formal acts are also mentioned at Vin.4.152 in definition of “legitimate (formal) acts.” See BD.3.59, BD.3.60 for further references. ³ This recurs at AN.iii.334; DN.iii.246; MN.i.96, MN.ii.245. See Pp.ii.1 where kodha and upanāhi form the subjects of questions.

“And again, monks, a monk becomes harsh¹ and unmerciful, he becomes envious and grudging, he becomes crafty and deceitful, he comes to have evil desires and wrong views, he comes to be infected with worldliness, obstinate, stubborn.² Monks, that monk who lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Teacher ... thus there come to be no future effects of that evil source of disputes These six sources of dispute are the source of a legal question arising from disputes

Kd.14.14.4

“Which three unskilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from disputes In this case, monks dispute covetous in mind, they dispute corrupt in mind, they dispute erring in mind, saying: ‘It is dhamma’ or ‘It is not dhamma’ or ... ‘It is not a bad offence.’³ These three unskilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from disputes

“Which three skilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from disputes In this case, monks dispute not covetous in mind, they dispute not corrupt in mind, they dispute not erring in mind, saying: ‘It is dhamma’ or ‘It is not dhamma’ ... or ‘It is not a bad offence’. These three skilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from disputes

Vin.2.90

Kd.14.14.5

“What is the source of a legal question arising from censure? Six sources of censure are the source of a legal question arising from censure: there are three unskilled sources which are the source of a legal question arising from censure as well as three skilled sources which are the source of a legal question arising from censure; body, too, is a source of a legal question arising from censure; speech, too, is a source of a legal question arising from censure.

BD.5.120

“Which are the six sources of censure that are the source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case, monks, a monk becomes angry and bears ill-will ... (as in Kd.14.14.3. Instead of dispute read censure, source of censure, etc.) ... These six sources of censure are the source of a legal question arising from censure.

“Which three unskilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case, monks, covetous in mind, censure a monk, corrupt in mind they censure (him), erring in mind they censure him with falling away from moral habit or with falling away from good habits or with falling away from right view or with falling away from a right mode of livelihood. These three unskilled source are the sources of a legal question arising from censure.

¹ The first six words occur at MN.i.96 (cf. MN.i.43) and they form subjects of questions at Pp.ii.2–Pp.ii.4. The first five occur at Ja.iii.259. ² Cf. MN.i.43, MN.i.96, MN.i.402; DN.iii.247; AN.iii.335, AN.v.150. ³ As at Kd.14.14.2.

“Which three skilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case monks, not covetous in mind, censure a monk; not corrupt in mind ... not erring in mind, they censure him with falling away from moral habit ... with falling away from a right mode of living. These three skilled sources are the source of a legal question arising from censure.

“Which (kind of) a body is a source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case someone comes to be of a bad colour,¹ ugly, deformed, very ill or blind of one eye or paralysed down one side or lame or a cripple, on account of which they censure him. This (kind of) body is a source of a legal question arising from censure.

“Which (kind of) speech is a source of a legal question arising from censure? In this case someone comes to be surly, stuttering, of hoarse enunciation, on account of which they censure him. This (kind of) speech is a source of a legal question arising from censure.

Kd.14.14.6

“What is the source of a legal question arising from offences? Six origins of offences are the source of a legal question arising from offences: there is the offence which originates from the body, not from speech, not from mind; there is the offence which originates from speech, not from body, not from mind; there is the offence which originates from body and from speech, not from mind; there is the offence which originates from body and from mind, not from speech; there is the offence which originates from speech and mind, not from body; there is the offence which originates from body and from speech and from mind. These six origins of offences are the source of a legal question arising from offences.

Kd.14.14.7

“What is the source of a legal question arising from obligations? The Order is the sole source of a legal question arising from obligations.

Vin.2.91

Kd.14.14.8

“A legal question arising from disputes is it skilled, unskilled, indeter-

¹ As at AN.i.107=AN.ii.85=SN.i.94=MN.iii.169=Pp.51.

minate? A legal question arising from disputes may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. What here is a legal question arising from disputes that is skilled? In this case monks whose thoughts are skilled dispute, saying, 'This is dhamma' or 'This is not dhamma' or ... 'This is not a bad offence.' Whatever therein is strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, difference of opinion, other opinion, because the common appellation of heatedness is 'quarrel', this is called a legal question arising from dispute? that is skilled.

"What here is a legal question arising from disputes that is unskilled? In this case, monks whose thoughts are unskilled dispute, saying: 'This is dhamma' or 'This is not dhamma' or ... 'This is not a bad offence' ... because the common appellation of heatedness is 'quarrel,' this is called a legal question arising from disputes that is unskilled.

"What here is a legal question arising from disputes that is indeterminate? In this case, monks whose thoughts are indeterminate dispute, saying: 'It is dhamma' or ... 'It is not a bad offence' ... called a legal question arising from disputes that are indeterminate.

Kd.14.14.9

"A legal question arising from censure: is it skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? A legal question arising from censure may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. What here is a legal question arising from censure that is skilled? In this case monks whose thoughts are skilled censure a monk with falling away from moral habit or with falling away from good habits or with falling away from right views or with falling away from a right mode of livelihood. Whatever herein is censure, blaming, talking to, scolding, bickering, inciting, instigating, this is called a legal question arising from censure that is skilled.

BD.5.122

"What here is a legal question arising from censure that is unskilled? In this case, monks whose thoughts are unskilled censure a monk ... What is here a legal question arising from censure that is indeterminate? In this case, monks whose thoughts are indeterminate censure a monk with falling away from ... a right mode of livelihood. Whatever herein is censure, blaming ... instigating, this is called a legal question arising from censure that is indeterminate.

Kd.14.14.10

"A legal question arising from offences: is it skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? A legal question arising from offences may be unskilled it may be indeterminate. There is no legal question arising from offences that is skilled. What is here a legal question arising from offences that is unskilled? A transgression committed knowingly, consciously, deliberately¹ is one that is called a legal question arising from offences that is unskilled.

“What is here a legal question arising from offences that is indeterminate? A transgression committed not knowingly, not consciously, not deliberately is one that is called a legal question arising from offences that is indeterminate.

Kd.14.14.11

“A legal question arising from obligations: is it skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? A legal question arising from obligations may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. What is here a legal question arising from obligations that is skilled? Whatever (formal) act that an Order, good in mind, carries out: a (formal) act for which leave ought to be asked, a (formal) act at which a motion is put, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by one resolution, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by a resolution made three times²—this is called a legal question arising from obligations that is skilled.

Vin.2.92
BD.5.123

“What is here a legal question arising from obligations that is unskilled? Whatever (formal) act that an Order bad in mind, carries out ... What is here a legal question arising from obligations that is indeterminate? Whatever (formal) act that an Order, indeterminate in mind, carries out ... this is called a legal question arising from obligations that is indeterminate.

Kd.14.14.12

“(Can there be) a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes a dispute (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no dispute, a legal question as well as a dispute? There may be a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes there may be a dispute (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no dispute, there may be a legal question as well as a dispute.

“What is here a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes In this case, monks dispute, saying: ‘This is dhamma’ or ... ‘This is not a bad offence’.³ Whatever herein⁴ is strife, quarrel, contention, dispute, difference of opinion, other opinion, because the common appellation of heatedness is 'quarrel' this is called a dispute and a legal question arising from disputes

¹ As at Vin.3.73, Vin.3.112, Vin.4.290. ² As above, Kd.14.14.2. ³ As in Kd.14.14.2. ⁴ As in Kd.14.14.8.

"What is here a dispute (but) not a legal question? Mother disputes with son and son disputes with, mother, and father disputes with son and son disputes with father, and brother disputes with brother and brother disputes with sister and sister disputes with brother, and friend disputes with friend. This is a dispute (but) not a legal question.

"What is here a legal question (but) not a dispute? A legal question arising from censure, a legal question arising from offences, a legal question arising from obligations. This is a legal question (but) not a dispute.

"What is here a legal question as well as a dispute? A legal question arising from disputes is a legal question as well as a dispute.

Kd.14.14.13

"(Can there be) censure and a legal question arising from censure, censure (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no censure, a legal question as well as censure? There may be censure and a legal question arising from censure, there may be censure (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no censure, there may be a legal question as well as censure.

BD.5.124

"What is here censure and a legal question arising from censure? In this case monks censure a monk with falling away from moral habit or ... with falling away from a right mode of living. Whatever herein is censure, blaming ... instigating, this is censure and a legal question arising from censure.

"What is here censure (but) not a legal question? Mother censures son and son censures mother ... and friend censures friend. This is censure
(but) not a legal question.

"What is here a legal question (but) not censure? A legal question arising from offences, a legal question arising from obligations, a legal question arising from disputes This is a legal question but not censure.

"What is here a legal question as well as censure? A legal question arising from censure is a legal question as well as censure.

Kd.14.14.14

"(Can there be) an offence and a legal question arising from offences, an offence (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no offence, a legal question as well as an offence? There may be an offence and a legal question arising from offences, there may be an offence (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no offence, there may be a legal question as well as an offence.

Vin.2.93

“What is here an offence and a legal question arising from offences? The five classes of offences (yield) a legal question arising from offences and the seven classes of offences (yield) a legal question arising from offences. This is an offence and a legal question arising from offences.

“What is here an offence (but) not a legal question? Stream-attainment and Attainment.¹ This is “falling” but not a legal question.

“What is here a legal question (but) not an offence? A legal question arising from obligations, a legal question arising from disputes a legal question arising from censure. This is a legal question (but) not an offence.

BD.5.125

“What is here a legal question as well as an offence? A legal question arising from offences is a legal question as well as an offence.

Kd.14.14.15

“(Can there be) an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations, an obligation (but) no legal question, a legal question (but) no obligation, a legal question as well as an obligation? There may be an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations, there may be an obligation (but) no legal question, there may be a legal question (but) no obligation, there may be a legal question as well as an obligation.

“What is here an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations? Whatever is an Order’s business and ought to be done by it: a (formal) act for which leave ought to be asked, a (formal) act at which a motion is put, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by one resolution, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and followed by a resolution made three times—this is an obligation and a legal question arising from obligations.

“What is here an obligation (but) no legal question? An obligation to a teacher, an obligation to a preceptor, an obligation to one who has the same preceptor, an obligation to one who has the same teacher. This is an obligation (but) not a legal question.

“What is here a legal question (but) not an obligation? A legal question arising from disputes ... arising from censure ... arising from offences. This is a legal question (but) not an obligation.

¹ For this play of words on āpatti, sot-āpatti and sam-āpatti see BD.2.177, n.5.

“What is here a legal question as well as an obligation? A legal question arising from obligations is a legal question as well as an obligation.

SETTLEMENT OF ISSUES

“By how many kinds of decision is a legal question arising from disputes agreed upon? A legal question arising from disputes is (agreed upon) by two (kinds of) decisions: by a verdict in the presence of and by the decision of the majority. If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from disputes without having recourse to one (kind of) decision—the decision of the majority—one may agree upon it by the other (kind of) decision—the verdict in the presence of?’ he should be told: ‘It can be’. It is like this: In this case monks dispute, saying: ‘It is dhamma’ ... or ‘It is a bad offence’. If, monks, these monks are able to settle that legal question this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of. And what here (is needed) for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of an Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of individuals.

Kd.14.14.16

BD.5.126

“And what here is the presence of an Order? When as many monks as are competent for (formal) acts have arrived, when the consent of those deserving (to send their) consent has been brought, when being face to face they do not protest. This is here the presence of an Order.

“And what is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline? If that legal question is settled by whatever is rule,¹ by whatever is discipline, by whatever is the Teacher’s instruction, that is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline.

Vin.2.94

“And what is here the presence of individuals? Whoever quarrels and whoever he quarrels with, both, hostile about the matter,² come face to face. This is here the presence of individuals.

¹ dhammena. ² Oldenberg’s text reads attapaccatthikā. It should probably be attha-. Perhaps the reference is to “the two who are litigating about the matter.” The phrase is not usually repeated in the subsequent parallel passages; but see BD.5.129 below.

“Monks, if a legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.¹ If one who has given his consent² criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.³

Kd.14.14.17

“If, monk, these monks are not able to settle that legal question in that residence, then, monks, these monks should go to some residence where there are more monks. If, monks, these monks as they are going to that residence are able to settle that legal question on the way, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of ... (as in Kd.14.14.16) ... in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

Kd.14.14.18

BD.5.127

“If, monks, these monks as they are going to that residence are not able to settle that legal question on the way, then, monks, these monks, having arrived at that residence, should speak thus to the resident monks: ‘This legal question, your reverences, has arisen thus, has sprung up thus. It were good if the venerable ones could settle this legal question by rule, by discipline, by the Teacher’s instruction, so that this legal question may be properly settled.’ If, monks, the resident monks are the senior and the in-coming monks the more newly ordained, then, monks, the in-coming monks should be spoken to thus by the resident monks: ‘Please do you, venerable ones, remain at a respectful distance for a moment until we have considered.’ But if, monks, the resident monks are the more newly ordained and the in-coming monks are the senior, then, monks, the in-coming monks should be spoken to thus by these resident monks: ‘Well then, do you, venerable ones, remain just here for a moment until we have considered’. If, monks, it occurs to these resident monks while they are thus considering: ‘We are not able to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction,’ that legal question should not be taken up. But if, monks, it occurs to the resident monks while they are thus considering: ‘We are able to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction,’ monks, the incoming monks should be spoken to thus by these resident monks: ‘If you, venerable ones, will tell us how this legal question has arisen, how it has sprung up, then in so far as we settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher's instruction, so will it be settled.¹ In this way we will take up this legal question. But if you, venerable ones, will not tell us how this legal question has arisen, how it has sprung up, then in so far as we settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher's instruction, so will it be settled. But we will not take up this legal question." Having thus arranged it properly, monks, that legal question should be taken up by the resident monks. Monks, the resident monks should be spoken to thus by the incoming monks: 'We will tell the venerable ones how this legal question has arisen, how it has sprung up. If the venerable ones are able with or without this much² to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher's instruction, then will it be properly settled, and we will therefore give this legal question into the charge of the venerable ones. But if the venerable ones are not able with or without this much to settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher's instruction, then will it be not properly settled and we will not give this legal question into the charge of the venerable ones—we ourselves will become the masters³ in regard to this legal question'. Having thus arranged it properly, monks, the incoming monks should give that legal question into the charge of the resident monks. Monks, if these monks are able to settle that legal question, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? ... (as in Kd.14.14.16) ... in criticising, there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Bu-Pc.63. ² chandadāyaka, probably meaning has given his consent for the formal act to be carried out without him as, through illness, he cannot be present for it. ³ Bu-Pc.79.

Vin.2.95

BD.5.128

"If, monks, while those monks are investigating that legal question both endless disputations arise,⁴ and of not one speech is the meaning clear, I allow you, monks, to settle a legal question like this by means of a referendum.⁵ A monk possessed of ten qualities should be agreed upon for the referendum: one who is moral in habit,⁶ who lives restrained by the

Kd.14.14.19

¹ Meaning that the incoming monks must abide by the decision. ² ettakena vā antarena.

³ sāmino, rendered as "we shall retain the custody" at Vinaya Texts iii.49. ⁴ anaggāni c'eva bhassāni. Vin-a.1197 reads anantāni for amaggāni, and glosses by aparimāṇāni, limitless. See Vin.2.305. ⁵ ubbāhikāya, a committee. See Kd.12.2.7. The following passage = AN.v.71.

⁶ As at Vin.4.51 to "linguistic form" below; and as at AN.ii.22 to "vision" below. For further references see BD.2.265-BD.2.266. See also Kd.9.5.1.

restraint of the Pātimokkha, who, possessed of good conduct, sees danger in the slightest faults, who takes up and trains himself in the rules of training, who has heard much, an expert in the heard, a storehouse of the heard; those things which, lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle and lovely at the ending, declare with the spirit, with the letter the Brahma-faring utterly fulfilled, wholly purified—things like this are much heard by him, learnt by heart, repeated out loud, pondered upon, considered carefully, well penetrated by vision; both the Pātimokkhas are properly handed down to him in detail, properly sectioned, properly regulated, properly investigated clause by clause as to the linguistic form; he comes to be clever in discipline, imperturbable; he comes to be competent in convincing both of those who are hostile about the matter, in winning them over, in making them consider, in understanding, in reconciling them; he comes to be skilled in settling a legal question that has arisen; he knows what is a legal question; he knows the arising of a legal question; he knows the stopping of a legal question; he knows the course leading to the stopping of a legal question. I allow, monks, a monk possessed of these ten qualities to be agreed upon for a referendum.

Vin.2.96
BD.5.129

Kd.14.14.20

“And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, a monk should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the monk So-and-so and So-and-so to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question ... was the meaning clear. The Order is agreeing upon the monk So-and-so and So-and-so to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. If the agreement upon the monk So-and-so and So-and-so to settle this legal question by means of a referendum is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so and So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. It is pleasing ... Thus do I understand this.’

Kd.14.14.21

“If, monks, these monks are able to settle this legal question by means of a referendum, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of. And what is here needed for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of the individuals ... (as in Kd.14.14.16) ... If, monks, the legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.¹

Kd.14.14.22
BD.5.130

“If, monks, while these monks are investigating that legal question there should be there a monk who is a speaker of dhamma but to whom neither the rule² comes to have been handed down nor the analysis of the rule,³ if he, not considering the meaning, holds back the meaning under the shadow of the letter, these monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. This monk So-and-so is a speaker of dhamma, but he is one to whom neither the rule nor the analysis of the rule has been handed down; not considering the meaning, he holds back the meaning under the shadow of the letter. If it seems right to the venerable ones, let the remainder, having had this monk removed,⁴ settle that legal question’. If, monks, these monks, having had that monk removed, are able to settle that legal question, this, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of. And what is here needed for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of individuals ... (as in Kd.14.14.16) ... Monks, if a legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

Vin.2.97

“If, monks, whilst those monks are investigating the legal question there should be there a monk who is a speaker of dhamma and one to whom the rule has been handed down but not the analysis of the rule, if he, not considering the meaning, holds back the meaning under the shadow of the letter, these monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. This monk So-and-so is a speaker of dhamma and he is one to whom the rule has been handed down but not the analysis of the rule; not considering the meaning in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

Kd.14.14.23

¹ Bu-Pc.63. ² sutta, in the singular. It cannot well mean here the “tradition”, āgama, or the sayings in which dhamma was set forth. For this monk evidently knew dhamma, which, above, must be different from sutta. There is also a difference between knowing a rule or clause, sutta (in the sense in which it is sometimes used in Vinaya) and its analysis, which implies a wider knowledge as of the material surrounding a rule of training. On sutta, as used in Vinaya see BD.1, Introduction, p.x. Vin-a.1197 says sutta is mātikā, heading or summary.

³ Suttavibhaṅga; Vin-a.1197 says “not versed in discipline” (vinaya). ⁴ vuṭṭhāpetvā.

Kd.14.14.24

BD.5.131

“If, monks, these monks are not able to settle that legal question by a referendum, monks, that legal question should be given into the charge of an Order by these monks, saying: ‘We, honoured sirs, are not able to settle this legal question by a referendum. Let the Order itself settle this legal question.’ I allow you, monks, to settle a legal question like this by the decision of the majority.¹ A monk possessed of five qualities should be agreed upon as distributor of (voting) tickets ... (as in Kd.14.9) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this.’ The monk who is the distributor of (voting) tickets should make the (voting) tickets pass round. According to the way in which the greater number of monks who profess dhamma speak, so should this legal question be settled. This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by the decision of the majority. And what is here (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of an Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of the individuals. And what is here the presence of an Order? ... (as in Kd.14.16) ... This is here the presence of the individuals.

“And what is here the decision of the majority? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against a (formal) act (settled) by the decision of the majority, this is here the decision of the majority. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and if one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation; if one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.”²

Vin.2.98

Kd.14.14.25

Now at that time at Sāvattḥī a legal question had arisen thus, had sprung up thus. Then these monks were displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the Order at Sāvattḥī. They heard it said: “In a certain residence several elders are staying who have heard much, to whom the tradition has been handed down, experts in dhamma, experts in discipline, experts in the headings, learned, experienced, clever, conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training; if these elders would settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher's instruction, thus would this legal question be properly settled." Then these monks, having gone to that residence, spoke thus to those elders: "This legal question, honoured sirs, arose thus, sprang up thus. It were good, honoured sirs, if the elders were to settle this legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher's instruction, so that this legal question might be properly settled." Then these elders thought: "Because this legal question was settled by the Order at Sāvattḥī, it was therefore properly settled,' and they settled that legal question in the same way. Then these monks were displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the Order at Sāvattḥī, they were displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the several elders.

¹ yebhuyyasikāya. See Vin.5.49 ² As at Kd.14.14.16, Kd.14.14.27.

BD.5.132

They heard it said: "In a certain residence three elders are staying ... two elders are staying ... one elder is staying who has heard much, to whom the tradition has been handed down ... desirous of training; if this elder would settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher's instruction, thus would this legal question be properly settled." Then these monks, having gone to that residence, spoke thus to that elder: "This legal question, honoured sir, arose thus, sprang up thus. It were good, honoured sir, if the elder were to settle this legal question according to ... the Teacher's instruction, so that this legal question might be properly settled." Then that elder thought: "Because this legal question was settled by the Order at Sāvattḥī, because this legal question was settled by several elders, because this legal question was settled by three elders, because this legal question was settled by two elders it was therefore properly settled,' and he settled that legal question in the same way. Then these monks, displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the Order at Sāvattḥī, displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the several elders ... by the three elders ... by the two elders, displeased with the settlement of the legal question by the one elder, approached the Lord; having approached, they told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, this legal question is done with, it is exhausted,¹ it is settled, it is properly settled.

Kd.14.14.26
BD.5.133

“I allow, monks, in order to convince these monks, three methods of taking votes:² the secret, the whispering in the ear, the open. And what, monks, is the secret method of taking votes? The monk who is the distributor of voting tickets, having made the tickets different³ (from one another), having approached each monk, should speak to him thus: ‘This ticket is for one of such a view, this ticket is for one of such a view. Take whichever you like.’ When he has taken it, he should be told: ‘And do not show it to anybody’. If he finds that the majority profess what is not-dhamma and thinks (the voting is) wrongly taken (the result) should be rejected.⁴ If he finds that the majority profess dhamma and thinks (the voting is) rightly taken (the result) should be announced. This, monks, is the secret (method of) taking votes.

Vin.2.99

“And what, monks, is the method of taking votes by whispering in the ear? The monk who is the distributor of voting tickets should speak into the ear of each monk, saying: ‘This ticket is for one of such a view, this ticket is for one of such a view. Take whichever you like.’ When he has taken it, he should be told: ‘And do not tell anyone about it.’ If he finds that the majority profess what is not-dhamma and thinks (the voting is) wrongly taken (the result) should be rejected. If he finds that the majority profess dhamma and thinks (the voting is) rightly taken (the result) should be announced. This, monks, is the method of taking votes by whispering in the ear.

“And what, monks, is the open method of taking votes? If he finds that those who profess dhamma are in the majority, because of his very confidence he should make them take openly. This, monks, is the open method of taking votes. These, monks, are the three methods of taking votes.

Kd.14.14.27

“By how many (kinds of) decisions is a legal question arising from cen-

¹ santa is both worn out, exhausted and (more commonly) appeased, tranquillised. ² salāk-agāha, more literally “distributing (or, making pass) the (voting) tickets.” ³ vaṇṇāvaṇṇa. Vin-a.1198 says that the tickets for those who profess dhamma and for those who profess non-dhamma should be marked by different signs, nimitta (not different colours, as at Vinaya Texts iii.56). ⁴ paccukkaḍḍhihitabbaṃ. Vin-a.1198 says (the distributor) “having said the tickets were wrongly taken, having distributed them again, may distribute them up to a third time.”

sure agreed upon? A legal question arising from censure is agreed upon by four (kinds of) decisions: by a verdict in the presence of, by a verdict of innocence, by a verdict of past insanity, by a decision for specific depravity. If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from censure, without having recourse to two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict of past insanity and the decision for specific depravity—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the verdict of innocence?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where monks defame a monk with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. Monks, a verdict of innocence should be given to that monk who has remembered fully.¹ And thus, monks, should it be given: That monk, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘Honoured sirs, monks defamed me with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. But I, honoured sirs, having remembered fully, ask the Order for a verdict of innocence’. And a second time it should be asked for. And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. Monks defamed the monk So-and-so with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit; he, having remembered fully, is asking the Order for a verdict of innocence. If it seems right to the Order ... (as in Kd.14.4.10) ... Thus do I understand this.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence. And what is here needed for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline and the presence of the individuals ... (as at Kd.14.14.16) ... And what is here the presence of the individuals? Whoever quarrels and whoever he quarrels with, if both come face to face,² this is here the presence of the individuals.

BD.5.134

Vin.2.100

BD.5.135

“And what is here needed for a verdict of innocence? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against a formal act for a verdict of innocence, that is what is needed here for a verdict of innocence. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

¹ Cf. above, Kd.14.4.10. ² As at Kd.4.14.16, but omitting “hostile about the matter.”

Kd.14.14.28

“If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from censure, without having recourse to two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict of innocence and the decision for specific depravity—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the verdict of past insanity?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where a monk becomes mad, out of his mind,¹ and while he was mad, out of his mind, he perpetrated much and spoke in a way that was not worthy of a recluse. Monks reprove him because of offences done by him while he was mad, out of his mind, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like this?’ He speaks thus: ‘I, your reverences, was mad, out of my mind; while I was mad, out of my mind, much was perpetrated and spoken by me that was not worthy of a recluse. I do not remember that. That was done by me while I was insane.’ Although being spoken to thus, they still reprove him, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into an offence like that?’ Monks, a verdict of past insanity should be given to that monk who is no longer insane.

“And thus, monks, should it be given: Monks, that monk, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, was mad ... (as in Kd.14.5.2. Instead of Gagga read the monk So-and-so) ... Thus do I understand this.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of past insanity. And what here (is needed) for a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order ... (as in Kd.14.14.16) ... And what is here (needed for) a verdict of past insanity? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of ... the non-protesting against a verdict of past insanity, that here is what (is needed for) a verdict of past insanity. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus and one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

BD.5.136

Vin.2.101

¹ As at Kd.14.5.1-Kd.14.5.2, for the monk Gagga.

“If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from censure, without having recourse to two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict of innocence and the verdict of past insanity—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the decision for specific depravity?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where a monk reproves a monk in the midst of the Order for a serious offence, saying: ‘Does the venerable one remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat?’ He speaks thus: ‘I do not remember, your reverence, having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat.’ Although denying this, he presses him, saying: ‘Please, venerable one, find out properly whether you remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat.’ He speaks thus: ‘I, your reverence, do not remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat. But I, your reverence, remember having fallen into a trifling offence like this.’ Although denying this, he presses him, saying: ‘Please, venerable one, find out properly whether you remember ... bordering on one involving defeat’. He speaks thus: ‘Your reverence, unasked I acknowledge having fallen into a trifling offence like this; how could I, when asked, not acknowledge having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat?’ He speaks thus: ‘But, your reverence, unasked you did not acknowledge having fallen into a trifling offence, so how will you, unasked, acknowledge having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat? Please, venerable one, find out properly whether you remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat.’ He speaks thus: ‘Your reverence, I do remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat. When I said: I do not remember having fallen into a serious offence like this—one involving defeat or bordering on one involving defeat—this was said by me in jest,¹

Kd.14.14.29

BD.5.137

¹ Cf. Vin.4.4 for davā, ravā.

this was said by me in haste.¹

“Monks, a (formal) act for the decision of specific depravity should be carried out against this monk. And thus, monks, should it be carried out. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying ... (as in Kd.14.11.2. Instead of the monk Uvāḷa read the monk So-and-so; instead of offences read serious offences) ... Thus do I understand this.’

Vin.2.102

This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a decision for specific gravity. And what is here (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order ... (as in Kd.14.14.16) ... And what here is (needed for) a decision for specific depravity? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against a decision for specific depravity, that is here what is needed for a decision for specific depravity. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus and one who carries it out opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

Kd.14.14.30

“By how many (kinds of) decisions is a legal question arising from offences agreed upon? A legal question arising from offences is agreed upon by three (kinds of) decisions: by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out of it on his acknowledgement² and by the covering up (as) with grass.³ If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from offences, without having recourse to one (kind of) decision—the covering up (as) with grass—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the carrying out of it on his acknowledgement?’ he should be told: ‘It can be.’ It is like this: This is a case where a monk comes to have fallen into a slight offence. Monks, that monk, having approached one monk, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to him: ‘I, your reverence, fallen into such and such an offence, confess it.’ It should be said by him: ‘Do you see it?’ ‘Yes, I see it.’ ‘You should be restrained in the future.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out of it of his acknowledgement. And what here is (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of rule¹ and the presence of discipline and the presence of individuals. And what here is the presence of individuals? If both whoever confesses and he to whom he confesses are face to face, this here is the presence of individuals. And what here is (needed for) the carrying out on his acknowledgement? Whatever is the carrying out ... the non-protesting against his making an acknowledgement, that is here what is needed for his making an acknowledgement. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and the one who accepts (the confession) opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

BD.5.138

¹ Cf. Vin.4.4 for davā, ravā. ² Cf. Vin.4.4 for davā, ravā. ³ See BD.3.153, BD.3.154.

Kd.14.14.31

“If he manages this thus, it is good. But if he does not manage it, monks, that monk, having approached several monks, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having stretched forth his joined palms, should speak thus to them: ‘I, honoured sirs, fallen into such and such an offence, confess it.’ These monks should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Let the venerable ones listen to me. This monk So-and-so remembers an offence, he discloses it, he declares it, he confesses it. If it seems right to the venerable ones, I will accept (the confession) of the monk So-and-so’s offence.’ He should say: ‘Do you see it?’ ‘Yes, I see it.’ ‘You should be restrained in the future.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of ... (as in Kd.14.14.31) ... in opening up there is an offence of expiation.

Vin.2.103

Bd.5.139

Kd.14.14.32

“If he manages this thus, it is good. But if he does not manage it, monks, that monk, having approached an Order ... should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, fallen into such and such an offence, confess it.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so remembers an offence, he discloses it, he declares it, he confesses it. If it seems right to the Order I could accept (the confession) of the monk So-and-so’s offence.’ He should say: ‘Do you see it?’ ‘Yes, I see it.’ ‘You should be restrained in the future.’ This, monks, is called a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on his acknowledgement.

¹ Presence of the Order not required here, as the monk has confessed to one monk only.

And what here is (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline and the presence of the individuals ... If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and the one who accepts (the confession) opens it up again, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

Kd.14.14.33

“If one says: ‘Can it be that, in respect of a legal question arising from offences, without having recourse to one decision—the carrying out on his acknowledgement—one may agree upon it by two (kinds of) decisions—the verdict in the presence of and the covering up (as) with grass?’ he should be told, ‘It can be.’ It is like this: ‘This is a case, monks, where while monks were striving ... (as in Kd.14.13.1–Kd.14.13.3) ... Thus do I understand this.’ This is called, monks, a legal question that is settled. By what is it settled? By a verdict in the presence of and by a covering up (as) with grass. And what here is (needed for) a verdict in the presence of? The presence of the Order, the presence of rule, the presence of discipline, the presence of the individuals. And what here is the presence of the Order? When as many monks as are competent for (formal) acts have arrived, when the consent of those deserving (to send their) consent has been brought, when being face to face they do not protest. This is here the presence of the Order.

BD.5.140

“And what is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline? If that legal question is settled by whatever is rule, by whatever is discipline, by whatever is the Teacher’s instruction, that is here the presence of rule, the presence of discipline.

Vin.2.104

“And what is here the presence of individuals? If both whoever confesses and he to whom he confesses are face to face, this is here the presence of the individuals.

“And what here is (needed for) the covering up (as) with grass? Whatever is the carrying out of, the performance of, the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against the covering up (as) with grass, that is here what is (needed for) the covering up (as) with grass. If, monks, a legal question is settled thus, and if the one who accepts (the confession) opens it up, in opening up there is an offence of expiation. If one who has given his consent criticises it, in criticising there is an offence of expiation.

“By how many (kinds of) decisions is a legal question arising from obligations agreed upon? A legal question arising from obligations is agreed upon by one (kind of) decision: the verdict in the presence of.”

Kd.14.14.34

*Told is the Fourth Section: that on Settlements.*¹

Vin.2.105

¹ There is no uddāna, summary or key to this Section.

15. MINOR MATTERS (KHUDDAKA)

Kd.15.1.1
BD.5.141

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time the group of six monks, while they were bathing, rubbed their bodies against a tree and their thighs and their arms and their chests and their backs. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about saying: "How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, while they are bathing, rub their bodies against a tree ... and their backs, like boxers and wrestlers and young villagers?"¹ Monks heard these people who were ... spreading it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: "Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks ... and their backs?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

"Monks, it is not suitable in these foolish men, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How, monks, can these foolish men, while they are bathing, rub their bodies against a tree ... and their backs? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." and having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ gāmapoddavā. Word very uncertain, and seems to show confusion between gāma and kāma, variant reading being kāmapudavā. According to Vin.2.315, Buddhaghosa explains: kāmapudavā ti chavirāgamaṇḍanānuyuttā nāgarikamanussā; gāmaṇḍavā ti pi pādho es'ev'attho; the meaning of kāmapudarā is urban people addicted to ornamenting and dyeing the skin: gāmaṇḍ (village) -podavā is also a reading. TAKAKUSU and NAGAI's edition, Vin-a.vi.1199, reads: gāmapūṭavā (variant reading gāmamuddavā) ti chavirāgamaṇḍanānuyuttā nāgarikamanussā, gāmapotakā (young village men) ti pi pāṭho.

“Monks, while a monk is bathing he should not rub his body against a tree. Whoever should (so) rub it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”¹

Kd.15.1.2
BD.5.142

Now at that time the group of six monks, while they were bathing, rubbed their bodies against a post ... (as in Kd.15.1.1. For tree read post) ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, while they were bathing, rubbed their bodies against a wall²... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe on a rubbing-board.³ People spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, you should not bathe on a rubbing-board. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.1.3

Vin.2.106

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe using a gandhabba-hand (instrument)⁴ ... “... Monks, you should not bathe using a gandhabba-hand (instrument). Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe using a string of vermilion covered beads.⁵ ... “... Monks, you should not bathe using a string of vermilion covered beads. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Note that it is not actually made an offence to rub the other parts of the person mentioned; but doubtless these are meant to be included. ² Three kinds of walls are mentioned at Vin.4.266. Vin-a.1199 says that it is one of these. ³ aṭṭāna. Vin-a.1199 reads aṭṭhāna, and explains this as a tree made like a plank of wood, cut into rows of squares and sunk into the ground at a bathing ford. People rub their bodies there, having sprinkled on chunam. ⁴ gandhabbahatthaka. Vin-a.1199 says “by means of a wooden hand set up at a bathing ford; having taken chunam with them, people rub their bodies.” ⁵ kuruvindakasutta. Quoted at MN-a.iii.280. Vin-a.1200 says, “it is called a string of beads made by grinding vermilion chunams and stones with lac dyes. Holding this at both ends, they rub the body.” Cf. kuruvindakacuṇṇa at Ja.iii.282 (vermilion coloured chunam).

Kd.15.1.4

Now at that time the group of six monks, having plunged into¹ (water), causing a rubbing to be made.² ... “Monks, you should not, having plunged into (water), cause a rubbing to be made. Whoever should (so) cause it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.143

Now at that time the group of six monks used to bathe using a scrubber.³ ... “Monks, you should not bathe using a scrubber. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be afflicted by a scab disease, and there came to be no comfort for him without a scrubber. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, one who is ill (to use) an unshaped scrubber.”⁴

Kd.15.1.5

Now at that time a certain monk, weak through age, was not able while bathing to rub his own body. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a strip of cloth.”⁵

¹ vigayha. Pali-English Dictionary under viḡāhati says, “At Vin.2.106 we should prefer to react viggayha for vigayha.” Vin-a.1200 has the reading viggayha. One of meanings of vigrah in the Sanskrit Dictionaries is “to lay hold of.” ² bhikkhū vigayha parikammaṃ kārāpentī, explained by Vin-a.1200 as “each one rubbed up his body against the bodies of the others”—no doubt some kind of enjoyable massage or friction. ³ mallaka. Vin-a.1200 says “having cut swordfish teeth, it is called a shaped scrubber, katamallaka, owing to its mallaka form (or configuration, mallakamūla)”. ⁴ akatomallaka. See previous note; and Vin-a.1200 which says “it is made not having cut the teeth. It must be a broken piece of wood or of tortoiseshell.” ⁵ ukkāsikā, explained at Vin-a.1200 as vatthavaṭṭi. Vattha is cloth, clothing; vaṭṭi, a strip, ball, pad. Oldenberg’s version of the Commentary reads vaṭṭa (for vattha) which rendered the word “unintelligible” (see Vinaya Texts iii.68, n.3) and he seems not to have had access to the full exegesis: tasmā nahāyantassa yassa kassaci nahānasāṭakavaṭṭiyā piṭṭhiṃ ghaṃsiturū vaṭṭati: therefore when anyone is bathing he may rub his back with a strip (or pad) of a cloth for bathing.

Now at that time the monks were doubtful how to give a rubbing to their backs.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, the ordinary mode with the hand.”²

Now at that time the group of six monks wore ear ornaments, they wore chains,³ they wore ornamental strings of beads for the throat,⁴ they wore ornaments at the waist,⁵ they wore bangles,⁶ they wore armlets,⁷ they wore bracelets,⁸ they wore finger rings. People ... spread it about, saying ... he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, ear ornaments should not be worn, chains ... ornamental strings of beads for the throat ... ornaments at the waist ... bangles ... armlets ... bracelets ... finger rings should not be worn. Whoever should wear (any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.2.1

BD.5.144

Now at that time the group of six monks wore their hair long. People ... spread it about ... he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, long hair should not be worn. Whoever should wear it (long), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow it to be of a two months’ growth or two finger-breadths (in length).”

Kd.15.2.2

Vin.2.107

Now at that time the group of six monks smoothed their hair with a comb, they smoothed their hair with an instrument shaped like a snake’s hood,⁹ they smoothed their hair with their hands used as an instrument shaped like a snake’s hood,¹⁰ they smoothed their hair with oil of beeswax,¹¹

Kd.15.2.3

¹ piṭṭhiparikamma, as at SN-a.i.296. ² puthupāṇiya, explained at Vin-a.1200 by hatthaparikamma, hand treatment. ³ pāmaṅga. See BD.1.77, n.9. Vin-a.1200 on word in above passage says whatever is a pāmaṅgasutta. ⁴ kaṅṅhasuttaka. As at BD.1.78. ⁵ kaṭṭhisuttaka. See BD.1.78, n.2. ⁶ ovaṭṭika, perhaps round the ankles. Ovaṭṭika has a different sense at Kd.7.1.5. ⁷ kāyūra, or bracelets for above the elbow. Cf. keyūra at Dh-p-a.ii.220. But as noted at Vinaya Texts iii.69, n.5. The Jātaka Commentary says that kāyūra is an ornamental decoration for the throat. ⁸ No doubt round the wrist since they are called hatthābharāṇa. ⁹ phaṇaka. Vin-a.1200 only says something made of ivory and so on. Vinaya Texts iii.70, n.2 says “it was a kind of very primitive brush, but without bristles.” ¹⁰ hatthaphaṇaka. The hands would be held as a snake’s hood with the fingers curving forwards and the hair would be smoothed with the fingers. Cf. phaṇahatthaka at Vin.1.91, and see BD.4.116, n.2.

¹¹ Allowed at Vin.2.152 for use in a vihāra.

they smoothed their hair with oily water. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the hair should not be smoothed with a comb ... the hair should not be smoothed with oily water. Whoever should smooth it (in any of these ways), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.2.4

Now at that time the group of six monks examined a mark on the face in a mirror and in a water-bowl.¹ People spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a mark on the face should not be examined in a mirror or in a water-bowl. Whoever should (so) examine it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” Now at that time a certain monk had a sore on his face. He asked monks, saying: “What kind of sore have I, your reverences?” The monks spoke thus: “The sore is of such and such a kind, your reverence.” He did not believe them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, on account of a disease, to examine a mark on the face in a mirror or in a water-bowl.”

BD.5.145

Kd.15.2.5

Now at that time the group of six monks anointed their faces,² they rubbed (paste) into their faces, they powdered their faces with chunam, they smeared their faces with red arsenic, they painted their limbs, they painted their faces, they painted their limbs and faces. People spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the face should not be anointed, the face should not be rubbed (with paste), the face should not be powdered with chunam, the face should not be smeared with red arsenic, the limbs should not be painted, the face should not be painted, limbs and faces should not be painted. Whoever should do (any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Cf. DN.i.80, SN.iii.105. ² Cf. Vin.2.266, Vin.iv,342.

Now at that time a certain monk was afflicted by a disease of the eyes. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, on account of disease, to anoint the face.”

Now at that time there was a festival on a mountain-top in Rājagaha.¹ The group of six monks went to see the festival on the mountain-top. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans come to see dancing and singing and music like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not go to see dancing² or singing or music. Whoever should go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.2.6

Vin.2.108

Now at that time the group of six monks sang dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Even as we sing, so do these recluses, sons of the Sakyans sing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks sing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said ...?”

Kd.15.3.1

BD.5.146

“It is true, Lord.” ... Having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, there are these five disadvantages to one singing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound: he is pleased with himself in regard to that sound, and others are pleased in regard to that sound, and housepeople look down upon, and while he is himself striving after accuracy in the sound⁴ there is an interruption in his concentration, and people coming after fall into the way of (wrong) views.⁵ These, monks, are the five disadvantages to one singing dhamma with a long-drawn plain-song sound. Monks, dhamma should not be sung with a long-drawn plain-song sound. Whoever should (so) sing it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Cf. Vin.4.85 (BD.2.335, and n.) and Vin.4.267 (where the group of six nuns also go to the festival, made into an offence of expiation for them). ² Even to see a peacock dancing is an offence, Vin-a.1201. ³ Cf. AN.iii.251. ⁴ sarakutti. ⁵ Vin-a.1202 says the people who come after will say “our teachers and preceptors sang it thus,” and they will sing it in the same way. Cf. AN.iii.108, AN.iii.256, SN.ii.203.

Kd.15.3.2

Now at that time monks were doubtful about intoning.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow intoning.”

Kd.15.4.1

Now at that time the group of six monks wore woollen clothes with the fleece outside. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasure of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, woollen clothes with the fleece outside should not be worn. Whoever should wear them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”²

Kd.15.5.1

Now at that time the mango trees in the park of King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha were bearing fruit and it was made known by King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha: “Let the masters make as much use of the mangoes as they please.” The group of six monks, having made even young mangoes fall, made use of them. And King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha wanted a mango. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha enjoined people, saying: “Go, good sirs, having gone to the park, bring back a mango.”

BD.5.147

Vin.2.109

“Very well, your majesty,” and these people having answered King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha in assent, having gone to the park, spoke thus to the park keeper: “Good sir, his majesty wants a mango, give (us) a mango.”

“There is not a mango, masters; the monks having made even young mangoes fall, have made use of them.” Then these people told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha. He said: “Good sirs, mangoes are much enjoyed by the masters, yet it is moderation that the Lord extols.” People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, not knowing moderation, make use of the king’s mangoes?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, mangoes should not be made use of. Whoever should make use of them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”³

¹ sarabhañña. Cf. Vin.1.196, Ja.ii.109, Dh-p-a.i.154. Explained by Buddhaghosa as sarena bhaṇanam, speaking (or repeating) by means of intonation. ² Vin-a.1202 here refers to the Commentary on the bhūtagāmasikkhāpada. This is Bu-Pc.11. (Vin.4.34; see BD.2.227, n.1.) and the Commentary is at Vin-a.759ff. ³ Cf. BD.1.101f., BD.1.108.

Kd.15.5.2

Now at that time a certain guild came to have food for an Order.¹ Mango peels were put into the curry. Monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:) “Accept it, monks, make use of it. I allow you, monks, mango peels.” Now at that time a Certain guild came to have food for an Order. They did not know how to prepare the peels; they walked into the refectory with the mangoes whole. Monks, being scrupulous, did not accept. (The Lord said:) “Accept them, monks, make use of them. I allow you, monks, to make use of fruit that in five ways is allowable for recluses:² if it is damaged³ by fire, damaged by a knife, damaged by (one’s) nail, if it is seedless, and the fifth is if the seeds are discharged.⁴ I allow you, monks, to make use of fruit that in these five ways is allowable to recluses.”

Kd.15.6.1
BD.5.148

Now at that time a certain monk, bitten by a snake, passed away.⁵ They told this matter to the lord. He said: “Monks, this monk certainly did not suffuse with loving-kindness of mind the four royal snake families. For if, monks, this monk had suffused with loving-kindness of mind the four royal snake families, then this monk, although bitten by a snake, would not have passed away. What are the four royal snake families? The royal snake family of Virūpakkha,⁶ the royal snake family of Erāpatha, the royal snake family of Chabyāputta, the royal snake family of Kaṇhāgotamaka. Monks, this monk certainly did not suffuse with loving-kindness of mind these four royal snake families. For if, monks, this monk had suffused with loving-kindness of mind these four royal snake families, then this monk, although bitten by a snake, would not have passed away. Monks, I allow you to suffuse with loving-kindness of mind these four royal snake families, (and) to make a charm⁷ for the self for self-protection, for self-guarding.

Vin.2.110

¹ As at Kd.18.4.1. ² Quoted Vin-a.767. ³ These five clauses are explained in detail at Vin-a.767, which rightly reads parijita (damaged) instead of the above paricita. ⁴ Cf. Kd.6.21.1 for the last two items. ⁵ Cf. AN.ii.72 (which lays the scene in Sāvattthī) and Ja.ii.144–Ja.ii.147. ⁶ Cf. GS.ii.82, n.1. Virūpakkha is also the name of one of the Four Great Kings, the regent of the western quarter and lord of the Nāgas. ⁷ On pariṭṭa, charm, spell, rune, and mettā-bhāvanā, cf. MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Dialogues of the Buddha iii.185f., Sakya, 221ff. Above reading is attaparittam katum; at AN.ii.72 it is attaparittāya, “for self-warding.”

And thus, monks, should it be made:

“Love from me for the Virūpakkhas,¹
 Love from me for the Erāpathas,
 Love from me for the Chabyāputtas,
 Love from me for the Kaṇhāgotamakās.

“Love from me for the footless,
 Love for the two-footed from me,
 Love from me for the four-footed,
 Love for the many-footed from me.

“Do not let the footless harm me,
 Do not let the two-footed harm me,
 Do not let the four-footed harm me,
 Do not let the many-footed harm me.

BD.5.149

“May all beings, all breathers, all creatures every one,
 See all lucky things;² may no evil whatever come.

“Immeasurable is the Awakened One, immeasurable dhamma,
 immeasurable the Order.
 Limited are creeping things: snakes, scorpions, centipedes, spinning spiders, lizards, mice.

“A protection has been made by me, a charm made by me;
 Let the creatures withdraw.
 I, even I, honour the Lord,
 I honour the seven fully self-awakened Ones.”

“I allow you, monks, to let blood.”³

Kd.15.7.1

¹ Loving-kindness or love, mettā, and the three other modes of the brahmavihāras are transferred from the mind of the suffuser to that of the being who is suffused or infused.

² sabbe bhadrāni passantu. Cf. DN.ii.89, sadā bhadrāni passati. ³ Allowed also at Vin.1.205.

Now at that time a certain monk, tormented by dissatisfaction, cut off his own male organ. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “This foolish man, monks, cut off one thing when another should have been cut off. Monks, one should not cut off one’s own male organ. Whoever should cut it off, there is a grave offence.”

Now at that time a block of sandal-wood of costly choice sandal-wood had accrued to a (great) merchant of Rājagaha.¹ Then it occurred to this (great) merchant of Rājagaha: “Suppose that I were to have a bowl carved out of this block of sandal-wood? The chips will be for my enjoyment, and I can also give away the bowl as a gift.” Then that (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having had a bowl carved out of that block of sandal-wood, having put a string round it,² having hung it up on the top of a bamboo (-pole), having tied it to a series of bamboo (-poles); spoke thus: “Let whatever recluse or brahmin who is a perfected one as well as of psychic power get down this bowl and (to him) it is given.”³ Then Pūraṇa Kassapa⁴ approached the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, he spoke thus to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha:

“Now I, householder, am a perfected one as well as of psychic power; give me the bowl.”

“If, revered sir, the venerable one is a perfected one as well as of psychic power, let him fetch down the bowl and it is given (to him.)”

Then Makkhali Gosāla, Ajita Kesakambalin, Pakudha Kaccāyana, Sañjaya Belaṭṭhiputta, Nātaputta the Jain approached the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached ... “... it is given (to him).”

Now at that time the venerable Moggallāna the Great and the venerable ¹ This story is referred to at DN-a.ii.388 as the Rājagaha-seṭṭhi-vatthu. ² At Kd.15.24.1 somewhat similar actions are ascribed to a monk. ³ Cf. the words of the robber chief at Vin.3.208. ⁴ He and the five others were the six great “heretical” teachers in Gotama’s times. Their views are given at DN.i.52ff.

Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja,¹ having dressed in the morning, taking (each) his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja spoke thus to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

“The venerable Moggallāna the Great is a perfected one as well as of psychic power. Go along, reverend Moggallāna, fetch down this bowl; this bowl is for you.”

“The venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja a perfected one as well as of psychic power. Go along, reverend Bhāradvāja, fetch down this bowl; this bowl is for you.”

Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, having risen above the ground,² having taken hold of that bowl, circled three times round Rājagaha. Now at that time, the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was standing with his wife and children in his own dwelling holding up his joined palms in salutation, paying homage, and saying: “Honoured sir, let master Bhāradvāja come to rest just here at our dwelling.” Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja came to rest at the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having taken the bowl from the hand of the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, having filled it with costly solid foods, bestowed it on the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja. Then the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, having taken hold of that bowl, went off to the monastery.

BD.5.151

Kd.15.8.2

People heard: “It is said that the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was fetched down by master Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja,” and these people (making) a loud noise, a great noise, followed close after the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja. Then the Lord heard the loud noise, the great noise, and having heard it, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying: “What on earth, Ānanda, is this loud noise, this great noise?”

“Lord, the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha has been fetched down by the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja. Lord, people heard: ‘It is said that the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was fetched down by the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, and, Lord, these people (making) a loud noise, a great noise, have followed close after the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja'; this, Lord, is the loud noise, the great noise which the Lord (hears)."

¹ Verses at Thag.123, Thag.124. At AN.i.23 he is called chief of the disciples who are lion-roarers. AN-a.i.196, which gives his story including the above episode, holds that he was called Scrap-hunter, Piṇḍola, from his greed in searching for conje and rice. Other Commentaries (SN-a.ii.393, Ud-a.252) ascribe his name to the large size of his bowl. For notes on the name Piṇḍola see Psalms of the Brethren, p.110, n.4, and Psalms of the Brethren, p.415; ks.iv.68, n.1. ² vehāsa. See BD.1.79, n.6.

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Piṇḍola the Bhāradvāja, saying:

Vin.2.112

"Is it true, as is said, Bhāradvāja, that the bowl of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha was fetched down by you?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

"It is not suiting, Bhāradvāja, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, Bhāradvāja, on account of a wretched wooden bowl exhibit a condition of further-men,¹ a wonder of psychic power to householders? As, Bhāradvāja, a woman exhibits her loin-cloth on account of a wretched stamped māsaka,² even so by you, Bhāradvāja, was a condition of further-men, a wonder of psychic power exhibited to householders on account of a wretched wooden bowl. It is not, Bhāradvāja, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ..." Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

BD.5.152

"Monks, a condition of further-men, a wonder of psychic power is not to be exhibited to householders.³ Whoever should exhibit them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Break, monks, this wooden bowl; having reduced it to fragments, give them to monks as perfume to mix with ointment.⁴ And, monks, a wooden bowl should not be used.⁵ Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Kd.15.9.1

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of bowls, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: "Like house-

¹ uttarimanussadhamma. See Bu-Pj.4, Bu-Pc.8, and BD.1, Introduction, p.xxiv.

² māsakarūpa. See BD.1.72, n.1, and BD.1.71, n.2. The word also occurs at Vin.2.294.

³ Vin-a.1203 says a miracle is objected to, not psychic power that is volitional in nature.

⁴ Cf. Vin.1.203, where sandal-wood was allowed among five perfumes (añjanupapisana).

⁵ Cf. BD.2.115, BD.2.415 (and n.1), and Vin.5.537.

holders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, a bowl made of gold should not be used,¹ a bowl made of silver should not be used, a bowl made of pearls ... made of beryl ... made of crystal ... made of bronze ... made of glass ... made of tin ... made of lead ... a bowl made of copper should not be used. Whoever should use (any of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, two (kinds of) bowls: an iron bowl, a clay bowl.”²

Kd.15.9.2

Now at that time the bases of the bowls were rubbed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a circular bowl-rest.”

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of circular bowl-rests, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, various kinds of circular bowl-rests should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, two (kinds of) circular bowl-rests; made of tin, made of lead.” The thick circular rests could not be inserted.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to plane them.” There were jags (on them).⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cut swordfish teeth.”⁵

BD.5.153

Vin.2.113

Now at that time the group of six monks used carved⁶ circular bowl-rests, loaded with little figures, made with ornamentations, and they toured about showing these on carriage-roads. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, carved circular bowl-rests should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, ordinary circular rests.”¹

¹ Cf. Kd.5.8.3. ² As at Vin.3.243, Vin.4.123, Vin.4.243. ³ acchupiyanti. Cf. Kd.8.14.1, where the word is used of “inserting a batch into a robe.” The meaning above may be “the circular rests were thick and they (i.e. the bowls) could not be inserted.” ⁴ valim̐ honti. Pali-English Dictionary suggests reading valiyo. Perhaps vali is here jag or scratch, the planing or adzing not having been well done. The jags could then be made the best of by converting them into crocodile teeth to hold the bowls. But this rendering is as conjectural as that given at Vinaya Texts iii.83. ⁵ See also Kd.15.11.6. ⁶ Citra, variegated or painted, but not always, and above it appears to be more likely “carved”.

Now at that time monks (each) put away his bowl with water in it and a bowl was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be put away with water in it. Whoever should (so) put it away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to put away a bowl having dried it in the sun.”²

Kd.15.9.3

Now at that time monks (each) dried his bowl in the sun with water in it and a bowl came to smell nasty. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl with water in it should not be dried in the sun. Whoever should (so) dry it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to put away a bowl having emptied it of water,³ having dried it in the sun.”

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl in the heat and the colour of a bowl was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside in the heat. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to put away a bowl, having dried it for a short time in the sun’s heat.”⁴

BD.5.154

Now at that time many bowls came to be laid aside in the open air without a prop. Having been blown against one another by gusts of wind, the bowls were broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a little prop for bowls.”

Kd.15.9.4

¹ Buddhaghosa says “just (or, only, eva) the circular rests cut with swordfish teeth.” ² Cf. Vin.1.46. ³ Cf. Vin.1.46. ⁴ Cf. Vin.1.46.

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl at the edge of a solid bench.¹ Having fallen down, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside at the edge of a solid bench. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl at the edge of a plaster flooring.² Having fallen down, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside at the edge of a plaster flooring. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) turned his bowl upside down³ on the ground. A rim was rubbed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a grass mat.”⁴ The grass mat was eaten by white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a piece of cloth.” The piece of cloth was eaten by white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bowl-stand.”⁵ Having fallen down from a bowl-stand, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a wicker stand for bowls.”⁶ A bowl was rubbed on the wicker stand for the bowls. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bag for bowls.” There was no strap at the edge.

Vin.2.114

BD.5.155

¹ miḍhante. At Vin.2.143 miḍḍhi. Vinaya Texts iii.163 say that it is built against the wall of a room or on the veranda against the outer wall of a house or hut. Often made of hardened mud with two wooden legs in front, it is a bench used to sit or sleep on. Vin-a.1203 says ālindaka (veranda) miḍhakādinam ante, and implies that some miḍhis are narrow. Allowed at Vin.2.149 when grass mats had been eaten by rats and so on, and where miḍhi appears as something hard and also as something to sleep on. The meaning is not certain. ² paribhaṇḍa. Meaning uncertain. Vin-a.1203–Vin-a.1204 says “on the outer side, on the edge of a treated (or, made, erected, kata) narrow miḍhi.” On the word at Vin.2.172 the Commentary says it is made of cow dung and of paste, kāsava, for colouring floors, walls, etc.; and on the word at Vin.2.220 it says bahi jagḡati, he lies awake (or, watches) outside. In explaining “piece of cloth,” coḷaka, below, Vin-a.1204 speaks of mattika-paribhaṇḍakatā bhūmi, which seems to mean “earth treated with clay and plaster.” ³ See Kd.15.20.3. ⁴ Allowed at Kd.5.11.3 below; also at Vin.2.148, to save limbs and robes from being covered with dust. ⁵ pattamāḷaka. Vin-a.1204 says “made of brick or made of wood”. ⁶ pattakaṇḍolika.

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”¹

Now at that time monks (each) hung his bowl on a peg in the wall² and on an “elephant-tusk” (peg).³ Having fallen down, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be hung up. Whoever should hang one up, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.9.5

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl on a couch. Sitting down heedlessly, they broke a bowl having sat down (hard) on it.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside on a couch. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” ... (The same repeated for laying aside a bowl on a chair) ...

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl on his lap. They got up heedlessly and a bowl, having fallen down, was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside on a lap. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) laid aside his bowl in a sunshade.⁵ A sunshade was lifted up by gusts of wind⁶ and having fallen down a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl should not be laid aside in a sunshade. Whoever should (so) lay it aside, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks (each) opened a door⁷ when he had a bowl in his hand. As a door was blowing to and fro, a bowl was broken. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a door should not be opened when one has a bowl in one’s hand. Whoever should (so) open it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.156

¹ Cf. Kd.6.12.4, Kd.15.11.5. See BD.4.276, n.8. ² As at Vin.3.48. Allowed at Vin.2.152. ³ As at Vin.3.48. Allowed at Vin.2.152. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.79 (BD.1.137 and n.4). ⁵ chatta. N.B. at Vin.1.152 this word appears to mean a large vessel or receptacle. ⁶ Cf. above Kd.15.9.4 and Vin.4.345. ⁷ See BD.1.199, n.3.

Kd.15.10.1

Now at that time monks went about for almsfood (to be put) into a gourd.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like members of other sects.”² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not go about for almsfood (to be put) into a gourd. Whoever should (so) go about, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.2.115

Now at that time monks went about for almsfood (to be put) into a water-pot. People ... (as above) ... “offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.10.2

Now at that time a certain monk came to be a wearer of nothing but rag-robcs;³ he carried a bowl made from a skull. A certain woman, terrified at having seen him, uttered a scream of horror;⁴ “How terrible for me, indeed it is a demon⁵ after me.” People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans carry a bowl made from a skull, like demon-worshippers?”⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a bowl made from a skull should not be carried. Whoever should carry one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should you be a wearer of nothing but rag-robcs. Whoever should be, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.10.3

Now at that time monks took back in their bowls odd bits and bones and impure water.⁷ People ... spread it about, saying: “That very thing from which these recluses, sons of the Sakyans eat, that is simply their wastetub.”⁸ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, odd bits and bones and impure water should not be taken back in a bowl. Whoever should (so) take (these things) back, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, a waste-tub.”

¹ Cf. Vin.1.90 (BD.4.114) = BD.3.245 (BD.2.119) where they went about for almsfood to be put into their hands. ² See BD.2.119, n.4. ³ Buddhaghosa says that in this case his robes, couch and chair were from a rag-heap. ⁴ Cf. MN.i.448. ⁵ pisāca, as at MN.i.448. MN-a.iii.165 explains, “a demon (pisāca) has come to eat me.” ⁶ pisācillikā. Word occurs at Vin.1.152, Vin.2.134, Snp-a.357. ⁷ Same list found at Vin.4.266 in definition of vighāsa, “scraps of food.” ⁸ paṭiggaha, a receptacle, a receiving thing. Word occurs below Kd.15.11.5. (meaning thimble), but cf. udakap- at Vin.2.213.

Now at that time monks were sewing robe-material having ripped it up with their hands. The robe-material became unsightly.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a small knife, a piece of felt² (to wrap round it).” Now at that time a small knife with a handle³ accrued to the Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a small knife with a handle.” Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of small knives with handles, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of small knives with handles should not be used. Whoever should use (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to be made of bone, made of ivory, made of horn, made of reeds, made of bamboo, made of pieces of stick, made of lac, made of crystal, made of copper, made of the inside of a conch-shell.”⁴

Kd.15.11.1
BD.5.157

Now at that time monks sewed robe-material with a cock’s feather and with bamboo-rind⁵ and the robe-material came to be badly sewn. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow you a needle.” The needles became rusty.⁶ “I allow you, monks, a tube for (holding) the needles.”⁷ Even in the tubes they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, to fill them with yeast.”⁸ Even in the yeast they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, to fill them with barley-meal.”⁹ Even in the barley-meal they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, powdered stone.” Even in the powdered stone they became rusty. “I allow you, monks, to have it mixed with beeswax.” The powdered stone

Kd.15.11.2

Vin.2.116

BD.5.158

¹ viloma. ² namataka, allowed again at Vin.2.123, Vin.2.134. Word also found at Vin.2.267
³ daṇḍasatthaka. ⁴ Cf. Kd.6.12.1, and see BD.4.276 for notes. ⁵ veḷupesikā. Word found at DN.ii.324. ⁶ kaṇṇakita, spoiled in some way, probably rusty, blunt or stained. The word appears to be used in the sense of stained (of the ground and of a wall) at Kd.1.25.15=Kd.18.1.3; and in the sense of stained, soiled or spoiled (of robes) at Nuns’ Bi-Pc.24. Vin-a.1205 explains as mallaḡahitā honti (variant reading malaggaḡahitā). Mala may mean rust. Vinaya Texts iii.91 translates as “blunt.” ⁷ sūcināḷika. Bu-Pc.86 makes it an offence to have a sūcighara made of bone, ivory or horn. ⁸ kiṇṇa, explained at Vin-a.1205 as kiṇṇacuṇṇa. ⁹ rattu. Oldenberg’s text reads satthu. Cf. BD.2.322, n.4.

broke up. “I allow you, monks, powdered stone (mixed) with gum.”¹

Kd.15.11.3

Now at that time monks, having driven in posts here and there, having tied them together, sewed robe-material. The robe-material became misshapen at the corners.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a kaṭhina-frame³ (and) strings for the kaṭhina-frame⁴ (and) to sew robe-material having tied it down here and there.” They spread out a kaṭhina-frame in an uneven place; the kaṭhina-frame was split. “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be spread out in an uneven place. Whoever should (so) spread one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” They spread out a kaṭhina-frame on the ground. The kaṭhina-frame was soiled by dust. “I allow you, monks, a grass mat.”⁵ An edge of the kaṭhina-frame was injured.⁶ “I allow you, monks, to put on a braiding, a binding.”⁷ The kaṭhina-frame was not large enough.⁸ “I allow you, monks, a stick in the kaṭhina-frame,⁹ a skewer,¹⁰ a slip of wood,¹¹ a cord for tying,¹² a thread for tying,¹ and having tied the robe-material, to sew it.” The spaces between the threads became unequal.² “I allow you, monks, a mark³ (to keep the spaces between the threads equal).” The threads became crooked. “I allow you, monks, a false thread.”⁴

BD.5.159

¹ saritasipāṭika; cf. hinguṣipāṭika at Vin.1.201 (Kd.6.7). But Vin-a.1206 explains as madhusit-thakapilotikam satthakosakam, a little cloth for the beeswax, a little sheath for a knife. Cf. also below, BD.5.185, n.4. ² vikaṇṇa, as at Vin.1.297. ³ kaṭhina here, as pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.92, n.8 “is evidently a sort of framework.” Vin-a.1206 says it “is a nisseṇi (ladder, frame?) and another should be spread (attharati) there for the mats.” Or the translation of this may be: “the nisseṇi should be spread out there and another for the mats.” The verb used here in connection with kaṭhina is pattharati, to spread out, to extend; whereas attharati is the verb used in connection with the formal making up of the kaṭhina-cloth; see BD.2.26, n.3 and Kd.7. ⁴ kaṭhinarajja (variant reading rajju). Vin-a.1206 says “those who are sewing robe-material double, tie the robe-material to the kaṭhina (-frame).” ⁵ As at Kd.15.9.4 above. ⁶ jīrati, or “wore out (with age).” This would begin a new idea, and perhaps this is intended. On the other hand, to say that it was hurt or damaged would imply that the grass mat was not big enough to protect the edges of the frame, and thus the same idea would be continued. ⁷ anuvāta paribhaṇḍa. See BD.2.409, n.7, n.8 (where also further references are given). These two words occur at Vin.1.254 as representing things which must have a place in the making of the kaṭhina-cloth into robes; and again at Vin.1.297 as representing things to be used in strengthening robes. ⁸ Vin-a.1206 says the frame was made according to the height of a tall monk, but when the robe-material was being (formally) made there, it did not suffice for (even) a short monk. ⁹ daṇḍakaṭhina. Pali-English Dictionary says that this is kaṭhina-cloth stretched on a stick (for the purpose of measuring). Vin-a.1206 says, “it means: ‘I allow you to bind another frame (nisseṇi) of the height of such and such a monk in the middle of that one’” (i.e. of the original nisseṇi, by which the Commentary has already explained kaṭhina).

Kd.15.11.4

Now at that time monks trod on a kaṭhina-frame with unwashed feet; the kaṭhina-frame was damaged. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be trodden upon if your feet are unwashed. Whoever should (so) tread upon (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks trod on a kaṭhina-frame with damp feet ... He said: “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be trodden upon if your feet are damp. Whoever should (so) tread upon (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks trod on a kaṭhina-frame with their sandals on.⁵ ... He said: “Monks, a kaṭhina-frame should not be trodden upon if you have your sandals on. Whoever should (so) tread upon (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.11.5

Now at that time monks, sewing robes, pricked⁶ their fingers; their fingers became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said. “Monks, ¹⁰ pidalaka (Vin-a.1206 vidalaka). Vin-a.1206 says, “it is for making double, having drawn back the ends (pariyante) of the mat in accordance with the measure of the stick in the kaṭhina-frame.” ¹¹ salāka. Vin-a.1206 explains as a slip of wood going in between a double piece of robe-material. ¹² vinandhanarajju. Vin-a.1206 says “a cord tying the smaller frame (nisseṇi) together with the large frame there.” ¹ vinandhanasuttaka. Vin-a.1206, “thread for tying the robe-material to the smaller frame.” ² visamā. Vin-a.1206 says that some were large, some small. ³ kaḷimbhaka. Vin-a.1206 says “talipot palm leaves and so on—whatever does for knowing the (right) measure.” ⁴ moghasuttaka. Vin-a.1206 says “for recognition by a yellow thread, as carpenters go by a black thread on a piece of wood”. See BD.4.354 and cf. Vin-a.1110 in explanation of bandhanamattena. In both cases the false thread is a guide. ⁵ See BD.3.144, n.1. ⁶ paṭiḅaṅhanti.

Vin.2.117
BD.5.160

I allow a thimble.”¹ Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of thimbles, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of thimbles should not be used. Whoever should use them, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow them, monks, to be made of bone ... made of the inside of a conch-shell.”

Now at that time needles and small knives and thimbles were lost. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a small bowl to hold (these things in).”² (The contents of) the small bowls got in a muddle. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bag for thimbles.” There was no strap at the edge. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”³

Kd.15.11.6

Now at that time as monks were sewing robes in the open air they were bothered by cold and heat.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a hall for the kaṭhina-frame, a hut for the kaṭhina-frame.” A hall for the kaṭhina-frame was low to the ground,⁵ it was flooded by water. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground.” The piling collapsed. “I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood.”⁶ They were inconvenienced as they were ascending. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) staircases: a staircase of bricks, a staircase of stones, a staircase of wood.” As they were ascending they fell off. “I allow, monks, a balustrade.”⁷ Powdered grass⁸ fell into the hall for the kaṭhina-frame. “I allow you, monks, having lashed⁹ on (a roof¹⁰), to give a smearing inside and outside,¹ whitewash,² black colouring, red chalk, wreath-work, creeper-work, swordfish teeth, the five (pieces of) cloth design, a bamboo for hanging up robe-material,³ a cord for hanging up robe-material.”⁴

BD.5.161

¹ paṭiggaha. Cf. above, BD.5.156. ² āvesanavithaka. Āvesana is dwelling, vittha a bowl, as in surāvitha at Ja.v.427, Dhp-a.iii.66. Vin-a.1206 explains by pāti- (bowl) caṅgoṭakādi (box and so on). ³ As at Kd.6.12.4. ⁴ Cf. this passage with Kd.15.14.2, Kd.15.14.3, Kd.16.3.6. ⁵ Cf. this passage with Kd.15.14.2. ⁶ As at Kd.15.16.2, Kd.15.17.2, Kd.16.3.3. ⁷ ālambanabāha. Ālambana by itself is “the plinth of a railing or balustrade,” A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p.251. ⁸ tiṇacuṇṇa, as at Vin.1.203. ⁹ ogumphetvā. Cf. ogumphiyanti at Vin.1.194. ¹⁰ So Vin-a.1207, chadanariṇ odhunitvā.

Now at that time monks, having sewn robe-material, went away having left the kaṭhina-frame at that very place, and it was eaten by rats and white ants. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to fold up the kaṭhina-frame.” A kaṭhina-frame was split. “I allow you, monks, to fold up the kaṭhina-frame by using a wooden rod.”⁵ A kaṭhina-frame was twisted out of position.⁶ “I allow you, monks, a cord for tying it.” Now at that time monks, having lifted up the kaṭhina-frame on to walls and posts, went away and the kaṭhina-frame, having fallen down, was split. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to hang it on a peg in a wall or on an ‘elephant-tusk’ (peg).”

Kd.15.11.7

Then the Lord having stayed in Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting set out on tour for Vesālī. Now at that time the monks went along (each) taking his needle and small knife and medicine in his bowl. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a bag for medicine.” There was no strap at the edge. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”

Kd.15.12.1

Vin.2.118

Now at that time a certain monk, having tied his sandals to his girdle entered a village for almsfood. A certain lay-follower, greeting that monk, knocked up against the sandals with his head. That monk became ashamed. Then that monk, having arrived at a monastery, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks,

Bd.5.162

¹ ullitāvalitta, as in definition of “hut” and “dwelling-place” at Vin.3.149, Vin.3.156 respectively (see BD.1.267, n.3). ² This and the following terms, as far as “five (pieces of) cloth design,” mentioned again at Vin.2.121, Vin.4.47. Cf. Vin.2.172. For notes see BD.2.259. ³ Allowed at Vin.1.286. ⁴ Allowed at Vin.1.286. ⁵ goghaṃsikā. I do not follow the meaning as given at Vinaya Texts iii.98, for monks were not allowed to use cowhides (Vin.1.193). Vin-a.1207 says, “having arranged (katvā) a bamboo or a stick (daṇḍaka) from a tree inside, to fold it up (i.e. the frame) together with that.” ⁶ viveṭhiyati.

a bag for sandals.” There was no strap at the edge. “I allow you, monks, a strap at the edge, a thread for tying.”

Kd.15.13.1

Now at that time on a certain road there was water that was not allowable¹ (for) there was no strainer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a strainer.” A little piece of cloth was not enough. “I allow, monks, a strainer on a ladle.” The little piece of cloth was not enough. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow a regulation waterpot.”²

Kd.15.13.2

Now at that time two monks were going along a high road in the Kosalan country. One monk indulged in bad habits.³ The other monk spoke thus to that monk: “Do not do that, your reverence, it is not allowable.” He grumbled at him. Then that monk, tormented by thirst, spoke thus to the monk who had grumbled: “Give me the strainer,⁴ your reverence, I will drink (some) water.” The monk who had grumbled did not give it. That monk passed away, tormented by thirst. Then that monk, having arrived at a monastery, told this matter to the monks. They said: “But did you, your reverence, (although) being asked, not give a strainer?”

“No, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this monk, when being asked for a strainer, not give it?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned this monk, saying:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, when being asked for a strainer, did not give it?”

“It is true, Lord.” The enlightened one, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

“It is not suitable in you, foolish man, it is not becoming, it is not fitting, it is not worthy of a recluse, it is not allowable, it is not to be done. How can you, foolish man, when being asked for a strainer, not give it? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having

BD.5.163

Vin.2.119

¹ Doubtless meaning that it had “living creatures” in it—an offence to make use of water like this, Bu-Pc.62, and cf. Bu-Pc.20. ² dhammakaraka, as at Vin.2.177, Vin.2.302. Cf. Dhp-a.iii.290. ³ Cf. Vin.4.83 (BD.2.332). ⁴ It looks as if the strainer, at the date of this episode, was communal, one serving a number of monks. At Vin.2.302 it is given among a “recluse’s requisites.”

rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, if a monk is going along a highroad and is being asked for a strainer, he should not give it. Whoever should not give it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. Nor, monks, should you go along a highway without a strainer. Whoever should (so) go, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If there is not a strainer nor a regulation water-pot, then a corner of the outer cloak should be determined upon with the words, ‘I will drink (water) having strained it with this’.”

Then the Lord, walking on tour gradually arrived at Vesālī. The Lord stayed there in Vesālī in the Great Grove at the Hall of the Gabled Pillars. Now at that time monks were making repairs. The water-strainer did not cease (to be in use¹). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a double water-strainer.”² The double water-strainer did not cease (to be in use). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a filter.”³ Now at that time monks were pestered by mosquitoes. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a mosquito-net.”⁴

Kd.15.13.3

Now at that time at Vesālī a succession of meals of sumptuous foods came to be arranged.⁵ Monks, having eaten the sumptuous foods, became very ill with their bodies full of (bad) humours.⁶ Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca went to Vesālī on some business or other. Jīvaka Komārabhacca saw the monks who were very ill with their bodies full of (bad) humours; seeing them, he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Jīvaka Komārabhacca spoke thus to the Lord:

Kd.15.14.1

BD.5.164

¹ na sammati, did not rest, cease. The meaning must be that the thirsty monks made such constant demands upon it that it did not meet their needs and that therefore something larger was wanted to give more water and more quickly. ² daṇḍaparissāvana. Cf. daṇḍasatthaka and daṇḍakaṭhina at Kd.15.11.1, Kd.15.11.3. Vinaya Texts iii.102 gives “double strainer” with note that it is “apparently a long box, both ends of which strain the water which is poured into the middle by means of a pipe (daṇḍaka).” Daṇḍakaṭhina certainly has nearly the meaning of a “double kaṭhina-frame.” Vin-a.1207 says “like dyers’ strainers for alkaline dyes, having tied a piece of cloth to the four ends of a frame, water should be poured into a pipe (daṇḍaka) in the middle. Then you strain, having filled both the divisions.” ³ ottharaka, a kind of strainer. It seems, from Buddhaghosa’s remarks, that this is a strainer which by means of four pipes filters water that monks can then take in a pitcher. ⁴ makasakuṭikā, or mosquito-curtain. Vin-a.1207 explains by cīvarakuṭikā. Does this mean a little hut (made of robe-material)? ⁵ As at Vin.4.75; Vin.1.57 (Rājagaha), Vin.1.248 (Kusinārā). ⁶ As at Vin.1.206.

“At present, Lord, monks are very ill with their bodies full of (bad) humours. It were well, Lord, if the Lord allowed the monks a place for pacing up and down in and a bathroom.¹ Thus will the monks come to have few afflictions.”² Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Jīvaka Komārabhacca with talk on dhamma. Then Jīvaka Komārabhacca, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, a place for pacing up and down in, and a bathroom.”

Kd.15.14.2

Vin.2.120

Now at that time monks paced up and down in an uneven place for pacing up and down in; their feet became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make it level.” A place for pacing up and down in was low to the ground; it was flooded by water. “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) ... I allow you, monks, a balustrade.”

BD.5.165

Now at that time, monks, as they were pacing up and down in the place for pacing up and down in, fell off. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a railing round the place for pacing up and down in.”³ Now at that time monks, pacing up and down in the open air, were bothered by cold and heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a hall in the place for pacing up and down in.” Powdered grass fell into the hall in the place for pacing up and down in. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof) ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) ... a cord for hanging up robe-material.”

¹ jantāghara, as at Kd.1.25.12; see BD.4.62, and Vinaya Texts iii.103, n.2. ² appābādā. Jīvaka was probably taking a wider view of maintaining the monks' health than the “convalescent” of Vinaya Texts iii.103 allows for. ³ caṅkamanavedikā. As noted by A.K. COOMARASWAMY in Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p.273 (q.v. for further references), DN.ii.179 gives the component parts of a vedikā: the uprights, the cross-bars and the coping. Cf. vedikāvātapāna at Kd.16.2.2.

Kd.15.14.3

A bathroom was low to the ground; it was flooded by water. “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) ... a balustrade.” There was no door¹ to a bathroom. “I allow, monks, a door, a doorpost and lintel,² a hollow like a mortar (for the door to revolve in³), a small upper projection,⁴ a post for the bolt,⁵ a ‘monkey’s head,’⁶ a pin (to secure the bolt),⁷ a (stick used as a) bolt,⁸ a keyhole,⁹ a hole for pulling through (the cord),¹⁰ cord for pulling through.”¹¹

The lower part of the lath and plaster wall¹² of a bathroom decayed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a facing (round it).”¹³ The bathroom had no pipe for the steam.¹⁴ “I allow, monks, a pipe for the steam.”

Bd.5.166

¹ kavāṭa, the door itself, that which closes the aperture. ² piṭṭhasariṅghāṭa. Allowed again with the two following items at Kd.16.2.1. ³ udukkhaliḥka. I follow translation at Vinaya Texts iii.105. ⁴ uttarapāsaka. Vinaya Texts iii.105 “projections to revolve in these hollows.” ⁵ aggaḷavaṭṭi. Vin-a.1207 says, “the same measure as the doorpost, dvārabāhā, it is simply called aggaḷathambha (post for a bolt or bar). Having made three or four holes there, they put in pins” (sūci, or cross-bars). ⁶ kapisīsaka. Vin-a.1207 says, “this means, having perforated the doorpost, it is called a bolt-projection, aggaḷapāsaka, put in there”. Critical Pali Dictionary (under aggaḷapāsaka) notes that “according to Vin-a (Vin.2.120)=kapisīsaka, quadrangular end of the bolt of a door, Sacred Books of the East xx.106.” Cf. DN.ii.143, kapisīsam ālambitvā ṭhito, which DN-a.584 explains as kapisīsakam ti dvārabāhakoṭiyam ṭhitam aggaḷarukkhām, “a piece of wood for the bolt fixed at the top of the doorpost.” It must be a hole or cavity to receive the bolt. The word also occurs at Ja.iii.23. ⁷ sūcika. Vin-a.1207 says, “it is put in, having made a hole in the middle there” (i.e. in the “monkey’s head”). Cf. aggaḷasūci at MN.i.126, “the pin for the bolt.” ⁸ ghaṭikā. Vin-a.1207 merely says “joined above,” upari yojitā. Cf. ghaṭikam ugghāṭetvā, having undone the bolt, at Vin.2.207, and sūciḡhaṭikā at Vin.2.237, SN.iv.290, Ud.52. It is explained at Ud-a.298: sūciḡhaṭikā means having fixed (ādahitvā, variant reading ādim katvā) the pin for the bolt, aggaḷasūci, and the upper bolt, upariḡhaṭikā, having closed it firmly. The ghaṭikā would appear to be a subsidiary bolt, the main one being the aggaḷa. ⁹ Cf. below, Vin.5.207. ¹⁰ āviñchanachidda. This and the next allowed again at Kd.16.2.1 because there doors could not be made to meet (the doorposts), na phassīyanti. ¹¹ āviñchanarajju. ¹² kuḍḍapāda; also below Kd.16.3.4 of a dwelling-place and where a different remedy was “allowed.” ¹³ maṇḍalikaṃ kātum. Vin-a.1207 says nīcavatthukam cinitum, “to pile low to the ground,” for which expression cf. Kd.15.11.6. ¹⁴ dhūmanetta. Cf. Kd.6.13.2. Vin-a.1207 says a hole for letting out the steam.

Now at that time monks made a fireplace in the middle of a small bathroom, and there was no access.¹ “I allow you, monks, to make a fireplace at one side of a small bathroom, in the middle of a large one.” The fire in the bathroom scorched their faces. “I allow, monks, clay for the face.”² They moistened the clay with their hands. “I allow, monks, a tub for the clay.” The clay came to smell nasty. “I allow you, monks, to cure³ it.” The fire in the bathroom scorched their bodies. “I allow you, monks, to take in water.” They took in water in dishes and bowls. “I allow you, monks, a receptacle for water,⁴ a saucer⁵ for the water.” A bathroom with a grass roofing did not make them sweat. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof),⁶ to give it a smearing inside and outside.” The bathroom became swampy. “I allow you, monks, to spread three (kinds of) spreadings: a spreading of bricks, a spreading of stones, a spreading of wood.”⁷ Even so it became swampy. “I allow you, monks, to wash it.” Water remained. “I allow, monks, a drain for the water.”⁸ Now at that time monks sat down on the ground in a bathroom and they got pins and needles in their limbs. “I allow, monks, a chair for the bathroom.” Now at that time a bathroom was not fenced in. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence it in with: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.”⁹

Vin.2.121

Kd.15.14.4

There was no porch.¹⁰ “I allow, monks, a porch.” The porch was low to the ground; it was flooded by water. “I allow you, monks, to make it high to the ground ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) ... a balustrade.” There was no door to the porch. “I allow, monks, a door, doorposts and lintel ... (as in Kd.15.14.3) ... a hole for pulling through (the cord), cord for pulling through.” Powdered grass fell on to the porch. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof), to give it a smearing inside and outside, whitewash, black colouring, red

BD.5.167

¹ upacāra as in Kd.16.3.3. ² mukhamattikā. Cf. Kd.1.25.12. ³ vāsetuṃ, in the sense of to prepare, to treat, as at Kd.6.17. Buddhaghosa says “to cure with perfumes.” ⁴ udakaṭṭhāna. Buddhaghosa reads udakanidhāna, a receptacle for water, and explains, “a place for putting water; having put the water in a pitcher (ghaṭa) there, one can use it by means of a saucer” (or cup). ⁵ sarāvaka, as at Vin.1.203. Cf. ācamanasarāvaka at Kd.15.35.4. ⁶ See above, Kd.15.11.6. ⁷ As in Kd.15.17.1. ⁸ As at end of Kd.15.14.5; Kd.15.17.2. ⁹ As at Kd.15.17.1; cf. Vin.4.266. ¹⁰ koṭṭhaka. Vin-a.1208 says this means dvārakoṭṭhaka, gateway in the porch. See Kd.15.35.4

chalk, garland design, creeper design, swordfish teeth, the five (pieces of) cloth design.”¹

Kd.15.14.5

A cell became swampy.² “I allow you, monks, to sprinkle gravel.”³ They did not succeed in doing so. “I allow you, monks, to lay down flagstones.” Water remained. “I allow, monks, a drain for the water.”⁴

Kd.15.15.1

Now at that time monks, while naked,⁵ greeted others who were naked and caused others who were naked to greet them; did a service to others who were naked and made others do a service to those who were naked; while naked they gave to others who were naked, accepted naked, ate naked, partook of naked, tasted naked, drank naked. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, one who is naked should neither greet nor be greeted by one who is naked; one who is naked should not cause another to greet nor to be greeted by one who is naked; a service for one who is naked should not be done by one who is naked, a service for one who is naked should not be caused to be done by one who is naked; one who is naked should not give to a naked one, one who is naked should not accept, one who is naked should not eat, one who is naked should not partake of, ... should not taste ... should not drink. Whoever should (so) drink, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.16.1

Now at that time monks laid aside their robes on the ground in a bathroom; the robes became soiled with dust.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.” When it rained the robes got wet. “I allow, monks, a hall in the bathroom.” The hall in the bathroom was low to the ground. “I allow, monks, ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) ... a balustrade.” Powdered grass fell on to the hall in the bathroom. “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roof) ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) ... a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.”

BD.5.168

Vin.2.122

Kd.15.16.2

¹ As at Kd.15.11.6. ² As at Kd.15.35.4; Kd.16.3.8. ³ marumbā, as in Bu-Pc.10 in definition of “natural ground” (see BD.2.224 and n.1). ⁴ As in Kd.15.14.3. ⁵ That is, in the bathroom.

⁶ As at Kd.15.11.3.

Now at that time monks were doubtful about doing a service both when in a bathroom and in the water. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, three (kinds of) coverings: a covering to the bathroom, a covering to the water, a covering by clothes."¹

Now at that time there was no water in a bathroom. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a well." The facing of the well fell in.² "I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood." The well was low to the ground ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) "... I allow, monks, a balustrade."

Now at that time monks drew water by means of jungle rope, and by means of a waistband. "I allow you, monks, a cord for drawing water." Their hands became painful. "I allow, monks, a well-sweep,³ a hand-wheel,⁴ a wheel and buckets."⁵ Many vessels were broken. "I allow monks, three (kinds of) jars: a copper jar, a wooden jar, strips of animals' hide."⁶

Now at that time monks, drawing water in the open air, were bothered by cold and heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a hall for a well." Powdered grass fell on to the hall for a well. "I allow, monks, ... (as in Kd.15.11.6) ... a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes." The well was not covered. It was littered with powdered grass and with dust. "I allow, monks, a lid.”¹ There was no vessel for the water. “I allow, monks, a trough for water, a pot² for water.”

BD.5.169

¹ Vin-a.1208 says that the two former are for doing a service, but not for greeting, etc., the last is for doing all kinds of services. ² As at Kd.5.17.2. ³ tulā. Vin-a.1208 says "a pole for lifting up (or pulling up, ubbāhana) the water like that used for vegetables, paṇṇikānaṃ." A.K. COOMARASWAMY says it means here "well-sweep," Indian Architectural Terms, p.271, which also see for the two following terms. The three terms indicate different methods of pulling up water. Editors Vinaya Texts iii.112 had a corrupt copy of the Commentary before them. ⁴ karakaṭaka. Kaṭaka is anything circular, so a wheel. Vin-a.1208 says "either having harnessed it to bullocks or having taken it with the hands, it is an instrument with a long strap for pulling up" (a bucket of water). ⁵ cakkavaṭṭaka. Vin-a.1208 says "it is a contrivance for jars to be taken off the spokes of a wheel," arahaṭaghaṭiyantaṃ (variant reading arahattaghaṭi-). ⁶ Vin-a.1208, "a hide vessel that can be joined to the well-sweep or the hand-wheel."

Now at that time monks bathed here, there and everywhere in a monastery; the monastery became swampy. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a pool.” The pool was public. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence it in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.”³ The pool became swampy. “I allow you, monks, to spread three (kinds of) spreadings: a spreading of bricks, a spreading of stones, a spreading of wood.”⁴ The water remained. “I allow, monks, a drain.”⁵ Now at that time monks’ limbs cooled down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a wiper (with which to wipe off) the water⁶ and to sponge yourselves down with a cloth.”⁷

Kd.15.17.1

Now at that time a certain lay follower was anxious to build a tank for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a tank.” The facing of the tank fell in.⁸ “I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood.”⁹ They were inconvenienced as they were ascending. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) staircases: a staircase of bricks, a staircase of stones, a staircase of wood.”¹⁰ As they were ascending they fell off. “I allow, monks, a balustrade.” The water in the tank became stale. “I allow, monks, a pipe for the water,¹¹ a drain for the water.”

Kd.15.17.2

Vin.2.123

BD.5.170

¹ apīdhāna, as at Kd.16.12.2. ² kaṭāha, or receptacle. ³ As at Kd.15.14.3. ⁴ As at Kd.15.14.3. ⁵ As at Kd.15.14.3, Kd.15.14.5. ⁶ udakapuñchani. In view of the fact that Buddhaghosa says “made of ivory, made of horn, made of wood,” it cannot unhesitatingly be rendered “towel” (as at Vinaya Texts iii.114). Yet the three sorts allowed at Vin.2.174 are those of bearskin, drapery and cloth and Buddhaghosa mentions colakapādapuñchana in Commentary on Kd.16.2.2. Cf. pādapuñchani at Vin.4.40. The word also occurs at Vin.4.168 (BD.3.89). ⁷ colakena paccuddharitum as at Kd.16.3.1. ⁸ As at Kd.15.16.2. ⁹ As at Kd.15.11.6. ¹⁰ As at Kd.15.11.6. ¹¹ udakāyatika. Vin-a.1208 (reading udakamātikā, a channel, course, as does Sinhalese edition of Vinaya) says this is a mātikā for bringing water in. The drain will have been to lead it away.

Now at that time a certain monk was anxious to build a bathroom with a curving roof¹ for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bathroom with a curving roof.”

Kd.15.18.1

Now at that time the group of six monks were away, separated from² their pieces of cloth to sit upon³ for four months. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not be away, separated from your pieces of cloth to sit upon for four months. Whoever should be (so) away, separated from, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks lay down to sleep on beds which were scattered over with flowers. People, touring the dwelling-place, having seen them ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not lie down to sleep on beds scattered over with flowers. Whoever should (so) lie down to sleep, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time people, taking scents and garlands, came to a monastery. Monks being scrupulous, did not accept them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having taken the scents, to give the five-finger mark⁴ on the door; having taken the flowers, to lay them down in a dwelling-place at one side.”

Kd.15.19.1

¹ This rendering is taken from Vin-a.1208 which says that nillekha is called “a projection curving at the side, āviddhapakkhapāsaka; having fixed the side projections in the upper round part, uparimaṇḍale, of the beams, this (i.e. nillekha) is the name of the finished covering roof.” One might compare the “curved house,” aḍḍhayoga, of Vin.1.58 and other passages. See BD.4.75. ² vippavasati; see Bu-NP.2. ³ See Bu-NP.15, Vin.3.232 where nisīdana is defined, and BD.2.87, n.2, n.3. ⁴ kavāṭe pañcaṅgulikaṃ dātum. See article on pañcaṅgulika in Pali-English Dictionary. It is either a magical and protective or a decorative mark. At the present day impressions of the human hand are still made on walls in India, the hand having been first dipped in some colouring matter. See also Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.84f. Pañcaṅgulikaṃ datvā occurs at Ja.i.166 in connection with slaying a goat; at Ja.i.192 (gandhena pañc- datvā) of an ox; at Ja.ii.104, Ja.iii.23 of a tree, and also as lohitapañc- of a tree at Ja.iii.160.

Now at that time a piece of felt¹ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a piece of felt.” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, should a piece of felt be allotted or should it be assigned?”² “A piece of felt, monks, should be neither allotted nor assigned.”

BD.5.171

Now at that time the group of six monks ate (leaning against) chased cushions.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not eat (leaning against) chased cushions. Whoever should (so) eat there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.2.124

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill. While he was eating he was not able to hold a bowl in his hand. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks a stand.”⁴

Now at that time the group of six monks ate from one dish⁵ and drank from one beaker and shared one couch⁶ and shared one cloth and shared one covering and shared one covering-cloth.⁷ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not eat from one dish nor drink from one beaker nor share one couch nor share one cloth nor share one covering nor share one covering-cloth. Whoever should share (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.19.2

Now at that time the Licchavi Vaḍḍha was a friend of the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka.⁸ Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha

Kd.15.20.1

¹ namataka, as at Vin.2.115, Vin.2.134. Vin-a.1208 on its meaning above says that it is made of sheep’s wool (or goats’ hair, eḷakaloma). ² Not included among the articles about which the same question was asked at Vin.1.296-7. ³ āsittakūpadhāna. Vin-a.1208 says that a synonym for this is “a peḷā (basket, chest?) made of copper or silver.” ⁴ maḷorikā. Vin-a.1208 explains as a prop (made of) sticks, daṇḍādāhā aka. ⁵ As lax monks did at Vin.2.10, Vin.3.180. ⁶ As the lax monks and as two nuns did at Vin.4.288 (see BD.3.304). ⁷ As the lax monks and as the two nuns at Vin.4.289 (see BD.3.30, n). ⁸ Cf. Vin.2.78f., Vin.3.162.

approached the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka; having approached, he spoke thus to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “I salute you, masters.” When he had spoken thus, the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond. And a second time ... And a third time did the Licchavi Vaḍḍha speak thus to the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka: “I salute you, masters.” And a third time the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka did not respond. He said: “Do I offend against the masters? Why do the masters not respond to me?”

BD.5.172

“It is because you, friend Vaḍḍha, were indifferent when we were being molested by Dabba the Mallian.”

“What can I, masters, do?”

“If you, friend Vaḍḍha, were willing you could get the Lord to expel the venerable¹ Dabba the Mallian this very day.”

“What can I, masters, do? How am I able to do that?”

“Come you, friend Vaḍḍha, go up to the Lord; having gone up, speak thus to the Lord: “This, Lord, is not suitable, it is not becoming that this quarter which should be without fear, secure, without danger, is the very quarter which is full of fear, insecure, full of danger. Where there was a calm, now there is a gale. It seems as if the very water is blazing. My wife has been seduced by master Dabba the Mallian.’”

Kd.15.20.2

“Very well, masters,” and the Licchavi Vaḍḍha, having answered the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the Licchavi Vaḍḍha spoke thus to the Lord: “This, Lord, is not suitable ... My wife has been seduced by master Dabba the Mallian.”

Vin.2.125

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Dabba the Mallian, saying: “Dabba, do you remember doing as this Vaḍḍha says?”

“Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me.” And a second time the Lord ... And a third time the Lord spoke thus to the venerable Dabba the Mallian: “Dabba, do you remember doing as this Vaḍḍha says?”

¹ He is not called āyasmā by the monks at the parallel passage at Vin.3.162, but he is at Vin.2.78.

“Lord, the Lord knows in regard to me,” he said.

“Dabba, the Dabbas do not give evasive answers thus. If what was done was done by you, say so: if it was not done by you, say it was not.”

BD.5.173

“Lord, since I was born I cannot call to mind indulging in sexual intercourse even in a dream; much less so when I was awake.”

Kd.15.20.3

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Because of this, monks, let the Order turn the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl upside down,¹ let it impose non-eating with the Order.² Monks, if a lay-follower is possessed of eight qualities his bowl may be turned upside down:³ if he tries for non-receiving (of gains) by monks, if he tries for non-profiting by monks, if he tries for non-residence for monks, if he reviles and abuses monks, if he causes monk to break with monk,⁴ if he speaks dispraise of the Awakened One, if he speaks dispraise of dhamma, if he speaks dispraise of the Order. I allow you, monks, to turn a lay-follower’s bowl upside down if he is possessed of these eight qualities.

Kd.15.20.4

And thus, monks, should it be turned upside down: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha is defaming the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit.⁵ If it seems right to the Order, the Order may turn the Licchavi

¹ Not a literal turning upside down, but a symbolical one performed by a formal act of the Order for turning down, nikkujjanā and, a bowl, as described below in Kd.15.20.4. Vin-a.1209 says “here, if a person is possessed of any one of these eight qualities, having gone within the boundaries or outside them (the Order) may turn it down. When anyone’s bowl is turned upside down thus, no alms may be taken in his house ... It is set upright (again) by a formal act consisting of a motion and a resolution, ñattidutiyakamma.” AN-a.iv.159 explains, “(the Order) may turn it upside down by a proclamation, kammavācā for turning a bowl upside down, on account of which there is no receiving of alms given—not by placing it face downwards.” The phrase pattam nikkujjati although used in the ordinary signification above, Kd.15.9.4 (Vinaya Texts iii.119, n.2) is not here. A layman certainly would have had no begging bowl that could have been, literally, turned upside down. ² asambhogam saṅghena karotu. See above, Kd.11.25.1 where non-eating with an Order goes with and is a mark of an act of suspension. ³ This passage recurs at AN.iv.345. The first five qualities are also found at Vin.1.84, Vin.2.18. ⁴ At Vin.2.18 a formal act of reconciliation may be carried out for a monk if he has the first five of these qualities in respect of householders; and it may be too if he has spoken dispraise of the awakened one, etc., to householders. ⁵ As at Vin.2.79, where a “verdict of innocence” is given for Dabba.

BD.5.174 Vaḍḍha's bowl upside down, it may impose non-eating with the Order This is the motion Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha is defaming ... of falling away from moral habit. The Order is turning the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl upside down, it is imposing non-eating with an Order. If the turning upside down of the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl and the imposing of non-eating with the Order is pleasing to the venerable ones they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing, should speak. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl is turned upside down by the Order (and there is to be) non-eating with the Order. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

Kd.15.20.5

Then the venerable Ānanda, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, went up to the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's dwelling; having gone up, he spoke thus to the Licchavi Vaḍḍha: “Your bowl, friend Vaḍḍha, is turned upside down by an Order, you are non-eating with the Order.” Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha, thinking: “It is said that my bowl is turned upside down by an Order, it is said that I am non-eating with the Order,” fainted and fell on that very spot. Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's friends and intimates, his kith and kin¹ spoke thus to the Licchavi Vaḍḍha:

Vin.2.126

“Enough, Vaḍḍha, do not grieve, do not lament, we will reconcile² the Lord and the Order of monks.” Then the Licchavi Vaḍḍha with his wife and children, with his friends and intimates, with his kith and kin, his clothes wet, his hair wet approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, a transgression has overcome me,³ in that I, foolish, misguided, wrong that I was, defamed master Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. For this, Lord, let the Lord acknowledge my transgression as a transgression for the sake of restraint in the future.”

BD.5.175

“Truly a transgression overcame you, friend Vaḍḍha, in that you, foolish, misguided, wrong that you were, defamed Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of falling away from moral habit. But if you, friend Vaḍḍha, having seen the transgression as a transgression, confess according to the rule, we¹ acknowledge it for you. For, friend Vaḍḍha, in the discipline of the noble, this is growth: whoever having seen a transgression as a transgression, confesses it according to the rule, he attains restraint in the future.”

¹ Cf. AN.i.222. ² As noted at Vinaya Texts iii.122, n.1 this same verb is used in Kd.11.22.3 when a monk has offended against a layman. ³ As at Vin.1.315, Vin.4.18–Vin.4.19. See BD.2.200 for notes.

Kd.15.20.6

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well, now monks, let the Order set upright the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl, let it grant eating with the Order. Monks, if a lay-follower is possessed of eight qualities his bowl may be set upright: if he does not try for non-receiving (of gains) by monks, if he does not try for non-profiting by monks, if he does not try for non-residence for monks, if he does not revile and abuse monks, if he does not cause monk to break with monk, if he does not speak dispraise of the Awakened One, if he does not speak dispraise of dhamma, if he does not speak dispraise of the Order. I allow you, monks, to set upright a lay-follower’s bowl if he is possessed of these eight qualities.

Kd.15.20.7

“And thus, monks, should it be set upright: Monks, that Licchavi Vaḍḍha, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks’ feet, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted them with joined palms, should speak thus to them: ‘Honoured sirs, my bowl was turned upside down by the Order, I am not eating with the Order. But I, honoured sirs, am conducting myself properly, I am subdued, I am mending my ways, and I ask the Order for the setting upright of the bowl.’ And a second time it should be asked for. And a third time it should be asked for. The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl was turned upside down by the Order, he is not eating with the Order; but he is conducting himself properly, he is subdued, he is mending his ways; he asks the Order for the setting upright of the bowl. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may set upright the Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl, it may grant eating with the Order. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha’s bowl was turned upside down ... he asks the Order for setting upright the bowl. The Order is setting

Vin.2.127

BD.5.176

¹ In parallel passages the first person plural is likewise used here, perhaps to emphasise that “confession according to the rule” is to be made to monks and they acknowledge it and are the means by which a transgression can be removed. At the same time, since Gotama seldom, as recorded, addressed laypeople as āvuso, friend, it is doubtful whether he is or is intended to be speaking here at all.

upright the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl, it is granting eating with the Order. If the setting upright of the Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl and the granting of eating with the Order is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The Licchavi Vaḍḍha's bowl is set upright by the Order (and there is) eating with the Order. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

Kd.15.21.1

Then the Lord, having stayed in Vesāli for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for the Bhaggas.¹ In due course, walking on tour, the Lord arrived at the Bhaggas. The Lord stayed there among the Bhaggas on Sumsumāra Hill² in the Bhesakaḷā Grove in the deer park. Now at that time Kokanada³ was the name of Prince Bodhi's⁴ palace; it had not long been built and was as yet uninhabited by recluse or brahmin or by any human creature. Then Prince Bodhi addressed the brahmin youth, the son of Sañjikā,⁵ saying: “Come along, good son of Sañjikā, go up to the Lord; having gone up, in my name salute the Lord's feet with your head, ask whether he is well, not indisposed, of bodily vigour, strong, abiding in comfort, and say: ‘Lord, Prince Bodhi salutes the Lord's feet with his head and asks whether he is well ... abiding in comfort,’ and says this: ‘Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with Prince Bodhi tomorrow together with the Order of monks.’”

BD.5.177

“Very well, good sir,” and the brahmin youth, Sañjikā's son, having answered Prince Bodhi in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having exchanged greetings with the Lord, having conversed in a courteous and friendly way, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the brahmin youth, the son of Sanjika, spoke thus to the Lord: “Prince Bodhi salutes the revered Gotama's feet with his head ... and says may the revered Gotama consent to a meal with Prince

¹ yena Bhaggā. See MN.ii.91 where this story also appears, going as far as BD.5.178 below, “as he was sitting at a respectful distance,” where the Majjhima version proceeds differently. See also SN.iii.1 and B.C. LAW, Tribes in Ancient India, 1943, p.292f. ² SN-a.ii.249 says that it was called Crocodile Hill because as it was being built a crocodile made a noise, the Bhesakaḷā Grove was called after a yakkhīnī who lived there. ³ Lotus. See BD.3.139, n. and MN-a.iii.321. ⁴ Dhp.157 is said to have been uttered on his account, see Dhp-a.iii.134. ⁵ Sañjikāputta. See Dhp-a.iii.134, where he warned the architect that Bodhi contemplated killing or maiming him so that he could never build another palace like Kokanada.

Bodhi tomorrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent.

Then the brahmin youth, Sañjikā’s son, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat approached Prince Bodhi; having approached, he spoke thus to Prince Bodhi: “I spoke, good sir, in your name to the Lord Gotama, saying: ‘Prince Bodhi salutes ... together with the Order of monks.’ And the recluse Gotama consented.” Then Prince Bodhi towards the end of that night, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared, and having had Kokanada palace strewn with white cloths as far as the last flight of stairs,¹ spoke thus to the brahmin youth, the son of Sañjikā: “Come you along, good fellow, approach the Lord; having approached, announce the time to the Lord, saying: ‘It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.’”

Kd.15.21.2

Vin.2.128

“Very well, good sir,” and the brahmin youth, Sañjikā’s son, having answered Prince Bodhi in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, he announced the time to the Lord, saying: “It is time, good Gotama, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached Prince Bodhi’s dwelling. Now at the time when the Lord was coming Prince Bodhi was standing at the porch of the outside gateway. Prince Bodhi saw the Lord coming in the distance, and seeing him, having gone from there to meet him, having greeted the Lord, having honoured him, he approached Kokanada palace. Then the Lord stood still at the last flight of stairs. Then Prince Bodhi spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, let the Lord tread on² the cloths, let the well-farer tread on the cloths so that it may be for a long time for my blessing and happiness.” When he had spoken thus the Lord became silent. And a second time ... And a third time Prince Bodhi spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, let the Lord tread on ... for my blessing and happiness.” Then the Lord looked towards the venerable Ānanda. Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to Prince Bodhi:

BD.5.178

“Let the cloths, prince, be packed away, the Lord will not tread upon the

¹ Cf. MN.ii.92, MN.iii.1. ² akkamatu. MN.ii.92 reads abhirūhatu.

cloth carpeting,¹ the Truth-finder has compassion² for the folk who come after.”³

Kd.15.21.3

Then Prince Bodhi, having had the cloths packed away, had a seat made ready upstairs in Kokanada.⁴ Then the Lord having ascended the Kokanada palace, sat down together with the Order of monks on the seat made ready. Then Prince Bodhi, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, sat down at a respectful distance.⁵ Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Prince Bodhi as he was sitting at a respectful distance with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, you should not tread on a cloth carpeting.⁶ Whoever should tread on one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.2.129

Kd.15.21.4

Now at that time a certain woman who had had a miscarriage, having invited monks, having had cloth prepared, spoke thus: “Revered sirs, tread on the cloth.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not tread on it. She said: “Revered sirs, tread on the cloth for good luck’s sake.” The monks, being scrupulous, did not tread on it. Then that woman spread it about, saying: “How can these masters (although) being asked for good luck’s sake not tread on the cloth carpeting?” Monks heard this woman who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Householders, monks, look out for lucky signs.¹ I allow you, monks, when being asked by householders for good luck's sake, to tread on a cloth carpeting.”

BD.5.179

¹ celapattikā. For a monk to do so was apparently an auspice that the householder would have a child. ² anukampati, MN.ii.93 apaloketi, DhP-a.iii.136 oloketi. The legend is that Gotama knew that Bodhi would have no children because in a former birth, while he was living on an island, he ate and cooked birds (MN-a.iii.322, DhP-a.iii.137). He therefore would not bring monks into contempt by walking on the cloths when he knew Bodhi would have no child (Vin-a.1209). ³ pacchimā janatā. See BD.1.66, n.1 for further references. ⁴ MN.ii.93 reads Kokanade pāsāde. ⁵ Majjhima version goes on differently from here. ⁶ Quoted at MN-a.iii.323. Vin-a.1209 says that he laid down this rule in case a monk should tread on one not knowing whether the householder would have a child or not; and that he did it to safeguard the monks from the householders’ contempt should there not be a child after they had trodden on the cloth carpeting.

Now at that time monks were doubtful whether to tread on a sheet for use after feet had been washed.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you; monks, to tread on a sheet for use after feet have been washed.”

*The Second Portion for Repeating*³

Then the Lord having stayed among the Bhaggas for as long as he found suiting set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Walking on tour in due course he arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Then Visākhā, Migāra's mother, taking a small jar⁴ and a (clay foot-) scrubber⁵ and a broom, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she sat down at a respectful distance. As she was sitting down at a respectful distance, Visākhā, Migāra's mother, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord accept my little jar and (clay foot-) scrubber and broom so that it may be for a long time for my blessing and happiness.” The Lord accepted the little jar and the broom; the Lord did not accept the (clay foot-) scrubber. Then the Lord gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted Visākhā, Migāra's mother, with talk on dhamma. Then Visākhā, Migāra's mother gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, rising from her seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, a little jar and a broom. Monks, you should not make use of a (clay foot-) scrubber. Whoever should make use of one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, three (kinds of) foot-rubbers:¹ a stone,² a pebble,³ sea-scum.”⁴

¹ gihī maṅgalikā, as at Kd.15.33.3. See also Commentary on Kd.1.2.2. Quoted at MN-a.iii.323.

² dhotapādaka. Vin-a.1209 says “it is a sheet spread out for treading on after the feet have been washed at the place for washing feet.” Monks were allowed to tread on this, and evidently no symbolic meaning was attached. ³ As pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.130, n.1 “there is no mention in the text of where the first such Portion ends.” ⁴ ghaṭṭaka. ⁵ katāka. This is one of the two things made of clay not allowed at Kd.15.37. Vin-a.1209 says “it is made, having raised up protuberances, for rubbing the feet; it may be round or four-sided; it is forbidden as a thing connected with luxury, it must not be accepted nor made use of.”

Kd.15.22.2

Then Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, taking a fan⁵ and a palmyra-whisk,⁶ approached the Lord ... (as in Kd.15.22.1) ... The Lord accepted the fan and the palmyra-whisk ... Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, a fan and a palmyra-whisk.”

Kd.15.23.1

Now at that time a mosquito-fan⁷ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a mosquito-fan.” A chowry-fan⁸ accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a chowry-fan should not be used. Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fans: made of bark, made of khus-khus,⁹ made of peacocks’ tail feathers.”

Kd.15.23.2

Now at that time a sunshade¹⁰ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a sunshade.”

Bd.5.181

Now at that time the group of six monks toured about having put up their sunshades. Now at that time a certain lay-follower went to a pleasure grove¹¹ together with several disciples of Naked Ascetics. These disciples of Naked Ascetics saw the group of six monks coming in the distance with their sunshades up; seeing them, they spoke thus to that lay-follower: “These revered sirs of yours, master, are coming along with their sunshades up like a group of chief ministers.”

¹ pādaghamsanī. ² sakkharā. Here Vin-a.1209 says it is called a stone, pāsāṇa. Word also at Vin.3.147=Ja.ii.284; see BD.1.250, n.1. ³ kaṭhala. Cf. sakkharakaṭhala at DN.i.84, AN.i.9.

⁴ samuddapheṇaka. This may be the name of a bone; cf. pheṇaka among the “bones” at Vism.254, Vb-a.237. Vinaya Texts iii.131, n.2 says that the word designates “the bones of the cuttle-fish.” ⁵ vidhūpana. See BD.3.253, n.3. ⁶ tālavaṇṭa. Vin-a.1210 says this is made with palmyra palm leaves or it may be made with bamboo, ivory and bamboo chips, or with peacocks’ tail feathers or with hides. Cf. tālavaṇṭaka at Kd.15.29.4. ⁷ makasavijani.

Vin-a.1210 says it is a little stick made of horn, made of ivory. It is difficult to know the difference intended by the two words, vidhūpana and vijani, both here translated as “fan.” At Vin.4.263 the former is defined by the latter. ⁸ camaravijani. Camara is a yak. Its bushy tail is made into a fan or whisk to drive the flies away. ⁹ usīra; see BD.2.228, n.1. ¹⁰ Defined at Vin.4.200, Vin.4.338. ¹¹ Defined at Vin.4.298.

“These, masters, are not monks, they are wanderers.” They made a bet as to whether they were monks or not. Then that lay-follower, having recognised them as they came up, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs tour about with their sunshades up?” Monks heard that lay-follower who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?”

Vin.2.131

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a sunshade should not be used.¹ Whoever should use one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill²; there came to be no comfort for him without a sunshade. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a sunshade to one who is ill.” Now at that time monks, thinking: “A sunshade is allowed by the Lord to one who is ill, but not to one who is not ill,” were doubtful whether to use a sunshade in the monastery and monastery precincts. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a sunshade to be used in a monastery and monastery precincts both by one who is ill and by one who is not ill.”

Kd.15.23.3

Now at that time a certain monk, having tied up his bowl with string,³ having hung it on his walking staff,⁴ passed at the wrong time⁵ through a certain village gateway. People, saying: “This, masters, is a thief who is coming, his sword is gleaming,”⁶ having followed him and seized him, let him go on recognising him. Then this monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks.

Kd.15.24.1

BD.5.182

“But did you, your reverence, carry a walking staff with string on it?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this monk carry a walking staff with string on it?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?”

¹ Nuns are not allowed to use them, Vin.4.338. Cf. DN.i.7 where it is said that Gotama refrains from using them, but see Dialogues of the Buddha i.13, n.2 which maintains, “This is not quite accurate.” Vin-a.1210 says in all cases a sunshade made of one leaf is meant. ² Cf. Vin.4.337-Vin.4.338 (of a nun). ³ For similar phraseology cf. Kd.15.8.1. ⁴ daṇḍa is defined at Vin.4.200. ⁵ Cf. Vin.4.164 (BD.3.82f.). ⁶ Cf. MN.i.86.

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a walking staff with string on it should not be carried. Whoever should carry one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.24.2

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; he was not able to tour about without a walking staff. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to give an agreement as to a walking staff to a monk who is ill. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk, having approached the Order, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the feet of the senior monks, having sat down on his haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: ‘I, honoured sirs, am ill; I am not able to tour about without a walking staff, so I, honoured sirs, ask the Order for the agreement as to a walking staff.’ And a second time it should be asked for. And a third time it should be asked for.

Vin.2.132

The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk So-and-so is ill; he is not able to tour about without a walking staff; he asks the Order for the agreement as to a walking staff. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may give the agreement as to a walking staff to the monk So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This monk ... as to a walking staff. The Order is giving the monk So-and-so the agreement as to a walking staff. If the giving to the monk So-and-so of the agreement as to a walking staff is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The agreement as to a walking staff is given by the Order to the monk So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’”

BD.5.183

Kd.15.24.3

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; he was not able to carry his bowl about without string. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to give an ill monk the agreement as to string. And thus, monks, should it be given. That ill monk ... (as in Kd.15.24.2. Instead of to tour about without a walking staff, etc., read to carry his bowl about without string, etc.) ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; he was not able to tour about without a walking staff nor was he able to carry his bowl about without string. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to give an ill monk the agreement as to a walking staff and string. And thus, monks, should it be given: That ill monk ... (as in Kd.15.24.2. Read: I am not able to tour about without a walking staff nor am I able to carry my bowl about without string, etc.) ‘... Thus do I understand this.’”

Now at that time a certain monk was a ruminator;¹ he ate ruminating continually. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “This monk is partaking of a meal at the wrong time.”² Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, this monk has recently passed on from the womb of a cow. I allow, monks, rumination for a ruminator. But, monks, one should not eat (anything), having brought it back from the mouth³ to outside of it. Whoever should (so) eat should be dealt with according to the rule⁴.”

Now at that time a certain guild had food for an Order; many heaps of boiled rice were allowed to fall in a refectory. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, on being given boiled rice, not accept it carefully?⁵ Each one of these heaps of boiled rice is the result of a hundredfold labour.” Monks heard these people ... who spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, if anything falls that is being given to you,⁶ to make use of it having picked it up yourselves, for it is left behind (for you), monks, by benefactors.”

¹ romanthaka. ² See Bu-Pc.37. ³ mukhadvāra as at Bu-Pc.40 and Bu-Sk.41. ⁴ I.e. according to Bu-Pc.37 or Bu-Pc.38. ⁵ sakkaccaṃ, duly, properly, carefully, respectfully. ⁶ Buddhaghosa says that this is explained in the Bhojanavagga (Vin.4.69-Vin.4.90).

Kd.15.25.1

Kd.15.26.1
BD.5.184

Vin.2.133

Kd.15.27.1

Now at that time a certain monk walked for almsfood with long (finger-) nails.¹ A certain woman, having seen him, spoke thus to that monk: “Come, honoured sir, indulge in sexual intercourse.”

“No, sister, that is not allowable.”

“If you do not, honoured sir, I will now, having scratched my limbs with my own nails, make a row,² saying, ‘this monk has maltreated me.’”

“You, sister, understand that.” Then that woman, having scratched her limbs with her own nails, made a row, saying, “This monk has maltreated me.” People, having run up, took hold of that monk. But these people saw skin and blood on that woman’s nails; seeing this, they said: “This is the work of this woman herself, the monk is innocent,” and they let go of that monk. Then that monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. They said: “But do you, your reverence, wear long nails?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this monk wear long nails?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, long nails should not be worn.³ Whoever should wear them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.27.2
BD.5.185

Now at that time monks cut⁴ their nails with their nails and they cut their nails with their mouth and they rubbed them down on a wattle and daub wall; their fingers became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, cutting of the nails.” They cut their nails down to the blood; their fingers became painful. “I allow you, monks, to cut your nails down to the height⁵ of the flesh.”

Now at that time the group of six monks had their twenty (nails) polished. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have your twenty (nails) polished. Whoever should have this done, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to remove the dirt only.”

¹ Nails are defined at Vism.250f. ² kuppa, explained by Buddhaghosa as sadda, noise. ³ Vin-a.1210 points out that the cutting of the nails was allowed for reasons of self-protection. ⁴ chindati, to cut off, to cut down, to remove, to destroy. But as Vin-a.1210 says there was no offence in cutting the nails by means of the nails and so on. I do not think we need translate chindati by “tore off” as at Vinaya Texts iii.137. ⁵ pamāṇa, measure; often, as in “the pamāṇa of an average man,” meaning height.

Now at that time monks’ hair¹ came to be long. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “But, monks, are the monks able to cut one another’s hair?”

“They are able (to do so), Lord.” Then the Lord, on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, a razor, a whetstone, a razor-case,² a piece of felt,³ and all a barber’s equipment.”⁴

Now at that time the group of six monks had their beards trimmed,⁵ they made their beards grow (long⁶), they had them shaped like a goat’s beard,⁷ they had them shaped into four corners,⁸ they had the hair on their chests shaped,⁹ they had the hair on their stomachs shaped,¹⁰ they arranged whiskers, they had the hair on their bodies removed.¹¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have your ¹ kesa, defined at Vism.249f. ² khurasipāṭika, explained at Vin-a.1210 as khurakosaka, a little sheath for a razor. ³ namataka, as at Kd.15.11.1; Kd.15.19.1; Kd.20.10.4. ⁴ khurabhaṇḍa, as at Vin.1.249. See BD.4.345, n.5. Cf. tantabhaṇḍa at Kd.15.28.2. ⁵ massum kappāpenti. Vin-a.1211 says kattariyā massuṃ chedāpenti, caused their beards to be cut off with scissors (or with a knife). ⁶ Added at Vin-a.1211. ⁷ golomikaṃ kārāpenti. Vin-a.1211 says, “having made them long on the chin, they are called: arranged as a goat’s beard, eḷakamassuka.” ⁸ caturassakan ti catuḷkaṃ, Vin-a.1211. ⁹ parimukhaṃ kārāpenti, of which Vin-a.1211 says this was a growing, gathering, collecting (therefore a cutting), saṃharaṇa, into lines of the hair of the chest. ¹⁰ aḍḍharuka. Vin-a.1211 says “an arrangement into lines of the hair on the stomach.” ¹¹ sambādhe lomāṃ saṃharāpenti. See note but one above on saṃharaṇa. Corresponding rule for nuns at Nuns’ Bi-Pc.2 and where sambādha is defined. I think saṃharāpenti is more correctly to remove (thus cutting into a shape) than “grow” (a meaning given above), in view of the other “shapings,” and also because of the objections levelled at the nuns and also, above, at the monks.

Kd.15.27.3

Vin.2.134

Kd.15.27.4

BD.5.186

beards trimmed ... you should not have the hair of your bodies removed. Whoever should have it removed there is an offence of wrong-doing.”¹

Now at that time a certain monk came to have a sore on a certain part of his body;² the medicament would not adhere. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to remove the hair on the body in the case of illness.”

Kd.15.27.5

Now at that time the group of six monks had the hair of their heads cut off with scissors. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have the hair of your heads cut off with scissors. Whoever should (so) have it cut off, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to have a sore on his head; he was not able to shave the hair of his head with a razor. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cut off the hair of the head with scissors in the case of illness.”

Now at that time monks wore the hair in their nostrils long. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like demon-worshippers.”³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not wear the hair in your nostrils long. Whoever should (so) wear it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.187

Now at that time monks had the hair in their nostrils taken out with pieces of crystal⁴ and by means of beeswax; their nostrils became painful. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, tweezers.”⁵

¹ As Vin-a.1211 notes there is a dukkaṭa for the shaping of the beard and everything else.

² sambādhe which, as defined in Nuns' Bi-Pc.2 means the armpits and private parts. ³ pisā-cillika, as at Kd.3.12.3, Kd.15.10.2. ⁴ sakkharikā. Cf. Kd.6.14.5, loṇa-sak-. ⁵ saṇḍāsa as at MN.ii.75, Ja.i.138.

Now at that time the group of six monks had grey hairs¹ taken out. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have grey hairs taken out. Whoever should have them taken out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk’s ears were stopped with wax. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, an instrument for removing dirt from the ears.”²

Kd.15.27.6

Vin.2.135

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of instruments for removing dirt from the ears, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of instruments for removing dirt from the ears should not be used. Whoever should use (these), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, (to be) made of bone, made of ivory, made of horn, made of reeds, made of bamboo, made of a piece of stick, made of lac, made of crystal, made of copper, made of the centre of a conchshell.”³

Now at that time monks made a large store of copper goods, of bronze goods. People touring the dwelling-place, having seen this, looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans make a large store of copper goods, of bronze goods like dealers in bronze?”⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a store of copper goods, of bronze goods should not be made. Whoever should make one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.28.1

Now at that time monks were (too) scrupulous to use an ointment box⁵ and an ointment stick⁶ and an instrument for removing dirt from the ears⁷

Kd.15.28.2
BD.5.188

¹ palita. Cf. palitakesi at MN.i.88. MN-a.ii.60, paṇḍarakesa. ² Allowed again below, Kd.15.28.2. ³ As at Kd.6.12.1, Kd.6.12.3; Kd.15.11.1, etc. ⁴ kaṃsapattharikā. Vin-a.12.11 explains as kaṃsabhaṇḍavānijā, merchants in bronze goods. ⁵ añjanī, allowed at Kd.6.12.1, Kd.6.12.2, Kd.6.12.4. ⁶ Allowed at Kd.6.12.3. ⁷ Allowed at Kd.15.27.6.

and a handle.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, an ointment box ... a handle.”

Now at that time the group of six monks sat down lolling² on their outer cloaks,³ the cotton cloth⁴ of the outer cloaks gave way.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not sit down lolling on outer cloaks. Whoever should (so) sit down, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain monk came to be ill; there was no comfort for him without a bandage.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bandage.” Then it occurred to monks: “Now how should a bandage be made?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a loom, shuttles, strings, tickets and all the equipment for a loom.”

Kd.15.29.1

Now at that time a certain monk entered a village for alms-food without his waistband; on a carriage road his inner robe dropped down.⁷ People shouted out⁸ and that monk became ashamed. Then that monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not enter a village without your waistband. Whoever should (so) enter one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a waistband.”⁹

Vin.2.136

BD.5.189

Kd.15.29.2

Now at that time the group of six monks wore various kinds of waistbands: those of many strands,¹⁰ those like the head of a water-snake,¹¹ those like tambourine drums,¹ those like chains.² People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of waistbands should not be worn: those of many strands ... those like chains. Whoever should wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”³ I allow, monks, two (kinds of) waistbands: a strip of cotton cloth,⁴ one with a well made end.”⁵

¹ bandhanamatta. Meaning uncertain. Vin-a.1211 says a bandhanamatta for a vāsikat-tarayaṭṭhikādīnaṃ, a knife and mendicant’s staff. Or should kattara read kattarī, scissors? We should then get “a stick for knife and scissors.” Cf. bandhanamattaṃ at Kd.5.11.1, Kd.7.1.5, but in both passages it seems to have a different meaning from above. ² Cf. Bu-Sk.26 where “lolling” is defined as lolling on the hands, lolling on cloths. ³ As at Kd.14.4.7 (end). ⁴ Read paṭṭā instead of text’s pattā, as noted at Vinaya Texts iii.141, n.6. ⁵ As at Kd.8.21.1 where a remedy is “allowed”. See BD.4.424. Lujjanti, “gave way,” occurs also at Kd.15.16.2, Kd.15.17.2 and is there translated “fell in.” ⁶ āyoga, as at Vin.3.257, Vin.4.170. See BD.2.144, n.2. ⁷ pabhasittha, as at Vin.4.159. ⁸ As at Vin.4.345. ⁹ Taken for granted at Kd.1.25.9, Kd.1.25.10. ¹⁰ kalābuka. Vin-a.1211 explains by bahurajjuka. ¹¹ deḍḍubhakaṃ nāma udakasappisāsadisāṃ, so Vin-a.1211.

The borders of a waistband wore out. “I allow, monks, those like tambourine drums, those like chains.” The end of a waistband wore out. “I allow, monks, a sewing round,⁶ a knotting.”⁷ The end of a waistband where it was looped⁸ wore out. “I allow, monks, a buckle.”⁹

Now at that time the group of six monks wore various kinds of buckles, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of buckles should not be worn. Who ever should wear one, there is a offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of the inside of a conchshell, made of thread.”¹⁰

BD.5.190

Kd.15.29.3

¹ muraja. Vin-a.1211 says they are made, having twisted the shape into a tambourine drum (vaṭṭa, circle, round). ² maddaviṇa. Vin-a.1211 (reading -vāṇa) says pāmaṅgasanthānaṃ. Cf. Kd.15.2.1 where pāmaṅga occurs. See also BD.1.77, n.9. ³ Buddhaghosa says there must not be even one of these, much less many. ⁴ paṭṭikā. Vin-a.1211 explains that here it is a paṭṭikā that is woven ordinarily or that is woven in the fish and thorn design (? macchakaṇṭhakavāyimā), and it continues, “there are to be no divisions into kuṅṅjaracchikādi,” Kuṅṅja is a hollow. ⁵ sūkarantaka. Vinaya Texts iii.143 “do not venture to translate the term,” and its meaning is extremely doubtful. Vin-a.1211 has variant reading sūkaraṇḍaka, and also (at Vin.2.319) sukarantaka, which I adopt as the most intelligible, although possibly not the most correct reading. Vin-a.1211 explains by saying it is fashioned into a well made (sūkara) round case for a key. ⁶ sobhaṇa. Vin-a.1212 says “having twisted it, there is the sewing of a circular end,” mukhavatṭhisibbana. ⁷ guṇaka. Cf. saguṇaṃ katvā at Kd.1.25.9. Vin-a.1212 says “a sewing after the style of muddikā (i.e. a signet ring, a bunch of grapes; or muddika, an accountant may be meant—one who ties coins, etc., into knots in his waistband?). ⁸ pavananta. ⁹ vidha, as at Bu-Pc.86.2.2. See BD.3.89, n.1. ¹⁰ This last, thread, is in addition to the usual list as given above, e.g. at Kd.15.27.6.

Now at that time the venerable Ānanda having put on light-weight upper robes,¹ entered a village for almsfood; his upper robes were blown up by gusts of wind.² Then the venerable Ānanda, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a block,³ something to tie.”⁴

Now at that time the group of six monks used various kinds of blocks, made of gold, made of silver. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of blocks should not be used. Whoever should use them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, (to be) made of bone ... made of thread.”

Vin.2.137 Now at that time monks inserted blocks and things to tie into their robes; the robes wore out. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a shield⁵ for the blocks, a shield for the things to tie.” They inserted the shields for the blocks and the shields for the things to tie at the edge (of the robe); a corner was revealed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to insert a shield for the blocks at the edge; to insert a shield for the things to tie having taken it back seven finger breadths or eight finger breadths.”

Kd.15.29.4

BD.5.191

Now at that time the group of six monks dressed in householders' under garments: “the elephant's trunk,”⁶ “the fish's tail,”⁷ “the four corner arrangement,”⁸ “the palmyra whisk arrangement,”⁹ “the hundred jungle ropes.”¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not dress in householders’ under garments: ‘the elephant’s trunk’ ... ‘the hundred jungle ropes’. Whoever should (so) dress, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ saṃghāṭiyo as it is in the plural must refer to more than the outer cloak; and since the verb pārūpati is used the reference is probably to this and to the upper robe. ² Cf. Vin.4.345. ³ gaṇṭhikā. See BD.3.88, n.4. ⁴ pāsaka, perhaps a bow for the dress. Cf. Thig.411 and MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1893, p.45. ⁵ phalaka, perhaps a slip of wood or bark as in phalakacira, used in making an ascetic's dress, Vin.1.305, DN.i.167. ⁶ hatthisoṇḍaka. Vin-a.1212 says dressed, having made an appendage (hanging down) in the form of an elephant's trunk. ⁷ macchavālaka. Vin-a.1212 says dressed, having hung the edge of the border on one side, the edge of the tie on the other. ⁸ Vin-a.1212 explains there were two above and two below, hence showing four corners when clothed thus. ⁹ tālavaṇṭaka. Cf. Kd.15.22.2. Vin-a.1212 says that when clothed one suspends the outer cloak in the manner of a palmrya whisk.

Now at that time the group of six monks put on² householders’ upper garments.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not put on householders’ upper garments. Whoever should put one on, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks dressed in loincloths.⁴ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like a king’s shaven bearers with coils.”⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not dress in loincloths. Whoever should (so) dress, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.15.29.5

Now at that time the group of six monks carried a double carrying-pole.⁶ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like a king’s shaven bearers with coils.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not carry a double carrying-pole. Whoever should carry one, there is an offence

Kd.15.30.1

Bd.5.192

¹ satavallikā. Cf. vallikā at Kd.5.2.1 where although the word may mean ear ornaments, these may be formed like jungle ropes. See also Kd.5.16.2. Vin-a.1212 says dressed by making a bracelet (-like arrangement), ovaṭṭika, having folded over the long outer cloak a number of times; or, dressed showing continual jungle ropes at the left and right sides. If one or two jungle ropes appear from the knee it is all right. Cf. ovaṭṭika at Kd.15.2.1. ² On pārupati and nivāseti, put on and dress in, see Bd.2.32, n.2, n.3. ³ Buddhaghosa enumerates a number of upper garments which he classifies as householders’, including a Jain’s, a wanderer’s, a one-cloth ascetic’s, and a brahmin’s. ⁴ saṃvelliyaṃ. Cf. saṃvelliyaṃ kaṭisuttakaṃ at Kd.20.16.2. Vin-a.1212 says that they dressed having tied on long grass, kaccha, like wrestlers and workmen, and that it is explained in the Sekhiyas that a monk must be dressed having covered up the three circles all round. (See Bu-Sk.1, Bu-Sk.2). ⁵ muṇḍavaṭṭī. Vin-a.1213 (with variant reading -veṭhī) says “the meaning is people going anywhere for a king and carrying goods and equipment”. The coils vaṭṭī, would be the pads they wear on their heads to support the burden. ⁶ I.e. with the weight at each end. Cf. kāja at Kd.1.20.19.

of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a single carrying-pole, a carrying-pole for two bearers,¹ a weight (carried) on the head, a weight (carried) on the shoulders, a weight (carried) on the hips, one hung on.”

Kd.15.31.1

Now at that time monks did not chew² tooth-wood³; their mouths came to smell nasty. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these five disadvantages in not chewing tooth-wood⁴: it is bad for the eyes, the mouth becomes nasty smelling, the channels of taste are not purified, phelgm and mucus get on food, one’s food is not enjoyed. These, monks, are the five disadvantages of not chewing tooth-wood. Monks, there are there five advantages in chewing tooth-wood: it is good for the eyes, the mouth does not become nasty smelling, the channels of taste are purified, phelgm and mucus do not get on food, one’s food is enjoyed. These, monks, are the five advantages of chewing tooth-wood. I allow, monks, tooth-wood.”

Vin.2.138

Kd.15.31.2

Now at that time the group of six monks chewed long pieces of tooth-wood; they even flicked novices with these. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a long piece of tooth-wood should not be chewed. Whoever should chew one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a piece of tooth-wood to be eight finger breadths (in length) at the most. And a novice should not be flicked with it. Whoever should flick him, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time as a certain monk was chewing a piece of tooth-wood that was too short it became lodged in his throat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, too short a piece of tooth-wood should not be chewed. Whoever should chew one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a piece of tooth-wood to be four finger breadths (in length) at the least.”

Kd.15.32.1

BD.5.193

¹ antarākāja, which Vin-a.1213 explains as one having the weight in the middle and that may be transported by two (men). ² khādanti, eat. ³ dantakaṭṭha, used in cleaning the teeth. ⁴ As at AN.iii.250.

Now at that time the group of six monks set fire to a forest.¹ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like forest firers.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a forest should not be set on fire. Whoever should set one on fire, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time dwelling-places were tangled over with grass.² As the forest fires were burning (forests and so on) they burned the dwelling-places. Monks were doubtful whether to make a counter-fire³ to give protection. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if a forest fire is burning, to make a counter-fire to give protection.”

Now at that time the group of six monks climbed a tree and jumped from tree to tree. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like monkeys.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a tree should not be climbed. Whoever should climb one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time an elephant infested the way of a certain monk who was going to Sāvattḥī through the Kosalan districts. Then that monk rushed up to the foot of a certain tree (but) being scrupulous did not climb the tree; the elephant went off by another (track). Then that monk, having reached Sāvattḥī, told this matter to the monks. (The monks told this matter to the Lord).⁴ He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to climb a tree to the height of a man, and as high as you like in cases of distress.”⁵

Now at that time Yameḷu and Tekula⁶ were the names of two monks who were brothers, brahmins by birth, with lovely voices, with lovely enunciation. They approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the ¹ As at Vin.3.85. ² As at AN.i.153, AN.iii.128. ³ paṭaggim dātuṃ. Cf. Ja.i.212. Vin-a.1214 says having made the ground square, it is possible to convey grass there and dig it in carefully, and having broken off damp branches to cool down the fire. ⁴ Omitted in the text. ⁵ Such as seeing wild animals, forest fires, or approaching floods, or such as wanting to see the right direction if one is on the wrong road (so Vin-a.1214). ⁶ Yameḷutekulā. This compound should possibly be resolved into Yameḷa and Utekula, but is taken as reproduced above by Dictionary of Pali Proper Names (under Tekuḷa) and Vinaya Texts iii.149, q.v. note 3. These monks are mentioned nowhere but here, I think.

BD.5.194

Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord: “At present, Lord, monks of various names, various clans, various social strata have gone forth from various families; these corrupt the speech of the Awakened One in (using) his own dialect.¹ Now we, Lord, give the speech of the Awakened One in metrical form.”² The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How can you, foolish men, speak thus: ‘Now we, Lord, give the speech of the Awakened One in metrical form’? It is not, foolish men, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, the speech of the Awakened One should not be given in metrical form. Whoever should (so) give it, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow you, monks, to learn the speech of the Awakened One according to his own dialect.”

Kd.15.33.2

Now at that time the group of six monks learnt metaphysics.³ People ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Now, monks, can one who sees the essence (as being) in metaphysics attain to growth, increase, maturity in this dhamma and discipline?”

“This is not so, Lord.”

“Or could one who sees the essence (as being) in this dhamma and discipline learn metaphysics?”

“This is not so, Lord.”

¹ sakāya niruttīyā. Vin-a.1214 says the current Magadhese manner of speech according to the awakened one. Cf. nirutti at MN.iii.234. ² chandaso āropema. Vin-a.1214 explains, “we give (āropema) a way of speech according to the honoured dialect (or vernacular, sakkaṭa bhāsā) like a Veda”. Sakkata, variant reading sakkata, may be Sanskrit. See four reasons for supposing so at Vinaya Texts iii.150, n. Cf. Sāvitthī chandaso mukhaṃ at Snp.568, Vin.1.246, and chando nidānaṃ gāthānaṃ at SN.i.38. ³ lokāyata, name of a branch of brahmin learning, probably metaphysics. See Dialogues of the Buddha i.166–172; Vinaya Texts iii.151, n.2; BD.3.83, n.1. Word also occurs at AN.i.163, AN.i.166, AN.iii.223, Snp.p.105, MN.ii.147. Vin-a.1214 says “it means everything is rejected, everything is unrejected; it is the lore of other sects, connected with what is utterly groundless and which says by this or that method a crow is white, a crane is black.”

“Monks, metaphysics should not be learnt. Whoever should learn them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks taught metaphysics. People ...
“... offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.195

Now at that time the group of six monks learnt worldly knowledge.¹
 People ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks taught worldly knowledge.
 People ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the Lord, surrounded by a large assembly, sneezed while he was teaching dhamma. Monks, saying: “Lord, may the Lord live (long), may the wellfarer live (long),” made a loud noise, a great noise; the talk on dhamma was interrupted by this noise. Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Now, monks, when (the phrase) ‘Long life’ is spoken to one who has sneezed, can he for this reason live or die?”

Kd.15.33.3

Vin.2.140

“That is not so, Lord.”

“Monks, ‘Long life’ should not be said to one who has sneezed. Whoever should say it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time people said “May you live (long), honoured sirs” to monks who had sneezed. The monks, being scrupulous, did not respond. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans not respond when (the phrase) ‘May you live (long), honoured sirs’ is being spoken to them?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, householders like lucky signs.² I allow you, monks, when (the phrase) ‘May you live (long), honoured sirs’ is being spoken to you by householders to say, ‘Long life’ (to them).”

¹ tiracchānavijjā. Learnt and then taught by the group of six nuns at Vin.4.305-6; a pācittiya for them. The Old Commentary, on these Nuns’ Bi-Pc.49, Bi-Pc.50, defines both tiracchānavijjā and pariyāpuṇāti, “learn.” See BD.3.337-9 and notes there. ² As at Kd.15.21.4.

Kd.15.34.1

Now at that time the Lord, surrounded by a large assembly, was teaching dhamma sitting down. A certain monk had eaten garlic;¹ he sat down to one side, thinking: “In case the monks are incommoded.” The Lord saw that monk who was sitting down at one side; seeing him, he addressed the monks, saying: “Monks, why is this monk sitting to one side?”

BD.5.196

“Lord, this monk has eaten garlic, so he sat down at one side, thinking: ‘In case the monks are incommoded’.”

“But, monks, should that be eaten which, when eaten, can (make the eater) outside such a dhamma-talk as this?”

“That is not so, Lord.”

“Monks, garlic should not be eaten. Whoever should eat it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”²

Kd.15.34.2

Now at that time the venerable Sāriputta had wind in his stomach. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great approached the venerable Sāriputta; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta: “When you had wind in your stomach before, reverend Sāriputta, by what means did you get comfort?”

“I had garlic, your reverence.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to eat garlic in the case of illness.”³

Kd.15.35.1

Now at that time monks relieved themselves here, there and everywhere in a monastery; the monastery was soiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you monks, to relieve yourselves at one side.” The monastery became nasty smelling. “I allow you, monks, a vessel.” Sitting down, it was painful. “I allow, monks, urinal shoes.”⁴ The urinal shoes were public;⁵ monks were ashamed to relieve themselves. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence them in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.” The vessel being uncovered became nasty smelling. “I allow, monks, a lid.”

Vin.2.141

¹ lasuṇa, defined at Vin.4.259. ² A Pācittiya for nuns, Nuns’ Bi-Pc.1. ³ As a medicine, Vin-a.1214. ⁴ Allowed at Kd.15.8.3. ⁵ Cf. Kd.15.17.1.

Now at that time monks evacuated here, there and everywhere in a monastery ... (as in Kd.15.35.1) ... The monastery became nasty smelling. “I allow, monks, a cesspool.” The facing of the cesspool fell in.¹ “I allow you, monks, to pile up three (kinds of) pilings: a piling of bricks, a piling of stones, a piling of wood.” The cesspool was too low to the ground² ... “... I allow, monks, a balustrade.” Sitting inside, they fell off. “I allow you, monks, to evacuate having spread (something) and made a hole in the middle.” Sitting down, it was painful. “I allow you, monks, privy shoes.”

Kd.15.35.2

BD.5.197

Kd.15.35.3

They evacuated outside. “I allow, monks, a trough.” There was no wood for scraping. “I allow, monks, wood for scraping.” There was no receptacle³ for scraping. “I allow, monks, a receptacle (for the wood) for scraping.” The cesspool being uncovered became nasty smelling. “I allow, monks, a lid.” Evacuating in the open air, they were bothered by the cold and heat. “I allow, monks, a hut for the privy.” There was no door to the hut. “I allow, monks, a door ...⁴ ... swordfish teeth, the five (pieces of) cloth design, a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.”⁵ Now at that time a certain monk, weak through age, having evacuated, fell down as he was getting up. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a chair with supports.” The hut was not fenced in. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences with which to fence it in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.”

Vin.2.142

Kd.15.35.4

There was no porch. “I allow, monks, a porch.” There was no door to the porch. “I allow, monks, a door ...⁶ ... a cord to pull through.” Powdered grass fell on to the porch ...⁷ “... five (pieces of) cloth design.” A cell became swampy⁸ ... “I allow, monks, a drain for the water.” There was no vessel for the water for rinsing. “I allow, monks, a vessel for the water for rinsing.” There was no saucer for the water for rinsing. “I allow, monks, a saucer for the water for rinsing.” They rinsed sitting down; it was painful. “I allow, monks, shoes to be worn for rinsing.”⁹ The shoes for rinsing were public; monks were ashamed to rinse. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence them in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.” The vessel for the water for rinsing was uncovered; it was littered over with powdered grass and dust. “I allow, monks, a lid.”

¹ As at Kd.15.17.2. ² As at Kd.15.11.6. ³ pidhara. ⁴ As at Kd.15.14.3. ⁵ Last two items also at Kd.15.11.6. ⁶ As at Kd.15.14.3. ⁷ As at Kd.15.11.6. ⁸ As at Kd.15.14.5. ⁹ Allowed at Kd.15.8.3.

Kd.15.36.1
BD.5.198

Now at that time the group of six monks indulged in bad habits like this¹: they planted and caused to be planted small flowering trees ... and indulged in various bad habits. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, various kinds of bad habits should not be indulged in. Whoever should indulge in them, should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

Kd.15.37.1

Now at the time when Kassapa of Uruvelā went forth many copper goods, wooden goods, clay goods accrued to the Order. Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, what copper goods are allowed by the Lord, what are not allowed? What wooden goods are allowed, what are not allowed? What clay goods are allowed, what are not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow, monks, all copper goods except a weapon; all wooden goods except a sofa,³ a divan,⁴ a wooden bowl,⁵ wooden shoes,⁶ all clay goods except a (clay-foot-) scrubber⁷ and a large earthen vessel.”⁸

Vin.2.143

Told is the Fifth Section: that on Minor Matters

THIS IS ITS KEY

Against a tree, and against a post, and against a wall, on a rubbing-board (using a gandha (-bba hand instrument), a string, having plunged into, a scrubber, scab, and age, ordinary mode with the hand.
And also ear-ornaments, chains,

BD.5.199

¹ As at Kd.10.13.2 and Bu-Ss.13. The passage has been translated at BD.1.314–BD.1.318. ² Vin-a.1214 says they should be dealt with by a pācittiya for a pācittiya matter and by a dukkāṭa for a dukkāṭa matter. ³ āsandī. See BD.3.326, n.1, and BD.4.256, n.5. ⁴ pallaṅka. See BD.3.271, n.3. ⁵ See definition of bowl at BD.2.115, BD.2.415, BD.3.213. At Kd.15.8.2 it is made a dukkāṭa to use a wooden bowl. ⁶ Cf. Kd.15.6.4 (kaṭṭhapāduka), above dārupāduka. ⁷ kataka. See Kd.15.22.1. ⁸ kumbhakārikā. Vin-a.1215 says “this is a hut made entirely of clay like Dhaniya’s”. Dhaniya’s story is told at the beginning of Bu-Pj.2.

ornamental strings of beads for the throat¹ should not be worn, ornamental girdles, bangles, armlets, bracelets, finger rings, Long, with a comb, with a snake's hood instrument, with the hands, with beeswax, with oily water, sores in a mirror and bowl of water, ointment, with paste and chunan, They smeared,² and painting the limbs, painting the faces, both these, disease of the eyes, and the mountain top, long-drawn, intoning,³ outside,⁴ Mango peels, with whole (mangoes), a snake, and he cut off, sandal wood, various kinds, bases of bowls, gold, thick, jags, Carved, was spoiled,⁵ nasty smelling, in the heat, were broken, by a solid bench, plaster flooring, grass (mat), piece of cloth, a stand, and on a wicker stand,
 A bag, and a strap at the edge, thread made for tying, a peg, and on a couch, and on a chair, on a lap, in a sunshade, opened,
 A gourd, a water-pot, a skull, odd bits, waste-tub, split open,⁶ handle, gold, feathers and rind, a tube,
 And yeast, barley-meal, powdered stone, beeswax, gum, misshapen at the corners, tying, uneven place, on the ground, old⁷ and was (not) enough,⁸
 A mark, and a false thread, unwashed, damp, sandals, fingers, and a thimble, a small bowl, a bag, tyings,
 In the open air, low to the ground, and also a piling, they were inconvenienced,
 they fell off, powdered grass, a smearing inside and out, Whitewash and treatment with black colouring and red chalk, wreathwork, creeperwork, swordfish teeth, strips (of cloth)⁹
 And a bamboo and cord for robes—the Leader allowed (these).
 And they went away having left, a kaṭhina frame was split,

BD.5.200

¹ Reading above is kaṇṇasuttaṃ, an ornamental string hanging from the ear Oldenberg at Vin.2.320 queries whether it should not be kaṇṭhasuttaṃ (see Kd.15.2.1) which is the reading in the Sinhalese and Siamese editions. ² Text here lañcanti; at Kd.15.2.5, as also in Sinhalese edition lañchenti. Siamese edition lañcenti. ³ These two words, run together as sara-bāhiraṃ, stand for sarabhañña and bāhiralomi (Kd.15.3.2 and Kd.15.4.2). ⁴ These two words, run together as sara-bāhiraṃ, stand for sarabhañña and bāhiralomi (Kd.15.3.2 and Kd.15.4.2). ⁵ Reading should be dussati as at Kd.15.9.3 and Sinhalese and Siamese editions, not as with Oldenberg dussanti. ⁶ vippāri. Sinhalese edition vipphāli and Siamese edition viphāli. At Kd.15.11.1 it is vipāṭetvā. ⁷ vippāri. Sinhalese edition vipphāli and Siamese edition viphāli. At Kd.15.11.1 it is vipāṭetvā. ⁸ Text reads jira-patoti ca; Sinhalese edition jiṇṇaṃ pahoti ca; Siamese edition jirappahoti ca. ⁹ Text reads paṭikā; Siamese edition pātikam; Sinhalese edition paṭṭikā; Kd.15.11.6 and similar passages pañcapaṭṭhikam. Pali-English Dictionary takes paṭṭikā = paṭṭaka “made of or forming a strip of cloth; a bandage, a strip (of cloth).” Thus pañcapaṭṭhika may be a design: the five strips (of cloth) design.

Was twisted out of position,¹ and on to a wall, they went along taking in a bowl, a bag, and a thread for tying, having tied, sandals,²

On a road water that was not allowable, strainer, little piece of cloth, regulation water-pot, two monks, the Sage reached Vesālī, Double (water-strainer), filter, he allowed a strainer.

Vin.2.144

By mosquitoes, very ill through sumptuous (foods) and Jīvaka, Place for pacing up and down in, bathroom, in an uneven place, low to the ground, three pilings, they were inconvenienced, stairs, balustrade, railing,

In the open air, powdered grass, a smearing inside and out whitewash and treatment with black colouring and red chalk

Wreathwork creeperwork swordfish teeth strips (of cloth)³ bamboo and cord for robes, and it may be built high to the ground,

A piling, staircase and balustrade,⁴ a door, doorpost and lintel, a hollow like a mortar, a small upper projection, and a post, a “monkey’s head,”

A pin, a (stick used as a) bolt, a keyhole, and pulling through, a cord, a facing, and a pipe for steam, and in the middle, clay for the face,

And nasty smelling,⁵ it scorched, a receptacle for water,⁶ a saucer, and it did not make them sweat, swampy, to wash, one may make a drain,

BD.5.201

And a chair,⁷ about a porch, work,⁸ gravel, stones, a drain, naked, on the ground, when it rained, three coverings there,

A well, and it fell in,⁹ by means of a creeper,¹⁰ by means of a waistband, a well-sweep, hand-wheel, a wheel, many vessels were broken,

Copper, wooden, strips of animals’ hides, a hall, grass, a lid, a trough, a pool, a fence, swampy, and about a drain,

Cooled down, a tank, and stale, with a curving roof, for four months, and lay down to sleep, and a piece of felt, and it should not be allotted,

¹ viniveṭhiya; Siamese edition viniveṭhiyati. ² Sinhalese edition here inserts upāhanatthavikañ ca aṃsabandhanasuttakaṃ, bag for sandals and thread or tying at the edge; and Siamese edition upāhanatthavikañ ca aṃsavaddhañ ca suttakaṃ, bag for sandals and a strap at the edge and thread. ³ Text here reads makarantakapaṭṭikaṃ, but Sinhalese edition makaradantakapaṭṭikaṃ and Siamese makaradantapātikaṃ. ⁴ bāha here stands for ālambanabāha. ⁵ In Siamese edition this word is preceded by doṇi, a tub or a trough, and in Sinhalese edition by mattikādoṇi, a tub for clay, as at Kd.15.14.3. ⁶ Text reads udakātara, Siamese edition udakhānaṃ, and Sinhalese edition udakādhanaṃ, with which cf. Buddhaghosa’s udakanidhāna on Kd.15.14.3, BD.5.166 above (udakaṭṭhāna), and also cf. udakādhāna at MN.i.414. ⁷ Reading pīṭhaṃ with Sinhalese edition instead of text’s pīṭhe. ⁸ This must refer to the wreath work and creeperwork mentioned in Kd.15.14.4. ⁹ Reading lujjati with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of text’s lujja-tīṇi. ¹⁰ valliyā; at Kd.15.16.2 vallikāya.

Chased (cushions), a stand,¹ eating they would share one,² Vaḍḍha, and Bodhi, tread on it, little jar, (clay foot-) scrubber, broom, Stone pebble and scum as a foot-rubber, fan, palmyra-whisk, and also a mosquito fan, a chowry, Sunshade, and³ without, in a monastery—the three⁴—with string, agreement, ruminator, lumps of boiled rice, long nails, they cut, painful fingers, Down to the blood, and to the height, the twenty, long-haired, razor, whetstone, razor-case, piece of felt, a barber's equipment,
 They trimmed beards, they let them grow, goat's beard, four cornered arrangement, on their chests and on their stomachs, whiskers, removed the hair on their bodies, Illness, scissors, a sore, long, and with a piece of crystal, grey hair, stopped, and various kinds of copper goods, a store,⁵
 And lolling, a bandage, strings,⁶ tickets, (waist-)band, those of many strands, like the head of a water-snake, like tambourine drums, those like chains,⁷ Palmyra whisk, hundred jungle-ropes,⁸ having put on householders' upper garments, loin cloths, double carrying-pole, toothwood, on flicking,
 Lodged in the throat, and a forest, counterfire, a tree, and by an elephant, Yamelu (and Tekula),⁹ they learnt metaphysics, they taught it,

BD.5.202

Vin.2.145

¹ Kd.15.19.1 and Siamese edition maḷorikaṃ; above maḷorakaṃ; Sinhalese edition malojikaṃ.

² Text reads bhuñjanto ka tuvaṭṭayyūṃ; Sinhalese edition bhuñjant' eka tuvaṭṭikaṃ; Siamese edition bhuñjant' ekaṃ tuvaṭṭayyūṃ. ³ Read ca with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of text's va. ⁴ This refers to three (of the four) rulings laid down at Kd.15.23.2, Kd.15.23.3 for the use of sunshades: (1) allowed, (2) not allowed, (3) allowed (only) to an invalid, (4) allowed to be used by a monk whether ill or well in a monastery and monastery precincts.

⁵ nicayā. Sinhalese edition nicayā, text nisaha. Siamese edition lohahhaṇḍaṅkhanisaha. Sinhalese edition inserts between this word and “lolling” bandhanamattaṃ kukkucā, (too) scrupulous (to use) a handle, see note at Kd.15.28.2 above. ⁶ Text paṭaṃ; Sinhalese edition and Kd.15.28.2 vaṭaṃ. ⁷ Sinhalese and Siamese editions here have the following: paṭṭikaṃ (Siamese paṭṭikā) sūkarantañ ca / dasā muraja-veṇikā (Siamese murajja-) pavananto pi jirati / gaṇṭhikaṃ uccāvacañ ca phalakante pi ogahe gihivattthaṃ hatthiṣoṇḍaṃ macchakaṃ catukaṇṇakaṃ / (Siamese gihivattthaṃ soṇḍaṃ macchavāḷakaṃ catukkaṇṇakaṃ)—a strip of cotton cloth and one with a well made end/borders, like tambourine drums, a twisting (veṇikā, probably for sobhaṇa at Kd.15.29.2), an end, and knotting the rest, also where it was looped, / it wore out, a block, and various kinds, also shields and edges, taking back, / householders' undergarments: the elephant's trunk, the fish arrangement, the four cornered arrangement. This covers Kd.15.29.2–Kd.15.29.4 (beginning), and clearly should be inserted. ⁸ Reading with Sinhalese edition satavallin, instead of satavali above. ⁹ Text reads Yameḷa, which I take to be a plural of “Yameḷa and Tekula”. But Sinhalese edition reads Yameḷa. Siamese Sakaṭe, with variant reading Yameḷe. See note above to Kd.15.33.1.

Worldly knowledge,¹ he sneezed, good luck, and he ate, affliction of wind, and it was soiled, nasty smelling, painful, shoes,
 They were ashamed, nasty smelling (un-) covered,² and they did it here and there, nasty smelling, cesspool, it fell in,³ high to the ground, and about a piling, Staircase, balustrade, inside, painful and shoes, outside, a tub and wood, and a stick,⁴ uncovered,
 A hut for the privy, both a door as well as a doorpost and lintel, a hollow like a mortar, an upper projection, a post, and a “monkey’s head,”
 A pin, a bolt, a keyhole, and a hole for pulling (cord) through as well as a cord, a smearing inside and out, whitewash and black colouring Wreathwork creeperwork swordfish five strips of cloth (design) a bamboo and a cord for robes, weak through age, a fence,
 And about a porch, as before, and gravel, flagstones,
 (water) remained, a drain, and also a vessel, a saucer,
 Painful, shame, a lid, and they indulged in bad habits.
 He allowed copper goods a weapon being excepted.
 A sofa and divan, a wooden bowl and shoes being excepted—
 the Great Sage allowed all (other) goods made of wood.
 And the Truth-finder, a (clay foot-) scrubber and an earthen vessel having been excepted, compassionate, allowed also all (other) goods made of clay.
 The character of whatever matter, if equal to the preceding, even if it is brief, is known from the context in the key.
 Thus the hundred and ten matters in the Minor Matters in the discipline are based on what is dhamma indeed—also there is help for the well behaved.
 The expert in discipline is well trained, friendly in mind, very well behaved, bringing light, steadfast, worthy of honour, one who has heard much.

BD.5.203

Vin.2.146

¹ Text and Siamese edition tiracchānakathā. I follow Sinhalese tiracchānagatā vijjā since there is no mention of “talk” in Kd.15.33.2. ² pāru. ³ Should read lujjati as in Sinhalese and Siamese editions, not lujjanti as in text. ⁴ Kd.15.35.3 pidharo; above pidhāro; Sinhalese edition Pīdharo; Siamese edition pīṭharo.

16. LODGINGS (SAYANĀSANA)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

ALLOWANCE FOR DWELLINGS

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time lodgings had not been permitted to monks by the Lord. So these monks stayed here and there: in a forest, at the root of a tree, on a hillside, in a glen, in a mountain cave, in a cemetery, in a forest glade, in the open air, on a heap of straw.¹ Early in the mornings these went out from this and that place: from the forest ... from the heap of straw, pleasing when approaching and when receding, when looking before, when looking back, when bending back (their arms), when stretching them out, their eyes cast down and possessed of pleasant behaviour.²

Kd.16.1.1
BD.5.204

Now at that time a (great) merchant of Rājagaha went early one morning to a pleasure grove.³ The (great) merchant of Rājagaha saw these monks going out from this and that place: from a forest ... from a heap of straw, and seeing them he made up his mind.⁴ Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha approached those monks; having approached, he spoke thus to those monks: "If I, revered sirs, were to have dwelling-places built, would you stay in my dwelling-places?"

Kd.16.1.2

¹ Cf. same list at DN.i.71, MN.iii.3, AN.ii.210, and a shorter one at AN.i.241 The terms are defined at DN-a.209–DN-a.210, Vb-a.366–Vb-a.367. ² More or less stock; cf. Vin.3.181, DN.i.70, MN.iii.35, MN.iii.90, AN.ii.104, AN.ii.106, AN.ii.210. ³ Defined at Vin.4.298. ⁴ assa cittaṃ paḍīdi, his mind became clear or bright.

“Householder, dwelling-places have not been allowed by the Lord.”

“Well then, revered sirs, having inquired of the Lord, tell me (what he says).”

BD.5.205 “Very well, householder,” and these monks, having answered the (great) merchant of Rājagaha in assent, approached the Lord; having approached the Lord, having greeted him, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the (great) merchant of Rājagaha is anxious to have dwelling-places built. What line of conduct should be followed by us, Lord?” Then the Lord on this occasion having given reasoned talk addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.16.1.3 “I allow, monks, five (kinds of) abodes:¹ a dwelling-place, a curved house, a long house,² a mansion,³ a cave.”⁴

Vin.2.147 Then these monks approached the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, they spoke thus to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha: “Householder, dwelling-places have been allowed by the Lord. Do now what seems right.” Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha had sixty dwelling-places established on one day alone. When the (great) merchant of Rājagaha had had these sixty dwelling-places finished he approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the (great) merchant of Rājagaha spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat departed keeping his right side towards him.

Kd.16.1.4 Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the

¹ Cf. Kd.1.80.4, and also BD.2.16, n.6 (on BD.5.17). ² See BD.2.16, n.5. Pāsāda is again called dīghapāsāda at Vin-a.1215, on above passage. ³ hammiya. See BD.2.16, n.6. Vin-a.1215 says “a hammiya is like a pāsāda with a chamber placed on the topmost open-air floor.”

⁴ Vin-a.1215 says a cave, guhā, in bricks, in stones, in wood, in laterite, paṃsu. On paṃsu as meaning “laterite” in this connection see A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, no. 3, p.266.

Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, sat down at a respectful distance when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the (great) merchant of Rājagaha spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, I had these sixty dwelling-places built because I need merit, because I need heaven. What line of conduct am I, Lord, to follow in regard to these dwelling-places?”

BD.5.206

“Well now, do you, householder, establish these sixty dwelling-places for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters,¹ present and to come.”

“Very well, Lord,” and the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having answered the Lord in assent, had those sixty dwelling-places established for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters, present and to come.

Kd.16.1.5

Then the Lord thanked the (great) merchant of Rājagaha in these verses:²

“They ward off cold and heat and beasts of prey from there
And creeping things and gnats and rains in the wet season.
When the dreaded hot wind arises, that is warded off.
To meditate and obtain insight in a refuge and at ease:—

“A dwelling-place is praised by the Awakened One as chief gift to an Order.

Therefore a wise man, looking to his own weal,
Should have charming dwelling-places built so that those who have heard much can stay therein.³

Vin.2.148

“To these⁴ food and drink, raiment and lodgings
He should give, to the upright, with mind purified.
(Then) these⁵ teach him dhamma dispelling every ill;
He, knowing that dhamma, here attains nibbāna, canker-less.”⁶

¹ See S. DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.83ff., p.131, p.143. ² As at Kd.16.9.2 below, and Ja.i.93, DN-a.i.304. ³ Cf. Mi.211. ⁴ For this line and next, cf. SN.i.100. ⁵ This line and next at AN.iii.41, AN.iii.43. ⁶ Cf. this line with Snp.765.

Then the Lord, having given thanks to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha in these verses, rising from his seat, departed.

Kd.16.2.1

BD.5.207

People heard: “It is said that dwelling-places are allowed by the Lord,” and they zealously had dwelling-places built. These dwelling-places did not have doors, and snakes, scorpions and centipedes got in. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a door.” Having made a hole in the wall, they tied on the door with jungle creeper and with cord, but these were eaten by rats and white ants and when the tyings were eaten the doors fell down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a doorpost and lintel, a hollow like a mortar (for the door to revolve in) a small upper projection.”¹ The doors did not meet. “I allow, monks, a hole for pulling through (the cord), cord for pulling through.”² The doors could not be closed. “I allow, monks, a post for the bolt, a ‘monkey’s head,’ a pin (to secure the bolt), a stick (used as a bolt).”³

Now at that time monks were not able to open a door. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a keyhole and three (kinds of) keys: a copper key, a wooden key, a horn key.” But the dwelling-places were unguarded⁴ when those who, having unfastened⁵ (the doors), entered. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bolt and a pin (to secure the bolt).”⁶

Kd.16.2.2

Now at that time dwelling-places were roofed with grass; they were cold in the cold weather, hot in the hot weather. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having lashed on (a roofing), to give it a smearing inside and out.”⁷ Now at that time dwelling-places had no windows.⁸ They were bad for the eyes and nasty smelling. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) windows: a railing window,¹ a lattice window,² a stick window.”³ Squirrels and bats got through the spaces in the windows. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, drapery⁴ across the windows.” Squirrels and bats got in even through the drapery. “I allow, monks, shutters⁵ across the windows, little bolsters⁶ across the windows.”

¹ On these items see Kd.15.14.3. ² On these items see Kd.15.14.3. ³ On these items see Kd.15.14.3. ⁴ agutta, as were the lodgings at Kd.18.3.1. ⁵ ugghāṭetvā, as at Kd.18.1.1 of the ghaṭikā, stick used as a bolt. ⁶ yantakaṃ sūcikaṃ. Vin-a.1216 says “Whatever one sees that is a yantaka, and one can make a pin to open it”. Cf. yantakaṃ deti, to secure the bolt, to lock up, at Dh-p-a.i.220. ⁷ As at Kd.15.11.6: Kd.15.14.3, etc. ⁸ Probably window holes, because the above word, vātapāna, is used at Vin.4.47 to explain ālokaśandhi, the holes for light and air. Vātapāna mentioned at Kd.1.25.18.

BD.5.208

Now at that time monks lay down to sleep on the ground and their limbs and robes were soiled with dust. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a grass matting.” The grass matting was eaten by rats and white ants. “I allow, monks, a solid bench.”⁷ Because of the solid bench their limbs became painful. “I allow, monks, a little couch of split bamboo.”⁸

Kd.16.2.3

Vin.2.149

ALLOWANCE FOR COUCHES AND CHAIRS

Now at that time a bierlike long couch⁹ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a long couch.” A long chair accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a long chair.” Now at that time a bierlike couch with slats¹⁰ accrued to an Order ... a chair with slats ... a bierlike couch with curved legs¹¹ ... a chair with curved legs ... a bierlike couch with removeable legs¹² ... a chair with removeable legs accrued. “I allow, monks, a chair with removeable legs.”

Kd.16.2.4

¹ vedikāvātapāna. Vin-a.1216 says like the railing of a shrine. So, a grille in a railing pattern. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society Vol. 48, no. 3, p.273 for short discussion of these three types of windows. ² jālavātapāna. Vin-a.1216 says something tied net wise, so a lattice. ³ salākavātapāna. Vin-a.1216 says a little post or pillar window. These words will be more readily understood if it is remembered that vātapāna is an aperture and not what closes it. ⁴ cakkalikā. Vin-a.1216 says “I allow you to tie on cloth used for wiping the feet” ⁵ kavāṭaka. ⁶ bhisikā. Cf. BD.2.47, n.1 on bhisi. ⁷ miḍhi. See Kd.15.9.4. Vin-a.1216 here explains by piṭhaphalaka. ⁸ bidalamañcaka. Cf. Ja.i.9, Dh-p-a.i.135 where mentioned as a feature in the life of one who has gone forth. Vin-a.1216 says a twig couch or one woven with bamboo chips. ⁹ masāraka defined in Bu-Pc.14. For notes on these four kinds of couches and chairs see BD.2.240. ¹⁰ bundikābaddha, defined in Bu-Pc.14, as are also the next two terms. ¹¹ kulīrapādaka. ¹² āhaccapādaka.

Now at that time a rectangular chair¹ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a rectangular chair.” A tall rectangular chair² accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, even³ a tall rectangular chair.”⁴ A three-sided (couch)⁵ accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a three-sided (couch).” A tall three-sided (couch) accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, even a tall three-sided (couch).” A plaited chair⁶ accrued ... a cloth chair⁷ ... a sheep-footed⁸ chair ... a “stalks of the emblic myrobalan” chair⁹ ... a wooden (chair)¹⁰ ... a stool¹¹ ... a straw chair accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a straw chair.”

BD.5.209

Kd.16.2.5

Now at that time the group of six monks lay down to sleep on high couches. People touring the lodgings, having seen them ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not lie down to sleep on high couches. Whoever should (so) lie down to sleep, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.2.150

¹ āsandika. Vin-a.1216, reading āsandhika, says it is called a four-cornered (or square, cat-urassa) chair. Cf. Kh-a.44. ² uccako āsandiko. ³ pi, also meaning “too, also,” but in view of the efforts made to prevent monks from using chairs, couches and beds that were too high, “even” seems a permissible translation. ⁴ Vin-a.1216 says a long chair is on a support eight finger-breadths (high), but if it exceeds that measure it should be called a rectangular chair. ⁵ sattaṅga, literally seven limbs, parts, members or constituents. Vin-a.1216 says that “it is a couch that is finished, a support having been made towards three (of the) quarters.” It therefore occupied three sides of a square, and had four ends (two outer and two inner), making a total of seven parts. ⁶ baddhapīṭha. Vin-a.1216 says a chair made entirely of twigs. ⁷ pīṭhikā. Vin-a.1216 says just a chair plaited in cloth. ⁸ eḷakapādaka. Vin-a.1216 says “having placed the upper parts of the legs in white woollen cloth round the wood, it is a finished chair like a slab for food, bhojanaphalaka”. Cf. kulīrapādaka, literally “crab-footer,” for which see BD.2.240, n.4. ⁹ āmālakavaṇṭhika pīṭha. Vin-a.1217 says this is a chair of many legs plaited in the manner (or on the pattern) of emblic myrobalan. ¹⁰ phalaka. See phalakapīṭha at Vin.4.40 and BD.2.242, n.5. Cf. apassenaphalaka at Kd.1.25.15, Kd.16.20.2. ¹¹ koccha. See BD.2.239, n.1, and Old Commentary’s definition at BD.2.240. On above passage Vin-a.1217, omitting “made of bark,” says made of khus-khus, made of muñja-grass (which at Vin-a.1217 reads puñjamaya), made of reeds.

Now at that time a certain monk, lying down to sleep on a low couch, was bitten by a snake. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, supports for the couches.”¹

Now at that time the group of six monks used tall supports for the couches; they rocked to and fro together with the tall supports for the couches. “Monks, tall supports for couches should not be used. Whoever should use them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a support for a couch to be eight finger-breadths at the most.”²

BD.5.210

Now at that time thread accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to weave a couch.” The ends used up much thread. “I allow you, monks, having pierced the ends,³ to weave small squares.”⁴ A piece of cotton cloth accrued. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a carpet.”⁵ A cotton quilt⁶ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having unravelled it, to make a squatting mat⁷ of three (kinds of) cotton:⁸ cotton from trees, cotton from creepers, cotton from grass.”

Kd.16.2.6

Now at that time the group of six monks used squatting mats half (the size of a man’s) body. People, touring the dwelling-places, having seen them ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, squatting mats half (the size of a man’s) body should not be used. Who-ever should use

¹ mañcapaṭṭipādaka, as at Kd.1.25.16, Kd.18.1.3. See BD.4.64, n.4. ² Cf. Bu-Pc.87. ³ aṅge vijjhitvā. On this expression see BD.2.240, n.5. “Legs” is I think a better translation than “sides” (Vinaya Texts iii.166). ⁴ aṭṭhapadaka as at Kd.8.21.1. Perhaps meaning “in the chequered board fashion,” aṭṭhapada, on which see BD.1.316, n.2. ⁵ cilimikā. See BD.2.241, n.8. Vin-a.1217 on above says “when the earth is treated with plaster, a cilimikā is called a covering, attharaṇa, for protecting the surface, chavi.” ⁶ tūlikā, as at Kd.5.10.4. ⁷ bimbohana. Similar allowance made at Kd.6.14. ⁸ tūla. See similar definition at Vin.4.170 (BD.3.93, q.v. n.2). Vin-a.1217 says cotton from any vegetable growth can be used for squatting mats, but apart from trees, creepers and grasses there is no other vegetable growth.

one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to make a squatting mat the size of a head.”¹

Kd.16.2.7

BD.5.211

Now at that time there came to be a festival on a mountain top near Rājagaha.² People arranged mattresses³ for the great ministers: mattresses of wool, mattresses of cotton cloth, mattresses of bark, mattresses of tiṇa-grass, mattresses of leaves.⁴ When the festival was over they conveyed them away having taken off the covers. Monks saw much wool and cotton cloth and bark and tiṇa-grass and leaves thrown away at the festival place; and seeing it they told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, five (kinds of) mattresses: a mattress of wool ... of cotton cloth ... of bark ... of tiṇa-grass, a mattress of leaves.”

Vin.2.151

Now at that time woven cloth⁵ as a requisite for lodgings accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to cover a mattress (with it).” Now at that time monks packed away a couch-mattress on a chair, they packed away a chair-mattress on a couch; the mattresses fell to bits.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, a covered couch, a covered chair.”⁷ They packed them away without having put a cobweb cloth (beneath⁸ and the stuffing) came out from below. “I allow you, monks, having put a cobweb cloth (beneath the mattress), having spread it, to cover a mattress.” Having removed the covers, they carried them away. “I allow you, monks, to sprinkle⁹ them.” They still carried them away. “I allow, monks, line decoration.”¹ They still carried them away. “I allow you, monks, the outline of the hand.”²

¹ Cf. Vb-a.365 which elaborates saying that in width it can be four standard finger breadths, in length the measure of the width of the couch. ² See BD.2.335, n.1. Phrase also occurs at Kd.15.2.6. ³ bhīsi. See BD.2.47, n.1. ⁴ Same five kinds given at Vin.4.40. See BD.2.240, n.7. ⁵ dussa. ⁶ As at Kd.15.11.2. ⁷ onaddhamañca onaddhapīṭha. This must mean covered with mattresses to fit them. Cf. Vin.1.194, Vin.2.270. ⁸ ullokam akaritvā, which Vin-a.1218 explains by hetthā cimilikam adatvā. On cimilikā see above, BD.5.210, n.4. Ullokā occurs at Vin.1.48 = Vin.2.209. ⁹ positum, which should read phositum as does Vin.1.205 and Vin-a.1218. This latter says “to give sprinklings (or touches, phusitāni) on top with dyes or with turmeric.”

ALLOWANCE FOR WHITEWASH, ETC.

Now at that time the sleeping places³ of members of other sects were white-washed, the ground was coloured black, the walls were treated with red chalk.⁴ Many people went to see the sleeping places. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, whitewash, black colouring, red chalk (to be used) in a dwelling-place.” Now at that time the whitewash did not adhere to the rough walls. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied lumps of grain-husks, having kept some back with a spoon,⁵ to put on the whitewash.” The whitewash would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied soft clay, having kept some back with a spoon, to put on the whitewash.” The whitewash would not stick on. “I allow, monks, what exudes from trees⁶ and flour-paste.”

Kd.16.3.1
BD.5.212

Now at that time the red chalk did not adhere to the rough walls ... (as above) ... The red chalk would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied the red powder of rice husks (mixed with) clay, having kept some back with a spoon, to put on the red chalk.” The red chalk would not stick on. They told this matter to the ¹ bhattikamma. Vin-a.1219 reads bhittikamma, wall-work, and says it is a bhattikamma on top of the mattress cover. Whatever the exact meaning of the term, it is no doubt a different process from the “sprinkling” which, as perhaps a forerunner to the tie-and-dye industry, would probably result in spots. Cf. bhatikamma at Kd.15.9.2. ² hatthabhitti. Bhitti is of course a wall. Vin-a.1219 says pañcaṅgulabhitti, the wall of the five fingers. All these marks were probably applied so as to disfigure the mattresses and thus dissuade monks from carrying them off; cf. Bu-Pc.58. Or they may have been identification marks. But all the readings, and therefore the meanings, are uncertain. Reading in the “key,” Vin.2.178, is hatthabhitti, line of the hand. On pañcangulikam dātuṃ cf. above, BD.5.170. ³ seyyā, defined at Vin.4.17=Vin.4.20, Vin.4.41. ⁴ See Kd.15.11.6 for these words. ⁵ pāṇikā, Buddhaghosa says nothing. Cf. pāṇiyā at Kd.15.1.5. ⁶ ikkāsa. Vin-a.1219 says rukkhaniy(y)āsaṃ vā silesaṃ vā. Gum, resin, and juice all exude from trees. Cf. niyyāsakhādāniya at Vin-a.832, Vin-a.837 and niyyāsarukkha at Vism.74.

Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, mustard-powder,¹ oil of beeswax.” It was too thick.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sponge it over³ with a piece of cloth.”

Now at that time the black colouring did not adhere to the rough walls ... (as above) ... The black colouring would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having applied clay (mixed with the excrement of) earthworms,⁴ having kept some back with a spoon, to put on the black colouring.” The black colouring would not stick on. They told this matter to the Lord He said: “I allow, monks, what exudes from trees, an astringent decoction.”⁵

BD.5.213

REJECTION OF A BOLD DESIGN

Now at that time the group of six monks had a bold design⁶ made with figures of women, figures of men, in a dwelling-place. People touring the dwelling-places, having seen this, ... spread it about, saying: “Like householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not have a bold design made with figures of women, figures of men. Whoever should have one made, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, wreath-work, creeper-work, swordfish teeth, the five strips (of cloth design).”⁷

Kd.16.3.2

Vin.2.152

ALLOWANCE FOR A BALUSTRADE

Now at that time dwelling-places were low to the ground ...⁸ “... I allow monks, a balustrade.”

Kd.16.3.3

¹ -kuḍḍa of text should read -kuṭṭa. ² Vin-a.1219 says it stayed there in drop upon drop. ³ paccuddharitum (as at Kd.15.17.1) explained at Vin-a.1219 as puñchitum, to wipe.

⁴ gaṇḍamattikā. Vin-a.1219, reading taṇḍa- with variant reading gaṇḍu-, explains as above.

⁵ kasāva. Cf. Kd.4.4, where certain specified ones are allowed as medicines. ⁶ paṭibhānacitta, as at Vin.4.61 (see BD.2.285, n.5) and BD.4.298. Vin-a.1219 says “not only the figures of women and men, but also figures of animals, even of an earthworm.” ⁷ As at Kd.15.11.6.

⁸ As at Kd.15.11.6.

Now at that time dwelling-places were thronged with people.¹ Monks were (too) modest to lie down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a curtain.”² They looked in, having lifted up the curtain. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a small half-wall.” They looked in over the top of the small half-wall. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) inner rooms: a palanquin-like inner room,³ a tube-like inner room,⁴ an inner room on the roof.”⁵ Now at that time monks made an inner room in the middle of a small dwelling-place; there was no access.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make an inner room at one side of a small dwelling-place, in the middle of a large one.”

Kd.16.3.4
BD.5.214

Now at that time the base of a wall of a dwelling-place disintegrated. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a timber buttress.”⁷ A wall of a dwelling-place let in the rain.⁸ “I allow, monks, a protecting screen⁹ (and) paste and water.”¹⁰

Now at that time a snake fell from a grass roofing on to a certain monk’s shoulder. Terrified, he uttered a cry of distress. Monks, having run up, spoke thus to this monk: “Why did you, your reverence, utter a cry of distress?” Then this monk told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a canopy.”¹¹

Now at that time monks hung their bags at the feet of couches, and at the feet of chairs: they were eaten by rats and white ants. They told this matter

Kd.16.3.5

¹ ālakamandā. At DN.ii.147, DN.ii.170 said to be the capital of the devas, with many people and crowded with yakkhas. Spelt in both passages as Ālaka-. Vin-a.1219 says each open space was crowded with people. ² tirokaraṇī as at Vin.1.276. ³ sivikāgabbha. Vin-a.1219 calls it a quadrangular (or four-sided) inner room. ⁴ nāḷikāgabbha. Vin-a.1219 says it is a long room whose length is two or three times its width. ⁵ hammiyagabbha. See BD.2.16, n.6 on HAMMIYA. Vin-a.1219 calls it a room in the gable on the open air floor or a room on the bare roof. ⁶ As at Kd.15.14.3 ⁷ kulaṅkapādaka. See MORRIS, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1884, p.78. ⁸ ovassati also at Kd.15.16.1. ⁹ parittānakiṭṭika. Cf. sāmsaraṇakiṭṭika uggātanakiṭṭika in Kd.16.3.5 below. ¹⁰ uddhasudha. Vin-a.1219 reading uddhā- with variant reading uda-, says clay pounded together with ashes and cowdung. Sinhalese edition reads udda-. ¹¹ vitāna, an item in some of the “no offence” clauses in the Suttavibhaṅga, e.g. at Vin.3.225, Vin.3.227, Vin.3.229, Vin.3.233, Vin.4.171, Vin.4.279.

to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a peg in the wall, an ‘elephant-tusk’ (peg).”¹ Now at that time monks laid aside their robes on a couch and on a chair. The robes fell to pieces. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a bamboo for robes, a cord for robes.”²

Vin.2.153

Now at that time dwelling-places had no verandahs³ and were without shelter.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a verandah, a covered terrace,⁵ an inner court,⁶ a verandah roofing.”⁷ The verandahs were public. Monks were (too) modest to lie down. “I allow, monks, a moveable screen,⁸ a screen that can be drawn.”

BD.5.215

ALLOWANCE FOR AN ASSEMBLY HALL

Now at that time monks participating in a meal in the open air were bothered by cold and heat. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, an assembly hall.” The assembly hall was low to the ground ...⁹ “... a cord for robes.” Now at that time monks spread out their robes in the open air on the ground. The robes were soiled by dust. “I allow, monks, a bamboo for robes and a cord for robes in the open air.”

Kd.16.3.6

Kd.16.3.7

The drinking water became tepid.¹⁰ “I allow, monks, a hall for the drinking water, a shed for the drinking water.” The hall for the drinking water was low to the ground ...¹¹ “... a cord for robes.” There was no vessel for the ¹ Cf. Kd.15.9.5 where monks hung their bags on these pegs. ² Also allowed at Kd.15.11.6; Kd.15.14.3. ³ ālinda. Vin-a.1219 explains as pamukha. See Kd.6.36.4, and BD.4.342, n.3.

⁴ apaṭissaraṇa. Sinhalese edition appatisāraṇā. ⁵ paghana. Vin-a.1220, reading palighana but saying it is also called paghana, speaks of it as a katapadesa, a shaped (artificial) place or locality. It was at the door of the dwelling-places. ⁶ pakuṭa. Sinhalese edition pakuḍḍa. Vin-a.1220 reading pakudda and saying pakuṭṭa is also a reading, explains as “the whole of the inner room in the middle is called pariyāgāro: pakuddan ti majjhe gabbhassa samantā pariyāgāro vuccati. With this phrase cf. Vin.3.119. Pariyāgāra means “surrounded by a house.”

⁷ osarika. Vin-a.1220 reads, osārika, with variant reading osaraka and says “having put a bamboo in a dwelling-place without a verandah, having had small sticks taken from that, tato osāretvā, a verandah-covering, chadanapamukha, is made. ⁸ saṃsaraṇakīṭika. Vin-a.1220 says cakkalayutta. Cf. cakkalikā at Kd.16.2.2 and cakkalī at Kd.16.19 ⁹ As at Kd.15.11.6. ¹⁰ otappati, perhaps “evaporated, dried up.” Cf. otāpeti, to dry in the sun. ¹¹ As at Kd.15.11.6.

drinking water. “I allow, monks, a conchshell for drinking water, a saucer for drinking water.”

ALLOWANCE FOR A PORCH

Now at that time dwelling-places were not fenced in. “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) fences to fence them in: a fence of bricks, a fence of stones, a fence of wood.” There was no porch. “I allow, monks, a porch.” The porch was low to the ground. It was flooded with water. “I allow you, monks, to build it high to the ground.” There was no door to the porch. “I allow, monks, a door, a door-post and lintel ... a cord to pull through.”¹ Powdered grass fell from the porch.² “I allow, monks, ... the five (pieces of) cloth design.”³

Kd.16.3.8

Now at that time a cell came to be swampy.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord He said: “I allow you, monks, to sprinkle gravel.” They did not succeed in doing so. “I allow you, monks, to lay down flagstones.” Water remained. “I allow, monks, a drain for the water.”

Vin.2.154

Now at that time monks made a fireplace here and there in a cell; the cell became soiled.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make at one side a hall for the fire.” The hall for the fire was low to the ground ...⁶ “I allow, monks, a balustrade.” The nail for the fire had no door. “I allow, monks, a door, a doorpost and lintel ...⁷ a cord for pulling through.” Powdered grass fell into the hall for the fire. “I allow you, monks, ... a cord for robes.”

Kd.16.3.9

BD.5.216

ALLOWANCE FOR A FENCED MONASTERY

A monastery was not fenced in: goats and cattle⁸ injured the little plants.⁹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, three (kinds of) hedges to fence it in: a hedge of bamboo, a hedge of thorns, a ditch.”

Kd.16.3.10

¹ As at Kd.15.14.4. ² koṭṭhakā above; koṭṭhake at Kd.15.14.4. ³ As at Kd.15.14.4. ⁴ As at Kd.15.14.5; Kd.15.35.4. ⁵ uklāpa, as at Vin.1.46. ⁶ As at Kd.15.11.6. ⁷ As at Kd.15.14.6. ⁸ pasuka. ⁹ uparopa. Cf. uparopaha at Ja.ii.345, Ja.iv.359.

There was no porch. As before, goats and cattle injured the little plants. “I allow, monks, a porch, an interlacing of stakes and thorns,¹ a hedge of swallow-wort,² a gateway, a door-bar.”³ Powdered grass fell from the porch. “I allow you, monks, ...⁴ the five (pieces of) cloth design.” The monastery became swampy⁵ “... a drain for the water.”

Kd.16.3.11

Now at that time King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha wanted to have a long house with a smearing of plaster and clay built for an Order. Then it occurred to monks: “Now what kind of roofing is allowed by the Lord, what is not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, five (kinds of) roofings: a roofing of tiles, a roofing of stones, a roofing of plaster, a roofing of tiṇa-grass, a roofing of leaves.”⁶

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

THE STORY OF ANĀTHAPIṆḌIKA

Now at that time the householder Anāthapiṇḍika was the husband of a sister of a (great) merchant of Rājagaha. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika went to Rājagaha on some business or other. At that time the Order with the Awakened One at its head had been invited for the morrow by the (great) merchant of Rājagaha. Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha enjoined slaves and servants, saying: “Well now, good people, getting up early in the morning, cook conjeys, cook rice,⁷ prepare⁸ curries, prepare vegetables.”⁹ Then it occurred to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: “Now, on my arrival

BD.5.217

¹ apesiyam̃. Sinhalese edition apesim̃. Vin-a.1220 reading apesi, says “having inserted stakes with long pieces of wood, having covered with thorny branches, it is made for closing up the doorway.” ² akkavāṭa. Sinhalese edition reads yamakakavāṭa, a pair of doors. ³ paligha. Vin-a.1220 says “as in village gateways, it is for closing a door that is joined to a wheel.”

⁴ As at Kd.15.14.4. ⁵ As at Kd.15.14.5; Kd.15.35.4. ⁶ These five kinds of roofings mentioned at Vin.4.48. ⁷ bhattāni. Cf. BD.2.149, BD.3.11 These four words are, above, all in the plural suggesting that separate portions should be got ready for each monk. ⁸ sampādeti, as at Vin.3.208. ⁹ uttaribhaṅga, or tit-bits, dainties. See BD.1.275, n.5.

formerly this householder, having put aside all duties, did nothing except exchange greetings with me, but now he seems excited and enjoins slaves and servants, saying: ‘Well now, good people ... prepare vegetables.’ Now can there be for this householder a leading to¹ (a bride’s home) or can there be a leading away from² (a bride’s home) or is a great oblation arranged or is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha invited for the morrow together with his troops?”

Vin.2.155

Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, having enjoined the slaves and servants, approached the householder Anāthapiṇḍika; having approached, having exchanged greetings with the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, he sat down at a respectful distance. The householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the (great) merchant of Rājagaha as he was sitting down at a respectful distance: “Formerly you, householder, on my arrival, having put aside all duties, did nothing except exchange greetings with me, but now you seem excited and enjoin slaves and servants, saying: ‘Well now, good people ... prepare vegetables.’ Now can there be for you, householder, a leading to ... or is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha invited for the morrow together with his troops?”

Kd.16.4.2

“There is to be for me, householder, neither a leading to (a bride’s home), nor is there to be a leading away from (a bride’s home), nor is King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha invited for the morrow together with his troops. But a great oblation is arranged by me: the Order is invited for the morrow with the Awakened One at its head.”

“Did you, householder, say ‘Awakened One?’”

“‘Awakened One’ I did say, householder.”

“Did you, householder, say ‘Awakened One?’”

“‘Awakened One’ I did say, householder.”

BD.5.218

“Did you, householder, say ‘Awakened One?’”

“‘Awakened One’ I did say, householder.”

“Even this sound, householder, is hard to come by in the world, that is to say ‘Awakened One, Awakened One.’ Now would it be possible, householder, at this time³ to go up and see this Lord, a perfected one, a fully ¹ As at Vin.3.135. See BD.1.229, n.2. ² As at Vin.3.135. See BD.1.230, n.1. ³ For this episode to the end of Kd.16.4.4 cf. SN.i.210.

Self-awakened One?”

“This time is not a right time, householder, to go up and see this Lord, a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened One. But now, early Tomorrow you shall go up to see this Lord, a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened One.”

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, thinking: “Early Tomorrow I will go up to see this Lord ... fully Self-Awakened One,” lay down with mindfulness (so much) directed to the Awakened One,¹ that he got up three times during the night thinking it was daybreak.

Kd.16.4.3

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika approached the gateway to the Cool Grove,² and non-human beings opened the gateway. Then as the householder Anāthapiṇḍika was going out from the town, light vanished, darkness appeared; fear, consternation, hair standing on end³ arose so that he was desirous of turning back from there. Then the yakkha Sīvaka, invisible, made this sound heard:

Vin.2.156

“A hundred elephants,⁴ a hundred horses, a hundred chariots with she-mules,⁵
A hundred thousand maidens adorned with jewelled earrings—

These are not worth the sixteenth part of one length of stride.

“Advance, householder, advance, householder.
Advance is better for you, not retreat.”

Then darkness vanished for the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, light appeared, so that his fear, consternation, hair standing on end subsided. And a second time ... And a third time did the yakkha Sīvaka made this sound heard: “... Advance is better for you, not retreat.” And a third time darkness vanished for the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, light appeared, so that his fear, consternation, hair standing on end subsided.

BD.5.219

Kd.16.4.4

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika approached the Cool Grove. Now at that time the Lord was pacing up and down in the open air, having ¹ buddhagatāya satiyā. ² Sītavana. SN.i.211 reads Sīvathika, from the name of Sīvathika (variant reading Sīvaka) of the yakkha who lived in the Sītavana. ³ As at e.g. Vin.3.69.

⁴ Cf. the first three of these lines with Vv.20.8; Vv.43.8. ⁵ assatarī. Cf. vacchatarī at Kd.5.9.1, Kd.5.9.3.

got up in the night towards dawn. Then the Lord saw the householder Anāthapiṇḍika coming in the distance; seeing him, having stepped down from the place for pacing up and down in, he sat down on an appointed seat, and sitting down the Lord spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: “Come, Sudatta.”¹ Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, thinking: “The Lord addressed me by name,” joyful, elated, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined his head to the Lord’s feet, he spoke thus to the Lord: “I hope, Lord, that the Lord is living at ease.” He said:

“Yes, always at ease he lives, the brahmin, attained to nibbāna,
Who is not stained by lusts,² cooled, without attachments.³
Having rent all clingings, having averted heart’s care, Tranquil he lives at ease, having won to peace of mind.”⁴

Then the Lord talked a progressive talk⁵ to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven, he explained the peril, the vanity, the depravity of pleasures of the senses, the advantage in renouncing (them). When the Lord knew that the mind of the householder Anāthapiṇḍika was ready, malleable, devoid of the hindrances, uplifted, pleased, then he explained to him that teaching on dhamma which the awakened ones have themselves discovered: ill, uprising, stopping, the Way. And as a clean cloth without black specks will easily take dye, even so as he was (sitting) on that very seat, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, that “whatever is liable to uprising, all that is liable to stopping.” Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained

Kd.16.4.5

BD.5.220

Vin.2.157

¹ SN-a.i.315 says that Anāthapiṇḍika thinks that there are many other sects, those of Pūraṇa Kassapa and so on, who say they are awakened ones; but if this teacher is the awakened one he will address him by his kuladattika name, i.e. by the name given him in his family, because no one but Anāthapiṇḍika himself knows this. See also KS.i.273, n.1. ² yo na lippati kāmesu, as at Snp.625. Cf. Kaṭha Upaniṣad 5.11 where the Sun is not defiled or contaminated, na lipyate, by what he sees outside himself. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, A Note on the Stickfast Motif, Journal American Folklore, Vol. 57, No. 224, April–June, 1944, p.128. ³ Cf. Snp.642.

⁴ Besides SN.i.212, where the Saṃyutta version of this episode ends, this verse occurs at AN.i.138. ⁵ As at Kd.1.7.5, Kd.1.7.10; Kd.5.1.9, Kd.5.1.10; Kd.6.26.8, Kd.6.26.9.

without another's help to full confidence in the Teacher's instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

"Excellent, Lord! Excellent, Lord! Even, Lord, as one might set upright what has been upset, or might uncover what was concealed, or might show the way to one who is astray, or might bring an oil lamp into the darkness, thinking, 'Those with eyes to see may see shapes,' even so is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. I myself, Lord, go to the Lord for refuge, to dhamma, and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-disciple going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts. And, Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks." The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having understood the Lord's consent, rising from his seat, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Kd.16.4.6

The (great) merchant of Rājagaha heard: "It is said that the Order with the Awakened One at its head is invited for the morrow by the householder Anāthapiṇḍika." Then the (great) merchant of Rājagaha spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: "It is said, that the Order with the Awakened One at its head is invited by you, householder, for the morrow. But you are incoming.¹ I can give you, householder, the means by which you can make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at its head."

"Thank you, householder, but I have the means by which I can make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at its head."

BD.5.221

The urban council of Rajagana heard: "The Order with the Awakened One at its head is invited for the morrow by the householder Anāthapiṇḍika." Then the urban council of Rājagaha spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika: "It is said that the Order ... We can give you, householder, the means by which you can make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at its head."

"Thank you, masters, but I have the means ... at its head."

King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha heard: "The Order ..." ...

"Thank you, sire, but I have the means by which I can make a meal for the Order with the Awakened One at its head."

Kd.16.4.7

¹ As opposed to resident.

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night in the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the (great) merchant of Rājagaha; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having with his own hand served and satisfied with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from the bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a rains-residence¹ from me at Sāvattḥī together with the Order of monks.”

Vin.2.158

“But, householder, Truth-finders delight in empty places.”

“It is understood, Lord, it is understood, Well-farer.” Then the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the householder Anāthapiṇḍika with talk on dhamma, rising from his seat, departed.

Now at that time the householder Anāthapiṇḍika had many friends, many companions, his word carried weight.² Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having concluded that business at Rājagaha, set out for Sāvattḥī. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika enjoined people on the way, saying: “Masters, build monasteries, prepare dwelling-places, furnish gifts; an Awakened One has arisen in the world, and this Lord, invited by me, will come along by this road.”

Kd.16.4.8

BD.5.222

Then these people, urged on by the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, built monasteries, prepared dwelling-places, furnished gifts. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having arrived at Sāvattḥī, looked all round Sāvattḥī, thinking:³ “Now where could the Lord stay that would be neither too far from a village, nor too near, suitable for coming and going, accessible to people whenever they want, not crowded by day, having little noise at night, little sound, without folks' breath, secluded from people, fitting for meditation?"

¹ vassāvāsa, as in Kd.3.1.1, and cf. Kd.3.14. ² ādeyyavāca. Vin-a.1220 says “his speech would be taken up by the many folk thinking, ‘It seems he should be heard’.” ³ As at Kd.1.22.16, Kd.1.22.17 where Bimbisāra is giving the Bamboo Grove.

Kd.16.4.9

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika saw Prince Jeta's pleasure grove, neither too far from a village ... fitting for meditation, and seeing it, he approached Prince Jeta; having approached he spoke thus to Prince Jeta: "Give me, young master, the pleasure grove to make a monastery."

"The pleasure grove is not to be given away, householder, even for the price of a hundred thousand."¹

"Young master, the monastery is taken."

"The monastery is not taken, householder." They asked the chief ministers of justice,² saying: "Is it taken or is it not taken?" The chief ministers spoke thus: "The monastery is taken at the price fixed by you, young master." Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having had gold coins³ brought out by means of wagons, had the Jeta Grove spread with the price of a hundred thousand.⁴

Vin.2.159

Kd.16.4.10

The gold coins that were taken out the first time were not enough for a small open space near to the porch. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika enjoined the people, saying: "Go back, good people, bring (more) gold coins, I will spread this open space." Then it occurred to Prince Jeta: "Now this can be no ordinary matter⁵ inasmuch as this householder bestows so many gold coins," and he spoke thus to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika:

BD.5.223

"Enough, householder; let me spread this open space, give this open space to me, it will be my gift."

Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, thinking: "This Prince Jeta is a distinguished, well-known man; surely the faith in this dhamma and discipline of well-known men like this is very efficacious,"⁶ made over that open space to Prince Jeta. Then Prince Jeta built a porch¹ on that open space. The householder Anāthapiṇḍika had dwelling-places made, he had cells² made ... porches ... attendance halls ... fire halls ... huts for what is allowable ... privies ... places for pacing up and down in ... halls in the places for pacing up and down in ... wells ... halls at the wells ... bathrooms ... halls in the bathrooms ... lotus ponds ... he had sheds made.

¹ As at Ja.i.94. ² Cf. similar passage at Vin.4.223 (BD.3.178). ³ hirañña; see note at BD.1.28.

⁴ koṭisantharam santharāpesi. Vin-a.1220 says "having given a hundred thousand kaḥāpaṇas, having had them spread out (on the ground), having taken the measure of the circumference of trees and ponds there, he gave having had them (i.e. the kaḥāpaṇas) spread out in a certain place". Most likely the gold coins were not round but square, see Vinaya Texts iii.188, n.1.

⁵ na orakam bhavassiti. Cf. Kd.1.9.1, and below Kd.16.5.1. ⁶ As at Kd.6.36.3.

GIVING BUILDING WORK

Then the Lord, having stayed at Rājagaha for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Vesālī. In due course, walking on tour, he arrived at Vesālī. The Lord stayed there at Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Hall of the Gabled Pillars. Now at that time people were making repairs carefully and they were also attending carefully, with the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings and medicines for the sick, to those monks who were looking after the repairs. Then it occurred to a certain poor tailor: “Now this can be no ordinary matter inasmuch as these people are making repairs carefully. What now if I too should make repairs?” Then that poor tailor, having himself kneaded mud, having piled up bricks, had wattle and daub walls erected. But because he was not skilful the piling was crooked and a wall fell down. And a second time ... And a third time ... a wall fell down.

Kd.16.5.1

Then that poor tailor ... spread it about, saying: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, exhort, instruct those who give them the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick, and these look after their repairs. But I am poor. No one exhorts or instructs me or looks after my repairs.” Monks heard this poor tailor as he was ... spreading it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

BD.5.224

Kd.16.5.2

Vin.2.160

“I allow you, monks, to put repairs in charge (of a monk).³ Monks, the monk who is in charge of repairs should make an effort,⁴ thinking, ‘How can the dwelling-place be brought to a rapid termination?’ and he should restore broken and dilapidated parts.¹

¹ koṭṭhaka is a word of unsettled meaning. Vin-a.1221 says that he built a seven storeyed long house with a porch (or storehouse) at the gateway (*dvāra*koṭṭhakapāsāda). ² Cf. this list with that at Kd.3.5.6, Kd.3.5.9. ³ navakammaṃ dātuṃ. For various rules for making repairs see Kd.16.17. ⁴ ussukkaṃ āpajjissati. Cf. ussukkaṃ karoti at Vin.4.280, Vin.4.291, Vin.4.300.

Kd.16.5.3

“And thus, monks, should they be given in charge: First, a monk should be asked; having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order give the repairs to the dwelling-place of the householder So-and-so in charge of the monk So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is giving the repairs ... in charge of the monk So-and-so. If the giving in charge of the monk So-and-so, of the repairs to the dwelling-place of the householder So-and-so, is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. Repairs to the dwelling-place of the householder So-and-so are given in charge of the monk So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

ALLOWANCE FOR THE FIRST SEAT, ETC.

Kd.16.6.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Vesālī for as long as he found suiting,² set out on tour for Sāvattthī. Now at that time monks who were pupils of the group of six monks, having gone along in front of the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, took possession of dwelling-places, they took possession of sleeping places, saying: “This will be for our preceptors, this will be for our teachers, this will be for us.” Then the venerable Sāriputta, having gone along close behind the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, not being able to get a sleeping place—the dwelling-places being taken possession of, the sleeping places being taken possession of—sat down at the root of a certain tree. Then the Lord, getting up during the night towards morning, coughed. The venerable Sāriputta also coughed.

BD.5.225

“Who is there?”

“It is I, Lord, Sāriputta.”

“Why are you, Sāriputta, sitting here?” Then the venerable Sāriputta told this matter to the Lord.³

Kd.16.6.2

¹ At AN.iii.263 this is one of five things said to make a resident monk very useful to his residence. ² For the incident related here, cf. Ja.no.37. ³ Cf. a similar passage at Vin.4.16.

Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks who are pupils ... ‘... this will be for us’?”

Vin.2.161

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men, having gone along in front of ... saying ‘... this will be for us’? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Who, monks, is worthy of the best seat, the best water¹ (for washing), the best alms?” Some monks spoke thus: “Whoever, Lord, has gone forth from a noble family, he is worthy of the best ... alms.” Some monks spoke thus: “Whoever, Lord, has gone forth from a brahmin family ... from a householder’s family ... Whoever, Lord, knows the *suttantas*² ... is an expert on discipline ... is a teacher of dhamma ... is possessed of the first meditation³ ... is possessed of the second meditation ... is possessed of the third meditation ... is possessed of the fourth meditation ... is a stream winner ... a once-returned ... a non-returned ... one perfected ... a threefold wisdom man ... a sixfold superknowledge man, he is worthy of the best seat, the best water (for washing), the best alms.”

BD.5.226

Kd.16.6.3

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Formerly,⁴ monks, there used to be a large banyan on a slope of the Himalayas. Three friends lived near it: a partridge, a monkey and a bull-elephant. These lived courteous, deferential, polite⁵ to one another. Then, monks, it occurred to these friends: ‘Now let us find out which of us is the eldest by birth. We should respect, revere, reverence, honour him, and we should abide by his advice.’ Then, monks, the partridge and the monkey asked the bull-elephant: ‘You, friend, what long-ago thing do you remember?’

“‘When I, friends, was young I used to pass over this banyan keeping it between my thighs, and the topmost shoots brushed against my belly. This, friends, is a long-ago thing that I remember.’

¹ aggodakam, explained by dakkhiṇodaka at Vin-a.1221 = MN-a.i.145. Cf. MN.i.28, MN.ii.204.

² With this and the next two items compare a similar list at Vin.3.159. ³ With this list to the end, cf. Vin.4.24. ⁴ This episode forms the Tittirajātaḥ, Ja.no.37. ⁵ As at Kd.1.25.6, Kd.5.4.3.

“Then, monks, the partridge and the bull-elephant asked the monkey: ‘You, friend, what long-ago thing do you remember?’

“‘When I, friends, was young, having sat down on the ground, I used to eat the topmost shoots of this banyan. This, friends, is a long-ago thing that I remember.’

“Then, monks, the monkey and the bull-elephant asked the partridge: ‘You, friend, what long-ago thing do you remember?’

“‘Friends, in a certain open space there was a great banyan. I, having eaten one of its fruits, relieved myself in that open space, and this banyan has grown from that. So I, friends, am the eldest by birth.’

Vin.2.162

“Then, monks, the monkey and the bull-elephant spoke thus to the partridge: ‘You, friend, are the eldest of us by birth. We will respect, revere, reverence, honour you and we will abide by your advice.’

“Then, monks, the partridge caused the monkey and the bull-elephant to undertake the five moral habits and himself followed the observance of the five moral habits. They, having lived courteous, deferential, polite to one another, at the breaking up of the body after dying arose in a happy bourn, a heaven world. This, monks, came to be known as the ‘Partridge Brahma-faring.’¹

BD.5.227

“Those who reverence the old—those men are skilled in dhamma, Worthy of praise here and now and a happy bourn here-after.

Kd.16.6.4

“Well then, monks, if animals, breathers, can live courteous, deferential, polite to one another, so do you, monks, let your light shine forth here so that you, gone forth in this dhamma and discipline which are well taught, live likewise courteous, deferential, polite to one another. It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, greeting, rising up for, joining the palms in salutation, proper homage, the best seat, the best water (for washing), the best alms according to seniority. But, monks, what belongs to an Order should not be reserved according to seniority. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

¹ This sentence is quoted at DN-a.i.178.

PERSONS NOT TO BE BOWED TO

“Monks, there are these ten who are not to be greeted: one ordained later is not to be greeted by one ordained earlier; one not ordained is not to be greeted; one belonging to a different communion (even) if he is more senior (yet) speaks what is not-dhamma is not to be greeted; a woman is not to be greeted; a eunuch ... one under probation¹ ... one who deserves to be sent back to the beginning² ... one who deserves mānatta ... one undergoing mānatta ... one deserving rehabilitation is not to be greeted. These, ten, monks, are not to be greeted. These three, monks, are to be greeted: one ordained earlier is to be greeted by one ordained later; one belonging to a different communion if he is more senior and speaks what is dhamma is to be greeted; and, monks, a Truth-finder, a perfected one, a fully Self-awakened one³ is to be greeted in the world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmas, by creatures with recluses and brahmins, with devas and mankind. These three, monks, are to be greeted.”

Kd.16.6.5

BD.5.228

REJECTION OF RESERVED SEATING

Now at that time people prepared sheds for an Order, they prepared rugs, they prepared open spaces. Monks who were pupils of the group of six monks,⁴ saying: “Only what belongs to an Order is not allowed according to seniority by the Lord, not what is made on purpose for it,” having gone along in front of the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, took possession of the sheds, took possession of the rugs, took possession of the open spaces, thinking: “This will be for our preceptors, this will be for our teachers, this will be for us.” Then the venerable Sāriputta, having gone along close behind the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head, not having a chance to get an open space—the sheds being taken possession of, the rugs being taken possession of, the open spaces being taken possession of—sat down at the root of a certain tree. Then the Lord, getting up during the night towards morning, coughed. The venerable Sāriputta also coughed.

Kd.16.7.1

Vin.2.163

¹ See Kd.12.1.2. ² See Kd.13.15. ³ Cf. AN.ii.34, Iti p.87f. ⁴ As in Kd.16.6.1.

“Who is there?”

“It is I, Lord, Sāriputta.”

“Why are you, Sāriputta, sitting here?” Then the venerable Sāriputta told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the monks, saying: “Is it true, as is said, monks, ...?” ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, even what is made on purpose for an Order should not be reserved according to seniority. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

ALLOWANCE FOR WHAT IS DISPLAYED BY HOUSEHOLDERS

Kd.16.8.1

Now at that time in a refectory inside a house people appointed high and broad things to recline upon, that is to say:¹ a sofa,² a divan, a long-haired coverlet, a many-coloured coverlet, a white coverlet, a wool coverlet besprent with flowers, a cotton quilt, a wool coverlet decorated with animals forms, a wool covering with hair on the upper side, a wool covering with hair at one side, a silken sheet studded with jewels, a sheet made with silk thread and studded with jewels, a dancer’s carpet, an elephant rug, a horse rug, a chariot rug, rugs of black antelope skins, a splendid sheeting of the hide of the kadali-deer, a sheet with an awning above, a couch with a red cushion at either end. Monks, being scrupulous, did not sit down on them.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, except for the three: a sofa, a divan, a cotton quilt, to sit down on what is displayed by householders, but not to lie down on it.”⁴

BD.5.229

¹ List as at Kd.5.10.4. See BD.4.256 for notes ² Definition of āsandi at Thag-a.i.137 is that it is a long-legged four-cornered chair upon which it is possible to sit but not to lie. ³ Made an offence of wrong-doing at Kd.5.10.5 to use any of these things. ⁴ Cf. Vin.1.194 (BD.4.259).

Now at that time in a refectory inside a house people appointed a couch and a chair, both covered up with cotton.¹ Monks, being scrupulous, did not sit down on them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sit down on what is displayed by householders, but not to lie down on it.”

APPRECIATION FOR THE JETAVANA MONASTERY

Then the Lord, walking on tour, in due course arrived at Sāvattthī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, may the Lord consent to a meal with me on the morrow together with the Order of monks.” The Lord consented by becoming silent. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having understood the Lord’s consent, rising from his seat departed keeping his right side towards him. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having had sumptuous foods, solid and soft, prepared towards the end of that night, had the time announced to the Lord, saying: “It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.” Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, approached the dwelling of the householder Anāthapiṇḍika; having approached, he sat down on the appointed seat together with the Order of monks. Then the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having with his own hand served and satisfied the Order of monks with the Awakened One at its head with sumptuous foods, solid and soft, when the Lord had eaten and had withdrawn his hand from his bowl, sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the householder Anāthapiṇḍika spoke thus to the Lord: “What line of conduct am I, Lord, to follow in regard to the Jeta Grove?”

“Well now, do you, householder, have the Jeta Grove prepared for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters,² present and to come.”

¹ tūlonaddha. Cf. onaddhamañca onaddhapīṭha at Kd.16.2.7, and Vin.2.270. Cf. also Vin.1.194.

² See Kd.8.275; Kd.16.1.4.

Kd.16.9.1

Vin.2.164

BD.5.230

“Very well, Lord,” and the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, having answered the Lord in assent, had the Jeta Grove prepared for (the use of) the Order of the four quarters, present and to come.

Kd.16.9.2

Then the Lord thanked the householder Anāthapiṇḍika in these verses:¹

“They ward off cold and heat and beasts of prey from there ...

Vin.2.165

He, knowing that dhamma here, attains nibbāna, cankerless.”

Then the Lord, having given thanks to the householder Anāthapiṇḍika in these verses, rising from his seat departed.

RESERVATION OF A SEAT, ETC.

Kd.16.10.1

Now at that time a certain chief minister who was a disciple of the Naked Ascetics had a meal for an Order. The venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having arrived after (the others) while the meal was yet unfinished, turned away the monk who was next to him,² and there was an uproar in the refectory. Then that chief minister ... spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, having arrived after (the others) turn away monks while a meal is yet unfinished so that there is an uproar in the refectory? Now, is it not possible, even sitting somewhere else, to eat as much as one pleases?” Monks heard this chief minister as he ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having arrived after (the others), turn away the monk who is next to him while the meal is yet unfinished so that there is an uproar in the refectory?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.231

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Upananda, having arrived ... in the refectory?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked him, saying:

How can you, foolish man, having arrived ... in a refectory? It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ As at Kd.16.1.5 above and Ja.i.93. ² I.e. in the procession for alms. Text reads here and at Vin.4.234 anantavika which Vinaya Texts iii.198, n.4 says “is a misprint” for ānantarika. Cf. Vin.1.321.

“Monks, a monk should not turn (another) away while a meal is yet unfinished. Whoever should turn (another) away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. If he turns (another) away who is invited (to the meal), he should be told, ‘Go and fetch water.’ If this is thus accomplished, that is good; if it is not accomplished, having swallowed lumps of boiled rice properly, his seat should be given to a senior monk. But this I say, monks: that not by any method should a seat be reserved for a senior monk. Whoever should reserve one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six monks turned ill monks away. The ill ones spoke thus: “We, your reverences, are not able to get up, we are ill.” Saying, “We will turn the venerable ones away,” having taken hold of them, having turned them away, they let go (of them) while they were standing. The ill ones, on being let go of, fell down. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one who is ill should not be turned away. Whoever should turn him away, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.16.10.2

Now at that time the group of six monks, saying: “We are ill, we are not to be turned away,” kept to the best sleeping places. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give a suitable sleeping place to one who is ill.”

Vin.2.166

Now at that time the group of six monks reserved lodgings on (some slight) pretext.¹ They told this matter to the Lord He said: “Monks, a lodging should not be reserved on (some slight) pretext. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.232

Now at that time the group of seventeen monks² were repairing³ a large dwelling-place in the neighbourhood, thinking: ‘We will spend the rains here.’ The group of six monks saw the group of seventeen monks as they were repairing the dwelling-place, and seeing them, they spoke thus:

Kd.16.11.1

¹ lesakappa. Vin-a.1222 says for a small thing, nothing more than a headache. ² As at Bu-Pc.17. Translated at BD.2.250–BD.2.251, q.v. for notes. ³ paṭisamkharoti, restore, repair, mend.

“Your reverences, the group of seventeen monks are repairing a dwelling-place. Come, we will turn them away.”

Some spoke thus: “Wait, your reverences, until they have repaired it; when it is repaired, we will turn them away.” Then the group of six monks spoke thus to the group of seventeen monks: “Go away, your reverences, the dwelling-place was obtained¹ by us.”

“Your reverences, should not this have been explained before, and we would have repaired another?”

“Your reverences, does not a dwelling-place belong to the Order?”

“Yes, your reverences, a dwelling-place belongs to the Order.”

“Go away, your reverences, the dwelling-place was obtained by us.”

“Your reverences, the dwelling-place is big; you stay, and we too will stay.”

“Go away, your reverences, the dwelling-place was obtained by us,” and angry, displeased, having taken them by the throat, they threw them out. These being thrown out, wept. Monks spoke thus:

“Why do you, your reverences, weep?”

“Your reverences, this group of six monks, angry, displeased, threw us out of a dwelling-place belonging to the Order.” Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, angry, displeased, throw out monks from a dwelling-place belonging to an Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, angry, displeased, threw out monks from a dwelling-place belonging to an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.”² Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, a monk should not be thrown out of a dwelling-place belonging to an Order by one who is angry, displeased. Whoever (such) should throw him out should be dealt with according to the rule.³ I allow you, monks, to assign⁴ lodgings.”

¹ pāpuṇāti. ² Cūlavagga and Pācittiya versions proceed differently from here. ³ Bu-Pc.17.

⁴ gāhetuṃ.

AGREEMENT FOR AN ASSIGNER OF LODGINGS

Then it occurred to the monks: “Now by whom should lodgings be assigned?”

Kd.16.11.2

They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as assigner of lodgings:¹ one who would not follow a wrong course² through desire, one who would not follow a wrong course through hatred, one who would not follow a wrong course through stupidity, one who would not follow a wrong course through fear, and one who would know what is taken and what is not taken. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, a monk should be asked. Having asked him, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order should agree upon the monk So-and-so as assigner of lodgings. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the monk So-and-so as assigner of lodgings. If the agreement upon the monk So-and-so as assigner of lodgings is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The monk So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order as assigner of lodgings. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Vin.2.167

BD.5.234

Kd.16.11.3

Then it occurred to the monks who were the assigners of lodgings: “Now, how should the lodgings be assigned?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, first to count the monks; having counted the monks, to count the sleeping places;³ having counted the sleeping places, to assign according to the accommodation for sleeping places.”⁴ Assigning according to the accommodation for sleeping places (some) sleeping places were left over.⁵ “I allow you, monks, to assign according to the accommodation in dwelling-places.” Assigning according to the accommodation in dwelling-places (some) dwelling-places were left over. “I allow you, monks, to assign according to the accommodation in cells.”¹ Assigning according to the accommodation in cells (some) cells were left over. “I allow you, monks, to give an additional share² also.”

¹ Senāsanagāhāpaka; cf. pattaḡāhāpaka and see BD.2.122, n.1. To the end of Kd.16.11.2 is the same as the passage at Vin.3.246-7 \(BD.2.122\) dealing with the assigner of bowls. ² See BD.2.122, n.2. ³ Vin-a.1223 calls these the places for couches. ⁴ seyyaggena. Vin-a.1223 explains by seyyaparicchena, by the space, range, and speaks of each monk having a place for a couch. Cf. bhikkhaggena, at Kd.12.1.1, apparently meaning the number of monks. ⁵ ussādiyimsu. Cf. Vin.4.99 and BD.2.364, n.1.

When an additional share had been occupied another monk arrived. “It need not be given (to him if the occupier) is not willing.”³

Now at that time monks assigned lodgings to one who was standing outside a boundary. They told this matter to the Lord. He said; “Monks, a lodging should not be assigned to one standing outside a boundary. Whoever should (so) assign it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks, having occupied lodgings, reserved them for all time. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having occupied a lodging, it should not be reserved for all time. Whoever should reserve it (thus), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to reserve it for the three months of the rains but not to reserve it for the dry season.”⁴

BD.5.235

Kd.16.11.4

Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, how many (times for) the assignment of lodgings are there?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there are these three (times for) the assignment of lodgings: the earlier,⁵ the later, the intervening.⁶ The earlier on which they are to be assigned is the day following the full moon of Āsāḷha; the later on which they are to be assigned is the month following the full moon of Āsāḷha; the intervening on which they are to be assigned is the day following the ¹ pariveṇa. As pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.203, n.1 a “cell” here appears to be a unit larger than a dwelling-place. But I do not think that this is necessarily the case. Probably not more than one monk slept in a cell, but a dwelling-place might have been used by two at least. Vin-a.1223 in explaining anubhāga, says that if there are too few monks (for the available space) two or three cells should be given to each monk. ² anubhāga. ³ na akāmā as at Kd.8.24.4. ⁴ Cf. Kd.16.17.2, below. ⁵ See Kd.3.2.2. These two dates are the same as the earlier and the later periods for entering on the rains-residence. ⁶ The “intervening,” antarāmuttaka, does not refer to a date between these earlier and later times, but to the time between the rains-residence of one year and the next. Lodgings would become vacant at the end of the rains (see above Kd.16.11.3) and then assignment for the next rains could take place. It seems that the first two are compulsory, the third optional, see Vin-a.1223.

Invitation, with reference to the next rains-residence. These, monks, are the three (times for) the assignment of lodgings.”

The Second Portion for Repeating.

Vin.2.168

THIRD RECITATION SECTION

Now at that time the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, having occupied a lodging in Sāvattthī, went away to some village residence and occupied a lodging there too. Then it occurred to these monks: “Now your reverences, this venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, is a maker of strife, a maker of quarrels, a maker of contention, a maker of disputes a maker of legal questions in the Order. If he will spend the rains here, not one of us can live in comfort. Come, let us ask him.” Then these monks spoke thus to the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans: “Have you not, reverend Upananda, occupied a lodging in Sāvattthī?”

“Yes, your reverences.”

“But do you, reverend Upananda, (although) alone reserve two (lodgings)?”

“I, your reverences, am giving up the one here and occupying the one there.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying:

“How can the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, (although) alone reserve two (lodgings)?” They told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, in this connection, having had the Order of monks convened, questioned the venerable Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, saying:

BD.5.236

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Upananda ... (lodgings)?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked him, saying:

“How can you, foolish man, (although) alone reserve two (lodgings)? The one occupied by you there, foolish man, is lost here,¹ the one occupied by you here is lost there. Thus are you, foolish man, excluded from both. It is not, foolish man, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” ... having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ The one taken in each place is automatically lost just because a monk has taken them both.

“Monks, two (lodgings) should not be reserved by one (monk). Whoever should reserve (them), there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.16.13.1

Now at that time the Lord¹ in many a figure talked a talk on discipline to the monks, he spoke in praise of discipline, he spoke in praise of accomplishment in discipline, he spoke in praise of the venerable Upāli, referring (to him) again and again. Monks spoke thus: “The Lord in many a figure talked a talk on discipline ... he spoke in praise of the venerable Upāli, referring (to him) again and again. Come, your reverences, let us master discipline under the venerable Upāli,” and they, many monks—elders and newly ordained and those of middle standing—mastered discipline under the venerable Upāli. The venerable Upāli, out of respect for the monks who were elders, recited standing, and also the monks who were elders, out of respect for dhamma,² had it recited standing, so that the monks who were elders were tired as well as the venerable Upāli. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, when a newly ordained monk is reciting to sit down on a seat that is the same (height) or on a higher one out of respect for dhamma; when a monk who is an elder is having it recited to sit down on a seat that is the same (height) or on a lower one out of respect for dhamma.”

Vin.2.169

BD.5.237

Kd.16.13.2

Now at that time many monks standing near the venerable Upāli grew tired waiting for the recitation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sit down with those entitled to seats of an equal (height).” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, in respect of what is one entitled to seats of an equal (height)?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to sit down together with those who are within three years (of your) standing.”³

Now at that time several monks entitled to seats of an equal (height), having sat down on a couch, broke the couch; having sat down on a chair, they broke the chair. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a couch for a group of three (persons),¹ a chair for a group of three (persons).” But a group of three (people), having sat down on a couch, broke the couch; having sat down on a chair, they broke the chair. “I allow, monks, a couch for a group of two (persons), a chair for a group of two (persons).”

¹ The two introductory sentences occur also at Vin.4.142 (BD.3.40). ² Cf. Bu-Sk.57–Bu-Sk.72 and especially Bu-Sk.69. ³ I.e. since the time of ordination.

Now at that time monks were (too) scrupulous to sit down on a long seat with those not entitled to a seat of an equal (height). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, except with a eunuch, a woman, a hermaphrodite, to sit down on a long seat with those not entitled to a seat of an equal (height).” Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, what is the maximum (length) of a ‘long seat’?”

“I allow, monks, the maximum (length) of a ‘long seat’ (to be) whatever is the maximum (length) that suffices (to seat) three (persons).”

Now at that time Visākhā, Migāra’s mother, wanted to have a long house with a verandah of the “elephant-nail” type² built for an Order. Then it occurred to the monks: “What appurtenances of a long house are allowed by the Lord, what are not allowed?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, all the appurtenances of a long house.”

Kd.16.14.1

Now at that time the grandmother of King Pasenadi of Kosala passed away.³ On her passing many unallowable goods accrued to an Order, that is to say⁴ a sofa, a divan ... a cotton quilt ... a couch with a red cushion at either end. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, having broken off⁵ the legs of a sofa, to make use of it; having destroyed

BD.5.238

Vin.2.170

¹ tivagga, threefold. ² hatthinakhaka. See A.K. COOMARASWAMY, Indian Architectural Terms, Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. 48, No. 3, p.258. ³ Cf. SN.i.97. ⁴ List as at Kd.5.10.4; Kd.16.8. ⁵ Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc.42, where a nun may use a sofa and a divan if she cuts down, chinditvā, the legs of the former and cuts out, chinditvā, the stuffing from the latter. Above bhinditvā occurs in both places instead of chinditvā. See BD.3.326, n.1; BD.3.327, n.3. DN-a.88, quoting above passage, uses both words: āsandiya pāde chinditvā ... pallaṅkassa vāḷe bhinditvā. At Kd.5.10.5 it is a dukkaṭa for a monk to use a sofa, divan or cotton quilt. At Kd.16.8 they form the three exceptions to the things displayed by a householder that a monk may sit down on. Above they are allowed if certain conditions are fulfilled.

the horse-hair (stuffing) of a divan, to make use of it; having unravelled the cotton quilt, to make a squatting mat;¹ to make a ground covering with what is over.”

THINGS NOT TO BE DISPOSED OF

Kd.16.15.1

Now at that time in a certain village residence not far from Sāvattthī the resident monks were worried at preparing lodgings for the incoming monks who arrived. Then it occurred to these monks: “At present we, your reverences, are worried at preparing lodgings for incoming monks who arrive. Come, your reverences, let us make over all the lodgings belonging to the Order to one (monk) and we will make use of them as belonging to him.” So these made over to one (monk) all the lodgings belonging to the Order. Incoming monks spoke thus to these monks: “Make ready lodgings, your reverences, for us.”

“Your reverences, there are no lodgings belonging to the Order, we have made them all over to one (monk).”

“But have you, your reverences, disposed of lodgings belonging to an Order?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks dispose of what belongs to an Order?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.239

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks disposed of lodgings belonging to an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

“How, monks, can these foolish men dispose of lodgings belonging to an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.16.15.2

“Monks, these five things not to be disposed of² should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of they are not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of them, there is a grave offence. What are the five?

¹ Similar allowance at Kd.16.2.6. ² avissajjiyāni. Cf. avissajjikam at Kd.8.275; and appamat-takavissajjaka at Vin.2.177, Vin.4.38.

1. A monastery, a site for a monastery. This is the first thing not to be disposed of that should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of it is not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of it, there is a grave offence.
2. A dwelling-place, a site for a dwelling-place. This is the second thing ...
3. A couch, a chair, a mattress, a squatting mat. This is the third thing ...
4. A copper pot, a copper box, a copper jar, a copper vessel, an adze, a hatchet, an axe, a hoe, a spade. This is the fourth thing ...
5. Jungle-rope, bamboo, coarse grass, reeds, tiṇa-grass, clay, wooden goods, clay goods. This is the fifth thing not to be disposed of that should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of it is not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of it, there is a grave offence.

Monks, these five things not to be disposed of should not be disposed of by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if disposed of they are not (really) disposed of. Whoever should dispose of them, there is a grave offence.”

THINGS NOT TO BE DISTRIBUTED

Then the Lord, having stayed at Sāvattḥī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Kiṭāgiri with a large Order of monks, with at least five hundred monks and with Sāriputta and Moggallāna. Then the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka heard: “They say that the Lord has arrived at Kiṭāgiri with a large Order of monks ... and with Sāriputta and Moggallāna. Come, your reverences, let us distribute all the lodgings belonging to the Order. Sāriputta and Moggallāna are of depraved desires, they are under the influence of depraved desires; we will not make ready lodgings for them.” They distributed all the lodgings belonging to the Order. Then the Lord, walking on tour, gradually reached Kiṭāgiri. Then the Lord addressed several monks, saying:

Kd.16.16.1

Vin.2.171

BD.5.240

“Do you go, monks, and having gone up to the monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka, speak thus: ‘The Lord, your reverences, has come together with a large Order of monks ... and with Sāriputta and Moggallāna; so, your reverences, make ready lodgings for the Lord and for the Order of monks and for Sāriputta and Moggallāna’.”

“Very well, Lord,” and these monks, having answered the Lord in assent, went up to the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka; having gone up to the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka, they spoke thus: “The Lord, your reverences, has come ... make ready lodgings for the Lord and for the Order of monks and for Sāriputta and Moggallāna.”

“There are no lodgings, your reverences, belonging to the Order; all were distributed by us. The Lord, your reverences, is welcome, the Lord can stay in whatever dwelling-place he likes. Sāriputta and Moggallāna are of depraved desires, they are under the influence of depraved desires; we will not make ready lodgings for them.”

Kd.16.16.2

“But did you, your reverences, distribute lodgings belonging to the Order?”

“Yes, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying:

“How can these monks who are followers of Assaji and Punabbasuka distribute lodgings belonging to an Order?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that monks distributed ... to an Order?”

“It is true, Lord.”

BD.5.241

“How, monks, can these foolish men distribute lodgings belonging to an Order? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ...” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, these five things not to be divided up¹ should not be divided up by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if divided up they are not (really) divided up. Whoever should divide them up, there is a grave offence. What are the five?²

¹ avebhaṅgiyāni. Cf. avebhaṅgikaṃ at Kd.8.27.5. ² As at Kd.16.15.2.

1. A monastery, a site for a monastery. This is the first thing not to be divided up that should not be divided up by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if divided up it is not (really) divided up. Whoever should divide it up, there is a grave offence.
2. A dwelling-place, a site for a dwelling-place. This is the second thing ...
3. A couch, a chair, a mattress, a squatting mat. This is the third thing ...
4. A copper pot, a copper box, a copper jar, a copper vessel, an adze, a hatchet, an axe, a hoe, a spade. This is the fourth thing ...
5. Jungle-rope, bamboo, coarse grass, reeds, tiṇa-grass, clay, wooden goods, clay goods. This is the fifth thing not to be divided up that should not be divided up by an Order or by a group or by an individual—even if divided up it is not (really) divided up. Whoever should divide it up, there is a grave offence.

Vin.2.172

ON THE GIFT OF BUILDING WORK

Kd.16.17.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Kiṭāgiri for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Āḷavī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Āḷavī. The Lord stayed there at Āḷavī at the chief shrine of Āḷavī.¹ Now at that time the monks of Āḷavī gave repairs such as these into the charge (of a monk):² they gave repairs in charge when there was merely putting aside in heaps³ ... when there was merely smearing a wall ... when there was merely placing a door ... when there was merely making a socket for a bolt ... when there was merely making a window-hole ... when there was merely treating with whitewash ... when there was merely treating with black colouring ... when there was merely treating with red chalk ... when there was merely roofing ... when there was merely joining ... when there was merely putting on a bar (to a doorpost)⁴ ... when there was merely restoring broken and dilapidated parts¹ ... when there was merely plastering the floors;² and they gave repairs in charge for twenty years, and they gave repairs in charge for thirty years, and they gave repairs in charge for life, and they gave the repairs to a completed dwelling-place into the charge (of a monk until) the time of his cremation.³

¹ See BD.1.247, n.2. ² Cf. the giving in charge of repairs in a general way at Kd.16.5.

³ Vinaya Texts iii.213 takes this to refer to “clay or earth.” ⁴ Oldenberg’s text reads gaṇḍikādhānamattena; Vin-a.1245 reads bhaṇḍika-. At Ja.iii.41 bhaṇḍikā is variant reading for gaṇḍikā. See Vinaya Texts iii.213, n.4

BD.5.242

Those who were modest monks spread it about, saying: “How can the monks of Ālavī give repairs such as these into the charge (of a monk) ... (until) the time of his cremation?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the monks of Ālavī ... the time of his cremation?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, repairs when there is merely putting aside in heaps should not be given into the charge (of a monk) ... nor should repairs to a completed dwelling-place be given into the charge (of a monk) until the time of his cremation. Whoever should (so) give in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to give repairs to a dwelling-place into the charge (of a monk) if it is not (yet) built or if it is not (yet) finished;⁴ in reference to work on a small dwelling-place, repairs may be given in charge for six or five years; in reference to work on a curved house repairs may be given in charge for seven or eight years; in reference to work on a large dwelling-place or a long house, repairs may be given in charge for ten or twelve years.”

Kd.16.17.2

Now at that time monks gave the whole of a dwelling-place into charge for repairs. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the whole of a dwelling-place should not be given in charge for repairs. Whoever should give one in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ As at Kd.16.5.2. ² paribhaṇḍa. Vin-a.1245 says doing up a “floor” with cowdung, with an astringent decoction. Cf. Kd.15.9.4. ³ dhūmakālīka, smoke-time, i.e. when the smoke arises from his funeral pyre. Cf. Ja.iii.422. Word occurs at Kd.21.1.9. ⁴ According to Vin-a.1245-6, if the rafters have not been put up, for when they are up much has been built.

“Now at that time monks gave two (dwelling-places) into the charge of one (monk). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, two (dwelling-places) should not be given into the charge of one (monk). Whoever should (so) give in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs, made another live (there). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having taken on repairs, you should not make another live (there). Whoever should make (another) live (there), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.2.173

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs, reserved (for their own use) what belonged to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having taken on repairs, you should not reserve (for your own use) what belongs to an Order. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to occupy one good sleeping place.”

BD.5.243

Now at that time monks gave repairs into the charge of one outside a boundary. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, repairs should not be given into the charge of one outside a boundary. Whoever should (so) give them in charge, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs (to a building), reserved it for all time. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having taken on repairs (to a building), you should not reserve it for all time. Whoever should (so) reserve it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to reserve it for the three months of the rains, but not to reserve it for the dry season.”¹

Now at that time monks, having taken on repairs, went away² and left the Order and passed away, and they pretended to be novices and they pretended to be disavowers of the training ... to be committers of extreme offences ... to be mad ... to be unhinged ... to have bodily pains ... to be suspended for not seeing an offence ... to be suspended for not making amends for an offence ... to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view and they pretended to be eunuchs ... to be living in communion as it were by theft ... to have gone over to a sect ... to be animals ... to be matricides ... to be parricides ... to be slayers of one perfected ... to be seducers of nuns ... to be schismatics ... to be shedders of a (Truth-finder's) blood and they pretended to be hermaphrodites. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.16.17.3

¹ Cf. Kd.16.11.3 above. ² See Kd.2.22.3; Kd.2.36.1-Kd.2.36.3; Kd.9.4.2, Kd.9.4.7.

“This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, goes away. Thinking, ‘Do not let the Order suffer,’ (the repairs) should be given into the charge of another. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, leaves the Order, passes away, pretends to be ... a hermaphrodite. Thinking, ‘Do not let the Order suffer,’ (the repairs) should be given into the charge of another. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, goes away while they are yet unfinished ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite. Thinking, ‘Do not let the Order suffer,’ (the repairs) should be given into the charge of another. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion goes away; they are still in his (charge).¹ This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion leaves the Order ... pretends to have committed an extreme offence: the Order is the owner. This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion pretends to be mad ... pretends to be suspended for not giving up a wrong view: they are still in his (charge). This is a case, monks, where a monk, having taken on repairs, on their completion pretends to be a eunuch ... pretends to be a hermaphrodite: the Order is the owner.”

REJECTION OF USING ELSEWHERE, ETC.

Now at that time monks made use elsewhere² of lodgings—appurtenances of a dwelling-place—belonging to a lay-follower. Then that lay-follower ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs make use elsewhere

¹ tass'eva tam. Vin-a.1248 elaborates “for the rains.” ² As at Vin.3.65–Vin.3.66. Cf. Vin.4.76, Vin.4.81 (both “eating elsewhere”).

BD.5.244

Vin.2.174

Kd.16.18.1

of appurtenances belonging somewhere else?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not make use elsewhere of appurtenances belonging somewhere else. Whoever should (so) make use of them, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks,¹ being (too) scrupulous to convey to the Observance house and to the meeting place (things to sit on), sat down on the ground. Their limbs and robes were covered with dust. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to convey (things) temporarily.”

Now at that time a great dwelling-place belonging to an Order fell into decay. Monks, being scrupulous, did not take out the lodgings.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to convey (things) for the sake of protecting (them).”

BD.5.245

Now at that time a costly woollen blanket—an accessory to a lodging—accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to barter³ it for (something) advantageous.” Now at that time a costly woven cloth ... “to barter it for (something) advantageous.”

Kd.16.19.1

Now at that time a bear’s hide⁴ accrued to an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a towel for the feet.” Drapery⁵ accrued. “I allow you, monks, to make a towel for the feet.” Cloth⁶ accrued. “I allow you, monks, to make a towel for the feet.”

Kd.16.20.1

Now at that time monks trod upon a lodging while their feet were unwashed;⁷ the lodging was soiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a lodging should not be trodden upon while your feet are unwashed. Whoever should (so) tread upon one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” Now at that time monks trod upon a lodging while their feet were damp with their sandals on ... “... offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ As at Vin.3.66. ² Vin-a.1248 explains that having conveyed them elsewhere they do not make use of them. ³ parivatteti. Cf. BD.2.55, n.8. Vin-a.1248 says that the meaning is to get a lodging, couch or chair of equal or greater value. ⁴ At Vin.1.192 this is not included among the large hides which were not allowed. ⁵ cakkalī. Cf. Kd.16.2.2. ⁶ colaka. Cf. Kd.8.18. ⁷ Cf. Kd.5.6.1 where monks are allowed to wear sandals so as not to soil couches and chairs when they get up on to them.

Vin.2.175

Kd.16.20.2

Now at that time monks spat on ground that had been treated;¹ the colour was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not spit upon ground that has been treated. Whoever should (so) spit, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, a spittoon.” Now at that time the legs of couches and the legs of chairs scratched ground that had been treated. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to wrap them round with a piece of cloth.”

BD.5.246

Now at that time monks leant against a wall that had been treated; the colour was spoiled. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not lean against a wall that has been treated. Whoever should lean against one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, a reclining board.”² The reclining board scratched the ground underneath, it destroyed the wall above. “I allow you, monks, to wrap it round with a piece of cloth at the lower and the upper (ends).”

Now at that time monks³ were (too) scrupulous to lie down on a place for treading on with washed feet.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to lie down (in such a place), having spread a sheet.”⁵

ALLOWANCE FOR MEALS FOR THE ORDER, ETC.

Kd.16.21.1

Then the Lord, having stayed at Āḷavī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Rājagaha. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Rājagaha. The ¹ Either with whitewash, black colouring or red chalk; cf. Kd.15.11.6; Kd.16.8.1; Kd.16.17.1. Kd.1.25.15 makes it appear as if black were for the ground and red for the walls. ² Mentioned at Kd.1.25.15, Kd.1.25.16. ³ Omitted in Oldenberg’s text. ⁴ dhotapādakā. Vin-a.1249 gives the above meaning, and says that dhotapādake is also a reading. ⁵ paccattharivā. On “sheet,” paccattharaṇa, see BD.2.34, n.1; BD.2.46, n.3.

Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Great Grove at the squirrels' feeding place. Now at that time Rājagaha was short of food. People were not able to make a meal for the Order (but) they wanted to make a meal for special (monks),¹ an invitation (-meal),² food (allowed by) ticket,³ (food given) on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon, (given) on an Observance day, (given) on the day after an Observance day. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, a meal for an Order, a meal for a special (monk), an invitation (meal) ... (food given) on the day after an Observance day."⁴

AGREEMENT FOR AN ISSUER OF MEALS

Now at that time the group of six monks, having chosen the sweet foods for themselves, gave poor foods to (other) monks. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk possessed of five qualities as issuer of meals:⁵ one who would not follow a wrong course from desire ... from hatred ... from stupidity ... from fear, and one who would know what is issued and what is not issued. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon: First, a monk should be asked ...⁶ '... Thus do I understand this'."

BD.5.247

Vin.2.176

Then it occurred to the monks who were issuers of meals: "Now, how should a meal be issued?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to issue (the food) after having put it into heaps and having tied on a ticket or a leaf."⁷

AGREEMENT FOR AN ASSIGNER OF LODGINGS

Now at that time there was no assigner of lodgings⁸ for an Order.⁹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as assigner of lodgings ... and one who would know what is assigned and what is not assigned. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ... ¹ '... Thus do I understand this'."

Kd.16.21.2

¹ Cf. Kd.6.19.1 and Bu-Pc.46. ² Defined at Vin.4.100. ³ For this and the next three see notes at BD.2.313-314. ⁴ Vin-a.1250 says that this allowance was made by the Lord for times of plenty when people can again give food to a whole Order. ⁵ Dabba was agreed upon for this office at Kd.14.4 above, and at Bu-Ss.8 (Vin.3.158 = Vin.2.75). See also AN.iii.275. ⁶ As in Kd.14.9 ⁷ paṭṭikā. Buddhaghosa, reading pattikā, says it is a leaf (paṇṇa) of a bamboo, reed or palm. ⁸ This office was also given to Dabba. ⁹ The following list of offices also occurs at AN.iii.274-AN.iii.275.

Now at that time there was no keeper of the storeroom² for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, ... and one who would, know what is guarded and what is not guarded. And thus, monks, should he be agreed upon ... '... Thus do I understand this'."

Now at that time there was no acceptor of robes³ for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow ... and one who would know what is taken and what is not taken ... '... Thus do I understand this'."

Now at that time there was no distributor of robe material⁴ ... no distributor of conje⁵ ... no distributor of fruit for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks ... and one who would know what is distributed and what is not distributed ... '... Thus do I understand this'."

BD.5.248

Now at that time there was no distributor of solid food⁶ for an Order. The solid food, not being distributed, was lost. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you ... and one who would know what is distributed and what is not distributed ... '... Thus do I understand this'."

AGREEMENT ON ONE TO DISPOSE OF TRIFLES

Kd.16.21.3

Now at that time trifling accessories had accrued in the storeroom of an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to agree upon a monk endowed with five qualities as disposer of trifles:⁷ ... one who would know what is disposed of and what is not disposed of ... '... Thus do I understand this.' Each needle is to be given by the monk who is the disposer of trifles, pairs of scissors are to be given, sandals are to be given, waistbands ... shoulder straps ... strainers ... regulation water pots¹ ... cross-seams² ... short cross-seams ... circular seams ... short circular seams ... braiding³ ... binding is to be given. If there comes to be ghee or oil or honey or molasses for an Order, it may be given to be partaken of at once;⁴ if there is need for it yet again, it may be given yet again; if there is need for it yet again, it may be given yet again.”

Vin.2.177

¹ As in Kd.4.4.3. ² bhaṇḍāgārika, as at Vin.1.284. ³ cīvarapaṭiggāhaka, as at Vin.1.283. ⁴ cīvarabhājaka, as at Vin.1.285. ⁵ Mentioned at Vin.4.38, Vin.4.155. ⁶ Mentioned at Vin.4.38, Vin.4.155. ⁷ Mentioned at Kd.15.13.1.

AGREEMENT ON AN ACCEPTER OF OUTER CLOAKS

Now at that time there was no accepter of outer cloaks⁵ ... accepter of bowls⁶ for an Order. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon ... one who would know what is taken and what is not taken. And thus, monks, ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..’”

Now at that time an Order had no superintendent of monastery attendants. The monastery attendants, not being superintended, did not do the work (properly). They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to agree upon a superintendent of monastery attendants ... and one who knows what is superintended and what is not superintended ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..’”

BD.5.249

Now at that time an Order had no superintendent for the novices. The novices, not being superintended, did not do the work (properly) ... ‘... Thus do I understand this..’”

The Sixth Section: that on Lodgings

THIS IS ITS KEY

At that time a dwelling-place had not been permitted by the best of Awakened Ones;
these, disciples of the Conqueror went out

¹ Mentioned at Kd.15.13.1. ² See Kd.8.12.2. ³ See BD.2.409, n.7, BD.2.409, n.8; BD.4.354, n.7, BD.4.354, n.8; and Kd.15.11.3. ⁴ Cf. Bu-NP.23 and Kd.6.15.10, when these things—medicines—may not be stored for more than seven days. ⁵ sāṭhiyagāhāpaka.

⁶ See Bu-NP.22 \(Vin.3.246–Vin.3.247\).

from this and that place—(their) habitation.¹ /

A merchant householder, having seen them, said this to the monks:

“If I were to have (dwelling-places) built, would you stay (in them)?” They asked the Leader. /

Dwelling-place, curved house, and long house, mansion, cave, he allowed five (kinds of) abodes. The merchant had dwelling-places built. /

People had a dwelling-place built doorless, unclosed, door, doorpost and lintel, hollow like a mortar and so on, /

Vin.2.178

Hole and cord for pulling through, post for a bolt, and “monkey’s head,” a pin, a stick, a key of copper, wood, horn, /

And just a bolt and a pin, roofing smeared inside and out, railing, lattice and stick, cloth and about matting, /

Solid bench, and couch of split bamboo, bierlike long couch, with slats, and curved legs, removeable, rectangular, tall ones, /

And three-sided, plaited chair, cloth chair, sheep-footed, emblic myrobalan,² wooden,³ stool, and just a straw chair, /

One a high one,⁴ and a snake,⁵ supports,⁶ and supports of eight finger-breadths,

BD.5.250

thread, squares, cotton cloth, cotton quilt, half (the size of a man’s) body, /

Festival and also mattresses, woven cloth, and also lodgings, covered, it fell from below, and having removed they carried away, /

And line, and the Truth-finder⁷ allowed the outline of the hand, and also other sects in a dwelling-place,⁸ grain-husk, and soft clay, /

What exudes from trees, a spoon, a wall, mustard powder (and) oil of beeswax, to sponge over the thick (places), rough, clay

(and the excrement of) earthworms,⁹ /

What exudes from trees, and a bold design, low, and a piling, they ascended, they fell off, thronged, half-wall, again three, /

In a small (one), and a buttress,¹⁰ let in the rain, cry of distress,¹¹ peg, ¹ Text reads āvāsā tamhā te; Sinhalese and Siamese editions. vāsā te. Oldenberg, Vin.2.323 says “the meter is quite correct if we expunge tamhā te.” ² Siamese edition, which I follow, reads āmalakā phalakā. Vin.2.323 suggests āmalaka-phalakā. Text reads āmaṭāmalaka; Sinhalese edition āmalāmalakā. ³ Siamese edition, which I follow, reads āmalakā phalakā. Vin.2.323 suggests āmalaka-phalakā. Text reads āmaṭāmalaka; Sinhalese edition āmalāmalakā. ⁴ Reading ucce ca ahi with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of Text’s uccā hi. ⁵ Reading ucce ca ahi with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, instead of Text’s uccā hi. ⁶ I suggest pādakā, instead of Text’s atipādakā and Sinhalese and Siamese editions. pādāni, legs. ⁷ Siamese edition omits tathāgata and reads instead titthiyā setakālavihāre cāpi. Sinhalese edition has tathāgato but not titthiyā, reading tathāgato setakālavihāre pi. ⁸ Siamese edition omits tathāgata and reads instead titthiyā setakālavihāre cāpi. Sinhalese edition has tathāgato but not titthiyā, reading tathāgato setakālavihāre pi. ⁹ Siamese edition reads laṇḍumattikam, Sinhalese laṇḍa-. ¹⁰ Here kuḍḍapāda. ¹¹ Reading vissaraṃ with Siamese edition instead of saraṃ.

and bamboo and cord for robes, verandah, and about a screen, / Balustrade, powdered grass—the method should be done in the way below,¹ in the open air, became tepid, hall, and as below, vessel, / Dwelling-place, and just a porch, little hall for a fire in a cell, monasteries, porches again, the method should be done just (as) below. / Plaster,² and faithful Anāthapiṇḍika went to the Cool Grove, things seen, he invited the Leader with the Order. /
 He enjoined on the way, a group built a monastery, repairs at Vesālī, in front of and taking possession of, /
 Who is worthy of the best food? and the partridge, not to be greeted, taken possession of, inside a house, cotton, he visited Sāvathī, /
 He prepared a monastery, and an uproar in a refectory, ill, and a good sleeping place, pretexts, the seventeen there, / “Now, by whom?” “Now, how?” he distributed according to the accommodation in the dwelling-places, BD.5.251 and in cells, an additional share, shares need not be given if one is not willing, / Outside a boundary, and for all time, three (times for) assignment of lodgings, and Upananda, he praised, standing, equal seats, /
 Those entitled to seats of an equal (height) broke them, groups of three (and) for a group of two,³ a long (seat) for those not entitled to seats of an equal (height), to make use of a verandah,⁴ /
 Grandmother,⁵ and not far, and distributed, Kiṭāgiri, Vin.2.179
 Ālavī: in heaps, on walls, door, socket, /
 And window-hole, whitewash, black colouring, red chalk, roofing, joining, bar, broken (parts), doing up, twenty, thirty and for life, / Completed, not built, incomplete,⁶ for six or five years if it is a small one, and seven or eight if it is a curved house, ten and twelve for a large one, /
 A whole dwelling-place, of one, they made another live (there), what belongs to an Order,
 outside a boundary, and for all time,
 he goes away, and they leave the Order, /
 And passed away, and (pretended to be) a novice, disavowers of the training, extreme,

¹ See e.g. “key” to Kd.15 (towards end of Vin.2.143 and again towards top of BD.5.144). ² This should read sudha as in Kd.16.3.11 above, and as in Siamese edition, and as suggested at Vin.2.323, and not suddha. ³ Reading with Sinhalese edition ca duvaggikaṃ, as surmised would be right at Vin.2.323, instead of text’s catuvaggikaṃ. Siamese reads ca duvaggikā.

⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese editions. ālindaraṃ paribhuñjitaṃ, as for Kd.16.14, instead of text’s taṃ dvinnaraṃ, paribhuñjisu. ⁵ Sinhalese ayyakā ca, as surmised would be right at Vin.2.323. Siamese ayyikā ca; text ayyā ca. ⁶ There is no sabbaṃ, whole, in the context to which this refers (i.e. Kd.16.17.1). Should read vippaṃ as does Siamese (for vippakataṃ).

mad, and unhinged, pains, not seeing an offence, /
 Not making amends for, wrong view, eunuchs, as it were by theft, other sects, animals, (slayers) of mother, of father, and of one perfected, seducers, /
 Schismatics, shedders of (a Truth-finder's) blood, and then hermaphrodites,
 "Do not let the Order suffer"—the work should be given to another, /
 And when (yet) unfinished to another;
 if he goes away when it is built it is still in his (charge);
 if he leaves the Order, passes away, and pretends to be a novice, /
 And disavows the training,
 (pretends to have committed an) extreme (offence and to be) a eunuch, the Order itself becomes the owner; if he is mad, unhinged, in pain, / (Suspended for) not seeing, for not making amends for, (for not giving up) a wrong view—they are still in his (charge);
 Eunuch, and as it were by theft, member of another sect, animal, matricide, parricide,
 Slayer of one perfected, and then a seducer, schismatic, shedder of (a Truth-finder's) blood, hermaphrodite—
 if he pretends thus, the Order itself becomes the owner. /
 They conveyed, elsewhere, scrupulous, and fell into decay, woollen blanket, and woven cloths, hide, drapery, a cloth, and they trod upon, / Damp, sandals, should not spit, they scratched,¹ and they leant against, reclining board, even then it scratched,² about spreading where washed,³ /
 They were unable to in Rājagaha, poor, issuer of meals,
 "Now, how?" assigner, agreement upon a storeroom keeper, /
 And then accepter, distributor, and conje, distributor of fruit, and even a distributor of solid food, disposer of trifles, /
 And even an accepter of outer cloaks, likewise an accepter of bowls, and agreement upon a superintendent of monastery attendants and of novices. /
 The Leader who has overcome all, knower of the worlds, his mind benevolent, (is one) to meditate upon and have insight into the need for abodes and ease.

BD.5.252

Vin.2.180

¹ Sinhalese and Siamese Likhanti; text khīlanti; Kd.16.20.2 vilikhanti. ² Siamese likhat'eva; Sinhalese likhaṇ evā; text khalite vā; Kd.16.20.2 vilikhati. ³ Referring to the dhotapādaka at Kd.16.20.2.

17. SCHISM IN AN ORDER (SAṄGHABHEDA)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

ON THE GOING FORTH OF THE SIX SAKYANS

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Anupiyā. Anupiyā¹ is a little town² of the Mallas.³ Now at that time many distinguished Sakyan young men had gone forth in imitation of the Lord who had gone forth. Now at that time Mahānāma the Sakyan and Anuruddha the Sakyan were two brothers. Anuruddha the Sakyan was delicately nurtured. He had three palaces,⁴ one for the cold weather, one for the hot, one for the rains. Being waited on for four months in the palace for the rains by female musicians, he did not come down from that palace. Then it occurred to Mahānāma the Sakyan:⁵ “At present many distinguished Sakyan young men have gone forth in imitation of the Lord who has gone forth, but no one from our family has gone forth from home into homelessness. Suppose I should go forth, or Anuruddha?” Then Mahānāma the Sakyan approached Anuruddha the Sakyan; having approached, he spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “At present, dear Anuruddha, many distinguished Sakyan young men ... but no one from our family has gone forth from home into homelessness. Well now, either you go forth or I will go forth.”⁶

Kd.17.1.1
BD.5.253

¹ Neuter form used here, although the locative is formed as though the word were feminine. Cf. Ja.i.65-Ja.i.66, Bv-a.284 which say the Bodhisatta spent the first week after he had gone forth in the mango grove at Anupiyā. ² See BD.2.63, n.2. ³ It is more usual to name the exact locality in the place where the Lord was staying. ⁴ Cf. Kd.1.7.1 where the same is said of Yasa. ⁵ At AN.i.26 he is called chief of those who give sumptuous alms. ⁶ Quoted Dhp-a.i.133; AN-a.i.191.

“But I have been delicately nurtured, I am not able to go forth from home into homelessness.¹ You go forth.”

Kd.17.1.2

“Come along, dear Anuruddha, I will instruct you in what belongs to the household life. First the fields have to be ploughed;² having had them ploughed they must be sown; having had them sown water must be led in to them; having had water led in to them the water must be led away; having led the water away you must have the weeds dug up; having had the weeds dug up you must get the crop reaped; having had the crop reaped you must have it harvested; having had it harvested you must have it made into stooks; having had it made into stooks you must have it threshed; having had it threshed you must have the straw winnowed; having had the straw winnowed you must have the chaff winnowed; having had the chaff winnowed you must have it sifted; having had it sifted you must have it³ brought in;⁴ having had it brought in it is to be done just the same the next year, and it is to be done just the same the next year.”

BD.5.254

Vin.2.181

“The operations do not stop,⁵ no end to the operations is to be seen. When will the operations stop? When will an end to the operations be seen? When will we, possessed of and provided with the fivefold strand of sense pleasures, amuse ourselves unconcernedly?”

“But, dear Anuruddha, the operations do not stop, no end to the operations is to be seen. Even when our fathers and grandfathers passed away the operations were not stopped.”

“Well now, you understand⁶ just what belongs to the household life. I will go forth from home into homelessness.”

Then Anuruddha the Sakyan approached his mother; having approached, he spoke thus to his mother: “I, mother, want to go forth from home into homelessness. Consent to my going forth from home into homelessness.”⁷ When he had spoken thus, the mother of Anuruddha the Sakyan spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan:

¹ Quoted Dhp-a.i.135–Dhp-a.i.136. ² Quoted Dhp-a.i.136. Cf. similar list of operations at Ja.i.215 and another at AN.i.241. ³ I.e. the grain, or the good grass. ⁴ atiharati, as at Nuns’ Bi-Pc.7 (also of grain). ⁵ na khīyanti, do not wear away, become exhausted or used up. ⁶ Text reads upajāna; Vin-a.1274 upajānāhi. ⁷ Cf. Dhp-a.i.137. Boys under fifteen had to obtain their parents’ consent for going forth, Vin.1.79, Vin.1.83.

“You two boys, dear Anuruddha, are dear to me,¹ beloved, agreeable. In the case of your death I would be unwillingly separated from you. So how can I, while you are still living, allow a going forth from home into homelessness?” And a second time ... And a third time Anuruddha the Sakyan spoke thus to his mother: ... the mother of Anuruddha the Sakyan spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “... how can I, while you are still living, allow a going forth from home into homelessness?”

BD.5.255

Now at that time Bhaddiya² the Sakyan chieftain was ruling over the Sakyans and was a friend of Anuruddha the Sakyan. Then the mother of Anuruddha the Sakyan thinking: “Now this Bhaddiya ... is a friend of Anuruddha; he will not be able to go forth from home into homelessness,” spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “If, dear Anuruddha, Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain goes forth from home into homelessness you can go forth likewise.”³

Kd.17.1.3

Then Anuruddha the Sakyan approached Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain; having approached, he spoke thus to Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain: “My going forth, friend, is dependent on yours.”

“If your going forth, friend, is dependent on mine, let it be independent. I, with you ...⁴ Go forth according to your wish.”

“Come, friend, we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

“I, friend, am not able to go forth from home into homelessness. Whatever else I am able to do for you, that will I do. You go forth.”

Vin.2.182

“My mother, friend, spoke thus to me: ‘If, dear Anuruddha, Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain goes forth from home into homelessness, you can go forth likewise.’ But, friend, these words were spoken by you: ‘If your going forth is dependent on mine, let it be independent. I, with you ... Go forth according to your wish.’ Come, friend, we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

¹ Cf. Vin.3.13; MN.ii.58. ² He was, as said at Ud.ii.10, AN-a.i.192, the son of Kālī of the Godhas, see Psalms of the Brethren p.315, n.2. Bhaddiya’s verses are at Thag.842–Thag.865. At AN.i.23 he is called chief among the disciples of high family. AN-a.i.192 says he went forth with Anuruddha. ³ Cf. Dhp-a.i.137. ⁴ Vin-a.1274 says that out of affection for his friend he wanted to say, “I, with you, will go forth,” but he was not able to finish the sentence as the greed for ruling overcame his heart.

Now at that time people were speakers of truth, pledged to the truth. Then Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain spoke thus to Anuruddha the Sakyan: “Wait, friend, for seven years. After seven years we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

BD.5.256

“Seven years are too long, friend, I am not able to wait for seven years.”

“Wait, friend, for six years ... live ... four ... three ... two years ... for one year.”

“One year is too long, friend, I am not able to wait one year.”

“Wait, friend, for seven months. After seven months we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

“Seven months are too long, friend, I am not able to wait seven months.”

“Wait, friend, for six ... five ... four ... three ... two months ... one month ... for half a month, after half a month we will both go forth from home into homelessness.”

“Half a month is too long, friend, I am not able to wait half a month.”

“Wait, friend, for seven days until I hand over the kingdom to my sons and brothers.”

“Seven days are not too long, friend, I will wait.”

Kd.17.1.4

Then¹ Bhaddiya the Sakyan chieftain and Anuruddha² and Ānanda and Bhagu³ and Kimbila⁴ and Devadatta with Upāli the barber⁵ as the seventh, as they had often previously gone out to a ground in a pleasure grove with a fourfold army,⁶ so did they (now) go out with a fourfold army. Having gone far, having sent back the army, having passed into other territory, having taken off their ornaments, having tied them up into a bundle with their upper robes,⁷ they spoke thus to Upāli the barber: “Come, good Upāli, return, this will be enough for your livelihood.” Then it occurred to Upāli the barber as he was going back: “The Sakyans are fierce. Thinking: ‘This one has made the young men come forth,’ they may even kill me. But if these young Sakyan men will go forth from home into homelessness, why should not I?”

¹ For the following incident cf. Dhp-a.i.137f. ² See BD.4.501. ³ See BD.4.428, BD.4.500.

⁴ See BD.4.501. ⁵ See Vin.4.308 and BD.3.344, n.2. ⁶ See definition of “army” at Vin.4.105.

⁷ As at Vin.3.208, Vin.4.162.

Having loosened the bundle, having hung the goods up on a tree, and having said: “Whoever sees it, it is given (to him), let him take it,”¹ he approached the young Sakyan men. These young Sakyan men saw Upāli the barber coming in the distance; having seen him, then spoke thus to Upāli the barber: “Why have you, good Upāli, returned?”

Vin.2.183
BD.5.257

“Now, it occurred to me, young gentlemen, as I was going back, ‘The Sakyans are fierce ... they may even kill me. But if these young Sakyan men will go forth from home into homelessness, why should not I?’ So I, young gentlemen, having loosened the bundle ... ‘... let him take it,’ returned again from there.”

“You did well, good Upāli, in that you did not go back. The Sakyans are fierce ... they might even have killed you.” Then these young Sakyan men, taking Upāli the barber, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these young Sakyan men spoke thus to the Lord:

“We, Lord, are Sakyans, we are proud. Lord, this barber, Upāli, has been our attendant for a long time. May the Lord let him go forth first. We will greet him, rise up before him, salute him with joined palms, and do the proper duties. Thus will the Sakyan pride be humbled in us Sakyans.” Then the Lord let Upāli the barber go forth first, and afterwards these young Sakyan men. Then the venerable Bhaddiya within one year realised the threefold knowledge,² the venerable Anuruddha obtained deva-sight,³ the venerable Ānanda realised the fruit of stream attainment, Devadatta acquired ordinary psychic power.⁴

Now at that time⁵ the venerable Bhaddiya, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, constantly uttered this utterance: “Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!” Then several monks approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at

Kd.17.1.5

¹ As at Vin.3.208. ² AN-a.i.191 says Bhaddiya attained arahantship in the same year (as he went forth). ³ At AN.i.23 called chief of monks of deva-sight. ⁴ AN-a.i.191 says Devadatta won the eight attainments; and adds that Bhagu and Kimbila attained arahantship later.

⁵ As at Ud.ii.10. The following incident, with a summary of the preceding sections, also forms the introductory story to the 10th Jātaka.

a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

BD.5.258

“Lord, the venerable Bhaddiya, dwelling in a forest utters this utterance: ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’ Doubtless, Lord, the venerable Bhaddiya fares the Brahma-faring dissatisfied,¹ and (although) dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, he utters this utterance, ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’ while he is recalling the former joys of kingship.”

Then the Lord addressed a certain monk, saying: “Come you, monk, in my name address the monk Bhaddiya saying: ‘The Teacher, reverend Bhaddiya, is summoning you’.”

Vin.2.184

“Very well, Lord,” and that monk, having answered the Lord in assent, approached the venerable Bhaddiya; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Bhaddiya: “The Teacher, reverend Bhaddiya, is summoning you.”

Kd.17.1.6

“Very well, your reverence,” and the venerable Bhaddiya, having answered that monk in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord spoke thus to the venerable Bhaddiya as he was sitting down at a respectful distance: “Is it true, as is said, that you, Bhaddiya, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, are constantly uttering this utterance, ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’?”

“Yes, Lord.”

“What circumstances were you, Bhaddiya, taking into account when, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, you constantly uttered this utterance, ‘Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!’?”

“Formerly, Lord, when I was a ruler there was a fully appointed guard both within my private quarters and outside my private quarters, there was a fully appointed guard both within the town and outside the town, and there was a fully appointed guard within the country districts. But I, Lord, although being guarded and warded thus, dwelt afraid, anxious fearful, alarmed.² But now I, Lord, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, am unafraid, not anxious, not fearful, not alarmed. I am unconcerned, unruffled,¹ dependent on others,² with a mind become as a wild creature's.³ This, Lord, was the circumstance I was taking into account when, dwelling in a forest and at the root of a tree and in an empty place, I constantly uttered this utterance, 'Ah, what happiness! Ah, what happiness!'

¹ Quoted Ud-a.161. ² Same quartet of words below, Kd.17.2.1; Kd.17.3.4, Kd.17.3.7.

BD.5.259

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

"In whom there inly lurk no spites.
Who has overcome becoming and not becoming thus or thus,⁴
Him, gone past fear, blissful, sorrowless,
The devas do not win to see."

THE STORY OF DEVADATTA

Then the Lord, having stayed at Anupiyā for as long as he found suiting, set out on almstour for Kosambī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Kosambī. The Lord stayed there at Kosambī in Ghosita's monastery. Then as Devadatta was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: "Whom⁵ now could I please, so that because he is pleased with me, much gain and honour would accrue (to me)?"⁶ Then it occurred to Devadatta:

Kd.17.2.1

¹ pannaloma. Cf. lomam pāṭeti as at Kd.11.6.1. ² paradattavutta. Vin-a.1275, MN.i.450, Ud.19 read paradavutto, with variant readings Ud-a.163 says "living on the gifts of others in respect of robes and so on." MN-a.iii.167 explains by parehi dinnavuttino parato laddhena yāpentā, whose livelihood is given by others, subsisting on what is obtained from another. WOODWARD, Verses of Uplift, p.24, n.3 says that "such meanings are hardly applicable in the context." He translates as "lightsome," following Pali-English Dictionary's suggestion that parada is "fond of" with vutta "being prepared," active, alert. I choose "dependent on others," following the Commentaries, and as balancing his former dependence on those others who guarded him. ³ Same quartet of words as at MN.i.450, MN.ii.121. MN-a.iii.167 seems to explain the last word, migabhūtena cetasā, as not expecting or hoping for anything. ⁴ itibhavābhavataṃ. Here Vin-a.1275 and Ud-a.164 explain bhava and vibhava much as do Snp-a.20, SN-a.iii.295, MN-a.iii.223, and say that one is freed from this state of becoming this or that by means of the four ways. Cf. also fuller explanation at Ud-a.164, the rather different explanation at MN-a.ii.74, and note that Vin-a.1275 says that vibhava and abhava are identical in meaning. This line occurs at Ud.ii.10 and Snp.6. Cf. itibhavābhavakathā at Vin.4.164 and parallel passages mentioned at BD.2.p.82, n.3. ⁵ Read kaṃ for text's kiṃ. ⁶ Cf. Ja.i.185–Ja.i.186.

Vin.2.185 “This Prince Ajātasattu is young and also has an auspicious future. What BD.5.260 now if I were to make Prince Ajātasattu pleased, so that because he is pleased with me, much gain and honour would accrue (to me)?”

Then Devadatta, having packed away his lodging, taking his bowl and robe, set out for Rājagaha; in due course he arrived at Rājagaha.¹ Then Devadatta, having thrown off his own form, having assumed the form² of a young boy clad in a girdle of snakes,³ became manifest in Prince Ajātasattu’s lap. Then Prince Ajātasattu was afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed.⁴ Then Devadatta spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu: “Are you, prince, afraid of me?”

“Yes, I am afraid. Who are you?”

“I am Devadatta.”

“If you, honoured sir, are really master Devadatta, please become manifest in your own form.” Then Devadatta, having thrown off the young boy’s form, stood, wearing his outer cloak and (other) robes and carrying his bowl, before Prince Ajātasattu. Then Prince Ajātasattu, greatly pleased with this wonder of psychic power on Devadatta’s part, morning and evening⁵ went to wait on him with five hundred chariots, and five hundred offerings of rice cooked in milk were brought as a gift of food.⁶ Then there arose to Devadatta, overcome by gains, honours and fame,⁷ his mind obsessed by them, some such longing as this: “It is I who will lead the Order of monks.”⁸ But at the very occurrence of this thought Devadatta declined in his psychic power.⁹

Kd.17.2.2

Now at that time¹⁰ Kakudha¹¹ the Koliyan,¹² the venerable Moggallāna the Great’s attendant, had just died and had arisen in a certain mind-made¹³

¹ This episode, as far as where Devadatta stands before Ajātasattu, is also told at Dhp-a.i.139.

² Cf. Vin.1.3, where Mucalinda assumed the form of a brahmin youth. ³ Vin-a.1275 says having bound a snake round the hips. Dhp-a.i.139 elaborates that there were four poisonous snakes, i.e. one on each hand and foot; also one hung round the neck, one was made into a coil on the head, and one arranged over one shoulder. ⁴ As above, Kd.17.1.6. ⁵ As at SN.ii.242. ⁶ Cf. Vin.3.15. ⁷ As at SN.ii.228f. Cf. Lābhasakkāra Saṃyutta, SN.ii.225–SN.ii.244.

⁸ Cf. Dhp-a.i.139. At DN.ii.100 Gotama tells Ānanda that this thought does not occur to the Truth-finder. ⁹ See E.J. THOMAS, Life of Buddha, p.132ff. ¹⁰ This incident to the end of Kd.17.2.4 is also told at AN.iii.122–AN.iii.126. ¹¹ See note at GS.iii.95. ¹² Spelt Koliya above. On this tribe see C.H.I. i.177 and B.C. LAW, Tribes in Ancient India, p.290ff. ¹³ manomaya, as again at AN.iii.192.

body, and such was the reinstatement of his individuality¹ that it was like two or three Magadhan village fields,² yet even with that reinstatement of individuality he injured neither himself nor another. Then Kakudha the young deva approached the venerable Moggallāna the Great; having approached, having greeted the venerable Moggallāna the Great, he stood at a respectful distance. As he was standing at a respectful distance, the young deva Kakudha spoke thus to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

BD.5.261

“To Devadatta, honoured sir, overcome by gains, honours and fame, his mind obsessed by them, some such longing as this arose: ‘It is I who will lead the Order of monks’. But, honoured sir, at the very occurrence of this thought Devadatta declined in his psychic power.” Thus spoke Kakudha the young deva. Having spoken thus, having greeted the venerable Moggallāna the Great, keeping his right side towards him he vanished then and there. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to the Lord:

Vin.2.186

“Kakudha the Koliyan, Lord, my attendant, has just died and has arisen in a certain mind-made body ... Then Kakudha the young deva approached me ... keeping his right side towards me, he vanished then and there.”

“But, Moggallāna, does Kakudha the young deva so compass your mind with his mind for you to know that whatever Kakudha the young deva says, all that is so and not otherwise?”

“Lord, Kakudha the young deva so compasses my mind with his mind for me to know that whatever Kakudha the young deva says, all that is so and not otherwise.”

“Mind what you say, Moggallāna, mind what you say,³ Moggallāna. This foolish man⁴ will now betray himself, by himself.

ON THE FIVE TEACHERS

“Moggallāna, these five teachers are found in the world.⁵ What five?

Kd.17.2.3

BD.5.262

¹ attabhāvapaṭilābha. AN-a.iii.277 explains attabhāva by sarīra, body. ² Sizes of these given at AN-a.iii.277. ³ As at MN.i.502. ⁴ I.e. Devadatta. ⁵ Sections Kd.17.2.3, Kd.17.2.4 repeated below Kd.17.3.10.

“This is a case, Moggallāna, when some teacher, not pure in moral habit, pretends ‘I am pure in moral habit,’ and he says, ‘My moral habit is pure, clean, untarnished.’ Disciples know this about him: ‘This worthy teacher, not pure in moral habit pretends ... untarnished.’ But they think: ‘If we should tell this to householders, he would not like it, and how could we carry out¹ what he would not like? Moreover he consents to (accept)² the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings and medicines for the sick. Whatever anyone³ shall do, even by that shall he be known.’ Moggallāna, disciples protect such a teacher in regard to moral habit and such a teacher expects protection from disciples in regard to moral habit.

Kd.17.2.4

“And again, Moggallāna, this is a case when some teacher, not pure in mode of livelihood, pretends ... not pure in teaching of dhamma, pretends ... not pure in exposition ... not pure in knowledge and vision, pretends ... Moggallāna, disciples protect such a teacher in regard to knowledge and vision, and such a teacher expects protection from disciples in regard to knowledge and vision. These, Moggallāna, are the five teachers found in the world.

Vin.2.187

“But I, Moggallāna, am pure in moral habit, I acknowledge that I am pure in moral habit, that my moral habit is pure, clean, untarnished. And disciples do not protect me in regard to moral habit and I do not expect protection from disciples in regard to moral habit. I am pure in mode of livelihood ... I am pure in dhamma teaching ... I am pure in exposition ... I am pure in knowledge and vision. I acknowledge that I am pure in knowledge and vision, that my knowledge and vision are pure, clean, untarnished. And disciples do not protect me in regard to knowledge and vision, and I do not expect protection from disciples in regard to knowledge and vision.”

Kd.17.2.5

Then the Lord, having stayed at Kosambī for as long as he found suiting, set out on a tour for Rājagaha. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Rājagaha. The Lord stayed there at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels' feeding place.¹ Then several monks approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, these monks spoke thus to the Lord:

BD.5.263

¹ samudācareyyāma, explained at AN-a.iii.278 as katheyyāma, say, speak. ² sammannati, Vin-a.1275 explaining as sammāneti, and AN-a.iii.278 as sammānaṃ karoti, he makes or produces honour, i.e. by accepting these gifts. ³ tumo, explained by Vin-a.1275 as so, he, and by AN-a.iii.278 as esa ... eso (variant reading so), this one. Cf. tumo at Snp.890, Snp.908.

“Prince Ajātasattu, Lord, goes morning and evening to wait on Devadatta with five hundred chariots, and five hundred offerings of rice cooked in milk are brought as a gift of food.”

“Do not, monks, envy Devadatta's gains and honours and fame. For as long, monks, as Prince Ajātasattu goes morning and evening to wait on Devadatta with five hundred chariots and (as long as) five hundred offerings of rice cooked in milk are brought as a gift of food, there may be expected for Devadatta decline in skilled mental states, not growth. It is as if, monks, they were to throw² a bladder³ at a fierce dog's nose—as that dog, monks, would become much fiercer, even so, monks, for as long as Prince Ajātasattu goes morning and evening ... there may be expected for Devadatta decline in skilled mental states, not growth. Devadatta's gains, honours and fame⁴ bring about his own hurt, Devadatta's gains, honour and fame bring about his destruction. As, monks, a plantain bears fruit to its own hurt, bears fruit to its destruction, even so, monks, do Devadatta's gains, honours and fame bring about his own hurt, do Devadatta's gains, honours and fame bring about his destruction. As, monks, a bamboo ... a reed bears fruit to its own hurt ... even so, monks, do Devadatta's gains, honours and fame bring about ... his destruction. As, monks, a she-mule conceives to her own hurt, conceives to her destruction, even so, monks, do Devadatta's gains, honours and fame bring about ... his destruction.

Vin.2.188

“Truly its fruit the plantain does destroy,
Its fruit the bamboo, its fruit the reed;
So honour does destroy the fool,
Just as its embryo the mule.”⁵

¹ Cf. SN.ii.242 for this episode down to the end of the simile of the fierce dog. ² bhindeyyum is explained at SN-a.ii.212 by pakkhipeyyum. ³ pitta. See MORRIS, JOURNAL OF THE PALI TEXT SOCIETY 1893, p.4 and Ud-a.65. SN-a.ii.212 explains pitta as that of a bear or a fish.

⁴ Cf. SN.ii.241, AN.ii.73 to the end of the verse. ⁵ Quoted SN.i.154, Mi.166, Ne.130.

Told is the First Portion for Repeating

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

ACT OF INFORMING

BD.5.264

Now at that time the Lord was sitting down teaching dhamma surrounded by a large company, by a company which included the king.¹ Then Devadatta, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is now old, worn, stricken in years, he has lived his span and is at the close of his life;² Lord, let the Lord now be content to live devoted to abiding in ease here and now,³ let him hand over the Order of monks to me. It is I who will lead the Order of monks.”

“Enough, Devadatta, please do not lead the Order of monks.” And a second time ... And a third time Devadatta spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Lord is now old, worn, stricken in years ... It is I who will lead the Order of monks.”

“I, Devadatta, would not hand over the Order of monks even to Sāriputta and Moggallāna. How then could I to you, a wretched one to be vomited like spittle?”⁴

Vin.2.189

Then Devadatta, thinking: “The Lord in an assembly which included a king disparaged me by (using) the term, ‘one to be vomited like spittle,’ while he extolled Sāriputta and Moggallāna,” angry, displeased, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him.

Kd.17.3.2

And this was the first time that Devadatta felt malice towards the Lord. Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, let the Order carry out a (formal) act of Information¹ against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that whereas Devadatta's nature was formerly of one kind, now it is of another kind; and that whatever Devadatta should do by gesture and by voice, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order should be seen but in that only Devadatta should be seen. And thus, monks, should it be carried out: The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: 'Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, let the Order carry out an act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha, to the effect that whereas Devadatta's nature was formerly of one kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta should do ... in that only Devadatta should be seen. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The Order is carrying out the (formal) act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha, to the effect that ... in that only Devadatta should be seen. If the carrying out of the (formal) act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that ... in that only Devadatta should be seen is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The (formal) act of Information against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that ... in that only Devadatta should be seen is carried out by the Order. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this'."

¹ Cf. another version of this episode, as far as “the act of Information” at Dhp-a.i.139–Dhp-a.i.140. ² Stock, as at Vin.3.2, MN.i.82, Snp.p.50, Snp.p.92. ³ diṭṭhadhammasukhavihāra, as at Vin.1.341. ⁴ Text reads kheḷāpakassa, Vin-a.1275 kheḷāsaka. Vin-a.1275 explains: requisites accruing by means of an evil mode of livelihood should be ejected like spittle by the noble ones. That is why the Lord said “to be vomited like spittle,” kheḷāsaka, (to explain) that he (Devadatta) eats requisites of this nature.

BD.5.265

Then the Lord addressed the venerable Sāriputta, saying: "Well then, do you, Sāriputta, inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha."

"Formerly, Lord, I spoke praise of Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: 'Godhi's son is of great psychic power, Godhi's son is of great majesty.' How can I, Lord, inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha?"

"Was not the truth spoken by you, Sāriputta, when you spoke praise of Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: 'Godhi's son is of ... great majesty'?"

"Yes, Lord."

"Even so, Sāriputta, when you inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha it will be just as true."

¹ pakāsaniyakamma. Vinaya Texts iii.239, n.2 rightly says "This is not among the regular official acts of the Order as described in Kd.11," but it is wrong to say "it is not referred to by the Dhammapada Commentator" for it is mentioned at Dhp-a.i.140.

Kd.17.3.3 “Very well, Lord,” the venerable Sāriputta answered the Lord in assent.

BD.5.266 Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, let the Order agree for Sāriputta to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of such a kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta should do by gesture and by voice, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order should be seen, but in that only Devadatta should be seen.’ And thus, monks, should Sāriputta be agreed upon: First, Sāriputta should be asked; having been asked, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree for the venerable Sāriputta to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind ... in that only Devadatta should be seen.’ This is the motion. If the agreement upon Sāriputta to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha, saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind ... in that only Devadatta should be seen’ is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The venerable Sāriputta is agreed upon by the Order to inform against Devadatta in Rājagaha, saying: ‘Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind ... in that only Devadatta should be seen.’ ... It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

Vin.2.190

The venerable Sāriputta, (thus) agreed upon, having entered Rājagaha together with several monks, informed against Devadatta in Rājagaha to the effect that: “Formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta should do by gesture and by voice, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order should be seen, but in that only Devadatta should be seen.” Those people who were of little faith, not believing, who were of poor intelligence, spoke thus: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are jealous, they are jealous of Devadatta’s gains and honours.” But those people who had faith and were believing, who were wise, intelligent, spoke thus: “This can be no ordinary matter in that the Lord has Devadatta informed against in Rājagaha.”

THE STORY OF PRINCE AJĀTASATTU

Kd.17.3.4

Then Devadatta approached Prince Ajātasattu; having approached, he spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu: “Formerly,¹ prince, people were long-lived, now-days they are short-lived, and it is possible that you, while still a prince, might pass away. Well now, do you prince, having slain your father, become king. I, having slain the Lord, will become the Awakened One.” And Prince Ajātasattu, thinking: “Now, master Devadatta is of great psychic power, of great majesty; master Devadatta must know (what is right),” having fastened a dagger² against his thigh, at an early hour (although) afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed, entered the (king’s) private quarters forcibly. But the chief ministers in attendance in the private quarters saw Prince Ajātasattu at an early hour (although) afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed, entering the (king’s) private quarters forcibly. Seeing him, they laid hold of him. These examining him, and having seen the dagger bound against his thigh, spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu: “What is it that you, prince, want to do?”

BD.5.267

“I want to slay my father.”

“By whom are you being incited?”

“By master Devadatta.” Some chief ministers gave this opinion: “The Prince should be slain and Devadatta and all the monks should be slain.”³ Some chief ministers gave this opinion: “The monks should not be slain for the monks are not giving offence,⁴ but the Prince should be slain and Devadatta.” Some chief ministers gave this opinion: “The Prince should not be slain, nor Devadatta, the monks should not be slain. The king should be told and we will do whatever the king says.”

Kd.17.3.5

“Then these chief ministers, taking Prince Ajātasattu, approached King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha; having approached, they told this matter to King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha. He said: “What opinion, my good men, have the chief ministers formed?”

Vin.2.191

“Some chief ministers, Sire, gave this opinion ... Some chief ministers gave this opinion ... Some chief ministers gave this opinion: “The Prince should not be slain, nor Devadatta, the monks should not be slain. The king should be told and we will do whatever the king says’.”

¹ Quoted DhP-a.i.140, DN-a.135. ² potthanikaṃ. As at Vin.1.217, where translated “butcher’s knife.” ³ Quoted at DN-a.135. ⁴ aparajjhanti, as at Vin.3.162.

BD.5.268

“What, my good men, can the Awakened One or dhamma or the Order have to do (with this)? Has not the Lord already had Devadatta informed against in Rājagaha to the effect that formerly Devadatta’s nature was of one kind, now it is of another kind, and that whatever Devadatta may do by gesture or by speech, in that neither the Awakened One nor dhamma nor the Order is to be seen, but in that only Devadatta should be seen?”

Those chief ministers who had given their opinion thus: “The Prince should be slain and Devadatta and all the monks should be slain,” these he discharged.¹ Those chief ministers who had given their opinion thus: “The monks should not be slain, for the monks do not give any offence, but the prince should be slain and Devadatta,” these he set in lowly positions. Those chief ministers who had given their opinion thus: “The prince should not be slain, nor Devadatta, nor should the monks be slain. The king should be told and we will do whatever the king says,” these he set in high positions. Then King Seniya Bimbisāra of Magadha spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu:

“Why do you, prince, want to slay me?”

“Sire, I have need of a kingdom.”

“If it be that you, prince, have need of a kingdom, this kingdom is yours,” and he handed over the kingdom to Prince Ajātasattu.

SENDING ASSASSINS

Kd.17.3.6

Then Devadatta approached Prince Ajātasattu²; having approached, he spoke thus to Prince Ajātasattu:

“Your Majesty, command your men so that they deprive the recluse Gotama of life.” Then Prince Ajātasattu commanded his men, saying: “My good men, do whatever master Devadatta says.” Then Devadatta enjoined the men, saying: “Go along, friends, the recluse Gotama is staying at a certain place. Having deprived him of life, come back by a certain road,” and he set two men on that road, saying: “Whatever man comes alone along this road, having deprived him of life, come back by this road,” and having set four men on that road, saying: “Whatever couple of men come along by this road, having deprived them of life, come back by this road,” and having set eight men on that road, saying: “Whatever four men come along by this road, ... come back by this road,” and having set sixteen men on that road, he said: “Whatever eight men come along by this road, having deprived them of life, come back.”

¹ te abhabbe akāsi, he rendered them incapable (of holding an official position). ² Vinaya Texts iii.243, n.2 points out that Ajātasattu is not called “king” here, and that therefore the events described in this paragraph took place before he actually became king, and that the paragraph probably stood originally in some other connection. On the other hand, it should be noticed that Devadatta addresses him as mahārāja.

BD.5.269

Vin.2.192

Kd.17.3.7

Then that man who was alone, having grasped a sword and shield, having bound on a bow and quiver,¹ approached the Lord; having approached, when he was quite near the Lord he stood still, his body quite rigid² afraid, anxious, fearful, alarmed.³ The Lord saw that man standing still, his body quite rigid, afraid ... alarmed and seeing him, he spoke thus to that man: “Come, friend, do not be afraid.” Then that man, having put his sword and shield to one side, having laid down his bow and quiver, approached the Lord; having approached, having inclined his head to the Lord’s feet, he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, a transgression has overcome me, foolish, misguided, wrong that I was, in that I was coming here with my mind malignant,⁴ my mind on murder.⁵ Lord, may the Lord acknowledge for me the transgression as a transgression for the sake of restraint in the future.”

“Truly, friend, a transgression overcame you, foolish, misguided, wrong that you were, in that you were coming here, with your mind malignant, your mind on murder. But if you, friend, having seen the transgression as a transgression, confess according to the rule, we acknowledge it for you; for friend in the discipline of the noble, this is growth: whoever having seen a transgression as a transgression, confesses according to the rule, he attains restraint in the future.”⁶

Then the Lord talked a progressive talk⁷ to this man, that is to say talk on giving, talk on moral habit, talk on heaven ... sorrow, its uprising, stopping,

¹ Stock, as at e.g. AN.iii.93-AN.iii.94, MN.i.86, MN.ii.99. ² patthaddha, as at Thag.1074. Vin-a.1275, days “with his body motionless like a figure modelled in clay.” ³ As at Kd.17.1.6.

⁴ duṭṭhacitta, as at MN.iii.65. ⁵ vadhakacitta, as at DN.iii.72. ⁶ Cf. Vin.4.18-Vin.4.19, etc.

⁷ As at Vin.1.15.

BD.5.270 the Way. Just as a clean cloth without black specks will take a dye easily, even so (as he was sitting) on that very seat did dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arise to that man, that “whatever is of a nature to arise, all that is of a nature to stop.” Then that man¹ as one who has seen dhamma, attained dhamma, known dhamma, plunged into dhamma, having crossed over doubt, having put away uncertainty, having attained without another’s help to full confidence in the Teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord:

Vin.2.193 “Excellent, Lord: Lord, it is excellent. It is as if one were to set upright what has been upset ... thus is dhamma explained in many a figure by the Lord. So I, Lord, am going to the Lord for refuge and to dhamma and to the Order of monks. May the Lord accept me as a lay-follower going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

Kd.17.3.8 Then the Lord spoke thus to that man: “Do not you, friend, go by that road. Go by this road,” and he sent him off by another road.

Then those two men, thinking: ‘Why is that man who is alone so slow in coming?’ going along to meet him saw the Lord sitting at the root of a tree. Seeing him, they approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord talked a progressive talk to these ... to full confidence in the Teacher’s instruction, spoke thus to the Lord: “Excellent, Lord ... May the Lord accept us as lay-followers going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”

Kd.17.3.9 BD.5.271 Then the Lord spoke thus to these men: “Do not you, friends, go by that road. Go by this road,” and he sent them off by another road. Then those four men, thinking: ‘Why are these two men so slow in coming?’ ... and he sent them off by another road. Then those eight men, thinking: ‘Why are these four men so slow in coming?’ ... and he sent them off by another road. Then those sixteen men, thinking: ‘Why are these eight men so slow in coming?’ ... “May the Lord receive us as lay-followers going for refuge from this day forth for as long as life lasts.”²

Then that one man approached Devadatta³; having approached, he spoke thus to Devadatta: “Honoured sir, I am not able to deprive that Lord of life, that Lord is of great psychic power, of great might.”

¹ As at Vin.1.12. ² A version noticed by Oldenberg (Vin.2.324) adds that “the Lord spoke thus to those men ... sent them off by another road.” ³ From here, cf. Ja.v.333ff.

“All right, friend, do not you deprive the recluse Gotama of life. I myself will deprive the recluse Gotama of life.”

SHEDDING BLOOD

Now at that time the Lord was pacing up and down in the shade¹ of Mount Vulture Peak. Then Devadatta, having climbed Mount Vulture Peak, hurled down a great stone, thinking: “With this I will deprive the recluse Gotama of life.” But two mountain peaks, having met, crushed that stone, and (only) a fragment of it, having fallen down, drew blood on the Lord’s foot.² Then the Lord, having looked upwards, spoke thus to Devadatta: “You have produced great demerit, foolish man, in that you, with your mind malignant, your mind on murder, drew the Truth-finder’s blood.” Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “This, monks, is the first deed whose fruit comes with no delay³ accumulated by Devadatta since he, with his mind malignant, his mind on murder, drew the Truth-finder’s blood.”

Monks heard: “It is said that Devadatta schemed to murder the Lord,” and so these monks paced up and down on every side of the Lord’s dwelling-place doing their studies together with a loud noise, with a great noise for the protection, defence and warding of the Lord. The Lord heard the loud noise, the great noise, the noise of studying, and hearing it, he addressed the venerable Ānanda, saying:

“What on earth, Ānanda, is this loud noise, this great noise, this noise of studying?”

“Lord, the monks heard that Devadatta schemed to murder the Lord, and so, Lord, these monks are pacing up and down ... for the protection, defence and warding of the Lord. This, Lord, is the loud noise, the great noise, the noise of studying.”

“Well now, Ānanda, address these monks in my name, saying: ‘The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones.’”

¹ Cf. Vin.1.180. ² An echo of widespread folk-tradition, where the Hero, on his quest, passes with all speed through clashing rocks, sometimes sustaining an injury. ³ ānantarikakamma. Cf. Vism.177.

“Very well, Lord,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered the Lord in assent, approached those monks; having approached, he spoke thus to those monks: “The Teacher is summoning the venerable ones.”

“Very well, your reverence,” and these monks, having answered the venerable Ānanda in assent, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. The Lord spoke thus to these monks as they were sitting down at a respectful distance:

“This is impossible, monks, it cannot come to pass that anyone could deprive a Truth-finder of life by aggression; monks, Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack.¹ Monks, there are these five teachers found in the world. What five? ...² and I do not expect protection from disciples in respect of knowledge and vision. This is impossible, monks, it cannot come to pass that anyone could deprive a Truth-finder of life by aggression; monks, Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack. Go, monks, to your own dwelling-places³; Truth-finders, monks, do not need to be protected.”

SENDING OUT NĀLĀGIRI

Kd.17.3.11

Now at that time there was a fierce elephant in Rājagaha, a man-slayer, called Nālāgiri. Then Devadatta, having entered Rājagaha, having gone to the elephant stable, spoke thus to the mahouts: “We, my good fellows, are relations of the king. We are competent to put in a high position one occupying a lowly position and to bring about an increase in food and wages. Well now, good fellows, when the recluse Gotama is coming along this carriage road,⁴ then, having let loose this elephant, Nālāgiri, bring him down this carriage road.”

“Very well, honoured sir,” these mahouts answered Devadatta in assent.

BD.5.273
Vin.2.195

Then the Lord, having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood together with several monks. Then the Lord went along that carriage road. Then those mahouts saw the Lord coming along that carriage-road; seeing him, having let loose the elephant Nālāgiri, they brought him down that carriage-road. The elephant Nālāgiri saw the Lord coming from afar; seeing him, having lifted up his trunk, he rushed towards the Lord, his ears and tail erect. Those monks saw the elephant Nālāgiri coming in the distance; seeing him, they spoke thus to the Lord:

¹ anupakkama, “not by attack (from external enemies),” as at Critical Pali Dictionary. ² As at Kd.17.2.3, Kd.17.2.4 (to end). Read above “monks” instead of “Moggallāna.” ³ yathāvihāraṃ, as at Vin.4.15. ⁴ racchā. See BD.3.268, n.1.

“Lord, this elephant Nālāgiri, coming along this carriage-road, is a fierce man-slayer; Lord, let the Lord turn back, let the well-farer turn back.”

“Wait, monks, do not be afraid; this is impossible, monks, it cannot come to pass that anyone should deprive a Truth-finder of life by aggression; monks, Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack.” And a second time ... And a third time these monks spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, this elephant Nālāgiri, ... let the well-farer turn back.”

“Wait, monks, ... Truth-finders attain nibbāna not because of an attack.”

Kd.17.3.12

Now at that time people, having mounted up on to the long houses and the curved houses and the roofs, waited there. Those people who were of little faith, not believing, who were of poor intelligence,¹ these spoke thus: “This great recluse is indeed lovely; he will be hurt by the bull elephant.”² But those people who had faith and were believing, who were wise and intelligent, these spoke thus: “Soon, good sirs, the bull-elephant will come into conflict with the elephant (among men).”

Then the Lord suffused the elephant Nālāgiri with loving-kindness of mind. Then the elephant Nālāgiri, suffused by the Lord with loving-kindness of mind, having put down his trunk, approached the Lord; having approached, he stood in front of the Lord. Then the Lord, stroking the elephant Nālāgiri’s forehead with his right hand, addressed the elephant Nālāgiri with verses:

BD.5.274

“Do not, elephant,³ strike the elephant (among men), for painful, elephant, is the striking of the elephant (among men),
For there is no good bourn, elephant,⁴

¹ As at Kd.17.3.3. ² nāga. Cf. the matted hair ascetics’ speech at Kd.1.15.4. ³ kuñjara. Verses also at Ja.v.336. ⁴ kuñjara. Verses also at Ja.v.336.

for a slayer of the elephant (among men) when he is hence beyond.

“Be not proud,¹ be not wanton,² for the wanton reach not a good bourn;
Only that should you do by which you will go to a good bourn.”

Then the elephant Nālāgiri, having taken the dust of the Lord’s feet with his trunk, having scattered it over his head, moved back bowing while he gazed upon the Lord. Then the elephant Nālāgiri, having returned to the elephant stable, stood in his own place; and it was in this way that the elephant Nālāgiri became tamed. Now at that time people sang this verse:

Vin.2.196

“Some are tamed by stick, by goads and whips.
The elephant was tamed by the great seer without a stick, without a weapon.”³

Kd.17.3.13

People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How evil is this Devadatta, how inauspicious,⁴ in that he tried to murder the recluse Gotama who is of such great psychic power, of such great might,” and Devadatta’s gains and honours declined; the Lord’s gains and honours increased.

ON THE REQUEST FOR THE FIVE POINTS

Now at that time Devadatta, gains and honours lost,⁵ ate with his friends, having asked and asked among households. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying:

¹ mada ... pamāda, also at Snp.218. ² mada ... pamāda, also at Snp.218. ³ Cf. MN.ii.105, Thag.878. ⁴ alakkhika. Vin-a.1275-6 says “here it means he does not discriminate, he does not know. He does not know ‘I am doing an evil deed’.” Cf. version of Vin-a given at Vinaya Texts iii.250, n.1. In interpreting the word like the corresponding Sanskrit alakarṇika, as does Vinaya Texts iii, I prefer “inauspicious, unlucky,” to their “wretched,” with the sense of its being unlucky for donors to give alms to Devadatta. ⁵ Down to “It is true, Lord” = Bu-Pc.32 where this episode is used to lead up to the framing of a rule against a group-meal, see BD.2.306f. for notes.

“How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans eat, having asked and asked among households? Who is not fond of well-cooked things? Who does not like sweet things?”

Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can Devadatta eat with his friends, having asked and asked among households?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Is it true, as is said, that you, Devadatta, ate with your friends, having asked and asked among households?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked him, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well now, monks, I will lay down for monks the eating by a triad (of monks)¹ among households—founded on three reasons:² for the restraint of evil-minded³ individuals; for the living in comfort⁴ of well behaved monks⁵ lest those of evil desires should split the Order by means of a faction;⁶ out of compassion for families.⁷ In eating a group meal, one should be dealt with

¹ tikabhojana, a meal to be eaten by three people, so Vin-a.1276. See also SN-a.ii.178. Just as gaṇabhojana is a group-meal, so tikabhojana is a three-party meal. It is apparently meant that a “group” is larger than three monks, since at the end of Kd.17.3.13 it is specially said that one who eats a group-meal must be treated according to the rule. On gaṇabhojana see BD.2.307, n.1.

² The subject of a question put by Kassapa to Ānanda at SN.ii.218. ³ SN-a.ii.178, AN-a.ii.163 explain dummaṅkūnam by dussila, bad moral habit. ⁴ phāsuvihāra, cf. Vin.1.92, etc.

⁵ This and the first reason are among the ten reasons sometimes ascribed to the Lord for laying down a rule of training, as at Vin.3.21 and other Vinaya passages. Cf. also AN.i.99.

⁶ SN-a.ii.178 explains that as Devadatta and his friends split the Order by means of their evil desires, so too others of evil desires, on account of their bond as a group, having begged among families, were eating having made the group increase; so it was said “Lest they split the Order by means of that faction.” ⁷ AN.i.100 has gihīnam anukampāya pāpicchānam pakkhupacchedāya, translated at GS.i.84 “out of compassion for householders and to uproot the factions of the evilly disposed.” If “the idea is here, of course, lest any particular layman should be burdened by providing for many bhikkhus,” as stated at Vinaya Texts iii.251, n.3, it is the exact opposite of the opinion given at SN-a.ii.178 for allowing three monks to eat together among families. For this is that “having carried out the Observance and the Invitation in the Order of monks, and (the monks) being all together, people having given (them) meals by ticket and so on become bound for heaven”. So the compassion for families is in allowing them scope to give and thereby to acquire merit. AN-a.ii.164 less cogently says: “A rule of training laid down when householders complain is called “laid down out of compassion for householders.”

according to the rule.”¹

Kd.17.3.14

BD.5.276

Then Devadatta approached Kokālika,² Kaṭamorakatissaka, the son of the lady Khaṇḍā, and Samuddadatta, having approached, he spoke thus to Kokālika, Kaṭamorakatissaka, the son of the lady Khaṇḍā, and Samuddadatta: “Come, we, your reverences, will make a schism in the recluse Gotama’s Order, a breaking of the concord.” When he had spoken thus, Kokālika spoke thus to Devadatta:

“But, your reverence, the recluse Gotama is of great psychic power, of great might. How can we make a schism in the recluse Gotama’s Order, a breaking of the concord?”

Vin.2.197

“Come, we, your reverence, having approached the recluse Gotama, will ask for five items, saying: ‘Lord, the Lord in many a figure speaks in praise of desiring little, of being contented, of expunging (evil), of being punctilious, of what is gracious, of decrease (in the obstructions), of putting forth energy. Lord, these five items are in many a way conducive to desiring little, to contentment, to expunging (evil), to being punctilious, to what is gracious, to decrease (in the obstructions), to putting forth energy.

1. It were good, Lord, if the monks, for as long as life lasted, might be forest-dwellers; whoever should betake himself to the neighbourhood of a village, sin would besmirch him.
2. For as long as life lasts, let them be beggars for alms; whoever should accept an invitation, sin would besmirch him.
3. For as long as life lasts, let them be rag-robe wearers; whoever should accept a robe given by a householder, sin would besmirch him.
4. For as long as life lasts, let them live at the root of a tree; whoever should go under cover, sin would besmirch him.
5. For as long as life lasts, let them not eat fish and flesh; whoever should eat fish and flesh, sin would besmirch him.’

The recluse Gotama will not allow these. Then we will win over the people by means of these five items.”

¹ I.e. to the rule laid down in Bu-Pc.32. ² Almost word for word the same as Bu-Ss.10.1.1, Bu-Ss.10.1.2 and part of Bu-Ss.10.1.3. See BD.1.296-299 for footnotes.

“It is possible, your reverence, with these five items, to make a schism in the recluse Gotama’s Order, a breaking of the concord. For, your reverence, people esteem austerity.”

Kd.17.3.15

Then Devadatta together with his friends approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Devadatta spoke thus to the Lord:

BD.5.277

“Lord, the Lord in many a figure speaks in praise of desiring little ... whoever should eat fish and flesh, sin would besmirch him.”

“Enough, Devadatta,” he said. “Whoever wishes, let him be a forest-dweller; whoever wishes, let him stay in the neighbourhood of a village; whoever wishes, let him be a beggar for alms; whoever wishes, let him accept an invitation; whoever wishes, let him be a rag-robe wearer; whoever wishes, let him accept a householder’s robes. For eight months, Devadatta, lodging at the root of a tree is permitted by me. Fish and flesh are pure in respect of three points: if they are not seen, heard or suspected (to have been killed on purpose for him).”¹

Then Devadatta, thinking: ‘The Lord does not permit these five items,’ joyful, elated, rising from his seat with his friends, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping his right side towards him. Then Devadatta, having entered Rājagaha with his friends, taught the people by means of the five items, saying: “We, friends, having approached the recluse Gotama, asked for five items, saying: ‘Lord, the Lord in many a figure speaks in praise of desiring little ... whoever should eat fish and flesh, sin would besmirch him’. The recluse Gotama does not allow these five items, but we live undertaking these five items.”

Kd.17.3.16

Those people who were there of little faith, not believing, who were of poor intelligence, these spoke thus: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans are punctilious, are expungers (of evil), but the recluse Gotama is for abundance and strives after abundance.” But those people who had faith and were believing, who were wise and intelligent, these looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this Devadatta go forward with a schism in the Lord’s Order, with a breaking of the concord?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying:

Vin.2.198

¹ Cf. Vin.1.238 (BD.4.325).

“How can this Devadatta go forward with a schism in the Order, a breaking of the concord?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.278

“Is it true, as is said that you, Devadatta, went forward with a schism in the Order, a breaking of the concord?”

“It is true, Lord.”

“Enough, Devadatta, do not let there be a schism in the Order, for a schism in the Order is a serious matter,¹ Devadatta. Whoever, Devadatta, splits an Order that is united, he sets up demerit that endures for an aeon;² he is boiled in hell for an aeon; but whoever, Devadatta, unites an Order that is split, he sets up sublime³ merit, he rejoices in heaven for an aeon. Enough, Devadatta, do not let there be a schism in the Order, for a schism in the Order is a serious matter, Devadatta.”

Kd.17.3.17

Then the venerable Ānanda,⁴ having dressed in the morning, taking his bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. Devadatta saw the venerable Ānanda walking in Rājagaha for almsfood; seeing him, he approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Now from this day forth will I, reverend Ānanda, carry out Observance both in contradistinction to⁵ the Lord and in contradistinction to the Order of monks and will (so) carry out (formal) acts of the Order.”⁶ Then the venerable Ānanda, having walked in Rājagaha for almsfood, on returning from the almsround, after his meal, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

“Just now, Lord, I, having dressed in the morning, taking my bowl and robe, entered Rājagaha for almsfood. Devadatta, Lord, saw me walking in Rājagaha for almsfood; seeing me, he came up; having come up, he spoke thus to me: ‘Now from this day forth will I ... (so) carry out (formal) acts of the Order.’ Today, Lord, Devadatta will split the Order.”¹

¹ Quoted at Vin.1.150. ² kappaṭṭhika. But Vin-a.1276 says that kappa is āyukappa, “for the duration of life.” ³ brahma = seṭṭha, Vin-a.1276. ⁴ This episode also appears at Ud.v.8 and Dh-p-a.iii.154. ⁵ aññatr’eva. ⁶ saṅghakammaṇi. Ud.v.8 reads -kammāni.

BD.5.279

Then the Lord, having understood this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

“Easy is good for the good, good for the evil is hard,
Evil for the evil is easy, evil for the noble ones is hard.”²

Told is the Second Portion for Repeating

THIRD RECITATION SECTION

ON SCHISM IN THE ORDER

Vin.2.199

Then Devadatta on that Observance day rising from his seat gave out voting tickets,³ saying: “We, your reverences, having approached the recluse Gotama, asked for five items.⁴ ... The recluse Gotama does not allow these, but we live undertaking these five items. If these five items are pleasing to the venerable ones, let each one take a voting ticket.”

Now at that time as many as five hundred monks, Vajjis of Vesālī, were newly ordained and were not properly versed;⁵ and these, thinking: “This is the rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction,” took voting tickets. Then Devadatta, having split the Order, set out for Gayā Head taking as many as the five hundred monks. Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna⁶ approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “Devadatta, Lord, having split the Order, is setting out for Gayā Head with as many as five hundred monks.”

¹ Udāna adding “and will carry out Observance and (formal) acts of the Order.” ² Cf. Dhp.163, ascribed by Dhp-a.iii.154 to this occasion. ³ salāka. Method of appointing distributor of voting tickets laid down at Kd.14.9,10. On process to be followed when voting by ticket see Kd.14.14.26. This incident is briefly recounted at Dhp-a.i.142–Dhp-a.i.143. ⁴ As at Kd.17.3.14, Kd.17.3.15. ⁵ apakataññuno, or, did not know what had been appointed; cf. Vin.4.112, Vin.4.143. ⁶ Sāriputtamoggallānā. “The venerable” is not used in such cases.

“Can there not be for you, Sāriputta and Moggallāna,¹ compassion for these newly ordained monks? Go you along, Sāriputta and Moggallāna, before these monks fall into trouble and distress.”

BD.5.280

“Very well, Lord,” and Sāriputta and Moggallāna having answered the Lord in assent, rising from their seats, having greeted the Lord, keeping their right sides towards him, approached Gayā Head. Now at that time a certain monk was standing weeping not far from the Lord. Then the Lord spoke thus to that monk: “Why are you, monk, weeping?”

“Even those, Lord, who are the Lord’s chief disciples—Sāriputta and Moggallāna—even these are going to Devadatta approving of Devadatta’s dhamma.”

“This is not possible, monk, it cannot come to pass that Sāriputta and Moggallāna should approve Devadatta’s dhamma. They have merely gone so as to convince the monks.”²

Kd.17.4.2

Now at that time Devadatta, surrounded by the large company, was teaching dhamma sitting down. Then Devadatta saw Sāriputta and Moggallāna coming in the distance; seeing them, he addressed the monks, saying: “You see, monks, how well taught is dhamma by me that even these who are the recluse Gotama’s chief disciples—Sāriputta and Moggallāna—that even these are coming to me approving of my dhamma.” When he had spoken thus Kokālika spoke thus to Devadatta: “Reverend Devadatta, do not put your trust in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have evil desires and are under the influence of evil desires.”³

Vin.2.200

“Enough, your reverence, let us give a welcome to these since they approve of my dhamma.” The Devadatta invited the venerable Sāriputta to half his seat, saying: “Come, reverend Sāriputta, sit here.”

“No, your reverence,” and the venerable Sāriputta, having taken another seat, sat down at a respectful distance; and the venerable Moggallāna too, having taken another seat, sat down at a respectful distance. Then Devadatta, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the monks far into the night with talk on dhamma, asked¹ the venerable Sāriputta, saying:

¹ Sāriputtā. ² bhikkhusaññatiyā. Cf. same expression at Kd.22.2.8. Cf. gihisañatti at SN.i.199, translated at KS.i.254 “imparting matters to the laity”; and explanation at SN-a.i.292, KS.i.254, n.1. Also cf. AN.i.75. ³ Quoted at Dhp-a.i.143.

“The Order of monks, reverend Sāriputta, is without sloth or drowsiness; may a talk on dhamma occur to² you, reverend Sāriputta, for the monks. My back aches and I will stretch it.”³

BD.5.281

“Very well, your reverence,” the venerable Sāriputta answered Devadatta in assent. Then Devadatta, having laid down his outer cloak folded in four, lay down to sleep on his right side,⁴ and as he was tired, forgetful and inattentive, he fell asleep that very moment.

Kd.17.4.3

Then the venerable Sāriputta exhorted, instructed the monks with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of thought-reading;⁵ the venerable Moggallāna exhorted, instructed the monks with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of psychic power. Then as the monks were being exhorted, instructed by the venerable Sāriputta with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of thought-reading; were being exhorted, instructed by the venerable Moggallāna with dhamma-talk by means of an instruction on the wonders of psychic power, dhamma-vision, dustless, stainless, arose to them, that ‘whatever is of the nature to uprise all that is of the nature to stop.’ Then the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying: “We are going, your reverences, to the Lord. Whoever approves of this Lord’s dhamma, let him come along.” Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna, taking those five hundred monks, approached the Bamboo Grove. Then Kokālika wakened Devadatta, saying: “Wake up,⁶ reverend Devadatta, those monks have been led away by Sāriputta and Moggallāna. Now, did I not say to you, reverend Devadatta, ‘Reverend Devadatta, do not put your trust in Sāriputta and Moggallāna, Sāriputta and Moggallāna have evil desires and are under the influence of evil desires?’” Then at that very place hot blood issued from Devadatta’s mouth.⁷

Kd.17.4.4

¹ ajjhesi, as at Kd.5.13.9. ² paṭibhātu, as at Kd.5.18.9 and see note at BD.4.264, n.1. ³ Cf. MN.i.354, where these same words are ascribed to Gotama. ⁴ Cf. MN.i.354. But here Gotama lies down mindful and circumspect. ⁵ Among the three “wonders” mentioned at AN.i.170–AN.i.171, DN.i.212–DN.i.214 and explained at both passages. Cf. AN.v.327. ⁶ Quoted at DhP-a.i.143. ⁷ The same is recorded of Sañjaya at Kd.1.24.3.

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, they sat down at a respectful distance. As they were sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sāriputta spoke thus to the Lord: “It were well, Lord, if the monks who were partisans of the schismatics could be ordained again.”

Vin.2.201

BD.5.282

“Be careful, Sāriputta, about any reordination of monks who were partisans of the schismatics. But do you, Sāriputta, make the monks who were partisans of the schismatics confess a grave offence. But what line of conduct, Sāriputta, did Devadatta follow in regard to you?”

“Even, Lord, as the Lord, having gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted monks with dhamma-talk far into the night, he asked me: ‘The Order of monks, Sāriputta, is without sloth or drowsiness, may a talk on dhamma occur to you, Sāriputta, for the monks. My back aches and I will stretch it.’ Just this, Lord, was the line of conduct which Devadatta followed.”

Kd.17.4.5

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Formerly,¹ monks, there was a great pond in a stretch of forest; bull elephants lived near it and these, having plunged into that pond,² having tugged out the lotus fibres and stalks with their trunks, having washed them well, and having chewed them free of mud, swallowed them. Thus there came to be for them both beauty and strength, and not for this reason did they incur death or suffering like unto death. But, monks, among these great bull elephants were young elephant calves and these, imitating them, having plunged into that pond, having tugged out the lotus fibres and stalks with their trunks, but not having washed them well, having chewed them with the mud, swallowed them. Thus there came to be for them neither beauty nor strength, and for this reason they incurred death or suffering like unto death. Likewise, monks, Devadatta will die, a wretched creature, copying me.

“While the great beast³ is shaking the earth, grazing on lotus stalks, keeping alert among the waters—
Copying me, the wretched creature will die, like a calf having eaten mire.

Kd.17.4.6

¹ As at SN.ii.269. ² Cf. Vin.1.214–Vin.1.215. ³ mahāvarāha, which as pointed out at Vinaya Texts iii.261, n.1 can also mean a boar.

“Monks, a monk who is possessed of eight qualities is fit to go a message.¹ What are the eight? Herein, monks, a monk is a hearer and one who makes others hear and a learner and an instructor and a knower and an expounder and one skilled in (recognising) conformity and non-conformity² and not a maker of quarrels. Monks, if a monk is possessed of these eight qualities he is fit to go a message. Monks, because he is possessed of these eight qualities, Sāriputta is fit to go a message. What are the eight? Herein, monks, Sāriputta is a learner ... and not a maker of quarrels. Monks, because Sāriputta is possessed of these eight qualities he is fit to go a message.

BD.5.283

Vin.2.202

“Who, to some high assembled council come,
Wavers not, nor in discourse fails, nor hides
The teaching, nor speaks³ in doubtfulness,⁴
And who, being questioned, is not agitated—
A monk like this is fit to go a message.

“Monks, Devadatta,⁵ overcome and his mind controlled by eight wrong conditions,⁶ is doomed to the Downfall,⁷ to Niraya Hell,⁸ staying there for an aeon, incurable.⁹ What eight?

Kd.17.4.7

1. Devadatta, monks, overcome and his mind controlled by gain¹⁰ is doomed to the Downfall ... incurable.

¹ dūteyyaṃ gantuṃ arahati. This paragraph recurs at AN.iv.196. Cf. the qualities of a messenger, dūta, at Manu 7.63ff. Also see DN.i.5, DN.i.8 where it is held by some ordinary people that Gotama abstains from sending messages and going on them. ² I copy the note at GS.iv.135: sahitāsahita; cf. DN.i.8, AN.ii.138; Dialogues of the Buddha i.14, n.6. Some of these terms recur at DN.i.56. Cf. S.B.E. xxi, p.352f. for what may be the Mahāyāna version of this sutta. ³ akkhāti. AN.iv.196 reads bhaṇati. ⁴ asandiddho. AN.iv.196 reads asandiṭṭhan, but AN-a.iv.106 has asandiddham which it glosses as vigatasam̐sayam̐, without doubts. Vin-a.1276 reads asandiṭṭho ca akkhāti ti nissandeho hutvā akkhātā anusandhivasena yojetvā. At Mi.295 sandeha occurs, meaning “doubt.” At DN-a.282 sandiddha occurs with variant reading sandiṭṭha. See GS.iv.135, n.4. ⁵ Down to “thus it is that you, monks, should train” = AN.iv.160–AN.iv.161. ⁶ asad-dhammehi. See Vinaya Texts iii.262, n.2. ⁷ āpāyika nerayika. See Vinaya Texts iii.262, n.3. ⁸ āpāyika nerayika. See Vinaya Texts iii.262, n.3. ⁹ This quartet of words occurs at AN.iii.402, AN.iv.160, MN.i.393 also in connection with Devadatta. Vin-a.1276 says “now it is not possible to cure him even with a thousand Buddhas.” ¹⁰ Gain, lack of gain, fame, lack of fame are four of the eight worldly conditions mentioned at DN.iii.260, AN.ii.188, AN.iv.157.

2. Devadatta, monks, overcome and his mind controlled by lack of gain
...
3. ... by fame ...
4. ... by lack of fame ...
5. ... by honours ...
6. ... by lack-of honours ...
7. ... by evil desire ...
8. ... by evil friendship is doomed to the Downfall ... incurable.

Monks, Devadatta, overcome and his mind controlled by these eight wrong conditions is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, staying there for an aeon, incurable.

BD.5.284

“Monks, it is well that a monk should live constantly overcoming gain¹ that has arisen, lack of gain that has arisen, fame that has arisen, lack of fame that has arisen, honours that have arisen, lack of honours that has arisen, evil desire that has arisen, evil friendship that has arisen. And why, monks, for what good purpose should a monk live constantly overcoming gain ... evil friendship that has arisen? Monks, if a monk live not constantly overcoming gain that has arisen, the cankers, that are destructive and consuming,² may arise, but if he lives constantly overcoming gain that has arisen, then it follows that the cankers, that are destructive and consuming, will not be in him ... if he lives constantly overcoming evil friendship that has arisen, then it follows that the cankers, destructive and consuming, will not be in him.

“It is for this good purpose, monks, that a monk should live constantly overcoming gain that has arisen ... evil friendship that has arisen. Wherefore, monks, saying, ‘We will live constantly overcoming gain that has arisen ... evil friendship that has arisen’—thus it is that you, monks, should train.³

Vin.2.203

“Monks, Devadatta,⁴ overcome and his mind controlled by three wrong conditions, is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, staying there for an aeon, incurable. What three? Evil desire, evil friendship, the coming to a halt midway in his career because his special attainments are of trifling value.¹ Monks, a monk who is overcome ... by these three wrong conditions is ... incurable.

¹ Also see DN.i.8 where an ordinary man would say that Gotama abstains from avariciously adding gain to gain, or benefit to benefit. ² As at AN.ii.197; MN.i.9. ³ Version at AN.iv.160–1 stops here. ⁴ Rest of this paragraph and the whole of the next (the verses) given also at It. BD.5.85ff.

Kd.17.4.8

“Never² let anyone of evil desires arise in the world;
And know it by this: as the bourn of those of evil desires.
Known as ‘sage,’³ held as ‘one who made the self become,’ Devadatta stood shining as with fame—I heard tell.

BD.5.285

“He, falling into recklessness,⁴ assailing the Truth-finder,⁵ Attained Avīci Hell,⁶ four-doored, frightful.
For he who would injure one without hatred, not doing an evil deed—
That evil touches only him of mind of hate, contemptuous.⁷

“Who should think to pollute the sea with pot of poison—
He would not pollute it with that, for sublime⁸ is the great ocean.

So he who with abuse⁹ afflicts the Truth-finder Who has rightly gone, his mind tranquil—on him the abuse has no effect.

“A wise man should make a friend of such a one and follow him,
A monk following the way of him¹⁰ should achieve destruction of ill.”

¹ Cf. AN.v.157, AN.v.164, DN.ii.78. ² These verses occur also at It.p.85–It.p.86. See Woodward’s translation and notes at Minor Anthologies ii.p.177–178. ³ Cf. SN.i.65. ⁴ so pamādaṃ anuciṇṇo. Iti-a.ii.100–Iti-a.ii.101 says “Devadatta, saying ‘I am the awakened one,’ and so on, not knowing his own measure (attano pamāṇaṃ ajānitvā)” falling into recklessness (or perhaps ‘error,’ pamādaṃ āpajjanto) as to himself as an awakened one, said, “Now I will become an awakened one, I will lead the Order of monks.” ⁵ āsajja taṃ (or naṃ) tathāgataṃ. Text reads āsajjanam, but Sinhalese and Siamese editions have āsajja taṃ. Iti-a.ii.101 explains as āsādetvā viheṭhetvā, having assailed (insulted, offended), having annoyed. ⁶ Described at AN.i.141. ⁷ This resembles Dhp.125. ⁸ Reading bhesmā with Sinhalese and Siamese editions, Vin-a.1277 and Iti-a.ii.101, instead of text’s bhasmā and It. tasmā. Bhesmā means awful, terrible, and hence may be taken as sublime. ⁹ vādena. Iti-a.ii.101 explains by dosena, anger, hatred. ¹⁰ yassa maggānugo bhikkhu.

QUESTIONS OF UPĀLI

Kd.17.5.1

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord, having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, as to the words: Dissension in an Order,¹ dissension in an Order—to what extent, Lord, is there dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order? And then to what extent is there dissension in an Order as well as schism in an Order?”

BD.5.286

“If, Upāli, there is one on one side² and two on another³ and if a fourth⁴ speaks out⁵ and offers a voting ticket, saying: ‘This is the rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, take this (voting ticket), approve of this’—this, Upāli, is dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order.

“If, Upāli, there are two on one side and two on another and if a fifth speaks out ... two on one side and three on another and if a sixth speaks out ... three on one side and three on another and if a seventh speaks out ... three on one side and four on another and if an eighth speaks out and offers a voting ticket, saying: ‘This is the rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction, take this (voting ticket), approve of this’—this, Upāli, is dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order.

Vin.2.204

“If, Upāli, there are four on one side and four on another and a ninth speaks out ... this, Upāli, is dissension in an Order as well as schism in an Order. Dissension in an Order, Upāli, as well as schism in an Order is (due to there being) nine or more than nine.⁶ Upāli, a nun does not split an Order even if she goes forward with a schism⁷... a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... a lay-follower ... a woman lay-follower does not split an Order even if she goes forward with a schism. Only a regular monk, Upāli, ¹ saṅgharāji. Cf. Vin.4.37, Vin.4.128, Vin.4.153, Vin.4.217, Vb-a.428, and DUTT, Early Buddhist Monachism, p.193ff. Other expressions for differences in the Order occur at e.g. Vin.1.339. There is also cakkabheda, “breaking of the concord,” as at Vin.3.171, and above Kd.17.8.14.

² Vin-a.1277, “if there is one on the side (or in the faction or party) of dhamma-speakers.”

³ Vin-a.1277, “on the side of non-dhamma speakers.” ⁴ Vin-a.1277, “if there is a fourth, a non-dhamma speaker, who thinks ‘I will split the Order’.” ⁵ anussāveti, not here I think in the technical sense of making a proclamation. Vin-a.1277 says, “fawning, he announces, sāveti.”

⁶ Thus for a schism to occur at least nine monks must break off from the main body of the Order. ⁷ Cf. Vin.1.151.

belonging to the same communion, staying within the same boundary, splits an Order.”

“Lord, as to the words:¹ Schism in an Order, schism in an Order—to what extent, Lord, can an Order become split?”

Kd.17.5.2

“As to this, Upāli, monks explain non-dhamma as dhamma, they explain dhamma as non-dhamma, they explain non-discipline as discipline, they explain discipline as non-discipline, they explain what was not spoken, not uttered by the Truth-finder as spoken, uttered by the Truth-finder, they explain what was spoken, uttered by the Truth-finder as not spoken, not uttered by the Truth-finder, they explain what was not practised by the Truth-finder as practised by the Truth-finder, they explain what was practised by the Truth-finder as not practised by the Truth-finder, they explain what was not laid down by the Truth-finder as laid down by the Truth-finder, they explain what was laid down by the Truth-finder as not laid down by the Truth-finder, they explain what is no offence as an offence, they explain an offence as no offence, they explain a slight offence as a serious offence, they explain a serious offence as a slight offence, they explain an offence that can be done away with as an offence that cannot be done away with, they explain an offence that cannot be done away with as an offence that can be done away with, they explain a bad offence as not a bad offence, they explain not a bad offence as a bad offence.² These, in regard to these eighteen points draw away and separate (a company),³ they carry out a separate⁴ Observance, they carry out a separate Invitation, they carry out a separate (formal) act of the Order. To this extent, Upāli, does an Order become split.”

BD.5.287

“Lord, as to the words:⁵ Harmony in an Order, harmony in an Order—to what extent, Lord, does an Order come to be harmonious?”

Kd.17.5.3

“As to this, Upāli, monks explain non-dhamma as non-dhamma, they explain dhamma as dhamma ... they explain not a bad offence as not a bad offence. These, in regard to these eighteen points, do not draw away, do not separate (a company), they do not carry out a separate Observance, they do not carry out a separate Invitation, they do not carry out a separate (formal) act of the Order. To this extent, Upāli, an Order comes to be harmonious.”

¹ Cf. AN.v.73, AN.v.75. ² As at Kd.10.5.4, Kd.10.5.5; Kd.14.14.2, Cf. AN.i.19–AN.i.20. ³ Oldenberg’s text reads apakāsanti avapakāsanti, which Vin-a.1280 interprets: they draw over a company, extract it (vijaṭenti) and set it up (ussādentī) on one side. They make it widely known that they are separated. AN.v.74, AN.v.75 reads avakassanti vavakassanti (with variant reading). Cf. AN.iii.145. ⁴ āveṇi. Vin-a.1280 gives visuṃ. ⁵ Cf. AN.v.74, AN.v.76.

Kd.17.5.4

“But, Lord,¹ having split² an Order that was harmonious, what does he set up?”

BD.5.288

“Now, Upāli, having split an Order that was harmonious, he sets up demerit that endures for an aeon and he is boiled in hell for an aeon.”³

Vin.2.205

“A schismatic in the Order, doomed to the Downfall,
to Niraya Hell for an aeon,
To disharmony prone,
standing on non-dhamma,
falls away from peace from bondage.
Having split an harmonious Order,
he boils for an aeon in hell.”⁴

“But, Lord,⁵ having united an Order that was split, what does he set up?”

“Now, Upāli, having united an Order that was split, he sets up sublime merit and he rejoices in heaven for an aeon.
Blessed is harmony for an Order, and the friend of those who are harmonious,

“To harmony prone,
standing on dhamma,
falls not away from peace from bondage.
Making an Order harmonious,
he rejoices for an aeon in heaven.”⁶

Kd.17.5.5

“Now, could it not be, Lord, that a schismatic in the Order is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, remaining there for an aeon, incurable?”

¹ Cf. AN.v.75. ² bhinditvā. AN.v.75 reads bhetvā with variant readings chetvā, bhinditvā.

³ Cf. Kd.17.3.16 for many of these expressions. ⁴ Cf. AN.v.76. ⁵ Cf. AN.v.76. ⁶ Cf. AN.v.76.

“It could be, Upāli, that a schismatic in the Order is doomed to the Downfall ... incurable.”

“But could it be, Lord, that a schismatic in the Order is not doomed to the Downfall, not to Niraya Hell, not remaining there for an aeon, not incurable?”

“It could be, Upāli, that a schismatic in the Order is not doomed to the Downfall ... not incurable.”

“But which (kind of) schismatic in an Order, Lord is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, remaining there for an aeon, incurable?”

“This is a case, Upāli, where a monk explains non-dhamma as dhamma; if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is non-dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is non-dhamma, misrepresenting opinion, misrepresenting approval, misrepresenting pleasure, misrepresenting intention,¹ and if he speaks out and offers a voting ticket, saying: ‘This is rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction; take this (voting ticket), approve of this’—this schismatic in the Order, Upāli, is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, remaining there for an aeon, incurable.

BD.5.289

“And again, Upāli, if a monk explains non-dhamma as dhamma, if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is non-dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is dhamma, misrepresenting opinion ... incurable.

“And again, Upāli, if he explains non-dhamma as dhamma, if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is non-dhamma, if he is doubtful as to a schism ... if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is non-dhamma ... if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma, if he is doubtful as to a schism ... if he is doubtful as to this (explanation), if he has the view that in schism there is non-dhamma ... if he is doubtful as to this (explanation), if he has the view that in schism there is dhamma ... if he is doubtful as to this (explanation), if he is doubtful as to a schism, misrepresenting opinion ... incurable.”

Kd.17.5.6

“But which (kind of) schismatic in the Order, Lord, is not doomed to the Downfall, nor to Niraya Hell, not remaining there for an aeon, not incurable?”

Vin.2.206

“This is a case, Upāli, where a monk explains non-dhamma as dhamma;

¹ On these four psychological modalities, see BD.1.163, n.

if he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma, if he has the view that in schism there is dhamma, yet not misrepresenting opinion, not misrepresenting approval, not misrepresenting pleasure, not misrepresenting intention, he speaks out and offers a voting ticket, saying, ‘This is rule, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction; take this (voting ticket), approve of this’ — even this schismatic in the Order, Upāli, is not doomed to the Downfall, not doomed to Niraya Hell, not remaining there for an aeon, not incurable.

“And again, Upāli, a monk explains dhamma as non-dhamma ... explains a not bad offence as a bad offence, but (although) he has the view that in this (explanation) there is dhamma the view that in schism there is dhamma, yet not misrepresenting opinion ... not incurable.”

Told is the Third Portion for Repeating

Told is the Seventh Section: that on Schism in an Order

THIS IS ITS KEY

In Anupiyā, distinguished, the delicately nurtured one did not want to, ploughing, sowing, leading in, led away, digging up and reaping, Harvesting, making into stooks, threshing and winnowing, sifting, bringing in, the next and they do not stop, fathers and grandfathers. Bhaddiya, Anuruddha and Ānanda, Bhagu, Kimbila, and the Sakyan pride, at Kosambī, he declined, and about Kakudha. He informed against, and a father’s, by a man, Nālāgiri, a triad, five, a serious matter, he splits, and about a grave offence, three, eight, three again, dissension, schism, “Could it not be?”

18. DUTIES (VATTA)

ON THE DUTIES OF VISITORS

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's monastery. Now at that time incoming monks entered the monastery with their sandals on,¹ and they entered the monastery with sunshades up,² and they entered the monastery with their heads muffled up,³ and they entered the monastery having put their robes on their heads, and they washed their feet in the drinking water, and they did not greet the resident monks who were senior nor ask about lodgings. And a certain incoming monk, having unfastened the bolt⁴ of an unoccupied dwelling-place, having opened the door,⁵ entered hastily. A snake fell on to his shoulder from a lintel above; terrified, he uttered a cry of distress. Monks, having run up, spoke thus to that monk: "Why did you, your reverence, utter a cry of distress?" Then this monk told this matter to the monks. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "How can these incoming monks enter a monastery with their sandals on ... nor ask about lodgings?" Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

"Is it true, as is said, monks, that incoming monks entered a monastery with their sandals on ... and did not ask about lodgings?"

"It is true, Lord." The Awakened One, the Lord, rebuked them, saying:

"How, monks, can incoming monks enter a monastery with their sandals on ... nor ask about lodgings? It is not, monks, for pleasing those who are not (yet) pleased ... Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

¹ A sign of disrespect, see Kd.5.12 and Bu-Sk.61, Bu-Sk.62. ² See Kd.15.23.2. ³ See Bu-Sk.23, Bu-Sk.67 at the latter of which "head muffled up" is defined. ⁴ ghaṭikā, as at Kd.15.14.3, Kd.16.2.1. See also Vin.3.119. ⁵ See BD.1.199, n.3.

BD.5.292

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance¹ for incoming monks which should be observed by incoming monks.

Kd.18.1.2

Vin.2.208

“Monks, an incoming monk, thinking, ‘I will now enter a monastery,’ having taken off his sandals, having put them down,² having beaten them, having taken them up (again), having lowered his sunshade, having uncovered his head, having put his robe over his shoulder, should enter the monastery carefully and unhurriedly.³ While he is entering the monastery, he should notice where the resident monks have withdrawn to.⁴ Wherever resident monks have withdrawn to—whether to an assembly hall or to a hut or to the root of a tree—having gone there, he should put down his bowl at one side, he should put down his robe at one side, and having taken a suitable seat he should sit down. He should ask about the drinking water, he should ask about the washing water—which the drinking water is, which the washing water. If he wants drinking water, having taken drinking water he should drink; if he wants washing water, having taken washing water he should wash his feet. When he is washing his feet he should sprinkle water (over them) with one hand and wash his feet with the other; but he should not sprinkle water and wash his feet with one and the same hand. Having asked for a piece of cloth to wipe his sandals, he should wipe the sandals. While he is wiping his sandals he should first wipe them with a dry piece of cloth, afterwards with a damp one; having washed the pieces of cloth for wiping the sandals he should spread⁵ them on one side. If a resident monk is senior he should greet him; if he is newly ordained he should make him greet (him). He should ask about lodgings, saying: ‘Which lodging pertains to⁶ me?’ He should ask whether it is occupied or unoccupied. He should ask about resorts for alms,⁷ he should ask about non-resorts for alms,⁸ he should ask about the families which are agreed upon as learners,¹ he should ask about the privies, he should ask about the drinking water,² he should ask about the water for washing,³ he should ask about a staff, he should ask about (the form of) the Order's agreement, saying: 'What time should it be entered upon, what time should it be departed from?'⁴

BD.5.293

¹ vatta, custom, duty, habit. ² nīcaṃ katvā occurs also at Kd.1.25.11, Kd.1.25.15; Kd.18.4.4; Kd.18.6.2. ³ ataramānena as at Vin.1.248. ⁴ Vin-a.1281, “have assembled.” ⁵ vis-sajjetabbarāṃ. Vin-a.1281, attharitabbarāṃ. ⁶ pāpuṇāti. Cf. Kd.6.11.3; Kd.6.21.2 for rules for apportioning lodgings. ⁷ gocara. Vin-a.1281 says “he should ask about walking for alms thus: Is the village which gives alms, gocaragāma, near or far? May one walk for alms early, or during the day?” ⁸ agocara. Vin-a.1281 says this is a village of people of wrong views or a village with a limited supply of alms. And he should ask if it is where alms are given to one or two (monks only).

Kd.18.1.3

"If the dwelling-place is unoccupied, having knocked at the door, having waited a moment, having unfastened the bolt, having opened the door, he should watch out while standing outside.⁵ If the dwelling-place is soiled or if couch is piled on couch or if chair is piled on chair and lodgings heaped on top of them, he should clear (the dwelling-place) if he is able to do so. While clearing⁶ the dwelling place, having first taken out the ground covering he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the beds ... having taken out the mattress and the squatting-mat ... the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet, he should lay them to one side. Having lowered the couch, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the spittoon, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining board, he should lay it to one side. If there are cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering. He should wipe the corners of the window-holes. If a wall that was coloured red becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground has not been treated, he should sweep it having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: 'Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust.' Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side.

Vin.2.209

BD.5.294

Kd.18.1.4

¹ See Bu-Pd.3. ² These questions do not this time refer to finding out which is which but, according to Vin-a.1281, what pond's drinking water it is that they drink, and what washing water it is that they use for bathing and so on. ³ These questions do not this time refer to finding out which is which but, according to Vin-a.1281, what pond's drinking water it is that they drink, and what washing water it is that they use for bathing and so on. ⁴ Cf. Vin.3.160 = Vin.2.76. ⁵ For, according to Vin-a.1281, he may have seen the path of a snake or a non-human creature. ⁶ Rest of this section also at Kd.1.25.15. Kd.18.7.2.

“Having dried the ground-covering in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was before.¹ Having dried the supports for the couch in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them as they were before. Having dried the couch in the sun ... the chair in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, it should be laid down as it was before. Having dried the mattress and the squatting mat in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, they should be laid down as they were before. Having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, they should be laid down as they were before. Having dried the spittoon in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, it should be placed where it was before. Having dried the reclining-board in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, it should be placed where it was before.

Kd.18.1.5

“He should² lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When laying aside the robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or along the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

“If dusty winds blow from the east, he should close the eastern windows. If dusty winds blow from the west, he should close the western windows. If dusty winds blow from the north, he should close the northern windows. If dusty winds blow from the south, he should close the southern windows. If the weather is cool, he should open the windows by day, he should close them by night. If the weather is warm, he should close the windows by day, he should open them by night.

BD.5.295

“If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch is soiled, the porch should be swept. If an attendance-hall ... if a fire-hall ... if a privy is soiled, the privy should be swept. If there is no drinking water, drinking water should be provided. If there is no water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing. This, monks, is the observance for incoming monks that is to be observed by incoming monks.”

Vin.2.210

¹ yathābhāgarī. ² See also Kd.1.25.11; Kd.18.7.3.

ON THE DUTIES OF RESIDENTS

Now at that time resident monks, having seen incoming monks, neither appointed a seat nor brought forward water for the feet, a footstool, a footstand, nor, having gone to meet them, did they receive their bowls and robes, they did not offer drinking water, they did not greet the senior incoming monks, nor appoint lodgings. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these resident monks, having seen incoming monks, neither appoint a seat ... nor appoint lodgings?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.18.2.1

“Is it true, as is said, monks ...?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well now, monks, I will lay down an observance for resident monks that should be observed by resident monks.

Kd.18.2.2

“Monks, when a resident monk has seen an incoming monk who is senior, he should appoint a seat, he should bring forward water for the feet, a footstool, a footstand, having gone to meet him he should receive his bowl and robe, he should offer him drinking water, and if he is able he should wipe his sandals. When he is wiping his sandals, he should first wipe them with a dry piece of cloth, afterwards with a damp one; having washed the pieces of cloth for wiping the sandals he should spread them on one side. An incoming monk should be greeted and a lodging appointed with the words, ‘This lodging pertains to you.’ He should explain whether it is occupied or unoccupied, the alms resorts should be explained, the non-alms resorts ... the families agreed upon as learners ... the privies ... the drinking water ... the washing water ... the staff ... the form of the Order’s agreement should be explained with the words, ‘This is the time to enter upon it, this is the time to depart from it.’

BD.5.296

Vin.2.211
Kd.18.2.3

“If it is a newly ordained monk (who is incoming) then (the resident one) sitting down should explain: ‘Put aside your bowl in this place, put aside your robe in this place, sit on this seat.’ The drinking water should be explained (to him), the water for washing should be explained, the pieces of cloth for wiping the sandals should be explained. And incoming monks should be made to greet (him). The lodgings should be explained to him with the words, ‘This lodging pertains to you.’ He should explain whether it is occupied or unoccupied, alms resorts should be explained ... (the form of) the Order’s agreement should be explained with the words, ‘This is the time to enter upon it, this is the time to depart from it.’ This, monks, is the observance for resident monks that should be observed by resident monks.”

ON THE DUTIES OF TRAVELLERS

Kd.18.3.1

Now at that time monks who were going away set out without having packed away their wooden goods and clay goods, having opened the doors and windows, and without having asked (for permission) as to their lodgings.¹ The wooden goods and the clay goods were lost and the lodgings came to be unguarded.² Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who are going away set out ... lodgings came to be unguarded?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks who are going away and which should be observed by monks who are going away.

Kd.18.3.2

“Monks, when a monk is going away, having packed away his wooden goods, his clay goods, having closed the doors and windows, he may set out having asked (for permission) as to his lodgings. If there is no monk, he should ask a novice (for permission).³ If there is no novice, he should ask a monastery attendant (for permission). If there is no monk or novice or monastery attendant, having laid a couch down on four stones,⁴ having piled couch on couch, having piled chair on chair, having made the lodgings into a heap on top¹ (of them), he may set out having packed away the wooden goods the clay goods, having closed the doors and windows.

BD.5.297

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.14, Bu-Pc.15, and see BD.2.238, n.4. ² agutta, as were dwelling-places at Kd.16.2.1.

³ Cf. Bu-Pc.14.2.1; Bu-Pc.15.2.1. ⁴ As a protection from white ants.

Kd.18.3.3

“If the dwelling-place is leaking he should roof it if he is able to do so, or he should make an effort, thinking, ‘How then can this dwelling-place be roofed?’ If he thus succeeds in this, that is good, but if he does not succeed, having laid down a couch on four stones in a place where it is not leaking, having piled couch on couch, having piled chair on chair, having made the lodgings into a heap on top (of them), he may set out, having packed away his wooden goods, his clay goods, having closed the doors and windows. If the whole dwelling-place is leaking, if he is able he should convey the lodgings to a village, or he should make an effort, thinking, ‘How then can this lodging be conveyed to a village?’ If he thus succeeds in this, that is good. If he does not succeed, having laid a couch down on four stones in the open air, having piled couch on couch, having piled chair on chair, having made the lodgings into a heap on top (of them), having packed away his wooden goods, his clay goods, having covered them with grass or leaves, he may set out, thinking, ‘So can the different things surely remain.’² This, monks, is the observance for monks who are going away and which should be observed by monks who are going away.”

Vin.2.212

ON THE DUTIES OF EXPRESSING APPRECIATION

Now at that time monks did not give thanks in a refectory. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these recluses, sons of the Sakyans, not give thanks in a refectory?” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to give thanks in a refectory.” Then it occurred to the monks: “Now, by whom should thanks be given in a refectory?” They told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to give thanks in a refectory through a monk who is an elder.”

Kd.18.4.1

BD.5.298

¹ uparipuñjam karitvā; above, in corresponding passage Kd.18.1.3 uparipuñjakita. ² app’ eva nāma aṅgāni pi seseyyūṃ. Vin-a.1282 reads seyyūṃ, with variant reading seseyyūṃ, and says that the advantage of leaving things in the open air is that the parts of beds and chairs are not destroyed by grass and lumps of clay falling on them from above as happens in a leaking house.

Now at that time a certain guild had food for an Order;¹ the venerable Sāriputta was the elder in the Order. Monks, thinking, ‘The Lord has allowed thanks to be given in a refectory through a monk who is an elder,’ departed, leaving the venerable Sāriputta alone. Then the venerable Sāriputta, having returned thanks to these people, later went away alone. The Lord saw the venerable Sāriputta coming in the distance; seeing him, he spoke thus to the venerable Sāriputta: “I hope, Sāriputta, that the meal was successful?”²

“The meal, Lord, was successful, even though the monks departed leaving me alone.” Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, four or five monks who are elders or next (in age) to the elders³ to wait in a refectory.”

Now at that time a certain elder waited in a refectory although he wanted to relieve himself, and through restraining himself he fell down fainting. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, if there is a reason, to go away, having asked (permission from) the monk immediately next⁴ (to you).”

ON DUTIES IN THE REFECTORY

Kd.18.4.2

Vin.2.213

Now at that time the group of six monks, wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, improperly attired,⁵ went into a refectory and turning aside went in close in front of monks who were elders, and sat down encroaching on⁶ (the space intended for) the elders and kept newly ordained monks from a seat and sat down amid the houses having spread out their outer cloaks. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the group of six monks, wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, improperly attired, go into a refectory ... sit down encroaching on ... and sit down amid the houses having spread out their outer cloaks?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Cf. Kd.15.5.2. ² iddha, as in Nuns’ Bi-Pc.56, there rendered “effective.” ³ therānuthera. At Vin-a.1283, Dhp-a.ii.211 anuthera appears to be in opposition to mahāthera and saṅghathera, and at Dhp-a.iii.412 to mahāthera. ⁴ ānantarika bhikkhu, as at Kd.8.4.8; Kd.16.10.1; Kd.17.3.9 and Vin.4.234. ⁵ As at Vin.1.44. ⁶ anupakhajja, as at Bu-Pc.16, Bu-Pc.43. See BD.2.247, n.3. This expression and the next also occur at Kd.1.25.13.

BD.5.299

“Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, wrongly dressed ... having spread out their outer cloaks?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down a refectory observance for monks and which should be observed by monks in a refectory.

Kd.18.4.3

“If the time is announced in a monastery, (a monk), having dressed with the inner robe all round him for covering the three circles,¹ having tied on his waistband, having made one bundle,² having clothed himself in his upper robes, having fastened the block,³ having washed, having taken a bowl, he may enter a village carefully and unhurriedly. He should not, turning aside, go in close in front of monks who are elders, he should go (sit down) amid the houses properly clad,⁴ well controlled should he go (sit down) amid the houses, with eyes cast down should he go (sit down) amid the houses, not lifting up the robes ... not with loud laughter ... with little noise ... not swaying the body ... not swaying the arms ... not swaying the head ... not with the arms akimbo ... not muffled up should he go (sit down) amid the houses, he should not go amid the houses crouching down on his heels, he should not go amid the houses lolling, he should not sit down amid the houses encroaching (on the space intended) for monks who are elders, newly ordained monks should not be kept from a seat, he should not sit down amid the houses having spread out his outer cloak.

Kd.18.4.4

“When water is being given out, having grasped the bowl with both hands,¹ the water should be received I having put it down carefully² the bowl should be washed without rubbing it. If there is a receiver of (used) water, having put the bowl down, the water should be sprinkled into a waste-tub³ thinking, 'Be careful not to splash the receiver of (used) water with the water, not to splash the neighbouring monks with the water, not to splash the outer cloak with water.' If there is no receiver of (used) water, having put down the bowl, the water should be sprinkled on to the ground, thinking, 'Be careful not to splash the neighbouring monks with water nor to splash the outer cloak with water.' If cooked rice is being given, having grasped the bowl with both hands, the cooked rice should be received. Room should be left for the curry. If there is ghee or oil or tit-bits an elder should say: 'Obtain the same for all.' Almsfood should be received attentively⁴ ... thinking of the bowl ... with equal curry, almsfood should be received at an equal level. The elder should not eat until the cooked rice has been served to all.

BD.5.300

¹ Bu-Sk.1. Many of Sekhiyas Bu-Sk.1–Bu-Sk.26 recur here. For notes, see BD.3.120ff.

² saguṇaṃ katvā. Cf. Kd.1.25.9. ³ gaṇṭhikā, as at Kd.15.29.3. ⁴ The items from here to “lolling” are the same as those occurring at Bu-Sk.1–Bu-Sk.26.

Vin.2.214

Kd.18.4.5

"Almsfood should be eaten attentively⁵. For notes see BD.3.128ff. ... thinking of the bowl ... on continuous almsround ... with equal curry ... not having chosen from the top; neither the curry nor the condiment should be covered up with cooked rice, (the monk) desiring something more; neither the curry nor the cooked rice should be eaten by one who is not ill having asked for it for himself; others' bowls should not be looked at captious-mindedly; too large a mouthful should not be made up; pieces (of food) should be made up into a round; the door of the face should not be opened if the mouthful is not brought close; while eating, the whole hand should not be put into the mouth; one should not talk with a mouthful in the mouth; one should not eat tossing up balls (of food); one should not eat breaking up the mouthfuls ... stuffing the cheeks ... shaking the hands about ... scattering lumps of boiled rice ... putting out the tongue ... smacking the lips ... making a hissing sound ... licking the fingers ... licking the bowl ... licking the lips, one should not accept a drinking cup with a hand (soiled) with food.

BD.5.301

¹ According to Vin-a.1284, the water is being given for washing the bowl, as is clear from the context. More water is apparently given after the meal for again washing the bowl, see Kd.18.4.6 below. ² Vin-a.1284 says without making the sound of water. ³ paṭig-gaha, as at Kd.15.10.3. ⁴ Cf. Bu-Sk.27-Bu-Sk.30. ⁵ The items in this paragraph occur at Bu-Sk.31-Bu-Sk.55.

“An elder should not accept water¹ until everyone has eaten. When the water is being given, having grasped the bowl in both hands ...² ‘... nor to splash the outer cloak with water.’ One should not throw out amidst the houses rinsings of the bowl with lumps of boiled rice.³ When they are returning,⁴ newly ordained monks should return first, afterwards the elders. One should go properly clad amid the houses, well controlled should one go amid the houses ...⁵ ... one should not go amid the houses crouching down on the heels. This, monks, is the refectory observance for monks and which monks should observe in a refectory.”

Kd.18.4.6

Vin.2.215

The First Portion for Repeating

ON DUTIES FOR THOSE GOING ON ALMSROUND

Now at that time monks who walked for almsfood walked for almsfood wrongly dressed, wrongly clothed, improperly attired, and they entered a dwelling without deliberation and they left without deliberation, and they entered very hastily and they left very hastily, and they stood too far away and they stood too close, and they stood too long and they turned away too soon. And a certain monk who was walking for almsfood entered a dwelling without deliberation; taking (a doorway) for the house-door, he entered an inner chamber. In that inner chamber a woman was lying naked on her back. That monk saw that woman lying naked on her back; seeing her, he thought: “This is not the house-door, this is an inner chamber,” and he went away from that inner chamber. That woman’s husband saw that woman lying naked on her back: seeing her, he thought: “My wife has been seduced by that monk,” and having seized that monk, he thrashed him. Then that woman, waking up at the noise, spoke thus to that man: “Why are you, master, thrashing this monk?”

BD.5.302

“You were seduced by this monk.”

¹ Vin-a.1284 says water for washing the hands is meant here. ² As in Kd.18.4.4 above.

³ Bu-Sk.56. ⁴ I.e. leaving the refectory, rising from it, so Vin-a.1284. ⁵ As in Kd.18.4.3.

“I was not, master, seduced by this monk. This monk is innocent,”¹ and she made him let go of that monk. Then that monk, having gone back to the monastery, told this matter to the monks. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can these monks who walk for almsfood walk for almsfood wrongly dressed ... enter ... depart ... stand ... and turn away too soon?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks ...?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks when they are walking for almsfood and which should be observed by monks when they are walking for almsfood.

Kd.18.5.2

“Monks, if a monk when he is walking for almsfood thinks: ‘I will enter this village,’ having dressed himself² with his inner robe all round him so as to cover the three circles, having fastened his waistband, having made one bundle, having clothed himself in his upper robes, having fastened the block, having washed, having taken a bowl, he may enter the village carefully and unhurriedly. He should go amid the houses properly clad ...

Vin.2.216

he should not go amid the houses crouching down on his heels. When he is going amid the houses he should consider: ‘I will enter in this (fashion), I will leave in this.’ He should not enter too hastily, he should not leave too hastily, he should not stand too far away, he should not stand too close, he should not stand too long, he should not turn away too soon. While he is standing, he should consider: ‘Are they willing to give alms or are they not willing?’ If she puts aside her work³ or rises from her seat or wipes a spoon or wipes a dish or sets it out, he should stand still, thinking: ‘It is as though she is willing to give.’ When alms are being given, having raised the outer cloak with the left hand, having uncovered the bowl with the right hand, having grasped the bowl with both hands, the alms should be received, but one should not look at the face of the donor of the alms.¹ He should consider: 'Are they willing to give curry or are they not willing?' If she wipes a spoon or wipes a dish or sets it out, he should stand still, thinking: 'It is as though she is willing to give'. When the alms have been given, having covered the bowl with the outer cloak, one should turn away carefully and unhurriedly. One should go amid the houses properly clad ... one should not go amid the houses crouching down on one's heels.

BD.5.303

¹ Cf. the incident related in Bu-Pc.67. ² As at Kd.18.4.3. ³ Vin-a.1285 says “whether she is standing or sitting at her work—cotton or winnowing or grinding—she puts aside whatever it may be that she has chosen.” Vin-a.1285 reads nikkhipanti, they put aside, with variant reading nikkhipati. The work mentioned seems to suggest women’s work; but below, the donor of the almsfood may be a woman or a man.

Kd.18.5.3

"Whoever returns first from the village for almsfood should make ready a seat, he should bring forward water for (washing) the feet, a footstool, a footstand, he should set out a refuse bowl, having washed it, he should set out drinking water and water for washing. Whoever should return last from the village for almsfood,² if there should be the remains of a meal and if he should so desire, he may eat them; but if he should not so desire, he may throw them away where there is but little green grass or he may drop them into water where there are no living creatures. He should put up the seat, he should put away the water for (washing) the feet, the footstool, the footstand, he should put away the refuse-bowl, having washed it, he should put away the drinking water and the water for washing, he should sweep the refectory. Whoever should see a vessel for drinking water or a vessel for washing water or a vessel (for water) for rinsing after evacuation, void and empty, should set out (water). If it is impossible for him (to do this) he should set out (water) by signalling with his hand, having invited a companion (to help him) by a movement of his hand; but he should not for such a reason break into speech. This, monks, is the observance for monks when they are walking for almsfood and which should be observed by monks when they are walking for almsfood."

ON DUTIES FOR FOREST DWELLERS

Now at that time several monks were living in a forest. They neither set out drinking water, nor did they set out water for washing, nor did they

Kd.18.6.1

BD.5.304

Vin.2.217

¹ Vin-a.1285 says that the donor may be a woman or a man. One is not to look at his face at the time when the alms are being given. ² As at Vin.1.157, etc.

set out a fire,¹ nor did they set out kindling wood,² they did not know the positions of the lunar mansions, they did not know the divisions of the quarters. Thieves, having gone there, spoke thus to these monks: “Is there drinking water, honoured sirs?”

“There is not, friends.”

“Is there water for washing ... Is there a fire ... Is there kindling wood, honoured sirs?”

“There is not, friends.”

“What is there a conjunction with today, honoured sirs?”

“Indeed, we do not know, friends.”

“Which quarter is this, honoured sirs?”

“Indeed, we do not know, friends.” Then these thieves thought: “These have no drinking water nor water for washing, there is no fire, there is no kindling wood, they do not know the positions of the lunar mansions, they do not know the divisions of the quarters. These are thieves, these are not monks,’ and having thrashed them, they departed. Then these monks told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks who are forest-dwellers and which should be observed by monks who are forest-dwellers.

Kd.18.6.2

“Monks, a monk who is a forest-dweller, getting up early, having placed his bowl in a bag, having hung it on his shoulder, having arranged his robe³ over his shoulder, having put on his sandals, having packed away the wooden goods, the clay goods, having closed the doors and windows, may leave⁴ his lodgings. If he thinks: ‘Now I will enter a village,’ having taken off his sandals, having put them down, having beaten them, having placed them in a bag, having hung it on his shoulder, having dressed himself all round covering the three circles, having fastened his waistband ... (as in Kd.18.5.2) ... he should turn away carefully and unhurriedly. He should go amid the houses properly clad ... he should not go amid the houses crouching down on his heels.

BD.5.305

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.56 where it is an offence for a monk to kindle a fire to warm himself.

² araṇisaḥita. See BD.3.88, n.5, and Vinaya Texts iii.292, n.2. ³ cīvara, not specified here as “outer cloak”. ⁴ senāsana otaritabbaṃ. Vin-a.1285 says vasanaṭṭhānato nikkhamitabbaṃ, should depart from the place where he was staying.

“Having set out from the village, having placed his bowl in the bag, having hung it on his shoulder, having rolled up his robe, having placed it on his head,¹ having put on his sandals, he should go along. Monks, a monk who is a forest-dweller should set out drinking water, he should set out water for washing, he should set out a fire, he should set out kindling wood, he should set out a walking staff,² he should learn the positions of the lunar mansions, either the whole or one part, he should become skilled in the quarters. This, monks, is the observance for monks who are forest-dwellers and which should be observed by monks who are forest-dwellers.”

Kd.18.6.3

ON DUTIES REGARDING LODGINGS

Now at that time several monks were making robes in the open air. The group of six monks beat their lodgings to windward (of them) and in the open space;³ the monks were covered with dust. Those who were modest monks looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks beat their lodgings ... so that monks are covered with dust?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks beat their lodgings ... covered with dust?”

Kd.18.7.1

Vin.2.218

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks in respect of lodgings that should be observed by monks in respect of lodgings.

Kd.18.7.2

“In whatever dwelling-place he is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, he should, if he is able, clean it.⁴ When he is cleaning the dwelling-place, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the piece of cloth for to sit upon and the sheet ... the mattress and squatting mat, he should lay them to one side. Having lowered the couch, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the couch, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the spittoon, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining board, he should lay it to one side. Having observed how the ground covering was laid down, having taken it out, he should lay it to one side. If there are cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering. He should wipe the corners of the window-holes. If a wall that was coloured red becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked becomes stained, he should wipe it having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground was not treated, he should sweep it; having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: 'Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust.' Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side. He should not beat the lodgings near monks ... near dwelling-places ... near drinking-water ... near water for washing, he should not beat the lodgings to windward in the open space, he should beat the lodgings to leeward.

BD.5.306

¹ See Kd.8.13.1. ² kattaraṇḍa. See Kd.5.6.2 and Vin.2.76, Vin.2.208. ³ aṅgaṇa. Vinaya Texts iii.295, n.1 say that this is “a part of the ārāma immediately in front of the hut or vihāra, which is kept as an open space, and daily swept ... The term is a common one, and its meaning is not doubtful.” ⁴ Cf. this passage with Kd.1.25.14, Kd.1.25.15, Kd.18.1.3. See BD.4.63, BD.4.64 for notes.

Kd.18.7.3

"Having dried the ground-covering to one side in the sun,¹ having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was laid down (before). Having dried the supports for the couch to one side in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them where they were (before). Having dried the couch to one side in the sun, having cleaned it, having beaten it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down (before). Having dried the chair to one side in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down (before). Having dried the mattress and the squatting mat to one side in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down (before). Having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet to one side in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down (before). Having dried the spittoon to one side in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was (before). Having dried the reclining board to one side in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was (before). The bowl and robe should be laid aside.¹ When he is laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other hand under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside; but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When he is laying aside the robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other along the bamboo for robes or the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

Vin.2.219

BD.5.307

¹ Cf. Kd.1.25.16; Kd.18.1.4.

Kd.18.7.4

“If dusty winds² blow from the east, the eastern windows should be closed. If dusty winds blow from the west ... from the north ... from the south, the south windows should be closed. If the weather is cool, the windows should be opened during the day, closed at night. If the weather is warm, the windows should be closed during the day, opened at night. If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch is soiled, the porch should be swept. If an attendance-hall ... a fire-hall ... a privy is soiled, the privy should be swept. If there is no drinking water, drinking water should be provided. If there is no water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be poured into the pitcher of water for rinsing. If he is staying in a dwelling-place together with a senior, he should not give a recitation³ without asking the senior (for permission), he should not give the interrogation, he should not study, he should not speak dhamma,⁴ he should not light a lamp, he should not extinguish a lamp, he should not open windows, he should not close windows. If he is pacing up and down in the same place for pacing up and down in with a senior, he should turn when the senior turns, but he should not touch the senior (even) with a corner of his outer cloak. This, monks, is the observance for monks in respect of lodgings that should be observed by monks in respect of lodgings.”

BD.5.308

Vin.2.220

¹ Cf. Kd.1.25.11. ² Cf. Kd.1.25.18, Kd.1.25.19, etc. ³ Cf. Kd.1.26.1; Kd.1.32.1; Kd.1.37.6, and Vin.4.15. ⁴ As above; and see definition of dhamma at Vin.4.15 = Vin.4.22 = Vin.4.200.

ON DUTIES IN THE SAUNA

Kd.18.8.1

Now at that time the group of six monks, being hindered in (their use of a) bathroom by monks who were elders, having brought, out of disrespect, a quantity of sticks, having made a fire, having closed the doorway, sat down in the doorway. The monks, overcome by the heat, not being able to get through the doorway, fell down fainting. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks, being hindered (in their use of a) bathroom by monks who are elders ... sit down in the doorway, so that monks ... fell down fainting?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks, being hindered in (their use of a) bathroom by monks who are elders ... sat down in the doorway so that monks ... fell down fainting?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, on being hindered in (your use of) a bathroom by monks who are elders, having out of disrespect brought a quantity of sticks, a fire should not be made. Whoever should make one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. And nor, monks, having closed a doorway, should you sit down in the doorway. Whoever should (so) sit down, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

Kd.18.8.2

“On account of this, monks, I will lay down an observance for monks as to a bathroom and which should be observed by monks in a bathroom. Whoever goes first to a bathroom, if ashes have accumulated, should throw out the ashes. If the bathroom is soiled, the bathroom should be swept. If the flooring¹ ... cell ... the porch ... the hall in the bathroom is soiled, the hall in the bathroom should be swept. Chunam should be kneaded, clay should be moistened, water should be poured into the water-jar. On entering the bathroom, having smeared the face with clay, having covered oneself front and back, one may enter the bathroom. One should not sit down so as to encroach on (the space intended for) monks who are elders, nor should newly ordained monks be turned away from a seat.¹ If one is able, a treatment should be done in the bathroom for monks who are elders. On leaving the bathroom, having taken the chair for the bathroom and having covered oneself front and back, one may leave the bathroom. If one is able, a treatment should also be done in the water for the monks who are elders. One should not bathe before the monks who are elders, nor should one bathe above them. Way should be made by one who has bathed and is getting out (of the water) for those who are getting into it. Whoever leaves the bathroom last, if the bathroom is swampy, he should wash it. Having washed the tub for the clay, having put away the chair for the bathroom, having extinguished the fire, having closed the door, he may depart. This, monks, is the observance for monks as to a bathroom and which should be observed by monks in a bathroom.”

BD.5.309

¹ paribhaṇḍa. It is doubtful whether Buddhaghosa has understood this term: he explains it by bahi jaggati, he lies awake outside, Vin-a.1286.

Vin.2.221

ON DUTIES IN THE TOILET

Now at that time a certain monk who had been born a brahmin, having relieved himself, did not want to rinse, thinking: “Who would touch this foul evil smell?” A worm remained in his rectum. Then this monk told this matter to the monks. They said: “But did you, your reverence, not rinse after relieving yourself?” “No, your reverences.” Those who were modest monks ... spread it about ... Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, that you, monk, did not rinse after relieving yourself?” “It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.18.9.1

BD.5.310

“Monks, if there is water you should not not rinse after relieving yourselves. Whoever should not rinse, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks relieved themselves in the privy according to seniority. Newly ordained monks, having arrived first, waited and through restraining themselves, they fell down fainting.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks?” “It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Kd.18.10.1

¹ Cf. Kd.1.25.12, Kd.1.25.13.

“Monks, you should not relieve yourselves in a privy according to seniority. Whoever does (this), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, you monks, to relieve yourselves according to the order of arrival.”

Kd.18.10.2

Now at that time the group of six monks entered a privy very hastily and they entered forcibly² and they relieved themselves while groaning³ and while chewing toothwood and outside the proper vessels and they spat into a vessel and they scraped themselves with a rough piece of wood and they dropped a piece of wood for scraping into a cesspool; and they left very hastily and they left forcibly and they rinsed smacking their lips and they left water in the saucer for rinsing (-water). Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks enter a privy very hastily ... and leave water in the saucer for rinsing (-water)?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks?” “It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.2.222

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance in respect of privies and which is to be observed by monks in privies.

Kd.18.10.3

BD.5.311

“Whoever goes to a privy, standing outside should cough, and the one sitting inside should cough too. Having laid aside the robe on a bamboo for robes or on a cord for robes, one should enter the privy carefully and unhurriedly. One should not enter too hastily, one should not enter forcibly, one should stand firmly on the privy shoes. One should not relieve oneself while groaning ... you should not drop a piece of wood for scraping into a cesspool. You should get rid of it while standing on the privy shoes. You should not depart too quickly, nor forcibly. You should stand firmly on the rinsing shoes. You should not rinse smacking your lips, you should not leave water in the saucer for rinsing (-water). You should get rid of it while standing on the rinsing shoes. If the privy is dirty it should be washed. If the receptacle for (wood for) scraping is full, the pieces of wood for scraping should be thrown away. If the privy is soiled, it should be swept. If the plaster flooring ... if the cell ... if the porch is soiled the porch should be swept. If there is no water in the vessel for rinsing-water, water should be tipped into it. This, monks, is the observance for monks in respect of privies and which should be observed by monks in respect of privies.”

¹ Cf. Kd.18.4.1. ² ubbhujitvā, as at Vin.3.40. ³ nitthunantā. Or is this “spitting”?

ON DUTIES TO THE PRECEPTOR

Now at that time those who shared cells did not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that those who share cells do not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors?” “It is true, Lord.” The Awakened One, the Lord rebuked them, saying:

Kd.18.11.1

“How, monks, can those who share cells not conduct themselves properly towards their preceptors? It is not, monks ...” And having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

Vin.2.223

“Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for those who share cells towards their preceptors and which should be observed by those who share cells towards their preceptors:

“The one who shares a cell,¹ monks, should conduct himself properly towards the preceptor. This is the proper conduct in this respect: having got up early, having taken off his sandals, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, he should give toothwood, he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conje, having washed a bowl, the conje should be placed near (the preceptor). When he has drunk the conje, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, it should be put away. When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed. If that place is soiled, that place should be swept.

Kd.18.11.2

BD.5.312

Kd.18.11.3

¹ From here to the end of Kd.18.11.2 see Kd.1.25.8-Kd.1.25.24, and for notes see BD.4.59ff.

“If the preceptor wishes to enter a village, his inner clothing should be given (to him), the inner clothing (that he is wearing) should be received (from him) in return, the waistband should be given (to him); having folded them (into two or four folds), the outer robes are to be given (to him); having washed it, a bowl with water is to be given (to him). If the preceptor desires an attendant, (the latter) having put on his inner robe all round so as to cover the three circles, having bound on the waistband, having folded them, and having dressed in the outer robes, having fastened the ties, having washed, having taken a bowl, should be the preceptor’s attendant. He should not walk too far away (from him), he should not walk too close. He should receive the bowl and its contents.

Kd.18.11.4

“He should not interrupt the preceptor when he is speaking. (But) if the preceptor is bordering on an offence, then, speaking himself, he should warn him. When he is returning, he should make ready a seat, having come back first; he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand; having gone to meet him, he should receive his bowl and robe, he should give back the inner clothing (given) in return, he should receive his inner clothing. If a robe is damp with perspiration, he should dry it for a short time in the sun’s warmth, but a robe should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should fold up the robe. When folding up the robe, having made the corners turn back four finger-breadths, he should fold up the robe, thinking ‘Mind there is no crease in the middle.’ The waistband should be placed in a fold (of the robe). If there is almsfood and the preceptor wishes to eat, having given him water, almsfood should be placed near (him).

Kd.18.11.5

BD.5.313

“He should offer the preceptor drinking-water. When he has eaten, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, having emptied out the water, he should dry it for a short time in the sun’s warmth, but a bowl should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other hand under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When laying aside a robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or along the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside. When the preceptor has got up, the seat should be removed, the water for washing the feet, the foot-stool, the foot-stand should be put away. If that place comes to be soiled that place should be swept.

Vin.2.224

Kd.18.11.6

“If the preceptor wishes to bathe, he should prepare a bath. If he wants a cold (bath), he should prepare a cold one; if he wants a hot (bath), he should prepare a hot one. If the preceptor wishes to enter a bathroom, he should knead chunam, should moisten clay; taking a chair for the bathroom, having gone close behind the preceptor, having given him the chair for the bathroom, having received his robe he should lay it to one side. He should give him the chunam, he should give him the clay. If he is able to do so, he should enter the bathroom. When he is entering the bathroom, having smeared his face with clay, having covered himself front and back, he should enter the bathroom.

Kd.18.11.7

“He should not sit down so as to encroach upon (the space intended for) monks who are elders. He should not keep newly ordained monks from a seat. He should make preparation for the preceptor in a bathroom. When he is leaving the bathroom, taking the chair for the bathroom, having covered himself front and back, he should leave the bathroom. He should also make preparation for the preceptor in the water. When he is bathing, having come out of the water (first), having dried his own body, having put on his inner robe, he should wipe off the water from the preceptor’s limbs, he should give him his inner clothing, he should give him his outer cloak; taking the chair for the bathroom, having come back first, he should make ready a seat, he should put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand. He should offer the preceptor drinking-water.

BD.5.314

Kd.18.11.8

“If he wishes to make him recite, he should make him recite. If he wishes to interrogate, he should be interrogated. In whatever dwelling-place the preceptor is staying, if that dwelling-place is soiled, it should be cleaned if he is able (to do so). When he is cleaning the dwelling-place, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the mattress and the squatting-mat, he should lay them to one side.

Kd.18.11.9

Vin.2.225 “Having lowered the couch, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having lowered the chair, having taken it out carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the supports for the couch, he should lay them to one side. Having taken out the spittoon, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the reclining-board, he should lay it to one side. Having taken out the ground-covering, having observed how it was laid down, he should lay it to one side. If there come to be cobwebs in the dwelling-place, he should first remove them from the (floor-) covering; he should wipe the corners of the window-holes. If a wall that was coloured red comes to be stained, he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If ground that was blacked becomes stained, he should wipe it, having moistened a rag, having wrung it out. If the ground did not come to be treated, he should sweep it, having sprinkled it all over with water, thinking: ‘Take care lest the dwelling-place is sullied with dust’. Having looked for (any) rubbish, he should remove it to one side.

Kd.18.11.10

“Having dried the ground-covering in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having brought it back, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the supports for the couch in the sun, having wiped them, having brought them back, he should place them where they were before. Having dried the couch in the sun, ... the chair in the sun, having cleaned it, having shaken it, having lowered it, having brought it back carefully without rubbing it, without knocking it against the door or the posts, he should lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the mattress and the squatting mat in the sun ... having dried the piece of cloth to sit upon and the sheet in the sun, having cleaned them, having shaken them, having brought them back, he should lay them down as they were laid down before. Having dried the spittoon in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before. Having dried the reclining-board in the sun, having wiped it, having brought it back, he should place it where it was before.

BD.5.315

Kd.18.11.11

“He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl ... (as in Kd.18.11.5) ... When laying aside a robe ... the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside.

“If dusty winds blow from the east, he should close the eastern windows. If dusty winds blow from the west ... the north ... from the south, he should close the southern windows. If the weather is cool, he should open the windows by day, he should close them at night. If the weather is warm, he should close the windows by day, he should open them at night.

Kd.18.11.12

Vin.2.226

“If a cell is soiled, the cell should be swept. If a porch ... an attendance-hall ... a fire-hall ... a privy is soiled, the privy should be swept. If there is no drinking-water, drinking-water should be provided. If there is no water for washing, water for washing should be provided. If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing.

Kd.18.11.13

“If dissatisfaction has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell should allay it or get another to allay it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If remorse has arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares the cell should dispel it or get another to dispel it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If wrong views have arisen in the preceptor, the one who shares his cell should dissuade him (from them) or get another to dissuade him (from them), or he should give him a talk on dhamma.

Kd.18.11.14

“If the preceptor has committed an offence against an important rule and deserves probation, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order grant the preceptor probation?’ If the preceptor deserves to be sent back to the beginning, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order send the preceptor back to the beginning?’ If the preceptor deserves mānatta (discipline), the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order inflict mānatta (discipline) on the preceptor?’ If the preceptor deserves rehabilitation, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order rehabilitate the preceptor?’

Kd.18.11.15
BD.5.316

“If the Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against the preceptor—one of censure or one of guidance or one of banishment or one of reconciliation or one of suspension—the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order not carry out a (formal) act against the preceptor, or change it to a lighter one?’ Yet if a (formal) act—one of censure ... one of suspension—is carried out by the Order against him, the one who shares his cell should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor conduct himself properly, be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order could revoke that (formal) act?’

Kd.18.11.16

Kd.18.11.17

Vin.2.227

“If the preceptor’s robe should be washed, the one who shares his cell should wash it or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor’s robe be washed?’ If the preceptor’s robe-material should be made up, the one who shares his cell should make it up or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the preceptor’s robe-material be made up?’ If dye should be boiled for the preceptor, the one who shares the cell should boil it or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then can the dye be boiled?’ If the preceptor’s robe should be dyed, the one who shares his cell should dye it or should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then can the preceptor’s robe be dyed?’ When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased.

Kd.18.11.18

BD.5.317

“Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not give an almsbowl to anyone nor should he receive an alms bowl from anyone; he should not give a robe to anyone nor should he receive a robe from anyone; he should not give a requisite to anyone nor should he receive a requisite from anyone; he should not cut off anyone’s hair, nor should he have his hair cut off by anyone; he should not render a service to anyone nor should he cause a service to be rendered by anyone; he should not execute a commission for anyone nor should he cause a commission to be executed by anyone; he should not become an attendant on anyone nor should he take anyone as an attendant; he should not bring back almsfood for anyone nor should he have almsfood brought back by anyone. Without asking the preceptor (for permission), he should not enter a village, he should not go to a cemetery, he should not leave the district. If the preceptor becomes ill, he should tend him for as long as life lasts; he should wait (with him) until he recovers. This, monks, is the observance for those who share cells towards preceptors and which should be observed by those who share cells towards preceptors.”

ON DUTIES TO ONE WHO SHARES HIS CELL

Now at that time preceptors did not conduct themselves properly towards those who shared their cells. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can these preceptors not conduct themselves properly towards those who share their cells?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that preceptors do not conduct themselves properly towards those who share their cells?”

Kd.18.12.1

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying: “Well then, monks, I will lay down an observance for preceptors towards those who share their cells and which should be observed by preceptors towards those who share their cells.

Kd.18.12.2

“The preceptor,¹ monks, should conduct himself properly towards the one who shares his cell. This is the proper conduct in this respect: the one who shares the cell should be furthered, he should be helped by the preceptor in regard to recitation, interrogation, exhortation, instruction. If there is a bowl for the preceptor but no bowl for the one who shares his cell, a bowl should be given by the preceptor to the one who shares his cell, or he should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could a bowl be procured for the one who shares my cell?’ If there is a robe for the preceptor ... if there is (another) requisite for the preceptor ... ‘How then could (another) requisite be procured for the one who shares my cell?’

Vin.2.228

BD.5.318

“If the one who shares a cell becomes ill, having got up early he should give tooth-wood, he should give water for rinsing the mouth, he should make ready a seat. If there is conje, having washed a vessel, conje should be placed near him. When he has drunk the conje, having given him water, having received the vessel, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, it should be put away. When the one who shares a cell has got up, the seat should be removed. If that place is soiled that place should be swept.

Kd.18.12.3

“If the one who shares a cell wishes to enter a village, his inner clothing should be given (to him), the inner clothing (that he is wearing) should be received from him, in return, the outer robes should be given (to him),

Kd.18.12.4

¹ From here to the end of Kd.18.12 is the same as Kd.1.26.

having folded them (into two or four folds); having washed it, a bowl with water is to be given to him. Thinking: 'He will be returning about now,' he should make ready a seat, he should set out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand; having gone to meet him, he should receive his bowl and robe, he should give back the inner clothing (given) in return, he should receive his inner clothing. If a robe is damp with perspiration, he should dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but a robe should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should fold up the robe. When folding up the robe, having made the corners turn back four finger-breadths, he should fold up the robe, thinking: 'Mind there is no crease in the middle'. The waistband should be placed in a fold (of the robe). If there is almsfood and the one who shares a cell wishes to eat, having given him water, almsfood should be placed near (him).

Kd.18.12.5

BD.5.319

"He should offer the one who shares his cell drinking water. When he has eaten, having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it, having washed it properly without rubbing it, having emptied out the water he should dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but a bowl should not be laid aside in the warmth. He should lay aside the bowl and robes. When laying aside the bowl, having taken the bowl in one hand, having felt with the other under the couch or under the chair, the bowl should be laid aside, but the bowl should not be laid aside on the bare ground. When laying aside a robe, having taken the robe in one hand, having stroked the other hand along the bamboo for robes or the cord for robes, having got the edges away from him and the fold towards him, the robe should be laid aside. When the one who shares a cell has got up, the seat should be removed, the water for washing the feet, the foot-stool, the foot-stand should be put away. If that place comes to be soiled, that place should be swept.

Vin.2.229

Kd.18.12.6

"If the one who shares a cell wishes to bathe, he should prepare a bath. If he wants a cold (bath), he should prepare a cold one; if he wants a hot (bath), he should prepare a hot one. If the one who shares a cell wishes to enter a bathroom, he should knead chunam, he should moisten clay; taking a chair for the bathroom, having gone (close behind the one who shares a cell), having given him the chair for the bathroom, having received his robe, he should lay it to one side. He should give him the chunam, he should give him the clay. If he is able to do so he should enter the bathroom. When he is entering the bathroom, having smeared his face with clay, having covered himself front and back he should enter the bathroom.

Kd.18.12.7

“He should not sit down so as to encroach upon (the space intended for) monks who are elders. He should not keep newly ordained monks from a seat. He should make preparation for the one who shares a cell in the bathroom. When he is leaving the bathroom, taking the chair for the bathroom, having covered himself front and back, he should leave the bathroom. And he should make preparation in the water for the one who shares his cell. When he is bathing, having come out of the water first, having dried his own body, having put on his inner robe, he should wipe off the water from the limbs of the one who shares the cell, he should give him his inner clothing, he should give him his outer cloak; taking the chair for the bathroom, having come back first, he should make ready a seat, he should put out water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, a foot-stand. He should offer the one who shares a cell drinking-water.

BD.5.320

“If the dwelling-place in which the one who shares a cell is staying is dirty, if he is able (to do so) he should clean it. When he is cleaning it, having first taken out the bowl and robes, he should lay them to one side ... If there is no water in the pitcher of water for rinsing, water should be tipped into the pitcher of water for rinsing. If dissatisfaction has arisen in the one who shares a cell, the preceptor should allay it or get another to allay it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If remorse ... the preceptor should dispel it or get another to dispel it, or he should give him a talk on dhamma. If wrong views have arisen in the one who shares a cell, the preceptor should dissuade him (from them) or get another to dissuade him (from them) or he should give him a talk on dhamma.

Kd.18.12.8

Vin.2.230

“If the one who shares a cell has committed an offence against an important rule ... the preceptor should make an effort, thinking: ‘How then could the Order rehabilitate the one who shares the cell?’

Kd.18.12.9

“If the Order desires to carry out a (formal) act against one who shares a cell ... thinking: ‘How then could the one who shares a cell conduct himself properly, be subdued, mend his ways, (so that) the Order could revoke that (formal) act?’

Kd.18.12.10

Kd.18.12.11

“If the robe of one who shares a cell should be washed ... When he is dyeing the robe, he should dye it properly, turning it again and again, nor should he go away if the drips have not ceased. If the one who shares a cell becomes ill, he should tend him for as long as life lasts; he should wait (with him) until he recovers. This, monks, is the observance for preceptors towards those who share their cells and which should be observed by preceptors towards those who share their cells.”

Vin.2.231

The Second Portion for Repeating

ON DUTIES TO THE TEACHER

BD.5.321

Now at that time pupils did not conduct themselves properly towards their teachers ... (as in Kd.18.11.1. Instead of preceptor read teacher; instead of one who shares a cell read pupil) ...

ON DUTIES TO THE STUDENT

Kd.18.14.1

Now at that time teachers did not conduct themselves properly towards their pupils ... (as in Kd.18.12.1 Instead of preceptor, one who shares his cell read teacher, pupil) ...

Told is the Eighth Section: that on Observances

IN THIS SECTION ARE FIFTY-FIVE ITEMS, FOURTEEN OBSERVANCES. THIS IS ITS KEY

With sandals and sunshades, heads muffled up, drinking water, did not greet, they did not ask, snake, the well behaved looked down upon, /
He took off, sunshade, and over his shoulder, and unhurriedly, withdrawal, laying aside bowl and robe, and suitable, asked,¹ / Should sprinkle,² and about washing, sandals with a dry and a damp³ (cloth), a senior, a newly ordained one should ask, and whether occupied, resorts, / Learners, privies, drinking water, washing,⁴ staff, agreement, thereupon⁵ the time, a moment, soiled, the ground-covering should be taken out, /

¹ pucchitā. ² Oldenberg's text: asiñceyya; Siamese: āsiñci. ³ Oldenberg's text: all'; Siamese allen'. ⁴ paribhojaniya here abbreviated to pari. ⁵ Oldenberg's text: katikan tato; Siamese katikaṭṭhitam.

Supports, mattress and squatting mat, and couch and chair, spittoon,¹ reclining board, cobwebs, corners, coloured red, black, not treated,² /
 And rubbish, ground covering, supports, couch and chair, mattress,³ piece of cloth to sit upon, spittoon,⁴ and reclining board, / Bowl and robe, and the ground, the edges away, the folds towards, from East, and from West, from the North, then from the South, /
 And cool, warm, by day, at night, and a cell, a porch, attendance- and fire-hall, and the custom in privies, /
 Water for drinking, for washing, and into pitchers of water for rinsing—
 For the rhythm: an observance laid down for those incoming. / Neither a seat, nor water, nor meeting, nor drinking water either, they did not greet, they did not appoint,⁵ and the well behaved spread it about. /
 And a seat for a senior, water, and having gone to meet, drinking water, sandals, on one side, and he should be greeted, should be appointed, / Occupied, resorts and a learner, privy, drinking- and washing-water,⁶ staff,⁷ agreement, the time, if he is sitting down before one newly ordained, /
 He should greet, he should explain, the method is as below.
 The observance for these resident ones was pointed out by the Leader of the Caravan. / Those going away and wood, clay,⁸ having opened, not asking (for permission), and they were lost, and unguarded, and the well behaved ones looked down upon.
 /
 Having packed away, having closed, having asked (for permission), so may he set out,
 monk or novice or park-attendant or lay follower, /
 On stones, a heap, he should pack away, and he should close, if he is able,⁹ or an effort, and just where it does not leak, /
 If the whole¹⁰ leaks—to a village, and just there in the open air, “So the different things surely remain”: the observance for monks who are going away. /

BD.5.322

Vin.2.232

BD.5.323

¹ kheḷamallaka here abbreviated to mallaka. ² Oldenberg: gerukā-kāḷa, akatā; Siamese: gerukā kāḷakākata. ³ Oldenberg: paṭipādakam mañca-piṭham, / bhisi; Siamese: patipādakā mañcakam / pitham bhisi. ⁴ kheḷamallaka here abbreviated to mallaka. ⁵ Oldenberg: paññāpe; Siamese: paññāpe. ⁶ Oldenberg: bhojani; Siamese: bhojanam. ⁷ Oldenberg: kattarā; Siamese: kattaram. ⁸ Oldenberg: matti ca; Siamese: mattikā. ⁹ Oldenberg: ussahati; Siamese: sace ussahati. ¹⁰ Oldenberg: sabbe; Siamese: sace. ¹¹ Oldenberg: anupakhajjane; Siamese: jjanam.

having dressed with the inner robe all round one for covering the three circles, waistband, one bundle, block, /

Not turning aside, properly clad, well-controlled, eyes cast down,¹ lifting up the robes, with loud laughter, noise, and so the three swayings,² /

Arms akimbo, muffled up, crouching, properly clad, well controlled, lifting up the robes, loud laughter,³ little noise, the three swayings,⁴ /

Arms akimbo, muffled up, and lolling, encroaching, not on a seat, having spared (he should) not, when water,⁵ having lowered, he should not splash,
/

Receiver, neighbouring, outer cloak, and if cooked rice it should be received, curry, tit-bits, for all, and an equal level,⁶ /

Attentively, and thinking of the bowl,⁷ and on continuous almsround, equal curry, not from the top, coverings up, asking, captious-mindedly, /

BD.5.324

Large, a round, door, whole hand, one should not talk,⁸ ball, breaking up, cheeks, shaking, scattering lumps of boiled rice, /

And then putting out the tongue, smacking the lips, making a hissing sound, licking the fingers, the bowl, the lips, accepting with what is soiled, /

Until everyone,⁹ when water,¹⁰ having lowered, he should not splash, receiver, neighbouring, outer cloak, and having lowered on the ground, /

With lumps of boiled rice, when returning, properly clad, crouching;

this refectory-observance was laid down by the dhamma-king. /

Wrongly dressed, improperly, and without deliberation,¹¹ hastily,

Vin.2.233

far, close, long, soon, here just those who walk for alms. /

He may go properly clad,¹² well controlled,¹³ his eyes cast down,¹⁴ lifting up the robes, with loud laughter, noise, and so the three swayings, /

Arms akimbo, muffled up, crouching, and having considered, hastily, far, close, long, soon, a little seat, a spoon, /

Or a dish and if she sets it out, having raised (and) having uncovered,¹⁵

(the alms) may be received, he should not look at, and that is about curries as before, /

A monk should cover with the outer cloak, he should go properly clad,¹⁶ well controlled, and the eyes cast down, lifting up the robes, and with loud laughter,

¹ Oldenberg: -cakkhu; Siamese: cakkhunā. ² pacālanā ... calā. ³ Oldenberg: okkhittacittā, ujjhaggi; Siamese: okkhittukkhittā ujjhagghi. ⁴ pacālanā ... calā. ⁵ Oldenberg: na udake; Siamese: ca udake. ⁶ Oldenberg: samatitti; Siamese: samakanti. ⁷ Siamese here adds: samasūpañca titthikā / na tāva thero bhuñjeyya asampatte ca odane / sakkacāṃ pattasaññī ca sapadānam ca sūpakāṃ.

⁸ Oldenberg: na byāhare; Siamese: na vohare. ⁹ Oldenberg: yāva na sabbe, udake; Siamese: na tāva yāva na sabbe. ¹⁰ Oldenberg: yāva na sabbe, udake; Siamese: na tāva yāva na sabbe.

¹¹ Oldenberg: asallakkhe ca sahasā; Siamese: asalakkhetvā sāhasā. ¹² Oldenberg: paṭicchannena; Siamese paticchanno va. ¹³ Oldenberg: susaṃvut' okkhittacakkhu; Siamese: samvut' okkhittacakkhunā.

¹⁴ Oldenberg: susaṃvut' okkhittacakkhu; Siamese: samvut' okkhittacakkhunā. ¹⁵ Oldenberg: paṇāmetvā; Siamese: paṇāmakā.

¹⁶ paṭicchanneva.

/

Little noise, the three swayings, arms akimbo, muffled up, crouching, the first the seat, the refuse (tub), drinking water, washing water, the last if he so desires may eat, it may be thrown into, he should remove, /
He should put away, he should sweep, if empty (and) depleted he should attend (to them)

BD.5.325

by a sign with the hand, he should not break into:¹ and the observance for those who walk for alms. /

Drinking water, washing water, fire, kindling wood and lunar mansions (and) quarters (and) thieves, thinking, “there is nothing” having thrashed (them), a bowl, on the shoulder, then the robe, /

“Now,” having hung on the shoulder, the three circles, all round, as is the observance for those who walk for alms so are the meanings in that for forest-dwellers. /

A bowl, on the shoulder, robe, on the head, and having put on, drinking water, washing water, fire, and also kindling wood, a staff, /

Lunar mansions, or their positions, he should become skilled in the quarters:
the observance was laid down for these forest-dwellers by the Best of Teachers. /
In the open air, they were covered, and the well behaved looked down upon.

If a dwelling-place is soiled, first the bowl and robe, /

Mattress and squatting-mat, couch, and chair, spittoon, reclining board (and) window corners, red colouring, black, not treated, / Rubbish, near monks, lodgings, dwelling-place, drinking water, near washing water, and to windward in the open space, /

To leeward, covering, supports and couch,² chair, mattress, piece of cloth to sit upon, spittoon, and reclining board, / And bowl and robe on the ground, the edges away from, the fold towards, and the East, the West, the North, then the South, /

And cool and warm, by day (and) at night, and a cell, a porch, attendance- and fire-hall, a privy, drinking water, /

Pitcher of rinsing water, seniors, recitation (and) interrogation, study,³ dhamma, and a light, he should (not) extinguish, he should not open, nor should he close, /

BD.5.326

When the senior turns, he should not touch him even with a corner;
the Great Sage laid down this observance for lodgings. /

If they are being hindered, doorway, fainting, the well behaved look down upon, he should throw out the ashes, bathroom, and flooring as before, /

Vin.2.234

Cell (and) porch, hall, chunam (and) clay (and) jar,

¹ Oldenberg: hatthivikāre, bhindeyya; Siamese: hatthakāre na bhindeyya. ² Oldenberg: mañce ca; Siamese: mañcakaṇ. ³ Oldenberg: -paripucchanā, sajjhā, / dhammo, padīpaṇ ca vijjhāpe na vivare, na pi thake; Siamese: paripucchanā / sajjhā dhammo padīpaṇ ca na vivare na ca thake. / face, in front, not (encroaching on) elders, nor¹ newly ordained, if he is able, /

 In front, above, a way, swampy, clay, a little chair, and having extinguished, he may depart:² the observance for those in bathrooms.
 /

He did not rinse, according to seniority and in order, and he fell down, hastily, forcibly,³ groaning, toothwood, they relieved themselves, spitting, / Rough, cesspool, hastily, forcibly, smacking, they left,⁴ outside and inside one should cough, a cord, and unhurriedly, / Hastily, forcibly, groaning,⁵ toothwood, and relieving oneself, spitting, rough, and cesspool, privy shoes, /
 Not too hastily, forcibly, shoes, smacking the lips, one should not leave, one should not⁶ get rid of, dirty,⁷ and about the receptacle,⁸ / Privy, plaster flooring, and cell, porch, and water in the pitcher for rinsing water: the observance in the privies are these.
 /

BD.5.327

Sandals, toothwood, and water for rinsing the mouth, a seat, conje, water, having washed, he should remove, soiled, and village, / Inner clothing, waistband, fold, a bowl with water, attendant, and precisely the three circles, all round, waistband, / Fold, having washed, attendant, not too far away, he should receive, while he is speaking, offence, going first, a seat, /
 Water, (foot-) stool and stand, having gone to meet, inner clothing, in the sun, he laid aside, crease, in a fold, let him eat, he may place,⁹ Drinking water, water, lowered, for a moment, but he should not lay aside, bowl on the ground and robes, edges away, fold towards, /
 He should remove, he should put away, and soiled, to bathe, cold, hot, bathroom, chunam, clay, behind, /
 And chair, robe, chunam, clay, if he is able, face, front, elders, neither, and preparation, when leaving, / Front, in the water, when bathing, having dressed, the preceptor, and the inner clothing, outer cloak, chair, and about a seat, /
 Footstool and stand, drinking water, recitation, interrogation, if soiled he should clean it,¹⁰ first the bowl and robes / Piece of cloth to sit upon and sheet, and the mattress and squatting mat, couch, chair, supports, spittoon, and the reclining board, /

¹ Siamese omits na. ² Oldenberg: vijjhāpetvā ca, pakkame; Siamese: vijjhāpetvā thaketvā ca. ³ Oldenberg reads uppajji for ubbhujitvā, and in the line below ubbhajjhi; Siamese ubbhuji in both places. ⁴ Oldenberg: sethena. At Kd.18.10.2 the corresponding word is sesenti. Siamese: sesakaṃ. ⁵ Oldenberg: sahasā ubbhajjitvāna; Siamese: sahasā ubbhujī thite. ⁶ Siamese omits na. ⁷ Oldenberg: uhana, presumably for ūhatā of Kd.18.10.3; Siamese: ūhanā. ⁸ Oldenberg: pidharena ca; Siamese: piṭharena ca. ⁹ name, for upanāmetabbo at the end of Kd.18.11.4. ¹⁰ Oldenberg uklāpaṃ su sodheyya; Siamese: uklāp'ussahaṃ sodheyya.

Ground- (covering), cobwebs, windows, red, black, not treated, ground-covering, supports, couch, chair, mattress, /
 Piece of cloth to sit upon and sheet, spittle and reclining board, bowl and robe, from the East, and from the West, from the North, and then from the South, / Vin.2.235
 And cool and warm, by day and night, and a cell, porch, attendance- and fire-hall, privy, drinking water, water for washing, /
 Pitcher of water for rinsing, dissatisfaction remorse, and wrong view, important BD.5.328 (rule),¹ the beginning, mānatta, rehabilitation, censure, guidance,² / Banishment, reconciliation, and suspension, if it is carried out, he should wash, and he should make up, the dye, he should dye, turning it, /
 And bowl, and also robe, and a requisite, cutting off, service, commission, attendant, almsfood, entering, / Nor to a cemetery, and also from a district, he should attend him for as long as life lasts;
 this is the observance for one who shares a cell. These are for a preceptor: / Exhortation, instruction, recitation, interrogation, and bowl, robe, and requisite, ill, he should not be an attendant.³ /
 These observances for preceptors are also so for teachers;
 as are the observances for those who share a cell, so they are for pupils. /
 Those observances for incoming ones, and again for resident ones, those going away, those giving thanks, in a refectory, those walking for almsfood, /
 That observance for forest-dwellers, and also that for lodgings,
 In a bathroom, a privy, and those for preceptors and those who share their cells, /
 (As is) that observance for teachers, so is it for pupils.
 Nineteen matters are spoken of in sixteen sections. /
 Being imperfect in observance one does not perfect morality,
 Impure in morality, of poor wisdom, one knows not one-pointedness of mind, /
 The mind wavering, not one-pointed, sees not dhamma rightly, not seeing true dhamma, one is not freed from ill. /
 Being perfect in observance, one perfects morality too, pure in morality, with wisdom, one knows too one-pointedness of mind, /
 The mind unwavering, one-pointed, rightly sees dhamma too, BD.5.329 beholding true dhamma, one is freed from ill. /
 Wherefore the watchful son of the Conqueror should fulfil the observance, the exhortation of the best of Buddhas—hence he will come to nibbāna. / Vin.2.236

¹ Oldenberg ācamanaṃ anabhirati kukkucçaṃ diṭṭhi ca garu; Siamese: ācamā -anabhirati kukkucçaṃ diṭṭhikā garu. ² Oldenberg has niyasaka above, for nissaya. Siamese niyas-sakaṃ. Cf. also AN.i.99 where niyassakamma should read nissayak-. ³ Oldenberg reads na pacchāsamaṇo sāve; Siamese bhave.

19. SUSPENDING THE OBSERVANCE (UPOSATHAṬṬHĀPANA)

REQUESTING THE RECITATION OF THE PĀTIMOKKHA

Kd.19.1.1
BD.5.330

At one time¹ the Awakened One, the Lord was staying at Sāvattthī in the Eastern Monastery in the long house of Migāra’s mother. Now at that time the Lord was sitting down surrounded by an Order of monks on an Observance day. Then, when the night was far spent, as the first watch was waning, the venerable Ānanda, rising from his seat, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, having saluted the Lord with joined palms, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, the night is far spent, the first watch is waning; the Order of monks has been sitting down for a long time; Lord, let the Lord recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.”² When he had spoken thus the Lord became silent. And when the night was far spent, as the middle watch was waning, the venerable Ānanda a second time rising from his seat, having arranged ... spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, the night is far spent, the middle watch is waning; ... recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.” And a second time the Lord became silent. And when the night was far spent, as the last watch was waning, when the sun had risen and the night had a face of gladness,³ a third time did the venerable Ānanda, rising from his seat, having arranged ... speak thus to the Lord:

¹ The whole of this episode occurs also at AN.iv.204ff., Ud.5.5. ² Quoted at Kh-a.114; and at DN-a.227–DN-a.228, and Vv-a.52, to “for a long time,” as an example of khaya, waning.

³ Cf. Kd.8.13.2; Ud.3.3.

“Lord, the night is far spent, the last watch is waning; the sun has risen, the night has a face of gladness; the Order of monks has been sitting down for a long time; Lord, let the Lord recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.”

“Ānanda, the assembly is not entirely pure.”¹

Then it occurred to the venerable Moggallāna the Great:

“Now, on account of which individual did the Lord speak thus: ‘Ānanda, the assembly is not entirely pure?’” Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great with his mind compassed the minds of the entire Order of monks. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great saw that individual sitting in the midst of the Order of monks—of bad moral habit,² depraved in character, of impure and suspicious behaviour,³ of concealed actions,⁴ not a (true) recluse (although) pretending to be a (true) recluse, not a farer of the Brahma-faring (although) pretending to be a farer of the Brahma-faring, rotten within, filled with desire,⁵ filthy by nature; seeing him, he approached that individual, having approached, he spoke thus to that individual:

“Get up, your reverence, the Lord has seen you; for you there is no communion⁶ together with the monks.” When he had spoken thus that individual became silent. And a second time ... And a third time the venerable Moggallāna the Great spoke thus to that individual: “Get up, your reverence ... for you there is no communion together with the monks.” And a third time that individual became silent. Then the venerable Moggallāna the Great, having taken that individual by the arm, having thrust him out through the porch of the gateway, having shot the bolt,⁷ approached the Lord; having approached, he spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord I have thrust that individual out; the company is entirely pure; Lord, let the Lord recite the Pātimokkha to the monks.”

“How strange, Moggallāna, how wonderful, Moggallāna, that that foolish man should have waited even until he was taken hold of by the arm.”

¹ I.e. there is some monk in it who has not confessed an offence which he has committed.

² For this set of epithets cf. AN.i.108, AN.i.126, AN.ii.239, AN.iv.201, AN.i.205, Pp.27, Pp.36; Ud.52; SN.iv.180–SN.iv.181. ³ SN.i.66, Thag.277; cf. Dh-p-a.iii.485. ⁴ Snp.127. ⁵ Defined at Vin.4.214, Vin.4.221, Vin.4.233 (BD.3.161, BD.3.174, BD.3.196).

⁶ samvāsa. Cf. definition at Vin.4.315, and definition of “to be in communion” at Vin.4.138, Vin.4.214. Also see Bu-Pc.69.

⁷ sūciḡhaṭṭikam datvā, cf. Kd.15.14.3. This episode is referred to at Snp-a.312.

Kd.19.1.2

BD.5.331

Vin.2.237

Kd.19.1.3

Then the Lord addressed the monks,¹ saying:

EIGHT WONDERFUL THINGS ABOUT THE GREAT OCEAN

BD.5.332 “Monks, there are these eight strange and wonderful things about the great ocean,² from constantly having seen which *asuras*³ delight in the great ocean. What are the eight? The great ocean, monks, deepens gradually, slopes gradually, shelves gradually, with no abruptness like a precipice. And monks, that the great ocean deepens gradually, slopes gradually, shelves gradually with no abruptness like a precipice—this, monks, is the first strange and wonderful thing about the great ocean from constantly having seen which asuras delight in the great ocean.

“And again, monks, the great ocean is stable, it does not overflow its margins.⁴ And, monks, that the great ocean is stable, that it does not overflow its margins—this, monks, is the second strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, the great ocean does not associate with a dead body, a corpse. Whatever dead body, corpse there may be in the great ocean, that it just quickly forces ashore and pushes on to the dry land.⁵ That the great ocean, monks, does not associate with a dead body, a corpse ... this, monks, is the third strange and wonderful thing ...

Vin.2.238 “And again, monks, all the great rivers, that is to say the Ganges, the Jumna, the Aciravatī, the Sarabhū, the Mahī⁶—these, on reaching the great ocean lose their former names and identities⁷ and are reckoned simply as the great ocean. That all the great rivers ... this, monks, is the fourth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, those streams which in the world flow into the great ocean, and those showers from the sky which fall into it, yet is neither the emptiness nor the fullness of the great ocean affected by that. That those streams which in the world ... this, monks, is the fifth strange and wonderful thing ...

¹ At AN.iv.198 this description of the ocean is ascribed to the asura chief, Pahārāda. ² As at AN.iv.198–AN.iv.204, AN.iv.206–AN.iv.208; Ud.53–Ud.56. ³ A class of mythical beings—not apparently here, as sometimes, shown as the enemies of the devas. ⁴ In ebbing and flowing, Vin-a.1287 says. ⁵ Cf. Mi.187, Mi.250. ⁶ This list recurs at AN.iv.101, AN.v.22; SN.ii.135, SN.v.38; Mi.70, Mi.87, Mi.380; Vism.10. ⁷ gotta, clan. Cf. Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.10.1,2; Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.8, Praśna Upaniṣad 6.5.

“And again, monks, the great ocean has one taste, the taste of salt. That the great ocean, monks, has one taste ... this, monks, is the sixth strange and wonderful thing ...

BD.5.333

“And again, monks, the great ocean has many treasures,¹ divers treasures; these treasures are there, that is to say: pearl,² crystal, lapis lazuli, shell, quartz, coral, silver, gold, ruby, cat’s-eye. That the great ocean, monks, has many treasures ... this, monks, is the seventh strange and wonderful thing ...

“And again, monks, the great ocean is the abode of great beings; these beings are there: the timis, the timingalas, the timitimiṅgalas, asuras,³ nāgas, gandhabbas. There are in the great ocean individualities⁴ a hundred *yojanas*⁵ (long),⁶ individualities two hundred ... three hundred ... four hundred ... five hundred yojanas (long). That the great ocean, monks, is the abode of great beings; that these beings are there: the timis ... individualities five hundred yojanas (long)—this, monks, is the eighth strange and wonderful thing about the great ocean from constantly having seen which asuras delight in the great ocean. These, monks, are the eight strange and wonderful things about the great ocean from constantly having seen which asuras delight in the great ocean.

EIGHT WONDERFUL THINGS ABOUT THIS DHAMMA AND VINAYA

“In exactly the same way, monks, in this dhamma and discipline there are eight strange and wonderful things from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline. What are the eight?

Kd.19.1.4

“Even,⁷ monks, as the great ocean deepens gradually, slopes gradually, shelves gradually with no abruptness like a precipice, even so, monks, in

¹ ratana. ² See GS.iv.137, notes. ³ See GS.iv.137, n.11. ⁴ attabhāva. ⁵ See BD.2.90, n.8.

⁶ Quoted Atthasālinī 299. ⁷ Quoted Kv.219.

BD.5.334 this dhamma and discipline there is a gradual training,¹ a gradual doing,² a gradual course,³ with no abruptness such as penetration of profound knowledge. And, monks, that in this dhamma and discipline there is a ... gradual course with no abruptness such as penetration of profound knowledge, this, monks, is the first strange and wonderful thing from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline.

Vin.2.239 “And even, monks, as the great ocean is stable and does not overflow its margins, even so, monks, whatever rule of training has been laid down by me for disciples, my disciples will not transgress it even for life’s sake. And that, monks, my disciples will not transgress even for life’s sake a rule of training laid down by me for disciples, this, monks, is the second strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as the great ocean does not associate with a dead body, a corpse, but whatever dead body, corpse there may be in the great ocean, that it just quickly forces ashore and pushes on to the dry land, even so, monks, whatever individual is of bad moral habit, of depraved character, of impure and suspicious behaviour, of concealed actions, not a (true) recluse (although) pretending to be a (true) recluse, not a farer of the Brahma-faring (although) pretending to be a farer of the Brahma-faring, rotten within, filled with desire, filthy by nature—the Order does not live in communion⁴ with him, but having assembled quickly, suspends him; and although he is sitting in the midst of an Order of monks, yet he is far from the Order and the Order is far from him⁵ ... this, monks, is the third strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as those great rivers, that is to say the Ganges, the Jumna, the Aciravatī, the Sarabhū, the Mahī which, on reaching the great ocean, lose their former names and identities and are reckoned simply as the great ocean, even so, monks, (members of) these four castes: noble, brahmin, merchant and low, having gone forth from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, lose their former names and clans and are reckoned simply as recluses, sons of the Sakyans¹ ... this, monks, is the fourth strange and wonderful thing ...

¹ AN-a.iv.111 says this is the “three trainings,” i.e. either in the higher moral habit, the higher mentality, the higher wisdom (as at AN.i.234), or in moral habit, concentration, wisdom. For these three words, cf. MN.i.479. MN.iii.1; AN.iv.201; Ud.54. ² kiriya. AN-a.iv.111 calls this the thirteen dhutaṅgas, ascetic practices (explained at Vism.59ff.). ³ AN-a.iv.111 calls this: the seven (ways of) contemplating, the eighteen great (ways of) insight (Vism.628ff.), the thirty-eight categories of dependence, the thirty-seven things helpful to enlightenment.

⁴ Saṃvasati; a technical term when used of the Order; see note above, BD.5.331. ⁵ Cf. It.p.91.

BD.5.335

“And even, monks, as those streams which in the world flow into the great ocean and those showers which fall into it from the sky, yet not by that is either the emptiness or the fullness of the great ocean affected—even so, monks, even if many monks attain nibbāna in the nibbāna-condition in which no more groups are remaining,² not by that is either the emptiness or the fullness of the nibbāna-condition affected ... this, monks, is the fifth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as the great ocean has one taste, the taste of salt, even so, monks, does this dhamma and discipline have one taste, the taste of freedom ... this, monks, is the sixth strange and wonderful thing ...

“And even, monks, as the great ocean has many treasures, divers treasures—these treasures are there, that is to say: pearl, crystal, lapis lazuli, shell, quartz, coral, silver, gold, ruby, cat’s-eye—even so, monks, does this dhamma and discipline have many treasures, divers treasures—these treasures are there, that is to say: the four arousings of mindfulness, the four right efforts, the four bases of psychic power, the five faculties, the seven links in awakening, the noble eightfold Way³ ... this, monks, is the seventh strange and wonderful thing ...

Vin.2.240

“And even, monks, as the great ocean is the abode of great beings—these beings are there: timis, timingalas, timitimingalas, asuras, nāgas, gandhabbas, individualities a hundred yojanas (long) ... two hundred ... three hundred ... four hundred ... five hundred yojanas (long)—even so, monks, this dhamma and discipline is the abode of great beings—these beings are there: the stream-attainer, the one going along to the realisation of the fruit of stream-attainment, the once-returner, the one going along to the realisation of the fruit of once-returning, the non-returner, the one going along to the reali-

¹ On this term see BD.2, Introduction, p.xliv. ² See GS.iv.139, n.4 and GS.iv.320; also DN.iii.135, It.p.38 where the meaning of anupādisesanibbānadhātu is explained. See also Compendium of Buddhist Philosophy p.154: “That which bears its own intrinsic nature.” The groups are those of grasping. ³ MRS. RHYS DAVIDS, Sakya, p.395, points out that the order of these terms sometimes varies.

BD.5.336 sation of the fruit of non-returning, the perfected one, the one going along to perfection. And that, monks, this dhamma and discipline is the abode of great beings—these beings are there: the stream-attainer ... the one going along to perfection, this, monks, is the eighth strange and wonderful thing in this dhamma and discipline from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline. These, monks, are the eight strange and wonderful things in this dhamma and discipline from constantly having seen which monks delight in this dhamma and discipline.”

Then the Lord, having known this matter, at that time uttered this utterance:

“It rains hard on a covered thing,
It rains not hard on an open thing;
So open up the covered thing,
Thus will it not rain hard on that.”¹

THOSE DESERVING TO HEAR THE PĀTIMOKKHA

Kd.19.2.1

Then the Lord addressed the monks, saying: “Now, I, monks, henceforth will not carry out the Observance, I will not recite the Pātimokkha; now you yourselves, monks, must henceforth carry out the Observance, must recite the Pātimokkha. It is not possible, monks, it cannot come to pass that the Truth-finder should carry out the Observance, should recite the Pātimokkha with an assembly that is not entirely pure. Nor, monks, should the Pātimokkha be heard by one who has an offence.² Whoever (such) should hear it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to suspend the Pātimokkha for him who, having an offence, hears the Pātimokkha.³ And thus, monks, should it be suspended:⁴ On an Observance day, whether it be the fourteenth or the fifteenth, when that individual is present this should be uttered in the midst of the Order: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The individual So-and-so has an offence; I am suspending the Pātimokkha for him, the Pātimokkha should not be recited when he is present’ — (thus) does the Pātimokkha become suspended.”

Vin.2.241

¹ This verse occurs at Ud.v.5, but not at AN.iv.204 or AN.iv.208. It is among the verses ascribed to Sirimaṇḍa, Thag.447. Vin-a.1287 observes (as is clear from the context) that the covered thing means “having fallen into an offence and concealing it one falls into another and a fresh offence; but disclosing it, one does not fall into another offence.” Cf. Ud-a.306, and also Thag-a.ii.188. ² Cf. Kd.2.27.1. ³ Kd.11.5.1 says that it may not be suspended (thapeti) for a regular monk. ⁴ Cf. suspending the Invitation, Kd.4.16.2 which follows a similar course.

Now at that time the group of six monks,¹ thinking: “No one knows about us,” listened to the Pātimokkha although they had offences. Monks who were elders, knowing the minds of others, told the monks: “So-and-so and So-and-so, your reverences, (belonging to) the group of six monks, thinking, ‘No one knows about us,’ listened to the Pātimokkha although they had offences.” The group of six monks heard it said that the monks who were elders, knowing the minds of others, had told the monks: “So-and-so and So-and-so ... listened to the Pātimokkha although they had offences.” These, thinking: “In case the well behaved monks suspend the Pātimokkha for us,” suspended first, without ground, without reason, the Pātimokkha for the pure monks who had no offences. These who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this group of six monks suspend, without ground, without reason, the Pātimokkha for pure monks who have no offences?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Is it true, as is said, monks, that the group of six monks suspended, without ground, without reason, the Pātimokkha for pure monks who have no offences?”

“It is true, Lord.” Having rebuked them, having given reasoned talk, he addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, you should not, without ground, without reason, suspend the Pātimokkha for pure monks who have no offences. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.

SETTING ASIDE THE PĀTIMOKKHA BY RULE AND NOT BY RULE

“Monks, one suspension of the Pātimokkha is not legally valid, one is legally valid; two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid, two are legally valid; three... four ... five ... six ... seven ... eight ... nine ... ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid, ten are legally valid.

¹ Cf. Kd.4.16.3.

Kd.19.3.3

“What is the one suspension of the Pātimokkha that is not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, this one suspension of the Pātimokkha is not legally valid.

“What is the one suspension of the Pātimokkha that is legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, this one suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

BD.5.338

“What are the two suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits, these two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.

Vin.2.242

“What are the two suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from good habits, these two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.

“What are the three suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from right views, these three suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the three suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit ... from good habits ... from right views, these three suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the four suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit ... from good habits ... from right views, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from a right mode of livelihood, these four suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.

“What are the four suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit, ... from good habits ... from right views, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from a right mode of livelihood, these four suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the five suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence of expiation ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence which ought to be confessed ... on an unfounded (charge of) an offence of wrong-doing, these five suspensions ... are not legally valid.

BD.5.339

“What are the five suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... on a founded (charge of) an offence of wrong-doing, these five suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the six suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done,¹ if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has been done² ... on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done, these six suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the six suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... on a founded (charge of) falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done, these six suspensions ... are legally valid.

¹ akata. Vin-a.1288 says the falling away may or may not have been done by that individual.

² kata.

BD.5.340 “What are the seven suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... of an offence entailing a formal meeting of the Order ... of a grave offence ... of an offence of expiation ... of an offence which ought to be confessed ... of an offence of wrong-doing, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) an offence of wrong speech, these seven suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the seven suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) an offence involving defeat ... on a founded (charge of) an offence of wrong speech, these seven suspensions ... are legally valid.

Vin.2.243 “What are the eight suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... of falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done ... of falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done, if one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from a right mode of livelihood which has not been done ... which has been done, these eight suspensions ... are not legally valid.

“What are the eight suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... of falling away from a right mode of livelihood which has not been done ... which has been done, these eight suspensions ... are legally valid.

BD.5.341 “What are the nine suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done¹ ... on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from good habits which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done ... on an unfounded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done ...

¹ katākatāya. Vin-a.1288 says “it is so called because (the one who is suspending) has chosen, gahetvā, both: done and not done” (presumably as his grounds for suspending, since falling away may have been done both by the individual whom he is suspending, and by another).

which has been done and not done, these nine suspensions ... not legally valid.

“What are the nine suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one suspends the Pātimokkha on a founded (charge of) falling away from moral habit which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done ... on a founded (charge of) falling from good habits ... on a founded (charge of) falling away from right views which has not been done ... which has been done ... which has been done and not done, these nine suspensions ... are legally valid.

“What are the ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are not legally valid? If one who is defeated is not sitting in that assembly,¹ if talk on an offence involving defeat is still going forward,² if one who has disavowed the training is not sitting in that assembly, if talk on disavowing the training is still going forward, if he submits himself to a legally valid complete assembly,³ if he does not withdraw his acceptance⁴ (of a formal act settled) in a legally valid complete assembly, if talk on withdrawing acceptance (of a formal act settled) in a legally valid complete assembly is still going forward, if he is not seen, heard or suspected of falling away from moral habit, if he is not seen, heard or suspected of falling away from good habits, if he is not seen, heard or suspected of falling away from right views, these ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.

“What are the ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are legally valid? If one who is defeated is sitting in that assembly, if talk on an offence involving defeat is not still going forward ... (as in above paragraph, but the opposite in each case) ... if he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from right views, these ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.

BD.5.342

¹ These clauses are explained in Kd.19.3.4 below. ² A monk cannot be legally suspended while talk on his case is still in progress. ³ dhammikaṃ sāmaggim upeti. See Kd.10.5.13; Kd.10.6.2 (atthupeta, vyañjanupeta). ⁴ na paccādiyati. Vin-a.1288 says of paccādiyati (in the “legally valid” clause) it means that if he says the formal act should be earned out again, he withdraws his acceptance. But he who opens it up again falls into an offence of expiation. If he desires to find fault with a formal act while it is being carried out, and neither comes nor gives his consent, and protests if he has come, for this reason he falls into an offence of wrong-doing. (Cf. Bu-Pc.80.)

SETTING ASIDE THE PĀTIMOKKHA BY RULE

Kd.19.3.4

“How (can it be said that) one who is defeated is sitting in that assembly? This is a case, monks, where by reason of those properties,¹ by reason of those features, by reason of those signs by which there comes to be commission of an offence involving defeat a monk sees (another) monk committing an offence involving defeat; or it may be that that monk does not himself see a monk committing an offence involving defeat, but that another monk tells that monk: ‘The monk So-and-so, your reverence, is committing an offence involving defeat’; or it may be that that monk does not himself see a monk committing an offence involving defeat and that no other monk tells that monk: ‘The monk So-and-so, your reverence, is committing an offence involving defeat,’ but that he himself tells the monk: ‘I, your reverence, have committed an offence involving defeat.’ Monks, that monk if he so desires, on account of what he has seen, or has heard, or has suspected may, on an Observance day, whether it is the fourteenth or the fifteenth, utter in the midst of the Order when that individual is present: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This individual So-and-so is committing an offence involving defeat. I am suspending the Pātimokkha for him. The Pātimokkha should not be recited in his presence.’ This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid. When the Pātimokkha has been suspended for that monk, if the assembly removes itself on account of any one of the ten dangers²—the danger from kings or ... thieves or ... fire or ... water or ... human beings or ... non-human beings or ... beasts of prey or ... creeping things or because of danger to life or because of danger to the Brahma-faring—monks, that monk, if he so desires, may either in that residence or in another residence, utter in the midst of the Order in the presence of that individual: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The talk on the individual So-and-so’s offence involving defeat was still going forward; that matter is not decided. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may decide this matter.’ If he succeeds thus, that is good. If he does not succeed, he should, on an Observance day, whether the fourteenth or the fifteenth, utter in the midst of the Order and in the presence of that individual: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. The talk on the individual So-and-so's offence involving defeat was still going forward; that matter is not decided. I am suspending the Pātimokkha for him, the Pātimokkha should not be recited in his presence.' This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

Vin.2.244

BD.5.343

¹ As at Vin.3.27. ² See rule at Kd.2.15.4.

Kd.19.3.5

“How (can it be said that) one who has disavowed the training is sitting in that assembly? This is a case, monks ... (the same as Kd.19.3.4, reading disavowed the training instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

Vin.2.245

“How (can it be said that) he does not submit himself to a legally valid complete assembly? This is a case, monks ... (the same as Kd.19.3.4, reading does not submit himself to a legally valid complete assembly instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

Kd.19.3.6

Vin.2.246

“How (can it be said that) he withdraws his acceptance (of a formal act settled) in a legally valid complete assembly? This is a case, monks, ... (the same as Kd.19.3.4 reading withdraws his acceptance of a formal act settled in a legally valid complete assembly instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

Kd.19.3.7

Kd.19.3.8

“How (can it be said that) he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from moral habit? This is a case, monks, ... (the same as Kd.19.3.4 reading seen, heard or suspected of falling away from moral habit instead of offence involving defeat) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid.

Kd.19.3.9

“How (can it be said that) he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from good habits? This is a case, monks, ... (see Kd.19.3.8) ...

“How (can it be said that) he is seen, heard or suspected of falling away from right views? This is a case, monks, ... (see Kd.19.3.8) ... This suspension of the Pātimokkha is legally valid. These ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.”

Vin.2.247

FACTORS FOR UNDERTAKING ON ONE'S OWN BEHALF

BD.5.344

Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf,¹ endowed with how many qualities is the undertaking that he may undertake on his own behalf?”

“Upāli, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf, the undertaking that he may undertake on his own behalf is endowed with five qualities. Upāli, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf, he should consider this: ‘That undertaking which I wish to undertake on my own behalf, is it the right time to undertake this undertaking on my own behalf, or not?’ If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘It is a wrong time² to undertake this undertaking on my own behalf, not a right time,’ Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘It is a right time to undertake this undertaking on my own behalf, not a wrong time,’ Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: ‘That undertaking which I wish to undertake on my own behalf, is this undertaking on my own behalf about a true thing, or not?’ If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘That undertaking on my own behalf is about an untrue thing, not a true thing,’ Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering he knows thus: ‘That undertaking on my own behalf is about a true thing, not an untrue thing,’ Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: ‘That undertaking which I wish to undertake on my own behalf, is that undertaking connected with the goal, or not?’ If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘This undertaking on my own behalf is unconnected with the goal,³ not connected with it,’

¹ attādānaṃ ādātukāmena. Vin-a.1288 says “here a monk wishing to search (or purify, sodhetu) the teaching—whatever legal question he undertakes on his own behalf (or, appropriates to himself, attanā ādiyati), that is called attādāna.” ² Vin-a.1288 says a wrong time means when there is fear of kings, of thieves, of a scarcity of food, or if it is the rains-season.

³ Vin-a.1288: it leads to danger to life, danger to the Brahma-faring.

Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘This undertaking on my own behalf is connected with the goal, not unconnected with it.’ Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: ‘Will I, undertaking this undertaking on my own behalf, attract¹ monks who are comrades and associates to my side in accordance with dhamma, in accordance with discipline, or not?’ If, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘I, undertaking this undertaking on my own behalf, will not attract monks who are comrades and associates to my side in accordance with dhamma, in accordance with discipline,’ Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf should not be undertaken. But, if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘I, undertaking this undertaking on my own behalf, will attract monks who are comrades and associates to my side in accordance with dhamma, in accordance with discipline,’ Upāli, it should be further considered by that monk: ‘From my having undertaken this undertaking on my own behalf, will there be for the Order from that source strife, quarrel, dispute, contention, schism in the Order, dissension in the Order, altercation in the Order, differences in the Order,² or not?’ If, Upāli, while this monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘From my having undertaken this undertaking on my own behalf, there will be for the Order from that source strife ... differences in the Order,’ Upāli, that undertaking should not be undertaken on his own behalf. But if, Upāli, while that monk is considering, he knows thus: ‘From my having undertaken this undertaking on my own behalf, there will not be for the Order from that source strife ... differences in the Order,’ Upāli, that undertaking on his own behalf may be undertaken. Thus, Upāli, if an undertaking on one’s own behalf is undertaken when it is endowed with these five qualities, later it will be no cause for remorse.”

BD.5.345

Vin.2.248

THINGS TO BE REVIEWED BY A REPROVER

“Lord, if a monk is reproving,³ willing to reprove another, when he has considered how many states within himself may he reprove the other?”

Kd.19.5.1

BD.5.346

¹ labhissāmi. ² List as at Kd.10.1.6, Kd.10.5.13; Kd.17.5.1. ³ Cf. AN.v.79ff., addressed to “monks.”

“Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, when he has considered five states within himself may he reprove the other. Upāli, when a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now, am I quite pure in bodily conduct,¹ am I possessed of pure bodily conduct, flawless, faultless? Is this state found in me, or not? If, Upāli, this monk is not quite pure in bodily conduct, is not possessed of bodily conduct that is quite pure, flawless, faultless, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, train yourself as to body’—thus will those say to him.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now, am I quite pure in the conduct of speech, am I possessed of conduct in speech that is quite pure, flawless, faultless? Is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, that monk is not quite pure in the conduct of speech ... ‘Please do you, venerable one, train yourself as to speech’—thus will those say to him.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now is a mind of loving-kindness, without malice towards my fellow Brahma-farers, established in me? Is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, a mind of loving-kindness, without malice towards his fellow Brahma-farers, is not established in the monk, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, establish a mind of loving-kindness towards your fellow Brahma-farers’—thus those will say to him.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now, am I one who has heard much, an expert in the heard, a storehouse of the heard? Those things which are lovely at the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending, and which, with the spirit, with the letter, declare the Brahma-faring utterly fulfilled, wholly purified—are such things much heard by me, learnt by heart, repeated out loud, pondered upon, carefully attended to, well penetrated by vision?² Now, is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, the monk has not heard much ... if such things have not been ... well penetrated by vision, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, master the tradition¹—there will be those who speak thus to him.

¹ Cf. MN.ii.113. ² Cf. Kd.14.14.19.

“And again, Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now,² are both the Pātimokkhas properly handed down³ to me in detail, properly sectioned, properly regulated, properly investigated clause by clause, as to the linguistic form? Is this state found in me, or not?’ If, Upāli, the two Pātimokkhas are not properly handed down to the monk in detail ... as to the linguistic form, and if they say: ‘Now where, your reverence, was this spoken by the Lord?’⁴ and if questioned thus he is not able to explain, there will be those who will say to him: ‘Please do you, venerable one, master discipline’—there will be those who speak thus to him. Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, when he has considered these five states within himself, he may reprove the other.

THINGS TO BE ESTABLISHED BY A REPROVER

“Lord, if a monk is reproving,⁵ willing to reprove another, having caused how many states to be set up within himself, may he reprove the other?”

Kd.19.5.2

“Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, having caused five states to be set up within himself, may he reprove the other. If he thinks, ‘I will speak at a right time, not at a wrong time;⁶ I will speak about fact⁷ not about what is not fact; I will speak with gentleness, not with harshness; I will speak about what is connected with the goal, not about what is unconnected with the goal I will speak with a mind of loving-kindness,

BD.5.348

¹ āgama; here in opposition to vinaya, see next clause. On āgatāgama, one to whom the tradition has been handed down, see BD.3.71, n.1. ² As at Vin.4.51 (BD.2.266, where see notes), and above Kd.14.14.19. ³ āgatāni; cf. āgatāgama and suttāgata at e.g. Vin.4.144 (BD.3.43, n.5). ⁴ Vin-a.1289 explains, “in which town was this rule of training spoken by the Lord?”—thus making “where” refer to locality and not to context. ⁵ Cf. AN.iii.196, where this passage is put into the mouth of Sāriputta, AN.v.81 (addressed to monks). The five recur at DN.iii.236. Cf. also MN.i.95-. ⁶ Cf. MN.I.126, AN.iii.243. Vin-a.1289 explains “one monk having obtained leave from another (to reprove him), when he is reproving him speaks at a right time. But reproving him in the midst of an Order or a group, in a hut where tickets and coney are distributed, in a quadrangular building, when he is walking for alms, on a road, on a seat or in a hall, when he is among his supporters, or at the moment of the Invitation—this is called at a wrong time.” ⁷ bhūtena, about what has happened. Vin-a.1290 explains by taccha, what is true, real, justified.

not with inner hatred.’ Upāli, if a monk is reproving, willing to reprove another, having made these five states to be set up within himself, he may reprove the other.”

ON CONNECTED WITH THE REPROVER AND THE REPROVED

Kd.19.5.3

“Lord, in how many ways may remorse be caused in a monk who reproves according to what is not the rule?”

Vin.2.250

“Upāli, in five ways¹ may remorse be caused in a monk who reproves according to what is not the rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reproved at a wrong time, not at a right time—you have need for remorse.’² The venerable one reproved about what is not fact, not about what is fact—you have need for remorse. The venerable one reproved with harshness, not with gentleness ... with what is unconnected with the goal, not with what is connected with the goal ... with inner hatred, not with a mind of loving-kindness—you have need for remorse.’ Upāli, in these five ways may remorse be caused in a monk who reproves according to what is not the rule. What is the reason for this? To the end that no other monk might think that one might be reproved about what is not fact.”

Kd.19.5.4

“But, Lord, in how many ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who has been reproved according to what is not the rule?”

“Upāli, in five ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who has been reproved according to what is not the rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reproved at a wrong time, not at a right time—you have no need for remorse.’³ The venerable one reproved ... with inner hatred, not with a mind of loving-kindness—you have no need for remorse.’ Upāli, in these five ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who has been reproved according to what is not the rule.”

Kd.19.5.5

“Lord, in how many ways may no remorse be caused in a monk who reproves according to rule?”

BD.5.349

“In five ways,⁴ Upāli, may no remorse be caused in a monk who reproves

¹ Cf. AN.iii.197. ² Here presumably the reprover is being spoken to. ³ Here the one reproved is being spoken to. ⁴ Cf. AN.iii.198.

according to rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reprovved at a right time, not at a wrong time—you have no need for remorse. The venerable one reprovved ... not with inner hatred, but with a mind of loving-kindness—you have no need for remorse’. In these five ways, Upāli, may no remorse be caused in a monk who reprovves according to rule. What is the reason? To the end that another monk should think that one should be reprovved about what is fact.”

Kd.19.5.6

“But, Lord, in how many ways may remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to rule?”

“In five ways, Upāli, may remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to rule. One says: ‘The venerable one reprovved at a right time, not at a wrong time—you have need for remorse. The venerable one reprovved ... not with inner hatred, but with a mind of loving-kindness—you have need for remorse’. Upāli, in these five ways may remorse be caused in a monk who has been reprovved according to the rule.”

Kd.19.5.7

“Lord, if a monk is reprovving, willing to reprove another, having attended to how many states within himself may he reprove the other?”

“Upāli, if a monk is reprovving, willing to reprove another, having attended to five states within himself, he may reprove the other: compassion, seeking welfare, sympathy, removal of offences, aiming at discipline. Upāli, if a monk is reprovving, willing to reprove another, having attended to these five states within himself, he may reprove the other.”

Vin.2.251

“But, Lord, in how many mental objects should there be support for a monk who has been reprovved?”

“Upāli, there should be support in two mental objects for a monk who has been reprovved: in truth and in being imperturbable.”¹

Told is the Ninth Section: that on suspending the Pātimokkha

IN THIS SECTION THERE ARE THIRTY ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

On an Observance so long as a depraved monk does not depart, Urged off² by Moggallāna, a wonder, in the conqueror’s instruction, /

BD.5.350

¹ akuppa, being free from anger, immovable. Cf. AN.iii.198, which slightly elaborates the thoughts a reprovved monk might have. ² niccuddo. Should this be nicchuddho (from nicchubhati) as in Sinhalese reading? Oldenberg suggests nicchuddo = nicchudito. Siamese edition reads nicuttho with variant reading nicchuddo.

Deepens and gradual training, fixed (and) do not transgress,
 (with) a corpse (and) the Order suspends, streams (and) they lose, / Streams (and) they attain nibbāna, and the one taste is freedom, many (and) dhamma and discipline too, (great) beings and the eight ariyan men:¹ /
 Having made it like the ocean, he tells of excellence² in the teaching.
 Pātimokkha on an Observance day, “no one knows about us,” /
 “In case,” they looked down upon.
 One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, and nine and ten. /
 (One of) moral habit, good habits, right views and mode of livelihood—the four disciples, defeat and entailing a Formal Meeting, of expiation, that ought to be confessed, / Wrong-doing among the fivefold divisions as they are,
 and falling away from moral habit and good habits, and with what has not been done and has been done³ in the six divisions as they are, /
 And about defeat and entailing a Formal Meeting, a grave offence and one of expiation and likewise one that ought to be confessed and one of wrong-doing and one of wrong speech, /
 Falling away from moral habit and good habits and falling away from right views and mode of livelihood, and those eight dones and not dones with one as to moral habit, good habits, right views, /
 Also not dones and dones and likewise the done and not done are likewise spoken of as ninefold by the system⁴ in accordance with fact, / Defeated, still going forward and likewise one who has disavowed, he submits, he withdraws acceptance, talk on withdrawing acceptance and whoever / falls away from moral habit and good habits, and likewise as to falling away from right views,
 seen, heard, suspected, the tenfold, this he should know. /
 A monk sees a monk, and another tells what he has seen,⁵ a pure one tells him of it himself:⁶ he suspends the Pātimokkha. /
 If it removes itself on account of a danger—kings, thieves, fire, water and human beings and non-human beings and beasts of prey and creeping things,

BD.5.351

¹ The ariyan men are those who follow Gotama’s teachings, his disciples. The “eight” are the classes of those who attain stream-winning, once-returning, no return and arahantship and the fruits of these four ways. ² guṇam. Sinhalese reads guṇā. ³ Sinhalese and Siamese read, more correctly, akatāya katāya ca for Oldenberg’s text’s akatā katāya ca. ⁴ ñāyato, Sinhalese edition reading jānatā. ⁵ Text: vipass’ añño cārocāti; Sinhalese edition: añño cārocayā tam; Siamese edition: añño cārocayāti tam. ⁶ Text: taṃ suddheva tassa akkhāti. Oldenberg suggests at Vin.2.326 taṃ sv’ eva tassa akkhāti. Sinhalese and Siamese editions read suddho va tassa akkhāti.

to life, to the Brahma (faring)—/

Because of a certain one of the ten, or as to one among the others, and he should know just what is legally valid, what is not legally valid as it accords with the way. /

The right time (and) according to fact (and) connected with the goal, “I will attract,”
“There will be,”

Vin.2.252

Conduct of body and speech, loving-kindness, great learning,¹ both. /

He should reprove at the right time, about fact, with gentleness, about the goal,² with loving-kindness.³

As a speech should dispel remorse caused by what is not the rule /

It dispels the remorse of one who reproves or who is reprovved according to rule.

Compassion, seeking welfare, sympathy, removal, aiming at—/

The conduct for one reproving is explained⁴ by the Self-awakened One.

And the proper course for the reprovved one is in the truth as well as in being imperturbable.

Vin.2.253

¹ bāhusaccam. Oldenberg suggests at Vin.2.326 bāhusuccam. But bāhusacca = bahussuta at e.g. Kd.19.5.1. The word also occurs at MN.i.45; AN.i.38 (bahu- should here read bāhu-), AN.ii.218; Vin.3.10; Kp.p.3. It is explained at MN-a.iii.156 = Khu-a.134 as bahussutabhāva, the condition of having heard much. ² Sinhalese edition reads attamettēna for Oldenberg’s and Siamese edition’s atthamettēna. ³ Sinhalese edition reads attamettēna for Oldenberg’s and Siamese edition’s atthamettēna. ⁴ pakāsītā in Sinhalese and Siamese editions, and as suggested by Oldenberg, Vin.2.326, instead of text’s pakāsitaṃ.

20. NUNS (BHIKKHUNĪ)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

THE STORY OF MAHĀPAJĀPATĪ GOTAMĪ

Kd.20.1.1
BD.5.352

At one time the Awakened One, the Lord, was staying among the Sakyans at Kapilavatthu in the Banyan monastery.¹ Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, it were well that women should obtain the going forth from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

“Be careful, Gotami, of the going forth of women from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.” And a second time ... And a third time did the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great speak thus to the Lord: “Lord, it were well ...”

“Be careful, Gotami, of the going forth of women from home into homelessness in this dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, thinking: “The Lord does not allow women to go forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder,” afflicted, grieved, with a tearful face and crying, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him.

Kd.20.1.2

Then the Lord having stayed at Kapilavatthu for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Vesālī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at ¹ Down to end of Kd.20.1 occurs also at AN.iv.274–AN.iv.279.

Vesālī. The Lord stayed there in Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Gabled Hall. Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, having had her hair cut off, having donned saffron robes, set out for Vesālī with several Sakyan women, and in due course approached Vesālī, the Great Grove, the Gabled Hall. Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, with tearful face, and crying, stood outside the porch of the gateway. The venerable Ānanda saw the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, standing outside the porch of the gateway, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, with tearful face and crying; seeing her, he spoke thus to the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great:

BD.5.353
Vin.2.254

“Why are you, Gotami, standing ... and crying?”

“It is because, honoured Ānanda, the Lord does not allow the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

“Well now, Gotami, stay¹ here a moment,² until I have asked the Lord for the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

Kd.20.1.3

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

“Lord, this Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, is standing outside the porch of the gateway, her feet swollen, her limbs covered with dust, with tearful face and crying, and saying that the Lord does not allow the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder. It were well, Lord, if women might obtain the going forth from home ... by the Truth-finder.”

“Be careful, Ānanda, of the going forth of women from home ... by the Truth-finder.” And a second time ... And a third time the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “It were well, Lord, if women might obtain the going forth ... proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”³

¹ hohi. ² Not in Aṅguttara version. ³ See Vin.2.289 where Ānanda was charged at the Council of Rājagaha with having persuaded Gotama to admit women to the Order, thus causing its decay.

“Be careful, Ānanda, of the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.” Then the venerable Ānanda, thinking: “The Lord does not allow the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder. Suppose now that I, by some other method, should ask the Lord for the going forth of women from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.” Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord:

BD.5.354

“Now, Lord, are women, having gone forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, able to realise the fruit of stream-attainment or the fruit of once-returning or the fruit of non-returning or perfection?”

“Women, Ānanda, having gone forth ... are able to realise ... perfection.”

“If, Lord, women, having gone forth ... are able to realise ... perfection—and, Lord, the Gotamid, Pajāpati the Great, was of great service: she was the Lord’s aunt, foster-mother, nurse, giver of milk, for when the Lord’s mother passed away she suckled him¹—it were well, Lord, that women should obtain the going forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.”

Vin.2.255

EIGHT IMPORTANT RULES

Kd.20.1.4

“If, Ānanda, the Gotamid, Pajāpati the Great, accepts eight important rules,² that may be ordination³ for her:

1. “A nun who has been ordained (even) for a century must greet respectfully, rise up from her seat, salute with joined palms, do proper homage to a monk ordained but that day. And this rule is to be honoured, respected, revered, venerated, never to be transgressed during her life.

¹ See MN.iii.253. ² garudhammā. See BD.2.266, n.11. Besides at AN.iv.276, these rules are given at Vin.4.51 (see BD.2.268–BD.2.269 for notes). ³ AN-a.iv.134 says “that may be her going forth as well as (her) ordination.” She would not therefore have to pass two years as a probationer, and this practice will no doubt have been introduced later, after an Order of nuns had been in being for some time.

2. “A nun must not spend the rains in a residence where there is no monk. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
3. “Every half month a nun should desire two things from the Order of monks: the asking (as to the date) of the Observance day, and the coming for the exhortation. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
4. “After the rains a nun must ‘invite’ before both Orders in respect of three matters: what was seen, what was heard, what was suspected. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
5. “A nun, offending against an important rule, must undergo mānatta (discipline) for half a month before both Orders. This rule too must be honoured ... during her life.
6. “When, as a probationer, she has trained in the six rules for two years, she should seek ordination from both Orders. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
7. “A monk must not be abused or reviled in any way by a nun. This rule too is to be honoured ... during her life.
8. “From today admonition of monks by nuns is forbidden, admonition of nuns by monks is not forbidden. This rule too is to be honoured, respected, revered, venerated, never to be transgressed during her life.

BD.5.355

“If, Ānanda, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, accepts these eight important rules, that may be ordination for her.”

Then the venerable Ānanda, having learnt the eight important rules from the Lord, approached the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great; having approached, he spoke thus to the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great:

Kd.20.1.5

“If you, Gotami, will accept eight important rules, that will be the ordination for you: a nun who has been ordained (even) for a century ... From today admonition of monks by nuns is forbidden ... never to be transgressed during your life. If you, Gotami, will accept these eight important rules, that will be the ordination for you.”

“Even,¹ honoured Ānanda, as a woman or a man when young, of tender years, and fond of ornaments, having washed (himself and his) head, having obtained a garland of lotus flowers or a garland of jasmine flowers or a garland of some sweet-scented creeper, having taken it with both hands, should place it on top of his head—even so do I, honoured Ānanda, accept these eight important rules never to be transgressed during my life.”

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord: having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the eight important rules were accepted by the Gotamid, Pajāpati the Great.”

“If, Ānanda, women had not obtained the going forth from home into homelessness in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, the Brahma-faring, Ānanda, would have lasted long, true dhamma would have endured for a thousand years. But since, Ānanda, women have gone forth ... in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, now, Ānanda, the Brahma-faring will not last long, true dhamma will endure only for five hundred years.

“Even, Ānanda, as those households which have many women and few men easily fall a prey to robbers, to pot-thieves,² even so, Ānanda in whatever dhamma and discipline women obtain the going forth from home into homelessness, that Brahma-faring will not last long.

“Even, Ānanda, as when the disease known as mildew³ attacks a whole field of rice that field of rice does not last long, even so, Ānanda, in whatever dhamma and discipline women obtain the going forth ... that Brahma-faring will not last long.

“Even, Ānanda, as when the disease known as red rust⁴ attacks a whole field of sugar-cane, that field of sugar-cane does not last long, even so,

¹ Besides at AN.iv.278 this simile occurs at MN.i.32, and the first part at Vin.3.68 (see BD.1.117, n. for notes). ² kumbhatthenaka. Vin-a.1291 says “having lit a light in a pot, by its light they search others’ houses for booty.” AN-a.iv.136 is the same, and SN-a.ii.223 very similar. The simile occurs also at SN-a.ii.264. ³ setatthika, “white-as-bones.” See BD.1.11, n.4. GS.iv.185, n.2 gives explanation of AN-a.iv.136 (= Vin-a.1291) on above: some insect bores the stem, so that the head of the paddy is unable to get the sap. ⁴ mañjetthika. Vin-a.1291 explains that the ends of the sugar canes become red; also AN-a.iv.136.

Ānanda, in whatever dhamma and discipline ... that Brahma-faring will not last long.

“Even, Ānanda, as a man,¹ looking forward, may build a dyke to a great reservoir so that the water may not overflow, even so, Ānanda, were the eight important rules for nuns laid down by me, looking forward, not to be transgressed during their life.”

Told are the Eight Important Rules for Nuns

ALLOWANCE FOR THE ORDINATION OF NUNS

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the Lord:

“Now, what line of conduct, Lord, should I follow in regard to these Sakyan women?” Then the Lord, gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, with talk on dhamma. Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, gladdened ... delighted by the Lord with talk on dhamma, having greeted the Lord, departed keeping her right side towards him. Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“I allow, monks, nuns to be ordained by monks.”²

Then these nuns spoke thus to the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great: “The lady is not-ordained, neither are we ordained, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: nuns should be ordained by monks.”

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Honoured Ānanda, these nuns spoke to me thus: ‘The lady is not ordained, neither are we ordained, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: nuns should be ordained by monks’.”

¹ Cf. like similes at MN.iii.96, AN.iii.28. ² Cf. the sixth important rule above. Also see BD.3, Introduction, p.xlivff.

BD.5.357

Vin.2.257

Kd.20.2.2

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus: ‘Honoured Ānanda, these nuns spoke to me thus ... nuns should be ordained by monks’.”

“At the time, Ānanda, when the eight important rules were accepted by the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great, that was her ordination.”

Kd.20.3.1

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “I, honoured Ānanda, am asking one boon from the Lord: It were well, Lord, if the Lord would allow greeting, standing up for salutation and the proper duties between monks and nuns according to seniority.”

BD.5.358

Then the venerable Ānanda approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus: ‘I, honoured Ānanda, am asking one boon ... according to seniority’.”

Vin.2.258

“This is impossible, Ānanda, it cannot come to pass, that the Truth-finder should allow greeting, standing up for, salutation and the proper duties between monks and nuns according to seniority. Ānanda, these followers of other sects, although liable to poor guardianship, will not carry out greeting, standing up for, salutation and proper duties towards women, so how should the Truth-finder allow greeting ... and proper duties towards women?” Then the Lord, on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying:

“Monks, one should not carry out greeting, rising up for salutation and proper duties towards women.¹ Whoever should carry out (one of these), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.20.4.1

¹ At Kd.16.6.5 women are among those not to be greeted.

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the Lord: “Lord, those rules of training for nuns which are in common with those for monks,¹ what line of conduct should we, Lord, follow in regard to these rules of training?”

“Those rules of training for nuns, Gotami, which are in common with those for monks, as the monks train themselves, so should you train yourselves in these rules of training.”

“Those rules of training for nuns, Lord, which are not in common with those for monks, what line of conduct should we, Lord, follow in regard to these rules of training?”

“Those rules of training for nuns, Gotami, which are not in common with those for monks, train yourselves in the rules of training according as they are laid down.”

BD.5.359

Then the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, she stood at a respectful distance. As she was standing at a respectful distance, the Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great spoke thus to the Lord:² “Lord, it were well if the Lord would teach me dhamma in brief so that I, having heard the Lord’s dhamma, might live alone, aloof, zealous, ardent, self-resolute.”

Kd.20.5.1

“Whatever are the states,³ of which you, Gotami, may know: these states lead to passion, not to passionlessness, they lead to bondage, not to the absence of bondage, they lead to the piling up (of rebirth), not to the absence of piling up, they lead to wanting much, not to wanting little, they lead to discontent, not to contentment, they lead to sociability, not to solitude, they lead to indolence, not to the putting forth of energy, they lead to difficulty in supporting oneself, not to ease in supporting oneself—you should know definitely, Gotami: this is not dhamma, this is not discipline, this is not the Teacher’s instruction. But whatever are the states of which you, Gotami, may know: these states lead to passionlessness, not to passion ... (the opposite of the preceding) ... they lead to ease in supporting oneself, not to difficulty in supporting oneself—you should know definitely, Gotami: this is dhamma, this is discipline, this is the Teacher’s instruction.”¹

Vin.2.259

¹ See BD.3 Introduction, p.xxxiif., BD.3 Introduction, p.xxxviif. ² As at AN.iv.280. ³ So AN-a.iv.137 (on AN.iv.280).

Kd.20.6.1

Now at that time the Pātimokkha was not recited to nuns. They told this matter to the Lord.² He said: “I allow you, monks, to recite the Pātimokkha to the nuns.” Then it occurred to the nuns: “Now, by whom should the Pātimokkha be recited to nuns?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow monks, the Pātimokkha to be recited to nuns by monks.”

BD.5.360

Now at that time monks, having approached a nunnery, recited the Pātimokkha to nuns.³ People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “These are their wives, these are their mistresses; now they will take their pleasure together.” Monks heard these people who ... spread it about. Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, the Pātimokkha should not be recited to nuns by monks. Whoever should recite it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, the Pātimokkha to be recited to nuns by nuns.”

The nuns did not know how to recite the Pātimokkha. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: ‘The Pātimokkha should be recited thus’.”

Kd.20.6.2

Now at that time nuns did not confess⁴ offences. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, an offence should not be not confessed by a nun. Whoever should not confess it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.” The nuns did not know how to confess offences. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: ‘An offence should be confessed thus’.”

Vin.2.260

¹ Vin-a.1292 and AN-a.iv.137 say that on account of this exhortation, Pajāpatī attained arahantship. ² Usually the nuns approach the Lord only through the mediation of the monks. Here it would appear as if the monks had themselves observed that the nuns were not hearing the Pātimokkha and reported the matter to the Lord on their own initiative.

³ Cf. Bu-Pc.23 where the modest monks complain that monks go to the nuns’ quarters to exhort them. ⁴ paṭikaronti.

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, by whom should nuns’ offences be acknowledged?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks to acknowledge nuns’ offences through monks.”

Now at that time nuns, having (each) seen a monk on a carriage-road and in a cul-de-sac and at cross-roads,¹ having (each) laid down her bowl on the ground, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, confessed an offence. People ... spread it about, saying: “These are their wives, these are their mistresses; having treated them contemptuously during the night now they are asking for forgiveness.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns’ offences should not be acknowledged by monks. Whoever should acknowledge (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, nuns’ offences to be acknowledged by nuns.” The nuns did not know how to acknowledge offences. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: ‘An offence should be acknowledged thus’.”

BD.5.361

Now at that time (formal) acts² were not carried out for nuns. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a (formal) act to be carried out for nuns.” Then it occurred to monks: ‘Now, by whom should (formal) acts for nuns be carried out?’ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, (formal) acts for nuns to be carried out by monks.”

Kd.20.6.3

Now at that time nuns on whose behalf (formal) acts had been carried out,³ having (each) seen a monk on a carriage-road and in a cul-de-sac and at cross-roads, having (each) laid down her bowl on the ground, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, asked forgiveness⁴ thinking,

¹ Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc.14. These three words are defined at Vin.4.271 (BD.3.268); see also Vin.4.176 in definition of “among the houses.” ² Vin-a.1292 says “acts of censure and so on, and also the sevenfold formal acts.” The former number five, as at Vin.1.49. The legal questions amount to seven, as at Vin.4.207, and probably these are meant. ³ katakammā.

⁴ Vin-a.1292 says, “saying, ‘we will not act in such a way again’.”

“Surely it should be done thus.” As before¹ people ... spread it about, saying: “These are their wives, these are their mistresses; having treated them contemptuously during the night now they are asking for forgiveness.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a (formal) act on behalf of nuns should not be carried out by monks. Whoever should (so) carry one out, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, nuns to carry out (formal) acts on behalf of the nuns.” Nuns did not know how (formal) acts should be carried out. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to explain to the nuns through monks, saying: ‘A (formal) act should be carried out thus’.”

Kd.20.7.1
BD.5.362
Vin.2.261

Now at that time nuns, in the midst of an Order,² striving, quarrelling, falling into disputes wounding one another with the weapons of the tongue,³ were not able to settle that legal question. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to settle nuns’ legal questions by monks.”

Now at that time monks were settling a legal question for nuns, but as that legal question was being investigated there were to be seen both nuns who were entitled to take part in a (formal) act⁴ and those who had committed an offence.⁵ The nuns spoke thus: “It were well, honoured sirs, if the ladies themselves⁶ could carry out (formal) acts for nuns, if the ladies themselves could acknowledge an offence of nuns, but it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘Nuns’ legal questions should be settled by monks’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

¹ Above in Kd.20.6.2 ² Cf. Vin.1.341, MN.iii.152. ³ mukhasattihi vitudentā, not “got to blows” as at Vinaya Texts iii.333, but “inflicting wounds with the mouth.” ⁴ kammappattāya as at Kd.9.3.5, but perhaps here, as nuns were not yet entitled to take part in formal acts, meaning “had fallen into the need for having a formal act carried out on their account”. There are two variant readings, see Vin.2.327. ⁵ āpattiḡāminiyo. ⁶ ayyā va. The nuns are not asking the monks to do these things, as made out at Vinaya Texts iii.333, but are hoping to get the Lord’s decree altered.

“I allow you, monks, having cancelled¹ the carrying out by monks of nuns’ (formal) acts, to give it into the charge of nuns to carry out nuns’ (formal) acts by nuns; having cancelled (the acknowledgement) by monks of nuns’ offences, to give it into the charge of nuns to acknowledge nuns’ offences by nuns.”

Now at that time the nun who was the pupil of the nun Uppalavaṇṇā had followed after the Lord for seven years mastering discipline, but because she was of confused mindfulness, what she had learnt she forgot. That nun heard it said that the Lord wished to come to Sāvathī. Then it occurred to that nun: “For seven years I have followed the Lord mastering discipline, but because I am of confused mindfulness, what I have learnt is forgotten. Hard it is for a woman to follow after a teacher for as long as her life lasts. What line of conduct should be followed by me?” Then that nun told this matter to the nuns. The nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, discipline to be taught to nuns by monks.”

Kd.20.8.1

BD.5.363

The First Portion for Repeating

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

Then the Lord, having stayed in Vesālī for as long as he found suiting, set out on tour for Sāvathī. Gradually, walking on tour, he arrived at Sāvathī. The Lord stayed there at Sāvathī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Now at that time the group of six monks sprinkled nuns with muddy water, thinking: “Perhaps they may be attracted¹ to us.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not be sprinkled with muddy water by monks. Whoever should (so) sprinkle them, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to inflict a penalty² on that monk.” Then it occurred to monks: “Now, how is the penalty to be inflicted?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.2.262

¹ ropetvā. Ropeti can mean to direct towards, also to cancel, and to pass off. Pali-English Dictionary favours the latter. Vinaya Texts iii.334 has “set on foot.” Commentary reads āropetvā (with variant reading ropetvā), which means: to bring about, to get ready; to tell, to show, etc. Vin-a.1292 says “saying, ‘this formal act among those of censure and so on, against whom is it to be carried out?’ having explained (aropetva) it thus, he says ‘Now you carry it out yourselves’—it should be given into the charge of. But if a certain one was explained and they carry out another, (monks) saying: ‘They are carrying out a formal act of guidance (niyasakamma for nissayak-), against one deserving a formal act of censure,’ here, according to what is said, they show what should be carried out.”

“Monks, that monk is to be made one who is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns.”

Now at that time the group of six monks, having uncovered their bodies ... thighs ... private parts, showed them to nuns; they offended³ nuns, they associated with⁴ nuns, thinking: “Perhaps they may be attracted to us.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a monk, having uncovered his body ... thighs ... private parts should not show them to nuns, he should not offend nuns, he should not associate together with nuns. Whoever should (so) associate, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to inflict a penalty on that monk.” Then it occurred to monks: ... (as in above paragraph) ... “Monks, that monk is to be made one who is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns.”

BD.5.364

Now at that time the group of six nuns sprinkled monks with muddy water ... (repeat Kd.20.9.1 down to “I allow you, monks, to inflict a penalty on that nun.”) Then it occurred to the monks: “Now how should the penalty be inflicted?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition.”⁵ When the prohibition was made they did not comply with it. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to suspend exhortation (for her¹).”

Kd.20.9.2

¹ sārajjeyyum. Cf. sārajjati at Kd.15.3.1. ² daṇḍakamma, as at Vin.1.75, Vin.1.76, Vin.1.84.

³ obhāsanti, explained at Vin-a.1292 as asaddhammena obhāsenti. See also Vin.3.128, and Buddhaghosa’s remarks, given at BD.1.216, n.2. ⁴ sampayoventi. Vin-a.1292 says men “associated with” nuns according to what is not true dhamma (or in a wrong way, asaddhammena). Cf. Kd.11.5 (at the end). ⁵ āvaraṇa. Vin-a.1292 says this is hindering them from entering a dwelling-place. Cf. the word at Vin.1.84, where it is the daṇḍakamma, the penalty imposed on novices and preventing them from entering a monastery.

Now at that time the group of six nuns, having uncovered their bodies ... their breasts ... their thighs ... their private parts, showed them to monks ... “I allow you, monks, to make a prohibition.” When the prohibition was made they did not comply with it. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to suspend exhortation (for her).”

Vin.2.263

Then it occurred to monks: “Now, is it allowable to carry out Observance together with a nun whose exhortation has been suspended, or is it not allowable?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Kd.20.9.3

“Monks, Observance should not be carried out together with a nun whose exhortation has been suspended so long as that legal question is not settled.”

Now at that time the venerable Upāli, having suspended exhortation, set out on tour. Nuns looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can the master Upāli, having suspended exhortation, set out on tour?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having suspended exhortation, one should not set out on tour. Whoever should (thus) set out, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.365

Now at that time ignorant, inexperienced (monks) suspended exhortation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, exhortation should not be suspended by an ignorant, inexperienced (monk). Whoever (such) should suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time monks suspended exhortation without ground, without reason. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, exhorta- tion should not be suspended without ground, without reason. Whoever should (so) suspend it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Vin-a.1293 says “here it means that not having gone to a nunnery (the exhortation) may be suspended, but the nuns who have come for exhortation should be told, ‘This nun is impure, she has an offence; I am suspending exhortation for her, do not carry out Observance with her’.”

Now at that time, monks, having suspended exhortation, did not give a decision.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, having suspended exhortation, you should not not give a decision. Whoever should not give (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.20.9.4

Now at that time nuns did not go for exhortation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not not go for exhortation. Whoever should not go, should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

Vin.2.264

Now at that time the entire Order of nuns went for exhortation. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “These are their wives, these are their mistresses, now they will take their pleasure together.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the entire Order of nuns should not go for exhortation. If it should go thus, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, four or five nuns to go for exhortation.”

BD.5.366

Now at that time four or five nuns went for exhortation. As before, people ... spread it about, saying: “These are their wives ... now they will take their pleasure together.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, four or five nuns should not go (together) for exhortation. If they should go thus, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, two or three nuns to go (together) for exhortation: having approached one monk, having (each one) arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured his feet, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, they should speak to him thus: ‘Master, the Order of nuns honours the feet of the Order of monks, and asks about (the right time for) coming for exhortation; may the Order of nuns, master, hear what is (the right time for) coming for exhortation.’ It should be said by the one who recites the Pātimokkha: ‘Is there any monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns?’ If there is some monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns, it should be said by the one who recites the Pātimokkha: ‘The monk So-and-so is agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns; let the Order of nuns approach him.’ If there is not some monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns, the one who recites the Pātimokkha should say: ‘Which venerable one is able to exhort the nuns?’ If some one is able to exhort the nuns and if he is endowed with the eight qualities,¹ having gathered together, they should be told: ‘The monk So-and-so is agreed upon as the exhorter of the nuns; let the Order of nuns approach him.’ If no one is able to exhort the nuns, the one who recites the Pātimokkha should say: ‘There is no monk agreed upon as exhorter of the nuns. Let the Order of nuns strive on with friendliness’.”²

¹ I.e. on the matter for which exhortation was suspended. ² Nuns’ Bi-Pc.58.

Now at that time monks did not undertake the exhortation. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the exhortation should not not be undertaken. Whoever should not undertake it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.20.9.5

Now at that time a certain monk was ignorant; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am ignorant. How can I undertake the exhortation?” “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘The exhortation of nuns should be undertaken by monks’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, excepting an ignorant one, to undertake the exhortation through the others.”

Vin.2.265

¹ See Vin.4.51 (BD.2.265ff.). ² pāsādikena sampādetu; Vinaya Texts iii.339 has “may the Bhikkhuni-saṅgha obtain its desire in peace,” thus deriving “in peace,” pāsādikena, from pasādeti. But their desire was to hear the exhortation. As this was impossible, they were advised to do the best they could without it. Cf. appamādena sampādettha. Here the notion is probably that the nuns, even without the exhortation, should labour on, strive themselves, peacefully and in friendliness with one another.

BD.5.367

Now at that time a certain monk was ill; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am ill. How can I undertake the exhortation?” “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘Except for an ignorant one, the exhortation should be undertaken through the others’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, excepting an ignorant one, excepting an ill one, to undertake the exhortation through the others.”

Now at that time a certain monk was setting out on a journey; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am setting out on a journey. How can I undertake the exhortation?” “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was laid down by the Lord: ‘Except for an ignorant one, except for an ill one, the exhortation should be undertaken through the others’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, excepting an ignorant one, excepting an ill one, excepting one setting out on a journey, to undertake the exhortation through others.”

Now at that time a certain monk was staying in a forest; nuns, having approached him, spoke thus: “Master, undertake the exhortation.” He said: “But I, sisters, am staying in the forest. How can I undertake the exhortation?” They said: “Master, undertake the exhortation, for it was thus laid down by the Lord: ‘Except for an ignorant one, except for an ill one, except for one setting out on a journey, the exhortation should be undertaken through the others’.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow you to undertake the exhortation through a monk who is a forest-dweller and (for him) to make a rendezvous,¹ saying, ‘I will perform² it here’.”

Now at that time monks, having undertaken the exhortation, did not announce it.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, the exhor- tation should not not be announced. Who-ever should not announce it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ sarīketa. See BD.1.88, BD.1.135 where “the making of a rendezvous,” sarīketakamma is defined. ² paṭiharissāmi. ³ These remaining clauses refer, I think, only to monks who are forest-dwellers.

Now at that time monks, having undertaken the exhortation did not come.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, one should not not come for the exhortation. Whoever should not come for it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.368

Now at that time nuns did not go to the rendezvous. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not not go to the rendezvous. Whoever should not go, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.2.266

Now at that time nuns wore long waistbands out of which they arranged flounces.² People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not wear long waistbands. Whoever should wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a nun (to have) a waistband going once round (the waist). And a flounce should not be arranged out of this. Whoever should arrange one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.20.10.1

Now at that time the nuns arranged flounces out of strips of bamboo ... of strips of leather ... of strips of woven cloth³ ... out of plaited woven cloth ... of fringed woven cloth ... of strips of cloth⁴ ... of plaited cloth ... of fringed cloth ... of plaited thread ... of fringed thread. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, flounces of strips of bamboo should not be arranged by nuns, nor flounces of strips of leather ... nor should flounces of fringed thread be arranged. Whoever should arrange (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ na paccāharati. Table of contents: na paccāgacchanti. ² teh’eva pāsuke namenti. P(h)āsukā is a rib; nameti, to wield, to bend; Vin-a.1293 says “like householders’ daughters, they fasten them so as to arrange a flounce out of the solid cloth (thanapaṭakena, variant reading ghanapaṭakena) of the waistband.” On wrong waistbands worn by monks see Kd.5.29.2.

³ dussapaṭṭena. Vin-a.1293 explains dussa by setavattha, white cloth. ⁴ coḷa. Vin-a.1293 says that this is the coḷa (cotton cloth) of the kāsāva, the saffron robes. He thus apparently seeks to discriminate between dussa, as the material out of which householders’ cloths are made, and coḷa, as that out of which monks’ robes are made.

Kd.20.10.2

BD.5.369

Now at that time nuns had their loins rubbed with a cow’s leg bone,¹ they had their loins massaged with a cow’s jaw-bone,² they had their forearms³ massaged, they had the backs of their hands massaged, they had their calves⁴ massaged ... the tops of their feet ... their thighs ... their faces massaged, they had their gums massaged. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not have their loins rubbed with a cow’s leg-bone, they should not have their loins massaged with a cow’s jaw-bone, they should not have their forearms massaged ... they should not have their gums massaged. Whoever should (so) have herself massaged, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.20.10.3

Vin.2.267

Now at that time the group of six nuns⁵ smeared their faces, rubbed their faces (with ointment⁶), painted their faces with chunam, marked their faces with red arsenic, painted their bodies, painted their faces, painted their bodies and faces. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not smear their faces ... should not paint their bodies and faces. Whoever should do (any of these things), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.20.10.4

¹ aṭṭhilla. Pali-English Dictionary says this is more likely to be Sanskrit aṣṭhila, a round pebble or stone. Vin-a.1293 calls it gojaṅghaṭṭika, which would seem to fit in with the gohanuka of the next item. ² gohanuka. ³ On hattha see BD.2, Introduction, p.li. Vin-a.1293 says, “having had their arms massaged, at the tip, aggabāham koṭṭāpetvā, they make designs with peacocks’ feathers and so on.” This would not necessarily mean “tattoo marks” as at Vinaya Texts iii.341, n.7. ⁴ pāda. Vin-a.1293 says jaṅgha. ⁵ Cf. Kd.15.2.5, of the group of six monks. ⁶ Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc.90, Bi-Pc.91.

Now at that time the group of six nuns made (ointment marks) at the corners of their eyes,⁷ they made distinguishing marks (on their foreheads),⁸ they looked out from a window,¹ they stood in the light,² they had dancing performed,³ they supported courtesans,⁴ they set up a tavern,⁵ they set up a slaughter-house,⁶ they offered (things) for sale in a shop,⁷ they engaged in usury,⁸ they engaged in trade, they kept slaves,⁹ they kept slave women, they kept servants, they kept servant women, they kept animals, they dealt in greens and leaves,¹⁰ they carried a piece of felt¹¹ (for a razor). People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.370

“Monks, nuns should not make (ointment marks) at the corners of their eyes ... nor should they carry a piece of felt (for a razor). Whoever should carry (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time the group of six nuns wore robes that were all dark green,¹² they wore robes that were all yellow, they wore robes that were all red, they wore robes that were all crimson, they wore robes that were

Kd.20.10.5

⁷ avaṅgaṃ karonti, so explained at Vin-a.1293. ⁸ visesakaṃ karonti. Vin-a.1293 explains gaṇḍappadesa vicitrasaṅghānaṃ visesakaṃ karonti. ¹ olokanakena olokeṇti. Vin-a.1293 says they looked out at the road (vīthi), having opened the window, vātapāna (on which see BD.2.259, n.1). ² Vin-a.1293 says, having opened the door, they stand showing half the body. ³ sanaccaṃ kārapenti. Nuns should not go to see dancing, Nuns' Bi-Pc.10. Vin-a.1293 says they had a dancing festival held, naṭasamajjaṃ kārenti. ⁴ vesiṃ vuṭṭhāpentī. Vesī may be a courtesan or a low-class woman. Vin-a.1293 explains by gaṇikā, a prostitute. Vuṭṭhāpeti can also mean to cause to raise, to remove; and it is the regular word used, especially in the Nuns' Pācittiyas, for nuns ordaining nuns. Vin-a does not comment on it here. ⁵ Vin-a.1293 says that they sold strong drink. Cf. AN.iii.208, where five trades not to be carried on by lay followers are enumerated. ⁶ Vin-a.1293 says that they sold meat. ⁷ Vin-a.1293 says that they offered for sale (pasārenti, as at Vin.2.291) various and divers goods in a shop. ⁸ vaḍḍhi, profit, interest (on money, especially on loans); cf. DN-a.212; and Ja.v.436. It was a Nissaggiya for monks (and nuns) to have money, Bu-NP.18. ⁹ dāsaṃ upaṭṭhāpentī. Vin-a.1293 says, “having chosen (or taken, gaḥetvā) a slave, they had a service done to themselves by him. And it is the same with women slaves and the rest.” ¹⁰ haritakapaṇṇikāṃ pakiṇanti. Vin-a.1293 reading haritakapattiyāṃ, with variant reading haritakapattikāṃ, says that they deal in greens, haritaka, as well as in ripe things, pakka (variant reading pakkika) and that they offered various things for sale in a shop. ¹¹ namataka. See Kd.15.11.1, Kd.15.27.3. ¹² As at Kd.8.29 for the group of six monks, except that for monks veṭhana, turbans, is added at the end. For notes see BD.4.438.

all black, they wore robes that were dyed all brownish-yellow, they wore robes that were dyed all reddish-yellow, they wore robes with borders that were not cut up, they wore robes with long borders, they wore robes with borders of flowers, they wore robes with borders of snakes' hoods,¹ they wore jackets, they wore (garments made of) the Tirīṭa tree. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: "Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses." They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.371

"Monks, robes that are all dark green should not be worn by nuns ... (garments made of) the Tirīṭa tree should not be worn. Whoever should wear (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Kd.20.11.1

Now at that time a certain nun as she was passing away, spoke thus: "After I am gone, let my requisites be for the Order." Monks and nuns who were there disputed, saying: "They are for us," "They are for us." They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, if a nun as she is passing away, should speak thus, 'After I am gone, let my requisites be for the Order,' in that case the Order of monks is not the owner, but they are for the Order of nuns. Monks, if a probationer ... if a woman novice, passing away ... the Order of monks is not the owner, but they are for the Order of nuns. Monks, if a monk as he is passing away, should speak thus ... the Order of nuns is not the owner, but they are for the Order of monks. Monks, if a novice ... if a lay-follower ... if a woman lay-follower ... if anyone else as he is passing away should speak thus, 'After I am gone, let my requisites be for the Order,' in that case the Order of nuns is not the owner, but they are for the Order of monks."²

Vin.2.268

Kd.20.12.1

Now at that time a certain woman who had formerly been a Mallian had gone forth among the nuns. She, having seen a feeble monk on a carriage road, having given him a blow with the edge of her shoulder, toppled him over. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can a nun give a monk a blow?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a blow should not be given to a monk by a nun. Whoever should give (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”¹ I allow, monks, that a nun, having seen a monk, should make way for him having stepped aside while (still) at a distance.”

¹ phaṇa. Siamese edition reads phala, fruits. ² Vin-a.1294 explains that the five kinds of co-religionists (monks, nuns, probationers, male and female novices) cannot make a bequest as they like, for their things are the Order's and so their gifts at the time of death take no effect. Householders' bequests, on the other hand, do take effect.

BD.5.372

Now at that time a certain woman whose husband had gone away from home became with child by a lover.² She, having caused abortion, spoke thus to a nun dependent for alms on (her) family: “Come, lady, take away this foetus in a bowl.” Then that nun, having placed that foetus in a bowl, having covered it with her outer cloak, went away. Now at that time an undertaking had been made by a certain monk who walked for almsfood: “I will not partake of the first almsfood I receive without having given (of it) to a monk or a nun.” Then that monk, having seen that nun, spoke thus: “Come, sister, accept almsfood.”

Kd.20.13.1

“No, master,” she said. And a second time ... And a third time ... “No, master,” she said.

“I made an undertaking, sister, that I will not partake of the first almsfood that I receive without having given (of it) to a monk or a nun. Come, sister, accept almsfood.” Then that nun, being pressed by that monk, having pulled out her bowl, showed him, saying: “You see, master, a foetus in the bowl, but do not tell anyone.” Then that monk looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this nun take away a foetus in a bowl?” Then this monk told this matter to the monks. Those who were modest monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can this nun take away a foetus in a bowl?” Then these monks told this matter to the Lord. He said:

Vin.2.269

“Monks, a foetus should not be taken away in a bowl by a nun. Whoever should take one away, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, when a nun has seen a monk, having pulled out her bowl, to show it to him.”

Kd.20.13.2

¹ Cf. Bu-Pc.74 where it is an offence of expiation for a monk to give another a blow. ² Cf. Vin.3.83.

BD.5.373 Now at that time the group of six nuns, having seen a monk, having turned (their bowls) upside down,³ showed the bases of the bowls. Monks ... spread it about, saying: “How can the group of six nuns, having seen a monk, having turned (their bowls) upside down, show the bases of the bowls?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns having seen a monk, should not show (him) the base of a bowl, having turned it upside down. I allow, monks, a nun who has seen a monk to show (him) her bowl, having set it upright, and whatever food there is in the bowl should be offered to the monk.”

Kd.20.14.1

Now at that time a membrum virile came to be thrown away on a carriage road in Sāvathī,¹ and nuns were looking at it.² People made an uproar and those nuns were ashamed. Then these nuns, having returned to the nunnery, told this matter to the nuns. Those who were modest nuns ... spread it about, saying: “How can these nuns look at a membrum virile?” Then these nuns told this matter to the monks. The monks told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not look at a membrum virile. Whoever should look at one, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.20.15.1

Vin.2.270

Now at that time people gave food to monks, the monks gave it to nuns. People ... spread it about, saying: “How can these revered sirs give to others what was given them for their own enjoyment? It is as though we do not know how to make a gift.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not give to others what was given you for your own enjoyment. Whoever should (so) give, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time food for the monks was (too) abundant. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give it to an Order.” There was an even greater abundance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, also to give away what belongs to an individual.”³

³ parivattetvā. ¹ Cf. Mi.124. ² sakkaccam upanijjhāyati, as at Vin.1.193. ³ I.e. probably food specially given to different monks. Cf. puggalika at Kd.6.39, Kd.20.24.

Now at that time the food for monks that was stored⁴ was (too) abundant. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to make use of a store of food for monks, the monks having offered it to nuns.”¹

BD.5.374
Kd.20.15.2

(The same repeated but reading nun for monk and vice versa).

Now at that time lodgings for monks were (too) abundant; the nuns had none.² The nuns sent a messenger to the monks, saying: “It were good, honoured sirs, if the masters would give us lodgings temporarily.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow you, monks, to give lodgings to nuns temporarily.”

Kd.20.16.1

Now at that time menstruating nuns sat down and lay down on stuffed couches and stuffed chairs;³ the lodgings were soiled with blood. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not sit down or lie down on stuffed couches and stuffed chairs. Whoever should (so) sit down or should (so) lie down, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a household robe.”⁴ The household robe was soiled with blood. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a pin and a little cloth.”⁵ The little cloth fell down.⁶ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, having tied it with a thread, to tie it round the thighs.” The thread broke. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, a loin-cloth, a hip-string.”⁷

Kd.20.16.2

Vin.2.271

⁴ sannidhikataṃ āmisaṃ. Cf. Bu-Pc.38, and see BD.2.339 for notes. ¹ bhikkhunīhi bhikkhūhi paṭiggahāpetvā. Vin-a.1294 says, having accepted yesterday, the food that was set aside having been offered today by monks may be made use of by nuns. ² Or perhaps, not enough, na hoti. ³ Cf. Kd.16.2.7. ⁴ āvasathacivara. See Nuns' Bi-Pc.47. ⁵ āṇicolaka. Vinaya Texts iii.348, n.1 says “āṇi must here be ‘that part of the leg immediately above the knee, the front of the thigh,’ cf. Böhtlingk-Roth, s.v. No. 2.” I think, however, two things must be meant, āṇi and colaka, or the next sentence would have repeated both, instead of only colaka. The point is that a “pin” was too insecure, and so “thread” was tried. Āṇi is a usual word for peg or pin. ⁶ nipphaṭati. Cf. the word at Vin.2.151 where it appears to mean to fall out or to fall in. Here it may imply to fall away from the pin. ⁷ saṃvelliyaṃ kaṭisuttakaṃ. Saṃvelliya forbidden to monks at Kd.15.29.5; kaṭisuttaka at Kd.15.2.1.

BD.5.375 Now at that time the group of six nuns wore a hip-string the whole time. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord He said: “Monks, nuns are not to wear a hip-string the whole time. Whoever should (so) wear one, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, monks, a hip-string when they are menstruating.”

The Second Portion for Repeating

THIRD RECITATION SECTION

Now at that time ordained women were to be seen without sexual characteristics and who were defective in sex and bloodless and with stagnant blood and who were always dressed and dripping and deformed and female eunuchs and man-like women and those whose sexuality was indistinct and those who were hermaphrodites.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow you, monks, to question a woman who is being ordained about twenty-four things that are stumbling-blocks. And thus, monks, should she be questioned: ‘You are not without sexual characteristics? ... You are not a hermaphrodite? Have you diseases like this:² leprosy, boils, eczema, consumption, epilepsy? Are you a human being? Are you a woman? Are you a free woman? Are you without debts? You are not in royal service? Are you allowed by your mother and father, by your husband?³ Have you completed twenty years of age?⁴ Are you complete as to bowl and robe? What is your name? What is the name of your woman proposer?’”⁵

Kd.20.17.2

Now at that time monks asked nuns about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow,

¹ Same list occurs at Vin.3.129 in definition of “he abuses”. Cf. the examination of male candidates for ordination at Kd.1.76. ² Cf. Kd.1.76-Kd.1.77 as far as to end of 17 below.

³ See Nuns’ Bi-Pc.80. ⁴ See Nuns’ Bi-Pc.71-Bi-Pc.73. ⁵ pavattinī. See Nuns’ Bi-Pc.69, and BD.3.377 where pavattinī is defined as upajjhā, woman preceptor.

monks, ordination in the Order of monks after she has been ordained on the one side, and has cleared herself (in regard to the stumbling-blocks) in the Order of nuns.”

Now¹ at that time nuns asked those wishing for ordination, but who were not instructed, about the things which are stumbling-blocks. Those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

BD.5.376

Vin.2.272

“I allow them, monks, having instructed first, afterwards to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks.”

They instructed just there in the midst of the Order. As before, those wishing for ordination were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“I allow them, monks, having instructed aside, to ask about the things which are stumbling-blocks in the midst of the Order. And thus, monks, should she be instructed: First, she should be invited to choose a woman preceptor;² having invited her to choose a woman preceptor, a bowl and robes should be pointed out to her (with the words): ‘This is a bowl for you, this is an outer cloak, this is an upper robe, this is an inner robe, this is a vest,³ this is a bathing-cloth;⁴ go and stand in such and such a place’.”

Kd.20.17.3

Ignorant, inexperienced (nuns) instructed them. Those wishing for ordination, but who were not instructed, were at a loss, they were abashed, they were unable to answer. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, they should not be instructed by ignorant, inexperienced (nuns). Whoever (such) should instruct them, there is an offence of wrongdoing. I allow them, monks, to instruct by means of an experienced, competent (nun).”

Kd.20.17.4

Those who were not agreed upon instructed. They told this matter to the Lord. He said:

“Monks, they should not be instructed by one who is not agreed upon.”

¹ Cf. Vin.1.93f. for the questions put to monks on their ordination. ² upajjhā. ³ saṃkacchikā, cf. Vin.4.345. This and the bathing cloak make up the “five robes” for nuns, mentioned, e.g. at Vin.4.282 (Nuns’ Bi-Pc.24, Bi-Pc.25). ⁴ udakasāṭikā. One of the boons which Visākhā asked for at Vin.1.293 was that of bestowing bathing cloths on the Order of nuns; allowed at Vin.1.294. Their proper measurements are laid down at Vin.4.279.

Whoever (such) should instruct, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to instruct by means of one who is agreed upon. And thus, monks, should she be agreed upon: oneself may be agreed upon by oneself, or another may be agreed upon by another. And how is oneself to be agreed upon by oneself? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, I could instruct So-and-so.' Thus may oneself be agreed upon by oneself. And how is another to be agreed upon by another? The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, So-and-so could instruct So-and-so.' Thus may another be agreed upon by another.

BD.5.377

Kd.20.17.5

"The nun who is agreed upon, having approached the one who wishes for ordination, should speak thus to her: 'Listen, So-and-so. This is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking). When I am asking you in the midst of the Order about what is, you should say: "It is," if it is so; you should say: "It is not," if it is not so. Do not be at a loss, do not be abashed. I will ask you thus: "You are not without sexual characteristics? ... What is the name of your woman proposer?"'

Vin.2.273

"They arrived together. They should not arrive together. The instructor having arrived first, the Order should be informed (by her): 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She has been instructed by me. If it seems right to the Order, let So-and-so come.' She should be told: 'Come.' Having made her arrange her upper robe over one shoulder, having made her honour the nuns' feet, having made her sit down on her haunches, having made her salute with joined palms, she should be made to ask for ordination, saying: 'Ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination. Ladies, may the Order raise me up out of compassion. And a second time, ladies ... And a third time, ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination. Ladies, may the Order raise me up out of compassion.'

Kd.20.17.6

"The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, I could ask So-and-so about the things that are stumbling-blocks. Listen, So-and-so, this is for you a time for truth (-speaking), a time for fact (-speaking). I am asking you about what is. You should say, "It is," if it is so; you should say, "It is not," if it is not so. You are not without sexual characteristics? ... What is the name of your woman proposer?' BD.5.378

"The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She is quite pure in regard to the things which are stumbling-blocks, she is complete as to bowl and robes. So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain So-and-so through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. The Order is ordaining So-and-so through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. If the ordination of So-and-so through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so, is pleasing to the ladies, they should be silent: she to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, ... should speak. So-and-so is ordained by the Order through the woman proposer, the lady So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.'" Kd.20.17.7

"Taking her at once, having approached the Order of monks, having made her arrange her upper robe over one shoulder, having made her honour the monks' feet, having made her sit down on her haunches, having made her salute with joined palms, she should be made to ask for ordination, saying: 'I, the lady So-and-so, wish for ordination through the lady So-and-so, I am ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns. I am pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks). Ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination. Ladies, may the Order raise me up out of compassion. I, the lady So-and-so ... am pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks). And a second time ... I, the lady So-and-so ... am pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks.) And a third time, ladies, I am asking the Order for ordination Ladies, may the Order raise me Kd.20.17.8

Vin.2.274

BD.5.379

up out of compassion.’ The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination through So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns, she is pure (in regard to the stumbling-blocks). So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This one, So-and-so, wishes for ordination ... through the woman proposer So-and-so. The Order is ordaining So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. If the ordination of So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me ... should speak. So-and-so is ordained by the Order through the woman proposer So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this’.”

The shadow should be measured at once, the length of the season should be explained, the portion of the day should be explained, the formula should be explained, the nuns should be told: “Explain the three resources¹ to her and the eight things which are not to be done.”²

Kd.20.18.1

Now at that time nuns being uncertain as to seats in a refectory let the time go by.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, eight nuns (to be seated) according to seniority, the rest as they come in.” Now at that time nuns, thinking: ‘It is allowed by the Lord that eight nuns (may be seated) according to seniority, the rest as they come in,’ every-
BD.5.380 where reserved⁴ (seats) just for eight nuns according to seniority, for the rest as they come in. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, (seats) in a refectory for eight nuns according to seniority, for the rest as they come in. Nowhere else should (a seat) be reserved according to seniority. Whoever should reserve (one), there is an offence of wrong-doing."

¹ Four resources for monks, see Kd.1.77. But the third, forest-dwelling, is forbidden to nuns at Kd.20.23. ² At Kd.1.78 there are four akaraṇiyaṇī for monks which correspond to their four Pārājikas. The nuns, however, have eight Pārājikas (see BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxff.) and there is no doubt that reference is here being made to these. ³ Vin-a.1294 says “making one get up, making another sit down, they let the right time for eating go by.” The right time for this is before midday, see Vin.4.86. Vin.4.166 (the wrong time). ⁴ paṭibāhati, as at Kd.16.6.4, Kd.16.7.

Vin.2.275

Now at that time nuns did not invite.¹ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, nuns should not not invite. Whoever should not invite should be dealt with according to the rule."² Now at that time nuns, having invited among themselves, did not invite in an Order of monks. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, nuns, having invited among themselves, should not not invite in an Order of monks. Whoever should not (so) invite should be dealt with according to the rule."³

Kd.20.19.1

Now at that time nuns, inviting (only) on the one side (of the Order) together with monks, made an uproar. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "Monks, nuns should not invite (only) on the one side together with monks. Whoever should (so) invite, there is an offence of wrong-doing."

Now at that time nuns, inviting before the meal, let the (right) time⁴ go by. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow them, monks, to invite after a meal." Inviting after a meal, they came to be at a wrong time.⁵ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow them, monks, having invited (among themselves) one day, to invite the Order of monks the following day."

Kd.20.19.2

Now at that time the entire Order of nuns, while inviting, created a disturbance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow them, monks, to agree upon one experienced, competent nun to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. And thus, monks, should she be agreed

¹ See Nuns' Bi-Pc.57, and BD.3.354 for further references. ² Nuns' Bi-Pc.57. ³ Nuns' Bi-Pc.57. ⁴ See above, BD.5.379, n.3. ⁵ I.e. for inviting in the Order of monks, as the context shows.

BD.5.381 upon: First, a nun should be asked; having asked her, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: ‘Ladies, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the nun So-and-so to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the nun So-and-so to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. If the agreement upon the nun So-and-so to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns is pleasing to the ladies, they should be silent; she to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The nun So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order to invite the Order of monks on behalf of the Order of nuns. It is pleasing to the Order. Therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’

Kd.20.19.3

“That nun who has been agreed upon, taking the Order of nuns (with her), having approached the Order of monks, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks’ feet, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak thus to it: Vin.2.276 ‘The Order of nuns, masters, is inviting the Order of monks in respect of what has been seen, heard, or suspected. Masters, let the Order of monks speak to the Order of nuns out of compassion and they, seeing (the offence), will make amends. And a second time, masters ... And a third time, masters, the Order of nuns is inviting the Order of monks ... will make amends’.”¹

Kd.20.20.1

Now at that time nuns suspended the Observance for monks, they suspended the Invitation, they issued commands, they set up authority,² they asked for leave, they reproved, they made to remember.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a monk’s Observance is not to be suspended by a nun: even if it is suspended, it is not (really) suspended, and for her who suspends it there is an offence of wrong-doing. The Invitation should not be suspended: even if it is suspended it is not (really) suspended, and for her who suspends it there is an offence of wrong-doing. Commands should not be issued: even if issued they are not (really) issued, and for her who issues them there is an offence of wrong- doing. Authority should not be set up: even if set up it is not (really) set up, and for her who sets it up there is an offence of wrong-doing. Leave should not be asked for: even if asked for it is not (really) asked for, and for her who asks there is an offence of wrong-doing. She should not reprove: the one reprovved is not (really) reprovved and for her who reproves there is an offence of wrong-doing. She should not make to remember: the one made to remember is not (really) made to remember, and for her who makes to remember there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

BD.5.382

¹ Cf. Kd.4.1.14 ² It would be preferable to read anuvādam paṭṭhapenti instead of anuvādam thapenti; cf. Kd.11.5. ³ Cf. Kd.11.5.

Now at that time monks suspended the Observance for nuns ... (as above) ... they made to remember. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, I allow you to suspend through a monk a nun’s Observance: and if it is suspended it is properly suspended, and there is no offence for the one who suspends it ... to make to remember: and if she is made to remember she is properly made to remember, and there is no offence for the one who makes her remember.”

Now at that time the group of six nuns went in a vehicle,¹ both in one that had a bull in the middle yoked with cows, and in one that had a cow in the middle yoked with bulls. People ... spread it about, saying: “As at the festival of the Ganges and the Mahī.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, a nun should not go in a vehicle. Whoever should go in one should be dealt with according to the rule.”²

Kd.20.21.1

Now at that time a certain nun came to be ill; she was not able to go on foot. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a vehicle for (a nun) who is ill.” Then it occurred to nuns: “Now, (should the vehicle be) yoked with cows or yoked with bulls?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a handcart yoked with a cow, yoked with a bull.”

¹ Cf. Kd.5.9.4–Kd.5.10.3, and also Nuns’ Bi-Pc.85. ² Nuns’ Bi-Pc.85.

Vin.2.277
BD.5.383

Now at that time a certain nun became exceedingly uncomfortable owing to the jolting of a vehicle. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, a palanquin, a sedan-chair.”¹

Kd.20.22.1

Now at that time the courtesan Aḍḍhakāsī² had gone forth among the nuns. She was anxious to go to Sāvattḥī, thinking, ‘I will be ordained in the Lord’s presence.’ Men of abandoned life heard it said that the courtesan Aḍḍhakāsī was anxious to go to Sāvattḥī and they beset the way. But the courtesan Aḍḍhakāsī heard it said that the men of abandoned life were besetting the way and she sent a messenger to the Lord saying: “Even³ I am anxious for ordination. Now what line of conduct should be followed by me?” Then the Lord on this occasion, having given reasoned talk, addressed the monks, saying: “I allow you, monks, to ordain even through a messenger.”⁴

Kd.20.22.2

They ordained through a messenger who was a monk. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, you should not ordain through a messenger who is a monk. Whoever should (so) ordain there is an offence of wrong-doing.” They ordained through a messenger who was a probationer ... a novice ... a woman novice ... through a messenger who was an ignorant, inexperienced (woman). “Monks, you should not ordain through a messenger who is an ignorant, inexperienced (woman). Whoever should (so) ordain there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow you, monks, to ordain through a messenger who is an experienced, competent nun.

Kd.20.22.3

“That nun who is the messenger, having approached the Order, having arranged her upper robe over one shoulder, having honoured the monks’ feet, having sat down on her haunches, having saluted with joined palms, should speak to it thus: “The lady So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side, in the Order of nuns, and is pure;⁵ she is not coming only on account of some danger. The lady

¹ pāṭaṅkiṃ. Vin-a.1295 says paṭapoṭalikaṃ, variant reading patapoṭṭalikaṃ, cf. Vin-a.1085.

² Her verses at Thig.25, Thig.26. Cf. aḍḍhakāsika at Kd.8.2. ³ Oldenberg has hi, Thig-a.31 pi. ⁴ It was probably usual for a nun to be ordained through an Order of not less than ten persons, as it was for monks, Kd.1.31.2; Kd.9.4.1. Vin-a.1295 says “ordination through a messenger existed on account of any one of the ten dangers.” Here, danger from human beings. ⁵ As to the stumbling-blocks. Cf. use of visuddhā at Kd.10.17.2.

So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination; may the Order out of compassion¹ raise up that lady. The lady So-and-so ... is not coming on account of some danger. And a second time the lady So-and-so is asking the Order ... raise up that lady. The lady So-and-so wishes for ordination through the lady So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns, and is pure; she is not coming only on account of some danger. And a third time the lady So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination; may the Order out of compassion raise up that lady.’

BD.5.384

The Order should be informed by an experienced, competent monk, saying: ‘Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through So-and-so. She is ordained on the one side in the Order of nuns and is pure; she is not coming only on account of some danger. So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer So-and-so. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may ordain So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. So-and-so wishes for ordination through So-and-so ... So-and-so is asking the Order for ordination through the woman proposer So-and-so. The Order is ordaining So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so. If the ordination of So-and-so through the woman proposer So-and-so is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. And a second time I speak forth this matter ... And a third time I speak forth this matter: Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me ... he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.’ The shadow should be measured at once,² the length of the season should be explained, the portion of the day should be explained, the formula should be explained, the nuns should be told: ‘Explain the three resources to her and the eight things which are not to be done’.”

Vin.2.278

Now at that time nuns were staying in a forest; men of abandoned life seduced them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not stay in a forest. Whoever should stay (in one) there is an offence of wrong-doing.”³

Kd.20.23.1

BD.5.385

¹ Cf. Kd.1.76.8. ² As at Kd.20.17.8. ³ Cf. Kd.20.17.8, n..

Kd.20.24.1

Now at that time a storeroom¹ came to be given to an Order of nuns by a lay-follower. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a storeroom." The storeroom was not enough.² They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, a dwelling."³ The dwelling was not enough. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow, monks, building operations."⁴ The building operations were not enough. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow you, monks, to build even what belongs to an individual."⁵

Kd.20.25.1

Now at that time a certain woman had gone forth among the nuns when she was already pregnant, and after she had gone forth she was delivered of a child.⁶ Then it occurred to that nun: "Now what line of conduct should be followed by me in regard to this boy?" They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow her, monks, to look after him until he attains to years of discretion."⁷ Then it occurred to that nun: 'It is not possible for me to live alone,⁸ nor is it possible for another nun to live with a boy. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?' They told this matter to the Lord. He said: "I allow them, monks, having agreed upon one nun, to give her to that nun as a companion.⁹ And thus, monks, should she be agreed upon: First, that nun should be asked; having asked her, the Order should be informed by an experienced, competent nun, saying: 'Ladies, let the Order listen to me. If it is pleasing to the Order, the Order may agree upon the nun So-and-so as companion to the nun So-and-so. This is the motion. Ladies, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon the nun So-and-so as companion to the nun So-and-so. If the agreement upon the nun So-and-so as companion to the nun So-and-so is pleasing to the ladies, they should be silent; she to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The nun So-and-so is agreed upon by the Order as companion to the nun So-and-so. It is pleasing to the Order; therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

Vin.2.279

BD.5.386

¹ uddosita. See BD.3.177, n.2; also BD.2.16, n.2. Vin-a.1295 here again explains by bhaṇḍasālā, a hall for goods. ² na sammati, as at Kd.15.13.3. Vin-a.1295 explains by nappahoti, did not suffice. ³ upassaya; here Vin-a.1295 says ghara, a house. ⁴ navakamma, here probably more than "repairs." Vin-a.1295 says "I allow you to carry out building operations for nuns for the sake of the Order." ⁵ puggalikaṃ kātuṃ, or, even for individuals. Buddhaghosa has no note. Cf. the word at Kd.20.15.1. ⁶ At Nuns' Bi-Pc.61 it is an offence to ordain a pregnant woman, but it is not an offence for the one who ordains her if she thinks that she is not pregnant. ⁷ Vin-a.1295 says until he is able to eat and wash himself properly. ⁸ Cf. Nuns' Bi-Ss.3, Nuns' Bi-Pc.14. ⁹ Cf. BD.3.190, BD.3.267, BD.3.323, BD.3.357, BD.3.360.

Kd.20.25.2

Then it occurred to that nun who was the companion: ‘Now what line of conduct should be followed by me in regard to this boy?’ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, to behave in regard to that boy exactly as they would behave to another man, except for sleeping under the same roof.”¹

Now at that time a certain nun who had fallen into an offence against an important rule, was undergoing mānatta.² Then it occurred to that nun: “It is neither possible for me to live alone, nor is it possible for another nun to live with me. Now, what line of conduct should be followed by me?” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks having agreed upon one nun, to give her to that nun as a companion. And thus, monks, should she be agreed upon: ... (as in Kd.20.26.1) ‘... Thus do I understand this..’”

Kd.20.25.3

Now at that time a certain nun, having disavowed the training,³ left the Order;⁴ having come back again she asked the nuns for ordination. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, there is no disavowal of the training by a nun, but in so far as she is one who leaves the Order,⁵ she is in consequence not a nun.”

Kd.20.26.1

¹ Vin-a.1295 says excepting only a sleeping place in the same house, sahāgāraseyyamattarū. But, it adds, the mother is able to lie down and having put the child on her breast to wash it, make it drink, feed it and adorn it. ² Cf. the 5th and 8th important rules at Kd.20.1.4. Also on mānatta see Kd.12.6.1. ³ On this state of dissatisfaction see Vin.3.24–Vin.3.28. ⁴ vibbhami. This, and disavowing the training, occur at e.g. Kd.2.22.3. ⁵ vibbhantā. Vin-a.1295 says if, leaving the Order at her own pleasure and approval, having clothed herself in white clothes, she is thus not a nun, but this is not through disavowing the training.

Kd.20.26.2
BD.5.387

Now at that time a certain nun, wearing the saffron robes, went over to the fold of a sect;⁶ having come back again she asked the nuns for ordination. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, whatever nun, wearing the saffron robes, goes over to the fold of a sect, on coming back should not be ordained.”¹

Kd.20.27.1

Vin.2.280

Now at that time nuns being scrupulous, did not consent to greeting by men, to their cutting (their) hair, to their cutting (their) nails, to their dressing a sore. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow them, monks, to consent to (these actions).”²

Kd.20.27.2

Now at that time nuns were sitting down cross-legged,³ consenting to the touch of heels.⁴ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not sit down cross-legged. Whoever should (so) sit down, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time a certain nun was ill. There was no comfort for her if she was not cross-legged. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “I allow, monks, the half cross-legged (posture)⁵ for nuns.”

Kd.20.27.3

Now at that time nuns relieved themselves in a privy; the group of six nuns caused abortion there. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not relieve themselves in a privy. Whoever should

⁶ titthāyatanāṃ saṅkhami, as at Vin.1.69, where there is a similar rule for monks. ¹ Vin-a.1295 says not only should she not be ordained, but she cannot even obtain the “going forth.”

² See Nuns’ Bi-Pj.8 It would seem as if these things were permissible if neither party were filled with desire. ³ pallaṅkena nisīdanti. Vin-a.1296 says pallaṅkaṃ abhujjivā nisīdanti. So probably pallaṅka does not mean “divan” here as it does at Vin.4.299, see BD.3.271, n.3.

⁴ paṇhisamphassa. Not at all clear whose heels were touching, but probably the nuns’ next on either side. Pallaṅkena may have double meaning of sitting down cross-legged and sitting down “divan-wise,” i.e. sitting down cross-legged and in a row. It was probably disturbing to meditation if heels touched, hence the prohibition. ⁵ aḍḍhapallaṅka. Vin-a.1296 says the pallaṅka is made having drawn in one foot (only and leaving the other straight out).

Of course, if pallaṅka is taken as divan, aḍḍhapallaṅka must be half a divan—Vinaya Texts iii.367, n.2 says “probably a cushion.”

do so there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, to relieve themselves where it is open underneath, covered on top.”⁶

BD.5.388

Now at that time nuns bathed with chunam. People looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe with chunam. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them, monks, the red powder of rice husks and clay.”¹

Kd.20.27.4

Now at that time nuns bathed with scented clay. People ... spread it about, saying: “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe with scented clay.² Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow, them, monks, ordinary clay.”

Now at that time nuns, bathing in a bathroom, created a disturbance. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe in a bathroom. Whoever should bathe (in one), there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time nuns bathed against the stream consenting to the touch of the current.³ They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe against the stream. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

Now at that time nuns bathed not at a ford; men of abandoned life seduced them. They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe not at a ford. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing.”

⁶ The idea is that there should be no privacy. Cf. Kd.18.9, Kd.18.10. ¹ kukkusaṃ mattikaṃ. Vin-a.1296 explains by saying, kuṇḍakañ c’eva mattikañ ca, the red powder of rice husks as well as clay. Both these were allowed to monks for building operations. Kd.16.3.1. ² Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc.88, Bi-Pc.89. ³ dhārāsamphassa.

Now at that time nuns bathed at a ford for men. People ... spread it about, saying, “Like women householders who enjoy pleasures of the senses.” They told this matter to the Lord. He said: “Monks, nuns should not bathe at a ford for men. Whoever should (so) bathe, there is an offence of wrong-doing. I allow them monks, to bathe at a ford for women.”¹

The Third Portion for Repeating

Told is the Tenth Section: that on Nuns

IN THIS SECTION ARE A HUNDRED AND SIX ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

The Gotamid asked for the going forth, the Truthfinder did not allow it, from Kapilavatthu the Leader went to Vesālī. /

Covered with dust² she made it known to Ānanda in the porch.

Saying: “Is she able?” he asked about the method; saying, “(She was your) mother” and “(your) nurse.” /

A century and that day, no monk, desiring,

Invitation, important rules, two years, not abusing, /

Complying with these eight rules for exhortation³ during her life.

Acceptance of the important rules—that is the ordination for her. /

A thousand years to only five (hundred) by the similes of the pot-thieves, mildew, red-rust:⁴ thus an injury to what is true dhamma. /

May, looking forward,⁵ build a dyke; again it is the stability of what is true dhamma.

To be ordained, the lady, greeting according to seniority, /

Will not carry out like this, in common and not in common, about exhortation, and about the Pātimokkha, “now, by whom?”, to a nunnery, /

If they do not know he explains, and they do not confess,⁶ through a monk, to acknowledge through a monk, acknowledgement through a nun, /

He explained, (formal) act, by a monk, they looked down on, or by a nun, ¹ mahilātitthe. On nuns bathing see also Vin.1.293, Vin.4.259, Vin.4.278. ² Siamese edition reads rajokiṇṇā, as suggested at Vin.2.328; Sinhalese edition rajokiṇṇena. ³ Oldenberg’s text and Sinhalese read ovāden’ aṭṭha te dhammā; Siamese edition ovaṭo ca aṭṭha dhammā (with variant reading as text). ⁴ Sinhalese and Siamese editions read mañjēṭṭhikā (Sinhalese reading -ka) for Oldenberg’s mañcaṭṭhika-. ⁵ Oldenberg: pā eva, probably for paṭigacc’ eva of Kd.20.1.6. But Sinhalese edition reads āliṃ bandheyy’ upamāhi, and Siamese pāliṃ bandheyy’ upamāhi, with variant readings as in Oldenberg. ⁶ Here karonti, for paṭikaronti.

to explain, and to quarrel, having cancelled, and about Uppala-(vaṇṇā), /
 In Sāvattihī, muddy water, did not greet, bodies and thighs and private parts and the group offended and associated with, /
 Not to be greeted is the penalty, for nuns likewise again, and the prohibition, exhortation, is it allowable? he went away, / Ignorant, without ground, decision, exhortation, an Order of five, two or three, they did not undertake, ignorant ones, ill, setting out on a journey, / Forest-dwellers, they did not announce, and they did not come back, long, bamboo and leather, and woven cloth, plaited, and fringed,
 And plaited cloth, and fringed, and plaited thread, (and) fringed, / Cow's leg-bone, cow's jaw-bone, backs of the hands, likewise the feet,¹ thighs (and) faces, gums, smearing, rubbing (and) with chunam, /
 They marked,² and painting the body, painting the face, likewise the two, ointment marks (and) distinguishing marks, from a window, in the light, and about dancing, /
 Courtesan, tavern, slaughter-house, a shop, usury, trade, they kept slaves, women slaves, servants, servant women, / Animals, and greens, they carried pieces of felt, Vin.2.282 robes that were dark green, yellow, red, crimson, that were black, / Brownish-yellow, reddish-yellow, not cut up, and long, and if they should wear (robes) with (borders) of flowers, snakes' hoods,³ jackets, as well as (garments made of the) Tirīṭa tree. /
 If a nun, after she has gone, on a probationer, on a woman novice BD.5.391 bestows her requisites, it is the (Order of) nuns that is the owner. /
 If a woman lay-follower on a monk, on a novice, on a lay-follower, and on others is bestowing her requisites, the (Order of) monks is the owner. /
 About a Mallian (woman), foetus, base of the bowl, membrum concerning food,
 and abundant, even greater, food that was stored, /
 As for monks below, do likewise for nuns, lodgings, menstruating, was soiled, and cloth and pin,⁴ /
 They broke, and all the time, there were to be seen:
 beginning with women without sexual characteristics, those defective in sex, bloodless, just the same for those with stagnant blood, / Always dressed, dripping, deformed, women eunuchs, man-like women, and those of indistinct sexuality, and those who were hermaphrodites,

¹ Sinhalese, pādam; Oldenberg: pari; Siamese padam as suggested at Vin.2.328. ² Oldenberg: lañchenti; Sinhalese: lañchanti; Siamese: lañcenti. ³ pala here, instead of phaṇa of Kd.20.10.5. Sinhalese and Siamese read phala. ⁴ Oldenberg: paṭāni ca. Vin.2.329 suggests patati ca, “and it fell down,” evidently to replace nipphaṭati of Kd.20.16.2. But I prefer to take it as a substitute for āṇicolaka (on which see note, BD.5.374 above). For paṭa is also a word for “cloth”; thus the compound paṭāni supports my view that āṇi and colaka are words for two separate items.

/

Beginning with those defective in sexual characteristics and going as far as hermaphrodites.

This is from the abbreviation below: leprosy, boils, eczema and / Consumption, epilepsy, are you a human woman? and a free woman?

without debts (and) not in the royal service and allowed (and) twenty, /

Complete, and what name and that of your woman proposer?:

having asked about twenty-four stumbling-blocks, there is ordination. /

They were at a loss, instructed, and likewise in the midst of the Order, a woman preceptor should be chosen,¹ outer cloak, inner and upper robes, /

BD.5.392 And vest (and) bathing cloth having explained them they may be used,² ignorant ones, not agreed on, on one side, if she asks, questioned about the stumbling-blocks, /

Ordained on one side, likewise again in the Order of monks, the shadow, the season, the day and formula, the three resources, /

The eight things not to be done, the right time, or everywhere eight, nuns did not invite, and the Order of monks likewise, /

Disturbance, before the meal, and at the wrong time, disturbance,

Observance, Invitation, commands, authority, /

Leave, reprov'd, made to remember: objected to by the great Sage.

Just as monks, so nuns: allowed by the great Sage (was) /

A vehicle, and ill (and) yoked, jolting vehicle, Aḍḍhakāsika,

Vin.2.283 monk, probationer, novice, woman novice and ignorant (woman), /

In a forest, a store-room by a lay-follower, a dwelling, the building operations were not enough, pregnant, alone, /

And sleeping under the same roof, against an important rule, and having disavowed, went over to the fold of,

greeting and hair and nails and treating a sore,³ /

Cross-legged, and ill, privy, with chunam, scented clay, in a bathroom, against the stream, not at a ford, and at one for men, /

The Great Gotamid asked and also judiciously did Ānanda.

There were four assemblies for going forth in the dispensation of the Conqueror. /

For the sake of arousing emotion for what is true dhamma and for awakening it was taught thus by the Awakened One, as medicine for a disease. /

Other women also, recognised thus in what is true dhamma,

Vin.2.284 nurture the everlasting state⁴ where, having gone, they grieve not.

¹ upajjhā gāha. ² pesaye. ³ vakakammannā should probably read vaṇa (paṭi) kammanāṃ as at Kd.20.27.1, Sinhalese and Siamese editions. ⁴ accuta ṭhāna, the place not deceased from, not passed away from, not fallen from.

21. (RECITATION WITH) FIVE HUNDRED (PAÑCASATA)

ORIGIN OF THE COUNCIL

Then¹ the venerable Kassapa the Great addressed the monks, saying: “Once upon a time, your reverences, I was going along the high-road from Pāvā to Kusināra together with a large Order of monks, with at least five hundred monks.² Then I, your reverences, stepping aside from the way, sat down at the root of a certain tree. Now at that time a certain Naked Ascetic, having picked up a flower of the Coral Tree³ at Kusināra, was going along the high-road to Pāvā. Then I, your reverences, saw that Naked Ascetic coming in the distance, and seeing him I spoke thus to him: ‘Do you, your reverence not know about our Teacher?’ He said: ‘Yes, I know, your reverence, the recluse Gotama attained nibbāna a week ago. Because of that I picked up this flower of the Coral Tree.’

Kd.21.1.1
BD.5.393

“Your reverences, of those monks who were not passionless, some, stretching forth their arms, wailed, they fell down hurting themselves, they reeled backwards and forwards, saying: ‘Too soon has the Lord attained nibbāna, too soon has the Well-farer attained nibbāna, too soon has the Eye in the World disappeared.’ But those monks who were passionless, these, mindful, circumspect, bore (their grief), saying: ‘Impermanent are compounded things—what is here possible because of this?’

¹ Cf. DN.ii.962 ² Quoted at Kh-a.91, Vin-a.5. ³ mandārava. Cf. DN.ii.137; Erythrina fulgens. A tree growing only in heaven. If its flowers were found on the earth something special must have happened. Not the same as the Pāricchattaka, also a celestial coral-tree, of which there were five.

“Then I, your reverences, spoke thus to these monks: ‘Enough, your reverences, do not grieve, do not lament, for has it not already been explained by the Lord: ‘Of every single thing that is dear and beloved there is variation, separation, becoming otherwise. What is here possible, your reverences, because of this: that whatever is born, has become, is composite, is liable to dissolution? Indeed, thinking: ‘Let not that be dissolved’ — such a situation does not exist”¹.

BD.5.394

“Then at that time, your reverences,² one named Subhadda, who had gone forth when old, was sitting in that assembly. Then your reverences, Subhadda who had gone forth when old spoke thus to these monks: ‘Enough, your reverences, do not grieve, do not lament, we are well rid of this great recluse. We were worried when he said: “This is allowable to you, this is not allowable to you.” But now we will be able to do as we like and we won’t do what we don’t like’.

Vin.2.285

“Come, let us, your reverences, chant dhamma and discipline before what is not dhamma shines out and dhamma is withheld, before what is not discipline shines out and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not-dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble, before those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”³

Kd.21.1.2

“Well then, honoured sir, let the elder select monks.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great selected five hundred perfected ones, less one. Monks spoke thus to the venerable Kassapa the Great:⁴

“Honoured sir, this Ānanda, although he is still a learner, could not be one to follow a wrong course through desire, anger, delusion, fear; and he has mastered much dhamma and discipline under the Lord. Well, now, honoured sir, let the elder select the venerable Ānanda as well.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great selected the venerable Ānanda as well.

Kd.21.1.3

Then it occurred to the monks who were elders:⁵ “Now, where should ¹ Also at DN.ii.118. ² At DN.ii.162 the Subhadda incident is placed before the speech which here precedes it. At DN-a.599 he is identified with the barber of Ātuma who went forth when old, and who, as told at Vin.1.249, was angry when Gotama refused to accept the meal he had prepared. The above incident was his revenge. ³ As at Kd.22.1.7. Quoted at DN-a.3,602, Vin-a.6. ⁴ Quoted at DN-a.5, Kh-a.92, Vin-a.7. ⁵ Quoted at DN-a.5, Vin-a.7.

we chant dhamma and discipline?” Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “There is great resort for alms at Rājagaha and lodgings are abundant. Suppose that we, spending the rains at Rājagaha, should chant dhamma and discipline (there), and that no other monks were to come up to Rājagaha for the rains.”¹

BD.5.395

Kd.21.1.4

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying: “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon these five hundred monks to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks. This is the motion. Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. The Order is agreeing upon these five hundred monks to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks. If the agreement upon these five hundred monks to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks, is pleasing to the venerable ones you should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. These five hundred monks are agreed upon by the Order to chant dhamma and discipline while they are spending the rains in Rājagaha, and (it is agreed) that the rains should not be spent in Rājagaha by any other monks. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus, do I understand this.”

Vin.2.286

Kd.21.1.5

Then the monks who were elders went to Rājagaha to chant dhamma and discipline.² Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “Now, repairs to broken and dilapidated parts were praised by the Lord. Come, let us during the first month, make repairs to the broken and dilapidated parts; having assembled in the middle month, we will chant dhamma and discipline.” Then the monks who were elders made repairs to the broken and dilapidated parts during the first month.

¹ The elders did not want others to take part in the Council; but if they came they would have to so as to render valid the proceedings. For had only part of an assembly or Order present there taken part in them, the proceedings would have been invalid for they would have been carried out by an incomplete assembly, vagga. ² Some of this paragraph quoted at DN-a.8.

Kd.21.1.6

BD.5.396

Then the venerable Ānanda, thinking:¹ “Tomorrow is the assembly. Now it is not suitable in me that I, being (only) a learner, should go to the assembly,” and having passed much of that night in mindfulness as to body, when the night was nearly spent thinking: “I will lie down,” he inclined his body, but (before) his head had touched the mattress and while his feet were free from the ground—in that interval his mind was freed from the cankers with no residuum (for rebirth) remaining. Then the venerable Ānanda, being a perfected one, went to the assembly.²

Kd.21.1.7

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying:³ “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order I could question Upāli on discipline.” Then the venerable Upāli informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, questioned on discipline by the venerable Kassapa the Great, could answer.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great spoke thus to the venerable Upāli: “Where,⁴ reverend Upāli, was the first offence involving defeat laid down?”

“At Vesālī, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

“Regarding Sudinna the Kalandaka.”

“On what subject?”

“On sexual intercourse.”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the first offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him as to the individual⁵ and he questioned him as to what was laid down and he questioned him as to what was further laid down⁶ and he questioned him as to what was an offence and he questioned him as to what was no offence.⁷

¹ Cf. DN-a.9-10, which differs somewhat. ² Quoted at DN-a.10. ³ Quoted DN-a.11.

⁴ Quoted at DN-a.12, Vin-a.30. ⁵ These first three questions are quoted at Vin-a.30. ⁶ anupaññatti; the additions made to the rule that was laid down, the paññatti, after it had been first laid down. Cf. Vin.5.2. ⁷ These are the cases mentioned after the Old Commentary’s explanations of the words of the rules.

“Then, reverend Upāli, where was the second offence involving defeat laid down?”

“In Rājagaha, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

“Regarding Dhaniya, the potter’s son.”

“On what subject?”

“On taking what is not given.”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the second offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him ... as to what was no offence.

“Then, reverend Upāli, where was the third offence involving defeat laid down?”

“At Vesālī, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

“Regarding several monks.”

“On what subject?”

“On human beings.”¹

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the third offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him ... as to what was no offence.

“Then, reverend Upāli, where was the fourth offence involving defeat laid down?”

“At Vesālī, honoured sir.”

“Regarding whom?”

“Regarding the monks on the banks of the Vaggumudā.”

“On what subject?”

“On conditions of further-men.”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Upāli as to the subject of the fourth offence involving defeat and he questioned him as to its provenance and he questioned him as to ... what was no offence. In this same way he questioned him about both the disciplines.² Constantly questioned, the venerable Upāli answered.³

¹ manussaviggaha. “Depriving of life” is to be understood. ² I.e. that for monks and that for nuns. ³ Quoted at DN-a.12.

Kd.21.1.8

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me.¹ If it seems right to the Order, I could question Ānanda about dhamma.” Then the venerable Ānanda informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, questioned on dhamma by the venerable Kassapa the Great, could answer.” Then the venerable Kassapa the Great spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:²

BD.5.398

“Where, reverend Ānanda, was the Brahmajāla³ spoken?”

“Honoured sir, between Rājagaha and Nālandā in the royal rest-house at Ambalaṭṭhikā.”

“With whom?”

“Suppiya the wanderer and Brahmadata the brahmin youth.”⁴ Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Ānanda as to the provenance of the Brahmajāla and he questioned him as to the individual(s).

“But where, reverend Ānanda, was the Sāmaññaphala⁵ spoken?”⁶

“In Rājagaha, honoured sir, in Jīvaka’s mango grove.”

“With whom?”

“With Ajātasattu, the son of the Videhan (lady).”

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great questioned the venerable Ānanda as to the provenance of the Sāmaññaphala and he questioned him as to the individual. In this same way he questioned him about the five Nikāyas. Constantly questioned, the venerable Ānanda answered.

ON THE LESSER AND MINOR TRAINING RULES

Kd.21.1.9

Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the monks who were elders: “The Lord, honoured sirs, spoke thus to me at the time of his attaining nibbāna:

¹ Quoted at DN-a.13. ² Quoted at DN-a.14. ³ The first Suttanta in the Dīgha. ⁴ Here both Vin-a.16 and DN-a.14 add: “On what subject?” “On praise and not praise.” ⁵ The second Suttanta in the Dīgha. ⁶ Quoted at Vin-a.16. After this sentence DN-a.14 proceeds differently.

‘If the Order, Ānanda, after my death is willing, the lesser and minor rules of training¹ may be abolished’.”²

“But did you, reverend Ānanda, ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’”

“No, I, honoured sirs, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’”

Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat, except for the rules for the thirteen offences entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the two undetermined offences, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the thirty offences of expiation involving forfeiture, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the ninety-two offences of expiation, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.” Some elders spoke thus: “Except for the rules for the four offences involving defeat ... except for the rules for the four offences which ought to be confessed, the rest are lesser and minor rules of training.”

BD.5.399
Vin.2.288

Then the venerable Kassapa the Great informed the Order, saying: “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. There are rules of training for us which affect householders, and householders know concerning us: ‘This is certainly allowable for the recluses, sons of the Sakyans, this is certainly not allowable.’ If we were to abolish the lesser and minor rules of training there would be those who would say: ‘At the time of his cremation³ a rule of training had been laid down by the recluse Gotama for disciples; while the Teacher was amongst them these trained themselves in the rules of training, but since the Teacher has attained nibbāna among them, they do not now train themselves in the rules of training.’ If it seems right to the

¹ See BD.3, Introduction, p.x and Bu-Pc.72, especially BD.3.41 where see n.1 for further references; also see Questions of King Milinda i.202f. ² DN.ii.154. ³ dhūmakālikarū, as at Kd.16.17.1.

Order, the Order should not lay down what has not been laid down, nor should it abolish what has been laid down. It should proceed in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down.¹ This is the motion.² Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. There are rules of training for us ... ‘... these do not now train themselves in the rules of training.’ The Order is not laying down what has not been laid down, nor is it abolishing what has been laid down. It is proceeding in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down. If the not laying down of what has not been laid down, if the not abolishing of what has been laid down, if the proceeding in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down are pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom they are not pleasing should speak. The Order is not laying down what has not been laid down, it is not abolishing what has been laid down, it is proceeding in conformity with and according to the rules of training that have been laid down. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

BD.5.400

Kd.21.1.10

Then the monks who were elders spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “This, reverend Ānanda, is an offence of wrong-doing for you, in that you did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’ Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

Vin.2.289

“I, honoured sirs, out of unmindfulness, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘But which, Lord, are the lesser and minor rules of training?’ I do not see that as an offence of wrong-doing,³ yet even out of faith in the venerable ones I confess that as an offence of wrong-doing.”

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you sewed the Lord’s cloth for the rains⁴ after having stepped on it. Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

“But I, honoured sirs, not out of disrespect, sewed the Lord’s cloth for the rains after having stepped on it. I do not see ... but even out of faith in the venerable ones I confess that as an offence of wrong-doing.”

¹ Cf. Vin.3.231 (Bu-NP.15.1.2). ² This speech of Kassapa’s, as far as here, is quoted at DN-a.592. ³ Cf. Kd.10.1.8 ⁴ vassikasātikā, see BD.2.134, n.1. Defined at Vin.4.173 (BD.3.99).

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you had the Lord’s body first of all honoured by women; because these were weeping, the Lord’s body was defiled by tears. Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

“But I, honoured sirs, thinking: ‘Do not let these be (here) at a wrong time,’¹ had the Lord’s body honoured first of all by women. I do not see that as an offence of wrong-doing ... but even out of faith ...”

BD.5.401

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you,² (although) a broad hint was being given, a palpable sign was being made, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘Let the Lord remain for a (full) lifespan,³ let the well-farer remain for a (full) lifespan for the welfare of the many-folk, for the happiness of the many-folk, out of compassion for the world, for the good, the welfare, the happiness of devas and mankind.’ Confess that offence of wrong-doing.”

“But I, honoured sirs, because my mind was obsessed⁴ with Māra, did not ask the Lord, saying: ‘Let the Lord remain ... the happiness of devas and mankind.’ I do not see ... out of faith ...”

“This too is an offence of wrong-doing for you, reverend Ānanda, in that you made an effort for the going forth of women in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder.⁵ Confess this offence of wrong-doing.”

“But I, honoured sirs, made an effort for the going forth of women in the dhamma and discipline proclaimed by the Truth-finder, thinking: ‘This Gotamid, Pajāpatī the Great,⁶ is the Lord’s aunt, foster-mother, nurse, giver of milk, for when the Lord’s mother passed away, she suckled him.’ I do not see that as an offence of wrong-doing, but even out of faith in the venerable ones I confess that as an offence of wrong-doing.”

Kd.21.1.11

¹ mā yimā vikāle ahesuṃ. Vin-a.1297 explains by mā imāsaṃ vikāle gamanāni ahesuṃ, do not let there be comings of these at a wrong time. ² Cf. AN.iv.309-AN.iv.310, DN.ii.103, DN.ii.115, SN.v.259, Ud.62. ³ kappa. See GS.iv.206, n. AN-a.iv.149=SN-a.iii.251=Ud-a.323 calls it āyukappa, and say whatever is the length of men’s life at this and that time, bringing that to the full, let him remain. ⁴ As at Vin.4.94, Vin.4.229. ⁵ Above, Kd.20.1. ⁶ As at Kd.20.1.3; MN.iii.253.

Now at that time the venerable Purāṇa was walking on almstour in the Southern Hills together with a large Order of monks, with at least five hundred monks. Then the venerable Purāṇa, having stayed in the Southern Hills for as long as he found suiting, after the monks who were elders had chanted dhamma and discipline, approached Rājagaha, the Bamboo Grove, the squirrels' feeding place, and the monks who were elders; having approached, having exchanged friendly greetings with the monks who were elders, he sat down at a respectful distance. The monks who were elders spoke thus to the venerable Purāṇa as he was sitting down at a respectful distance:

Vin.2.290

BD.5.402

“Reverend Purāṇa, dhamma and discipline have been chanted by monks who are elders. Submit yourself¹ to this chanting.”

“Your reverences, well chanted by the elders are dhamma and discipline, but in that way that I heard it in the Lord's presence, that I received it in his presence, in that same way will I bear it in mind.”

ON THE HIGHER PENALTY

Kd.21.1.12

Then the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the monks who were elders: “Honoured sirs, the Lord, at the time of attaining nibbāna, spoke thus to me: ‘Well now, Ānanda, after I am gone, let the Order enjoin the higher penalty² for the monk Channa.’³”

“But did you, reverend Ānanda, ask the Lord: ‘But what, Lord, is the higher penalty?’”

“I, honoured sirs, did ask the Lord: ‘But what, Lord, is the higher penalty?’ He said, ‘Ānanda, Channa may say whatever he likes to monks, but the monk Channa must neither be spoken to, nor exhorted nor instructed by

¹ upehi, as at Kd.19.3.3 (towards the end). ² brahmadāṇḍa. ³ As at DN.ii.154. See BD.2.230, BD.2.257, BD.2.393, BD.3.36 for further references to Channa's misdoings. It is not clear whether this penalty was imposed because he had taken the nun's part in a dispute with monks, or because he had repeatedly reviled Sāriputta and Moggallāna, as appears from Dhp-a.ii.110–Dhp-a.ii.112, where also other details are to be found. Cf. also Thag-a.i.166.

monks’.”¹

“Well then, reverend Ānanda, do you yourself enjoin the higher penalty on the monk Channa.”

“But how can I, honoured sirs, enjoin the higher penalty on the monk Channa? That monk is fierce and rough.”

“Well then, reverend Ānanda, go along together with many monks.”

“Very well, honoured sirs,” and the venerable Ānanda, having answered these monks in assent, having, together with a large Order of monks, with at least five hundred monks, disembarked at Kosambī from a boat going upstream,² sat down at the root of a certain tree not far from King Udena’s³ pleasure grove.

BD.5.403

Now at that time King Udena was amusing himself in his pleasure grove together with his concubines. Then King Udena’s concubines heard:⁴ “It is said that our teacher, master Ānanda, is sitting at the root of a certain tree not far from the pleasure grove.” Then King Udena’s concubines spoke thus to King Udena: “Sire, they say that our teacher ... not far from the pleasure grove. We, sire, want to see master Ānanda.”

Kd.21.1.13

“Well then, do you see the recluse Ānanda.” Then King Udena’s concubines approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, they sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Ānanda gladdened, rejoiced, roused, delighted King Udena’s concubines with talk on dhamma as they were sitting down at a respectful distance. Then King Udena’s concubines, gladdened ... delighted by the venerable Ānanda with talk on dhamma, bestowed five hundred inner robes on the venerable Ānanda. Then King Udena’s concubines, pleased with the venerable Ānanda’s words, having thanked him, rising from their seats, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, having kept their right sides towards him, approached King Udena.

Vin.21.291

Kd.21.1.14

¹ Cf. AN.ii.113 where it is said that this is destruction, vadha, in the ariyan discipline: when a monk is to be neither spoken to, exhorted nor instructed by the Truth-finder or by his fellow Brahma-farers. ² ujjavanikāya, cf. Vin.4.65. ³ King of Kosambī. ⁴ Cf. Kd.21.1.13–Kd.21.1.14 with Ja.ii.23–Ja.ii.24 where Ānanda receives another thousand robes.

King Udena saw the concubines coming in the distance; seeing them he spoke thus to the concubines: “Did you see the recluse Ānanda?”

“We, sire, did see master Ānanda.”

“But did not you give anything to the recluse Ānanda?”

“We gave, sire, five hundred inner robes to master Ānanda.”

King Udena looked down upon, criticised, spread it about, saying: “How can this recluse Ānanda accept so many robes? Will the recluse Ānanda set up trade in woven cloth or will he offer (them) for sale in a shop?”¹ Then King Udena approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, he exchanged greetings with the venerable Ānanda; having exchanged greetings of friendliness and courtesy, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, King Udena spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda:

“Did not our concubines come here, good² Ānanda?”

“Your concubines did come here, your majesty.”

“Did they not give anything to the honourable³ Ānanda?”

“They gave me five hundred inner robes, your majesty.”

“But what can you, honourable⁴ Ānanda, do with so many robes?”

“I will share them, your majesty, with those monks whose robes are worn thin.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those old robes that are worn thin?”

“We will make them into upper coverings,⁵ your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those upper coverings that are old?”

“We will make these into mattress coverings, your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those mattress coverings that are old?”

“We will make them into ground coverings, your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those ground coverings that are old?”

“We will make them into foot-wipers, your majesty.”

¹ paggāhikasālam pasāressati. Cf. Kd.20.10.4, āpaṇam pasārenti. ² bho. ³ bhoto.

⁴ bhavam. ⁵ uttarattharaṇa.

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those foot-wipers that are old?”

“We will make them into dusters, your majesty.”

“But what will you do, good Ānanda, with those dusters that are old?”

“Having torn them into shreds, your majesty, having kneaded them with mud, we will smear a plaster-flooring.”

Then King Udena, thinking: “These recluses, sons of the Sakyans, use everything in an orderly way and do not let things go to waste,”¹ bestowed even another five hundred woven cloths on the venerable Ānanda. Therefore this was the first time that a thousand robes had accrued to the venerable Ānanda as an alms of robes.

Vin.2.292

Then the venerable Ānanda approached Ghosita’s monastery; having approached, he sat down on an appointed seat. Then the venerable Channa approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached, having greeted the venerable Ānanda, he sat down at a respectful distance. The venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the venerable Channa as he was sitting down at a respectful distance: “The higher penalty has been enjoined on you, reverend Channa, by the Order.”

Kd.21.1.15
BD.5.405

“But what, honoured Ānanda, is the higher penalty?”

“You, reverend Channa, may say what you please to the monks, but you must neither be spoken to nor exhorted nor instructed by the monks.”

Saying: “Am I not, honoured Ānanda, destroyed because I may be neither spoken to nor exhorted nor instructed by the monks?” he fell down fainting at that very place. Then the venerable Channa, being troubled about the higher penalty, being ashamed of it, loathing it,² dwelling alone, aloof, zealous, ardent, self-resolute, having soon realised here and now by his own super-knowledge that supreme goal of the Brahma-faring for the sake of which young men of family rightly go forth from home into homelessness, entering on it, abided in it and he understood: “Destroyed is (individual) birth, lived is the Brahma-faring, done is what was to be done, now there is no more of being this or that.” And so the venerable Channa became another of the perfected ones. Then the venerable Channa, having attained perfection, approached the venerable Ānanda; having approached he spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda: “Honoured Ānanda, now revoke the higher penalty for me.”

¹ sabbeva yoniso upanenti na kulāvaṃ gamenti. Vin-a.1297 says the meaning of na kulāvaṃ gamenti is na koṭṭhake gopenti, they do not keep them in a storeroom. ² As at Vin.1.86f.

“From the moment that you, reverend Channa, realised perfection, from that moment the higher penalty was revoked for you.”

Kd.21.1.16

Now because five hundred monks—not one more, not one less—were at this chanting of the discipline, this chanting of the discipline is in consequence called ‘that of the Five Hundred’.¹

Told is the Eleventh Section: that on the Five Hundred

IN THIS SECTION ARE TWENTY-THREE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

BD.5.406

When the Self-enlightened One had attained nibbāna the elder called Kassapa addressed a group of monks on preserving what is true dhamma, /

Vin.2.293

On the high-road from Pāvā, what was declared by Subhadda, we will chant true dhamma, before what is not-dhamma shines forth, /

And he selected Ānanda also for the one in the five hundred less one spending the rains² in chanting dhamma and discipline in the best of resorts. /

He asked Upāli about discipline, the wise Ānanda about the Suttantas:

disciples of the Conqueror chanted the three Piṭakas. /

The lesser and minor, various, in conformity with and according to what was laid down, he did not ask, having stepped on, he caused to honour, and he did not request, / the going forth of women: out of faith they are offences of wrong-doing for me.

Purāṇa, and the higher penalty, the concubines with Udena, /

So many, and worn thin, upper coverings, mattresses, ground coverings, foot-wipers, dusters, kneading with mud, a thousand robes accrued for the first time to the one called Ānanda. /

Threatened with the higher penalty he attained the fourfold truth.

The five hundred having mastered:

therefore it is called (the Chanting) of the Five Hundred.

Vin.2.294

¹ Cf. Kd.22.2.9. ² Text: vassanto, Sinhalese and Siamese: vasanto.

22. (RECITATION WITH) SEVEN HUNDRED (SATTASATA)

FIRST RECITATION SECTION

Now at that time, a century after the Lord had attained nibbāna, monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī¹ promulgated ten points at Vesālī, saying:

Kd.22.1.1
BD.5.407

1. “The practice concerning a horn for salt² is allowable;
2. the practice as to five finger-breadths is allowable;
3. the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ is allowable;
4. the practice concerning residences is allowable;
5. the practice concerning assent is allowable;
6. the practice concerning what is customary is allowable;
7. the practice concerning unchurned butter-milk is allowable;
8. it is allowable to drink unfermented toddy;
9. a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border is allowable;
10. gold and silver are allowable.”

Now at that time the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā,³ walking on tour among the Vajjis, arrived at Vesālī.⁴ Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, stayed there at Vesālī in the Great Grove in the Hall of the Gabled Roof. Now at that time the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, having on that Observance day filled a bronze pot with water, having set it in the midst of the Order of monks, spoke thus to lay-followers of Vesālī who came: “Give, sirs, a *kahāpaṇa*¹ for the Order and half a *pāda*² and a stamped māsaka;³ there will be something to be done for the Order in respect of requisites.”

¹ As at Kd.17.4.1. ² The terms of the ten points are explained below, Kd.22.1.10; Kd.22.2.8.

³ I take this parent to be his mother. This Yasa is mentioned at DN-a.525; Mbvs.96; Mbvs.iv.57.

⁴ This passage is quoted at Vin-a.i.34.

BD.5.408 When they had spoken thus, the venerable Yasa,⁴ the son of Kākaṇḍakā, spoke thus to the lay-followers of Vesālī: “Do not, sirs, give kahāpaṇas and stamped māsakas to the Order: gold and silver are not allowable to recluses, sons of the Sakyans.⁵ The recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not consent (to accept) gold and silver, the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not receive gold and silver, the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not use jewels and refined gold,⁶ they have done with gold and silver.”⁷ Then the lay-followers of Vesālī, being spoken to thus by the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, nevertheless gave kahāpaṇas ... and stamped māsakas to the Order. Then the monks who were Vajjis or Vesālī, having towards the end of that night arranged those gold coins,⁸ distributed portions according to the number of monks.⁹ Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī spoke thus to the

Vin.2.295

“This portion of gold coins is for you, reverend Yasa.”

Kd.22.1.2 “I have no need of a portion of gold coins, sirs, I do not consent (to accept) gold coins.”

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, saying: “This reverend Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is reviling and abusing¹⁰ lay-followers who are faithful and believing; come, let us carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation¹¹ for him,” carried out a (formal) act of reconciliation for him. Then the ven-

¹ See BD.1.29, n., and BD.1.71, n.2. ² On pāda, see BD.1.71, n.2. Although the reading above is aḍḍhaṃ pi pādāṃ pi, as though aḍḍha and pāda were separate mediums of exchange, in taking the phrase as meaning “half a pāda” I am following Vv-a.77=Dhp-a.iii.108 which gives the descending line: kahāpaṇa, aḍḍhapāda, māsaka. Vinaya Texts iii.387 takes aḍḍha as half a kahāpaṇa, but the justification for its being half a pāda is greater. ³ See BD.1.72, n.1, and Vin-a.689 where it is said that some māsakas have figures stamped on them. ⁴ For the ten points and the Yasa episode see also Mahāvamsa iv.9ff., Dīpavaṃsa iv.45ff., Dīpavaṃsa v.23; Vin-a.i.33ff. ⁵ Bu-NP.18. ⁶ suvaṇṇa. On this and hiraṇṇa see BD.1.28, n. ⁷ All these phrases occur at SN.iv.325 as above; the last two are also used at MN.ii.51 in respect of the potter. ⁸ hiraṇṇa. ⁹ bhikkhaggena. Cf. seyyaggena, vihāraggena and pariveṇaggena at Kd.16.11.3. ¹⁰ Both these terms are defined at Vin.4.309. They occur also at Vin.4.52. ¹¹ paṭisāraṇiyakamma. See Kd.11.18.5. erable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā spoke thus to the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī:

“It was laid down by the Lord, your reverences, that a companion messenger should be given to a monk for whom a (formal) act of reconciliation has been carried out.¹ Your reverences, give me a monk as companion messenger.”

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, having agreed upon one monk, gave him to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, as a companion messenger. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, having entered Vesālī together with the monk who was his companion messenger, spoke thus to the lay-followers of Vesālī:

BD.5.409

“It is said that I revile and abuse the venerable lay-followers² who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma; in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, in that I speak of discipline as discipline.

Kd.22.1.3

“Friends, the Lord was once staying at Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. There, friends, the Lord addressed the monks, saying: ‘Monks,³ there are these four stains of the moon and the sun, stained by which stains the moon and the sun burn not, shine not, blaze not. What are the four? Dense cloud, monks, is a stain of the moon and the sun, stained by which stain the moon and the sun ... blaze not. A snow-cloud⁴ ... Smoke and dust ... Rāhu,⁵ monks, is a stain of the moon and the sun, stained by which stain the moon and the sun burn not, shine not, blaze not. These, monks, are the four stains of the moon and the sun, stained by which stains the moon and the sun burn not, shine not, blaze not.

“‘Even so, monks, there are four stains of recluses and brahmins, stained by which stains some recluses and brahmins burn not, shine not, blaze not. What are the four? There are, monks, some recluses and brahmins who drink fermented liquor, who drink spirits,⁶ abstaining not from drinking figures in the Indian myth of eclipses. See SN.i.50, SN.i.51 where the Moon and Sun devas were seized by Rāhu; they both invoked Gotama’s aid, and he told Rāhu to set the devas free.

¹ Kd.11.22.2. ² āyasmante upāsake. ³ As at AN.ii.53. Cf. Mi.273. ⁴ mahikā; at AN.ii.53, mahiyā. Vin-a.1297 says it is a snow-cloud (himavatāhakā) at the time of snow-fall. ⁵ He

⁶ See Bu-Pc.51.

fermented liquor and spirits. This, monks, is the first stain of recluses and brahmins, stained by which stain some recluses and brahmins burn not, shine not, blaze not. And again, monks, some recluses and brahmins indulge in sexual intercourse,¹ abstaining not from sexual intercourse. This, monks, is the second stain ... And again, monks, some recluses and brahmins consent (to accept) gold and silver abstaining not from accepting gold and silver.² This, monks, is the third stain ... And again, monks, some recluses and brahmins earn a living by a wrong mode of livelihood, abstaining not from a wrong mode of livelihood.³ This, monks, is the fourth stain, stained by which stain some recluses and brahmins ... blaze not. These, monks, are the four stains of recluses and brahmins, stained by which stains some recluses and brahmins burn not, shine not, blaze not.' Friends, the Lord said this; the Well-farer having said this, the Teacher further spoke thus:

“Some recluses⁴ and brahmins are stained
 By lust and ill-will. Clothed in ignorance,
 Beings delight in pleasure-giving shapes;
 Liquor fermented and distilled they drink;
 They follow sexual lust; by folly blinded
 Some recluses and brahmins take gifts
 Of gold and silver and live wrongfully.

“These are called “stains” by the Awakened One,
 The kinsman of the Sun. Tainted by these
 Some recluses and brahmins burn not,
 They shine not, tarnished, dust-soiled, utter fools,
 Shrouded in darkness; slaves of craving they,
 Led by the cord of craving, and they swell

¹ See Bu-Pj.1. ² See Bu-NP:18, and DN.i.5 ³ At DN.i.9–DN.i.12 many wrong modes of livelihood are enumerated. ⁴ I follow translation at GS.ii.62–63, except that in the first line I have “stained” (Vinaya: parikkiliṭṭhā) instead of “snared” (Aṅguttara: paṭikkīṭṭhā), and in the last line I have “take on again-becoming” instead of “reap rebirth.”

The dreadful charnel-field¹ and take on again-becoming.’

“It is for speaking thus that it is said that I am reviling and abusing the venerable lay followers who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma, in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, and in that I speak of discipline as discipline.

“Friends, the Lord was once staying at Rājagaha in the Bamboo Grove at the squirrels’ feeding place. Now at that time,² friends, in the king’s private quarters this conversation arose among the king’s assembly as they were gathered together and sitting down: ‘Gold and silver are allowable for the recluses, sons of the Sakyans; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans consent (to accept) gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans receive gold and silver.’ Now at that time, friends, a village headman, Maṇicūḷaka, was sitting down in that assembly. Then, friends, Maṇicūḷaka, the village headman, spoke thus to that assembly: ‘Do not, masters, speak thus. Gold and silver are not allowable to recluses, sons of the Sakyans; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not consent (to accept) gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not receive gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not use gold and silver, they have done with gold and silver.’ And, friends, Maṇicūḷaka, the village headman, was able to convince that assembly. Then, friends, Maṇicūḷaka the village headman, having convinced that assembly approached the Lord; having approached, having greeted the Lord, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, Maṇicūḷaka the village headman, spoke thus to the Lord: ‘Now, Lord, in the king’s private quarters ...³ I was able, Lord, to convince that assembly. I hope⁴ that I, Lord, maintaining thus, am one who asserts (fairly) what has been affirmed, and am not misrepresenting the Lord by what is not fact, but am maintaining a doctrine which conforms to his doctrine, and that

Kd.22.1.4

BD.5.411

Vin.2.297

¹ vaḍḍhenti kaṭasiṃ. Cf. Ud.6.8 icc’ete ubho antā kaṭasiṃvaḍḍhanā kaṭasiyo diṭṭhī vaḍḍhenti; also Thig.502 kaṭasiṃ vaḍḍhente; and the line above, from “they swell” to the end, with Thag.456 which however for our ādiyanti (take on) reads ācinanti (accumulate). ² As at SN.iv.325.

³ The whole is repeated in the text. ⁴ This speech occurs in almost identical terms at Kd.6.31.4; see also SN.iii.6, SN.iv.51, SN.iv.340, SN.iv.381; AN.i.161; cf. AN.ii.31, AN.iii.4, DN.i.161.

no one who is a fellow dhamma-man, a holder of (his) views, comes to a position incurring blame.’

“Certainly you, village headman, maintaining thus, are one who asserts (fairly) what I have affirmed, and are not misrepresenting me by what is not fact, but are maintaining a doctrine which conforms to my doctrine, and no one who is a fellow dhamma-man, a holder of (my) views, comes to a position incurring blame. For, village headman, gold and silver are not allowable to recluses, sons of the Sakyans; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not consent (to accept) gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not receive gold and silver; the recluses, sons of the Sakyans do not use gold and silver, they have done with gold and silver. To whoever, village headman, gold and silver are allowable to him also are allowable the five strands of sense-pleasures; to whoever the five strands of sense-pleasures are allowable, certainly you may understand, village headman, (this to be) not the dhamma of recluses,¹ not the dhamma of sons of the Sakyans. Although I, village headman, spoke thus: Grass may be looked about for by one who needs grass; wood may be looked about for by one who needs wood; a wagon may be looked about for by one who needs a wagon; a man may be looked about for by one who needs a man²—yet I, village headman, have never said in any way that gold and silver may be consented to or looked about for.’ It is for speaking thus that it is said that I am reviling and abusing venerable lay-followers who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma, in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, in that I speak of discipline as discipline.

“Once, friends, when the Lord was in Rājagaha, as before, he objected in connection with Upananda, the son of the Sakyans, to gold and silver and laid down a rule of training.³ It is for speaking thus that it is said that I am reviling and abusing venerable lay-followers who are faithful and believing, and that I afford little satisfaction in that I speak of not-dhamma as not-dhamma, in that I speak of dhamma as dhamma, in that I speak of not-discipline as not-discipline, in that I speak of discipline as discipline.”

¹ samaṇadhamma, recluses’ dhamma, mentioned also at AN.iii.371. ² The Mañicūla-sutta of SN.iv.325–SN.iv.327 stops here. ³ See Bu-NP.18.

When he had spoken thus the lay-followers of Vesālī spoke thus to Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā: “Honoured sir, master Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is alone a recluse, a son of the Sakyans; these, one and all, are not recluses, not sons of the Sakyans. Honoured sir, let master Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, stay in Vesālī and we will make an effort in regard to the requisites of robes, almsfood, lodgings, medicines for the sick.”

BD.5.413

Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, having convinced the lay-followers of Vesālī, went to a monastery together with the monk who was his companion messenger.

Kd.22.1.7

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī asked the monk who was the companion messenger, saying: “Your reverence, have the lay-followers of Vesālī been asked for forgiveness by Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā?”

“Your reverences, evil has been done to us; Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is alone regarded as¹ a recluse, a son of the Sakyans; we, one and all, are regarded as not recluses, not sons of the Sakyans.”

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, saying: “Your reverences, this Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, not agreed upon by us, has given information² to householders. Come, let us carry out a (formal) act of suspension³ against him.” And these gathered together desirous of carrying out a (formal) act of suspension against him. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, having risen above the ground, reappeared at Kosambī. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, sent a messenger to the monks of Pāvā⁴ and (to those) of the southern region of Avantī,⁵ saying:

“Let the venerable ones come, we must attend to this legal question before what is not dhamma shines forth and dhamma is withheld, (before) what is not discipline shines forth and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble, (before) those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”⁶

Kd.22.1.8

¹ kata, literally made. ² pakāseti. Cf. Kd.17.3.2ff. ³ ukkhepaniyakamma. See Kd.11.25.

⁴ Mentioned at Vin.1.253, and called there and above Pāṭheyyakā. See BD.4.351, n. Vin-a.1105 calls Pāṭheyyaṃ (variant reading Pāveyyaṃ) a kingdom to the west of Kosala, which will no doubt account for the “western country” of Vinaya Texts iii.394. ⁵ See Vin.1.195ff. ⁶ As at Kd.11.1.1.

BD.5.414 Now at that time the venerable Sambhūta,¹ a wearer of coarse hempen cloth,² was staying on Ahogaṅgā mountain slope. Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, approached Ahogaṅgā mountain slope and the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, spoke thus to the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth:

“Honoured sir, these monks, Vajjis of Vesālī, are promulgating ten points:³ the practice concerning a horn for salt is allowable; the practice as to five finger-breadths is allowable; the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ is allowable; the practice concerning residences is allowable; the practice concerning assent is allowable; the practice concerning what is customary is allowable; the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk is allowable; it is allowable to drink unfermented toddy; a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border is allowable; gold and silver are allowable. Come, honoured sir, we must attend to this legal question before what is not dhamma shines forth and dhamma is withheld, (before) what is not discipline shines forth and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble, (before) those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”

Vin.2.299

“Very well, your reverence,” the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, answered the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā in assent. Then as many as sixty monks of Pāvā, all forest-dwellers, all almsmen, all rag-robe wearers, all wearers of the three robes,⁴ one and all men perfected,⁵ gathered together on Ahogaṅgā mountain slope; and as many as eighty-eight monks of the southern region of Avantī, mostly forest-dwellers, mostly almsmen, mostly rag-robe wearers, mostly wearers of the three robes, and one and all men perfected, gathered together on Ahogaṅgā mountain slope.

Kd.22.1.9

BD.5.415

¹ Verses at Thag.291-Thag.294. See Thag-a.ii.122ff. Mentioned with Sāḷha, Revata, and Yasa as Ānanda’s pupils, Vin-a.34f. ² sāṇavāsīn. On sāṇa see BD.2.143, n.3. ³ As at Kd.22.1.1.

⁴ For references to these four ascetic practices see notes at BD.4.351. ⁵ They are not called this at Vin.1.253.

Then as these monks who were elders were considering, it occurred to them: “Now, this legal question is hard and troublesome. How can we acquire a faction through which we could be stronger in regard to this legal question?” Now at that time the venerable Revata¹ was staying in Soreyya. He had heard much, he was one to whom the tradition had been handed down, he was an expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the headings; wise, experienced, clever; conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training.² Then it occurred to the monks who were elders:

“This venerable Revata is staying in Soreyya. He has heard much ... desirous of training. If we could acquire the venerable Revata for the faction, thus could we be stronger in regard to this legal question.”

Then the venerable Revata, through the condition of deva-like hearing which was purified, surpassing that of men, heard these monks who were elders as they were considering. And having heard them, it occurred to him: “This legal question is hard and troublesome, yet it is not suitable for me to hold back from a legal question like this. But these monks are coming now. I will get no comfort crowded up by them. Suppose that I should go away beforehand?”

Then the venerable Revata went from Soreyya to Saṃkassa. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Soreyya, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “The venerable Revata has gone to Saṃkassa.” Then the venerable Revata went from Saṃkassato Kaṇṇakujja. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Saṃkassa, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Kaṇṇakujja.” Then the venerable Revata went from Kaṇṇakujja to Udumbara. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Kaṇṇakujja, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Udumbara.” Then the venerable Revata went from Udumbara to Aggaḷapura. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Udumbara, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Aggaḷapura.” Then the venerable Revata went from Aggaḷapura to Sahajāti. Then the monks who were elders, having arrived at Aggaḷapura, asked: “Where is the venerable Revata?” They spoke thus: “This venerable Revata has gone to Sahajāti.” Then the monks who were elders met the venerable Revata at Sahajāti.

Vin.2.300

BD.5.416

¹ See Mahāvamsa iv.57, Mahāvamsa iv.60; cf. Dīpavamsa iv.49, Vin-a.i.33f. ² Stock, as at Vin.1.127, Vin.2.8; cf. AN.i.117, AN.ii.147, AN.iii.179.

Kd.22.1.10

Then the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, spoke thus to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā: “Your reverence, this venerable Revata has heard much, he is one to whom the tradition has been handed down, he is an expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the headings; wise, experienced, clever; conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. If we were to ask the venerable Revata a question, the venerable Revata would be capable of spending a whole night over just the one question. But now the venerable Revata will call upon a monk who is a pupil and a plain-song repeater.¹ Do you, when that monk has completed the plain-song intonation, having approached the venerable Revata, ask him about these ten points.”

“Very well, honoured sir,” the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, answered the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, in assent. Then the venerable Revata called upon the monk who was a pupil and a plain-song repeater. Then when that monk had completed the plain-song intonation, the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, approached the venerable Revata; having approached, having greeted the venerable Revata, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, spoke thus to the venerable Revata:

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning a horn for salt allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning a horn for salt?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to carry about salt in a horn, thinking, ‘I will enjoy whatever may be unsalted?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning two finger-breadths allowable?”

BD.5.417

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning two finger-breadths?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to eat a meal at the wrong time when the shadow has passed beyond two finger-breadths?”

¹ sarabhāṇaka. See note above, BD.5.146.

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning ‘among the villages’?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking, ‘I will go now among the villages,’ having eaten, being satisfied, to eat a meal that is not left over?”¹

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning residences allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning residences?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for several residences belonging to the same boundary to carry out various Observances?”

“Your reverences, it is not allowable.”

Vin.2.301

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning assent allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning assent?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for an incomplete Order to carry out a (formal) act, thinking, ‘We will advise monks who arrive?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning what is customary² allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning what is customary?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking, ‘This is habitually done³ by my preceptor, this is habitually done by my teacher,’ to conduct oneself according to that?”

“Your reverence, the practice concerning what is customary is sometimes allowable, sometimes not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk allowable?”

BD.5.418

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning unchurned buttermilk?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, having eaten, being satisfied, to drink whatever is milk that is not left over but which has passed the stage of being milk (although) it has not arrived at the stage of being curds?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink unfermented toddy?”

¹ See Bu-Pc.35, and BD.2.328. ² āciṇṇakappa. Cf. Vin.1.79 (Kd.1.51.1). Dīpavaṃsa 4.47, Dīpavaṃsa 5.18. ³ ajjhāciṇṇa, as at Kd.14.5.1.

“What, your reverence, is this toddy?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink whatever is fermented liquor¹ (but) which has not fermented and has not arrived at the stage of being strong drink?”²

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, is a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border³ allowable?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, are gold and silver allowable?”

“Your reverence, they are not allowable.”

“Honoured sir, these monks who are Vajjis of Vesālī are promulgating these ten points in Vesālī. Come, honoured sir, we must attend to this legal question before what is not dhamma shines forth and dhamma is withheld, (before) what is not discipline shines forth and discipline is withheld, before those who speak what is not dhamma become strong and those who speak dhamma become feeble (before) those who speak what is not discipline become strong and those who speak discipline become feeble.”

“Very well, your reverence,” the venerable Revata answered the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā in assent.

The First Portion for Repeating

SECOND RECITATION SECTION

The monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī heard: “They say that Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, is willing to attend to this legal question, is looking about for a faction, and they say that he is acquiring a faction.” Then it occurred to the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī: “This legal question is hard and troublesome. How could we acquire a faction through which we could be stronger in regard to this legal question?” Then it occurred to the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī: “This venerable Revata is one who has heard much, one to whom the tradition has been handed down, he is expert in dhamma, expert in discipline, expert in the headings; he is wise, experienced, clever; conscientious, scrupulous, desirous of training. If we could acquire the venerable Revata for the faction, thus could we be stronger in regard to this legal question.”

BD.5.419

¹ surā. Cf. Bu-Pc.51. ² majja. See BD.2.385, n.1. ³ Cf. definition at Vin.3.232, Vin.4.123, Vin.4.171. See BD.2.87, n.5.

Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesāli prepared abundant requisites for recluses—bowls and robes and pieces of cloth to sit upon and needle-cases and waistbands and strainers and regulation water-pots. Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesāli, taking these requisites of recluses, went in a boat upstream¹ to Sahājati; having disembarked from the boat, they participated in a meal at the root of a certain tree.

Vin.2.302

Kd.22.2.2

Then as the venerable Sālha² was meditating in private a reasoning arose in his mind thus: “Which now are the speakers of dhamma—the monks from the East or those from Pāvā?” Then as the venerable Sālha was considering dhamma and discipline it occurred to him: “The monks from the East are not speakers of dhamma; the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma.” Then a certain devatā of the Pure Abodes, knowing by mind the reasoning in the mind of the venerable Sālha, as a strong man might stretch out his bent back arm or might bend back his outstretched arm, even so, vanishing from the devas of the Pure Abodes, did she appear before the venerable Sālha. Then that devatā spoke thus to the venerable Sālha: “It is right, honoured Sālha, the monks from the East are not speakers of dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma. Well then, revered Sālha, stand firm according to dhamma.”³

“Both formerly and now I, devatā, have stood firm according to dhamma. Nevertheless I am not making known my views until I may be agreed upon in regard to this legal question.”

Kd.22.2.3

BD.5.420

Then those monks who were Vajjis of Vesāli, taking those requisites for recluses, approached the venerable Revata; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Revata: “Honoured sir, let the Order accept these requisites for recluses—bowls and robes and pieces of cloth to sit upon and needle-cases and waistbands and strainers and regulation water-pots.”

He said: “No, your reverences, I am complete as to the three robes” (for)

¹ ujjavimsu. ² Ānanda’s pupil, Vin-a.34–Vin-a.35. ³ Or, according to the rule, yathā-dhammo tathā tiṭṭhāhi. Cf. Mahāvamsa iv.29 dhamme tiṭṭha, stand firm in dhamma.

he did not want to accept. Now at that time a monk named Uttara, of twenty years' standing was the venerable Revata's attendant. Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī approached the venerable Uttara; having approached, they spoke thus to the venerable Uttara: "Let the venerable Uttara accept these requisites for recluses—bowls and ... regulation water-pots."

He said: "No, your reverences, I am complete as to the three robes," (for) he did not want to accept. They said: "Reverend Uttara, people used to bring requisites for recluses to the Lord. If the Lord accepted them, they were glad; but if the Lord did not accept them, they brought them to the venerable Ānanda, saying: 'Honoured sir, let the elder accept these requisites for recluses, thus will this (gift) be as though accepted by the Lord.' Let the venerable Uttara accept these requisites of recluses, thus will this (gift) be as though accepted by the elder."

Vin.2.303

Then the venerable Uttara, being pressed by the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī, took one robe, saying: "Let the reverend ones tell me what they have need of."

"Let the venerable Uttara say this much to the elder: 'Honoured sir, let the elder say this much in the midst of the Order: Awakened Ones, Lords, arise in the Eastern districts, the monks from the East are speakers of dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of what is not dhamma'."

"Very well, your reverences," and the venerable Uttara, having answered the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī in assent, approached the venerable Revata; having approached, he spoke thus to the venerable Revata: "Honoured sir, let the elder say this much in the midst of the Order: Awakened Ones, Lords, arise in the Eastern districts, the monks from the East are speakers of dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of what is not dhamma."

BD.5.421

Saying: "You, monk, are inciting me to what is not dhamma," the elder dismissed¹ the venerable Uttara. Then the monks who were Vajjis of Vesālī spoke thus to the venerable Uttara: "What, reverend Uttara, did the elder say?"

"Evil has been done to us, your reverences. Saying, 'You, monk, are inciting me to what is not dhamma,' the elder dismissed me."

¹ paṇāmesi. Cf. Kd.1.27.2 where this word is used of the formal dismissal by a preceptor of the one who shares his cell. See also Mahāvāṇsa iv.30.

“Are not you, your reverence, a senior of twenty years’ standing?”

“Yes, your reverences.”

“Then we shall take up guidance under (you as) teacher.”¹

Then the Order assembled wishing to investigate that legal question. The venerable Revata informed the Order, saying: “Your reverences, let the Order listen to me. If we were to settle that legal question here, it might be that the monks who had taken it up originally might open it up for a further (formal) act.² If it seems right to the Order, let the Order settle this legal question wherever this legal question arose.”

Kd.22.2.4

Then the monks who were elders went to Vesālī willing to investigate that legal question. Now at that time Sabbakāmin³ was the name of an elder of the Order, (the oldest) on earth;⁴ it was a hundred and twenty years since his ordination; he had shared the cell of the venerable Ānanda, and he was staying at Vesālī. Then the venerable Revata spoke thus to the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth: “I, your reverence, am going up to the dwelling-place where the venerable Sabbākamin is staying. Do you, having gone up early to the venerable Sabbākamin, ask him about these ten points.”

“Very well, honoured sir,” the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, answered the venerable Revata in assent. Then the venerable Revata went up to that dwelling place where the venerable Sabbakāmin was staying. A lodging was made ready for the venerable Sabbakāmin in an inner room, and one for the venerable Revata on the veranda of the inner room. Then the venerable Revata, thinking: “I This elder is old, but he is not lying down,” did not lie down to sleep. The venerable Sabbakāmin, thinking: “This incoming monk is tired, but he is not lying down,” did not lie down to sleep.

BD.5.422

Vin.2.304

Kd.22.2.5

¹ garunissaya. Garu no doubt=guru. On nissaya see Kd.1.73. ² See Bu-Pc.63. ³ *Psalm*s of the Brethren p.226, n.1 suggests that the Sabbakāma of the Theragāthā is the same as the Sabbakāmin of Vinaya Dictionary of Pali Proper Names identifies the two. Called Sabbakāmin at Vin-a.i.34. He took a vow to purify the teaching of some Buddha in a birth during the time of Padumuttara Buddha. ⁴ pathavyā saṅghathero.

Then at the end of the night towards dawn, the venerable Sabbakāmin spoke thus to the venerable Revata: “Because of what abiding do you, dear,¹ abide now in the fullness thereof?”

“Because of abiding in loving-kindness, do I, honoured sir, abide now in the fullness thereof.”

“They say that you, dear, because of abiding in friendship² now abide in the fullness thereof. This abiding in friendship, beloved, this is loving-kindness.”

“Formerly, honoured sir, when I was a householder loving-kindness was practised by me, and because of that abiding in loving-kindness I now abide in the fullness thereof, and moreover perfection was attained by me long ago. Honoured sir, because of what abiding does the elder now abide in the fullness thereof?”

“Because of abiding in (the concept of) emptiness³ do I, beloved, now abide in the fullness thereof.”

BD.5.423

“They say that the elder, honoured sir, because of the abiding of great men⁴ now abides in the fullness thereof. This abiding of great men, honoured sir, this is (the concept of) emptiness.”⁵

Kd.22.2.6

“Formerly, beloved, when I was a householder emptiness was practised by me, and because of that abiding in emptiness I now abide in the fullness thereof, and moreover perfection was attained by me long ago.”

Then⁶ this chance talk of the monks who were elders was interrupted, because the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, ar-

¹ bhummi, a term of affection, says Vin-a.1298. ² kullaka. Vin-a.1298 explains by uttāna, stretched; clear. Kullaka is probably derived from kaulya = Pali kulla, belonging to the family, and possibly meaning that loving-kindness has been extended to others and that they have been suffused with his loving-kindness of mind. ³ suññatāvihāra. Cf. MN.iii.104, MN.iii.294. MN-a.v.105 explains as abiding in the attainment of the fruit of emptiness—or phala-samāpatti may mean “sustained fruition”; therefore “as abiding in the sustained fruition of emptiness.” On suññatā see especially Buddhist Psychological Ethics, p.91, n.2; Atthasālinī 221–Atthasālinī 225; Kv.iii.2. At Atthasālinī 221 it is said that suññatā is applied to the purification formula, that it is a name of the transcendental Way, and that when one sees the sankhāras as “void” of self this insight is called suññatā. “Voidness” or “Emptiness” is the usual translation of suññatā, and must remain until something better is found. ⁴ mahāpurisavihāra. Cf. MN.iii.294. MN-a.v.106 explains as the abiding of great men: buddhas, individual buddhas, tathāgatas and great disciples. ⁵ This phrase occurs at MN.iii.294.

⁶ carahi, as at Vin.2.292.

rived there. Then the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, approached the venerable Sabbakāmin; having approached, having greeted the venerable Sabbakāmin, he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, spoke thus to the venerable Sabbakāmin:

“Honoured sir, these monks who are Vajjis of Vesāli are promulgating ten points: the practice concerning a horn for salt is allowable ... gold and silver are allowable. Honoured sir, much dhamma, and discipline has been mastered¹ by the elder at the feet² of a preceptor. As, honoured sir, the elder was considering dhamma and discipline, what occurred to him? Who are the speakers of dhamma—the monks from the East or those of Pāvā?”

“By you too, your reverence, has much dhamma and discipline been mastered at the feet of a preceptor. As you, your reverence, were considering dhamma and discipline, what occurred to you? Who are the speakers of dhamma—the monks from the East or those of Pāvā?”

“As I, honoured sir, was considering dhamma and discipline, this occurred to me: ‘the monks from the East are speakers of what is not dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma.’ Nevertheless I am not making known my views until I am agreed upon in regard to this legal question.”

“As I too, your reverence, was considering dhamma and discipline, this occurred to me: the monks from the East are speakers of what is not dhamma, the monks of Pāvā are speakers of dhamma. Nevertheless I am not making known my views until I am agreed upon in regard to this legal question.”

Vin.2.305

BD.5.424

Kd.22.2.7

Then the Order assembled, willing to investigate that legal question. But while they were investigating that legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. Then the venerable Revata informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may settle this legal question by means of a referendum.”³ He selected four monks from the East, four monks from Pāvā—of the Eastern monks the venerable Sabbakāmin and the venerable Sāḷha and the venerable Khujjasobhita¹ and the venerable Vāsabhagāmika; of the monks from Pāvā the venerable Revata and the venerable Sambhūta, the wearer of coarse hempen cloth, and the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākaṇḍakā, and the venerable Sumana.² Then the venerable Revata informed the Order, saying:

¹ As at Kd.21.1.2. ² mūle. ³ Cf. Kd.14.14.19 where the proceeding to be used in such an emergency as arose and is recorded in subsequent sentence above, is laid down.

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question both endless disputations arose and of not one speech was the meaning clear. If it seems right to the Order, the Order may agree upon the four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. This is the motion. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. While we were investigating this legal question ... was the meaning clear. The Order is agreeing upon the four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. If the agreement upon the four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā to settle this legal question by means of a referendum is pleasing to the venerable ones, they should be silent; he to whom it is not pleasing should speak. The four monks from the East and the four monks from Pāvā are agreed upon by the Order to settle this legal question by means of a referendum. It is pleasing to the Order, therefore it is silent. Thus do I understand this.”

BD.5.425

Now at that time Ajita was the name of a monk of ten years' standing; he was a reciter of the Pātimokkha for the Order. Then the Order further agreed upon the venerable Ajita as appointer of seats for the monks who were elders.³ Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “Now where should we settle this legal question?” Then it occurred to the monks who were elders: “This Vālika monastery⁴ is pleasing, with little noise, with little disturbance. Suppose that we should settle this legal question in Vālika monastery?” Then the monks who were elders went to Vālika monastery, willing to investigate that legal question.

Vin.2.306

¹ Probably not to be identified with the thera of the same name at Thag.234, as perhaps suggested at Mahāvamsa iv.57. ² Names given at Vin-a.i.34-Vin-a.i.35; but there classified by reason of their being cell-sharers of Ānanda or Anuruddha. Cf. Mahāvamsa iv.47-Mahāvamsa iv.49. ³ Elders were allowed to sit down while the Pātimokkha was being recited. ⁴ See also Mahāvamsa iv.50; but Dīpavamsa v.29 says the Ten Points were settled at the Gabled Hall (Vesālī).

Kd.22.2.8

Then the venerable Revata informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I can ask the venerable Sabbakāmin about discipline.” Then the venerable Sabbakāmin informed the Order, saying: “Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. If it seems right to the Order, I, questioned about discipline by the venerable Revata, can answer.” Then the venerable Revata spoke thus to the venerable Sabbakāmin:

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning a horn for salt allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning a horn for salt?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to carry about salt in a horn, thinking: ‘I will enjoy whatever may be unsalted?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“In Sāvattthī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating what has been stored.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This first point, investigated by the Order, this is a point that is against dhamma, against discipline, not of the Teacher’s instruction. This is the first (voting-) ticket that I cast.

BD.5.426

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning two finger-breadths allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning two finger-breadths?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to eat a meal at the wrong time if the shadow has passed beyond two finger-breadths?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Rājagaha, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”²

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating at the wrong time.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This second point ... This is the second (voting-) ticket that I cast.

¹ Bu-Pc.38. ² Bu-Pc.37.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning ‘among the villages’ allowable?”

What, your reverence, is this practice concerning ‘among the villages?’”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking: ‘I will go now among the villages,’ having eaten, being satisfied, to eat a meal that is not left over?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Sāvattthī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating what is not left over.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This third point ... This is the third (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning residences allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning residences?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for several residences belonging to the same boundary to carry out various Observances?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“In Rājagaha, in what is connected with the Observance.”²

“What offence does one fall into?”

An offence of wrong-doing for going beyond discipline.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This fourth point ... This is the fourth (voting-) ticket that I cast.”

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning assent allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is the practice concerning assent?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable for an incomplete Order to carry out a (formal) act, thinking: ‘We will advise monks who arrive?’”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“In a matter of discipline on things pertaining to (the monks of) Campā.”³

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of wrong-doing for going beyond discipline.”

BD.5.427

Vin.2.307

¹ Bu-Pc.35. ² Kd.2.8.3. Uposathasamīyutta; samīyutta here being used, as noted at Vinaya Texts iii.410, n.2 for khandhaka, section. ³ Kd.9.3.5. Campeyyake vinayavatthusmiri. Vin. a.1299 here explains that this matter of discipline is handed down in the Campeyyakkhandhaka.

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This fifth point ... This is the fifth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning what is customary allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is this practice concerning what is customary?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable, thinking: ‘This is what is habitually done by my preceptor, this is what is habitually done by my teacher,’ to conduct oneself according to that?”

“Your reverence, the practice concerning what is customary is sometimes allowable, sometimes not allowable.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This sixth point ... This is the sixth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk allowable?”

“What, your reverence, is the practice concerning unchurned buttermilk?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable having eaten, being satisfied, to drink whatever is milk that is not left over but which has passed the stage of being milk (although) it has not arrived at the stage of being curds?”

BD.5.428

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Sāvattthī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for eating what was not left over.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This seventh point ... This is the seventh (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink unfermented toddy?”

“What, your reverence, is this unfermented toddy?”

“Honoured sir, is it allowable to drink whatever is fermented liquor, but which has not fermented and has not arrived at the stage of being strong drink?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Kosambī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”²

¹ Bu-Pc.35. ² Bu-Pc.51.

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for drinking fermented liquor and spirits.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This eighth point ... This is the eighth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, is a piece of cloth to sit upon that has no border allowable?”

“Your reverence, it is not allowable.”

“Where was it objected to?”

“At Sāvattthī, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”¹

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation involving cutting down.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This ninth point ... This is the ninth (voting-) ticket that I cast.

“Honoured sir, are gold and silver allowable?”

“Your reverence, they are not allowable.”

“Where were they objected to?”

“At Rājagaha, in the Suttavibhaṅga.”²

“What offence does one fall into?”

“An offence of expiation for accepting gold and silver.”

“Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. This tenth point, investigated by the Order, this is a matter that is against dhamma, against discipline, not of the Teacher’s instruction. This is the tenth (voting-) ticket that I cast. Honoured sirs, let the Order listen to me. These ten points, investigated by the Order, these are matters that are against dhamma, against discipline, not of the Teacher’s instruction.”

“This legal question, your reverence, is concluded, and being settled is well settled. Nevertheless you, your reverence, may also question me in the midst of the Order³ on these ten points in order to convince these monks.”⁴

So the venerable Revata also questioned the venerable Sabbakāmin in the midst of the Order on these ten points, and the venerable Sabbakāmin, being questioned, answered.

Now because⁵ seven hundred monks—not one less and not one more—were ¹ Bu-Pc.89. ² Bu-NP.18 ³ Not only, that is, before the special committee. ⁴ bhikkhūnaṃ saññattiyā; cf. Kd.14.14.26, Kd.17.4.1; also Kd.17.3.14. ⁵ Quoted at Vin-a.i.34.

at this chanting of the discipline, this chanting of the discipline is called “that of the Seven Hundred.”¹

Told is the Twelfth Section: that on the Seven Hundred.

Vin.2.308

IN THIS SECTION ARE TWENTY-FIVE ITEMS. THIS IS ITS KEY

Ten points, having filled, formal act, entered with a messenger, the four, and on gold (and silver) again² and Kosambī, the monks of Pāvā, /
The way to Soreyya, Saṃkāsa, Kaṇṇakujja, Udumbara, and Sahamjāti,³ he called upon, he heard, “How could we?” / Bowl (and) they went in a boat upstream,⁴ he was in private,⁵ they used to bring this teacher (and) the Order and Vesālī, loving-kindness, the Order, referendum.

BD.5.430

Told is the Lesser Division.⁶

Vin.2.309

¹ Cf. Kd.21.1.16, the Five Hundred. This second recital, that of the Seven Hundred, is also called the Recital of Yasatthera at AN-a.ii.10=MN-a.iv.114. ² Oldenberg’s text and Siamese and Sinhalese editions read puna rūpañ ca. Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.330) antepurañ ca (see Kd.22.1.4), but I think it may be an abbreviation for jātarūparajata, the subject of Kd.22.1.4, Kd.22.1.5. ³ Oldenberg’s text: Sahamjāti ca, majjhesi, assosi; Sinhalese edition: Aggaḷaṃ Sahajātaṃ ca assosi; Siamese edition: as Oldenberg’s text but reading Sahajātim. Oldenberg suggests (Vin.2.330) ajjhesi (in place of majjhesi). The verb in Kd.22.1.10 is ajjhesissati. ⁴ Oldenberg’s text: sa ujjī. Sinhalese edition ujjavī. ⁵ Oldenberg’s text: dūraho pi udāmassa / dārukam, saṃgho; Sinhalese and Siamese editions: raho’ si upanāma’ āyam garusaṃgho. ⁶ Here ends Oldenberg’s Vol. II.

Volume IV

Parivāra

Contents of Volume

Translator's Introduction	2248
1.1. Monks' Analysis: on the Laying-Down-Where	2277
Pārājika2277
Monks' Pārājika 12277
Monks' Pārājika 22283
Monks' Pārājika 32284
Monks' Pārājika 42284
Saṅghādisesa2285
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 12285
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 22287
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 32287
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 42287
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 52288
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 62288
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 72289
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 82289
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 92289
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 102290
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 112290
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 122290
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 132291
Monks' Aniyata 12292

Monks' Aniyata 22293
Nissaggiya Pācittiya2293
Division 1: on kaṭhina cloth2293
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 12293
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 22294
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 32294
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 42295
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 52295
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 62295
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 72296
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 82296
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 92296
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 102297
Division 2: on silk2297
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 112297
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 122297
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 132298
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 142298
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 152298
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 162299
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 172299
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 182299
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 19	2300
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 20	2300
Division 3: on a bowl	2300
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 21	2300
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 222301
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 232301
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 242301
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 252302
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 262302
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 272302
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 282303
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 292303

Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 302303
Pācittiya	2304
Division 1: on lying	2304
Monks' Pācittiya 1	2304
Monks' Pācittiya 22305
Monks' Pācittiya 32305
Monks' Pācittiya 42305
Monks' Pācittiya 52305
Monks' Pācittiya 6	2306
Monks' Pācittiya 7	2306
Monks' Pācittiya 8	2306
Monks' Pācittiya 9	2306
Monks' Pācittiya 102307
Division 2: on vegetable growth2307
Monks' Pācittiya 112307
Monks' Pācittiya 122307
Monks' Pācittiya 132307
Monks' Pācittiya 14	2308
Monks' Pācittiya 15	2308
Monks' Pācittiya 16	2308
Monks' Pācittiya 17	2309
Monks' Pācittiya 18	2309
Monks' Pācittiya 19	2309
Monks' Pācittiya 20	2309
Division 3: on Exhortation2310
Monks' Pācittiya 212310
Monks' Pācittiya 222310
Monks' Pācittiya 232310
Monks' Pācittiya 24	2311
Monks' Pācittiya 25	2311
Monks' Pācittiya 26	2311
Monks' Pācittiya 27	2311
Monks' Pācittiya 282312
Monks' Pācittiya 292312

Monks' Pācittiya 302312
Division 4: on Food2312
Monks' Pācittiya 312312
Monks' Pācittiya 322313
Monks' Pācittiya 332313
Monks' Pācittiya 342313
Monks' Pācittiya 352313
Monks' Pācittiya 362314
Monks' Pācittiya 372314
Monks' Pācittiya 382314
Monks' Pācittiya 392314
Monks' Pācittiya 402315
Division 5: on an Unclothed Ascetic2315
Monks' Pācittiya 412315
Monks' Pācittiya 422315
Monks' Pācittiya 432316
Monks' Pācittiya 442316
Monks' Pācittiya 452316
Monks' Pācittiya 462316
Monks' Pācittiya 472317
Monks' Pācittiya 482317
Monks' Pācittiya 492317
Monks' Pācittiya 502317
Division 6: on Fermented Liquor and Spirits2318
Monks' Pācittiya 512318
Monks' Pācittiya 522318
Monks' Pācittiya 532318
Monks' Pācittiya 542318
Monks' Pācittiya 552319
Monks' Pācittiya 562319
Monks' Pācittiya 572319
Monks' Pācittiya 582319
Monks' Pācittiya 592320
Monks' Pācittiya 602320

Division 7: on What Contains Living Things	2320
Monks' Pācittiya 61	2320
Monks' Pācittiya 62	2320
Monks' Pācittiya 63	2321
Monks' Pācittiya 64	2321
Monks' Pācittiya 65	2321
Monks' Pācittiya 66	2321
Monks' Pācittiya 67	2322
Monks' Pācittiya 68	2322
Monks' Pācittiya 69	2322
Division 8: on Regarding a Rule	2323
Monks' Pācittiya 71	2323
Monks' Pācittiya 72	2323
Monks' Pācittiya 73	2323
Monks' Pācittiya 74	2323
Monks' Pācittiya 75	2324
Monks' Pācittiya 76	2324
Monks' Pācittiya 77	2324
Monks' Pācittiya 78	2324
Monks' Pācittiya 79	2324
Monks' Pācittiya 80	2325
Monks' Pācittiya 81	2325
Monks' Pācittiya 82	2325
Division 9: on a King	2326
Monks' Pācittiya 83	2326
Monks' Pācittiya 84	2326
Monks' Pācittiya 85	2326
Monks' Pācittiya 86	2326
Monks' Pācittiya 87	2327
Monks' Pācittiya 88	2327
Monks' Pācittiya 89	2327
Monks' Pācittiya 90	2327
Monks' Pācittiya 91	2327
Monks' Pācittiya 92	2328

Pātidesanīya2329
Monks' Pātidesanīya 12329
Monks' Pātidesanīya 22330
Monks' Pātidesanīya 32330
Monks' Pātidesanīya 42330
Sekhiya2331
Division 1: on All Round2331
Monks' Sekhiya 12331
Monks' Sekhiya 22331
Monks' Sekhiya 3, 42331
Monks' Sekhiya 4, 52332
Monks' Sekhiya 5, 62332
Monks' Sekhiya 7, 82332
Monks' Sekhiya 9, 102332
Division 2: on Loud Laughter2332
Monks' Sekhiya 11, 122332
Monks' Sekhiya 13, 142332
Monks' Sekhiya 15, 162333
Monks' Sekhiya 17, 182333
Monks' Sekhiya 19, 202333
Division 3: on Arms Akimbo2333
Monks' Sekhiya 21, 222333
Monks' Sekhiya 23, 242333
Monks' Sekhiya 252333
Monks' Sekhiya 262334
Monks' Sekhiya 272334
Monks' Sekhiya 282334
Monks' Sekhiya 292334
Monks' Sekhiya 302334
Division 4: on Almsfood2334
Monks' Sekhiya 312334
Monks' Sekhiya 342334
Monks' Sekhiya 352335
Monks' Sekhiya 362335

Monks' Sekhiya 37	2335
Monks' Sekhiya 38	2335
Monks' Sekhiya 39	2335
Monks' Sekhiya 40	2335
Division 5: on Mouthful	2336
Monks' Sekhiya 41	2336
Monks' Sekhiya 42	2336
Monks' Sekhiya 43	2336
Monks' Sekhiya 44	2336
Division 6: on Hissing	2336
Monks' Sekhiya 51	2336
Monks' Sekhiya 52	2337
Monks' Sekhiya 55	2337
Monks' Sekhiya 56	2337
Monks' Sekhiya 57	2337
Monks' Sekhiya 58	2338
Division 7: on Shoes	2338
Monks' Sekhiya 61–67	2338
Monks' Sekhiya 68–72	2338
Monks' Sekhiya 73	2338
Monks' Sekhiya 74	2339
Monks' Sekhiya 75	2339

1.2. Monks' Analysis: on How Many Offences? 2341

Pārājika	2341
Monks' Pārājika 1	2341
Monks' Pārājika 2	2341
Monks' Pārājika 3	2342
Monks' Pārājika 4	2342
Saṅghādisesa	2342
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 1	2342
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 2	2343
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 3	2343
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 4	2343

Monks' Saṅghādisesa 52344
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 62344
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 72344
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 82344
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 92345
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 102345
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 112345
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 122345
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 132346
Nissaggiya Pācittiya2346
Division 1: on kaṭhina cloth2346
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 12346
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 22346
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 32346
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 42347
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 52347
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 62347
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 72347
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 82347
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 92348
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 102348
Division 2: on silk2348
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 112348
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 122348
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 132348
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 142348
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 152349
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 162349
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 172349
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 182349
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 192349
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 202350
Division 3: on a bowl2350
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 212350

Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 22	2350
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 23	2350
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 24	2350
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 25	2351
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 26	2351
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 27	2351
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 28	2351
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 29	2351
Monks' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 30	2352
Pācittiya	2352
Division 1: on Lying	2352
Monks' Pācittiya 1	2352
Monks' Pācittiya 2	2352
Monks' Pācittiya 3	2353
Monks' Pācittiya 4	2353
Monks' Pācittiya 5	2353
Monks' Pācittiya 6	2353
Monks' Pācittiya 7	2353
Monks' Pācittiya 8	2353
Monks' Pācittiya 9	2354
Monks' Pācittiya 10	2354
Division 2: on Vegetable-growth	2354
Monks' Pācittiya 11	2354
Monks' Pācittiya 12	2354
Monks' Pācittiya 13	2355
Monks' Pācittiya 14	2355
Monks' Pācittiya 15	2355
Monks' Pācittiya 16	2356
Monks' Pācittiya 17	2356
Monks' Pācittiya 18	2356
Monks' Pācittiya 19	2356
Monks' Pācittiya 20	2356
Division 3: on Exhortation	2357
Monks' Pācittiya 21	2357

Monks' Pācittiya 222357
Monks' Pācittiya 232357
Monks' Pācittiya 242357
Monks' Pācittiya 252358
Monks' Pācittiya 262358
Monks' Pācittiya 272358
Monks' Pācittiya 282358
Monks' Pācittiya 292358
Monks' Pācittiya 302359
Division 4: on Food2359
Monks' Pācittiya 312359
Monks' Pācittiya 322359
Monks' Pācittiya 332359
Monks' Pācittiya 342359
Monks' Pācittiya 352360
Monks' Pācittiya 362360
Monks' Pācittiya 372360
Monks' Pācittiya 382360
Monks' Pācittiya 392360
Monks' Pācittiya 402360
Division 5: on an Unclothed Ascetic2361
Monks' Pācittiya 412361
Monks' Pācittiya 422361
Monks' Pācittiya 432361
Monks' Pācittiya 442361
Monks' Pācittiya 452361
Monks' Pācittiya 462361
Monks' Pācittiya 472362
Monks' Pācittiya 482362
Monks' Pācittiya 492362
Monks' Pācittiya 502362
Division 6: on Fermented Liquor and Spirits2362
Monks' Pācittiya 512362
Monks' Pācittiya 522363

Monks' Pācittiya 532363
Monks' Pācittiya 542363
Monks' Pācittiya 552363
Monks' Pācittiya 562363
Monks' Pācittiya 572364
Monks' Pācittiya 582364
Monks' Pācittiya 592364
Monks' Pācittiya 602364
Division 7: on What Contains Living Things2364
Monks' Pācittiya 622365
Monks' Pācittiya 632365
Monks' Pācittiya 642365
Monks' Pācittiya 652365
Monks' Pācittiya 662366
Monks' Pācittiya 672366
Monks' Pācittiya 682366
Monks' Pācittiya 692366
Monks' Pācittiya 702366
Division 8: on Regarding a Rule2367
Monks' Pācittiya 712367
Monks' Pācittiya 722367
Monks' Pācittiya 732367
Monks' Pācittiya 742367
Monks' Pācittiya 752367
Monks' Pācittiya 762368
Monks' Pācittiya 772368
Monks' Pācittiya 782368
Monks' Pācittiya 792368
Monks' Pācittiya 802368
Monks' Pācittiya 812369
Monks' Pācittiya 822369
Divison 9: on a King2369
Monks' Pācittiya 832369
Monks' Pācittiya 842369

Monks' Pācittiya 852369
Monks' Pācittiya 862370
Monks' Pācittiya 872370
Monks' Pācittiya 882370
Monks' Pācittiya 892370
Monks' Pācittiya 902370
Monks' Pācittiya 912370
Monks' Pācittiya 922370
Pātidesanīya2371
Monks' Pātidesanīya 12371
Monks' Pātidesanīya 22371
Monks' Pātidesanīya 32371
Monks' Pātidesanīya 42371
Sekhiya2372
Division 1: on All Round2372
Monks' Sekhiya 12372
Monks' Sekhiya 22372
Monks' Sekhiya 3, 42372
Monks' Sekhiya 5, 62372
Monks' Sekhiya 7, 82372
Monks' Sekhiya 9, 102373
Division 2: on Loud Laughter2373
Monks' Sekhiya 11, 122373
Monks' Sekhiya 13, 142373
Monks' Sekhiya 15, 162373
Monks' Sekhiya 17, 182373
Monks' Sekhiya 19, 202373
Division 3: on Arms Akimbo2374
Monks' Sekhiya 212374
Monks' Sekhiya 232374
Monks' Sekhiya 252374
Monks' Sekhiya 262374
Monks' Sekhiya 272374
Monks' Sekhiya 282374

Monks' Sekhiya 292374
Monks' Sekhiya 302374
Division 4: on Almsfood2375
Monks' Sekhiya 312375
Monks' Sekhiya 342375
Monks' Sekhiya 352375
Monks' Sekhiya 362375
Monks' Sekhiya 372375
Monks' Sekhiya 382375
Monks' Sekhiya 392375
Monks' Sekhiya 402375
Division 5: on the Mouthful2376
Monks' Sekhiya 412376
Monks' Sekhiya 422376
Monks' Sekhiya 432376
Monks' Sekhiya 442376
Monks' Sekhiya 45-502376
Division 6: on Hissing2376
Monks' Sekhiya 51-542376
Monks' Sekhiya 552377
Monks' Sekhiya 562377
Monks' Sekhiya 57-602377
Division 7: on Shoes2377
Monks' Sekhiya 61-722377
Monks' Sekhiya 732377
Monks' Sekhiya 742377
Monks' Sekhiya 752378

1.3. Monks' Analysis: on Falling Away 2379

1.4. Monks' Analysis: on Comprised In 2380

1.5. Monks' Analysis: on Origins 2381

1.6. Monks' Analysis: on Legal Questions 2382

1.7. Monks' Analysis: on Deciding	2383
1.8. Monks' Analysis: on Accumulation	2384
1.9. Monks' Analysis: on Laying-Down-Where	2386
Pārājika	2386
Monks' Pārājika 1	2386
Monks' Pārājika 2	2386
Monks' Pārājika 3	2387
Monks' Pārājika 4	2387
Saṅghādisesa	2387
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 1	2387
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 2	2387
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 3	2388
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 4	2388
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 5	2388
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 6	2388
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 7	2388
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 8	2388
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 9	2389
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 10	2389
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 11	2389
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 12	2389
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 13	2389
Sekhiya	2390
Monks' Sekhiya 75	2390
1.10. Monks' Analysis: on How Many Offences?	2391
Monks' Pārājika 1	2391
Monks' Pārājika 2	2391
Monks' Pārājika 3	2391
Monks' Pārājika 4	2392
Saṅghādisesa	2392
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 1	2392
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 2	2392

Monks' Saṅghādisesa 32392
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 42393
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 5–122393
Monks' Saṅghādisesa 132393
Sekhiya2393
Monks' Sekhiya 752393
1.11. Monks' Analysis: on Falling Away	2394
1.12. Monks' Analysis: on Comprised In	2394
1.13. Monks' Analysis: on Origins	2395
1.14. Monks' Analysis: on Legal Questions	2395
1.15. Monks' Analysis: on Deciding	2395
1.16. Monks' Analysis: on Accumulation	2396
2.1. Nuns' Analysis: on Laying-down-Where	2397
Pārājika2397
Nuns' Pārājika 52397
Nuns' Pārājika 62398
Nuns' Pārājika 72399
Nuns' Pārājika 82399
Saṅghādisesa	2400
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 1	2400
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 2	2400
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 32401
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 42401
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 52401
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 6	2402
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 10	2402
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 11	2402
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 12	2403
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 132403

Nissaggiya Pācittiya2403
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 12403
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 22404
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 32404
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 42404
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 52404
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 62404
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 72405
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 82405
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 92405
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 102405
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 112405
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 122406
Pācittiya2406
Division 1: on garlic2406
Nuns' Pācittiya 12406
Nuns' Pācittiya 22406
Nuns' Pācittiya 32407
Nuns' Pācittiya 42407
Nuns' Pācittiya 52407
Nuns' Pācittiya 62407
Nuns' Pācittiya 72408
Nuns' Pācittiya 82408
Nuns' Pācittiya 92408
Nuns' Pācittiya 102408
Division 2: on the Dark of the Night2409
Nuns' Pācittiya 112409
Nuns' Pācittiya 122409
Nuns' Pācittiya 132409
Nuns' Pācittiya 142409
Nuns' Pācittiya 152409
Nuns' Pācittiya 162410
Nuns' Pācittiya 172410
Nuns' Pācittiya 182410

Nuns' Pācittiya 19	2410
Nuns' Pācittiya 20	2411
Division 3: on Bathing	2411
Nuns' Pācittiya 21	2411
Nuns' Pācittiya 22	2411
Nuns' Pācittiya 23	2411
Nuns' Pācittiya 24	2412
Nuns' Pācittiya 25	2412
Nuns' Pācittiya 26	2412
Nuns' Pācittiya 27	2412
Nuns' Pācittiya 28	2412
Nuns' Pācittiya 29	2413
Nuns' Pācittiya 30	2413
Division 4: on Sharing	2413
Nuns' Pācittiya 31	2413
Nuns' Pācittiya 32	2413
Nuns' Pācittiya 33	2414
Nuns' Pācittiya 34	2414
Nuns' Pācittiya 35	2414
Nuns' Pācittiya 36	2414
Nuns' Pācittiya 37	2415
Nuns' Pācittiya 38	2415
Nuns' Pācittiya 39	2415
Nuns' Pācittiya 40	2415
Division 5: on a Picture-Gallery	2415
Nuns' Pācittiya 41	2415
Nuns' Pācittiya 42	2416
Nuns' Pācittiya 43	2416
Nuns' Pācittiya 44	2416
Nuns' Pācittiya 45	2416
Nuns' Pācittiya 46	2417
Nuns' Pācittiya 47	2417
Nuns' Pācittiya 48	2417
Nuns' Pācittiya 49	2417

Nuns' Pācittiya 502417
Division 6: on a Monastery2418
Nuns' Pācittiya 512418
Nuns' Pācittiya 522418
Nuns' Pācittiya 532418
Nuns' Pācittiya 542418
Nuns' Pācittiya 552419
Nuns' Pācittiya 562419
Nuns' Pācittiya 572419
Nuns' Pācittiya 582419
Nuns' Pācittiya 592419
Nuns' Pācittiya 602420
Division 7: on a Pregnant Woman2420
Nuns' Pācittiya 612420
Nuns' Pācittiya 622420
Nuns' Pācittiya 632420
Nuns' Pācittiya 642420
Nuns' Pācittiya 652421
Nuns' Pācittiya 662421
Nuns' Pācittiya 672421
Nuns' Pācittiya 682421
Nuns' Pācittiya 692421
Nuns' Pācittiya 702421
Division 8: on a Maiden2422
Nuns' Pācittiya 712422
Nuns' Pācittiya 722422
Nuns' Pācittiya 732422
Nuns' Pācittiya 742422
Nuns' Pācittiya 752422
Nuns' Pācittiya 762423
Nuns' Pācittiya 772423
Nuns' Pācittiya 782423
Nuns' Pācittiya 792423
Nuns' Pācittiya 802424

Nuns' Pācittiya 812424
Nuns' Pācittiya 822424
Nuns' Pācittiya 832424
Division 9: on Sunshade and Sandals2425
Nuns' Pācittiya 842425
Nuns' Pācittiya 852425
Nuns' Pācittiya 862425
Nuns' Pācittiya 872425
Nuns' Pācittiya 882425
Nuns' Pācittiya 892425
Nuns' Pācittiya 902426
Nuns' Pācittiya 912426
Nuns' Pācittiya 922426
Nuns' Pācittiya 932426
Nuns' Pācittiya 942426
Nuns' Pācittiya 952426
Nuns' Pācittiya 962427
Pātidesaṇīya2428
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 12428
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 22428
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 32428
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 42428
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 52429
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 62429
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 72429
Nuns' Pātidesaṇīya 82429

2.2. Nuns' Analysis: on How many Offences? 2430

Pārājika2430
Nuns' Pārājika 52430
Nuns' Pārājika 62430
Nuns' Pārājika 72431
Nuns' Pārājika 82431
Saṅghādisesa2431

Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 12431
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 22431
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 32432
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 42432
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 52432
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 62432
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 102433
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 112433
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 122433
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 132433
Nissaggiya Pācittiya2433
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 12433
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 22433
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 32434
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 42434
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 52434
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 62434
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 72434
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 112435
Nuns' Nissaggiya Pācittiya 122435
Pācittiya2435
Division 1: on Garlic2435
Nuns' Pācittiya 12435
Nuns' Pācittiya 22435
Nuns' Pācittiya 32436
Nuns' Pācittiya 42436
Nuns' Pācittiya 52436
Nuns' Pācittiya 62436
Nuns' Pācittiya 72436
Nuns' Pācittiya 82436
Nuns' Pācittiya 92437
Nuns' Pācittiya 102437
Division 2: on the Dark of the Night2437
Nuns' Pācittiya 112437

Nuns' Pācittiya 122437
Nuns' Pācittiya 132437
Nuns' Pācittiya 142437
Nuns' Pācittiya 152437
Nuns' Pācittiya 162438
Nuns' Pācittiya 172438
Nuns' Pācittiya 182438
Nuns' Pācittiya 192438
Nuns' Pācittiya 202438
Division 3: on Bathing2439
Nuns' Pācittiya 212439
Nuns' Pācittiya 222439
Nuns' Pācittiya 232439
Nuns' Pācittiya 242439
Nuns' Pācittiya 252439
Nuns' Pācittiya 262439
Nuns' Pācittiya 272440
Nuns' Pācittiya 282440
Nuns' Pācittiya 292440
Nuns' Pācittiya 302440
Division 4: on Sharing2440
Nuns' Pācittiya 312440
Nuns' Pācittiya 322440
Nuns' Pācittiya 332441
Nuns' Pācittiya 342441
Nuns' Pācittiya 352441
Nuns' Pācittiya 362441
Nuns' Pācittiya 372441
Nuns' Pācittiya 382441
Nuns' Pācittiya 392442
Nuns' Pācittiya 402442
Division 5: on a Picture-Gallery2442
Nuns' Pācittiya 412442
Nuns' Pācittiya 422442

Nuns' Pācittiya 432442
Nuns' Pācittiya 442442
Nuns' Pācittiya 452443
Nuns' Pācittiya 462443
Nuns' Pācittiya 472443
Nuns' Pācittiya 482443
Nuns' Pācittiya 492443
Nuns' Pācittiya 502443
Division 6: on a Monastery2444
Nuns' Pācittiya 512444
Nuns' Pācittiya 522444
Nuns' Pācittiya 532444
Nuns' Pācittiya 542444
Nuns' Pācittiya 552444
Nuns' Pācittiya 562445
Nuns' Pācittiya 572445
Nuns' Pācittiya 582445
Nuns' Pācittiya 592445
Nuns' Pācittiya 602445
Division 7: on a Pregnant Woman2446
Nuns' Pācittiya 612446
Nuns' Pācittiya 622446
Nuns' Pācittiya 682446
Nuns' Pācittiya 692446
Nuns' Pācittiya 702446
Division 8: on a Maiden2447
Nuns' Pācittiya 712447
Nuns' Pācittiya 722447
Nuns' Pācittiya 732447
Nuns' Pācittiya 742447
Nuns' Pācittiya 752447
Nuns' Pācittiya 762447
Nuns' Pācittiya 772447
Nuns' Pācittiya 782448

Nuns' Pācittiya 79	2448
Nuns' Pācittiya 80	2448
Nuns' Pācittiya 81	2448
Nuns' Pācittiya 82	2448
Nuns' Pācittiya 83	2448
Division 9: on Sunshade and Sandals	2448
Nuns' Pācittiya 84	2448
Nuns' Pācittiya 85	2449
Nuns' Pācittiya 86	2449
Nuns' Pācittiya 87	2449
Nuns' Pācittiya 88	2449
Nuns' Pācittiya 89	2449
Nuns' Pācittiya 90–93	2449
Nuns' Pācittiya 94	2449
Nuns' Pācittiya 95	2450
Nuns' Pācittiya 96	2450
Pātidesanīya	2450
Nuns' Pātidesanīya 1–8	2450
2.3. Nuns' Analysis: on Falling Away	2451
2.4. Nuns' Analysis: on Comprised In	2452
2.5. Nuns' Analysis: on Origins	2453
2.6. Nuns' Analysis: on Legal Questions	2454
2.7. Nuns' Analysis: on Legal Questions	2455
2.8. Nuns' Analysis: on Accumulation	2456
2.9. Nuns' Analysis: on Laying-Down-Where	2458
Nuns' Pārājika 5	2458
Nuns' Pārājika 6	2458
Nuns' Pārājika 7	2458
Nuns' Pārājika 8	2459

Saṅghādisesa2459
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 12459
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 22459
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 32459
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 42459
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 5	2460
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 6	2460
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 10	2460
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 11	2460
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 12	2460
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 132461
2.10. Nuns' Analysis: on How Many Offences?	2462
Nuns' Pārājika 52462
Nuns' Pārājika 62462
Nuns' Pārājika 72463
Nuns' Pārājika 82463
Saṅghādisesa2463
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 12463
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 22464
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 32464
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 42464
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 52464
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 62464
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 102464
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 112464
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 122465
Nuns' Saṅghādisesa 132465
2.11. Nuns' Analysis: on Falling Away	2466
2.12. Nuns' Analysis: on Comprised in	2466
2.13. Nuns' Analysis: on Origins	2467
2.14. Nuns' Analysis: on Legal Questions	2467

2.15. Nuns' Analysis: on Deciding	2467
2.16. Nuns' Analysis: on Accumulation	2468
3. Summary Of Origins	2469
4. Consecutive Repetitions	2480
5. Synopsis Of Decidings	2496
6. Questions On The Khandhakas	2514
7. As To Graduation	2518
1. Units2518
2. Dyads2523
3. Triads2534
4. Tetrads2546
5. Pentads2555
6. Sextets2566
7. Septets2570
8. Octets2573
9. Nonads2575
10. Decades2577
11. Elevens2581
8. Answers About The Beginning Of Observance	2584
9. Exposition Of Reasons	2586
10. Collection Of Stanzas	2588
11. Synopsis Of Legal Questions	2601
12. An Additional Collection Of Stanzas	2611
13. Portion On Reproving	2616
14. The Lesser Collection	2622

15. The Greater Collection	2627
16. Synopsis Of Kaṭhina	2637
17. Upāli-Pentads	2649
Division 1: Independantly	2649
Division 2: Not Revoking	2653
Division 3: Speaking	2656
Division 4: Explanations of Views	2659
Division 5: Undertaking on one's own Behalf	2664
Division 6: Ascetic Practices	2668
Division 7: Lying Speech	2669
Division 8: Exhortation of Nuns	2672
Division 9: Referendum	2675
Division 10: Settling Legal Questions	2679
Division 11: a Schismatic in the Order	2682
Division 12: a Second Schismatic in the Order	2684
Division 13: Resident	2684
Division 14: the Formal Making of Kaṭhina Cloth	2686
18. Origin	2690
Pārājika	2690
Saṅghādisesa	2691
Sekhiya	2692
Pārājika	2692
Saṅghādisesa	2693
Aniyata	2693
Nissaggiya Pācittiya	2693
Pācittiya	2693
Pātidesaṇīya	2693
Sekhiya	2694
19. Second Collection Of Stanzas	2695
20. The Sweat Inducing Stanzas	2714

21. The Five Divisions	2725
First Division2725
Second Division2731
Third Division2732
Fourth Division2733
Fifth Division2733

TRANSLATOR'S INTRODUCTION

BD.6.vii

In 1883 the firm of Williams & Norgate (as it was then called) published the fifth volume of the Vinaya-Piṭakam in the Pali language edited by Hermann Oldenberg. This was the concluding volume of his fine and careful edition of the whole of the Vinaya. It is devoted almost exclusively to Parivāra, a work which, so far as I know, has not been translated into English before now. I have undertaken the task for the sake of completing my translation of the Vinaya, called The Book of the Discipline, the first five volumes of which were published between 1938 and 1952 in the Sacred Books of the Buddhists.

It would be possible, I think, to fathom the Parivāra without access to either the Suttavibhaṅga or the Khandhakas—and indeed I believe that in some Buddhist countries the monastic disciple has to learn it before he studies these other parts. To follow it is another matter. To do so, the relevant portions of the Suttavibhaṅga and the Khandhakas should be at hand. Throughout this translation, therefore, I have been at pains to supply all references possible to these two major parts of Vinaya. These references are to OLDENBERG'S Vinaya Piṭakam, Volumes I–IV, and to my Book of the Discipline, Volumes I–V. Here, as has been most kindly said, notes may “be found copiously”.¹ They have not been repeated in this final volume.

The meaning of the word Parivāra presents difficulties as do the nature and purpose of the work. Basically, pari- means all round, surrounding; and vāra is time, opportunity; the Sanskrit lexicons also give, for vāra, “anything which covers or surrounds, a cover; a multitude, quantity” and “a cover, covering, surroundings ...”. The idea that the Parivāra surrounds, encircles or encompasses thus presents itself, the core of its interest being the material of the Suttavibhaṅgas and the Khandhakas; it is these that it is concerned with and encompasses.

¹ Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī, Introduction, p.vi.

BD.6.viii

Apart from those few passages which, in the impressive Prv.7 of the Parivāra, the Ekuttaraka, have more in common with the Aṅguttara Nikāya.¹ than with Vinaya, the Parivāra adheres most remarkably closely to Vinaya material. It covers the various matters dealt with in the Khandhakas no less than in the sikkhāpadā, or disciplinary rules of training to be found in the Suttavibhaṅgas, and follows the words used in them, as well as those in the various narratives leading to their formulation and those in the Old Commentary's explanations of the terms used. It also follows the recognized order of the sikkhāpadā with precision. Apparently omitting nothing helpful, necessary or essential to a mastery of Vinaya, it "covers" the Discipline by encompassing it, going all round it and all through it, discarding matters of less consequence in the process, and coming down to the bare rock, the dry bones. Yet, even without a single story and without any human seasoning or hint of contemporary manners and customs, how far from dry is this bony skeleton that so carefully displays the structure of Vinaya which, as the āyu of the Buddha's sāsana,² is its life-giver and source of vitality.

References to the Buddha are likewise very scarce. The opening Chapters of the two Parivāra Vibhaṅgas begin with the words, repeated for every sikkhāpadā, "By the Lord who knows and sees, arahant, Perfect Buddha ...". Otherwise, except for one or two formal allusions to Him (such as "Aṅgīrasa the Sakyan Sage" and "Kinsman of the Sun", or the more unusual epithets anantadassin and vivekadassin on Vin.5.97), we hardly meet with more than conventional references to Him. For example, in His recorded conversations with Upāli there is the statement that 294 rules were made at Sāvaththī by the famed Gotama (Prv.9.1, verse 27), and in the one and only citation of words Parivāra ascribes to Him,³ but not yet traced in full, He is called Bhagavā. He had indeed almost ceased to be or had not begun to be the central figure.⁴ Clearly the Parivāra, which is very likely a manual for students and instructors, centres not on persons, but on monastic disciplinary and legislative affairs drawn from the Vibhaṅgas and Khandhakas. It is made clear at Parivāra Prv.1.1 and Prv.2.1 that the authoritative pronouncements on these affairs that had been ascribed to the Buddha, and to the Buddha only, are simply being repeated here. The delivery of some Discourses in the Suttapiṭaka is assigned to this disciple or that, whether or not it finally received the Buddha's commendation. But not the Vinaya. No disciple is recorded to have furnished or imparted any surviving sikkhāpada or other (Khandhaka) material. The laying down and the regulating of the whole of the discipline for monastic disciples emerges as the work and as the word of the Buddha alone.¹ But Parivāra in its existent form lays no claim to being Buddhavacana, however much this is its basis. As the Niddesa, a commentarial work, has crept into the Pali Canon, so Parivāra has become included in it and ranks as part of it.

¹ See quotation from the Aṅguttara at Vin.5.118f. ² Vin-a.13, DN-a.11. ³ Vin.5.107. ⁴ Cf. BD.1, Introduction, p.xvi.

BD.6.ix

There is nothing to say that Parivāra was compiled before the rest of the Vinaya-ṭiṭaka. Indeed, such evidence as there is seems to point in the contrary direction. In their Introduction to Vinaya Texts, vol.i, p.xxiii-xxiv, Rhys Davids and Oldenberg say "The reader will notice that in the foregoing discussion no mention is made of the Fifth Book in the present division of the Vinaya-ṭiṭaka—the Parivāra-pāṭha. The reason is that this work, an abstract of the other parts of the Vinaya, is in fact a very much later compilation, and probably the work of a Ceylonese thera".² They then draw attention to the stanzas at the end of Parivāra in which his name is given as Dīpa. It seems to me that the only way in which it can be truly regarded as an "abstract" of these other parts is that they are its source and its subject-matter, so huge that part of its purpose is to reduce them to manageable proportions. Though it has one or two points of its own to add, chiefly in the way of emphasis, and employs a relatively few number of words not found in them,³ one of Parivāra's chief methods in thus reducing Vinaya would appear to be by drawing up categories and classifications, and bringing forward matters that, though occurring in these other parts, still might remain somewhat hidden and be overlooked simply because they are not organized and collected there. It must have seemed important to the Parivāra compiler to gather all these matters together so as to give them the full weight due to them.

BD.6.x

¹ Ibid. ² Followed by WINTERNITZ, History of Indian Literature, vol.ii, p.33. ³ See below, BD.6, Introduction, p.xiv.

In his invaluable Dictionary of Pali Proper Names,¹ DR. G.P. MALALASEKERA makes the interesting conjecture that “perhaps the Parivāra correspond to the mātikā of the Abhidhamma and were enlarged later.” I take this to mean that an outline Parivāra, one consisting of “headings”, preceded the other parts of the Vinaya, that these other parts were elaborated from this guide which then itself, some time later, became expanded and more fully treated. On the other hand, it is possible that, because of the Vinaya’s vast proportions and immense importance, it was found advisable to add, not before but after it had been compiled, some kind of summary of matter that had been pulled out of Vinaya itself, and to arrange various of its salient and other features in an orderly manner so as to preclude any danger of their eclipse or oblivion owing to the mere fact that some of them are widely scattered or not worked out in detail in these other parts of Vinaya.

FRAUWALLNER speaks of the Parivāra as an appendix, comparable to the Ekottara in the Vinaya of the Dharmaguptaka, that is it is attached to the two parts of which Vinaya consists: the Suttavibhaṅga and the Khandhakas.² In calling it also “a collection of addenda”³ he indicates that in his opinion it was later in date than the other parts.

LAMOTTE, too, regards Parivāra as “an appendix in sixteen sections and nineteen chapters”,⁴ and E.J. THOMAS as “a supplement containing summaries and classifications of the rules”.⁵

I have also seen Parivāra called “a digest of the entire Vinaya Piṭaka”, setting forth the method of teaching Vinaya. Indeed, to provide a manual for instructors and students may well have been a reason for its compilation.

In its short Envoi Parivāra says some interesting things about itself: it is a cutter off of doubt, through its medium, the True Dhamma and Discipline shine forth. Further, Parivāra means all that was said as to subject-matter (vatthu), and as to meaning by meaning in the True Dhamma (or, the true rule, also dhamma), and as to rule by rule in what was laid down. Then, rather begging the question of the meaning of the word Parivāra in this context, the Envoi declares that “it encompasses (parivāresi) the Dispensation as the ocean (encompasses, surrounds) India”, thus suggesting that its compiler regarded it as an “encompasser”.

¹ Originally published by the Indian Texts Series, 2 vols., 1937, 1938, and reprinted by the Pali Text Society, 1960. ² The Earliest Vinaya and the Beginnings of Buddhist Literature, Serie Orientale Roma Vol. VIII, Istituto Italiano per il Medio ed Estremo Orient, Rome 1956, p.46.

³ Ibid., p.184. ⁴ Histoire du Bouddhisme indien, Louvain, 1958, p.184. ⁵ History of Buddhist Thought, London, 1933, p.267.

It does not appear that the Vinaya of any other sect or school had a Parivāra, at least not anything on the lines of the Pali Parivāra or anything that has come to light yet. This lends considerable weight to the prudence of regarding the Pali Parivāra as an appendix to a finished work rather than as a mātikā if this be taken as the matrix from which the rest of the Vinaya sprang, and thus might have been common to more than one sect.

Even so, whether as an abstract, a mātikā (or original table of contents), a list of headings not yet filled out, a mere aide-mémoire, whether as an epitome or digest, or whether as a very useful supplement or appendix, the Parivāra is not short; nor is it entirely unrepititive: though it is businesslike, thorough, and relatively concise, still it remains lengthy. The Vinaya in fact cannot be reduced to a brief statement nor compressed into a small compass. But it can be illuminated, as Parivāra shows, by a pin-pointing, a bringing to the fore, an unearthing of all necessary and important material from the multitudinous regulations governing the conduct both of a Saṅgha and of an individual monk or nun, and then by arranging in categories and lists these scattered Vinaya matters that monks should neither overlook nor forget, but keep constantly in the forefront of their minds. Moreover, once these classifications have been made, and expertly made, the true range of the Vinaya becomes more manifest, its structure, objects and apparatus more explicit and intelligible with the result that these clear and strong guide-lines to the contents of Vinaya may benefit teachers and pupils alike. It must not be supposed, however, that Parivāra is a commentary in the sense that it rewords and explains. It does neither. Rather it restates by means of the categories and lists I have just referred to.

BD.6.xii

The name of the place where Parivāra was compiled is left completely vague. It is thought that Dīpa (or Dīpanāma) who has been assumed to be the compiler was a thera of Ceylon. But this is not said in the Envoi where, though his name occurs he is merely spoken of as having had the work written, likhāpesi. Therefore we can form as little idea of the real compiler as we can of the provenance, whether Ceylon or India or elsewhere, of the work.

In the absence of any discussion of a reliable date to which Parivāra could be assigned, which would take us too far afield and probably not be profitable, one or two references to this problem may be cited. Winternitz is of the opinion that Parivāra probably dates from the same time as the Abhidhammapiṭaka.¹ B.M. BARUA, Inscriptions of Asoka, Part ii, pp.235–236, is cited by Dr. W. RĀHULA² as saying “the tradition thereof (i.e. the propagation of Buddhism in the Island of Tāmraparṇi) is embodied even in a Pali canonical work, the Parivārapatha, which was compiled in about the beginning of the Christian era”. The same tradition also occurs in other Pali works,³ but as these are not canonical the question arises whether Parivāra belongs to them, at least in respect of this material, rather than to the Canon itself.

The use of the word likhati twice in the Parivāra might also be considered. I have referred to the form likhāpesi, found in the Envoi.⁴ Then, at the end of the Mahāvibhaṅga 1.8, it is said “These eight Chapters (i.e. the ones just finished) have been written down for the way of study”.⁵ If Parivāra really relied on writing as its medium of expression, this almost automatically makes it later in date than much of the rest of the Canon which was handed down orally for some hundreds of years.

BD.6.xiii

In Oldenberg’s edition Parivāra consists of nineteen Chapters or Sections. At least two Commentaries, however, speak of sixteen Parivārā,⁶ a discrepancy which merits attention. At the end of Prv.16 the words Parivāraṃ niṭṭhitāṃ occur, and this is where the Parivāra may have ended originally, Prv.17 to Prv.21 being later additions. If we regard Chapter IV in Oldenberg’s edition as two Chapters instead of one: Anantaraṭṭhāyāla and Samathabheda, and if we likewise regard his Chapter VII as two Chapters instead of one: Uposathādivissajjanā and Atthavasapakaraṇa,⁷ we get the sixteen

¹ History of Indian Literature, vol.ii, p.33. ² History of Buddhism in Ceylon, Colombo, 1956, p.10, n. ³ See below, BD.6.xxxiv. ⁴ Above. ⁵ Vin.5.48, ime aṭṭhā vārā sajjhāyamaggena likhitā. On “writing” see Vinaya Texts, i, Introduction, p.xxxiif. ⁶ Vin-a.18, DN-a.17. ⁷ In the current edition these changes are adopted, so that Oldenberg’s Chapter IV = Prv.4 and Prv.5, while his Chapter VII = Prv.8 and Prv.9.

Parivāra spoken of in the Commentaries.

In Prv.4 and Prv.5 each division has its own uddāna which seems a fairly good reason for thinking that originally they formed two Chapters. Moreover, each appears to be given an entry in the uddāna to what, at Vin.5.143, is called the Mahāvagga which means all the Parivāra material that has been dealt with up to this point. These two sections of Prv.4 and Prv.5, however, are by no means disparate. The second one, Samathabheda, could be regarded, not ineptly, as a kind of explanatory appendix to the first Section, clearing up definitions that, had they been dealt with in the course of this first Section, might have been so long, that though pertinent, they would prove confusing to the main run of the argument; and so they were assembled in their own particular Section of “cycles”.

The two divisions in Prv.8 and Prv.9 present a different type of case. They are both short divisions, the subject-matter of which has nothing in common. Neither of them concludes with an uddāna. The first of these divisions is unnamed in the text: there is no name followed by the word niṭṭhita, concluded. Oldenberg may have taken the title by which he heads this Section from Vin-a.1346. The second division, however, ends with the words Atthavasapakaraṇaṃ niṭṭhitaṃ, thus excluding the first division. Yet this division appears to be mentioned in the uddāna to the whole of the Parivāra's Mahāvagga which follows and concludes this Prv.9. Here called pavāraṇā, the second subject about which questions are asked in the first division of Prv.8, it is placed between the Ekuttaraka (Prv.7) and the Atthavasika, at Prv.9. Thus pavāraṇā, and atthavasika are brought into the mnemonic verse as two topics and not as one. It would further appear that as the Commentary on Prv.8 ends by saying uposathādivissajjanavaṇṇaṇā niṭṭhitā (Vin-a.1346) it must have regarded this division as having an existence separate from and independent of the second division to which it gives no name.

BD.6.xiv

Moreover the Pentads (Prv.7.5) are long enough to make the Upāli-Pentads (Prv.17 and therefore in what I tentatively look on as later and additional matter) seem slightly superfluous as is perhaps Prv.18, Samuṭṭhāna, considering that Prv.3 and also Prv.1 and Prv.2 have dealt thoroughly with the origins of offences already.

Indeed, from Prv.17 to Prv.21, with the exception of Prv.20 which is sui generis, one might suppose that someone other than the original compiler wanted to show that he too could gather together matter that, so long as it remained scattered throughout the Vibhaṅgas and Khandhakas, might not sufficiently impress the disciple. But there was little more to say and, again excepting Prv.20, these last five Chapters seem rather too inadequate to make any new contribution of value.

The Parivāra contains a number of words, and a few sentiments, not, I think, found in the other parts of the Vinaya. I have collected some of them here, and I put them forward subject to correction, as in an immense and not adequately indexed work as is the Vinaya-piṭaka, it is impossible to find, let alone remember, all its single words and phrases.

- Vin.5.18, etc.¹: anuppannapaññatti, a laying down (of an amendment to a rule) that has not come to be or has not occurred yet. This would appear to leave the door open for dealing with future situations. But even if these arose, they could not be legislated for now because the Vinaya is “closed”; no more can be added to it.
- Vin.5.92: The phrase cha sāraṇīyā dhammā, the six things to be remembered, belongs to other canonical works; in Vinaya the six things are given but without a title.
- Vin.5.115: adhiccāpattika abhiñhāpattika, apparently peculiar to this passage and MN.i.442ff.
- Vin.5.115: athullavajjā āpatti; see Vin.2.87 thūlavajjam apattim.
- Vin.5.118: Four kinds of salts: jātima kārīma romaka pakkhālaka. In the Romakajāta (Ja.no.277, verse 79) where the word romaka occurs, it does not appear to refer to a salt and probably means “feathered” of a bird, in spite of Ja-a.ii.383.²
- Vin.5.122: apakatatta. At e.g. Vin.2.32, Vin.2.204 there is pakatatta bhikkhu, regular ordained monk, as opposed to bhikkhunī, sāmaṇera, etc., but the word in the negative form does not appear to occur in the other parts of Vinaya.

¹ These page-numbers refer to the text. ² See below, BD.6.182.

- Vin.5.122: āgālhāya ceteyya, “may plan something hard”; expression apparently here only, but see āgāḷha at AN.i.283, and also, of paṭipadā, see AN.i.295, Ne.77, Ne.95; “the practice of the hardened sensualist” (Gs.i.272). This is a more acceptable translation to me than “luxury” (Guide 108, 131).
- Vin.5.124–Vin.5.125. pasutta (asleep) paṭibuddha (awake). The former, not in Pali-English Dictionary, is perhaps peculiar to this passage. The latter is found at Snp.807.
- Vin.5.125, Vin.5.207: acittaka (unconscious) sacittaka (conscious) appear to occur only in Vin.5, and not in the other parts. See Critical Pali Dictionary and P.T.C. which give acittaka as occurring only in later Pali literature.
- Vin.5.129, Vin.5.130: The passage stating the five advantages and the five further advantages in brooms, sammajjani, is unique, and nothing at all comparable is found in Vinaya or Aṅguttara or elsewhere as far as I know. It seems to be an innovation on the part of our compiler. On the other hand, at Mi.2f. there appear to be two advantages in brooms though they differ from those given here.
- Vin.5.158, verse 3, Vin.5.160f., Vin.5.163, Vin.5.164. anuvijjaka, adjudicator, arbitrator in a legal question. Word here only in the Pali Canon.
- Vin.5.163, Vin.5.166, Vin.5.183. saṅgāmāvacara bhikkhu, “monk who is engaged in conflict.” This seems to be a monk who is protesting against a legal question. Cf. saṅgāmāvacara yodha, a warrior engaged in battle, at Mi.44; and saṅgāmāvacara sūra at Ja.ii.94, also Ja.ii.95 (verse 61); and yogāvacara, one who is engaged in yoga at Mi.33ff., Mi.38f., Mi.43. Apparently, except for Ja.ii.95, not a canonical word. In Parivāra the use is figurative.
- Vin.5.163: kulapadesa, family’s standing; no entry in P.T.C..
- Vin.5.169: Two pairs of words: pakkhavant ñātivant and appāgama appadhara. It seems that none of these is canonical.
- Vin.5.183, Vin.5.187: diṭṭhāvikkamma, an explanation of one’s views—in the Upāli-Pentads only and not in other parts of Vinaya, which these Pentads do not recapitulate with exactitude.
- Vin.5.183: ussitamantin (a grandiose speaker) nissitajappin (one who hankers after or yearns for support for his statements). Neither compound found in other parts of Vinaya.

The Parivāra now and again substitutes its own words for the Suttavibhaṅga words of corresponding passages. For example, Vin.5.37, Vin.5.38, pahāre pahāre are not in Suttavibhaṅga Bu-Pc.10, Bu-Pc.11, where the Old Commentary, instead of using a kind of omnibus word such as is pahāre, specifies each of the actions that lead to Expiation. Similarly, payoge, as in Bu-Pc.18 (Vin.5.38) and other contexts seems to be another omnibus word. Again, in Nuns' Bi-Ss.5, Vin.5.56, we get āmisam for khādaniyam vā bhojaniyam vā of Nuns' Vibhaṅga (Vin.4.233). This seems to be another comprehensive word used for the sake of brevity.

In Section Prv.3.3, however, four substitutions occur which cannot be for the sake of brevity, though they may be for the sake of metre, which is the medium this Section uses throughout. They are at:

(1) Vin.5.87, verse 27, where riñcanti is absent from Suttavibhaṅga sikkhāpada itself (Monks' Bu-NP.17), though appearing in its introductory narrative.

(2) Vin.5.88, verse 43, where Parivāra substitutes seyyā for mañca (Nuns' Bi-Pc.31), and tathā bahi for tiroraṭṭhe (Nuns' Bi-Pc.38); also Vin.5.89, verse 55 where it substitutes seyya for sayana.

At Vin.5.106 there is, among other abbreviations, the somewhat curious phrase samukhāvinayam kātūna mūlam—la—. This looks as if it refers either to the preceding or the succeeding matter in Prv.5. I have very tentatively translated it as “to make the root (or source, beginning) a verdict in the presence of”, for such is the verdict under discussion here. Kātūna as a form of the infinitive of karoti, if that is indeed what it is, can be only of very rare occurrence. GEIGER makes no reference to it.¹ Equally rare must be kātuye at Thig.418²; cf. marituye at Thig.426, probably both Vedic infinitives. PISCHEL, Thig.p.212, does not agree with the reading or explanation at Thig-a.268: kiṃ sakkā kātuye ti kiṃ mayā kātum ayye sakkā; he says “the correct reading is no doubt kātuye, as given in the text”. That a compiler should now and again use an unusual form of a verb does not mean that it was in common use during his life-time: any writer, to suit his purposes, may resort to a rare, ancient or obsolete word, but that does not make him belong to the times when that word was in current circulation.

BD.6.xvii

¹ Pali Literatur und Sprache, Encyclopedia of Indo-Aryan Research, Strassburg, 1916. ² To which Professor A.K. Warder kindly drew my attention.

I will now mention some of the points that seem to me worthy of note from among Parivāra's nineteen Chapters. This will serve also to give some rough idea of their contents.

PRV.1: MAHĀVIBHAṄGA

The first Section is called "The Laying-Down Where?". Each rule in the Mahāvibhaṅga, given in the exact order in which it has been handed down in the corresponding Mahāvibhaṅga at Vin.3.1-Vin.3.266, Vin.4.1-Vin.4.207, is examined from a number of angles, important among these being the place where it was laid down. This, of course, may be regarded as history, and nothing new is to be learnt from it so long as the student knows the other relevant parts of Vinaya. It is not necessarily more important than the other angles, aspects or questions about the rules that are set down, as a kind of mātikā, at the very beginning of this Section. These are somewhat bare or condensed outlines of questions to be learnt—and of the answers then following—in any study of the sikkhāpadā; then more detail of each one may be filled in as one proceeds through them all from the first De-feat to the twenty-fifth Training. Though "Where, Concerning Whom, and what Subject?" are traditional opening words in Commentaries, some of the other questions included here are less usual and less obvious. It is, for example, in this Section that we are made aware of the great importance the compiler attached to the number of origins, āpattisamuttāna, by which a monk can originate any of the offences legislated for in the Pātimokkha. There are six such origins, given at Vin.2.90. But it left to Parivāra to analyse them in relation to each offence and assert them so clearly that they gain a significance and precision that could not be gauged from the other parts of Vinaya. The material is there, but neither the emphasis nor the systematization. This is Parivāra's innovation, part of its contribution to learning and mastering Vinaya.

The second Section of the Mahāvibhaṅga's first Chapter is entitled "How many Offences?". Its main concern is the number and type of other offences a monk may fall into according to the circumstances attending his infringement of any one of the rules. These are repeated here in their entirety and again in their proper order. A useful example to consult occurs at Vin.5.37, the first offence of Expiation, where he may fall into as many as five different kinds of offence for telling a conscious lie in five different ways. On the other hand, he may fall only into the offence bearing the relevant group-name, e.g. as at Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.2, Bu-NP.3. All this information is in the Suttavibhaṅga, often in the Old Commentary. But it is buried there and not co-ordinated by means of being assembled.

PRV.2: BHIKKHUNĪVIBHAṄGA

The method of presenting the Nuns' Vibhaṅga is a very exact copy of that of presenting the Monks' Vibhaṅga, or Mahāvibhaṅga as it is called.

PRV.3: SAMUṬṬHĀNASS' UDDĀNA

This Chapter, like Prv.12, Prv.19, and Prv.20, is entirely in metre. It demonstrates the importance attached by the compiler to the origins of offences. In the short Introduction the point is made (verses 6–8) that he who desires (to know) the rule, dhamma, must train in Parivāra which, as a strand in the Thread (of the Teaching), fastens the garlands of both of the Vibhaṅgas, the Khandhakas and the Mātikās. It is thus a guide to the whole of the rest of Vinaya, and has a practical bearing on the stability of True Dhamma. For this will endure only as long as Vinaya endures. So does Vinaya's horizon become all the wider for the integral part it plays in the entirety of the Buddha's Teaching.

BD.6.xix

This Chapter then goes on to a systematic classification, under thirteen headings or in thirteen divisions or groups all of which in effect are names of offences, of every offence in the two Vibhaṅgas including the Sekhiyas that originate from the same combination of the six origins of offences according to the various permutations and combinations of the origins of these offences from the three doors of body, speech and thought. No doubt the presumption is that when a student is trying to master Vinaya, he will not only want to know, he will also want to see almost at a glance as it were which of these three parts of a person is involved and in what permutation by his offending against any Vinaya rule. Though the origin may be dual as for example in Sheep's Wool Origin and in Dhamma-line-by-line Origin, the nature of the duality is different; this necessitates the meticulous attribution of the offences to the group to which, by the origination of them, they belong. In each of these classified groups the number of the offences included is stated, except in the third group, the Go-between Origin; here there appear to be 49 items. Such origins as are impossible are also given.

It is remarkable that, with one exception,¹ the compiler has been able to keep the sikkhāpadā in their proper consecutive order throughout each of these thirteen classifications of origins of offences into which he arranges them. And it is a great feat that, always in metre, he has given for practically every offence one, but not more than one, key-word from the sikkhāpadā, so that the student of Parivāra may recognize the one being referred to. I give my findings in the footnotes to this Chapter. Four times only has the compiler used substitutes for the words of the sikkhāpadā.²

PRV.4: ANANTARAPEYYĀLA AND PRV.5: SAMATHABHEDA

This consists of two main sections: the Anantarapeyyāla and the Samathabheda. Each begins with a kind of mātikā put in the form of questions; the different answers to them are then worked out at some length. The paragraphs are numbered straight on in Oldenberg's edition through 1–6 in Prv.4, and 7–22 in Prv.5. There is a link between these Sections in that the former is mainly occupied with offences their origins and the four kinds of legal questions they raise and the latter with the settling or deciding of these same legal questions. Prv.4 has its own uddāna which is quite distinct from the uddāna at the end of Prv.5. In Prv.5 the compiler displays a kind of tour de force in the extremely thorough attention he lavishes on the “cycles”, cakka, that he presents. And he presents every possible one that is to his point. Each is analysed down to the minutest detail. Apart from the one abbreviation he allows himself,¹ nothing is left to the imagination or to common sense; nothing is abbreviated in any such way as being called “the others”, “the rest” or “the remainder”. On the contrary, the names of the four legal questions and the seven methods of deciding them are repeated time and time again thus driving home the relation of any of the latter to any of the former, and incidentally providing a fine mental discipline for the student. The Commentary to this Section, which hardly exists, declares it is perfectly clear to the end.

BD.6.xx

¹ Vin.5.87, verse 30. ² See above, BD.6.xvi.

PRV.6: KHANDHAKAPUCCHĀ

The aid of the Commentary is imperative for a right grasp of the contents of this very short Chapter. It appears to ask how many offences there are in each of the ten Khandhakas of the Mahāvagga and the twelve of the Cullavagga. But, in fact, as becomes evident from the Commentary, it is not inquiring about actual numbers of offences, but about the numbers of types of offence each Khandhaka contains.² The total of these types for any one Khandhaka, none of them named in Parivāra text itself, comes to no more than three: grave, Expiation, wrong-doing. Some Khandhakas contain more than one offence belonging to these three types. The point, however, is not to reckon these individually—or the answers might well not tally with those Parivāra gives—but by the class to which they belong. It need not, I think, be presumed that this Chapter was meant to be a puzzle or a pitfall for an unwary student, though this is not an impossibility. Rather, I would incline to the opinion that the compiler thought now that he had reviewed the Vibhaṅgas he would give some definite attention to the Khandhakas. It had become their turn—though never are they kept separate from the Vibhaṅgas in tidy isolated compartments—and owing to their diffuse nature as much as to the general plan of Parivāra, questions on the number of offences were not only as good a starting point as any, but were almost the regulation one. Today the mystery of this brief Chapter can be unlocked only with the help of the Commentary. It would be interesting to know if the early students of Parivāra had to secure this also—and not here only—or whether they had some other key, perhaps the traditional knowledge of their teachers, to give them the right interpretations.

BD.6.xxi

¹ See above, BD.6.xvi. The other abbreviations shown by omission marks in Prv.5 are, I think, Oldenberg's. ² As in Prv.19.

PRV.7, EKUTTARAKA

This is dominated throughout by a method without parallel in other parts of Vinaya. It is more in line with the Āṅguttara, even too with the Saṅgīti and Dasuttara Suttantas, and such other Pali works as are arranged on a “higher by one” plan, e.g. Puggala Paññatti and the last part, the Samkhyāsarūpaṃ, of the Milinda-ṭīkā.¹ But Puggala Paññatti is concerned only with the qualities of individuals, and the Milinda-ṭīkā only with items occurring in the Milindapañha. Apart from the method, Parivāra Prv.7 is far from being a copy of any of these works. In common with them it collects an enormous range of topics, qualities and attributes of no matter what kind of person or object or situation. But the difference is that here the Vinaya is the supreme foundation, the fons et origo, and the whole of the orbit from which this compendious compilation radiates and which it encompasses. Vinaya is its source, its centre and its field. Even those items which cannot be traced to Vinaya itself have all the same been carefully chosen for their Vinaya flavour. For example, in the Pentads² though the five perils for one of unpleasing and the five advantages for one of pleasing actions can be traced to the Āṅguttara but not to Vinaya, the explanation of these actions is as appropriate to Vinaya as to any other part of the Pali Canon. The same could be said of the five pairs of foolish or ignorant men and the five pairs of wise men,³ or of the pairs of individuals in whom the cankers either increase or do not⁴ (AN.i.84–AN.i.86). Even the Āṅguttara’s three things that are hidden or unveiled⁵ have a Vinaya bearing as do also several of the items listed in the short section of the Nonads. Here, for example, the nine occasions for or bases of ill-will and the nine ways of averting it can be found in the ¹ Mi-t.61ff. ² Vin.5.132. ³ Vin.5.118. ⁴ Vin.5.118–Vin.5.119. ⁵ Vin.5.120–Vin.5.121.

BD.6.xii

Dīgha and Aṅguttara but not in Vinaya. Yet they are not at all alien to it in sentiment since a monk should be able to rise above this defilement of the mind, this hindrance.

Such departures from Vinaya sources though not from Vinaya sentiment are, however, in a Chapter of this great length comparatively very infrequent. The underlying motive must have been to provide the student of Vinaya with a graduated list, largely of such Vinaya topics as offences and legal questions, on the analogy of the graduated lists for students of Dhamma. It was a brilliant conception, brilliantly carried out. But some features raise problems.

For example, practically every one of the eleven groups includes its own appropriate number of legally valid and legally invalid suspensions of the Pātimokkha. So that, unless one waits for the Decads or already knows from some other source that there are ten, one might be misled into thinking there were only one, two or three and so on. One might conclude from this that part of the method was to grade the same item in group after group within the more general gradation, perhaps to keep everything before the student's memory. The fear of forgetting must have been very real in a world where the spoken word was perhaps still the main medium of teaching and learning rather than the book written on palm-leaves.¹

There is too the puzzle of another kind of repetition. Constantly, say a dyad or a triad is given, such as "Two probations"² or "Two mānattas".³ This is followed immediately by the words "And two further" (probations or mānattas)—all of them being specified and named. And then, in the Tetrads⁴ each of these two sets of two is grouped together to form one set of fours. In addition, but lacking the last member, the first three members appear in the Triads.⁵ This same feature is found again, e.g. in the Dyads and Pentads. In the former⁶ three dyads occur successively equalling six types of persons who must not be ordained. But in the Pentads⁷ the last of these six persons is omitted. More examples could be given, such as the five offences⁸ and the six offences⁹ involving cutting down, or the six⁶ and the seven¹⁰ proper courses. Only the numbers are stated; the Commentary gives the clue to the offences they denote. Or again, “ten boons”¹ and “eleven boons”² were asked for. The Commentary, specifies them but not the text, and takes the eleventh boon as the one Mahāpajāpatī requested. This was the only one the Buddha did not consent to. He granted all the others, eight of them to Visākhā, the famous lay woman supporter of both the Orders, which by that time must have been well established.

¹ See above, BD.6.xii, for Parivāra's two references to writing. ² Vin.5.118. ³ Vin.5.118.

⁴ Vin.5.126. ⁵ Vin.5.121. ⁶ Vin.5.117 (towards top). ⁷ Vin.5.129. ⁸ Vin.5.128.

⁹ Vin.5.133. ¹⁰ Vin.5.134.

There is too the rather curious and apparently casual inclusion in the Dyads³ of two salts, two further and two further and two further salts, making eight in all. These are not repeated either in the Tetrads or the Octets. Four of these salts do not seem to recur anywhere else in the Pali Canon. The four that this does mention, sāmuḍḍa and kāḷaloṇa, sindhava and ubbhida, at Kd.6.8, are four of the five salts allowed as medicines, a salt called bila being the fifth. This being so, and without more evidence, it is clearly not safe to argue that whenever salts are mentioned it is always pair by pair. These five salts are not among the Pentads, possibly for the reason that Kd.6.8 also makes allowable “whatever other salts there are that are medicines” if they serve neither as solid nor as soft foods. For this last clause would prevent a close fit, hence, as a pentad, finality and completeness would be lacking. The same reasoning could be applied to some of the other groups of five things allowed as medicines (Kd.6.1ff.). But with, for example, the five tallows it is different, for at Kd.6.2 this clause is not appended. Thus because five tallows only are recognized they can appear in the Pentads.⁴

BD.6.xxiv

Another sort of problem arises with the Tetrads: “four reproving” are given twice.⁵ They are not placed beside one another and they differ in kind. Why does the compiler here depart from his usual custom of saying “and a further” two or four or whatever the number may be? I doubt whether either of these two tetrads, as such, can be found in the other parts of Vinaya.

Again, a longish passage in the Pentads⁶ is repeated word for word in the Decads,⁷ and indeed several times a decad has appeared already as two pentads. This may be good for the memory, but a simple count of the ¹ Vin.5.139. ² Vin.5.140. ³ Vin.5.118. ⁴ Vin.5.129. ⁵ Vin.5.125f., Vin.5.127. ⁶ Vin.5.130.

⁷ Vin.5.138-Vin.5.139.

Ekuttaraka items without looking for repetitions and duplications would result in quite a wrong total.

Then there is the occasion when two clauses taken from the Nuns' Vibhaṅga differ from that Vibhaṅga in that there a nun of twelve years' standing is in question, while here, in Parivāra, she has to be only of ten years' standing.¹ This may be due to an inadvertent following of the corresponding clauses about the monks who are rightly spoken of as having to be of ten years' standing; or it may be deliberate so as to give the nuns a place in the Decads of the Ekuttaraka. But neither aberration nor deviation is characteristic of the compiler.

In these few random notes on a Chapter that would bear a good deal of examination I have aimed at bringing forward only some of the points I think deserve investigation. In conclusion it must be remarked that the Eightfold Way is absent from the Octets, as I believe it is also from the Octets of the Aṅguttara.² The nearest approach to it appears to come under the headings "ten wrongnesses" and "ten rightnesses" in the Decads.³ These are not expanded in the text, but the Commentary confirms with the words "beginning with wrong view, ending with wrong freedom".⁴ There are of course many matters in the Pali Canon that have not been included in the Ekuttaraka. They may belong, for example, more to the Teaching than to the Discipline, such as the three marks of all phenomena, the four Truths, the four arousings of mindfulness, the four right endeavours, the five powers, the five basic faculties, indriya, and the seven states connected with Awakening. These were the affair of the dhammakathikas and the dhammadharas. A student of Vinaya who perhaps hoped one day to be a vinayadhara, an expert in Discipline, had such an enormous amount to learn in this branch alone of the Buddha's Dispensation that very likely he had to be content with no more than a comparatively superficial acquaintance with Dhamma which forms the other great branch.

Because I think these sections of the Ekuttaraka somewhat unwieldy as they stand, I have ventured to break them up into paragraphs, hoping that this will facilitate their study.

¹ Vin.5.139. ² See Gs.iv, Introduction, p.x, and Gs.v, Introduction, p.x. ³ Vin.5.138.

⁴ Vin-a.1343f.

PRV.8: UPOSATHĀDIVISSAJJANĀ AND PRV.9: ATTHAVASAPAKARAṆA

Like Prv.4, this has two main sections. They are called Uposathādivissajjanā and Atthavasapakaraṇa. The Chapter concludes by saying Mahāvaggaṃ niṭṭhitaṃ. The Parivāra to all intents and purposes then proceeds to topics dealt with in the Cullavagga and carries this on to the end of Prv.16. Vin-a.1347 styles its exegesis on Prv.1–Prv.9 Mahāvagga-vaṇṇanā, while at Vin-a.1347 it calls that on Prv.10–Prv.16 Paññattivagga-vaṇṇanā as though this were a title, if not for Cullavagga, then for other material beginning with a verse statement of the places where the sikkhāpadā were laid down. I have referred earlier to Prv.9 as one of the two Parivāra Chapters that falls into two discrete portions.¹

PRV.10: GĀTHĀSAMGAṆIKA

This is mostly in verse with a little prose interspersed. Of much interest are the opening verses which collect the names of the seven places where the 350 rules of training for monks and nuns were laid down, followed by the ascription of the relevant rules to each of these seven places. Sāvattihī, however, where 294 rules are said to have been made, cannot have this number named individually, so the reader or student must find them for himself. Next comes another deeply interesting passage stating that 220 rules of training are recited by monks on Observance days and 304 by nuns, totalling 524. But this must not be taken literally, for 174 are for equal training, thus reducing the grand total to the accredited 350 rules laid down in the seven places. Or, as alternately given, 176 rules are not shared between monks and nuns; but these with the 174 that are shared amount again to the 350 rules for members of both Orders.² The two concluding stanzas are more reminiscent of Dhamma than Discipline, the last one containing one of Parivāra's few references to nibbāna.³ It might have seemed as well to remind students and aspirants from time to time of the ultimate goal of their strenuous life and training.

BD.6.xxvi

¹ See above, BD.6.xiii. ² See BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxviiiff. ³ Cf. Prv.14

PRV.11: ADHIKARAṄABHEDA

This is the most thorough and detailed statement of the four legal questions to be found in Vinaya, as the commentator realized. They occupy its full length, and there is no digression from them.

PRV.12: APARAGĀTHĀSAMĠGAṄIKA

This short Chapter, which keeps entirely to metre, is largely devoted to the subject of reproving, codanā. Though Prv.11 divides it from Prv.10 which is called Gāthāsaṃgaṇika, the title of Prv.12 would have raised no other problems had it not been for the title of Prv.19. The text calls this Dutiyagāthāsaṃgaṇika as though it were oblivious of Prv.12. The Commentary, very confusingly, styles both Prv.12 and Prv.19 Dutiyagāthāsaṃgaṇika. Neither has a uddāna.

PRV.13: CODANĀKAṄḌA

This is chiefly concerned with the reprover, codaka, including the ignorant incompetent kind who goes on to Niraya for abusing Elders and burns up himself, jhāpeti attānaṃ, for many another stupidity. We thus learn something of the fruition of imperfect, unskilled reproving. The method followed at the beginning of the second set of stanzas resembles that of the opening stanzas of Prv.12

PRV.14: CŪLASAMĠGĀMA

BD.6.xxvii

This opens, as does Prv.15, with a word not found in other parts of Vinaya: saṃgāmāvacara bhikkhu,¹ a monk who is engaged in battle, here used figuratively of course, and meaning engaged in conflict or dispute over a legal question. The first paragraph describes the ideal adjudicator, anuvijjaka,¹ in such disputes. Prv.14.1.2, in a way not uncommon in the Suttapaṭṭaka but not found elsewhere in Vinaya,² connects causally and almost step by step a more humble beginning with the noblest ending. Here it seems that reproof is for the sake of final nibbāna without clinging remaining. Thus are disciplinary matters shown to lead on gradually to the consummation. This invests them in a most interesting light, and again must act as a welcome reminder to the monastic disciple that the discipline he is undergoing has an elevated though distant goal the achievement of which is in a direct relationship to his progressive efforts as a reliable monk.³

¹ See above, BD.6.xv.

PRV.15: MAHĀSAMĠĀMA

In common with the opening parts of Prv.1 and Prv.2 and with Prv.16, a Commentary forms the main bulk of the Chapter in the sense that it consists of a consecutive explanation of the phrases used in the first paragraph. This puts us in mind of the word for word Commentary at Kd.2.3 on the recital of the Pātimokkha, and would appear to take the place of the questions and answers which are a feature in other Parivāra Chapters; it is certainly a valuable method of clarification. The Chapter opens with the same words, saṃgāmvācāra bhikkhu, as does Prv.14; it contains a longish quotation from Kd.4, also two verses both traceable to the Dīgha and the Aṅguttara, and a repetition of the first set of verses in Prv.13 with the substitution of pavāraṇā for uposatha.

At the beginning of paragraph 2 the exegesis of “He should know the subject” gives a total of the 350 rules of Prv.10 if one takes the 75 offences of wrong-doing to stand for the 75 Sekhiyas, for infringing any of which an offence of wrong-doing resulted. Offences of wrong speech are not counted. The citation of the monk who is being reproofed with two things, speaking the truth and being without anger, sacca akuppa, has made an appearance already in Prv.13.4 and in Kd.19.5.7. There are several words in this Chapter that have not been found in other parts of the Pali Canon.¹ Unfortunately the Commentary fails and stops short some way before it ends, saying, as it says at the end of Prv.4, that the rest is clear.

BD.6.xxviii

¹ See above, BD.6.xv. ² See BD.1, Introduction, p.ix. ³ See above, BD.6.xxvi.

PRV.16: KATHINABHEDA

This takes us deep into the process of the proper making of the kaṭhina cloth. It is not a simple one; it is, in fact, extremely complicated. There are not only the 24 wrong or improper ways and the 17 right or proper ways of formally making it up into robes (or spreading it on the frame), but there is also a mass of other relevant matters, often further divided and sub-divided, explored and explained. The Chapter is entirely occupied with the business in hand and must have added its quota to the seriousness with which the proper carrying out of this annual event is regarded in monastic circles. Exactitude, depending on a mastery of detail, has to be achieved, and this well-organized Chapter goes one by one through all the steps for attaining this end.

I have suggested earlier² that, because at the end of this Chapter, there stand the words Parivāraṃ niṭṭhitam, the original version of Parivāra went no further and that the subsequent Chapters are later additions to the work.

PRV.17: UPĀLIPANĀCAKA

At the time of the Buddha, Upāli was the most proficient and the greatest vinayadhara, expert in Discipline, the whole of which he is traditionally supposed to have learnt from the Buddha himself. It seems very remarkable that of all the quantities of questions he is here shown as having asked, the Buddha's answers were all in sets of five whereas in the much shorter Upālivagga at AN.v.7off. they were all in sets of ten. At Kd.9.6 (Vin.1.325-328) the answers do not appear to involve any special numbers. How many questions Upāli actually asked and how many are ascribed to him because of his great authority in Vinaya matters, it is impossible to say at this distance of time. This Chapter is the only one to begin in the style traditional to the Piṭakas, possibly to intimate that it is not an original contribution but a gathering together of subject-matter in the very form in which it had been handed down but hitherto had not been collected. Be that as it may, Upāli's name provides a good focal point for demonstrating by this grouping in 14 divisions, always by sets of five, and usually under the aspect of the number of qualities a monk or nun should possess, that he is fit and able for certain disciplinary duties, some of which have occurred already in Parivāra, generally in other contexts. A few pentads from the Ekuttaraka are repeated, and various words and phrases are brought forward from other parts of Vinaya, also a few from the Suttapiṭaka. There are probably more of these last than I have referred to in the notes, for, unless one were making a special study of Upāli, the time involved in tracing them would be out of proportion to the result gained. No doubt it was Upāli's eminence in everything that was prescribed to govern the life of a monk or nun as well as the smooth running of the Order that places him in the unique position of having a Chapter named after him personally. This, in a work noticeably devoid of proper names, could be regarded as a tribute deservedly paid to this most accomplished adept in Vinaya.

¹ See above, BD.6.xv. ² See above, BD.6.xiii.

BD.6.xxix

PRV.18: SAMUṬṬHĀNA

This appears to lack nearly all originality, either as a collection or as a statement, and it is hard to account for its inclusion. One would have thought that all that could have been said about the origins of offences had been said already, principally in Prv.1, Prv.2 and Prv.3. As a Chapter it is no more than a copy of certain parts of these earlier Chapters. For it merely picks out, from among other material, information they give about origins. Though these are perfectly plainly stated there, this Chapter restates them here, so that it becomes a kind of digest concerned solely with origins, of material already Presented in Parivāra. Even some of the points mentioned in its first paragraph are not peculiar to it, but have occurred already. The Chapter can hardly be said to have been compiled by a master-hand but rather by someone who was taking an easy way to hammer home a subject of importance, or at least of importance in Parivāra.

PRV.19: DUTIYAGĀTHĀSAMĀṄĀNIKA

BD.6.xxx

¹This is another Chapter wholly in metre. Its method, deviated from only in verse 31, 32, is for each alternate stanza to ask “How many?” concerning various Vinaya items and to give the answer in the succeeding verse. As appears early on, the “offence” is to be taken, as in Prv.6, as the class of offence, not the number of individual offences under the chosen heading. To demonstrate this I have annotated “three offences at sunrise” in verse 4 to show that though at least seven occasions for falling into an offence may occur at sunrise, the “three” refer only to the class to which they belong. In view of Prv.6 one cannot say that the approach here is anything new. This takes us to about verse 50 when the subject of offences is dropped, to be taken up again in verse 93, now in a straightforward count of the number of offences that exist in each class. These, as in Prv.10, come to a total for monks and nuns of 350.

These verses, often characterized by a refrain, are pleasant to read, but do not sweep in more than a few items that have not been considered and dissected already. One can mention, however, the reference in verses 51, 52 to the four Vinaya occasions where confessions of a transgression were made and which hitherto have received no attention in Parivāra. We also hear more of chejja, “could be destroyed”, verses 57, 58; of the individuals who should not be greeted but if they are there is an offence of wrong-doing for every greeting, verses 61, 62; and of the number of the kinds of monastic adherents who may receive robe-material after they have kept the rains, verses 63, 64. Noteworthy too are the mathematical computations at verses 65, 66 and 77, 78. This last pair of verses and likewise verses 81, 82 concern themselves with the number of those doomed to the Downfall for being schismatics. This too is noteworthy since references to the locus, as it were, of a future rebirth are not common in Parivāra.

¹ On this title see above, BD.6.xxvi.

I think this Chapter could have been compiled only by someone or someone and his colleagues and pupils who had made a prolonged study of Vinaya and was anxious to pass on the results. Frequently, however, these are in a form where research rather than memory is required if a student is to supply the right answer to any one of the many questions.¹ Once again, we ourselves would often be in complete darkness were it not for the commentarial explanations.²

BD.6.xxxi

PRV.20: SEDAMOCAKAGĀTHĀ

This is well named. Wholly in metre, it is full of riddles and puzzles the right solution of which calls for hard and accurate thinking. Opposing statements, each one drawn from various parts of Vinaya, and statements obviously contrary to well known sikkhāpadā if taken merely at their face value, are all shown to be valid when properly interpreted. One of the difficulties, even with the commentator's almost but not quite unfailing guidance, is to trace them to their right source, for some are very obscure. My notes reveal the occasions of my uncertainty; otherwise, in the light of the Commentary I hope that I have given a sound lead to anyone studying this highly original set of stanzas, but to make them all come alive a certain amount of research would still lie before him.

Though Milindapañha presents a huge quantity of dilemmas and repeatedly sets two statements the one against the other which apparently do not tally and apparently could not both be true, nearly all of these are taken from the Suttapiṭaka and Jātaka and comparatively only a very few from Vinaya. The Sweat-inducing Stanzas, on the other hand, adhere strictly to the contents of Vinaya and never move away from them. They never once mention origins of offences or formal acts of the Order. There are 43 stanzas and the uddāna gives 43 items. Whether this number is comprehensive and covers all Vinaya dilemmas and riddles I am not prepared to say. All that can be said here is that nothing comparable exists in other parts of Vinaya. Further, it seems that the compiler has made a very deep study of the sikkhāpadā for both monks and nuns, and has extracted information and matters of fact from many of them which, though there but not laboured, could easily come as a surprise to more superficial students, e.g. verses 32, 33 and 36, 37.

¹ See above, BD.6.xx. ² See above, BD.6.xx.

BD.6.xxxii

Riddles are nothing new to the Pali canon. One is to be found e.g. at Dh.p.294, Dh.p.295, and another at Thag.15, Thag.633 = Dh.p.370 = SN.i.3. The existence of four citations of this latter riddle points to its popularity. Milinda's dilemmas are not riddles; they are plain straightforward quotations. All they have in common with the Sweat-inducing Stanzas is a presentation of material that, though apparently inconsistent, yields to consistency and agreement when the right interpretation is known. As Milinda's questions are, in the main, dilemmas based on the Suttapiṭaka, so this collection of 43 stanzas must be classed as Vinaya dilemmas.

PRV.21: "FIVE DIVISIONS"

This Chapter is given no name in the text or Commentary. The text, however, consists of five vaggas or divisions, individually named and numbered. These are called collectively by Oldenberg "The Five Vaggas". The Commentary, on the other hand, by taking Vaggas 3 and 4 together to form one vagga, admits of four vaggas only. It calls its combined vaggas 3 and 4 by the name of Anisamsavagga, though in the text these are called Pannattivagga and Pannatta-vagga respectively, a distinction that, from internal evidence in these two vaggas, might be hard to justify. This Chapter is inclined to repeat material given earlier in the Parivāra with a resulting loss of intrinsic interest though no doubt the summing up of various points is very clear. In the first division, the Kammavagga, insistence is laid on strict and rigid adherence to the regulation way of carrying out monastic proceedings. This creates an impression that one false step, one omission, would invalidate the whole of the legal inquiry for which monks had assembled, and puts one in mind of the sanctity of brahmanical rites.

It is left to the commentator to decipher which kind of osaraṇa and which kind of nissaraṇa is meant on each of the four occurrences of these words at Vin.5.222.

Were it spoken, written or printed in full the fifth division would be found to mention every sikkhāpada in its proper order so as to show that the offence involves “matter” and “kind”, and the class to which it belongs involves “name” and “offence”. It would seem as if the compiler of this Chapter had come to the conclusion there was still room for clarification and that some points had not been stressed sufficiently.

BD.6.xxxiii

The life of a monk, regarded as an individual, was centred on adhering to the rules of training; and, regarded as a member of the Saṅgha to which he belonged, it was centred on the greater and lesser communal legislative acts. The Parivāra, with its minute analysis and synthetical treatment, hammers this home encompassing and covering everything an individual monk or nun and an Order as a unit should know. It is not a book for general reading; it is a book of reference to be studied by anyone making research into the Vinaya, by a member of the Order or by someone aspiring to ordination who should learn beforehand the kind of things he will be expected to grasp more fully later.

Though he is by no means uncritical of the work of his commentarial predecessors the compiler of the Vinaya Commentary, including that on the Parivāra, appears to have had a certain admiration for the Mahāpaccarī, one of the early Commentaries, and occasionally he follows its interpretations in preference to those of the Vinaya itself (e.g. see Mahāvibhaṅga, Vin.5.38, Bu-Pc.14, Bu-Pc.15, Bu-Pc.23) but occasionally he differs from them (e.g. Vin.5.39, Bu-Pc.26). Our commentator, therefore, the Ven. Buddhaghosa, apparently had full knowledge of several, probably all, of the early Commentaries: the Mahāaṭṭhakathā, the Mahāpaccarī, the Kurundī (whose interpretations he now and again says should not be accepted), and the Andhakaṭṭhakathā.¹ He was, of course, completely at liberty to choose what he thought was the best and truest interpretation of some point in any one of these Commentaries and to criticize that made by others. His Vinaya Commentary refers not infrequently to Parivāra, and sometimes cites verses from it.

¹ See E.W. ADIKARAM, Early History of Buddhism in Ceylon, p.10ff. for a valuable though short, account of these early Commentaries or sources of the Pali Commentaries.

BD.6.xxxiv

Of the extant Pali Commentaries it would seem that that on Aṅguttara pays a certain amount of attention to Parivāra. This may be a reflexion of the attention paid, not by name but by parallel passages, by Parivāra to Aṅguttara. In a long account of the disappearance of the Buddha-word as contained in the three Piṭakas together with the Pali Commentaries AN-a.1.89 says that after the disappearance of the last Jātaka to be remembered, still the Vinaya will be borne in mind. But as time goes on and on first the Parivāra will disappear then the Khandhakas, then the Bhikkhuni-vibhaṅga, and lastly the Mahāvibhaṅga.¹

MN-a.ii.106, AN-a.iii.5 state that among other portions of the Tathāgata's words the two Vibhaṅgas, the Khandhakas and Parivāra should be included; AN-a.iii.158–159, however, holds that the two Vibhaṅgas are Sutta, and that only Khandhaka-Parivāra are Vinaya. A division is made also at AN-a.v.7 where the two former are called Vinaya and the two latter abhivinaya. Therefore, except that the Parivāras tend to be bracketed with the Khandhakas, any firm tradition of their status or any agreement on what that was seems difficult to find. The Parivāra itself differs from all the above views when it says paññatti vinayo vibhatti abhivinayo (Vin.5.2).

Unless one's knowledge of the Vibhaṅgas and the Khandhakas were as profound and accurate as that of the compiler of the Parivāra, many puzzles, some almost insoluble, might arise and many references be wrongly ascribed to other parts of the Vinaya, thus creating a deeper confusion. Throughout Section Prv.3, for example, and throughout Section Prv.9, the offence under review has to be recognized from one word only, for that is all that is provided for its identification. The Ven. Buddhaghosa, though undoubtedly extremely brief, meets this challenge and gives just enough information for the purpose, sometimes mentioning the type of offence arising from this or that action. For example, Vin-a.1307 on Prv.3, verse 20, reads: moho amūlakena cā ti mohanake pācittiya-sikkhāpadañ ca amūlakena saṃghādisesena anuddhamšana-sikkhāpadañ ca. It is thus shown that the former action is to be traced, through the word mohanaka, to the Expiation group, and the latter, through the word anuddhamāna, to the Formal Meeting group. Again, on Section Prv.3, verse 28 the Ven. Buddhaghosa's explanation at Vin-a.1309 attests that pūva-paccaya-joti ca are to be taken to stand for three sikkhāpadas. Then, too, though the Ven. Buddhaghosa thus keeps one on the right lines and also prevents one from attributing such comparatively common key-words as datvā or vikāle (see Vin-a.1307, Vin-a.1311) to the wrong sikkhāpada, all the same it has been a work of formidable detection to trace, from no more than the minimum of words, all the sources in the other parts of the Vinaya. Yet, owing to the Ven. Buddhaghosa's remarkable accuracy and efficiency, I have been able to supply most, though not quite all, of the references to these other parts. It is certain that without the labours of this great commentator this annotated translation of the Parivāra could neither have been correct nor brought to a conclusion. My debt to him is beyond all reckoning, and is one that it is an honour to acknowledge.

¹ MN-a.iv.116, SN-a.ii.203, Vb-a.432 give much briefer versions, but all with the same intent. Anāgatavaṃsa merely says that after the disappearance of the Jātakas, the Vinaya will disappear, but it does not give the stages of the disappearance.

BD.6.xxxv

Of my contemporaries, I have to thank Dr. W. Rahula and the Ven. Dr. H. Saddhatissa for their helpful elucidations or confirmations of some of the terms I had not met in the other parts of the Vinaya. I wish also to offer my gratitude to Professor A.K. Warder not only for reminding me of my reference in BD.1, Introduction, p.v, to the need for a complete as against a partial translation of the Vinaya, but also for his interest throughout the progress of this work. The more I have worked at Parivāra the more I have become convinced that it is a very useful guide, in particular its earlier Chapters, to the contents of the Vinaya-piṭaka. I have become convinced also that only a translator of the other parts should attempt a translation of the Parivāra if it is to act as this useful guide. For unless the same terminology were used throughout the whole translation, which might be difficult for a second translator, the Parivāra translation would lose much of its point and purpose. Most of the words in Vinaya are terms with a definite meaning and often a technical one. Consistency in translation is therefore the chief, perhaps the only, means of identification.

I.B. HORNER
London, 1965.

1.1. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON THE LAYING-DOWN-WHERE

Praise to the Lord, the Perfected One, the Fully Self-Awakened One

PĀRĀJIKA

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 1

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1

BD.6.1

Vin.5.1

Where¹ was that which is the first offence involving Defeat laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One? Concerning whom? On what subject? Is there there a laying down, a supplementary laying down, a laying down that has not (yet) occurred²; a laying down (that holds good) everywhere, a laying down (that holds good only) for certain districts; a laying down that is shared,³ a laying down that is not shared; a laying down for one (Order only), a laying down for both (Orders)⁴; plunged into which, included in which of the five recitations of the Pātimokkha⁵; by which recital does one come to the recital; of the four fallings away⁶ which falling away; of the seven classes of offence which class of offence; of the six origins of offences¹ by how many origins does (a monk) originate (the offence); of the four legal questions² which legal question; of the seven (ways for) the deciding (of a legal question)³ by how many decidings is it stopped; what there is Discipline, what there is pertaining to Discipline⁴; what there is the Pātimokkha, what there is pertaining to the Pātimokkha⁵; what is falling away,⁶ what is success,⁷ what is practice⁸? Because of how many reasons⁹ was the first offence involving Defeat laid down by the Lord? Who train themselves? Who have trained themselves in the training¹⁰? In what state¹¹? Who know by heart? Whose is the Utterance? By whom has it been conveyed¹²?

¹ For these questions cf. Vin.2.286; also Vin-a.13f., DN-a.12. The “supplementary laying down”, anupaññatti, refers to an addition, correction, corollary or adjustment made to a rule already laid down. Sometimes more than one adjustment had to be made. ² anuppannapaññatti; this is an amendment that has not yet been made; if made it would amend a rule already laid down. ³ sādhāraṇa, shared according to Vin-a.1302 by monks and nuns.

⁴ Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 22 notes this ninefold laying down as it is to here. ⁵ Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 2 enumerates five recitals in the Monks' Pātimokkha: recital of the source (nidāna), of the Pārājika, of the Saṅghādisesa, of the undetermined (offences), and of “the following” (vitthāra, the extension, the detail). ⁶ In moral habit, good habits, right view, right mode of livelihood. (Cf. Vin.2.242).

BD.6.2

“Where was that which is the first offence involving Defeat laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One?”¹³ It was laid down in Vesālī.¹⁴

“Concerning whom?” Concerning Sudinna the Kalandaka.

¹ The six are given at Vin.2.90 and are all various combinations of offences originating from body, speech and mind. See also Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 22; and below, Index I. ² Given at Vin.2.88, Vin.3.164. ³ Given at Vin.4.207. ⁴ abhivinaya. See abhivinaye vineturū at Vin.1.64. Taken by Vin-a.990 however to mean the whole of the Vinaya-piṭaka; but Vin-a.1303 appears to think otherwise, saying in its exegesis of vibhatti abhivinayo that “vibhatti is called padabhājaniya (the Old Commentary); vibhatti is just a name for analysis (vibhaṅga)”. Vibhatti also means division, classification. ⁵ adhipātimokkha, a word that apparently does not occur elsewhere in Vinaya, except below, p.2, where all these questions are answered, and where it is called vibhatti (see previous note). The Commentary says nothing. The word adhipātimokkha occurs at MN.ii.245 (see Middle Length Sayings iii.31, n.4 “concerning the Obligations”). ⁶ vipatti, unsuccess, failure. At Vin.1.63, falling away is from moral habit, good habits (ajjhācara, see BD.4.82, n.5) and right view (atidiṭṭhi, see BD.4.83, n.1); see also Vin.1.171f., Vin.2.4. At Vin.2.22f., Vin.2.88f., Vin.2.90f. the fourth falling away is added, that of falling away from a right mode of livelihood; also at Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 22. At Vin.2.241 the first four suspensions of the Pātimokkha are concerned with these fallings away. Three kinds are given at AN.i.268, AN.i.270, two kinds at DN.iii.213. ⁷ sampatti, opposite of vipatti, achievement, attainment. Three kinds at Ne.126, śīla samādhi paññā; another three at Dhp-a.iii.183, manussa, devaloka, nibbāna. ⁸ paṭipatti, also behaviour, progress. It is not possible to reproduce the play of these words ending in -patti, to which ā-patti also belongs. ⁹ atthavasa; the 10 given at Vin.2.202, Vin.3.21. Defined at Vin-a.223 as well as below. ¹⁰ sikkhitasikkhā as at Vin.4.122, Vin.4.343, but there of a female probationer training for 2 years in 6 rules. ¹¹ kattha-ṭhitam, in what condition or state? ¹² ken’ ābhata, by whom handed down, transmitted? ¹³ This first Pārājika or offence involving Defeat is given at Vin.3.1-40. ¹⁴ Vin.3.15ff.

“On what subject?” On the subject of Sudinna the Kalandaka’s indulging in sexual intercourse with his former wife.¹

Vin.5.2

“Is there there a laying down, a supplementary laying down, a laying down that has not (yet) occurred?” There is one laying down,² two supplementary laying downs,³ for it⁴ there is no laying down that has not (yet) occurred.

BD.6.3

“A laying down (that holds good) everywhere, a laying down (that holds good only) for certain districts?” A laying down (that holds good) everywhere.

“A laying down that is shared, a laying down that is not shared?” A laying down that is shared.⁵

“A laying down for one (Order), a laying down for both (Orders)?” A laying down for both (Orders).⁶

“Plunged into which, included in which of the five recitations of the Pātimokkha?” Plunged into the source,⁷ included in the source.

“By which recital does one come to the recital?” By the second recital one comes to the recital.⁸

¹ Bu-Pj.1. ² Vin.3.21. ³ Vin.3.22, Vin.3.23. ⁴ tasmim, presumably for this rule, sutta or dhamma. ⁵ There are 8 Pārājika rules for nuns. The first one is “shared” with monks, therefore it is not given in the Nuns’ Pārājika Section (beginning at Vin.4.211). According to Vin-a.1302 it reads “whatever nun, with desire (or intention, will), should indulge in sexual intercourse even with an animal, is one who is defeated, she is not in communion”. This is the same as the first anupāññatti (the first amendment) for monks (Vin.3.22) and reading nun and monk respectively, but the word chandaso, with desire, occurs only in the nuns’ rule. ⁶ Vin-a.1303 says “laying down that is shared” has the same meaning as “laying down for both (Orders)”, only the phrasing being different. ⁷ nidānogadha means “if he has an offence, he should declare it—here plunged into the source means the fact of entering all offences”—so Vin-a.1303 which adds that this word and the next are the same. It seems a little difficult to accept this interpretation if we take the “source” as the first of the five recitals of the Pātimokkha, see above, BD.6.1, n.5. ⁸ The second recital is that of the 4 Pārājika rules (dhammā), Vin-a.1303, Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 2. See BD.6.1, n.6 above. Thus the meaning appears to be that the rules the second division of the Pātimokkha is the recital of the Pārājika rules.

“Of the four fallings away which falling away?” The falling away in moral habit.¹

“Of the seven classes of offence which class of offence?” The Defeat-class of offence. Of the six origins of offences by how many origins does (a monk) originate (the offence)? He originates it by one origin—he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.²

BD.6.4

“Of the four legal questions which legal question?” The legal question concerning offences.³

“Of the seven decidings (of a legal question) by how many decidings is it stopped?” It is stopped by two decidings: by a verdict in the presence of,⁴ by the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement.⁵

“What there is Discipline, what there is pertaining to Discipline?” A laying down is Discipline, the analysis⁶ (in the Old Commentary) is pertaining to Discipline.

“What there is the Pātimokkha, what there is pertaining to the Pātimokkha?” A laying down is the Pātimokkha, the analysis (in the Old Commentary) is pertaining to the Pātimokkha.

“What is falling away?” Lack of self-control⁷ is falling away.

“What is success?” Self-control⁸ is success.

“What is the practice?” Saying, “I will not act in such a way,” undertaking them for as long as he lives till the end of his life,⁹ and training himself in the rules of training.

“Because of how many reasons was the first offence involving Defeat laid down by the Lord?” Because of ten reasons was the first offence involving Defeat laid down by the Lord: for the excellence of the Order, for the comfort of the Order, for the control of evil-minded men, for the living in ease of well behaved monks, for the restraint of the cankers belonging to the here-now, for the combating of cankers belonging to future states, for the benefit of non-believers, for an increase in the number of believers, for establishing the true Dhamma, for help¹ with Discipline.²

¹ Vin-a.1303 says “the first 2 classes of offence are falling away from moral habit (failure in it). The remaining five classes are falling away from good habits (or behaviour). False or extreme views are falling away from (right) view. There is falling away from right livelihood when any one of the 6 rules of training laid down for the sake of livelihood is transgressed”.

² This is the fourth of the six origins of offences spoken of at Vin.2.90. ³ The third of the legal questions. ⁴ sammukhāvinaya, see BD.3.153, n.2. ⁵ paṭiññātakaraṇa, see BD.3.153, n.5. ⁶ vibhatti, see above, BD.6.2, n.1. ⁷ asaṃvara is vitikkama, transgression, Vin-a.1303.

⁸ saṃvara is avittikkama, non-transgression, Vin-a.1303. At Ds.1342 non-transgression by body or by speech or by body and speech are soracca, restraint, gentleness, which is the whole moral habit. ⁹ āpāṇahoṭṭika, the (end-)point of breathing. The word is found at MN.ii.120, Tha-ap.504, Mi.397, Vism.10.

BD.6.5

“Who train themselves?” Learners³ and ordinary people who are morally good.⁴

“Who have trained themselves in the training?” Arahants have trained themselves in the training.

“In what state?” The state of desiring the training.

“Who know by heart?” Those who know by heart the procedure of these.⁵

“Whose is the Utterance?” It is the Utterance of the Lord, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One.

“By whom has it been conveyed?” It has been conveyed by a succession (of teachers):⁶

Upāli, Dāsaka, as well as Soṇaka, similarly Siggava,
With Moggali’s son as fifth—
these in the glorious (is)land of Jambusiri.

Vin.5.3

Then Mahinda, Iṭṭiya, similarly Sambala, and the learned Bhaddanāma—
These great beings, of great wisdom, coming here⁷ from India,

¹ anuggaha. Two kinds given at It.p.98, āmisā- and dhamma-. ² See Vin.3.21. ³ sekha, one who is training, an “initiate”; one of the seven kinds who has attained any of the four ways and the first three fruitions. Defined at MN-a.i.40. ⁴ putkujjanakalyāṇaka. Kalyāṇa is good, lovely. This compound occurs at Vism.14, Vism.46, and is defined at Vism.47 as the proximate cause for arahantship. Cf. MN-a.i.40 where kalyāṇaputhujjana is defined. ⁵ yesaṃ vattati. Vin-a.1303 says “all are proficient in these: the Vinaya-piṭaka and the Commentary. What do they know by heart? This first Pārājika according to the Pali and the meaning”. ⁶ These verses occur at Vin-a.62f. (translated Inception of Discipline p.55f.) where an account and of the succession of teachers (ācariyaparampara) is given. See also Vin-a.235, and Cf. Mahāvamsa xii.7; Dipavamsa xii.12; Mahābodhivamsa 116; Atthasālinī 32. ⁷ I.e. Ceylon.

Taught the Vinaya-piṭaka in Tambapaṇṇi.¹
 They also taught the five Nikāyas and the seven (Abhidhamma) treatises.

Then the wise Ariṭṭha² and the learned Tissadatta,³
 The skilled Kālasumana⁴ and the Elder named Dīgha and the learned Dīghasumana,⁵

And another Kālasumana,
 the Elder Nāga, and Buddharakkhita,
 And the wise Elder Tissa
 and the learned Elder Deva,

BD.6.6

And another wise Sumana
 proficient in the Vinaya, Cūlanāga of great learning,
 unassailable as an elephant,

The Elder named Dhammapālita, and Rohaṇa revered by the virtuous,
 His pupil named Khema of great wisdom and learned in the Three Piṭakas,

Who in his wisdom shone with great splendour in the island like the king of stars, Upatissa the wise,
 and Phussadeva the great orator,

And another wise Sumana,
 he of great learning named Puppha,
 The great orator Mahāsīva skilful in all the contents of the Piṭaka,

And another wise Upāli

¹ Possibly this was at first the name of a certain district in Ceylon, then of the whole island.

² See Vin-a.102ff. ³ Pupils of Ariṭṭha. ⁴ Pupils of Ariṭṭha. ⁵ Pupils of Ariṭṭha.

proficient in the Vinaya, Mahānāga of great wisdom,
skilled in the tradition of the True Dhamma,

And again the wise Abhaya skilled in all the contents of the Piṭaka,
And the wise Elder Tissa
proficient in the Vinaya,

His pupil named Puppha of great wisdom and much learning
Who while protecting the Teaching established himself in India,

The wise Cūlābhaya
proficient in the Vinaya,
And the wise Elder Tissa
skilled in the tradition of the True Dhamma,

And the wise Cūladeva
proficient in the Vinaya,
And the wise Elder Siva
skilled in all the contents of the Vinaya.

These sinless sages of great wisdom,
knowing the Vinaya and skilled in the Way,
Proclaimed the Vinaya-piṭaka
in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKĀ 2

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.2

“Where was that which is the second offence involving Defeat laid down by that Lord who knows ... ?” It was laid down in Rājagaha.¹

BD.6.7

“Concerning whom?” Concerning Dhaniya the potter’s son.

“On what subject?” On the subject of Dhaniya the potter’s son taking pieces of wood belonging to the king when they had not been given to him.²

¹ Vin.3.41ff. ² Vin.3.44.

There is one laying down,¹ one supplementary laying down.²

“Of the six origins of offences by how many origins does (a monk) originate (the offence)?” He originates it by three origins—it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Vin.5.4

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 3

“Where was that which is the third offence involving Defeat laid down ... ?” It was laid down in Vesālī.³

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.3

“Concerning whom?” Concerning several monks.

“On what subject?” On the subject of several monks depriving one another of life.⁴

There is one laying down,⁵ one supplementary laying down.⁶

“Of the six origins of offences by how many origins does (a monk) originate (the offence)?” He originates it by three origins—it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 4

“Where was that which is the fourth offence involving Defeat laid down ... ?” It was laid down in Vesālī.⁷

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.4

“Concerning whom?” Concerning monks on the banks of the river Vaggumudā.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the monks on the banks of the Vaggumudā speaking praise of each other's state of further-men in front of householders.

There is one laying down,⁸ one supplementary laying down.⁹

“Of the six origins of offences by how many origins does (a monk) originate (the offence)?” He originates it by three origins—it may be that he ¹ Vin.3.45. ² Vin.3.46. ³ Vin.3.68ff. ⁴ Vin.3.68ff. ⁵ Vin.3.71. ⁶ Vin.3.73. ⁷ Vin.3.87ff.

⁸ Vin.3.90. ⁹ Vin.3.91.

originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Concluded are the four Offences involving Defeat

THIS IS ITS KEY

Unchastity, taking what is not given,
and the form of men, those who are further—
The four offences involving Defeat without doubt (concern men who) must be destroyed.¹

BD.6.8

SAṄGHĀDISESA

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.1

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One, for the emission of semen using (the hand)? Concerning whom? On what subject? ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1) ... Conditioned by how many reasons was the offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by the Lord for the emission of semen using (the hand)? Who train themselves? Who have trained themselves in the training? In what state? Who know by heart? Whose is the Utterance? By whom has it been conveyed?

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One for the emission of semen using (the hand)?” It was laid down in Sāvattḥī.²

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the venerable Seyyasaka.

¹ chejja-vatthu. This is perhaps a reference to chejja-bhejja, a word occurring in the Old Commentary, on Bu-Pj.2; see Vin.3.47. Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 17, Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 31 takes vatthu (in other contexts) as puggala, a meaning that might apply equally here. At BD.1.191 in my translation of this summary (which occurs at Vin.3.109) I took vatthu as the reason (or subject) for chejja, punishment, maiming. It almost seems that the one meaning implies the other. It also shows that vatthu has no settled meaning but can be made to do duty for several words. ² Vin.3.110.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the venerable Seyyasaka’s having emitted semen using the hand.¹

“Is there there a laying down, a supplementary laying down, a laying down that has not yet) occurred?” There is one laying down,² one supplementary laying down,³ for it there is no laying down that has not (yet) occurred.

“A laying down (that holds good) everywhere, a laying down (that holds good only) for certain districts?” A laying down (that holds good) everywhere.

“A laying down that is shared, a laying down that is not shared?” A laying down that is not shared.

“A laying down for one (Order), a laying down for both (Orders)?” A laying down for one (Order).

“... of the five ... ?” Plunged into the source, included in the source.

BD.6.9

... By the third recital one comes to the recital.⁴

Vin.5.5

... The falling away in moral habit.

... The Formal Meeting-class of offence.

... He originates it by one origin—he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

... The legal question concerning offences.

... It is stopped by two deciding: by a verdict in the presence of, and by the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... (as in Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1) ...

“Conditioned by how many reasons was the offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by the Lord for the emission of semen using (the hand)?” Conditioned by ten reasons was the offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by the Lord for the emission of semen using (the hand): for the excellence of the Order ... for help with Discipline.

“Who train themselves?” Learners and ... (as in Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1) ... in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.2

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One, for the coming into physical contact with a woman?” It was laid down in Sāvattḥī.¹

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the venerable Udāyi.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the venerable Udāyi’s coming into physical contact with a woman.

There is one laying down.²

Of the six origins of an offence (the monk) originates (the offence) by one origin—he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.3

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for offending a woman with lewd words?” It was laid down in Sāvattḥī.³

BD.6.10

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the venerable Udāyi.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the venerable Udāyi’s offending a woman with lewd words.

There is one laying down.⁴

Of the six origins of offences (the monk) originates (the offence) by three origins—it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.4

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for speaking in praise of ministering to sense-pleasures for self in the presence of women-folk?” It was laid down in Sāvattḥī⁵ ...

Concerning the venerable Udāyi ...

¹ hatthena occurs here, as it does at Vin.3. ² Vin.3.112. ³ Vin.3.112. ⁴ See above, BD.6.1, n.6. ¹ Vin.3.119ff. ² Vin.3.120. ³ Vin.3.127ff. ⁴ Vin.3.128. ⁵ Vin.3.133.

On the subject of the venerable Udāyi's speaking in praise of ministering to sense-pleasures for self in the presence of women-folk ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.3).

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for acting as a go-between?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī¹ ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.5

Concerning the venerable Udāyi ...

On the subject of the venerable Udāyi's acting as a go-between ...

There is one laying-down,² one supplementary laying-down³ ...

He originates it by six origins—it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by speech, not by body, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Vin.5.6

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 6

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for begging for having a hut built for oneself?”⁴ It was laid down in Āḷavī⁵

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.6

...

Concerning the monks of Āḷavī ...

On the subject of the monks of Āḷavī begging for having a hut built for themselves ...

BD.6.11

There is one laying-down⁶ ...

He originates it by six origins ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.5).

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 7

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.7

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for having a large vihāra built?” It was laid down at Kosambī¹...

Concerning the venerable Channa ...

The venerable Channa, clearing a site for a vihāra, had a tree that was used as a shrine cut down ...

There is one laying down² ...

He originates it by six origins ...

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 8

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.8

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for defaming a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat?” It was laid down in Rājagaha³ ...

Concerning the monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka

...

The monks who were the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed the venerable Dabba the Mallian with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat ...

There is one laying down⁴ ...

He originates it by three origins⁵ ...

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 9

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.9

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for defaming a monk with a charge of an offence involving Defeat, taking up some point as a pretext in a legal question really belonging to something else?” It was laid down at Rājagaha⁶ ...

Concerning the monks who were the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka ...

¹ Vin.3.138. ² Vin.3.138 ³ Vin.3.139. ⁴ saññācikā. According to Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 40 this means sayam yācanā ... attano yācanā. My “begging in company” at BD.1.246 probably should be amended. See also Old Commentary at Vin.3.148. ⁵ Vin.3.149. ⁶ Vin.3.149. ¹ Vin.3.155ff. ² Vin.3.156. ³ Vin.3.158ff. ⁴ Vin.3.163. ⁵ See Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.2 (adinnādānasadisa, Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 44). ⁶ Vin.3.166ff.

The monks who were the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka defamed the venerable Dabba the Mallian ... really belonging to something else ...

There is one laying down¹ ...

He originates it by three origins² ...

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 10

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for admonishing up to three times a schismatic monk for not giving up (his course)?” It was laid down in Rājagaha³ ...

Concerning Devadatta ...

Devadatta went forward with a schism of an Order that was harmonious

...

There is one laying down⁴ ...

He originates it by one origin—he originates it by body and by speech and by mind ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.10
BD.6.12

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 11

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for admonishing up to three times monks who were throwing in their lot with a schism for not giving up (their course)?” It was laid down in Rājagaha⁵ ...

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks were throwing in their lot with and taking part in Devadatta's proceeding for a schism in the Order ...

There is one laying down⁶ ...

By one origin ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.11

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 12

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down ... for admonishing up to three times a monk who was difficult to speak

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.12

¹ Vin.3.167-8. ² Vin.3.167-8. ³ Vin.3.171. ⁴ Vin.3.172. ⁵ Vin.3.174ff. ⁶ Vin.3.175.

to for not giving up (his course)?” It was laid down in Kosambī¹ ...
 Vin.5.7 Concerning the venerable Channa ...
 When the venerable Channa was being spoken to by monks according to Dhamma he reckoned himself as one not to be spoken to ...
 There is one laying down² ...
 By one origin ...

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.13

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down
 ... for admonishing up to three times a monk who brought a family into disrepute for not giving up (his course)?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī³ ...

Concerning the monks who were the followers of Assaji and Punabbasu

...

BD.6.13

Monks, through the Order, carried out the act of banishment against the monks who were followers of Assaji and Punabbasu and goes on a wrong course through partiality, goes on a wrong course through hatred, goes on a wrong course through confusion, goes on a wrong course through fear⁴ so as to disgrace⁵ them ...

There is one laying down⁶ ...

By one origin ...

Concluded are the thirteen offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order

ITS SUMMARY

Emission, and bodily contact, lewd talk, and one's own pleasure,
 Acting as a go-between, and a hut, and a vihāra, without foundation, /
 And some point, and a schism, likewise siding in with, Difficult to speak to, and bringing a family into disrepute—the thirteen offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.⁷

MONKS' ANIYATA 1

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ay.1

“Where was that which is the first Undetermined offence laid down by that Lord ... ?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī.¹

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the venerable Udāyi.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the venerable Udāyi’s sitting together with women-folk in a secret place on a secluded convenient seat.

“Is there there ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Ss.1) ...

By the fourth recital one comes to the recital.

“Of the four fallings away which falling away?” It might be a falling away in moral habit, it might be a falling away in good behaviour.

“Of the seven classes of offence which class of offence?” It might be a Defeat-class of offence, it might be a Formal Meeting-class of offence, it might be an Expiation-class of offence.

“Of the six origins of offences by how many origins does (a monk) originate (the offence)?” He originates it by one origin—he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech ...

BD.6.14

The legal question concerning offences ...

It is stopped by three deciding: it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by the covering over (as) with grass² ...

“Conditioned by how many reasons was the first Undetermined offence laid down by the Lord?” Conditioned by ten reasons was the first Undetermined offence laid down by the Lord: for the excellence of the Order ... for help with Discipline.

Vin.5.8

“Who train themselves?” Learners and ... (as in Bu.-Pj.1) ... in the island of Tambapaṇṇi.

MONKS' ANIYATA 2

Prv.1.1:Bu-Ay.2

“Where was that which is the second Undetermined offence laid down by the Lord ... ?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī¹ ...

Concerning the venerable Udāyi ...

On the subject of the venerable Udāyi's sitting down together with a woman, the one with the other, in a secret place.²

“Is there there ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Ay.1) ...

“... which class of offence?” It might be a Formal Meeting-class of offence, it might be an Expiation-class of offence.

“Of the six origins of offences, by how many origins does (a monk) originate (the offence)?” He originates it by three origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind ...

... and a covering over (as) with grass.

Concluded are the two Undetermined offences

ITS SUMMARY

Convenient and so and likewise, but not thus.

Such Undetermined matters are well laid down by the best of Buddhas.³

NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYADIVISION 1: ON KAṬHINA CLOTH*MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 1Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.1
BD.6.15

“Where was the offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture laid down by that Lord ... for one who exceeds the ten day (period for wearing) an extra robe?”

¹ Vin.3.177ff. ² Vin.3.178. ³ Vin.3.179ff. ⁴ These, chandaḡāmita, etc., are goes by the four wrong courses (agati). See BD.1.323, n.7. ⁵ pāpeti, to disgrace, denigrate, as at Vin.1.183, Vin-a.625. The verbal noun pāpana, denigrating is used at Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 48. See Vism.29. ⁶ Vin.3.184. ⁷ Verses as at Vin.3.186. ¹ Vin.3.187ff. ² tiṇavatthāraka, see BD.3.154, BD.5.115. ¹ Vin.3.191. ² Vin.3.191. ³ As at Vin.3.194.

It was laid down in Vesālī.¹

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the group of six monks.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the group of six monks wearing an extra robe.

One laying down,² one supplementary laying down.³

Of the six origins of offences he originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 2

“Where was the offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture laid down ... for one who is separated from his three robes even for one night?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī⁴ ...

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks, entrusting (their) robes to the hands of (other) monks, set out on a tour of the country with (only) an inner and an upper robe ...

One laying down,⁵ one supplementary laying down.⁶

Of the six origins ... (as in Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.1).

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.2

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 3

“Where was the offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture laid down ... for one who after he has accepted robe-material not at the right time exceeds (the period of) a month (before he has it made up)? It was laid down in Sāvattihī⁷ ...

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks, having accepted robe-material not at a right time, exceeded the month ...

One laying down,⁸ one supplementary laying down.⁹

Of the six origins ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.3

¹ Vin.3.195. ² Vin.3.196. ³ Vin.3.196. ⁴ Vin.3.198. ⁵ Vin.3.199. ⁶ Vin.3.199.

⁷ Vin.3.202ff. ⁸ Vin.3.203; but there is what is laid down first is called anujānāmi, “I allow,” is an allowance as against a sikkhāpada, a rule of training, which here comes second. Apparently, therefore, the paññatti here refers to anujānāmi and sikkhāpada. ⁹ Vin.3.203.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 4

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.4

BD.6.16

Vin.5.9

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who has a soiled robe washed by a nun who is not a relation?” It was laid down in Sāvathī¹ ...

Concerning the venerable Udāyi ...

The venerable Udāyi had a soiled robe washed by a nun who was not a relation ...

One laying down.²

Of the six origins of offences he originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 5

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.5

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who accepts a robe from the hand of a nun who is not a relation?” It was laid down in Rājagaha³ ...

Concerning the venerable Udāyi ...

The venerable Udāyi accepted a robe from the hand of a nun who was not a relation ...

One laying down,⁴ one supplementary laying down⁵ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 6

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.6

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who asks a man or woman householder who is not a relation (of his) for a robe?” It was laid down in Sāvathī⁶ ...

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan asked the son of a (great) merchant who was not a relation (of his) for a robe ...

One laying down,⁷ one supplementary laying down⁸ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.7

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who asks a man or woman householder who is not a relation for more robe-material than that (which they had invited him to accept)?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī¹ ...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks, not knowing moderation, asked for much robe-material ...

One laying down² ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 8

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.8

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, before being invited, approaches a householder who is not a relation and puts forward a consideration with regard to a robe?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī³ ...

BD.6.17

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan, before he was invited, approached a householder who was not a relation and put forward a consideration with regard to a robe ...

One laying down⁴ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 9

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.9

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, before being invited, approaches householders who are not relations (of his) and puts forward a consideration with regard to a robe?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī⁵ ...

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan, before he was invited, approached householders who were not relations (of his) and put forward a consideration with regard to a robe ...

One laying down⁶ ...

¹ Vin.3.205ff. ² Vin.3.206. ³ Vin.3.207ff. ⁴ Vin.3.209. ⁵ Vin.3.209. ⁶ Vin.3.210ff.

⁷ Vin.3.211. ⁸ Vin.3.212. ¹ Vin.3.213. ² Vin.3.214. ³ Vin.3.215. ⁴ Vin.3.216.

⁵ Vin.3.217. ⁶ Vin.3.218.

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 10

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.10

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who succeeds in obtaining a robe by stating (he wants one) more than three times (or) by standing (silently) for it more than six times?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī¹ ...

Vin.5.10

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan, on being told by a lay-follower, “Wait this one day (only), revered sir,” did not wait ...

One laying down² ...

He originates it by six origins.

The First Division: that on Kaṭhina-cloth

DIVISION 2: ON SILK

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 11

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.11

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who has a rug made mixed with silk?” It was laid down in Āḷavi³ ...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks, having approached silk-makers, spoke thus: “Sirs, hatch many silk-worms, give them to us, for we want to make a rug mixed with silk” ...

One laying down⁴ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 12

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.12

BD.6.18

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who has a rug made of pure black sheep's wool?” It was laid down in Vesālī⁵ ...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks had a rug made of pure black sheep's wool ...

¹ Vin.3.219. ² Vin.3.221; more clearly stated above. ³ Vin.3.224. ⁴ Vin.3.224.

⁵ Vin.3.225.

One laying down¹ ...
He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 13

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who is having a new rug made without taking a portion of white (wools) and a portion of reddish-brown colours?” It was laid down in Sāvathī² ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.13

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks, taking only a little white for the seam, all the same had a rug made of pure black sheep's wool ...

One laying down³ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 14

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who has a rug made every year?” It was laid down in Sāvathī⁴ ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.14

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks had a rug made every year ...

One laying down,⁵ one supplementary laying down⁶ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 15

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who is having a new rug to sit upon made without taking a piece the breadth of the accepted span from all round an old rug?” It was laid down in Sāvathī⁷...

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.15

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks, discarding their rugs, took upon themselves the practice of forest-dwellers, the practice of almsmen, the practice of those who wear rag-robcs ...

One laying down⁸ ...

He originates it by six origins.

¹ Vin.3.225. ² Vin.3.226. ³ Vin.3.226. ⁴ Vin.3.227. ⁵ Vin.3.228. ⁶ Vin.3.229.

⁷ Vin.3.230ff. ⁸ Vin.3.232.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 16

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.16

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, having accepted sheep’s wool, exceeds the three yojanas (for which it may be conveyed)?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī¹...

BD.6.19

Concerning a certain monk ...

A certain monk, having received sheep’s wool, exceeded the three yojanas (for which it may be conveyed) ...

Vin.5.11

One laying down² ...

He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 17

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.17

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who has sheep’s wool washed by a nun who is not a relation?” It was laid down among the Sakyans³ ...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks had sheep’s wool washed by nuns who were not relations ...

One laying down⁴ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 18

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.18

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who accepts gold and silver?” It was laid down in Rājagaha⁵ ...

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan accepted gold and silver ...

One laying down⁶ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 19

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.19

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who engages in various transactions in which gold and silver are used?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī¹

...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks engaged in various transactions in which gold and silver were used ...

One laying down² ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 20

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.20

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who engaged in various transactions in which there was bartering?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī³ ...

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan engaged in bartering with a wanderer ...

One laying down⁴ ...

He originates it by six origins.

BD.6.20

The Second Division: that on Silk

DIVISION 3: ON A BOWL

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 21

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.21

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who exceeds the ten days (for keeping) an extra bowl?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī⁵ ...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks kept an extra bowl ...

One laying down,⁶ one supplementary laying down⁷ ...

¹ Vin.3.233ff. ² Vin.3.233ff. ³ Vin.3.234. ⁴ Vin.3.235. ⁵ Vin.3.236. ⁶ Vin.3.237.

¹ Vin.3.239. ² Vin.3.239. ³ Vin.3.240. ⁴ Vin.3.241. ⁵ Vin.3.242. ⁶ Vin.3.243.

⁷ Vin.3.243.

He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 22

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.22

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for who gets another new bowl in exchange for a bowl that has been mended in less than five places?” It was laid down among the Sakyans¹ ...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks, when their bowls were only a little broken, only a little chipped and scratched, asked for many bowls ...

One laying down² ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 23

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.23

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, after he has accepted medicines, exceeds the seven days (for which they may be stored)?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī³ ...

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks, having accepted medicines, exceeded the seven days ...

One laying down⁴ ...

He originates it by two origins (as in the Kaṭhina-robe Section.)⁵

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 24

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.24

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, while more than a month of the hot weather remains, is looking about for robe-material as a cloth for the rains?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī⁶ ...

BD.6.21

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks, while more than a month of the hot weather remained, looked about for robe-material as a cloth for the rains ...

¹ Vin.3.244. ² Vin.3.246. ³ Vin.3.248. ⁴ Vin.3.251. ⁵ This must refer to the first offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture. ⁶ Vin.3.252.

One laying down¹ ...
He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 25

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, having himself given a robe to a monk, angry and displeased tore it away?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī²

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.25

...

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan, having himself given a robe to a monk, angry and displeased tore it away ...

One laying down³ ...

He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 26

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, himself asking for yarn, should have robe-material woven by weavers?” It was laid down in Rājagaha⁴ ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.26

Concerning the group of six monks ...

The group of six monks, themselves asking for yarn, had robe-material woven by weavers ...

One laying down⁵ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 27

“... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, before being invited by a householder who is not a relation approaches weavers and puts forward a consideration with regard to robe-material?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī⁶

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.27

...

Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ...

¹ Vin.3.252. ² Vin.3.254. ³ Vin.3.255. ⁴ Vin.3.256. ⁵ Vin.3.256. ⁶ Vin.3.257.

The venerable Upananda the Sakyan, before being invited, approached the weavers of a householder who was not a relation (of his) and put forward a consideration with regard to robe-material ...

One laying down¹ ...

He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 28

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.28

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who, having accepted a special robe, exceeds the robe-season (in the time during which he lays aside the robe-material)?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī² ...

BD.6.22

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks, having accepted robe-material, exceeded the robe-season

...

One laying down³ ...

He originates it by two origins, (as in the Kaṭhina-robe Section.)⁴

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 29

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.29

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who is separated from any one of his three robes for more than six nights, having laid it aside in a house?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī⁵ ...

Concerning several monks ...

Several monks were separated from a certain one of their three robes for more than six nights, having laid it aside in a house ...

Vin.5.13

One laying down⁶ ...

He originates it by two origins, (as in the Kaṭhina-robe Section.)

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 30

Prv.1.1:Bu-NP.30

“ ... involving Forfeiture laid down for one who knowingly appropriates to himself an apportioned benefit belonging to the Order?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī⁷ ...

Concerning the group of six monks ...

¹ Vin.3.259. ² Vin.3.260. ³ Vin.3.261. ⁴ See Vin.5.88. ⁵ Vin.3.262. ⁶ Vin.3.263.

⁷ Vin.3.265.

The group of six monks knowingly appropriated to themselves an apportioned benefit belonging to the Order ...

One laying down¹ ...

He originates it by three origins.

The Third Division: that on a Bowl

Concluded are the thirty offences of Expiation involving Forfeiture

ITS SUMMARY

Ten (nights), one night, and a month, and washing, acceptance,
And on one who is not a relation, specially laid aside, by two, by a messenger,² /
Silk, two on pure portions, for six years, a rug,
And two on (sheep's) wool, on taking, two on various transactions,³ /
Two on bowls, and on medicine, for the rains, the fifth on a gift, Oneself, having woven, a special robe, dangerous, and belonging to the Order.

BD.6.23

PĀCITTIYA

DIVISION 1: ON LYING

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 1

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.1

“Where was that offence of Expiation laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, Fully Self-Awakened One, for telling a conscious lie?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī.⁴

“Concerning whom?” Concerning Hatthaka the Sakyan.

“On what subject?” On the subject of Hatthaka the Sakyan who, when he was talking with followers of other sects, having denied, acknowledged, and having acknowledged, denied.

One laying down.⁵

¹ Vin.3.265 ² These two first lines occur at Vin.3.223 though the second line reads there “just three on non-relations”, aññātakāni tīṇ'eva, which is thus clearer in its reference to the ten offences than the aññātakāṇ ca, uddissa above. ³ These two lines are at Vin.3.242, and the next two at Vin.3.266. ⁴ Vin.4.1. ⁵ Vin.4.2.

Of the six origins of offences he originates (the offence) by three origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 2

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.2

Offence of Expiation for insulting speech ... It was laid down in Sāvaththī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks, quarrelling with well behaved monks, insulted the well behaved monks ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 3

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.3

Offence of Expiation for the slander of monks ... It was laid down in Sāvaththī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks brought slander against monks for quarrelling, for disputing, for engaging in contention ... One laying down² ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 4

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.4

Offence of Expiation for making one who is not ordained speak Dhamma line by line ... It was laid down in Sāvaththī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks made lay-followers speak Dhamma line by line ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by speech, not by body, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body.

Vin.5.14

BD.6.24

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 5

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.5

Offence of Expiation for lying down in a sleeping-place for more than two or three nights with one who is not ordained ... It was laid down in Āḷavī ... Concerning several monks. Several monks lay down in a sleeping-place with one who was not ordained ... One laying down,⁴ one supplementary laying down ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

¹ Vin.4.6. ² Vin.4.12. ³ Vin.4.14. ⁴ Vin.4.16.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 6

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.6

Offence of Expiation for lying down in a sleeping-place with a woman ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the venerable Anuruddha ... The venerable Anuruddha lay down in a sleeping-place with a woman ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by two origins, (as) in Sheep's Wool.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.7

Offence of Expiation for teaching Dhamma to a woman in more than five or six sentences ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the venerable Udāyi ... The venerable Udāyi taught Dhamma to a woman ... One laying down,³ two supplementary layings down⁴ ... He originates it by two origins, (as) in Dhamma line by line.⁵

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 8

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.8

Offence of Expiation for speaking, when it is a fact, of a condition of further-men to one who is not ordained ... It was laid down in Vesālī ... Concerning monks on the banks of the (river) Vaggumudā ... The monks on the banks of the Vaggumudā spoke praise to householders of one another's conditions of further-men ... One laying down⁶ ... He originates it by three origins: it may be that he originates by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by speech, not by body, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech, not by mind.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 9

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.9

Offence of Expiation for speaking to one who is not ordained of a monk's very bad offence ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks spoke to one who was not ordained of a monk's very bad offence ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins ...

¹ Vin.4.19. ² Bu-NP:16. See Vin.5.88. ³ Vin.4.21. ⁴ Vin.4.21, Vin.4.22. ⁵ Bu-Pc.4. See Vin.5.88. ⁶ Vin.4.25.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 10

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.10
BD.6.25

Offence of Expiation for digging the ground ... It was laid down in Āḷavī ... Concerning the monks of Āḷavī ... The monks of Āḷavī dug the ground ... One laying down² ... He originates it by three origins ...

The First Division: that on Lying³

DIVISION 2: ON VEGETABLE GROWTH

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 11

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.11
Vin.5.15

Offence of Expiation for destruction of vegetable growth ... It was laid down in Āḷavī ... Concerning the monks of Āḷavī ... The monks of Āḷavī cut down a tree ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 12

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.12

Offence of Expiation in evasion, in vexing ... It was laid down in Kosambī ... Concerning the venerable Channa ... The venerable Channa, on being examined for an offence in the midst of the Order, shelved the question by (asking) another ... One laying down,⁵ one supplementary laying down⁶ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 13

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.13

Offence of Expiation in making (someone) look down upon, in criticizing ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka ... Monks who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka made monks look down upon the venerable Dabba the Mallian

¹ Vin.4.31. ² Vin.4.33. ³ Called simply First Division at Vin.4.33. ⁴ Vin.4.34. ⁵ Vin.4.36.

⁶ Vin.4.36.

... One laying down,¹ one supplementary laying down² ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 14

Offence of Expiation for setting forth without asking (for permission to do so) and not having removed a couch or chair or a mattress or stool belonging to the Order that he had spread in the open air ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks set forth without asking (for permission to do so) and not having removed lodgings belonging to the Order that they had spread in the open air ... One laying down,³ one supplementary laying down⁴ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Kaṭhina-cloth.⁵

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.14

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 15

Offence of Expiation for setting forth without asking (for permission to do so) and not having removed a sleeping-place he had spread in a vihāra belonging to the Order ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of seventeen monks ... The group of seventeen monks set forth without asking (for permission to do so) and not removing a sleeping, place they had spread in a vihāra belonging to the Order. One laying down⁶ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Kaṭhina-cloth.⁷

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.15

BD.6.26

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 16

Offence of Expiation for lying down in a sleeping-place in a vihāra belonging to the Order knowing that one was encroaching on (the space intended for) a monk who had arrived first ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks lay down in a sleeping-place encroaching on (the space intended for) monks who were Elders ... One laying down⁸ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.16

¹ Vin.4.38. ² Vin.4.38. ³ Vin.4.39, a sikkhāpada, rule of training. ⁴ Vin.4.39-40, an anujānāmi, an allowance. ⁵ Bu-NP.1-Bu-NP.10. ⁶ Vin.4.41. ⁷ See Prv.1.1.Bu-Pc.14 above, also Vin.5.88. ⁸ Vin.4.43.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 17

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.17

Offence of Expiation for throwing out, being angry and displeased, a monk from a vihāra belonging to the Order ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks, angry and displeased, threw out monks from a vihāra belonging to the Order ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

Vin.5.16

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 18

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.18

Offence of Expiation for sitting down on a couch or a chair that has removable feet and is in a lofty cell with an upper part in a vihāra belonging to the Order ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk sat down hastily² on a couch that had removable feet and was in a lofty cell with an upper part in a vihāra belonging to the Order ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 19

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.19

Offence of Expiation for one who, having determined on two or three enclosures, determines on (something) more than that ... It was laid down in Kosambī ... Concerning the venerable Channa ... The venerable Channa again and again had a finished vihāra roofed, again and again had it plastered; the overloaded vihāra fell down ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by six origins.

BD.6.27

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 20

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.20

Offence of Expiation for sprinkling water that he knows contains living things over grass or clay ... It was laid down in Āḷavī ... Concerning the monks of Āḷavī ... The monks of Āḷavī, knowing that the water contained living things, sprinkled (it over) grass and clay ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

¹ Vin.4.44. ² sahasā, see BD.2.255, n.1. ³ Vin.4.46. ⁴ Vin.4.47.

The Second Division: that on Vegetable-growth

DIVISION 3: ON EXHORTATION

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 21

Offence of Expiation for the exhortation of nuns by one who had not been agreed upon ... It was laid down in Sāvattihī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... On the subject of the six monks who exhorted nuns though they had not been agreed upon. "Is there there a laying down, a supplementary laying down, a laying down (for something) that has not (yet) occurred?" There is one laying down,² one supplementary laying down,³ for it there is no laying down (for something) that has not (yet) occurred ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by speech, not by body, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.21

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 22

Offence of Expiation for the exhortation of nuns after the sun has set ... It was laid down in Sāvattihī ... Concerning the venerable Cūlapanthaka ... The venerable Cūlapanthaka exhorted nuns after the sun had set ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by two origins (as) in Dhamma line by line.⁵

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.22

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 23

Offence of Expiation for the exhortation of nuns, after having approached nuns' quarters ... It was laid down among the Sakyans ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks having approached nuns' quarters exhorted the nuns ... One laying down,⁶ one supplementary laying down⁷ ... He originates it by two origins (as in), Kaṭhina-cloth.⁸

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.23

Vin.5.17

¹ Vin.4.49. ² Vin.4.51, a sikkhāpada. ³ Vin.4.51, a long anujānāmi. ⁴ Vin.4.55. ⁵ Bu-Pc.4. See Vin.5.88. ⁶ Vin.4.56. ⁷ Vin.4.57. ⁸ Bu-Pc.23. See Vin.5.88.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 24

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.24

BD.6.28

Offence of Expiation for saying, "Monks are exhorting nuns for the sake of gain" ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks said, "Monks are exhorting nuns for the sake of gain" ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 25

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.25

Offence of Expiation for giving robe-material to a nun who is not a relation ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk gave robe-material to a nun who was not a relation ... One laying down,² one supplementary laying down³ ... He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 26

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.26

Offence of Expiation for sewing robe-material for a nun who is not a relation ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the venerable Udāyi ... The venerable Udāyi sewed robe-material for a nun who was not a relation ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 27

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.27

Offence of Expiation for going along the same highway, having arranged together with a nun ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks went along the same highway, having arranged together with nuns ... One laying down,⁵ one supplementary laying down⁶ ... He originates it by four origins: it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 28

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.28

Offence of Expiation for embarking in one boat, having arranged together with a nun ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks embarked in one boat, having arranged together with nuns ... One laying down,¹ one supplementary laying down² ... He originates it by four origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 29

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.29

Offence of Expiation for eating almsfood knowing it to have been procured through (the intervention of) a nun ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning Devadatta ... Devadatta made use of almsfood knowing it to have been procured through (the intervention of) a nun ... One laying down,³ one supplementary laying down⁴ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

BD.6.29

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 30

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.30

Offence of Expiation for sitting down in a private place together with a nun, the one with the other ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the venerable Udāyi ... The venerable Udāyi sat down in a private place together with a nun, the one with the other ... One laying down⁵ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Vin.5.18

The Third Division: that on Exhortation

DIVISION 4: ON FOOD

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 31

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.31

Offence of Expiation for eating more than (one meal) at a public rest-house ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks, staying on and on, ate at a public rest-house ... One laying down,⁶ one supplementary laying down⁷ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.¹

¹ Vin.4.58. ² Vin.4.59. ³ Vin.4.60. ⁴ Vin.4.61. ⁵ Vin.4.62. ⁶ Vin.4.63. ¹ Vin.4.64.

² Vin.4.65. ³ Vin.4.67. ⁴ Vin.4.67. ⁵ Vin.4.68. ⁶ Vin.4.70. ⁷ Vin.4.70.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 32

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.32

Offence of Expiation in a group-meal ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning Devadatta ... Devadatta and his company ate, having asked and asked among households ... One laying down,² seven supplementary layings down³ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.⁴

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 33

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.33

Offence of Expiation in an out-of-turn meal ... It was laid down in Vesālī ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks, invited somewhere, ate elsewhere ... One laying down,⁵ three supplementary layings down⁶ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Kaṭhina-cloth.⁷

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 34

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.34

Offence of Expiation for, after accepting two or three bowlsful of cake, accepting more than that ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks, not knowing moderation, accepted ... One laying down⁸ ... He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 35

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.35

BD.6.30

Offence of Expiation for partaking of solid food or soft food that is not left over after one has eaten and is satisfied ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks, having eaten and being satisfied, ate elsewhere ... One laying down,⁹ one supplementary laying down¹⁰ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Kaṭhina-cloth.¹¹

¹ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88. ² Vin.4.71. ³ Vin.4.72-74. ⁴ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88.

⁵ Vin.4.77. ⁶ Vin.4.77, Vin.4.78, the third one being an anujānāmi. Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 103 says in what is probably its only reference to the Parivāra that it speaks of four supplementary layings down. ⁷ Bu-NP.1, see Vin.5.88. ⁸ Vin.4.80. ⁹ Vin.4.82. ¹⁰ Vin.4.82

¹¹ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 36

Offence of Expiation for inviting a monk who has eaten and is satisfied to take solid food or soft food that has not been left over ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks, having eaten and being satisfied, invited a monk to take soft food that had not been left over One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.36

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 37

Offence of Expiation for partaking of solid food or soft food at the wrong time ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning the group of seventeen monks ... The group of seventeen monks partook of a meal at the wrong time ... One laying down² ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.³

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.37
Vin.5.19

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 38

Offence of Expiation for partaking of solid food or soft food that had been stored ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the venerable Belaṭṭhasīsa ... The venerable Belaṭṭhasīsa partook of a meal that had been stored ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.⁵

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.38

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 39

Offence of Expiation for eating sumptuous foods having asked for them for oneself ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks ate sumptuous foods having asked for them for themselves ... One laying down,⁶ one supplementary laying down⁷ ... He originates it by four origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.39

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 40

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.40

Offence of Expiation for conveying to the mouth nutriment that has not been given ... It was laid down in Vesālī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk conveyed to his mouth nutriment that had not been given ... One laying down,¹ one supplementary laying down² ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.³

The Fourth Division: that on Food

DIVISION 5: ON AN UNCLOTHED ASCETIC

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 41

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.41
BD.6.31

Offence of Expiation for giving with one's own hand solid food or soft food to an unclothed ascetic or to a wanderer or to a female wanderer ... It was laid down in Vesālī ... Concerning the venerable Ānanda ... The venerable Ānanda gave two cakes to a certain female wanderer thinking that they were one ... One laying down.⁴ He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.⁵

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 42

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.42

Offence of Expiation for dismissing a monk after saying (to him), "Come, your reverence, we will go into a village or a market-town for almsfood," whether he has caused (the almsfood) to be given or has not caused it to be given ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ... The venerable Upananda the Sakyan, after saying to a monk, "Come, your reverence, we will go into a village for almsfood," then dismissed him without having caused it to be given to him ... One laying down⁶ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 43

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.43

Offence of Expiation for sitting down after intruding on a family with food ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ... The venerable Upananda the Sakyan sat down after he had intruded on a family with food ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Vin.5.20

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 44

Offence of Expiation for sitting down in a private place on a secluded seat together with a woman ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ... The venerable Upananda the Sakyan sat down in a private place on a secluded seat together with a woman ... One laying down² ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.44

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 45

Offence of Expiation for sitting down in a private place together with a woman, the one with the other ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ... The venerable Upananda the Sakyan sat down in Private place together with a woman, the one with the other ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.45

BD.6.32

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 46

Offence of Expiation for calling upon families before a meal or after a meal and, being invited and being (provided) with a meal, does not ask (for permission to enter) if a monk be there. It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ... The venerable Upananda

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.46

¹ Vin.4.84. ² Vin.4.85. ³ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88. ⁴ Vin.4.87. ⁵ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88. ⁶ Vin.4.88. ⁷ Vin.4.88. ¹ Vin.4.90. ² Vin.4.90. ³ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88. ⁴ Vin.4.92. ⁵ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88. ⁶ Vin.4.93. ¹ Vin.4.95. ² Vin.4.96. ³ Vin.4.97.

the Sakyan called upon families before a meal and after a meal (though being invited and being (provided) with a meal ... One laying down,¹ four supplementary layings down² ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Kaṭhina-cloth.³

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 47

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.47

Offence of Expiation for asking for medicine⁴ for longer than that (i.e. four months) ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks, on being told by Mahānāma the Sakyan, "Revered sirs, wait this day (only)," did not wait ... One laying down⁵ ... He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 48

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.48

Offence of Expiation for going to see an army fighting ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks went to see an army fighting ... One laying down,⁶ one supplementary laying down⁷ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.⁸

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 49

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.49

Offence of Expiation for staying with an army for more than three nights ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks stayed with an army for more than three nights ... One laying down⁹ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.¹⁰

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 50

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.50

Vin.5.21

Offence of Expiation for going to a sham-fight ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks went to a sham-fight ... One laying down¹¹ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.¹²

¹ Vin.4.98. ² Vin.4.99, Vin.4.100. ³ Bu-NP.1, and see Vin.5.88. ⁴ Though of the four requisites medicine is the one that this offence concerned with, in the sikkhāpada itself the word used is paccaya, a requisite what a monk depends on. ⁵ Vin.4.102-3. ⁶ Vin.4.104. ⁷ Vin.4.105. ⁸ Bu-NP.16 ⁹ Vin.4.106. ¹⁰ Bu-NP.16 ¹¹ Vin.4.107. ¹² Bu-NP.16

The Fifth Division: that on an Unclothed Ascetic

DIVISION 6: ON FERMENTED LIQUOR AND SPIRITS

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 51

Offence of Expiation in drinking fermented liquor and spirits ... It was laid down in Kosambī ... Concerning the venerable Sāgata ... The venerable Sāgata drank strong drink ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.51
BD.6.33

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 52

Offence of Expiation in tickling with the fingers ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks. The group of six monks made a monk laugh by tickling him with their fingers ... One laying down² ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.52

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 53

Offence of Expiation for playing in the water ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of seventeen monks ... The group of seventeen monks sported in the water of the river Aciravatī ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.53

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 54

Offence of Expiation in disrespect ... It was laid down in Kosambī ... Concerning the venerable Channa ... did (things) out of disrespect ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by three origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.54

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 55

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.55

Offence of Expiation in frightening a monk ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks frightened a monk ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 56

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.56

Offence of Expiation in warming oneself having kindled a fire ... It was laid down among the Bhaggas ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks warmed themselves having kindled a fire ... One laying down,² two supplementary layings down³ ... He originates it by six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 57

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.57

BD.6.34

Offence of Expiation for bathing (at intervals of) less than half a month ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks, though they had seen the king, bathed, not knowing moderation ... One laying down,⁴ six supplementary layings down.⁵ “Is it a laying down (that holds good) everywhere, a laying down (that holds good only) for certain districts?” A laying down (that holds good only) for certain districts. Of the six origins of offences he originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.⁶

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 58

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.58

Vin.5.22

Offence of Expiation for making use of a new robe without taking any one mode of disfigurement of the three modes of disfigurement ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī Concerning several monks ... Several monks did not recognize their own robes ... One laying down.⁷ Of the six origins of offences he originates it by two origins (as in) Sheep's Wool.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 59

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.59

Offence of Expiation for making use of a robe that had not been taken away and that he himself had assigned to a monk or a nun or a female probationer or a novice or a female novice ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ... The venerable Upananda the Sakyan made use of a robe that had not been taken away and that he himself had assigned to a monk ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by two origins (as in) Kaṭhina-cloth.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 60

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.60

Offence of Expiation for hiding a monk's bowl or robe or (piece of cloth) to sit on or needle-case or girdle ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks hid a bowl and a robe belonging to monks ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by three origins.

*The Sixth Division: that on Fermented Liquor and Spirits*⁴

DIVISION 7: ON WHAT CONTAINS LIVING THINGS

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 61

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.61

Offence of Expiation for intentionally depriving a living thing of life ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the venerable Udāyi ... The venerable Udāyi intentionally deprived a living thing of life ... One laying down⁵ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 62

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.62

Offence of Expiation for making use of water knowing that it contains living things ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks

BD.6.35

¹ Vin.4.110. ² Vin.4.111. ³ Vin.4.112. ⁴ Vin.4.113. ¹ Vin.4.114. ² Vin.4.114.
³ Vin.4.115-6. ⁴ Vin.4.117. ⁵ Vin.4.117-8. ⁶ Bu-NP.16, and see Vin.5.88. ⁷ Vin.4.20.
¹ Vin.4.121. ² Bu-NP.1, and see Vin.5.88. ³ Vin.4.123. ⁴ Called at Vin.4.124: On drinking fermented liquor. ⁵ Vin.4.124.

... The group of six monks made use of water knowing that it contained living things ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 63

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.63

Offence of Expiation for opening up for a further (formal) act a legal question knowing that it had been settled according to rule ... It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks opened up for a further (formal) act a legal question knowing that it had been settled according to rule ... One laying down² ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 64

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.64

Vin.5.23

Offence of Expiation for concealing a monk's offence knowing it to be a very bad one ... It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk concealed a monk's offence knowing it to be a very bad one ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 65

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.65

Offence of Expiation for ordaining a man knowing him to be less than twenty years of age ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks ordained a man knowing him to be less than twenty years of age. One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 66

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.66

Offence of Expiation for going along the same highway having arranged together with a caravan knowing it to be set on theft. It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk went along the same highway having arranged together with a caravan knowing it to be set on theft ... One laying down⁵ ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

¹ Vin.4.125. ² Vin.4.126. ³ Vin.4.127. ⁴ Vin.4.130. ⁵ Vin.4.131.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 67

Offence of Expiation for going along the same highway having arranged together with a woman. It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk went along the same highway having arranged together with a woman ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by four origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.67

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 68

Offence of Expiation for not giving up a pernicious view though being admonished up to three times ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer ... The monk Ariṭṭha who had formerly been a vulture-trainer did not give up a pernicious view though being admonished up to three times ... One laying down.² He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by speech and by mind. Together with a monk knowing him to be one who talks thus, has not acted according to the rule, and has not given up that view ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks ate together with the monk Ariṭṭha knowing him to be one who talked thus, had not acted according to the rule, and had not given up that view ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by three origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.68

BD.6.36

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 69

Offence of Expiation for encouraging a novice knowing him to be thus expelled ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks encouraged the novice Kaṇḍaka knowing him to have been thus expelled ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by three origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.69

Vin.5.24

The Seventh Division: on What Contains Living Things

¹ Vin.4.133. ² Vin.4.135. ³ Vin.4.137. ⁴ Vin.4.139.

DIVISION 8: ON REGARDING A RULE

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 71

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.71

Offence of Expiation for saying, when one is being spoken to by monks regarding a rule, "I will not train myself in this rule of training, your reverences, till I have inquired about it from another monk, experienced, expert in Discipline" ... It was laid down in Kosambī ... Concerning the venerable Channa ... The venerable Channa, on being spoken to by monks, said, " ... till I have inquired about it ... " ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 72

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.72

Offence of Expiation in disparaging Discipline ... It was laid down in Sāvattihī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks disparaged Discipline ... One laying down² ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 73

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.73

BD.6.37

Offence of Expiation for putting (a monk) in confusion ... It was laid down in Sāvattihī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks confused ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 74

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.74

Offence of Expiation for giving a blow to monk when one is angry and displeased ... It was laid down in Sāvattihī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks, angry, displeased, gave a blow to monks ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and mind, not by speech.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 75

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.75

Offence of Expiation for raising the palm of one's hand against a monk when one is angry and displeased¹ ... (see Prv.1.1.Bu-Pc.74; instead of gave a blow read raised the palm of the hand) ...

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 76

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.76

Offence of Expiation for defaming a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order ... It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks defamed a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order ... One laying down² ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 77

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.77

Offence of Expiation for intentionally arousing remorse in a monk ... It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks intentionally aroused remorse in monks ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 78

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.78

Offence of Expiation for standing overhearing monks when they are quarrelling, disputing, engaged in contention ... It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks stood overhearing monks when they were quarrelling, disputing, engaged in contention ... One laying down.⁴ ... He originates it by two origins; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Vin.5.25

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 79

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.79

Offence of Expiation for engaging in criticism after having given consent for legitimate (formal) acts ... It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning

¹ Vin.4.141. ² Vin.4.143. ³ Vin.4.144. ⁴ Vin.4.146. ¹ Vin.4.147. ² Vin.4.148.

³ Vin.4.149. ⁴ Vin.4.150

BD.6.38 the group of six monks ... The group six monks, having given consent for legitimate (formal) acts, afterwards engaged in criticism ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 80

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.80

Offence of Expiation for rising up from one's seat and departing when the Order is engaged in decisive talk without giving one's consent ... It was laid down in Sāvathī Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk, rising up from his seat, departed when the Order was engaged in decisive talk without giving his consent ... One laying down² ... He originates it by one origin ... He originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 81

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.81

Offence of Expiation for engaging in criticism after having given away a robe by means of a complete Order ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks, having given away a robe by means of a complete Order, afterwards engaged in criticism ... One laying down³ ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 82

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.82

Offence of Expiation for apportioning to an individual a benefit belonging to the Order knowing that it has been apportioned ... It was laid down in Sāvathī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks apportioned to an individual a benefit belonging to the Order knowing that it had been apportioned ... One laying down⁴ ... He originates it by three origins.

The Eighth Division: that on Regarding a Rule

DIVISION 9: ON A KING

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 83

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.83

Offence of Expiation for entering, without announcing beforehand, the king's women's quarters ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the venerable Ānanda ... The venerable Ānanda, not announced beforehand, entered the king's women's quarters ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 84

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.84

Offence of Expiation for picking up treasure ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk picked up treasure ... One laying down,³ two supplementary layings down⁴ ... He originates it by the six origins.

Vin.5.26

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 85

Offence of Expiation for entering a village at the wrong time without asking (for permission) if a monk be there ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks entered a village at the wrong time ... One laying down,⁵ three supplementary layings down⁶ ... He originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.⁷

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.85
BD.6.39

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 86

Offence of Expiation for having a needle-case made that consists of bone or ivory or horn ... It was laid down among the Sakyans ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks, not knowing moderation, asked for many needle-cases ... One laying down⁸ ... He originates it by the six origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.86

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 87

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.87

Offence of Expiation for having a couch or chair made exceeding the (proper) measure ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the venerable Upananda the Sakyan ... The venerable Upananda the Sakyan lay down on a high couch ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by the six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 88

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.88

Offence of Expiation for having a couch or a chair made covered with cotton ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks had a couch and a chair made covered with cotton ... One laying down² ... He originates it by the six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 89

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.89

Offence of Expiation for having a piece of cloth to sit upon made exceeding the (proper) measure. It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks used pieces of cloth to sit upon that were not of the (proper) measure ... One laying down,³ one supplementary laying down⁴ ... He originates it by the six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 90

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.90

Offence of Expiation for having an itch-cloth made exceeding the (proper) measure ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks used itch-cloths that were not of the (proper) measure ... One laying down⁵ ... He originates it by the six origins.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 91

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.91

Offence of Expiation for having a cloth for the rains made exceeding the (proper) measure ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks used cloths for the rains that were not of the (proper) measure ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by the six origins.

¹ Vin.4.152. ² Vin.4.153. ³ Vin.4.154. ⁴ Vin.4.156. ¹ Vin.4.160. ² Bu-NP.1, and see Vin.5.88. ³ Vin.4.161. ⁴ Vin.4.162-3. ⁵ Vin.4.165. ⁶ Vin.4.165-6. ⁷ Bu-NP.1. ⁸ Vin.4.167. ¹ Vin.4.168. ² Vin.4.169. ³ Vin.4.170. ⁴ Vin.4.171. ⁵ Vin.4.172.

BD.6.40

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 92

Offence of Expiation for having a robe made the measure of a Well-farer's robe ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī Concerning the venerable Nanda ... The venerable Nanda wore a robe the measure of the Well-farer's robe ... One laying down² ... He originates it by the six origins.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pc.92
Vin.5.27

The Ninth Division: that on a King³

Concluded are the ninety-two offences of Expiation

ITS SUMMARY

⁴ Lying, insulting speech, slander, by line, sleeping-place, and women,⁵ Except a learned man (be present),⁶ facts, a very bad offence, digging, / Vegetable-growth, in evasion, he looked down on, a couch, and it is called a sleeping-place,⁷

First, throwing out, removable (feet), a door, and with living things, /

Not agreed on, after (sun-)set, quarters, and for gain,

Should he give, should he sew, by arrangement, a boat, should eat, together,⁸ /

Meal, group(-meal), out-of-turn (meal), a cake, being satisfied, (asking) one who is satisfied, Wrong time, stored, milk, for cleansing the teeth—these

BD.6.41

¹ Vin.4.172 ² Vin.4.173. ³ In the Suttavibhaṅga, Vin.4.174, this is called Ratanavagga, Division on Treasure. Treasure is the subject of the second offence in the Division. The title, Rājavagga, as above, refers to the first offence in the Division. ⁴ The summaries of all nine Divisions are collected together here; in the Suttavibhaṅga each Division is followed by its summary. Some of the “catch-words” do not occur in Parivāra and can only be understood by consulting the relevant offences in the Suttavibhaṅga. ⁵ seyyā ca itthiyo, referring to Bu-Pc.5 and Bu-Pc.6. Vin.4.33 reads seyyāya ve duve, two on sleeping-places, referring to two offences both of which are concerned with lying down in a sleeping-place. ⁶ This is part of Bu-Pc.7, but has not been mentioned in the Parivāra. ⁷ In Parivāra above this line reads bhūtaṃ, aññāya, ujjhāyi, mañco, seyyā ca vuccati. At Vin.4.49 it reads bhūtaṃ, aññāya, ujjhāyaṃ, pakkamanten te duve. These last two deal with setting out without putting away a couch (Bu-Pc.14) and a sleeping-place (Bu-Pc.15). ⁸ These two lines read somewhat differently in the two contexts. Above they read asammatā, atthaṅgate, upassay'-āmisena ca, / dade, sibbe, vidhānena, nāvā, bhūñjeyya, ekato, while at Vin.4.69 they read asammata-atthaṅgatā, upassaya-āmisā-dānena, sibbati, / addhānaṃ, nāvāṃ, bhūñjeyya, eko ekāya te dasā ti.

ten. /

Unclothed ascetic,¹ intruding on,² secluded, and in a private place, Invited, on requisites, army, staying, sham-fight, /
Fermented liquor, the finger, and playing,³ and disrespect, frightening,
Fire, on bathing, on disfigurement, himself,⁴ and about not hiding, / Intentionally,⁵ water, and (formal) act, very bad offence, less than twenty,
(Set) on theft, a woman, not taught, be in communion, on one who has been expelled, /
Regarding a rule,⁶ perplexity, confusion, on a blow, should he raise,
And unfounded, intentionally, “I will hear,” criticism, should he depart,
Having given a robe through an Order, should apportion to individuals, /
And of kings,⁷ treasure, if one be (present), needle(-case), and couch, cotton, Cloth to sit on, itch-cloth and so on, for the rains, and on the Well-farer. /

BD.6.42

THE SUMMARY OF THESE DIVISIONS

Lying, and vegetable-growth, exhortation, a meal, and about an unclothed ascetic, Fermented liquor, containing living things, a rule, with the Division on a king—these nine. /

PĀTIDESANĪYA

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 1

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pd.1

“Where was that offence to be Confessed laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One for eating solid food or soft food, having accepted it with one’s own hand from the hand of a nun who is not a relation (and) has entered among the houses?” It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning a certain monk ... A certain monk accepted a benefit from the hand of a nun who was not a relation (and) had entered among the houses ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

¹ These two lines are quite different from the summary of Bu-Pc.41–50 at Vin.4.108. There the reading is pūvaṃ, kathā, ’panandassa tayaṃ, ’paṭṭhākam eva ca, / Mahānāmo, Pasenadi, senā, viddho ime dasā ti. ² This refers to Bu-Pc.43. As a reference to Bu-Pc.42 appears to be missing, there are only nine headings for this 5th Division. ³ hāso ca. Vin.4.124 reads toyaṃ ca, and the water. ⁴ Merely sāmaṃ above. Vin.4.124 inserts apaccuddhāraka before sāmaṃ, but both these words refer to Bu-Pc.59. ⁵ The summaries of these lines at Vin.4.140 are quite different from those the Parivāra and read sañciccavadha-sappāṇaṃ, ukko, duṭṭhul-lachādanaṃ, / ūnavīsati, satthaṃ ca, saṃvidhāna-Ariṭṭhakaṃ, / ukkhitta-Kaṇḍakaṃ c’ eva dasa sikkhāpadā ime ti, thus having three lines where Parivāra has two. ⁶ Vin.4.157 differs considerably from the above. It reads sahadhamma-vivaṇṇaṃ ca, mohāpana-pahārakaṃ, / talasatti, amūlaṃ ca, sañcicca, upassuti ca, / paṭibāhanachandaṃ ca, Dabbaṃ ca, pariṇāmanaṃ. Both contexts have three lines of summary as this is the Division with twelve sikkhāpadas in it. ⁷ These two lines differ but slightly from those at Vin.4.174.

Vin.5.28

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 2

Offence to be Confessed for eating without restraining a nun who is giving directions ... It was laid down in Rājagaha ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks did not restrain nuns who were giving directions ... One laying down² ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pd.2

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 3

Offence to be Confessed for eating solid food or soft food among families agreed upon as learners, having accepted it with his own hand ... It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks, not knowing moderation, accepted ... One laying down,³ two supplementary layings down⁴ ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pd.3

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 4

Offence to be Confessed for eating solid food or soft food in forest lodgings, not announced beforehand, having accepted it with his own hand within a monastery ... It was laid down among the Sakyans ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks did not announce that thieves were living in a monastery ... One laying down,⁵ one supplementary laying down⁶ ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Pd.4

BD.6.43

¹ Vin.4.176. ² Vin.4.177. ³ Vin.4.179. ⁴ Vin.4.179, Vin.4.180. ⁵ Vin.4.182. ⁶ Vin.4.182.

Concluded are the four offences to be Confessed

ITS SUMMARY¹

Not a relation, giving directions, learners, and about the forest—
The four to be Confessed were proclaimed by the perfect Buddha.

SEKHIYA

DIVISION 1: ON ALL ROUND

MONKS' SEKHIYA 1

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.1

Where was that offence of Wrong-doing laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, Fully Self-Awakened One for dressing, out of disrespect, with the inner robe hanging down in front or behind?" It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks dressed with the inner robe hanging down in front and behind ... One laying down² ... He originates it by one origin; he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 2

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.2

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, putting on the upper robe hanging down in front or behind ... (see Prv.1.1.Bu-Sk.1; instead of inner robe read upper robe.)

MONKS' SEKHIYA 3, 4

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.3

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, going amid the houses having uncovered the body. (as before).

¹ Not at Vin.4.184. ² Vin.4.185. Notes on some of the words in the Sekhiya are given at BD.3.120ff.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 4, 5

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... sitting down amid the houses having uncovered the body ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.4
Vin.5.29

MONKS' SEKHIYA 5, 6

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... going (sitting down) amid the houses making play with hand or foot ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.5
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.6

MONKS' SEKHIYA 7, 8

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... going (sitting down) amid the houses looking about here and there ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.7
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.8

MONKS' SEKHIYA 9, 10

Offence of Wrong-doing for going (sitting down) amid the houses with (the robes) lifted up out of disrespect ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.9
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.10

The First Division: that on All Round

DIVISION 2: ON LOUD LAUGHTER

MONKS' SEKHIYA 11, 12

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, going (sitting down) amid the houses with loud laughter. It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks went (sat down) amid the houses laughing a great laugh ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.11
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.12
BD.6.44

MONKS' SEKHIYA 13, 14

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, going (sitting down) amid the houses making a loud noise, a great noise The group of six monks went (sat down) amid the houses making a loud noise, a great noise ... (see Prv.1.1.Bu-Sk.11).

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.13
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.14

¹ Vin.4.187.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 15, 16

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.15
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.16

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, going (sitting down) amid the houses swaying the body ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 17, 18

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.17
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.18

... swaying the arms ... (see Prv.1.1.Bu-Sk.15).

MONKS' SEKHIYA 19, 20

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.19
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.20

... swaying the head ... (see Prv.1.1.Bu-Sk.15).

The Second Division: that on Loud Laughter

DIVISION 3: ON ARMS AKIMBO

MONKS' SEKHIYA 21, 22

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.21
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.22

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, going (sitting down) amid the houses with the arms akimbo ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 23, 24

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.23
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.24

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, going (sitting down) amid the houses muffled up ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks, having dressed themselves including their heads in the upper robes, went (sat down) amid the houses ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 25

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.25

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... going amid the houses crouching down on the heels ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 26

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... sitting down amid the houses lolling ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.26

MONKS' SEKHIYA 27

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... accepting almsfood inattentively ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.27
Vin.5.30

MONKS' SEKHIYA 28

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... accepting almsfood while looking about here and there ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.28

MONKS' SEKHIYA 29

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... accepting much curry only ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.29

MONKS' SEKHIYA 30

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, accepting heaped-up almsfood ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.30
BD.6.45

The Third Division: that on Arms Akimbo

DIVISION 4: ON ALMSFOOD

MONKS' SEKHIYA 31

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, eating almsfood inattentively ... while looking about here and there ... having chosen¹ here and there ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.31
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.32
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.33

MONKS' SEKHIYA 34

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... eating much curry only ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.34

¹ Text here reads omasitvā against omadditvā at Vin.4.191. The context at Vin.4.191 requires omadditvā, having chosen; in its no-offence clause it uses omasati twice “to be impatient with,” to insult, to touch a person. That the belongs to what is not-an-offence is borne out by Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 150.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 35

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.35

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... eating almsfood having chosen from the top ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 36

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.36

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... covering up the curry or the condiment with conjeý ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 37

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.37

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... eating curry or conjeý having asked for it for oneself if one is not ill ... It was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks ate curry and conjeý having asked for it for themselves ... One laying down,¹ one supplementary laying down² ... He originates it by two origins: it may be that he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 38

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.38

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... looking at the bowls of others captious-mindedly ... One laying down ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 39

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.39

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... making up a large mouthful ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 40

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.40

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, making up a long morsel (of food) ...

The Fourth Division: that on Almsfood³

¹ Vin.4.193. ² Vin.4.193. ³ Instead of piṇḍapāta as above, Vin.4.194 has sakkacca "attentively".

DIVISION 5: ON MOUTHFUL

MONKS' SEKHIYA 41

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, opening the mouth when the mouthful had not been brought close ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.41

MONKS' SEKHIYA 42

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... putting the whole hand into the mouth while one is eating ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.42
BD.6.46

MONKS' SEKHIYA 43

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... talking with a mouthful in the mouth ... It was laid down in Sāvattī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks talked with a mouthful in the mouth ... One laying down ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.43

Vin.5.31

MONKS' SEKHIYA 44

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... eating while tossing up balls (of food) ... while breaking up the mouthfuls ... stuffing the cheeks ... shaking the hands about ... scattering lumps of boiled rice ... putting out the tongue ... smacking the lips ... One laying down¹ ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by voice.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.44

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.45

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.46

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.47

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.48

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.49

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.50

The Fifth Division: that on Mouthful

DIVISION 6: ON HISSING

MONKS' SEKHIYA 51

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, eating while making a hissing sound ... It was laid down in Kosambī ... Concerning several monks ...

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.51

¹ Vin.4.195-197.

Several monks drank milk making a hissing sound ... One laying down ...
He originates it by one origin ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 52

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.52
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.53
Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.54

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, eating while licking the fingers ... licking the bowl ... licking the lips ... One laying down ... He originates it by one origin ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 55

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.55

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... accepting a drinking cup with the hands (soiled) with food ... It was laid down among the Bhaggā ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks accepted a drinking cup with hands (soiled) with food ... One laying down ... He originates it by one origin ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 56

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.56

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... throwing out amid the houses the rinsings of the bowl with lumps of boiled rice ... It was laid down among the Bhaggā ... Concerning several monks ... Several monks threw out amid the houses the rinsings of the bowls with lumps of boiled rice ... One laying down ...
He originates it by one origin ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 57

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.57

BD.6.47

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... teaching Dhamma to (someone) with a sunshade in his hand ... It was laid down at Sāvattthī ... Concerning the group of six monks ... The group of six monks taught Dhamma to (someone) with a sunshade in his hand ... One laying down, one supplementary laying down.
He originates it by one origin: he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 58

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.58
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.59
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.60

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, teaching Dhamma to (someone) with a staff in his hand ... a knife in his hand ... a weapon in his hand ... One laying down, one supplementary laying down ... He originates it by one origin: he originates it by speech and by mind, not by body.

The Sixth Division: that on Hissing

DIVISION 7: ON SHOES

MONKS' SEKHIYA 61-67

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, teaching Dhamma to (someone) who is wearing shoes ... wearing sandals ... who is in a vehicle ... on a bed ... who is sitting down lolling ... who has a turban on his head ... whose head is muffled up ... One laying down, one supplementary laying down ... (as before.)

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.61
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.62
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.63
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.64
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.65
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.66
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.67
 Vin.5.32

MONKS' SEKHIYA 68-72

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... teaching Dhamma when one is sitting on the ground to (someone) who is sitting on a seat ... when one is sitting on a low seat to (someone) who is sitting on a high seat ... when one is standing to (someone) who is sitting ... when one is walking behind to (someone) who is walking in front ... when one is walking at the side of a path to someone walking along the path ... One laying down, one supplementary laying down. Of the six origins of offences he originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.68
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.69
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.70
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.71
 Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.72

MONKS' SEKHIYA 73

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... easing oneself while one is standing ... One laying down, one supplementary laying down. Of the six origins of offences he originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.73

MONKS' SEKHIYA 74

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.74

Offence of Wrong-doing for ... easing oneself or spitting on green corn ...

MONKS' SEKHIYA 75

Prv.1.1:Bu-Sk.75

BD.6.48

Offence of Wrong-doing for, out of disrespect, easing oneself spitting in water. "Where was it laid down?" It was laid down in Sāvattihī. "Concerning whom?" Concerning the group of six monks. "On what subject?" On the subject of the group of six monks relieving themselves and spitting in water. One laying down,¹ one supplementary laying down.² Of the six origins of offences he originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

The Seventh Division: that on Shoes

Concluded are the seventy-five Rules for Training

Concluded is the Chapter on the Laying-Down-Where in the Great Analysis

ITS SUMMARY³

All round,⁴ (properly) clad,⁵ well-controlled,⁶ with the eyes cast down,⁷ Lifting up (the robes),⁸ loud laughter,⁹ a noise,¹⁰ and three on swaying,¹¹ /
Akimbo,¹² muffled up,¹³ crouching down,¹⁴ and lolling,¹⁵
Attentively, and thinking of the bowl, equal curry, at an even level,¹⁶ /
Attentively, and thinking of the bowl, on continuous almstour, equal curry,
From the top,¹⁷ covering up, asking, captious-mindedly, /
Not large, a round,¹⁸ door (of the face), whole hand, one should not talk, Tossing up, breaking up,¹⁹ stuffing (the cheeks), shaking, scattering lumps of boiled rice, /

Vin.5.33

Likewise putting out the tongue, smacking the lips,²⁰ hissing, Fingers, and bowl, lips, (soiled) with food,²¹ and with lumps of boiled rice, /
Tathāgatas do not teach Dhamma to one with a sunshade in his hand,

BD.6.49

Neither to one with a staff in his hand, to those with a knife, a weapon in their ¹ Vin.4.206. ² Vin.4.206. ³ There is no uddāna at the end of the Sekhiyas in Vin.4.

⁴ Bu-Sk.1, Bu-Sk.2. ⁵ Bu-Sk.3, Bu-Sk.4. ⁶ Bu-Sk.5, Bu-Sk.6. ⁷ Bu-Sk.7, Bu-Sk.8.

⁸ Bu-Sk.9, Bu-Sk.10. ⁹ Bu-Sk.11, Bu-Sk.12. ¹⁰ Bu-Sk.13, Bu-Sk.14. ¹¹ Bu-Sk.15–Bu-Sk.17.

¹² Bu-Sk.21, Bu-Sk.22. ¹³ Bu-Sk.23, Bu-Sk.24. ¹⁴ Bu-Sk.25. ¹⁵ Bu-Sk.26. (Henceforth each Sekhiya is concerned with one topic and only sufficient references will be given for identification). ¹⁶ Bu-Sk.30. ¹⁷ Bu-Sk.35. ¹⁸ Bu-Sk.40. ¹⁹ Bu-Sk.45. ²⁰ Bu-Sk.50.

²¹ Bu-Sk.55.

hands,¹ /

Shoes, likewise sandals, and to one in a vehicle, on a bed,

To one sitting down lolling,² to one with a turban on, and to one muffled up, /

On the ground, on a low seat, while standing,³ walking behind, and at the side of a path,

It should not be done by one while he is standing, nor on green corn, or in water.⁴ /

THE SUMMARY OF THESE DIVISIONS

All round, loud laughter, akimbo, and likewise alms (food),⁵

Mouthful, and hissing, and with shoes on is the seventh.

¹ Bu-Sk.60. ² Bu-Sk.65. ³ Bu-Sk.70. ⁴ Bu-Sk.75. ⁵ Here piṇḍa, a shortened form of piṇḍapāta, the name given to this Division at Vin.5.30; its identification in the foregoing uddāna is sakkaccaṃ, “attentively,” as at Vin.4.194.

1.2. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON HOW MANY OFFENCES?

PĀRĀJIKA

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 1

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pj.1

Indulging in sexual intercourse how many offences does one fall into? Indulging in sexual intercourse one falls into three offences: if one indulges in sexual intercourse with a body¹ that is not decayed there is an offence involving Defeat.² If one indulges in sexual intercourse with a body that is practically decayed there is a grave offence. If without touching the male organ one makes it enter an open mouth there is an offence of wrong-doing. Indulging in sexual intercourse one falls into these three offences.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 2

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pj.2

Taking what has not been given how many offences does one fall into? Taking what has not been given one falls into three offences: if one takes as it were by theft something to the value of five *māsakas*³ or more than five māsakas there is an offence involving Defeat.⁴ If one takes ... to the value of more than one māsaka or less than five māsakas there is a grave offence.⁵ If one takes ... to the value of a māsaka or less than a māsaka there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹ Taking what has not been given one falls into these three offences.

¹ sarīra is both physical frame and physical remains. Here really a corpse, a dead body, mata, as at Vin.3.29ff. ² Vin.3.37. In connection with what might be regarded as too great outspokenness in this Pārājika, I should like to draw attention to my remarks at BD.1, Introduction, p.xxxvii. ³ See BD.1.71, BD.1.72 and notes. ⁴ Vin.3.54f. ⁵ Vin.3.54f.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 3

Intentionally depriving a human being of life ... one falls into three offences: if he digs a pitfall on purpose for a (certain) man, thinking, "Falling into it he will die," there is an offence of wrong-doing. If falling down into it a painful feeling arises (in the man), there is a grave offence. If he dies there is an offence involving Defeat.² Intentionally ... he falls into these three offences.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pj.3
BD.6.50

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 4

Laying claim (for oneself) to a non-existent, non-actual state of furthermen ... one falls into three offences: if, having evil desires, evil longings, he lays claim to a non-existent ... there is an offence involving Defeat.³ If he says, "The monk who lives in this vihāra is an arahant," there is a grave offence for acknowledging (a conscious lie); there is an offence of wrong-doing for not acknowledging it.⁴

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pj.4

Concluded are the four Offences involving Defeat

SAṄGHĀDISESA

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Emitting semen making an effort he falls into three offences: if he wills, makes an effort, and it is emitted there is an offence requiring a Formal

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.1
Vin.5.34

¹ Vin.3.54f. ² Vin.3.76. It seems that the thoughts attributed to the malefactor result in the offences being given in an ascending order of gravity, rather than, as is more usual, in a descending order. ³ Vin.3.92; and below BD.6.55. ⁴ Vin.3.99; and also Vin.5.99. "For not acknowledging" means he was not aware beforehand or while he was speaking that he was telling conscious lie, see Vin.3.100, Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 34.

Meeting of the Order¹; if he wills, makes an effort, and it is not emitted there is a grave offence²; in (a certain) action³ there is an offence of wrong-doing.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.2

Coming into physical contact with a woman one falls into three offences: if he rubs (her) body with (his) body there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.⁴ If he rubs an article of clothing (of hers) with (his) body there is a grave offence.⁵ If he rubs an article of clothing (of hers) with an article of clothing (of his) there is an offence of wrong doing.⁶

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.3

BD.6.51

Offending a woman with lewd words he falls into three offences: pointing out the two privies, if he speaks in praise and speaks in dispraise there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.⁷ Leaving out (talk on) the two privies, pointing out any part from below the collar-bone to above the knee, if he speaks in praise and speaks in dispraise there is a grave offence.⁸ Pointing out an article of clothing, if he speaks ... wrong-doing.⁹

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.4

Speaking in praise of ministering to sense-pleasures for (him)self he falls into three offences; if he speaks ... in the presence of a woman, there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order¹⁰; if he speaks ... in the presence of a eunuch there is a grave offence¹¹; if he speaks ... in the presence of an animal there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹²

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.5

Acting as a go-between he falls into three offences; if he accepts, examines, brings back there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order¹; if he accepts and examines but does not bring back, there is a grave offence²; if he accepts, but does not examine, does not bring back, there is an offence of wrong-doing.³

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 6

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.6

Begging for having a hut built for oneself he falls into three offences: if he has one built, in (each) operation⁴ there is an offence of wrong-doing. If one lump (of plaster) is still to come there is a grave offence;⁵ when that lump has come there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.⁶

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 7

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.7

Having a large vihāra built ...⁷ (see Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.6).

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 8

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.8

Defaming a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat he falls into three offences: if he speaks desiring his expulsion but without having gained his leave there is an offence of wrong-doing together with an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order;⁸ if he speaks intending abuse, having gained his leave, there is an offence of insulting speech.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 9

Defaming a monk with a charge of an offence involving Defeat, taking up some point as a pretext in a legal question really belonging to something else, he falls into three offences (as in Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.9).

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.9
BD.6.52

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 10

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.10

A schismatic monk, though being admonished up to three times but not giving up (his course), falls into three offences: following the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing¹; following the two resolutions there are grave offences²; following the conclusion of the (three) resolutions there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.³

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 11

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.11
Vin.5.35

Monks throwing in their lot with a schism, though being admonished up to three times but not giving up (their course), fall into three offences: following the motion⁴ ... (as in Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.10).

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 12

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.12

A monk who is difficult to speak to, though being admonished up to three times but not giving up (his course) falls into three offences: ...⁵ (as in Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.10).

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.13

A monk who brings a family into disrepute, though being admonished up to three times but not giving up (his course), falls into three offences: ...¹ (as in Prv.1.2:Bu-Ss.10).

*Concluded are the thirteen Offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order*²

NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA

DIVISION 1: ON KATHINA CLOTH

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 1

Exceeding the ten-day (period for wearing) an extra robe he falls into one offence: Expiation involving forfeiture.³

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.1

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 2

Being separated from the three robes for one night he falls into one offence: Expiation involving forfeiture.⁴

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.2

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 3

Exceeding (the period of) a month, having accepted robe-material not at the right time, he falls into one offence ...⁵

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.3

¹ Vin.3.116. ² Vin.3.116. ³ payoga, a word which does not appear to occur in Bu-Ss.1. On the other hand, there seem to be only two types of this behaviour which, in this Saṅghādisesa, are ranked as dukkāṭa. ⁴ Vin.3.121. ⁵ Vin.3.123. ⁶ Vin.3.124. ⁷ Vin.3.129. ⁸ Vin.3.129. ⁹ Vin.3.130. ¹⁰ Vin.3.134. ¹¹ Vin.3.134. ¹² tiracchānagata, animal, does not occur in Bu-Ss.4, nor in the relevant parts of Commentary or Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī. ¹ Vin.3.140–Vin.3.142. ² Vin.3.143. ³ Vin.3.143. ⁴ payoge, but at Vin.3.151 payoge payoge. ⁵ Vin.3.151. ⁶ Vin.3.151. ⁷ Vin.3.157. ⁸ The parallel paragraph at Vin.3.166 gives four types of offence: saṅghādisesena dukkāṭa, saṅghādisesa, omasavādena dukkāṭa, and omasavāda possible therefore that a clause has been omitted above. ¹ Vin.3.174. ² Vin.3.174. ³ Vin.3.174. ⁴ Vin.3.176. ⁵ Vin.3.179. ¹ Vin.3.185. ² The Undetermined Offences are omitted as they cannot be treated by this method. ³ Vin.3.196. ⁴ Vin.3.198. ⁵ Vin.3.203.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 4

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.4

Having a soiled robe washed by a nun who is not a relation he falls into two offences: if he has it washed there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has had it washed there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.¹

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 5

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.5

BD.6.53

Accepting a robe from the hand of a nun who is not a relation he falls into two offences: if he takes it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action²; when he has taken it there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.³

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 6

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.6

Asking a man or woman householder who is not a relation for a robe he falls into two offences; if he asks there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action⁴; when he has asked ... Expiation involving forfeiture.⁵

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.7

Asking a man or woman householder who is not a relation for more robe-material than that (which they had invited him to accept) ... (see Prv.1.2:Bu-NP6).

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 8

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.8

Approaching a householder who is not a relation before being invited to do so and putting forward a consideration in regard to robe-material he falls into two offences: if he puts forward a consideration there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action⁶; when he has put forward the consideration ... Expiation involving forfeiture.

¹ Neither clause at Vin.3.206f. is stated precisely as above. ² Vin.3.210. ³ These and several following clauses do not repeat Vin.3 exactly. ⁴ Vin.3.213. ⁵ These and several following clauses do not repeat Vin.3 exactly. ⁶ Vin.3.217.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 9

Approaching householders who are not relations ... (see Prv.1.2:Bu-NP8).

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.9

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 10

Succeeding in obtaining a robe by stating more than three times, by standing more than six times, he falls into two offences: if he succeeds in obtaining it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has succeeded ... Expiation involving forfeiture.¹

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.10

The First Division: that on Kaṭhina-cloth

DIVISION 2: ON SILK

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 11

Having a rug made mixed with silk he falls into two offences: as he has it made there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) operation; when he has had it made there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.²

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.11

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 12

Having a rug made of pure black sheep's wool ...³ (see Prv.1.2:Bu-NP11).

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.12

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 13

Having a new rug made without taking a portion of white (wools) and a portion of reddish-brown colours, he falls into two offences ...⁴

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.13
Vin.5.36

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 14

Having a rug made every year ...⁵

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.14

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 15

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.15

Having a new rug to sit on made without taking a piece the breadth of the accepted span from all round an old rug ...¹

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 16

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.16
BD.6.54

Accepting sheep's wool and exceeding the three yojanas he falls into two offences: if he makes the first foot go beyond the three yojanas there is an offence of wrong-doing; if he makes the second foot go beyond there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.²

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 17

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.17

Having sheep's wool washed by a nun who is not a relation ... (see Prv.1.2:Bu-NP4).

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 18

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.18

Accepting gold and silver he falls into two offences: if he takes it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action;³ when he has taken it there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 19

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.19

Engaging in various transactions in which gold and silver are used ... two offences: if he engages there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action;⁴ when he has engaged ... Expiation involving forfeiture.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 20

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.20

Engaging in various transactions in which there is bartering¹ ... (see Prv.1.2:Bu-NP19).

The Second Division: that on Silk

DIVISION 3: ON A BOWL

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 21

Exceeding the ten days (for keeping) an extra bowl he falls into one offence; Expiation involving forfeiture.

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.21

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 22

Getting another new bowl in exchange for a bowl that has been mended in less than five places he falls into two offences: if he gets in exchange there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action²; when he has got it in exchange there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.22

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 23

Having accepted medicines, (then) exceeding the seven days (for which they may be stored) he falls into one offence: Expiation involving forfeiture.

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.23

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 24

Looking about for robe-material as a cloth for the rains while more than a month of the hot weather remains he falls into two offences: if he looks about there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has looked about there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.24

BD.6.55

¹ Vin.3.223. ² Vin.3.224. ³ Vin.3.226. ⁴ Vin.3.227. ⁵ Vin.3.229. ¹ Vin.3.232. ² Vin.3.234. ³ No payoge at Vin.3.238, which says: "(if) he himself takes there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture". ⁴ Vin.3.240. See preceding note. ¹ At Vin.3.241 there is a dukkaṭa for asking someone to exchange; but as soon as the exchange or barter has been effected the offence is one expiation and forfeiture. ² Vin.3.246; the "action" means asking for the exchange to be when it has been exchanged refers to the sikkhāpada: "should get exchange."

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 25

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.25

Having himself given robe-material to a monk, (then) angry and displeased, tearing it away he falls into two offences: if he tears it away there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action;¹ when he has torn it away there is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 26

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.26

Himself asking for yarn, (then) having robe-material woven by weavers he falls into two offences: if he has it woven there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when it is woven there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.²

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 27

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.27

Before being invited by a householder who is not a relation, approaching weavers and putting forward a consideration in regard to robe-material he falls into two offences: if he puts forward a consideration there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has put forward the consideration there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.³

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 28

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.28

Vin.5.37

Having accepted a special robe, (then) exceeding the robe-season he falls into one offence: Expiation involving forfeiture.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 29

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.29

Having laid aside any one of his three robes in a house, (then) being separated from it for more than six nights he falls into one offence: Expiation involving forfeiture.

MONKS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 30

Prv.1.2:Bu-NP.30

Knowingly appropriating to himself an apportioned benefit belonging to the Order he falls into two offences: if he appropriates it there is an offence of wrong-doing in (the) action; when he has appropriated it there is an offence of Expiation involving forfeiture.¹

The Third Division: that on a Bowl

Concluded are the thirty offences of Expiation involving Forfeiture

PĀCITTIYA

DIVISION 1: ON LYING

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 1

Telling a conscious lie how many offences does he fall into? Telling a conscious lie he falls into five offences: if, having evil desires, evil longings, he lays claim to a non-existent, non-actual state of further-men he falls into an offence involving Defeat; if he defames a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; if he says, "The monk who lives in this vihāra is an arahant," he falls into a grave offence for acknowledging (the conscious lie), into an offence of wrong-doing for not acknowledging it; there is an offence of Expiation in conscious lying.² Telling a conscious lie he falls into these five offences.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.1

BD.6.56

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 2

Insulting he falls into two offences: if he insults one who is ordained there is an offence of Expiation;³ if he insults one who is not ordained there is an offence of wrong-doing.⁴

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.2

¹ The dukkaṭas at Vin.3.255 do not include this one. ² Vin.3.256. ³ Vin.3.260. ¹ Vin.3.266.

² Cf. above, BD.6.50. ³ Vin.4.7ff., which then adds four cases where the offence is one of wrong-doing. ⁴ Vin.4.10 gives two cases; also, BD.6.11, two cases where the offence is one of wrong speech.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 3

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.3

Bringing slander he falls into two offences: if he brings slander against one who is ordained there is an offence of Expiation; if he brings slander against one who is not ordained¹ there is an offence of wrong-doing.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 4

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.4

Making one who is not ordained speak Dhamma line by line he falls into two offences: if he makes him speak there is an offence of wrong-doing in (the) action; an offence of Expiation for each line.³

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 5

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.5

Lying down in a sleeping-place with one who is not ordained for more than two or three nights he falls into two offences; if he lies down in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when he has lain down there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 6

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.6

Lying down in a sleeping-place with a woman ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.5).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.7

Teaching Dhamma to a woman in more than five or six sentences he falls into two offences: if he teaches ... (as in Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.4).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 8

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.8

Speaking of a state of further-men that is a fact to one who is not ordained he falls into two offences: if he speaks there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has spoken there is an offence of Expiation.

¹ Vin.4.13 adds three cases where "wrong-doing" is the offence for slandering one who is ordained. ² Vin.4.14. ³ Vin.4.15. The references to these Pācittiyas have been given above BD.6.23ff., and will be repeated here only if some discrepancy is pointed out.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 9

Speaking of a monk's very bad offence to one who is not ordained he falls into two offences: if he speaks ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.9).

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.9

BD.6.57

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 10

Digging the ground he falls into two offences: if he digs there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; in every thrust¹ there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.10

The First Division: that on Lying

DIVISION 2: ON VEGETABLE-GROWTH

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 11

Destroying vegetable growth he falls into two offences: if he destroys there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; in every assault² there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.11

Vin.5.38

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 12

Shelving the question by asking another he falls into two offences: if evasion is not laid on him³ but he shelves the question by asking another there is

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.12

¹ pahāra, a word not in Bu-Pc.10, but possibly referring to the Old Commentary's "he digs or causes to be dug or breaks or has it broken or burns it or has it burnt", all of which actions result in a Pācittiya Offence. ² Again pahāra, not in Bu-Pc.11, but again a reference may be being made to Old Commentary's "he cuts it or has it cut or breaks it or has it broken or cooks or has it cooked"—each action giving rise to an offence of Pācittiya. ³ Bu-Pc.12 at Vin.4.37 reads aropite (from a + ropeti, not to plant, not to charge with) and ropite. But above the words are anāropite ... āropite, and are words that occur in the Old Commentary to Bu-Pc.73 and mean (something) is not, and is put on (a person). Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 90 has the one word āropitatā in connection with Bu-Pc.12. Vin-a.770 says that ropeti and aropeti are synonyms.

an offence of wrong-doing; if evasion is laid on him¹ and he shelves the question by asking another there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 13

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.13

Making someone look down on a monk he falls into two offences: while he is making someone look down on there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has made someone look down on there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 14

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.14

Having spread in the open air a couch or chair or a mattress or stool belonging to the Order, and not having removed it, setting out without asking permission (to do so) he falls into two offences: if he makes the first foot go further than a stone's throw there is an offence of wrong-doing; if he makes the second foot go further there is an offence of Expiation.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 15

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.15

BD.6.58

Having spread a sleeping-place in a vihāra belonging to an Order, and not having removed it, setting out without asking for permission (to do so) he falls into two offences: if he makes the first foot go further than the fence there is an offence of wrong-doing; if he makes the second foot go further there is an offence of Expiation.³

¹ Bu-Pc.12 at Vin.4.37 reads aropite (from a + ropeti, not to plant, not to charge with) and ropite. But above the words are anāropite ... āropite, and are words that occur in the Old Commentary to Bu-Pc.73 and mean (something) is not, and is put on (a person). Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 90 has the one word āropitatā in connection with Bu-Pc.12. Vin-a.770 says that ropeti and aropeti are synonyms. ² Vin.4.40 reads: if he goes further than a stone's throw of a man of average height, there is an offence of Expiation. Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 91 is in agreement with the interpretation given above; at Vin-a.775, this is ascribed to the Mahāpaccarī. ³ Similar confusion as in Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.14. Vin.4.41 makes it an offence of to go further than the fence of a fenced-in monastery or than the precincts of one that is not fenced-in. Vin-a.777 and Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 92 appear to agree with the interpretation given above.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 16

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.16

Lying down in a sleeping-place belonging to an Order knowing that he is encroaching (on the space intended for) a monk who had arrived first he falls into two offences: as he is lying down there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action¹; when he has lain down there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 17

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.17

Throwing out, being angry and displeased, a monk from a vihāra belonging to an Order he falls into two offences: as he is throwing out there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has thrown out there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 18

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.18

Sitting down on a couch or a chair that has removable feet and is in a lofty cell with an upper part in a vihāra belonging to an Order he falls into two offences: while he is sitting down there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action²; when he has sat down there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 19

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.19

Having determined on two or three enclosures, (then) determining on (something) more than that he falls into two offences: while he is determining there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has determined there is an offence of Expiation.³

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 20

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.20

Sprinkling water that he knows contains living things over grass or clay he falls into two offences: while he is sprinkling there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action¹; when he has sprinkled there is an offence of Expiation.

¹ E.g. if he spreads his sleeping-place or has it spread for him, see Vin.4.43. ² Not at Vin.4.46, Commentary or Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī. ³ That is, after the building is finished if he adds one item (a tile or a stone, etc.) of any of the five kinds of roofing allowed he incurs the offence.

The Second Division: that on Vegetable-growth

DIVISION 3: ON EXHORTATION

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 21

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.21

BD.6.59

Exhorting nuns (though) he has not been agreed upon (to do so) he falls into two offences: while he is exhorting there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has exhorted there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 22

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.22

Exhorting nuns after the sun has set ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.22).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 23

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.23

Exhorting nuns having approached nuns' quarters² ...

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 24

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.24

Saying "Monks are exhorting nuns for the sake of gain" he falls into two offences: while he is speaking there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has spoken there is an offence of Expiation.

¹ Enumerated at Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 96. ² According to Vin-a.803 the Mahāpaccarī gives a number of rulings (connected with Bu-Pc.21, Bu-Pc.22, Bu-Pc.23) where there may be a difference of penalty incurred by the same offence, as follows: (1) if the monk is not agreed on, if he goes to the nuns' quarters after sunset, and if he exhorts them with the eight important rules, there are three offences of Expiation; or (2) there is an offence of wrong-doing because the monk is not agreed on, another offence of because, when he has gone to their quarters he exhorts them with another rule, and an offence of Expiation for exhorting them after the sun as set; or (3) because he is agreed on there is no offence, but an offence of with Expiation for exhorting them after sunset, and another for exhorting them with the eight important rules when he has gone (to their quarters); or (4) no offence because he is agreed on, one of wrong-doing if he exhorts them with another rule, one of Expiation if he exhorts them after sunset.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 25

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.25

Giving robe-material to a nun who is not a relation he falls into two offences: while he is giving there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has given there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 26

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.26

Vin.5.39

Sewing robe-material for a nun who is not a relation he falls into two offences: while he is sewing there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; in each insertion of the awl there is an offence of Expiation.¹

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 27

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.27

Going along the same highway having arranged together with a nun he falls into two offences: while he is going along there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has gone along there is an offence of Expiation.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 28

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.28

Embarking in one boat having arranged together with a nun he falls into two offences: while he is embarking there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has embarked there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 29

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.29

BD.6.60

Eating almsfood knowing it to be procured through (the intervention of) a nun he falls into two offences: if he accepts it thinking, "I will eat" there is an offence of wrong-doing for every mouthful there is an offence of Expiation.³

¹ As at Vin.4.62. According to Vin-a.805 "insertion" seems to mean inserting the needle and drawing it out; but if one runs a long thread along without drawing out the needle there is but one offence of Expiation. ² At Vin-a.807 Buddhaghosa gives the Mahāpaccari's version (that if they were both going to the same village in any case and happened to leave their quarters at the same time, there was no offence), but he says that this agrees neither with the Pali nor with the other Commentaries. ³ As at Vin.4.67.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 30

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.30

Sitting down in a private place together with a nun, the one with the other, he falls into two offences: while he is sitting down there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has sat down there is an offence of Expiation.

The Third Division: that on Exhortation

DIVISION 4: ON FOOD

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 31

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.31

Eating more than one meal at a public rest-house he falls into two offences: if he accepts it thinking, "I will eat" (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.29).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 32

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.32

Eating a group-meal he falls into two offences: if he accepts it thinking, "I will eat" ...

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 33

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.33

Eating an out-of-turn meal he falls into two offences: if he accepts it thinking, "I will eat" ...¹

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 34

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.34

After accepting two or three bowlsful of cake, (then) accepting more than that he falls into two offences: while he is taking it there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action; when he has taken it there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 35

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.35

Partaking of solid food or soft food that is not left over after he has eaten and is satisfied he falls into two offences: if he accepts it thinking, "I will eat" ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.29).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 36

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.36

Inviting a monk who has eaten and is satisfied to take solid food or soft food that is not left over he falls into two offences: if, at his bidding, he accepts saying, "I will eat, I will partake of" there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the meal there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 37

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.37

Partaking of solid food or soft food at the wrong time he falls into two offences: if he accepts ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.29).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 38

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.38

Partaking of solid food or of soft food that has been stored he falls into two offences: if he accepts ...

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 39

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.39

Eating sumptuous foods having asked for them for himself he falls into two offences: if he accepts ...¹

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 40

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.40
BD.6.61

Conveying to the mouth nutriment that has not been given he falls into two offences: if he accepts ...

The Fourth Division: that on Food

¹ it attributes to the Kurundī. Vin-a.817f. gives the interpretations of the Mahāpaccarī and of the Mahāaṭṭhakathā in a certain amount of detail together with one interpretation it attributes to the Kurundī. ¹ Vin-a.841 here quotes Parivāra p.218, verse 32: kāyikāni na vācasikāni ...

DIVISION 5: ON AN UNCLOTHED ASCETIC

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 41

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.41

Vin.5.40

Giving with his own hand solid food or soft food to an unclothed ascetic or to a wanderer or to a female wanderer he falls into two offences: while he is giving there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action: when he has given there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 42

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.42

Dismissing a monk after saying to him, "Come, your reverence, we will go into a village or market-town for almsfood," whether he has caused (the almsfood) to be given or has not caused it to be given he falls into two offences: while he is dismissing him there is an offence of wrong-doing in (each) action: when he has dismissed him there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 43

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.43

Sitting down after intruding on a family with food he falls into two offences: while he is sitting down there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has sat down there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 44

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.44

Sitting down in a private place on a secluded seat together with a woman he falls into two offences: while he is sitting down ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.43).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 45

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.45

Sitting down in a private place together with a woman, the one with the other, he falls into two offences; while he is sitting down ...

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 46

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.46

Calling upon families before a meal or after a meal and, being invited and being (provided) with a meal, and not asking (for permission to enter) if a monk be there he falls into two offences: when he makes the first foot pass the threshold there is an offence of wrong-doing; when he makes the second foot pass there is an offence of Expiation.¹

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 47

Asking for medicine for longer than that he falls into two offences: while he is asking there is an offence of wrong-doing the action; when he has asked there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.47

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 48

Going to see an army fighting he falls into two offences: while he is going there is an offence of wrong-doing; standing where he sees there is an offence of Expiation.²

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.48

BD.6.62

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 49

Staying with an army for more than three nights he falls into two offences: while he is staying there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has stayed there is an offence of Expiation.³

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.49

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 50

Going to a sham-fight he falls into two offences ... (as in Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.48).

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.50

The Fifth Division: that on an Unclothed Ascetic

DIVISION 6: ON FERMENTED LIQUOR AND SPIRITS

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 51

Drinking strong drink⁴ he falls into two offences: if he accepts it thinking, "I will drink," there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every mouthful there is

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.51

¹ As at Vin.4.100. ² Vin.4.105. ³ Vin.4.106 says he may stay for two or three nights; but if he stays until sunset of the fourth day there is an offence of Expiation. ⁴ majja; the word in the sikkhāpada at Vin.4.110 and text p.21 above is surāmeraya.

an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 52

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.52

Making a monk laugh by tickling him with the fingers he falls into two offences: while he makes him laugh there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has made him laugh there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 53

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.53

Sporting¹ in the water he falls into two offences: if he sports in the water with (the part) below the ankle there is an offence of wrong-doing²; if he sports in the water with (the part) above the ankle there is an offence of Expiation.³

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 54

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.54

Being disrespectful he falls into two offences: while he is being disrespectful there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has been disrespectful there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 55

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.55

Frightening a monk he falls into two offences; while he is frightening him there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has frightened him there is an offence of Expiation.⁴

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 56

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.56

BD.6.63

Warming oneself having kindled a fire he falls into two offences; while he is kindling it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has kindled it there is an offence of Expiation.

¹ kīlanto here; at Vin.4.112 and text p.21 hāsadhamme is the word used in the sikkhāpada, kīlati coming later. ² As at Vin.4.112. ³ Vin.4.112 says if he goes under or comes up or “swims” (plavatī ti tarati. Vin-a.861) there is an offence of Expiation; Commentary appears to agree. ⁴ Frightening a monk by whatever means is an offence of Expiation at Vin.4.114.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 57

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.57

Bathing at intervals of less than half a month he falls into two offences: while he is bathing there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action¹; at the end of the bathe there is an offence of Expiation.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 58

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.58
Vin.5.41

Making use of a new robe without taking any one of the three modes of disfigurement he falls into two offences; while he is making use of it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has made use of it there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 59

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.59

Making use of a robe that has not been taken away and that he himself has assigned to a monk or a nun or a female probationer or a novice or a female novice he falls into two offences; while he is making use of it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has made use of it there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 60

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.60

Hiding a monk's bowl or robe or piece of cloth to sit on or needle-case or girdle he falls into two offences: while he is hiding it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has hidden it there is an offence of Expiation.

The Sixth Division: that on Fermented Liquor and Spirits

DIVISION 7: ON WHAT CONTAINS LIVING THINGS

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.61

Intentionally depriving a living thing of life how many offences does he fall into? Intentionally depriving a living thing of life he falls into four offences: if he digs a pitfall not on purpose (for a certain man) and thinks, "Whoever falls into it will die” there is an offence of wrong-doing¹; if a man, falling into it, dies there is an offence involving Defeat²; if a yakkha or a *peta*³ or an animal in human form, falling into it, dies there is a grave offence; if an animal, falling into it, dies there is an offence of Expiation. Intentionally depriving a living thing of life he falls into these four offences.

¹ Agrees with Vin.4.119. ² Agrees with Vin.4.119.

MONKS’ PĀCITTIYA 62

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.62
BD.6.64

Making use of water knowing that it contains life he falls into two offences; while he is making use of it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has made use of it there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS’ PĀCITTIYA 63

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.63

Opening up for a further (formal) act a legal question knowing it has been settled according to the rule he falls into two offences: while he is opening it up there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has opened it up there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS’ PĀCITTIYA 64

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.64

Concealing a monk’s offence knowing it to be a very bad one he falls into one offence of Expiation.

MONKS’ PĀCITTIYA 65

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.65

Ordaining a man knowing him to be less than twenty years of age he falls into two offences: while he is ordaining him there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has ordained him there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 66

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.66

Going along the same highway having arranged together with a caravan knowing it to be set on theft he falls into two offences: while he is going along there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has gone along there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 67

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.67

Going along the same highway having arranged together with a woman ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.66).

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 68

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.68

Not giving up a pernicious view though being admonished up to three times he falls into two offences: an offence of wrong-doing as a result of the motion; an offence of Expiation at the end of the proclamations.¹

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 69

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.69

Eating together with a monk knowing him to be one who talks thus, has not acted according to the rule, and has not given up that view he falls into two offences: while he is eating there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action²; when he has eaten there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 70

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.70
Vin.5.42

Encouraging a novice knowing him to be thus expelled he falls into two offences: while he is encouraging him there is an offence of wrong-doing³ in the action; when he has encouraged him there is an offence of Expiation.

The Seventh Division: on What Contains Living Things

¹ Cf. Vin.5.33 Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.3. ² Cf. Vin.5.33 Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.3. ³ peta, departed ancestor, a kind of ghost. Neither Vin.4.124 nor Vin-a.864 mentions any of the beings spoken of in this clause. ¹ As at Vin.4.136. ² No offence of wrong-doing appears at Vin.4.140, except in cases of doubting. ³ No offence of wrong-doing appears at Vin.4.140, except in cases of doubting.

DIVISION 8: ON REGARDING A RULE

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 71

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.71
BD.6.65

When one is being spoken to by monks regarding a rule, saying, "I will not train myself in this rule of training, your reverences, until I have inquired about it from another monk, experienced, expert in Discipline," he falls into two offences: while he is speaking there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has spoken there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 72

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.72

Disparaging Discipline he falls into two offences: while he is disparaging there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has disparaged there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 73

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.73

Putting (a monk) in confusion he falls into two offences: if he confuses when confusion has not been put on¹ him there is an offence of wrong-doing; if he confuses when confusion has been put on him there is an offence of Expiation.²

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 74

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.74

Giving a blow to a monk when one is angry and displeased he falls into two offences: as he gives it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has given it there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 75

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.75

Raising the palm of one's hand against a monk when one is angry and displeased he falls into two offences: as he raises it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has raised it there is an offence of Expiation.

¹ anāropite ... āropite. See above, BD.6.57, n.3. ² As at Vin.4.145.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 76

Defaming a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order he falls into two offences: as he is defaming there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has defamed there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.76

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 77

Intentionally arousing remorse in a monk he falls into two offences: while he is arousing it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has aroused it there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.77

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 78

Standing overhearing monks when they are quarrelling, disputing, engaged in contention he falls into two offences: if he goes thinking, "I will hear" there is an offence of wrong-doing; standing where he hears there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.78

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 79

Engaging in criticism after giving consent for legitimate (formal) acts he falls into two offences: as he criticizes there is an offence of wrong-doing¹ in the action; when he has criticized there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.79
BD.6.66*MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 80*

Rising up from his seat and departing when the Order is engaged in decisive talk without giving his consent he falls into two offences: in leaving the assembly by (the space of) the reach of a hand there is an offence of wrong-doing; when he has left there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.80

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 81

Engaging in criticism after having given away a robe by means of a complete Order he falls into two offences: as he criticizes ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.79).

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.81

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 82

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.82

Apportioning to an individual a benefit belonging to the Order knowing that it has been apportioned he falls into two offences: as he is apportioning it there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has apportioned it there is an offence of Expiation.

The Eighth Division: that on Regarding a Rule

DIVISON 9: ON A KING

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 83

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.83

Entering, without announcing beforehand, the king's women's quarters he falls into two offences: as he makes the first foot cross the threshold there is an offence of wrong-doing; as he makes the second foot cross there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 84

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.84

Vin.5.43

Picking up a treasure he falls into two offences: as he picks it up there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has picked it up there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 85

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.85

Entering a village at the wrong time without asking (for permission) if a monk be there he falls into two offences: as he makes the first foot cross the enclosure there is an offence of wrong-doing; as he makes the second foot cross it there is an offence of Expiation.

¹ At Vin.4.152 there is no offence of wrong-doing.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 86

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.86

Having a needle-case made that consists of bone or consists of ivory or consists of horn he falls into two offences: as he is having it made there is an offence of wrong-doing; when he has had it made there is an offence of Expiation.

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 87

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.87

Having a couch or a chair made exceeding the (proper) measure, he falls into two offences: ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.86.)

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 88

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.88
BD.6.67

Having a couch or a chair made covered with cotton he falls into two offences: ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.86.)

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 89

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.89

Having a piece of cloth to sit upon made exceeding the (proper) measure he falls into two offences: ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.87.)

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 90

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.90

Having an itch-cloth made exceeding the (proper) measure he falls into two offences: ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.87.)

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 91

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.91

Having a cloth for the rains made exceeding the (proper) measure he falls into two offences: ... (see Prv.1.2.Bu-Pc.87.)

MONKS' PĀCITTIYA 92

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pc.92

Having a robe made the measure of a Well-farer's robe, how many offences does he fall into? Having a robe made the measure of a Well-farer's robe he falls into two offences: as he is having it made there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when he has had it made there is an offence of Expiation. Having a robe made the measure of a Well-farer's robe he falls into these two offences.

The Ninth Division: that on a King

Concluded is the Minor (Class)¹

PĀTIDESANĪYA

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 1

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pd.1

Eating solid food or soft food, having accepted it with his own hand from the hand of a nun who is not a relation (and) has entered among the houses, how many offences does he fall into? Eating ... he falls into two offences: as he accepts it thinking, "I will eat," there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every mouthful there is an offence to be confessed. Eating ... he falls into these two offences.

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 2

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pd.2

Eating without restraining a nun who is giving directions he falls into two offences: ... (see Prv.1.2:Bu-Pd1).

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 3

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pd.3

Eating solid food or soft food among families agreed upon as learners, having accepted it with his own hand he falls into two offences: ... (see Prv.1.2:Bu-Pd1).

MONKS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 4

Prv.1.2:Bu-Pd.4

Eating solid food or soft food in forest lodgings, not announced beforehand, having accepted it with his own hand within a monastery, how many offences does he fall into? Eating ... he falls into two offences: as he accepts it thinking, "I will eat" ... Eating ... in forest lodgings he falls into these two offences.

Vin.5.44

¹ As at Vin.4.174.

Concluded are the four offences to be Confessed

SEKHIYA

DIVISION 1: ON ALL ROUND

MONKS' SEKHIYA 1

Dressing, out of disrespect, with the inner robe hanging down in front or behind, how many offences does he fall into? Dressing, out of disrespect ... he falls into one offence: wrong-doing. Dressing, out of disrespect ... he falls into this one offence.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.1
BD.6.68

MONKS' SEKHIYA 2

Out of disrespect putting on the upper robe hanging down in front or behind, he falls into one offence: wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.2

MONKS' SEKHIYA 3, 4

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses having uncovered the body, he falls into one offence ...

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.3
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.4

MONKS' SEKHIYA 5, 6

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses making play with hand or foot ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.5
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.6

MONKS' SEKHIYA 7, 8

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses looking about ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.7
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.8

MONKS' SEKHIYA 9, 10

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.9

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.10

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses with (the robes) lifted up ... wrong-doing.

The First Division: that on All Round

DIVISION 2: ON LOUD LAUGHTER

MONKS' SEKHIYA 11, 12

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.11

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.12

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses with loud laughter ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 13, 14

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.13

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.14

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses making a loud noise, a great noise ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 15, 16

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.15

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.16

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses swaying the body ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 17, 18

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.17

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.18

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses swaying the arms ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 19, 20

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.19

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.20

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses swaying the head ... wrong-doing.

The Second Division: that on Loud Laughter

DIVISION 3: ON ARMS AKIMBO

MONKS' SEKHIYA 21

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses with the arms akimbo ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.21

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.22

MONKS' SEKHIYA 23

Out of disrespect going (sitting down) amid the houses muffled up ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.23

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.24

MONKS' SEKHIYA 25

Out of disrespect going amid the houses crouching down on the heels ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.25

MONKS' SEKHIYA 26

Out of disrespect sitting down amid the houses lolling ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.26

MONKS' SEKHIYA 27

Out of disrespect accepting almsfood inattentively wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.27

MONKS' SEKHIYA 28

Out of disrespect accepting almsfood while looking about here and there ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.28

BD.6.69

Vin.5.45

MONKS' SEKHIYA 29

Out of disrespect accepting much curry only ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.29

MONKS' SEKHIYA 30

Out of disrespect accepting heaped-up almsfood ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.30

The Third Division: that on Arms Akimbo

DIVISION 4: ON ALMSFOOD

MONKS' SEKHIYA 31

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.31

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.32

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.33

Out of disrespect eating almsfood inattentively ... while looking about here and there ... having chosen here and there ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 34

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.34

Out of disrespect eating much curry only ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 35

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.35

Out of disrespect eating almsfood having chosen from the top ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 36

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.36

Out of disrespect covering up the curry or the condiment with conjei ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 37

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.37

Out of disrespect eating curry or conjei having asked for it for oneself if one is not ill ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 38

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.38

Out of disrespect looking at the bowls of others captious-mindedly ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 39

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.39

Out of disrespect making up a large mouthful ... wrong-doing.

MONKS' SEKHIYA 40

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.40

Out of disrespect making up a long morsel (of food) ... wrong-doing.

The Fourth Division: that on Almsfood

DIVISION 5: ON THE MOUTHFUL

MONKS' SEKHIYA 41

Out of disrespect opening the mouth when the mouthful has not been brought close ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.41

MONKS' SEKHIYA 42

Out of disrespect putting the whole hand into the mouth when one is eating ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.42

MONKS' SEKHIYA 43

Out of disrespect talking with a mouthful in the mouth ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.43

MONKS' SEKHIYA 44

Out of disrespect eating while tossing up balls of food ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.44

MONKS' SEKHIYA 45-50

Out of disrespect eating while breaking up the mouthfuls ... stuffing the cheeks ... shaking the hands about ... scattering lumps of boiled rice ... putting out the tongue ... smacking the lips ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.45

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.46

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.47

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.48

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.49

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.50

The Fifth Division: that on the Mouthful

DIVISION 6: ON HISSING

MONKS' SEKHIYA 51-54

Out of disrespect eating while making a Out hissing sound ... licking the fingers ... licking the bowl ... licking the lips wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.51

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.52

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.53

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.54

BD.6.70

MONKS' SEKHIYA 55

Out of disrespect accepting a drinking cup with one's hands soiled (with food) ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.55

MONKS' SEKHIYA 56

Out of disrespect throwing out amid the houses the rinsings of the bowl with lumps of boiled rice ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.56
Vin.5.46

MONKS' SEKHIYA 57-60

Out of disrespect teaching Dhamma to someone with a sunshade in his hand ... with a staff in his hand ... with a knife in his hand ... with a weapon in his hand ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.57
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.58
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.59
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.60

The Sixth Division: that on Hissing

DIVISION 7: ON SHOES

MONKS' SEKHIYA 61-72

Out of disrespect teaching Dhamma to someone who is wearing shoes ... wearing sandals ... in a vehicle ... on a bed ... who is sitting down lolling ... has a turban on his head ... whose head is muffled up ... who is sitting on a seat when one is sitting on the ground ... who is sitting on a high seat when one is sitting on a low seat ... who is sitting when one is standing ... who is walking in front when one is walking behind ... who is walking along a path when one is walking at the side of the path ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.61
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.62
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.63
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.64
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.65
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.66
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.67
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.68
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.69
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.70
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.71
Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.72

MONKS' SEKHIYA 73

Out of disrespect easing oneself when one is standing ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.73

MONKS' SEKHIYA 74

Out of disrespect easing oneself or spitting on green corn ... wrong-doing.

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.74

MONKS' SEKHIYA 75

Prv.1.2:Bu-Sk.75

Out of disrespect easing oneself or spitting in water how many offences does he fall into? Out of disrespect easing himself ... he falls into one offence: wrong-doing. Out of disrespect easing himself ... he falls into this one offence.

The Seventh Division: that on Shoes

Concluded are the Rules for Training

Concluded is the Second Chapter: on How Many Offences?

1.3. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON FALLING AWAY

Prv.1.3

BD.6.71

Of the four fallings away¹ how many fallings away do the offences for one indulging in sexual intercourse appertain to? Of the four fallings away the offences for indulging in sexual intercourse appertain to two fallings away: there may be falling away from moral habit; there may be falling away from good behaviour ...

Of the four fallings away how many fallings away does the offence of easing oneself or spitting in water out of disrespect appertain to? Of the four fallings away the offence of easing oneself or spitting in water out of disrespect appertains to one falling away: the falling away from good behaviour.

Concluded is the Third Chapter: that on Falling Away

¹ On vipatti, falling away, see above, BD.6.2, n.3.

1.4. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON COMPRISED IN

Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence are the offences for one indulging in sexual intercourse comprised? Of the seven classes of offence the offences for one indulging in sexual intercourse are comprised in three classes of offence¹: it may be the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be the class of offence of wrong-doing ...

Prv.1.4

Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence is the offence of easing oneself ... out of disrespect comprised? ... It is comprised in one class of offence: in the class of offence of wrong-doing.

Vin.5.47

Concluded is the Fourth Chapter: that on Comprised In ¹ The number of offences a monk can fall into for breach of a rule of training is to be enumerated above, BD.6.49, for each and every rule of training.

1.5. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON ORIGINS

Prv.1.5

Of the six origins of offences by how many origins do the offences for one indulging in sexual intercourse originate? ... They originate by one origin: they originate by body and by mind, not by voice ...

Of the six origins of offences by how many origins does the offence of easing oneself ... out of disrespect originate? ... It originates by one origin: it originates by body and by mind, not by voice.

Concluded is the Fifth Chapter: that on Origins

1.6. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON LEGAL QUESTIONS

Of the four legal questions which legal question (is raised by), offences for one indulging in sexual intercourse? ... Of the four legal questions it is the legal question concerning offences.

Prv.1.6

The offence of easing oneself ... is, of the four legal questions which legal question? Of the four legal questions it is the legal question concerning offences.

BD.6.72

Concluded is the Sixth Chapter: that on Legal Questions

1.7. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON DECIDING

Prv.1.7

Of the seven (ways for) the deciding (of a legal question) by how many decidings are the offences for one indulging in sexual intercourse stopped? ... they are stopped by three deciding: it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement; it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass.

... by how many decidings is the offence of easing oneself ... stopped? ... It is stopped by three decidings ... (as above).

Concluded is the Seventh Chapter: that on Deciding

1.8. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON ACCUMULATION

Indulging in sexual intercourse how many offences does one fall into?
Indulging in sexual intercourse one falls into three offences.¹ Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to? Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence are they comprised? Of the six origins of offences by how many origins do they originate? Of the four legal questions which legal question? Of the seven decidings by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be that of falling away from moral habit, it may be that of falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in three classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat, it may be in the class of offence that is a very grave one, it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by one origin: they originate by body and by mind, not by speech. Of the four legal questions the legal question concerning offences. Of the seven decidings they are stopped by three deciding: it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass

Prv.1.8
Vin.5.48

Easing oneself or spitting in water out of disrespect, how many offences does he fall into? ... into one offence: wrong-doing. Easing himself ... he falls into this one offence. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away does this offence appertain to ... (as above; instead of do they originate read does it originate) ... by which deciding is it stopped? Of the four fallings away this offence appertains to one falling away: that from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence it is comprised under one class of offence:

BD.6.73

¹ As at Vin.5.33.

under the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins ... (as above) ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

*Concluded is the Eighth Chapter: that on Accumulation*¹

These eight Chapters are written in a manner for repetition

THEIR SUMMARY

The laying-down-where,²
And how many, falling-away, and about comprising,
Origin, legal questions, decidings, and about accumulation.

¹ Or, Conjunction (samuccaya), as at Vin.2.72. ² This refers to Vin.5.1-32; “how many” to BD.6.32-46.

1.9. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON LAYING-DOWN-WHERE

PĀRĀJIKA

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 1

Where was that offence involving Defeat because of indulging in sexual intercourse laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One? Concerning whom? On what subject? ... By whom was it conveyed? Where was that offence involving Defeat because of indulging in sexual intercourse laid down ... ? ... It was laid down in Vesālī ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1) ... He originates it by one origin—he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech ... By whom has it been conveyed? It has been conveyed by a succession (of teachers):

Prv.1.9:Bu-Pj.1

Vin.5.49

Upāli, Dāsaka, as well as Soṇaka, similarly Siggava,
With Moggali's son as fifth—
these in the glorious (is)land of Jambusiri— ...

These sinless sages of great wisdom,
knowing the Vinaya and skilled in the Way,
Proclaimed the Vinaya-piṭaka in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 2

Where was that offence involving Defeat because of taking what had not been given laid down by that Lord ... ? It was laid down in Rājagaha ... (see Prv.1.1) ... it may be that he originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

BD.6.74
Prv.1.9:Bu-Pj.2

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKĀ 3

Prv.1.9:Bu-Pj.3

Where was that offence involving Defeat because of intentionally depriving a human being of life laid down? It was laid down in Vesālī ... he originates it by ... mind.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKĀ 4

Prv.1.9:Bu-Pj.4

Where was that offence involving Defeat because of laying claim (for oneself) to a non-existent, non-actual state of further-men laid down? It was laid down in Vesālī ... he originates it by ... mind.

SAṄGHĀDISESAMONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.1

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of emitting semen making an effort laid down by that Lord ... ? Concerning whom? On what subject? ... By whom has it been conveyed? Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of emitting semen making an effort laid down by that Lord ... ? It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... not by speech ... By whom has it been conveyed? It has been conveyed by a succession (of teachers):

Upāli, Dāsaka ...

... in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.2

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of coming into physical contact with a woman laid down? It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... he originates it ... not by speech.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.3

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because offending a woman with lewd words laid down? It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... and by mind.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.4

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of speaking in praise of ministering to sense-pleasures for (him)self in the presence of a woman laid down? It was laid down in Sāvattthī ...

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.5

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of acting as a go-between laid down? It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... and by mind.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 6

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.6

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of Order because of having a hut built begging for it oneself laid down? It was laid down in Āḷavī ... He originates it by the six origins.

BD.6.75
Vin.5.50

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 7

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.7

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of having a large vihāra built laid down? It was laid down in Kosambī ... He originates it by the six origins.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 8

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.8

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of defaming a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat laid down? It was laid down in Rājagaha ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 9

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.9

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of defaming a monk with a charge of an offence involving Defeat taking up some point as a pretext in a legal question really belonging to something else, laid down? It was laid down in Rājagaha ... He originates it by three origins.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 10

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.10

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order with up to three times admonishing a schismatic monk because of his not giving up (his course) laid down? It was laid down in Rājagaha ... and by mind.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 11

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.11

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order with up to three times admonishing monks who were throwing in their lot with a schism because of their not giving up (their course) laid down? It was laid down in Rājagaha ... and by mind.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 12

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.12

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order with up to three times admonishing a monk who was difficult to speak to because of his not giving up (his course) laid down? It was laid down in Kosambī ... and by mind.

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Prv.1.9:Bu-Ss.13

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order with up to three times admonishing a monk who had bought a family into disrepute because of his not giving up (his course) laid down? It was laid down in Sāvattihī ... and by mind. ...

SEKHIYA

MONKS' SEKHIYA 75

Where was that offence of Wrong-doing because of, out of disrespect, easing oneself or spitting in water laid down? It was laid down in Sāvattḥi. Concerning whom? Concerning the group of six monks. On what subject? On the subject of the group of six monks easing themselves and spitting in water. One laying down, one supplementary laying down. Of the six origins of offences he originates it by one origin: he originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

Prv.1.9:Bu-Sk.75

BD.6.76

Concluded is the Chapter¹ on Laying-Down-Where

¹ The corresponding Chapter in the Bhikkhunīvibhaṅga (Vin.5.83) is called “The first Chapter”.

1.10. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON HOW MANY OFFENCES?

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 1

Prv.1.10:Bu-Pj.1
Vin.5.51

Because of indulging in sexual intercourse how many offences does one fall into? Because of indulging in sexual intercourse one falls into four offences. If one indulges in sexual intercourse with a body that is not decayed ...¹ ... offence of wrong-doing; in an application of lac there is an offence of Expiation.² Because of indulging in sexual intercourse one falls into these four offences.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 2

Prv.1.10:Bu-Pj.2

Because of taking what has not been given ... one falls into three offences³ ... of wrong-doing. Because of taking what has not been given one falls into these three offences.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 3

Prv.1.10:Bu-Pj.3

Because of intentionally depriving a human being of life ... one falls into three offences ... involving Defeat. Because of intentionally depriving a human being of life one falls into these three offences.

MONKS' PĀRĀJIKA 4

Prv.1.10:Bu-Pj.4

Because of laying claim (for oneself) to a non-existent, non-actual state of further-men ... one falls into three offences ... of wrong-doing. Because of laying claim ... one falls into these three offences.

SAṄGHĀDISESA

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Because of emitting semen making an effort ... one falls into three offences ...

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.1

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

Because of coming into physical contact (with a woman) ... one falls into five offences. If a nun, filled with desire, consents to taking hold of a man who is filled with desire above the circle of the knees there is an offence involving Defeat.¹ If a monk rubs (her) body with (his body) there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order. If he rubs an article of clothing (of hers) with (his) body there is a grave offence. If he rubs an article of clothing (of hers) with an article of clothing (of his) there is an offence of wrong-doing. In tickling with the fingers there is an offence of Expiation.² Because of coming into physical contact one falls into these five offences.

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.2

BD.6.77

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Because of offending a woman with lewd words one falls into three offences ...

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.3

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Because of speaking in praise of sense-pleasures for oneself one falls into three offences ...

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.4

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5-12

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.5

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.6

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.7

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.8

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.9

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.10

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.11

Prv.1.10.Ss12

Because of acting as a go-between ... of begging for having a hut built for oneself ... of having a large vihāra built ... of defaming a monk ... of not giving up (his, their, course) one falls into three offences ...

MONKS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Prv.1.10:Bu-Ss.13

Because of not giving up his course a monk who brings a family into dispute, though being admonished up to three times falls into three offences: following the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing; following the two resolutions there is a grave offence; following the conclusion of the (three) resolutions there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order ...

SEKHIYA

MONKS' SEKHIYA 75

Prv.1.10:Bu-Sk.75

Vin.5.52

Because of, out of disrespect, easing oneself or spitting in water how many offences does one fall into?¹ Because of, out of disrespect ... one falls into one offence: wrong-doing. Because of, out of disrespect ... one falls into this one offence.

Concluded is the Second Chapter: on How Many Offences?

¹ See Vin.5.33 where, however, one is said to fall into three offences. ² This is Nuns' Bi-Pc.4. ³ See Vin.5.33; and likewise for the following paragraphs. ¹ This is part of Nuns' Bi-Pj.5. ² This is Monks' Bu-Pc.52. ¹ See Vin.5.44-46.

1.11. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON FALLING AWAY

Because of indulging in sexual intercourse, of the four fallings away how many fallings do the offences appertain to? Because of ... appertain to two fallings away ... there may be falling away from moral habit; there may be falling away from good behavior ...

Prv.1.11

Because of, out of disrespect ... spitting in water, of the four fallings away how many fallings away does the offence appertain to? ... of one falling away: falling away from good behaviour.

Concluded is the Third Chapter: that on Falling Away

1.12. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON COMPRISED IN

Because of indulging in sexual intercourse, of the seven asses of offence in how many classes of offence are the offences comprised? Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in four classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence that is a very grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation¹; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing ...

Prv.1.12

BD.6.78

Because of, out of disrespect ... spitting in water² ... in the class of offence of wrong-doing.

¹ The three other offences but not this one are given at Vin.5.33, BD.6.46, BD.6.47. ² See text Prv1.4.

Concluded is the Fourth Chapter: on Comprised In

1.13. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON ORIGINS

Prv.1.13

Because of indulging in sexual intercourse, of the six origins of offences by how many origins¹ ...

Concluded is the Fifth Chapter: that on Origins

1.14. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON LEGAL QUESTIONS

Prv.1.14

Because of indulging in sexual intercourse, of the four legal questions²

...

Concluded is the Sixth Chapter: that on Legal Questions

1.15. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON DECIDING

Prv.1.15

Because of indulging in sexual intercourse, of the seven (ways for) the deciding (of a legal question) by how many deciding³ ...

¹ See text Prv.1.5. ² See text Prv.1.6. ³ See text Prv.1.7.

Concluded is the Seventh Chapter: that on Deciding

1.16. MONKS' ANALYSIS: ON ACCUMULATION

Because of indulging in sexual intercourse how many offences does one fall into? Because of indulging in sexual intercourse one falls into four offences: if one indulges in sexual intercourse with a body that is not decayed ...¹ ... offence of Expiation. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to² ... by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be that of falling away from moral habit, it may be that of falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised under four classes of offence: it may be under the class of offence involving Defeat, it may be under the class of offence that is a very grave one, it may be under the class of offence of Expiation, it may be under the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences ...³ ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Prv.1.16

Vin.5.53

BD.6.79

Concluded is the Eighth Chapter: that on Accumulation

Concluded are the eight Chapters on Because Of Concluded are the sixteen great Chapters in the Great Synopsis in the Great Analysis

¹ See Prv.1.10:Bu-Pj.1 just above. ² See text Prv.1.8. ³ See text Prv.1.8 down to the end of that Chapter.

2.1. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON LAYING-DOWN-WHERE

PĀRĀJIKA

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 5

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pj.5
Vin.5.54
BD.6.80

Where was that which is the fifth offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One? ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1. Instead of of the five recitations of the Pātimokkha read of the four recitations of the Pātimokkha) ... Because of how many reasons was the fifth offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down by the Lord? Who train themselves? Who have trained themselves in the training? In what state? Who know by heart? Whose is the Utterance? By whom has it been conveyed

“Where was that which is the fifth offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down by that Lord ... ?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī.¹

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the nun Sundarīnandā.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the consenting by the nun Sundarīnandā who was filled with desire to physical contact with a man who was filled with desire.

“Is there there a laying down, a supplementary laying down, a laying down that has not (yet) occurred?” There is one laying down,² for it there is no supplementary laying down nor a laying down that has not (yet) occurred.

¹ Vin.4.211. This is Nuns' Bi-Pj.5. ² Vin.4.213.

“A laying down (that holds good) everywhere, a laying down (that holds good only) for certain districts?” A laying down (that holds good) everywhere.

“A laying down that is shared, a laying down that is not shared?” A laying down that is not shared.

“A laying down for one (Order), a laying down for both (Orders)?” A laying down for one (Order).

“Plunged into which, included in which of the four recitations of the Pātimokkha ...” (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1) ...

“Because of how many reasons was the fifth offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down by the Lord?” Because of ten reasons was the fifth offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down by the Lord: for the excellence of the Order ... (see Prv.1.1:Bu-Pj.1. Instead of of men and of monks read of nuns) ... for help with Discipline.

BD.6.81

“Who train themselves?” Learners and ordinary women who are morally good.

“Who have trained themselves in the training?” Arahants have trained themselves in the training.

“In what state?” The state of desiring the training.

“Who know by heart?” Those who know by heart the procedure of these.

“Whose is the Utterance?” It is the Utterance of the Lord, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One.

“By whom has it been conveyed?” It has been conveyed by a succession (of teachers):

Upāli, Dāsaka, as well as Soṇaka ...

Vin.5.55

Proclaimed the Vinaya-piṭaka in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKĀ 6

“Where was that which is the sixth offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down by that Lord ... ?” It was laid down in Sāvattḥī.¹

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pj.6

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the nun Thullanandā.

¹ Vin.4.216.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the nun Thullanandā who, knowing that a nun had fallen into an offence involving Defeat, neither herself reproved her nor spoke to a group.

One laying down.

Of the six origins of offences she originates it by one origin: she originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 7

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pj.7

“Where was that which is the seventh offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down ... ?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī.¹ ... Concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā imitated the monk Ariṭṭha who formerly had been a vulture-trainer and had been suspended by a complete Order ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 8

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pj.8

“Where was that which is the eighth offence involving Defeat for nuns laid down ... ?” It was laid down in Sāvattihī² ... Concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns carried out the eighth action³ ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

BD.6.82

Concluded are the eight Offences involving Defeat

ITS SUMMARY

Unchastity, taking what is not given,
and the form of men those who are further,
Physical contact, she conceals,⁴ suspended (monks), a doer of eight things—
The Great Hero laid down (these for nuns who) without doubt must be destroyed.⁵

¹ Vin.4.218. ² Vin.4.220. ³ aṭṭhamarī vatthum, where Vin.4.221 reads aṭṭhavatthukā. Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 160 explains, however, how it is that there is Defeat only in the eighth action, other seven being grave offences or those of wrong-doing. ⁴ This refers to the last word in the sikkhāpada of Bi-Pj.5, vajjapaṭicchādikā, one who conceals a fault (in someone else). ⁵ Cf. Vin.5.4.

SAṄGHĀDISESA

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by that Lord ... for a nun who speaks in envy (and) brings a law-suit? Concerning whom? On what subject? ... By whom has it been conveyed?

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.1

“Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order laid down by that Lord ... for a nun who speaks in envy (and) brings a law-suit?” It was laid down in Sāvattḥī.¹

“Concerning whom?” Concerning the nun Thullanandā.

“On what subject?” On the subject of the nun Thullanandā's being one who spoke in envy.

“Is there there ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-Pj.5. Instead of by the second recital, the Defeat class of offence (as in Monks' Bu-Pj.1) read by the third recital, the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order) ... She originates it by two origins: it may be that she originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that she originates it by body and by speech and by mind ...

Vin.5.56

“By whom has it been conveyed?” It has been conveyed by a succession (of teachers):

Upāli, Dāsaka, as well as Soṇaka ...

Proclaimed the Vinaya-piṭaka in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for receiving a woman thief ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī² ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā received a woman thief ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins: it may be that she originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that she originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.2
BD.6.83

¹ Vin.4.224. ² Vin.4.226.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.3

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for going among villages alone ... was laid down in Sāvattihī¹ ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun went among villages alone ... One laying down, three supplementary layings down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.4

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for restoring a nun suspended by a complete Order without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings in accordance with the rule, the discipline, the Teacher's instruction, and not having learnt the group's desire ... was laid down in Sāvattihī² ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā restored a nun suspended by a complete Order without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings in accordance with the rule, the discipline, the Teacher's instruction, and not having learnt the group's desire ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.5

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for a nun who is filled with desire accepting solid food or soft food with her own hand from the hand of a man who is filled with desire ... was laid down in Sāvattihī³ ... concerning the nun Sundarīnandā ... The nun Sundarīnandā who was filled with desire accepted food⁴ from the hand of a man who was filled with desire ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 6

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.6

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for instigating (a nun), saying, "What can this man, whether he is filled with desire or is not filled with desire, do to you, lady, since you are not filled with desire? Please, lady, eat or partake of the solid food or the soft food which this man is giving to you accepting it with your own hand" ... was laid down Sāvattḥī¹ ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun instigated, saying, "What can ... with your own hand." One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

BD.6.84

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 10

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for an angry nun who does not give up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī² ... concerning the nun Caṇḍakālī ... The nun Caṇḍakālī, angry, displeased, spoke thus, "I repudiate the Buddha, I repudiate Dhamma, I repudiate the Order, I repudiate the training ..." ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.10

Vin.5.57

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 11

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for a nun who has been overthrown in some legal question and does not give up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī³ ... concerning the nun Caṇḍakālī ... The nun Caṇḍakālī, overthrown in some legal question, angry, displeased, spoke thus, "The nuns are following a wrong course through partiality and the nuns are following a wrong course through hatred and the nuns are following a wrong course through confusion and the nuns are following a wrong course through fear" ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.11

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 12

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.12

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for nuns who are living in company and do not give up (their course) though being admonished up to the third time ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī¹ ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns were living in company ... One laying down ... They originate it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Prv.2.1:Bi-Ss.13

BD.6.85

The offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for (a nun who is) instigating (nuns), saying, “Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise,” and does not give up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī² ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā instigated (nuns) saying, “Ladies, live you as though in company ... ” ... One laying down ... She originates by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Concluded are the ten Offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order

ITS SUMMARY

Envy, woman thief, among the villages, suspended, and about solid food, “What to you?”, angry, some, company, and on another—these ten.³

NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 1

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.1

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for making a hoard of bowls was laid down by that Lord ... at Sāvattḥī⁴ ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns made a hoard of bowls ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.⁵

¹ Vin.4.228f. ² Vin.4.231. ³ Vin.4.233. ⁴ āmisa, a word not in the relevant part of Vin.4. ¹ Vin.4.234. ² Vin.4.236. ³ Vin.4.238. ¹ Vin.4.239. ² Vin.4.241. ³ For the total of 17 offences of this class for nuns, against 13 for monks, BD.3.212, n.1. ⁴ Vin.4.243.

⁵ See Vin.5.88; and Monks' Bu-NP.1.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 2

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for thinking robe-material (given) not at the right time was robe-material (given) at the right time, and having allotted it, having it distributed ... was laid down in Sāvattihī¹ ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, thinking that robe-material (given) not at the right time was robe-material (given) at the right time, allotting it, had it distributed ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.2

Vin.5.58

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 3

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for tearing away a robe that has been exchanged with a nun ... was laid down in Sāvattihī² ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, having exchanged a robe with a nun, tore it away (from her) ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.3

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 4

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for after having asked for one thing then asking for another ... was laid down in Sāvattihī³ ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, having asked for one thing, asked for another ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.4

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 5

... for after getting one thing in exchange getting another in exchange ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-NP₄) ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.5
BD.6.86

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 6

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for getting something in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, (and) belonging to an Order ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī¹ ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns got something in exchange ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.6

¹ Vin.4.246. ² Vin.4.247. ³ Vin.4.249.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.7

... for getting something in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an Order (and) that she herself had asked for ...

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 8

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.8

... for getting something in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company ...

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 9

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.9

... for getting something in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to a company (and) that she herself had asked for ...

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 10

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.10

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for getting something in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, belonging to an individual ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī² ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā got something in exchange for that which was necessary ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 11

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.11

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for bargaining³ for a heavy cloth (worth) more than four "bronzes" ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī⁴ ...

¹ Vin.4.251. ² Vin.4.254. ³ On cetāpeti here more probably meaning to bargain than to get in exchange, see BD.3.239, n.1. ⁴ Vin.4.255.

concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā asked the king for a woollen garment ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 12

The offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture for bargaining for a light cloth (worth) more than two and a half “bronzes” ... was laid down in Sāvatti¹ ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā asked the king for a linen garment ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-NP.12

Vin.5.59

BD.6.87

Concluded are the twelve Offences of Expiation involving Forfeiture

ITS SUMMARY

Bowl, and not-the-right-and-the-right-time,
in exchange, she asked,
Having got in exchange, necessary,
and belonging to an Order, a company,
Herself asking, belonging to an individual,
four “bronzes”, two and a half.

PĀCITTIYA

DIVISION 1: ON GARLIC

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 1

The offence of Expiation for eating garlic was laid down by the Lord ... in Sāvatti² ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, not knowing moderation, had much garlic taken away ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.³

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.1

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 2

The offence of Expiation for letting the hair of the body grow ... was laid down in Sāvatti⁴ ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns let the hair of the body grow ... One laying down ... She originates it by four origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.2

¹ Vin.4.256. ² Vin.4.259. ³ Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.16. ⁴ Vin.4.260.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 3

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.3

The offence of Expiation for slapping with the hands ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning two nuns ... Two nuns slapped with the palms of their hands ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 4

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.4

The offence of Expiation for an application of lac ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun took an application of lac ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 5

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.5

The offence of Expiation for taking an ablution with water consisting of more than (a measure of) two finger-joints ... was laid down among the Sakyans¹ ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun took a very deep ablution with water ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 6

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.6

BD.6.88

The offence of Expiation for standing with drinking water or with a fan close to a monk while he is eating ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun stood with drinking water and with a fan close to a monk while he was eating ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.³

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.7
Vin.5.60

The offence of Expiation for eating raw grain, having asked for it ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns ate raw grain, having asked for it ... One laying down ... She originates it by four origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 8

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.8

The offence of Expiation for throwing out excrement or urine or rubbish or the remains of food over a wall ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī¹ ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun threw out excrement and urine and rubbish and the remains of food over a wall ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 9

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.9

The offence of Expiation for throwing out excrement or urine or rubbish or the remains of food on to the crops ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns threw out excrement and ... the remains of food on to the crops ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 10

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.10

The offence of Expiation for going to see dancing and singing and music ... was laid down in Rājagaha ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns went to see dancing and singing and music ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.²

The First Division: that on Garlic

DIVISION 2: ON THE DARK OF THE NIGHT

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 11

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.11

The offence of Expiation for standing together with a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī¹ ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun stood together with a man, the one with the other ... when there was no light ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Caravan set on theft.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 12

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.12
BD.6.89

... for standing together with a man ... in a secluded place ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 13

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.13

... for standing together with a man ... in an open place ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 14

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.14

The offence of Expiation for standing together with a man, the one with the other, on a carriage-road or in a cul-de-sac or at a cross-roads ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā stood together with a man, the one with the other, on a carriage-road and in a cul-de-sac and at a cross-roads ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Caravan set on theft.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 15

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.15

Vin.5.61

The offence of Expiation for departing without asking the owner (for permission) after having approached families before a meal and having sat down on a seat ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun departed without asking the owner ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.³

¹ Vin.4.262. ² Vin.5.87. ³ Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.16. ¹ Vin.4.265. ² Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.16. ¹ Vin.4.268. ² Monks' Bu-Pc.66; and see Vin.5.89. ³ Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.1.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 16

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.16

The offence of Expiation for sitting down on a seat without asking the owner (for permission) after having approached families after a meal ... was laid down in Sāvattthī¹ ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā sat down ... after a meal ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 17

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.17

The offence of Expiation for sitting down on a sleeping-place which she has spread or has caused to be spread without asking the owner (for permission), after having approached families at the wrong time ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns sat down on a sleeping-place which they had spread without asking the owner ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.³

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 18

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.18

The offence of Expiation for making (someone) look down on another because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun made (someone) look down on another because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 19

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.19
BD.6.90

The offence of Expiation for cursing oneself or another with Niraya or with the Brahma-faring ... was laid down in Sāvattthī⁴ ... concerning the nun Caṇḍakālī ... The nun Caṇḍakālī cursed herself and another with Niraya and with the Brahma-faring ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 20

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.20

The offence of Expiation for weeping, having struck oneself again and again ... was laid down in Sāvattihī ... concerning the nun Caṇḍakālī ... The nun Caṇḍakālī wept, having struck herself again and again ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

The Second Division: that on the Dark of the Night

DIVISION 3: ON BATHING

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 21

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.21

The offence of Expiation for bathing naked ... was laid down in Sāvattihī¹ ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns bathed naked ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 22

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.22

The offence of Expiation for having a bathing-cloth made exceeding the (proper) measure ... was laid down in Sāvattihī ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns wore bathing cloths that were not of the (proper) measure ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 23

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.23

Vin.5.62

The offence of Expiation for neither sewing nor making an effort to get sewn a nun's robe that she has unsewn or caused to be unsewn ... was laid down in Sāvattihī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā neither sewed nor made an effort to get sewn a nun's robe ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off the responsibility.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 24

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.24

The offence of Expiation for missing going about in an outer cloak for five days ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns, having entrusted the robe to the hands of (other) nuns, set out on a tour of the country with (only) the inner and the upper robes ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭṭhina-cloth.¹

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 25

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.25

The offence of Expiation for wearing a robe that should be handed back ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun, without asking (for permission), put on the robe of a certain (other) nun ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭṭhina-cloth.

BD.6.91

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 26

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.26

The offence of Expiation for putting an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robe-material ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī² ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā put an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robe-material ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 27

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.27

The offence of Expiation for holding back a legally valid division of robe-material ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā held back a legally valid division of robe-material ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 28

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.28

The offence of Expiation for giving recluses' robe-material to a householder or a wanderer or a female wanderer ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā gave recluses' robe-material to a householder ... One laying down ... She originates it by the six origins.

¹ Vin.4.273. ² Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.1. ³ Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.1.
⁴ Vin.4.276. ¹ Vin.4.278. ² Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.16. ¹ Vin.5.88 and Monks' Bu-NP.1. ² Vin.4.283.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 29

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.29

The offence of Expiation for letting the robe-season pass when an expectation of robe-material is not sure ... was laid down in Sāvattihī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā let the robe-season pass when an expectation of robe-material was not sure ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 30

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.30

Vin.5.63

The offence of Expiation for holding back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) ... was laid down in Sāvattihī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā held back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

*The Third Division: that on Bathing*¹

DIVISION 4: ON SHARING

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 31

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.31

BD.6.92

The offence of Expiation for the sharing of one couch by two nuns ... was laid down in Sāvattihī² ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns, in twos, shared one couch ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.³

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 32

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.32

The offence of Expiation for the sharing of one covering-cloth by two nuns ... was laid down in Sāvattihī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns, in twos, shared one covering cloth ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.¹

¹ nhānavaggo against naggavaggo at Vin.4.288. ² Vin.4.289. ³ Vin.5.88.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 33

The offence of Expiation for intentionally causing discomfort to a nun ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā intentionally caused discomfort to a nun ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.33

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 34

The offence of Expiation for neither attending to an ailing (woman) who lived with her nor making an effort to get her attended to ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā neither attended to an ailing (woman) who lived with her nor made an effort to get her attended to ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.34

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 35

The offence of Expiation for, after one has given quarters to a nun, then angry, displeased, throwing her out ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, having given quarters to a nun, then angry, displeased, threw her out ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.35

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 36

The offence of Expiation for a nun who keeps company (and) does not give up (her course) though admonished up to the third time ... was laid down in Sāvattthī² ... concerning the nun Caṇḍakālī ... The nun Caṇḍakālī lived in company ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.36

¹ Vin.5.88. ² Vin.4.294.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 37

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.37

Vin.5.64

The offence of Expiation for walking without a weapon on almstour within (her own) region (when this is) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns walked without a weapon on almstour within (their own) region (when it was; agreed upon as dangerous, frightening ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.¹

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 38

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.38

BD.6.93

The offence of Expiation for walking ... outside (her own) region ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.37).

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 39

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.39

The offence of Expiation for walking on almstour during the rains ... was laid down in Rājagaha ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns walked on almstour during the rains ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 40

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.40

The offence of Expiation for a nun not setting out on almstour after she has kept the rains ... was laid down in Rājagaha ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns did not set out on almstour after they had kept the rains ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.³

The Fourth Division: that on Sharing

DIVISION 5: ON A PICTURE-GALLERY

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 41

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.41

The offence of Expiation for going to see a king's pleasure house or a picture gallery or a park or a pleasure grove or a lotus pond ... was laid down in

¹ Vin.5.88. ² Vin.5.88. ³ Vin.5.87.

Sāvattī¹ ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns went to see a king's pleasure house and a picture gallery ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 42

The offence of Expiation for making use of a sofa or a divan ... was laid down in Sāvattī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns made use of a sofa and a divan ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.³

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.42

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 43

The offence of Expiation for spinning yarn ... was laid down in Sāvattī ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns spun yarn ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.⁴

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.43

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 44

The offence of Expiation for doing household work ... was laid down in Sāvattī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns did household work ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.⁵

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.44

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 45

The offence of Expiation for when one is being spoken to by a nun, saying, "Come, lady, and settle this legal question," and having answered, "Very good," but neither settling it nor making an effort to get it settled ... was laid down in Sāvattī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, on being spoken to by a nun, saying, "Come, lady ..." and having answered, "Very good" (yet) neither settled it nor made an effort to get it settled ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.45

BD.6.94

Vin.5.65

¹ Vin.4.298. ² Vin.5.88. ³ Vin.5.88. ⁴ Vin.5.88. ⁵ Vin.5.88.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 46

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.46

The offence of Expiation for giving with one's own hand solid food or soft food to a householder or to a wanderer or to a female wanderer ... was laid down in Sāvattthī¹ ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā with her own hand gave solid food and soft food to a householder One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 47

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.47

The offence of Expiation for not having given up a household robe but making use of it ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, not having given up a household robe, made use of it ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.³

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 48

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.48

The offence of Expiation for setting out on almstour without having given up her dwelling ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā set out on almstour without having given up her dwelling ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.⁴

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 49

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.49

The offence of Expiation for learning worldly knowledge ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns learnt worldly knowledge ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Dhamma-line-by-line.⁵

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 50

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.50

The offence of Expiation for teaching worldly knowledge ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.49. Instead of learnt read taught) ...

¹ Vin.4.302. ² Vin.5.88. ³ Vin.5.88. ⁴ Vin.5.88. ⁵ Vin.5.89 and Monks' Bu-Pc.4.

The Fifth Division: that on a Picture-Gallery

DIVISION 6: ON A MONASTERY

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 51

The offence of Expiation for knowingly entering a monastery with monks (in it) without asking (for permission) ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns entered a monastery without asking (for permission) ... One laying down,¹ two supplementary layings down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.51

BD.6.95

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 52

The offence of Expiation for reviling and abusing a monk ... was laid down in Vesālī ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns reviled the venerable Upāli ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.52

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 53

The offence of Expiation for being quick-tempered (and) abusing a group ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, being quick-tempered, abused a group ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.53

Vin.5.66

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 54

The offence of Expiation for partaking of solid food or soft food by (a nun) who had been invited or had been satisfied ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns who had eaten and were satisfied ate elsewhere ... One laying down ... She originates it by four origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.54

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 55

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.55

The offence of Expiation for being grudging as to families ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun was grudging as to families ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 56

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.56

The offence of Expiation for spending the rains in a residence where there is no monk ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns spent the rains in a residence where there was no monk ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.¹

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 57

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.57

The offence of Expiation for a nun who has kept the rains and does not "invite" both Orders in respect of three matters ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns, having kept the rains did not "invite" an Order of monks ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 58

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.58

The offence of Expiation for not going for exhortation or for communion ... was laid down among the Sakyans ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns did not go for exhortation ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 59

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.59

BD.6.96

The offence of Expiation for not asking (the date of) the Observance day and not approaching for exhortation ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns neither asked (the date of) the Observance day nor approached for exhortation ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

¹ Vin.4.306. ¹ Vin.5.88. ² Vin.5.87.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 60

The offence of Expiation for making burst, together with a man, the one with the other, a boil or a scab that has formed on the lower part of her body (and) without having obtained permission from an Order or a group ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun together with a man, the one with the other, made a boil burst that had formed on the lower part of her body ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Kaṭhina-cloth.¹

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.60

The Sixth Division: that on a Monastery

DIVISION 7: ON A PREGNANT WOMAN

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 61

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a pregnant woman ... was laid down in Sāvattthī² ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns ordained a pregnant woman ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.61

Vin.5.67

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 62

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a woman who is giving suck ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.62

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 63

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a probationer who has not trained for two years in the six rules ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.63

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 64

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules but is not agreed on by the Order ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.64

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 65

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.65

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a girl married for less than twelve years ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 66

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.66

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a girl married for a full twelve years but who has not trained for two years in the six rules ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 67

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.67

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a girl married for a full twelve years and who has trained for two years in the six rules (but) is not agreed upon by the Order ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 68

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.68

BD.6.97

The offence of Expiation for (a nun who) having ordained the woman who lives with her (and then) for two years helping her nor having her helped ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, having ordained the woman who lived with her, for two years neither helped her nor had her helped ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 69

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.69

The offence of Expiation for not waiting on an ordained woman instructor for two years ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns did not wait on an ordained woman instructor for two years ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin (as) in the first Defeat.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 70

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.70

The offence of Expiation for neither withdrawing nor having the woman who lives with her withdrawn after she has ordained her ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, having ordained the woman who lived with her, neither withdrew her nor had her withdrawn ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

¹ Vin.5.88. ² Vin.4.317.

The Seventh Division: that on a Pregnant Woman

DIVISION 8: ON A MAIDEN

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 71

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a maiden under twenty years of age¹ ... (see Prv.2.1.Bi-Pc.61).

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.71

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 72

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a maiden who has completed twenty years of age (but) has not trained for two years in the six rules ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.72

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 73

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a maiden who has completed twenty years of age and has trained for two years in the six rules but is not agreed upon by the Order ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.73
Vin.5.68

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 74

The offence of Expiation for ordaining while one is less than twelve years (of standing) ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns ordained while they were less than twelve years (of standing) ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.74

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 75

The offence of Expiation for ordaining by one who has completed twelve years (of standing but) is not agreed upon by the Order ... was laid down in

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.75

¹ Vin.4.327.

Sāvattthī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns who had completed twelve years (of standing) ordained (though) they were not agreed upon by the Order ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

BD.6.98

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 76

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.76

The offence of Expiation for afterwards engaging in criticism when on being told, "You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being," and having answered, "Very good" ... Was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Caṇḍakālī. The nun Caṇḍakālī afterwards engaged in criticism when having been told, "You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the present," she had answered, "Very good" ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 77

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.77

The offence of Expiation for neither ordaining a probationer to whom she has said, "If you, lady, will give me a robe, I will ordain you," nor making an effort to get her ordained ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā, having said to a probationer, "If you, lady ... " (yet) neither ordained her nor made an effort to get her ordained ... One laying down ... She originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 78

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.78

The offence of Expiation for saying to a probationer, "If you, lady, will wait upon me for two years, I will ordain you" ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.77).

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 79

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.79

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a probationer who is keeping company with men, keeping company with youths, who is violent, a dwelling-place of grief ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā ordained a probationer who kept company with men ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 80

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a probationer without the consent of (her) parents or (her) husband ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning the mm Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā ordained a probationer without the consent of (her) parents and (her) husband ... One laying down ... She originates it by four origins; it may be that she originates it by speech, not by body, not by mind; it may be that she originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that she originates it by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that she originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.80

Vin.5.69

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 81

The offence of Expiation for ordaining a probationer by showing favouritism (to monks) placed on probation ... was laid down in Rājagaha ... concerning the nun Thullanandā ... The nun Thullanandā ordained a probationer by showing favouritism ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.81

BD.6.99

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 82

The offence of Expiation for ordaining every year ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns ordained every year ... One laying down ... She originates it by three origins.

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.82

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 83

The offence of Expiation for ordaining two (probationers) in one year ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.82).

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.83

The Eighth Division: that on a Maiden

DIVISION 9: ON SUNSHADE AND SANDALS

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 84

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.84

The offence of Expiation for using a sunshade and sandals ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī¹ ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns used a sunshade and sandals ... One laying down, one supplementary laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.²

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 85

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.85

The offence of Expiation for going in a vehicle ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.84). Read went in a vehicle.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 86

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.86

The offence of Expiation for wearing a petticoat ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun wore a petticoat ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.³

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 87

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.87

The offence of Expiation for wearing women's ornaments ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns wore women's ornaments ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.⁴

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 88

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.88

The offence of Expiation for bathing with perfume and paint ... (see Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.87).

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 89

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.89

The offence of Expiation for bathing with scented ground sesamum ...

¹ Vin.4.337. ² Vin.5.88. ³ Vin.5.88. ⁴ Vin.5.88.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 90

The offence of Expiation for causing oneself to be rubbed (with ointment) and causing oneself to be massaged by a nun ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns caused themselves to be rubbed (with ointment), to be massaged by a nun ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Sheep's wool.¹

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.90

BD.6.100

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 91

The offence of Expiation for causing oneself to be rubbed (with ointment) and causing oneself to be massaged by a probationer² ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.91

Vin.5.70

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 92

The offence of Expiation for causing oneself to be rubbed (with ointment) and causing oneself to be massaged by a female novice ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.92

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 93

The offence of Expiation for causing oneself to be rubbed (with ointment) and causing oneself to be massaged by a woman householder ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.93

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 94

The offence of Expiation for sitting down on a seat in front of a monk without asking (for permission) ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns sat down on a seat in front of a monk without asking (for permission) ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in the Kaṭhina-cloth.³

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.94

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 95

The offence of Expiation for asking a question of a monk who has not given leave ... was laid down in Sāvattḥī ... concerning several nuns ... Several nuns asked a question of a monk who had not given leave ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins (as) in Dhamma-line-by-line.¹

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.95

¹ Vin.5.88. ² Vin.4.343. ³ Vin.5.88.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 96

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pc.96

The offence of Expiation for entering a village without (wearing) a vest ... was laid down in Sāvattthī ... concerning a certain nun ... A certain nun entered a village without (wearing) her vest ... One laying down ... She originates it by two origins: it may be that she originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that she originates it by body and by mind, not by speech.

The Ninth Division: on Sunshade and Sandals

Concluded are the Nine Minor Divisions

ITS SUMMARY

Garlic, hair of the body, palm, application, ablution,
 While (he is) eating, of raw grains, two on the remains of food, seeing, /
 In the dark, in a secluded place, in an open place, and on a carriage-road, Before, after, and at the wrong time, misapprehension, with Niraya, having struck, /
 Naked, water, having sewn, for five days, to be handed back, Group, division, recluse, not sure,
 and about kaṭhina (privileges), /
 About one couch, and covering-cloth, intentionally, woman who lives with her,
 Having given, keeping company, within,
 and outside, rains, does not set out, /
 King, sofa, and yarn, household, and about a settlement,
 Should give, robe, dwelling, and learning, should teach, / Monastery, reviling, and quick-tempered, should partake of, grudging as to families,
 In a residence, Invitation, exhortation,
 two things, and about the lower part of the body, /
 A pregnant woman, one giving suck, six rules, not agreed upon, less than twelve,
 And a full (twelve), by the Order, with, ordained (woman), and five or six, /
 Maiden, and two, by the Order, twelve,

BD.6.101

Vin.5.71

¹ Vin.5.89.

and about being not agreed upon,
 Sufficiently, and "If", for two years,
 keeping company, by the husband, /
 Placed on probation, every year,
 and about ordaining two,
 Sunshade, in a vehicle, petticoat,
 women's ornaments, with paint, /
 Ground sesamum, and then a nun, and a probationer, a female novice,
 A woman householder, in front of a monk,
 leave not given, a vest. /

SUMMARY OF THESE DIVISIONS

Garlic, darkness, bathing, sharing, picture-gallery,
 Monastery, then pregnant woman, maidens, sunshade-and-sandals. /

PĀTIDESANĪYA

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 1

The offence to be Confessed for partaking of ghee, having had asked for ... was laid down in Sāvattihī ... concerning the group of six nuns ... The group of six nuns, having had gheeasked for, partook of it ... One laying down,¹ one supplementary laying down ... She originates it by four origins.

Prv:Bu-Pd

BD.6.102

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 2

... oil, having had it asked for ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pd.2

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 3

... honey, having had it asked for ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pd.3

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 4

... molasses, having had it asked for ...

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pd.4

¹ Vin.4.347.

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 5

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pd.5

... fish, having had it asked for ...

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 6

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pd.6

... meat, having had it asked for ...

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 7

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pd.7

... milk, having had it asked for ...

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 8

Prv.2.1:Bi-Pd.8

... curds, having had them asked for ... She originates it by four origins: it may be that she originates it by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that she originates it by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that she originates it by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that she originates it by body and by speech and by mind.

Concluded are the eight offences to be Confessed

ITS SUMMARY

Ghee, oil, and then honey, molasses, and so fish,
Meat, milk, and curds too, a nun having had (them) asked for:
The eight offences to be Confessed were proclaimed by the Buddha Himself. /

*Having abridged those rules of training that were given in full in the Monks'
Analysis,
Concluded is the Chapter on Laying-down-Where in the Nuns' Analysis*

2.2. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON HOW MANY OFFENCES?

PĀRĀJIKA

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 5

Consenting to physical contact with a man who is filled with desire how many offences does a nun who is filled with desire fall into? Consenting ... a nun who is filled with desire falls into three offences: if she consents to taking hold of below the collar-bone, above the circle of the knees, the offence is one involving Defeat; if she consents to a taking hold of above the collar-bone, below the circle of the knees, the offence is a grave one; if she consents to taking hold of something attached to the body, the offence is one of wrong-doing. These are the three offences that, consenting ... a nun who is fined with desire falls into.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pj.5

Vin.5.72

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 6

Concealing a fault, a nun who is one who conceals a fault ... falls into three offences: if she conceals, knowing the matter is one involving Defeat, the offence is one involving Defeat; if, being in doubt, she conceals, the offence is a grave one; if she conceals a falling away from good behaviour, the offence is one of wrong-doing. These are the three offences that, concealing a fault, a nun who is one who conceals a fault falls into.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pj.6

BD.6.103

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 7

Not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time, a nun who is an imitator of one who is suspended ... falls into three offences: following the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing; following the two resolutions there are grave offences; following the conclusion of the (three) resolutions the offence is one involving Defeat. These are the three offences that, though being admonished up to the third time, a nun who is an imitator of one who is suspended falls into.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pj.7

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 8

Completing the eighth thing ... she falls into three offences: if she is told by a man, "Come to such and such a place" and goes there, the offence is one of wrong-doing; in merely approaching the reach of the man's hand, the offence is a grave one; if she completes the eighth thing the offence is one involving Defeat.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pj.8

Concluded are the Offences involving Defeat

SAṄGHĀDISESA

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Bringing a law-suit, a nun who is one who speaks in envy falls into three offences: if she announces it to one (person) the offence is one of wrong-doing; if she announces it to a second the offence is a grave one; at the end of the law-suit the offence is one requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.1

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

Receiving a woman-thief she falls into three offences: following the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing; following the two resolutions there are grave offences; following the conclusion of the (three) resolutions the offence is one requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.2

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Going alone among villages she falls into three offences: if she goes the offence is one of wrong-doing; if she makes the first foot cross the enclosure the offence is a grave one; if she makes the second foot cross the offence is one requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.3

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Restoring a nun suspended by a complete Order, without having obtained permission from the Order, which carried out the proceedings in accordance with the rule, with Discipline with the Teacher's instruction, not having learnt the group's desire, she falls into three offences: following the motion. (see Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.2 above).

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.4

BD.6.104

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5

A nun who is filled with desire, partaking of solid food or soft food that with her own hand she has accepted from the hand of a man who is filled with desire, falls into three offences: if she accepts it thinking, "I will eat, I will partake of," the offence is a grave one; for every mouthful the offence is one requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; if she accepts water for cleansing the teeth, the offence is one of wrong-doing.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.5

Vin.5.73

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 6

Instigating (by) saying, "What can this man, whether he is filled with desire or is not filled with desire, do to you, lady, since you are not filled with desire? Please, lady, eat or partake of the solid food or the soft food that this man is giving to you and that you have accepted with your own hand," she falls into three offences: if at her bidding she accepts thinking, "I will eat, I will partake of," the offence is one of wrong-doing; for every mouthful there is a grave offence; at the end of the meal the offence is one requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.6

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 10

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.10

Not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time, a nun who is angry falls into three offences: following the motion ... (see Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.2).

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 11

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.11

Not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time, a nun who is overthrown in some legal question falls into three offences: following the motion ...

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 12

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.12

Not giving up (their course) though being admonished up to the third time, nuns who live in company fall into three offences: following the motion ...

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Prv.2.2:Bi-Ss.13

Not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time, (but) instigating (and) saying, "Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise," she falls into three offences: following the motion ...

Concluded are the Offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order

NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 1

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.1

Making a hoard of bowls she falls into one offence: that of Expiation involving Forfeiture.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 2

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.2

BD.6.105

Thinking that robe-material (given) not at the right time is robe-material (given) at the right time, having it distributed after she has allotted it, she falls into two offences: when she has it distributed, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when it has been distributed there is an offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 3

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.3

Tearing away a robe she has exchanged with (another) nun, she falls into two offences: when she tears it away, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has torn it away there is an offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 4

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.4

Having another thing asked for when she has had one thing asked for, she falls into two offences: when she has it asked for, in the action (request) there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has had it asked for there is an offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 5

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.5

Getting another thing in exchange when she has got one thing in exchange ... (see Prv.2.2:Bi-NP4).

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 6

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.6

Getting another thing in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, (and) belonging to an Order, she falls into two offences: as she gets it in exchange, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has got it in exchange there is an offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.7

Getting another thing in exchange for that which was necessary (and) appointed for another thing, destined for another thing, (and) belonging to an Order (and) that she herself had asked for belonging to a company ...

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.8

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.9

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.10

belonging to a company (and) that she herself had asked for ... belonging to an individual (and) that she herself had asked for ... (see Prv.2.2:Bi-NP6).

vin.5.74

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 11

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.11

Bargaining for a heavy cloth (worth) more than four “bronzes” she falls into two offences: when she bargains, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has bargained there is an offence of Expiation involving Forfeiture.

NUNS' NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA 12

Prv.2.2:Bi-NP.12

Bargaining for a light cloth (worth) more than two and a “bronzes”, she falls into two offences ...

Concluded are the Offences of Expiation involving Forfeiture

PĀCITTIYA

DIVISION 1: ON GARLIC

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 1

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.1

BD.6.106

Eating garlic she falls into two offences: if she accepts it thinking, “I will eat,” the offence is one of wrong-doing; for every mouthful there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 2

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.2

Letting the hair of the body grow she falls into two offences: when she lets it grow there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has let it grow there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 3

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.3

Slapping with the palms of the hands she falls into two offences: as she slaps, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has slapped there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 4

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.4

Taking an application of lac she falls into two offences: as she takes it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has taken it there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 5

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.5

Taking an ablution with water consisting of more than (a measure of) two finger-joints she falls into two offences ... (see Prv.2.2.Bi-Pc.4).

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 6

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.6

Standing with drinking water or with a fan close to a monk while he is eating she falls into two offences: if she stands within a reach of the hand there is an offence of Expiation; if she stands having left a reach of the hand there is an offence of wrong-doing.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 7

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.7

Eating raw grain having had it asked for she falls into two offences: if she accepts it, thinking, "I will partake of it," there is an offence of wrong-doing; for each mouthful there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 8

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.8

Throwing out excrement or urine or rubbish or the remains of food over a wall she falls into two offences: as she throws it out, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has thrown it out there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 9

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.9

Throwing out excrement ... or the remains of food on to the crops ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 10

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.10

Going to see dancing or singing or music she falls into two offences: as she goes there is an offence of wrong-doing, standing where she sees or hears there is an offence of Expiation.

The First Division: that on Garlic

DIVISION 2: ON THE DARK OF THE NIGHT

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 11

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.11

BD.6.107

Standing together with a man, the one with the other, in the dark of the night when there is no light she falls into two offences: if she stands within the reach of a hand there is an offence of Expiation; if she stands having left the reach of the hand there is an offence of wrong-doing.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 12

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.12

Standing together with a man, the one with the other, in a secluded place ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 13

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.13

Vin.5.75

Standing together with a man, the one with the other, in an open place ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 14

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.14

Standing together with a man, the one with the other, on a carriage-road or in a cul-de-sac or at a cross-roads ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 15

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.15

Departing without asking the owner (for permission) after having approached families before a meal she falls into two offences: if she lets the first foot cross a place sheltered from the rain there is an offence of wrong-doing; if she lets the second foot cross there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 16

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.16

Sitting down on a seat without asking the owner (for permission) having approached families after a meal she falls into two offences: as she sits down, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has sat down there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 17

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.17

Sitting down on a sleeping-place which she has spread or has caused to be spread without asking the owner (for permission) after having approached families at a wrong time, she falls into two offences: as she sits down, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has sat down there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 18

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.18

Because of a misapprehension, because of a misunderstanding, making (someone) look down on another she falls into two offences: as she makes (someone) look down on, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has made (someone) look down on there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 19

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.19

Cursing herself or another with Niraya or with the Brahma-faring she falls into two offences: as she curses, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has cursed there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 20

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.20

Weeping, having struck herself again and again she falls into two offences: if she strikes and weeps there is an offence of Expiation; if she strikes (but) does not weep there is an offence of wrong-doing.

The Second Division: on the Dark of the Night

DIVISION 3: ON BATHING

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 21

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.21
BD.6.108

Bathing naked she falls into two offences: as she is bathing in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has bathed there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 22

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.22

Having a bathing-cloth made exceeding the (proper) measure she falls into two offences: as she is having it made, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has had it made there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 23

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.23

Neither sewing nor making an effort to get sewn a nun's robe that she has unsewn or caused to be unsewn, she falls into one offence: Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 24

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.24

Missing going about in an outer cloak for five days ... one offence ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 25

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.25

Wearing a robe that should be handed back she falls into two offences: while she wears it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has worn it there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 26

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.26

Putting an obstacle in the way of a group's receiving robe-material she falls into two offences: as she puts it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has put it there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 27

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.27

Holding back a legally valid division of robe-material she falls into two offences: as she holds it back, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has held it back there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 28

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.28

Giving recluses' robe-material to a householder or a wanderer or a female wanderer she falls into two offences: as she is giving, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has given there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 29

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.29
Vin.5.76

Letting a robe-season pass when the expectation of robe-material is not sure she falls into two offences: as she lets it pass, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has let it pass there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 30

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.30

Holding back a legally valid removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) she falls into two offences ... (see Prv.2.2.Bi-Pc.27).

The Third Division: on Bathing

DIVISION 4: ON SHARING

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 31

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.31

Two nuns sharing one couch fall into two offences: as they lie down, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when they have lain down there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 32

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.32
BD.6.109

Two nuns sharing one covering-cloth ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 33

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.33

Intentionally causing discomfort to a nun she falls into two offences: as she causes it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has caused it there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 34

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.34

Neither attending to an ailing (woman) who lives with her nor making an effort to get her attended to she falls into one offence: Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 35

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.35

After giving quarters to a nun, theft being angry, displeased, throwing her out she falls into two offences: as she throws her out, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has thrown her out there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 36

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.36

Not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time a nun who keeps company falls into two offences: following the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the resolutions there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 37

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.37

Walking without a weapon on almstour within (her own) region (when this is) agreed upon as dangerous, frightening she falls into two offences: as she goes along, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has gone along there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 38

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.38

Walking ... outside (her own) region ... (see Prv.2.2.Bi-Pc.37).

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 39

Walking on almstour during the rains, she falls into two offences: as she goes along ...

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.39

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 40

Not setting out on almstour after she has kept the rains a nun falls into one offence: Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.40

The Fourth Division: on Sharing

DIVISION 5: ON A PICTURE-GALLERY

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 41

Going to see a king's pleasure house or a picture gallery or a park or a pleasure grove or a lotus pond, she falls into two offences: as she is going there is an offence of wrong-doing; standing where she sees there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.41

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 42

Making use of a sofa or a divan she falls into two offences: she makes use, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has made use there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.42

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 43

Spinning yam she falls into two offences: as she spins, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every running-up there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.43

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 44

Doing household work she falls into two offences: as she does it there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has done it there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.44
BD.6.110

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 45

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.45
Vin.5.77

When one is being spoken to by a nun, saying, "Come lady, settle this legal question," and having answered, "Very good," but neither settling it nor making an effort to get it settled, she falls into one offence: Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 46

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.46

Giving with her own hand solid food or soft food to a householder or a wanderer or a female wanderer, she falls into two offences: as she gives it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has given it there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 47

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.47

Making use of a household robe, not having given it up, she falls into two offences: as she makes use of it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has made use of it there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 48

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.48

Setting out on almstour without having given up her dwelling she falls into two offences: as she makes the first foot cross the enclosure there is an offence of wrong-doing; as she makes the second foot cross there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 49

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.49

Learning worldly knowledge she falls into two offences: as she learns, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every line there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 50

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.50

Teaching worldly knowledge she falls into two offences: as she teaches, in the action ...

The Fifth Division: on a Picture-Gallery

DIVISION 6: ON A MONASTERY

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 51

Knowingly entering a monastery with monks (in it) without asking (for permission) she falls into two offences: as she makes the first foot cross the enclosure ... (see Prv.2.2.Bi-Pc.48).

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.51

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 52

Reviling and abusing a monk she falls into two offences: as she is reviling, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing, when she has reviled there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.52

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 53

Being quick-tempered and abusing a group, she falls into two offences: as she is abusing, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has abused there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.53

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 54

Partaking of solid food or soft food when she has been invited or has been satisfied, she falls into two offences: as she accepts it thinking, "I will eat, I will partake of" there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every mouthful there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.54

BD.6.111

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 55

Being grudging as to families she falls into two offences: as she grudges, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has grudged there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.55

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 56

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.56

Spending the rains in a residence where there is no monk she falls into two offences: if she thinks, "I will spend the rains" (and) prepares a lodging, provides drinking water and water for washing, sweeps a cell, there is an offence of wrong-doing; with sunrise there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 57

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.57

Not "inviting" both Orders in respect of three matters, a nun who has kept the rains falls into one offence: Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 58

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.58

Not going for exhortation or for communion she falls into one offence: Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 59

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.59

Not asking (the date of) the Observance day and not approaching for exhortation ... one offence: Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 60

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.60

Vin.5.78

Making burst, together with a man, the one with the other, a boil or a scab that has formed on the lower part of her body (and) not having obtained permission from an Order or a group she falls into two offences: as she makes it burst, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has burst it there is an offence of Expiation.

DIVISION 7: ON A PREGNANT WOMAN

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 61

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.61

Ordaining a pregnant woman she falls into two offences: as she ordains her, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has ordained her there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 62

Ordaining a woman giving suck ... a probationer who has not trained for two years in the six rules ... a probationer who has trained for two years in the six rules but is not agreed upon by the Order ... a girl married for less than twelve years ... a girl married for a full twelve years who has not trained for two years in the six rules ... a girl married for a full twelve years who has trained for two years in the six rules but is not agreed upon by the Order, she falls into two offences: as she ordains her, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has ordained her there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.62
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.63
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.64
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.65
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.66
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.67

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 68

Ordaining the woman who lives with her (but) for two years neither helping her nor having her helped she falls into one offence: Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.68
BD.6.112

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 69

Not waiting on an ordained woman instructor for two years ... one offence: Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.69

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 70

Having ordained the woman who lives with her (but) neither withdrawing her nor having her withdrawn ... one offence: Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.70

The Seventh Division: on a Pregnant Woman

DIVISION 8: ON A MAIDEN

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 71

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.71

Ordaining a maiden under twenty years of age ... (see Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.61).

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 72

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.72

Ordaining a maiden who has completed twenty years of age (but) has not trained for two years in the six rules ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 73

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.73

Ordaining a maiden who has completed twenty years of age and has trained for two years in the six rules but is not agreed upon by the Order ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 74

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.74

Ordaining while she is less than twelve years (of standing) ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 75

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.75

Ordaining when she has completed twelve years (of standing) but is not agreed upon by the Order ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 76

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.76

Afterwards engaging in criticism when on being told, "You have ordained sufficiently, lady, for the time being," and having answered, "Very good," she falls into two offences: while she is criticizing, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has criticized there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 77

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.77

Neither ordaining nor making an effort to get a probationer ordained to whom she has said, "If you, lady, will give me a robe, I will ordain you," she falls into one offence: Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 78

Saying to a probationer, "If you, lady, will wait on me for two years, I will ordain you" ... Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.78
Vin.5.79

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 79

Ordaining a probationer who is keeping company with men, keeping company with youths, who is violent, a dwelling-place of grief ... (see Prv.2.2.Bi-Pc.71).

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.79

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 80

Ordaining a probationer without the consent of (her) parents or (her) husband ...

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.80

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 81

Ordaining a probationer by showing favouritism (to monks) placed on probation ...

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.81

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 82

Ordaining every year ...

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.82
BD.6.113

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 83

Ordaining two (probationers) in one year ...

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.83

The Eighth Division: on a Maiden

DIVISION 9: ON SUNSHADE AND SANDALS

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 84

Using a sunshade and sandals she falls into two offences: as she is using them, there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when she has used (them) there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.84

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 85

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.85

Going in a vehicle she falls into two offences: as she is going, there is an offence of wrong-doing in the action; when she has gone there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 86

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.86

Wearing a petticoat ... (see Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.84).

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 87

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.87

Wearing women's ornaments ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 88

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.88

Bathing with perfume and paint she falls into two offences: as she bathes, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the bathing there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 89

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.89

Bathing with scented ground sesamum ...

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 90-93

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.90

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.91

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.92

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.93

Causing herself to be rubbed (with ointment) and causing herself to be massaged by a nun ... a probationer ... a woman novice ... a woman householder she falls into two offences: as she causes herself to be rubbed (with ointment), in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has caused herself to be rubbed there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 94

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.94

Sitting down on a seat in front of a monk without asking (for permission) she falls into two offences: as she sits down, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has sat down there is an offence of Expiation.

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 95

Asking a question of a monk who has not given permission she falls into two offences: as she asks, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; when she has asked there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.95

NUNS' PĀCITTIYA 96

Entering a village without wearing a vest she falls into two offences: as she makes the first foot cross the enclosure there is an offence of wrong-doing; as she makes the second foot Cross there is an offence of Expiation.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pc.96

The Ninth Division: on Sunshade and Sandals

Concluded is the Minor (Class)

PĀTIDESANĪYA

NUNS' PĀTIDESANĪYA 1-8

Partaking of ghee ... oil ... honey ... molasses ... fish ... meat ... milk ... curds that she has had asked for she fails into two offences: as she accepts it saying, "I will partake of it" there is an offence of wrong-doing; for every mouthful there is an offence to be Confessed.

Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.1
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.2
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.3
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.4
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.5
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.6
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.7
Prv.2.2:Bi-Pd.8
BD.6.114

Concluded are the Eight Offences to be Confessed

Concluded is the Second Chapter: on How many Offences?

2.3. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON FALLING AWAY

Prv.2.3
Vin.5.80

Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do the offences for a nun who, filled with desire, is consenting to physical contact with a man who is filled with desire appertain to? Of the four fallings away the offences ... appertain to two fallings away: there may be falling away from moral habit; there may be falling away from good behaviour ... Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do the offences for one who is partaking of curds, having had them asked for, appertain to? ... appertain to one falling away: falling away from good behaviour.

Concluded is the Third Chapter: on Falling Away

2.4. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON COMPRISED IN

Prv.2.4

Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence are the offences for a nun who, filled with desire, ... comprised? Of the seven classes of offence the offences for a nun ... are comprised in three classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence that is a very grave one; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing ... The offences for one who is partaking of ... curds, having had them asked for, are comprised in two classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence that has to be Confessed; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing.

Concluded is the Fourth Chapter: on Comprised In

2.5. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON ORIGINS

Prv.2.5

Of the six origins of offences by how many origins do the offences of a nun who, filled with desire, ... originate? ... They originate by one origin: they originate by body and by mind, not by speech ... The offences for one who is partaking of ... curds, having had them asked for, originate by origins: it may be they originate by body, not by speech, no by mind; it may be they originate by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be they originate by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be they originate by body and by speech and by mind.

BD.6.115

Concluded is the Fifth Chapter: on Origins

2.6. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON LEGAL QUESTIONS

Of the four legal questions which legal question (is raised by) the offences for a nun who, filled with desire ... ? Of the four legal questions it is the legal question concerning offences ... For one who is partaking of ... curds, having asked for them ... it is the legal question concerning offences.

Prv.2.6

Concluded is the Sixth Chapter: on Legal Questions

2.7. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON LEGAL QUESTIONS

Prv.2.7

Of the seven (ways for) the deciding (of a legal question) by how many decidings are the offences for a nun who, filled with desire ... stopped? ... They are stopped by three deciding: it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on (her) acknowledgement; it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass the offences of partaking of curds, having had them asked for ... are stopped by three deciding: ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Vin.5.81

Concluded is the Seventh Chapter: on Deciding

2.8. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON ACCUMULATION

How many offences does a nun, filled with desire, consenting to physical contact with a man who is filled with desire fall into? ... She falls into three offences ... (see Prv.2.2).

Prv.2.8

Consenting to physical contact with a man who is filled with desire how many offences does a nun who is filled with desire fall into? Consenting ... a nun who is filled with desire falls into three offences: if she consents to taking hold of below the collar-bone ... (see Vin.5.71f.) ... she falls into these three offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to? Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence are they comprised? Of the six origins of offences by how many origins do they originate? Of the four legal questions which legal question? Of the seven decidings by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences ... (see Prv.1.8 and by a covering over (as with grass) ...

BD.6.116

Partaking of curds, having had them asked for, how many offences does she fall into? Partaking of curds, having had them asked for, she falls into two offences: as she accepts saying, "I will partake of," the offence is one of wrong-doing; for every mouthful the offence is one to be Confessed. Partaking of curds ... she falls into these two offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... by which deciding are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to one falling away; the falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in two classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence that is to be Confessed; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by four origins:

it may be that they originate by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that they originate by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that they originate by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions the legal question concerning offences. Of the seven decidings they are stopped by three ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Concluded is the Eighth Chapter: on Accumulation

2.9. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON LAYING-DOWN-WHERE

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 5

Where was that offence involving Defeat on the ground of consenting to physical contact laid down by that Lord who knows, who sees, perfected one, fully Self-Awakened One? Concerning whom? On what subject? ... By whom was it conveyed? Where was that offence involving Defeat on the ground of consenting to physical contact laid down by that Lord ... ? It was laid down in Sāvattthī ... (see Prv.2.1) ... she originates it by body and by mind, not by speech ... By whom has it been conveyed? It has been conveyed by a succession (of teachers):

Prv.2.9:Bi-Pj.5

Upāli, Dāsaka ...

Vinaya-piṭaka in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 6

Where was that offence involving Defeat on the ground of concealing a fault laid down ... (see Prv.2.1) ... she originates it by one origin in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.9:Bi-Pj.6
Vin.5.82

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 7

Where was that offence involving Defeat on the ground of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time laid down ... in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.9:Bi-Pj.7
BD.6.117

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKĀ 8

Prv.2.9:Bi-Pj.8

Where was that offence involving Defeat on the ground of completing the eighth thing laid down ... in throwing off responsibility.

Concluded are the Offences involving Defeat

SAṄGHĀDISESA

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.1

Where was that offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of the bringing of a law-suit by a nun who speaks in envy laid down? Concerning whom? ... (see Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.1 above) ... she originates it by body and by speech and by mind ... By whom has it been conveyed? By a succession (of teachers):

Upāli, Dāsaka ...

... Vinaya-piṭaka in the Island of Tambapaṇṇi.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.2

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of ordaining a woman thief ... she originates it ... and by mind.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.3

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of going alone among villages ... (as) in the first Defeat.¹

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.4

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of restoring a nun suspended by a complete Order, without having obtained permission from the Order which carried out the proceedings in accordance with the rule, with Discipline, with the Teacher's instruction, not having learnt the group's desire ... in throwing off responsibility.

¹ Vin.5.87

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of a nun who is filled with desire partaking of solid food or soft food that with her own hand she has accepted from the hand of a man who is filled with desire ... (as) in the first Defeat.

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.5

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 6

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of instigating (by) saying, "What can this man, whether he is filled with desire or is not filled with desire, do to you, lady, since you are not filled with desire? Please, lady, eat or partake of the solid food or the soft food that this man is giving to you and that you have accepted with your own hand" ... she originates it ...

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.6

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 10

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of a nun who is angry not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time ... in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.10
BD.6.118

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 11

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of a nun, overthrown in some legal question, not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time ... in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.11

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 12

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of nuns who live in company not giving up (their course) though being admonished up to the third time ... in throwing off responsibility.

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.12

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Prv.2.9:Bi-Ss.13

Vin.5.83

... requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order because of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time for one who is instigating saying, "Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise" ... in throwing off responsibility ...

Prv.2.9.8

... offence to be Confessed because of partaking of curds, having had them asked for ... she originates it by four origins.

Concluded is the First Chapter: on Laying-Down-Where

2.10. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON HOW MANY OFFENCES?

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 5

Because of consenting to physical contact how many offences does she fall into? Because of consenting to physical contact she falls into five offences. If a nun filled with desire, consents to taking hold of a man who is filled with desire below the collar-bone, above the circle of the knees, there is an offence involving Defeat. If a monk rubs (her) body with (his) body the offence is one requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order. If she rubs something attached to the body with the body there is a grave offence. If she rubs something attached to the body with something attached to the body there is an offence of wrong-doing. In tickling with the fingers there is an offence of Expiation.¹ Because of consenting to physical contact she falls into these five offences.

Prv.2.10:Bi-Pj.5

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 6

Because of concealing a fault how many offences does she fall into? ... into four offences. If a nun knowingly conceals a matter involving Defeat the offence is one involving Defeat. If, being in doubt, she conceals it, there is a grave offence. If a monk conceals an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order there is an offence of Expiation¹; if she conceals a falling away from good behaviour there is an offence of wrong-doing. Because of concealing a fault she falls into these four offences.

Prv.2.10:Bi-Pj.6
BD.6.119

¹ Monks' Bu-Pc.52. For some of these offences see the offences given after the formulation of this rule, at Vin.4.111. See also note at BD.2.387. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xxvii ff. for the rules of training that were shared by monks and nuns.

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 7

Prv.2.10:Bi-Pj.7

Because of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time ... she falls into five offences. If a nun who is an imitator of one who is suspended does not give up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time, following the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing, following the two resolutions there are grave offences, following the conclusion of the (three) resolutions there is an offence involving Defeat.² If a nun who is an imitator of a schismatic does not give up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.³ If she does not give up (her) pernicious views though being admonished up to the third time there is an offence of Expiation.⁴ Because of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time she falls into these five offences.

NUNS' PĀRĀJIKA 8

Prv.2.10:Bi-Pj.8

Because of completing the eighth thing ... she falls into three offences ... (see Vin.5.72) ... she falls into these three offences.

Concluded are the Offences involving Defeat

SAṄGHĀDISESA

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 1

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.1

Because of bringing a law-suit a nun, if she be one who speaks in envy ... falls into three offences ... (see Vin.5.72) ... Formal Meeting of the Order.

¹ Cf. Monks' Bu-Pc.64 which reads "very bad offence" for "one requiring a formal Meeting of the Order". But the Old Commentary says that the 13 offences of this kind and the four involving Defeat are what is meant by "very bad offence", duṭṭhullā āpatti, see Vin.4.31, Vin.4.128. ² As at Vin.4.219. ³ See Vin.2.201. ⁴ Monks' Bu-Pc.68.

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 2

Because of ordaining a woman-thief ... three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.2
Vin.5.84

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 3

Because of going alone among villages ... three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.3
BD.6.120

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 4

Because of restoring a nun suspended by a complete Order not having learnt the group's desire ... three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.4

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 5

Because of partaking of solid food or soft food that with her own hand she has accepted from the hand of a man who is filled with desire a nun who is filled with desire falls into three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.5

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 6

Because of instigating (by) saying, "What can this man do to you, lady ... eat or partake of ... having accepted with your own hand" ... three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.6

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 10

Because of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time a nun who is angry falls into three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.10

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 11

Because of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time a nun who is overthrown in some legal question ... three offences.

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.11

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 12

Because of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time a nun¹ who lives in company ... three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.12

NUNS' SAṄGHĀDISESA 13

Because of not giving up (her course) though being admonished up to the third time (but) instigating (and) saying, "Ladies, live you as though in company, do not you live otherwise" ... three offences ...

Prv.2.10:Bi-Ss.13

Concluded are the ten Offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order

Prv.2.10.8

... Because of partaking of curds, having had them asked for, ... she falls into two offences. If she accepts them, saying, "I will eat, I will partake of" there is an offence of wrong-doing. For every mouthful there is an offence to be Confessed. Because of partaking of curds, having had them asked for, she falls into these two offences.

Concluded is the Second Chapter: on How Many Offences?

¹ The plural usually appears in this context; but here "nun" is in the singular.

2.11. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON FALLING AWAY

Because of consenting to physical contact, of the four fallings away how many fallings away do the offences ...appertain to? ... appertain to two fallings away: there may be falling away from moral habit; there may be falling away from good behaviour ... Because of partaking of curds, having had them asked for ... do the offences appertain to? ... falling away from good behaviour.

Prv.2.11

BD.6.121

Concluded is the Third Chapter: on Falling Away

2.12. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON COMPRISED IN

Because of consenting to physical contact of the seven classes of offences in how many classes of offence are the offences comprised? ... in five classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of very grave offence; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing ... Because of partaking of curds, having had them asked for, ... the offences are comprised in two classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence to be Confessed; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing.

Prv.2.12

Vin.5.85

Concluded is the Fourth Chapter: on Comprised in

2.13. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON ORIGINS

Prv.2.13

Because of consenting to physical contact of the six origins of offences by how many origins do the offences ... originate? (see Prv.2.5) ... Because of partaking of curds, having had them asked for ... and by mind.

Concluded is the Fifth Chapter: on Origins

2.14. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON LEGAL QUESTIONS

Prv.2.14

Because of consenting to physical contact of the four legal questions which legal question (is raised by) the offences ... (see Prv.2.6).

Concluded is the Sixth Chapter: on Legal Questions

2.15. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON DECIDING

Prv.2.15

Because of consenting to physical contact of the seven (ways for) the deciding (of a legal question) by how many decidings are the offences ... (see Prv.2.7).

2.16. NUNS' ANALYSIS: ON ACCUMULATION

Because of consenting to physical contact how many offences does she fall into? Because of consenting to physical contact she falls into five offences. If a nun, filled with desire ... (see Prv.2.10:Bi-Pj.5) ... In tickling with the fingers there is an offence of Expiation. Because of consenting to physical contact she falls into these five offences. Of the four fallings away how many failings away do these offences appertain to? ... (See Prv.1.8) ... by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be that of falling away from moral habit, it may be that of falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in five classes of offence; it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat, it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, it may be in the class of offence that is a very grave one, it may be in the class of offence of Expiation, it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by one origin ... (see Prv.1.8) ... and by a covering over (as) with grass. Because of partaking of curds, having had them asked for, how many offences does she fall into? ... she falls into two offences ... and a covering over (as) with grass.

Prv.2.16

BD.6.122

Concluded is the Eighth Chapter: on Accumulation

Concluded are the sixteen Great Synopses in the Nuns' Analysis

3. SUMMARY OF ORIGINS

Prv.3.1
BD.6.123
Vin.5.86

Impermanent are all constructs,¹ painful, not self, and constructed,
And certainly nibbāna is a description meaning not-self.

When the moon of the Buddha has not appeared, when the sun of the Buddha has not risen
The very name of those rules held in common² is not known.

When they have performed various austerities, and have fulfilled the perfections,
The Great Heroes uprising, having become Vision in the world with the Brahmās;

They teach True Dhamma:
the slaying of anguish, the bringing of happiness.
Aṅgīrasa³ the Sakyan Sage, compassionate for all beings,

The best of all creatures, the lion,
taught the three Piṭakas:
The Suttantas, the Abhidhamma, and the Vinaya—

¹ Cf. Dh.277, Dh.278. ² sabhāgadhamma. Here dhamma has to be taken in its meaning of rule or offence; sabhāga is in common, here to monks and nuns. This does not imply that each rule applies to monk and nun alike: some offences could be committed only by monks, others only by nuns. All of these are collected in this Chapter. Cf. Vin.1.126 sabhāgā āpatti, a collective offence. ³ An epithet of the Buddha.

a great special quality.

Thus is True Dhamma led on if Vinaya endures.
The two Analyses, the Khandhakas, and the Headings
Are garlands fastened by Parivāra which is just a strand in the Thread.¹

For this Parivāra itself “origin” is regularized,²
And in the Thread below division and source are shown as different.³

Therefore “He who is well behaved and desires the rule must train in Parivāra”.

BD.6.124

At the Observance they⁴ recite
what was laid down⁵ in the two Analyses, (Saying) I will declare the origin according to the method:
listen to me.

That which is the First Defeat,
and next the Second,
A Go-between and Admonishment
and an Extra Robe,

Wools, Dhamma-line-by-line,
Fact, and Arranging,
Set on Theft, Teaching, and Woman Thief,
Without Consent are thirteen.

These thirteen⁶ were thought out by learned men

¹ suttagaṇa. ² niyato kata, explained at Vin-a.1305 as niyatakata niyatasamuṭṭhāna.

³ sambhedanidānañ c'aññaṃ. The reference appears to be to the mixture, sambheda, of origins of an offence, here divisioned below, by various combinations of body, speech and thought. Nidāna, the source or provenance, is usually the place where a rule was laid down. This Chapter is not itself concerned with these places: they are given in Chapter 8 of which verse 6 is cited at Vin-a.1305. ⁴ Monks and nuns. ⁵ The rules of training. ⁶ That is, the thirteen divisions that now follow. In these the offences from both Vibhaṅgas are grouped according to the kind and number of ways they can be originated by monk or nun. All fall into position and not one rule is omitted. There are a few slight discrepancies between the titles as given above and at the end of the divisions.

according to the Origin-method:

In each the origins are shown to be the same.

Intercourse,¹ semen,² contact,³
the first Undetermined (offence), Arrived first,⁴ procured through (the intervention),⁵ together with a nun in private,⁶

With food,⁷ and two in private,⁸ the fingers,⁹ sporting in the water,¹⁰
A blow,¹¹ also raising,¹² and fifty-three Trainings,¹³

Below the collar-bone,¹⁴ village,¹⁵ full of desire,¹⁶ palm,¹⁷ and application,¹⁸ ablution,¹⁹
Having kept the rains,²⁰ and exhortation,²¹ on not waiting on a woman instructor.²²

These trainings are seventy-six done by body and by thought,²³
All are from one origin as is the First Defeat.

Concluded is First Defeat Origin

Not given,²⁴ form,²⁵ further,²⁶ lewd (words),²⁷ pleasures for self,²⁸
Unfounded,²⁹ belonging to something else,³⁰
the second Undetermined (offence),

¹ Bu-Pj.1. ² Bu-Ss.1. ³ Bu-Ss.2. ⁴ Bu-Pc.16. ⁵ Bu-Pc.29. ⁶ Bu-Pc.30. ⁷ Bu-Pc.43.
⁸ Bu-Pc.44, Bu-Pc.45. ⁹ Bu-Pc.52 ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.53 ¹¹ Bu-Pc.74 ¹² Bu-Pc.75. ¹³ Of the 75 Trainings (Sekhiya), 22 are referred to separately in following parts of this Section, i.e.
Nos. Bu-Sk.11-Bu-Sk.14, Bu-Sk.43, Bu-Sk.57-Bu-Sk.72. So the above 53 refer to Trainings
Nos. Bu-Sk.1-Bu-Sk.10, Bu-Sk.15-Bu-Sk.36, Bu-Sk.38-Bu-Sk.42, Bu-Sk.44-Bu-Sk.56, Bu-
Sk.73-Bu-Sk.75. ¹⁴ Nuns' Bi-Pj.5. ¹⁵ Nuns' Bi-Ss.3. ¹⁶ Nuns' Bi-Ss.5 ¹⁷ Nuns' Bi-Pc.3.
¹⁸ Bi-Pc.4. ¹⁹ Bi-Pc.5. ²⁰ Bi-Pc.40. ²¹ Bi-Pc.58. ²² Bi-Pc.69. ²³ Not the usual citta here, but mānasika. ²⁴ Bu-Pj.2 ²⁵ Bu-Pj.3; viggaha above is an abbreviation of manussaviggaha. ²⁶ Bu-Pj.4; uttariṃ above abbreviating uttarimanussadhamma. ²⁷ Bu-Ss.3. ²⁸ Bu-Ss.4, here reading atthakāmināṃ against attakā- of Vin.3.133 and Vin-a.1307.
²⁹ Bu-Ss.8. ³⁰ Bu-Ss.9.

Should tear away,¹ should apportion,² lying,³ insult,⁴ slander,⁵
 Very bad,⁶ should dig the ground,⁷ growth,⁸ in evasion,⁹ in making look down on,¹⁰

Throwing out,¹¹ and sprinkling,¹² sake of gain,¹³ having eaten,¹⁴
 “Come”,¹⁵ in disrespect,¹⁶ should frighten,¹⁷ and should hide,¹⁸ living thing,¹⁹

Knowing it contains living things,²⁰ (formal) act,²¹ under (twenty),²² in communion,²³ expulsion,²⁴
 Regarding a rule,²⁵ perplexity,²⁶ confusion,²⁷ and with an unfounded charge,²⁸

Remorse,²⁹ legitimate,³⁰ having given (away),³¹ should apportion to an individual,³²
 “What to you?”,³³ not at a right time,³⁴ should tear away,³⁵ misapprehension,³⁶ and with Niraya,³⁷

Group,³⁸ division,³⁹ not sure,⁴⁰ kaṭhina,⁴¹ discomfort,⁴² quarters,⁴³
 Revile,⁴⁴ quick-tempered,⁴⁵ grudging,⁴⁶
 and pregnant,⁴⁷ giving suck,⁴⁸

Two years,⁴⁹ probationer (not agreed on) by the Order,⁵⁰ likewise three on girls,⁵¹

BD.6.126

¹ Bu-NP.25. ² Bu-NP.30. ³ Bu-Pc.1. ⁴ Bu-Pc.2. ⁵ Bu-Pc.3. ⁶ Bu-Pc.9. ⁷ Bu-Pc.10. ⁸ Bu-Pc.11. ⁹ Bu-Pc.12. ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.13. ¹¹ Bu-Pc.17. ¹² Bu-Pc.20. ¹³ Bu-Pc.24. ¹⁴ Bu-Pc.36. ¹⁵ Bu-Pc.42. ¹⁶ Bu-Pc.54. ¹⁷ Bu-Pc.55. ¹⁸ Bu-Pc.60. ¹⁹ Bu-Pc.61. ²⁰ Bu-Pc.62. ²¹ Bu-Pc.63. ²² Bu-Pc.65. ²³ Bu-Pc.69. ²⁴ Bu-Pc.70. ²⁵ Bu-Pc.71. ²⁶ Bu-Pc.72. ²⁷ Bu-Pc.73. ²⁸ Bu-Pc.76. ²⁹ Bu-Pc.77. ³⁰ Bu-Pc.79, reading dhammakam against dhammi- of Vin.4.152 and Vin-a.1307. ³¹ Bu-Pc.81. Though the words chandaṃ datvā occur in Bu-Pc.79, datvā here belongs, according to Vin-a.1307, to cīvaraṃ datvā of Bu-Pc.81. ³² Bu-Pc.39. ³³ Nuns' Bi-Ss.6. ³⁴ Nuns' Bi-NP.2. ³⁵ Nuns' Bi-NP.3. ³⁶ Nuns' Bi-Pc.18. ³⁷ Bi-Pc.19. ³⁸ Bi-Pc.26. ³⁹ Bi-Pc.27. ⁴⁰ Bi-Pc.29. ⁴¹ Bi-Pc.30. ⁴² Bi-Pc.33. ⁴³ Bi-Pc.35. ⁴⁴ Bi-Pc.52. ⁴⁵ Bi-Pc.53. ⁴⁶ Bi-Pc.55. ⁴⁷ Bi-Pc.61. ⁴⁸ Bi-Pc.62. ⁴⁹ Bi-Pc.63. ⁵⁰ Bi-Pc.64. ⁵¹ Bi-Pc.65, Bi-Pc.66, Bi-Pc.67

And three on a maiden,¹ less than twelve,² not agreed on,³

Sufficiently,⁴ dwelling-place of grief,⁵ favoritism,⁶ and every year,⁷ two:⁸

These are seventy rules of training, done triad-wise as to origin:

By body and mind, not speech; speech and mind, not bodily,
They arise by three doors as does the Second Defeat.

Concluded is Second Defeat Origin

Go-between,⁹ hut,¹⁰ vihāra,¹¹ and getting (it) washed,¹² acceptance,¹³
Asking,¹⁴ more than the asking,¹⁵ on two,¹⁶
and by a messenger,¹⁷

Silk,¹⁸ two on pure portions,¹⁹ six years,²⁰ piece of cloth to sit on,²¹
They neglect,²² and likewise on silver,²³
two on various transactions,²⁴

Mended in less,²⁵ for the rains,²⁶ yarn,²⁷ and about a consideration,²⁸
And door,²⁹ giving,³⁰ sewing,³¹ cake,³² reason,³³ and fire,³⁴

Treasure,³⁵ needle,³⁶ and couch,³⁷ cotton,³⁸
piece of cloth to sit on,³⁹ and itch,⁴⁰

¹ Bi-Pc.71, Bi-Pc.72, Bi-Pc.73. ² Bi-Pc.74. ³ Bi-Pc.75. ⁴ Bi-Pc.76. ⁵ Bi-Pc.79. ⁶ Bi-Pc.81.
⁷ Bi-Pc.82. ⁸ Bi-Pc.83. ⁹ Bu-Ss.5. ¹⁰ Bu-Ss.6. ¹¹ Bu-Ss.7. ¹² Bu-NP.4. ¹³ Bu-NP.5.
¹⁴ Bu-NP.6; above the word is viññatt'. ¹⁵ Bu-NP.7: -uttari abhihaṭṭum. ¹⁶ Bu-NP.8, Bu-NP.9. ¹⁷ Bu-NP.10. ¹⁸ Bu-NP.11. ¹⁹ Bu-NP.12, Bu-NP.13. ²⁰ Bu-NP.14. ²¹ Bu-NP.15.
²² Bu-NP.17. This key-word, riñcati, does not occur in the sikkhāpada, but is to be found in the narrative leading up to it, Vin.3.235. ²³ Bu-NP.18. ²⁴ Bu-NP.19, Bu-NP.20. ²⁵ Bu-NP.22.
²⁶ Bu-NP.24. ²⁷ Bu-NP.26. ²⁸ Bu-NP.27. ²⁹ Bu-Pc.19. ³⁰ Bu-Pc.25. ³¹ Bu-Pc.26.
³² Bu-Pc.34. ³³ Bu-Pc.47. ³⁴ Bu-Pc.56. ³⁵ Bu-Pc.84. ³⁶ Bu-Pc.86. ³⁷ Bu-Pc.87.
³⁸ Bu-Pc.88. ³⁹ Bu-Pc.89. ⁴⁰ Bu-Pc.90.

And for the rains,¹ for the Well-farer,² asking,³ getting another thing in exchange,⁴

Two on belonging to an Order,⁵ two on belonging to a company,⁶ to an individual,⁷ light,⁸ heavy,⁹

Two on remains of food,¹⁰ and cloths,¹¹ and about recluses' robe-material¹²:

BD.6.127

Thou understandeth that these offences may arise
by six causal occasions:
By body, not by speech or mind; by speech,
not by body or thought,¹³

By body and speech, but not by mind;
by body and mind, not by speech;
By speech and mind, not by body:
they may arise from the three doors.

Vin.5.88.

These, being six-originated, are similar to the Go-Between.

Concluded is the Go-Between Origin

A schism,¹⁴ one who imitates,¹⁵ one difficult to speak to,¹⁶ disrepute,¹⁷ very bad offence,¹⁸ and view,¹⁹ Consent,²⁰ and two on loud laughter,²¹
and two on noise,²² one should not talk,²³

On the ground,²⁴ on a low seat,²⁵ standing,²⁶ going behind,²⁷ and at the side of a path,²⁸
A fault,²⁹ a (nun-)imitator,³⁰ taking hold of,³¹ should restore,³² renouncing,³³

¹ Bu-Pc.91. ² Bu-Pc.92. ³ Nuns' Bi-NP.4. ⁴ Bi-NP.5. ⁵ Bi-NP.6. Bi-NP.7. ⁶ Bi-NP.8, Bi-NP.9. ⁷ Bi-NP.10. ⁸ Bi-NP.12. ⁹ Bi-NP.11. Note reversal of the order; both offences are concerned with a cloth. ¹⁰ Nuns' Bi-Pc.8, Bi-Pc.9. ¹¹ Bi-Pc.22. ¹² Bi-Pc.28. ¹³ manas here instead of the more usual citta; Cf. verse 16. ¹⁴ Bu-Ss.10. ¹⁵ Bu-Ss.11. ¹⁶ Bu-Ss.12. ¹⁷ Bu-Ss.13. ¹⁸ Bu-Pc.64. ¹⁹ Bu-Pc.68. ²⁰ Bu-Pc.80. ²¹ Bu-Sk.11, Bu-Sk.12. ²² Bu-Sk.13, Bu-Sk.14. ²³ Bu-Sk.43. ²⁴ Bu-Sk.68. ²⁵ Bu-Sk.69. ²⁶ Bu-Sk.70. ²⁷ Bu-Sk.71. ²⁸ Bu-Sk.72. ²⁹ Nuns' Bi-Pj.6. ³⁰ Nuns' Bi-Pj.7. ³¹ Nuns' Bi-Pj.8. ³² Nuns' Bi-Ss.4. ³³ Bi-Ss.10.

In some,¹ two on in company,² struck,³ should unsew,⁴ and about an ailing (woman),⁵ Company again,⁶ should not settle,⁷ and monastery,⁸ invitation,⁹

Every half,¹⁰ two on the woman who lives with her,¹¹ robe,¹² waiting on¹³:

These thirty-seven offences from body, speech and mind
 Are all from one origin as is Admonishing.

Concluded is Admonishing Origin

Three on kaṭhina (privileges) removed,¹⁴
 the first (rule on) the bowl,¹⁵ medicine,¹⁶
 Special,¹⁷ and also¹⁸ dangerous,¹⁹
 and²⁰ two on setting-forth,²¹

Quarters,²² out-of-turns,²³ not left over,²⁴ invited,²⁵
 Assigning,²⁶ of a king,²⁷ at a wrong time,²⁸ giving directions,²⁹ and about forest (-lodgings),³⁰

In envy,³¹ and a hoard,³² before,³³ after,³⁴ and at a wrong time,³⁵
 For five days,³⁶ to be handed back,³⁷
 and two on a household robe,³⁸

On the lower part of the body,³⁹ also on a seat⁴⁰—these twenty-nine

May from the three doors arise

¹ Bi-Ss.11. ² Bi-Ss.12, Bi-Ss.13. ³ Nuns' Bi-Pc.20. ⁴ Bi-Pc.23. ⁵ Bi-Pc.34. ⁶ Bi-Pc.36.

⁷ Bi-Pc.45. ⁸ Bi-Pc.51. ⁹ Bi-Pc.57. ¹⁰ Bi-Pc.59. ¹¹ Bi-Pc.68, Bi-Pc.70. ¹² Bi-Pc.77.

¹³ Bi-Pc.78. ¹⁴ Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.2, Bu-NP.3. ¹⁵ Bu-NP.21. ¹⁶ Bu-NP.23. ¹⁷ Bu-NP.28.

¹⁸ Reading cāpi with Vin-a.1311 instead of text's vāpi. ¹⁹ Bu-NP.29. ²⁰ Again reading ca for text's vā. ²¹ Bu-Pc.14, Bu-Pc.15. ²² Bu-Pc.23. ²³ Bu-Pc.33. ²⁴ Bu-Pc.35. ²⁵ Bu-Pc.46.

²⁶ Bu-Pc.59. ²⁷ Bu-Pc.83. ²⁸ Bu-Pc.85. ²⁹ Bu-Pd.2. ³⁰ Bu-Pd.4. ³¹ Nuns' Bi-Ss.1.

³² Nuns' Bi-NP.1. ³³ Nuns' Bi-Pc.15. ³⁴ Bi-Pc.16. ³⁵ Bi-Pc.17. ³⁶ Bi-Pc.24. ³⁷ Bi-Pc.25.

³⁸ Bi-Pc.47, Bi-Pc.48. ³⁹ Bi-Pc.60. ⁴⁰ Bi-Pc.94.

by body and speech but not by mind:
All, being of dual origin, are the same as the Kaṭhina.

Concluded is Kaṭhina Origin

Sheep's wool,¹ two on sleeping-place,² removable,³ eating a meal,⁴ Group,⁵ at a wrong time,⁶ stored,⁷ water for cleansing the teeth,⁸ unclothed ones,⁹

Fighting,¹⁰ an army,¹¹ sham-fight,¹² fermented liquor,¹³ bathing at less,¹⁴
On disfigurement,¹⁵ two concerning confession,¹⁶ garlic,¹⁷ should stand close,¹⁸ dancing,¹⁹

Bathing,²⁰ covering-cloth,²¹ sleeping-place,²² in (her own) region,²³ likewise outside,²⁴
During the rains,²⁵ picture-gallery,²⁶ sofa,²⁷ spinning yarn,²⁸

(Household-) work,²⁹ and with her own hand,³⁰ and about a residence where there is no monk,³¹
Sunshade,³² and vehicle,³³ petticoat,³⁴ ornament,³⁵ perfume,³⁶ scented,³⁷

Nun,³⁸ and probationer,³⁹ woman novice,⁴⁰ woman householder,⁴¹
Without (her) vest⁴² — forty-four offences.

¹ Bu-NP.16. ² Bu-Pc.5, Bu-Pc.6. ³ Bu-Pc.18. ⁴ Bu-Pc.31. ⁵ Bu-Pc.32. ⁶ Bu-Pc.37.
⁷ Bu-Pc.38. ⁸ Bu-Pc.40. ⁹ Bu-Pc.41. ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.48. ¹¹ Bu-Pc.49. ¹² Bu-Pc.50. ¹³ Bu-
Pc.51. ¹⁴ Bu-Pc.57. ¹⁵ Bu-Pc.58. ¹⁶ Bu-Pd.1, Bu-Pd.3. ¹⁷ Nuns' Bi-Pc.1. ¹⁸ Bi-Pc.6.
¹⁹ Bi-Pc.10. ²⁰ Bi-Pc.21. ²¹ Bi-Pc.32. ²² Bi-Pc.31. Commentary places Bi-Pc.31 after Bi-Pc.32; cf. the reversal found above, Vin.5.87, Nuns' Bi-NP.12 and Bi-NP.11. Moreover, the word seyyā, sleeping-place above, appears as mañca, couch, in the sikkhāpada. ²³ Nuns' Bi-Pc.37. ²⁴ Bi-Pc.38, bahi here for sikkhāpada's tiro. ²⁵ Bi-Pc.39. ²⁶ Bi-Pc.41. ²⁷ Bi-Pc.42.
²⁸ Bi-Pc.43. ²⁹ Bi-Pc.44. ³⁰ Bi-Pc.46. ³¹ Bi-Pc.56. ³² Bi-Pc.84. ³³ Bi-Pc.85. ³⁴ Bi-Pc.86. ³⁵ Bi-Pc.87. ³⁶ Bi-Pc.88. ³⁷ Bi-Pc.89. ³⁸ Bi-Pc.90. ³⁹ Bi-Pc.91. ⁴⁰ Bi-Pc.92.
⁴¹ Bi-Pc.93. ⁴² Bi-Pc.96.

By body, not by speech or mind;
 by body and mind, not by speech,
 All, being of dual origin,
 are the same as that concerning Sheep's Wool.

Concluded is Sheep's Wool Origin

Vin.5.89

Line,¹ except,² not agreed on,³ and likewise after (sun-)set,⁴
 The two spoken on worldly knowledge,⁵ and asking without leave⁶:

These seven rules of training by speech, not by body and mind,
 By speech and mind are born, but cannot be born by body.
 All are of dual origin
 as in Dhamma-line-by-line.

Concluded is Dhamma-Line-by-Line Origin

Highway,⁷ boat,⁸ sumptuous,⁹ with a woman,¹⁰ should let grow,¹¹
 Grain,¹² and likewise being invited,¹³ and the eight to be Confessed¹⁴:

These fifteen trainings by body, not by speech, not by thought;
 By body and speech are born, they cannot be born of mind;

BD.6.130

They are born by body and mind, they are not born by speech;
 (And) by body, speech and by mind—
 the fourfold origin
 Laid down by the Buddha's knowledge is as with Highway.

Concluded is Highway Origin

Caravan set on theft,¹⁵ overhearing,¹⁶ a

¹ Bu-Pc.4. ² Bu-Pc.7. ³ Bu-Pc.21. ⁴ Bu-Pc.22. ⁵ Nuns' Bi-Pc.49, Bu-Pc.50. ⁶ Bu-Pc.95.

⁷ Bu-Pc.27. ⁸ Bu-Pc.28. ⁹ Bu-Pc.39. ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.67. ¹¹ Nuns' Bi-Pc.2. ¹² Bi-Pc.7.

¹³ Bi-Pc.54. ¹⁴ Nuns' Bi-Pd.1-Bi-Pd.8. ¹⁵ Bu-Pc.66. ¹⁶ Bu-Pc.78.

nd about asking for curry,¹ Night,² and secluded,³ in an open place,⁴ and the seventh about a cul-de-sac⁵:

Are born of body and mind, they are not born of speech;
 By means of three doors (from which offences) are born, these,
 dual in origin,
 Have origins (as) Caravan Set on Theft, proclaimed by the Kinsman of the Sun.

Concluded is Caravan-Set-on-Theft Origin

Tathāgatas do not teach true Dhamma to someone holding a sunshade,⁶ Neither to one holding a staff,⁷ nor to those holding a knife,⁸ a weapon,⁹ Nor to one wearing shoes,¹⁰ sandals,¹¹ in a vehicle,¹² on a bed,¹³ who is lolling,¹⁴ (Wearing) a turban,¹⁵ nor muffled up¹⁶:
 eleven, not less,

Are born of speech and thought,
 they are not born of body.
 In the Dhamma-teaching all are agreed upon as having one origin.

Concluded is Dhamma-Teaching Origin

Fact¹⁷ is born of body, not of speech, not of mind;
 And it is born of speech, not of body, not of mind;

It is born of body and speech, it is not born of mind.

So, speaking about Fact means it is born in three ways.

¹ Bu-Sk.37. ² Nuns' Bi-Pc.11. ³ Bi-Pc.12. ⁴ Bi-Pc.13. ⁵ Bi-Pc.14. ⁶ Bu-Sk.57. ⁷ Bu-Sk.58. ⁸ Bu-Sk.59. ⁹ Bu-Sk.60. ¹⁰ Bu-Sk.61. ¹¹ Bu-Sk.62. ¹² Bu-Sk.63. ¹³ Bu-Sk.64, reading seyyā against sayana at Vin.4.202. ¹⁴ Bu-Sk.65. ¹⁵ Bu-Sk.66. ¹⁶ Bu-Sk.67.

¹⁷ bhūtaṃ. This appears to refer to Bu-Pc.8 which has not yet been included.

Concluded is Speaking-about-Fact Origin

BD.6.131

Woman thief¹ by speech, by mind, this too is born of body.
 This ordination of a woman thief is born from three doors;
 The dual origin spoken of by the King under Dhamma is not made.

Concluded is Ordination-of-Woman-Thief Origin

Without the consent² by speech, not of body and not of mind;
 If born of body and speech, then it is not born of mind;

Vin.5.90

If born of speech and mind,
 then it is not born of body.
 It is born from three doors—
 a fourth (causal) occasion is not made.

Concluded is Without-the-Consent Origin

The abstract of the thirteen (classes of) origin has indeed been well taught.
 The impossibility of an occasion for confusion is in accordance with the rules as guide:³
 Bearing this in mind, wise men do not get confused about origin.

Concluded is the Abstract under the Head of Origin

¹ Nuns' Bi-Ss.2. ² Nuns' Bi-Pc.80. ³ dhammanetti, explained at Vin-a.1314 as Vinayapāḷidhamma.

4. CONSECUTIVE REPETITIONS

¹ How many offences, how many classes of offence, how many matters is one trained in, ² how many disrespects, how many respects, how many matters is one trained in, how many fallings-away, how many origins of offences, how many roots³ of disputes how many roots of censure, how many things to be remembered, how many matters making for schism, how many legal questions, how many decidings?

Prv.4.1.1
BD.6.132
Vin.5.91

Five offences, five classes of offence, five matters that are trained in, seven offences, seven classes of offence, seven matters that are trained in, six disrespects, six respects, six matters that are trained in, four fallings-away, six origins of offences, six roots of disputes six roots of censure, six things to be remembered, eighteen matters making for schism, four legal questions, seven decidings.

Prv.4.1.2

Herein what are the five offences? An offence involving Defeat, an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, an offence of Expiation, an offence to be Confessed, an offence of wrong-doing—these are the five offences.

Prv.4.1.3

Herein, what are the five classes of offence? The class of offence involving Defeat ... the class of offence of wrong-doing—these are the five classes of offence.

Prv.4.1.4

¹ Note by Sujato: In Horner's edition this chapter and the next were regarded as sections of the same chapter. I have adjusted this to follow the more logical structure of the Mahā-saṅgīti edition. Thus the following chapters are numbered one greater than in her edition. Also see note on Prv.8. ² vinītavatthu is explained below. Vin-a.1314 says “questions on discipline about those offences (just referred to); so, trained (vinīta), discipline (vinaya) and suppression (or, mastery, settling or suppression, vūpasama) are one in meaning”. ³ mūla, root as cause; Cf. MN-a.i.12.

Herein what are the five matters that are trained in? Abstaining from,¹ refraining from, avoidance of, restraint from, not doing, not committing, non-trespassing, not transgressing control,² bridge-breaking³ in regard to the five classes of offence—these are the five matters that are trained in.⁴

Prv.4.1.5
BD.6.133

Herein what are the seven offences? An offence involving defeat, an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, a grave offence, an offence of Expiation, an offence to be Confessed, an offence of wrong-doing, an offence of wrong-speech—these are the seven offences.

Prv.4.1.6

Herein what are the seven classes of offence? The class of offence involving Defeat ... the class of offence of wrong-speech—these are the seven classes of offence.

Prv.4.1.7

Herein what are the seven matters that are trained in? Abstaining from ... bridge-breaking in regard to the seven classes of offence—these are the seven matters that are trained in.

Prv.4.1.8
Vin.5.92

Herein what are the six (kinds of) disrespect? Disrespect for the Buddha,⁵ disrespect for Dhamma, disrespect for the Order, disrespect for the training, disrespect for diligence, disrespect for reciprocal courtesy⁶—these are the six (kinds of) disrespect.

Prv.4.1.9

Herein what are the six (kinds of) respect? Respect for the Buddha ... respect for reciprocal courtesy—these are the six (kinds of) respect.

Prv.4.1.10

¹ The first four words occur at MN.iii.74 (the Commentary on which resembles the Vinaya Commentary) and all are to be found at Ds.299=Vb.285. ² Vin-a.1315 says nothing about anatikkamo (not transgressing); of velā is (control) it says “from controlling is control (velanato velā). The meaning is controlling, driving out”. Three kinds of velā are given at MN-a.ii.95 (kāla-, sīma- and sīla-) where velā-anatikkamo comes under the third kind. See also Vb.285ff. where the above sequence of words is applied to each of the five sīlas. At Ds-a.219 velā anatikkamo is also taken as one phrase. I have followed this apparently well recognized practice above. ³ setughāta. See AN.i.22Of., AN.i.261, AN.ii.145f.; also Vin.1.59, Vin.3.6, Vin.4.24. Setu, the bridge, seems taken, however, in rather a different sense above. Vin-a.180 calls it magga; but Vin-a.1315 on above passage (Cf. Atthasālinī 219 says “bridge means: it ties, binds, obstructs the way out (or, outlet, niyyāna, i.e. to safety). Bridge-breaking is the destroying of these descriptions”.) The broken bridge therefore should provide the way out. This is in antithesis to the traditional symbolism of “bridge” as the necessary means for passage from the hither to the further shore. ⁴ The meaning is that the five classes of offence are to be trained in by these methods. ⁵ As at DN.iii.244, AN.iii.340. ⁶ Paṭisanthāra. Described as āmisa- and dhamma- at AN.i.93. See also AN.iii.362, DhP-a.iv.111; spoken of only as twofold at Vin-a.1315 and DN-a.1034.

Herein what are the six matters that are trained in? Abstaining from ... bridge-breaking in regard to the six (kinds of) disrespect—these are the six matters that are trained in.

Prv.4.1.11

Herein what are the four fallings away? Falling away from moral habit, falling away from good behaviour, falling away from (right) view, falling away from (right) mode of livelihood—these are the four fallings away.

Prv.4.1.12

BD.6.134

Herein what are the six origins of offences? There is an offence that originates from body, not from speech, not from mind; there is an offence that originates from speech, not from body, not from mind; there is an offence that originates from body and from speech, not from mind; there is an offence that originates from body and from mind, not from speech; there is an offence that originates from speech and from mind, not from body; there is an offence that originates from body and from speech and from mind—these are the six origins of offences.

Prv.4.1.13

Herein what are the six roots of disputes As to this a monk becomes angry and bears ill-will.¹ Whatever monk becomes angry and bears ill-will, he lives without deference, disrespectful towards the Teacher ... (= Kd.14.14.3 down to the end of that paragraph. The word monk is here constantly omitted) ... thus there come to be no future effects of that evil root of disputes these are the six roots of disputes

Prv.4.1.14

Herein what are the six roots of censure? As to this a monk becomes angry ... (this is identical with the last paragraph, reading censure instead of dispute) ...—these are the six roots of censure.

Prv.4.1.15

Herein what are the six things to be remembered?² As to this, a monk should offer his fellow Brahma-farers a friendly act of body both in public and in private. This is a thing to be remembered making for affection, making for respect, it conduces to concord, to lack of dispute, to harmony, to unity. And again a monk should offer ... a friendly act of speech ... a friendly act of thought ... to unity. And again, whatever are those lawful acquisitions, lawfully acquired, if they be even but what is put into the begging bowl—a monk should be one to enjoy sharing such acquisitions, to enjoy them in common with his virtuous fellow Brahma-farers. This too is a thing to be remembered ... to unity. And again, whatever are those moral ¹ See BD.5.118f. ² As at DN.iii.245; MN.i.322; AN.iii.288; Cf. DN.ii.80; MN.ii.250.

Vin.5.93 habits that are faultless, without flaw, spotless, without blemish, freeing, BD.6.135 praised by wise men, untarnished, conducive to concentration—a monk should dwell united in virtues such as these with his fellow Brahma-farers, both in public and in private. This too is a thing to be remembered ... to unity. And again, whatever view is ariyan, leading onwards, leading him who acts according to it to the complete destruction of anguish—a monk should dwell united in a view such as this with his fellow Brahma-farers, both in public and in private. This too is a thing to be remembered ... to Prv.4.1.16 unity.

Prv.4.1.17 Herein what are the eighteen matters making for schism? As to this, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... (=Kd.10.5.4) ... he explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence—these are the eighteen matters making for schism.

Prv.4.1.18 Herein what are the four legal questions? A legal question concerning disputes a legal question concerning censure, a legal question concerning offences, a legal question concerning obligations¹—these are the four legal questions.

Prv.4.1.19 Herein what are the seven decidings?² A verdict in the presence of, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision of the majority, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass—these are the seven decidings.

Concluded is the Chapter on the Questions: “How Many?”

ITS SUMMARY

Offence, classes of offence, trained in, sevenfold again,
 Trained in and disrespects too, respects, and root too,
 Again trained in, falling away, origin, disputes
 Censure, to be remembered, schism, and about legal question,
 Just seven decidings are spoken of: these seventeen terms.

Prv.4.2.1 Could one fall into an offence involving Defeat by means of the first origin of offences? It should be said “Oh no”. Could one fall into an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order? It should be said “One might”.
 Could one fall into a grave offence ... an offence of Expiation ... an offence to be Confessed ... an offence of wrong-doing? It should be said “One might”. Could one fall into an offence of wrong speech? It should be said “Oh no”.

¹ Vin.2.88, Vin.3.164, Vin.4.126, Vin.4.238. ² Vin.4.207.

Prv.4.2.2
BD.6.136

Could one fall into ... (see Prv.4.2.1) ... an offence of Expiation by means of the second origin of offences? It should be said “One might”. Could one fall into an offence to be Confessed? It should be said “Oh no”. Could one fall into an offence of wrong-doing? It should be said “One might”. Could one fall into an offence of wrong speech? It should be said “Oh no”.

Prv.4.2.3

Could one fall into ... (=Prv.4.2.1) ... by means of the third origin of offences? ...

Prv.4.2.4
Vin.5.94

Could one fall into an offence involving Defeat by means of the fourth origin of offences? It should be said “One might”. Could one fall into an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order ... (=Prv.4.2.1.)

Prv.4.2.5

Could one fall into ... (=Prv.4.2.4) ... an offence to be Confessed by means of the fifth origin of offences? It should be said “Oh no”. Could one fall into an offence of wrong-doing? It should be said “One might”. Could one fall into an offence of wrong speech? It should be said “One might”.

Prv.4.2.6

Could one fall ... by means of the sixth origin of offences? ... (=Prv.4.2.4).

Concluded is the First Chapter: on the six Origins of Offences

How many offences does one fall into by means of the first origin of offences? One falls into five offences by means of the first origin of offences. A monk, thinking it is allowable, begging; himself, builds a hut without the site being marked out, exceeding the measure, involving destruction, not with an open space round it¹; in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; if one lump is still to come there is a grave offence²; when that lump has come there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.³ A monk, thinking it is allowable, eats a meal at a wrong time—there is an offence of Expiation.⁴ A monk, thinking it is allowable, eats solid food or soft food, having accepted it with his own hand from the hand of nun who is not a relation (and) has entered among the houses—there is an offence to be Confessed.⁵ One falls into these five offences by means of the first origin of offences.

Prv.4.3.1

Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences ap-

BD.6.137

¹ Bu-Ss.6. ² As at Vin.3.151. ³ As at Vin.3.151. ⁴ Bu-Pc.37. ⁵ Bu-Pd.1.

pertain to? Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence are they comprised? Of the six origins of offences by how many origins do they originate? Of the four legal questions which legal question? Of the seven decidings by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be to falling away from moral habit, it may be to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in five classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence to be Confessed; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body, not by speech, not by mind. Of the four legal questions the legal question concerning offences. Of the seven decidings they are stopped by three decidings: it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement; it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Prv.4.3.2

How many offences does one fall into by means of the second origin of offences? One falls into four offences by means of the second origin of offences. A monk, thinking it is allowable commands¹“Build a hut for me”.² If they build a hut for him, the site not having been marked out, exceeding the measure,³ involving destruction, not with an open space round it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; if one lump is still to come there is a grave offence; when that lump has come there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order. A monk, thinking it is allowable, makes someone who is not ordained teach Dhamma line by line, there is an offence of Expiation.⁴ One falls into these four offences by means of the second origin of offences.

Vin.5.95

BD.6.138

Of the four fallings away how many ... (see Prv.4.3.1) ... by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be to falling away from moral habit, it may be to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in four classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by speech, not by body not by mind. Of the four legal questions the legal question concerning offences. Of the seven decidings they are stopped by three decidings: ... (see Prv.4.3.1) ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

¹ Vin.1.155 reads samādisati; above -diyati. ² Vin.3.153 (in Bu-Ss.6). ³ Not at Vin.3.153 or in the following paragraphs there. ⁴ Bu-Pc.4.

Prv.4.3.3

How many offences does one fall into by means of the third origin of offences? One falls into five offences by means of the third origin of offences. A monk, thinking it is allowable, having settled on (a site),¹ builds a hut, the site not having been marked out, exceeding the measure, involving destruction, not with an open space round it; in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; if one lump is still to come there is a grave offence; when that lump has come there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.² A monk, thinking it is allowable, having asked for sumptuous foods for himself, eats them, there is an offence of Expiation.³ A monk, thinking it is allowable, without restraining⁴ nuns who are giving directions, eats, there is an offence to be Confessed.⁵ One falls into these five offences by means of the third origin of offences.

Of the four fallings away how many ... by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away ... Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in five classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one, it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence to be Confessed; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body and by speech, not by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.139

Prv.4.3.4

How many offences does one fall into by means of the fourth origin of offences? One falls into six offences ... A monk indulges in sexual intercourse, there is an offence involving Defeat.¹ A monk, thinking it is not allowable, begging himself, builds a hut without the site being marked out, exceeding the measure, involving destruction, not with an open space round it; in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; if one lump is still to come there is a grave offence; when that lump has come there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.² A monk, thinking it is not allowable, eats a meal at a wrong time—there is an offence of Expiation.³ A monk, thinking it is not allowable, eats solid food or soft food, having accepted it with his own hand from the hand of a nun who is not a relation (and) has entered among the houses—there is an offence to be Confessed.⁴ One falls into these six offences by means of the fourth origin of offences.

¹ saṃvidahitvā; word does not appear to be in Bu-Ss.6. ² Bu-Ss.6. ³ Bu-Pc.39.

⁴ nivāretvā; forms of this verb are in the narrative portion of Pāṭidesaniya, but not in the sikkhāpada. ⁵ Bu-Pd.2.

Vin.5.96

Of the four fallings away how many ... by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away ... Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in six classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence to be Confessed; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body and by mind, not by speech. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Prv.4.3.5

BD.6.140

How many offences does one fall into by means of the fifth origin of offences? One falls into six offences ... A monk of evil wishes,⁵ overcome by desire, claims a non-existent state offurther-men which is not fact⁶—there is an offence involving Defeat.⁷ A monk, thinking it is not allowable, commands “Build a hut for me”. If they build a hut for him, the site not having been marked out, exceeding the measure, involving destruction, not with an open space round it, in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; if one lump is still to come there is a grave offence; when that lump has come there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.⁸ A monk thinking it is not allowable, makes someone who is not ordained teach Dhamma line by line, there is an offence of Expiation.⁹ If, not desiring to jeer at, not desiring to scoff at, not desiring to shame, (but having) a fondness for joking, he speaks of a low thing in low (words), there is an offence of wrong speech.¹ One falls into these six offences by means of the fifth origin of offences.

¹ Bu-Pj.1. ² Bu-Ss.6. ³ Bu-Pc.37. ⁴ Bu-Pd.1. ⁵ Vin.3.90 reads pāpabhikkhu; above we get Monks' pāpiccho icchāpakato. ⁶ Vin.3.90. ⁷ Bu-Pj.4. ⁸ Bu-Ss.6. ⁹ Bu-Ss.4.

Of the four fallings away ... by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away ... of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in six classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing; it may be in the class of offence of wrong speech. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by speech and by mind, not by body. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Prv.4.3.6

How many offences does one fall into by means of the sixth origin of offences? One falls into six offences ... A monk, having arranged together (with others), steals the goods,² there is an offence involving Defeat.³ A monk, thinking it is not allowable, having arranged, builds a hut, the site not having been marked out, exceeding the measure, involving destruction, not with an open space round it—in the action there is an offence of wrong-doing; if one lump is still to come there is a grave offence; when that lump has come there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order.⁴ A monk, thinking it is not allowable, having asked for sumptuous foods for himself, eats them, there is an offence of Expiation.⁵ A monk, thinking it is not allowable, without restraining nuns who are giving directions, eats, there is an offence to be Confessed.⁶ One falls into these six offences by means of the sixth origin of offences.

Vin.5.97

BD.6.141

Of the four fallings away how many ... by how many decidings are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away ... Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in six classes ... (see Prv.4.3.4) ... it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

¹ Vin.4.11, in Bu-Pc.2. ² For saṃvidhāvahāra see Vin.3.47. Vin.3.53, Vin.3.64 (in Bu-Pj.2); above reading Monks' saṃvidahitvā bhaṇḍaṃ avaharati. ³ Bu-Pj.2. ⁴ Bu-Ss.6. ⁵ Bu-Pc.39. ⁶ Bu-Pd.2.

Concluded is the Second Chapter: on How Many Offences for the six Originations of Offences

THIS IS ITS KEY

Prv.4.4.1 Bodily origins have been proclaimed for the world's welfare by Him who had vision of the infinite,¹ vision of aloofness;
By this means how many offences have originated?
I ask this—explain, (thou who art) skilled in the Analyses. /
Bodily origins have been explained for the world's welfare by Him who had vision of the infinite, vision of aloofness;
By this means five offences have originated:
I explain this to you, (thou who art) skilled in the Analyses. /
Verbal origins have been proclaimed for the world's welfare
... explain, (thou who art) skilled in the Analyses. /
Verbal origins have been explained for the world's welfare ...
four offences have originated:
I explain this to you, (thou who art) skilled in the Analyses. /
Bodily, verbal origins have been proclaimed ... /
BD.6.142 Bodily, verbal origins have been proclaimed ... five offences have originated ... /
Bodily, mental origins ... six ... /
Verbal, mental origins ... six ... /
Bodily, verbal, mental origins have been proclaimed for the world's welfare by Him who had vision of the infinite, vision of aloofness;
By this means how many offences have originated?
I ask this—explain, (thou who art) skilled in the Analyses. /
Vin.5.98 Bodily, verbal, mental origins have been proclaimed for the world's welfare
by Him who had vision of the infinite, vision of aloofness;
By this means six offences have originated:
I explain this to you, (thou who art) skilled in the Analyses. /

Concluded is the Third Talk: on the Origin of Offences

Prv.4.5.1 Because of falling away from moral habit how many offences does one fall into? Because of falling away from moral habit one falls into four offences: a nun who knowing of a matter involving Defeat conceals it, falls into an offence involving Defeat¹; if, being in doubt, she conceals it, she falls into a grave offence.² If a monk conceals an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order he falls into an offence of Expiation.³ If he conceals his own very bad offence he falls into an offence of wrong-doing.⁴ Because of falling away from moral habit one falls into these four offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be to falling away from moral habit; it may be to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in four classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

¹ anantadassin; Cf. SN.i.143.

BD.6.143

Prv.4.5.2

Because of falling away from good behaviour how many offences does one fall into? ... one falls into one offence⁵: if one conceals a falling away from good behaviour one falls into an offence of wrong-doing.⁶ Because of falling away from good behaviour one falls into this one offence. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away does this offence appertain to ... of the seven decidings by how many decidings is it stopped? Of the four fallings away this offence appertains to one falling away: to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence it is comprised in one class of offence: in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences it originates by means of one origin: it originates by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions, the legal question concerned with offences. Of the seven decidings it is stopped by three decidings ... and a covering over (as) with grass.

¹ Nuns' Bi-Pj.6; Vin.4.216. ² Not in Nuns' Bi-Pj.6. ³ This may refer to Bu-Pc.64 where there is an offence of Pācittiya for concealing a monk's very bad offence, duṭṭhullā āpatti. This is so defined at Vin.4.128 (also at Vin.4.31) as to include the 13 Formal Meeting offences. See too Vin-a.866. ⁴ Possibly referring to Vin.2.67f. (Kd.13.34) where if a monk has fallen into an offence entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order (see previous note) and thinks it is one and conceals it "he should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing", yo chādeti so dukkaṭaṃ desāpetabbo. ⁵ Vin.4.148. ⁶ At Vin.1.172 falling away from good behaviour is defined as a grave offence, one of Expiation, one to be confessed, one of wrong-doing, one of wrong speech. Therefore to conceal any of these entails wrong-doing.

Prv.4.5.3

Because of falling away from (right) view how many offences does one fall into? ... one falls into two offences: if one does not give up a depraved view though being admonished up to the third time, as a result of the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing; at the end of the resolutions there is an offence of Expiation.¹ Because of falling away from (right) view one falls into these two offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to one falling away: to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in two classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) grass.

Vin.5.99

BD.6.144

Prv.4.5.4

Because of falling away from a (right) mode of livelihood how many offences does one fall into? ... one falls into six offences: for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood one of evil wishes, overcome by desire, claims a non-existent state of further-men which is not fact²—there is an offence involving Defeat; for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood if one acts as a go-between there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order³; for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood if one speaks saying “Whatever monk lives in your vihāra is an arahant” there is a grave offence involving recognition⁴; for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood if a monk, having asked for sumptuous foods for himself, eats them, there is an offence of Expiation⁵; for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood if a nun, having asked for sumptuous foods for herself, partakes of them, there is an offence to be Confessed;⁶

¹ Vin.4.136, at the end of Bu-Pc.68. ² Vin.3.90 in Bu-Pj.4. ³ Bu-Ss.5. ⁴ Vin.3.102 in Bu-Pj.4, but where the word paṭivijānantassa, involving recognizing, is absent. It occurs, however, in the Commentary on this passage, Vin-a.502. ⁵ Bu-Pc.39. ⁶ Nuns’ Bi-Pd.1-8. The eight items of sumptuous food are defined at Vin.4.88. A Nuns’ Pāṭidesanīya concerns each one of them, but lacks the words attano atthāya, though the sentiment is there.

for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood if one who is not ill, having asked for curry or conjei for himself, eats it, there is an offence of wrong-doing.¹ Because of falling away from (right) mode of livelihood one falls into these six offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be to falling away from moral habit; it may be to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in six classes of offence ... (see Prv.4.3.4 above) ... offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of the six origins: it may be that they originate by body, not by speech, not by mind; it may be that they originate by speech, not by body, not by mind; it may be that they originate by body and by speech, not by mind; it may be that they originate by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that they originate by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.145

Concluded is the Fourth Chapter: on Because of Falling Away

Because of legal questions concerning disputes how many offences does one fall into? Because of legal questions concerning disputes one falls into two offences: if one insults one who is ordained there is an offence of Expiation²; if one insults one who is not ordained there is an offence of wrong-doing.³ Because of legal questions concerning disputes one falls into these two offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to one falling away: to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in two classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of three origins: it may be that they originate by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that they originate by speech and mind, not by body; it may be that they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Prv.4.6.1

Vin.5.100

Prv.4.6.2

¹ Bu-Sk.37. ² Bu-Pc.2. ³ Vin.4.10 in Bu-Pc.2.

Because of legal questions concerning censure how many offences does one fall into? ... one falls into three offences: if one defames a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat, there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order¹; if one defames with an unfounded charge of an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, there is an offence of Expiation²; if one defames with an unfounded charge of falling away from good behaviour there is an offence of wrong-doing.³ Because of legal questions concerning censure one falls into these three offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be to falling away from moral habit; it may be to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in three classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of three origins: it may be that they originate by body and by mind, not by speech; it may be that they originate by speech and by mind, not by body; it may be that they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.146

Prv.4.6.3

Because of legal questions concerning offences how many offences does one fall into? ... one falls into four offences: a nun who, knowing of a matter involving Defeat, conceals it, falls into an offence involving Defeat⁴; if, being in doubt, she conceals it, she falls into a grave offence⁵; if a monk conceals an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order he falls into an offence of Expiation⁶; if he conceals a falling away from good behaviour he falls into an offence of wrong-doing.⁷ Because of legal questions concerning offences one falls into these four offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... are they stopped? Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be to falling away from moral habit; it may be to falling away from good behaviour. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in four classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offence they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

¹ Bu-Ss.9. ² Bu-Pc.76. ³ Bu-Pc.76, Vin.4.148. ⁴ See above Prv.4.5.1. ⁵ See above Prv.4.5.1. ⁶ See above Prv.4.5.1. ⁷ See above Prv.4.5.2

BD.6.147

Prv.4.6.4

Because of legal questions concerning obligations how many offences does one fall into? ... one falls into five offences: if a nun, an imitator of one who has been suspended, though being admonished up to the third time does not give up (her course), as a result of the motion there is an offence of wrong-doing, as a result of two resolutions there are grave offences, at the end of the resolutions there is an offence involving Defeat¹; if monks who are imitators of a schismatic, though being admonished up to the third time, do not give up (their course), there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order²; if one, though being admonished up to the third time, does not give up depraved views there is an offence of Expiation.³ Because of legal questions concerning obligations one falls into these five offences. Of the four fallings away how many fallings away do these offences appertain to ... are they stopped? ... to two fallings away ... Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in five classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence that is a grave one; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by means of one origin: they originate by body and by speech and by mind. Of the four legal questions ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Vin.5.101

Prv.4.6.5

Leaving aside the seven offences, the seven classes of offence—of the four fallings away how many fallings away do the remaining offences appertain to? Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence are they comprised? Of the six origins of offences by how many origins do they originate? Of the four legal questions which legal question? Of the seven decidings by how many decidings are they stopped? Leaving aside the seven ¹ Vin.4.119 in Nuns' Bi-Pj.7. ² Bu-Ss.10; but it does not use the word bhedakānuvattaka, imitator or follower of a schismatic. ³ Bu-Pc.68.

BD.6.148 offences, the seven classes of offence—it is not:¹ of the four fallings away to which falling away do the remaining offences appertain, of the seven classes of offence in which class of offence are they comprised, of the six origins of offences by which origin do they originate, of the four legal questions which legal question, of the seven decidings by which deciding are they stopped? What is the reason for that? Leaving aside the seven offences and the seven classes of offence there are no other offences.

Concluded is the Fifth Chapter: on Because of Legal Questions

Concluded is Consecutive Repetitions

ITS SUMMARY

Questions on How many? origins, and likewise How many offences?
Origins, and fallings away,
and so too about legal questions.

¹ I.e. this is a question not properly formulated.

5. SYNOPSIS OF DECIDINGS

What is the forerunner of a legal question concerning disputes how many are the causal occasions, how many the matters, how many the grounds, how many the causes, how many the roots, by how many modes does one dispute, by how many decidings is a legal question concerning disputes stopped?

Prv.5.7.1
BD.6.149

What is the forerunner of a legal question concerning censure ... of a legal question concerning offences ... of a legal question concerning obligations?

Prv.5.7.2
Vin.5.102

“What is the forerunner of a legal question concerning disputes” Greed is a forerunner, hatred is a forerunner, confusion is a forerunner, lack of greed ... lack of hatred ... lack of confusion is a forerunner. “How many are the causal occasions?” There are eighteen causal occasions that are matters making for schism.¹ “How many matters?” There are eighteen matters that are matters making for schism.² “How many grounds?” There are eighteen grounds that are grounds making for schism. “How many causes?” Nine causes: three causes that are skilled, three causes that are unskilled, three causes that are indeterminate.³ “How many roots?” Twelve roots.⁴ “By how many modes does one dispute?” One disputes by two modes: either the view that it is Dhamma or the view that it is non-dhamma.⁵ “By how many decidings is a legal question concerning disputes stopped?” A

¹ See the set of eighteen at Kd.14.14.2, but they have no generic name there. ² Eighteen vattu given at Vin.1.354f., first, beginning with the negative aspect: adhamma avinaya, etc., to illustrate what would be the words of a monk regarded as an adhammavādin; and then, with the positive aspect stated first, to illustrate those of a monk regarded as a dhammavādin.

³ Cf. Kd.14.14.8. ⁴ mūla, root or source or ground. Two sets of six each are given at Kd.14.14.3, followed by three unskilled sources and then three skilled ones. ⁵ Given at Kd.14.14.2; also at Vin.1.354.

legal question concerning disputes is stopped by two decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by the decision of the majority.¹

Prv.5.7.3

BD.6.150

“What is the forerunner of a legal question concerning censure?” Greed ... non-confusion is a forerunner. “How many are the causal occasions?” The four fallings away are causal occasions. “How many matters?” The four fallings away are matters. “How many grounds?” The four fallings away are grounds.² “How many causes?” Nine causes: three causes that are skilled, three causes that are unskilled three causes that are indeterminate.³ “How many roots?” Fourteen roots. “By how many modes does one censure?” One censures by two modes: by the matter or by the offence. “By how many decidings is a legal question concerning censure stopped?” A legal question concerning censure is stopped by four decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by the decision for specific depravity.⁴

Prv.5.7.4

“What is the forerunner of a legal question concerning offences?” ... non-confusion is a forerunner. “How many are the causal occasions?” The seven classes of offence are causal occasions. “How many matters?” The seven classes of offence are matters. “How many grounds?” The seven classes of offence are grounds. “How many causes?” Nine causes ... three causes that are indeterminate. “How many roots?” The six origins of offences are roots. “By how many modes ... ?” By six modes one falls into an offence: through being shameless, through ignorance, through being scrupulous by nature, through thinking it is allowable when it is not allowable, through thinking it is not allowable when it is allowable, through confusion of mindfulness. “By how many decidings is a legal question concerning offences stopped?” ... it is stopped by three decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass.⁵

Prv.5.7.5

“What is the forerunner of a legal question concerning obligations?” ... non-confusion is a forerunner. “How many are the causal occasions?” Four (formal) acts are causal occasions.⁶ “How many matters?” Four (formal) acts are matters. “How many grounds?” Four (formal) acts are grounds. “How many causes?” Nine causes ... three that are indeterminate. “How many roots?" The Order is the one root. "By how many modes is an obligation produced?" An obligation is produced by two modes: by a motion or by asking for leave.¹ "By how many decidings is a legal question concerning obligations stopped?" A legal question concerning obligations is stopped by one decidings: by a verdict in the presence of.² How many are the decidings? Seven decidings: a verdict in the presence of, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, the decision of the majority, the decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass. These seven decidings.³ Might it be that these seven decidings become ten decidings, that ten decidings become seven decidings according to the presentation⁴ of the matter? It might be. How can it be? There are two decidings of a legal question concerning disputes four decidings of a legal question concerning censure, three decidings of a legal question concerning offences, one deciding of a legal question concerning obligations. Thus these seven decidings become ten decidings, the ten decidings become seven decidings according to the presentation of the matter.

BD.6.151

¹ Kd.14.14.16. ² Kd.14.14.2. ³ Kd.14.14.9. ⁴ Kd.14.14.27. ⁵ Kd.14.14.30. ⁶ Kd.14.14.11.

Prv.5.7.6
Vin.5.103

Concluded is the Sixth Chapter: that on Presentation

How many decidings of a legal question concerning disputes are in common,⁵ how many decidings of a legal question concerning disputes are not in common? How many decidings of a legal question concerning censure ... concerning offences ... concerning obligations are in common ... not in common?

Prv.5.8.1

Two decidings of a legal question concerning disputes are in common: a verdict in the presence of, the decision of the majority. Five decidings of a legal question concerning disputes are not in common: a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass.

Four decidings of a legal question concerning censure are in common: a verdict in the presence of, a verdict of innocence a verdict of past insanity, a decision for specific depravity. Three decidings of a legal question concerning censure are not in common: the decision of the majority, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.152

¹ Vin.2.89; see also Vin.4.152. ² Kd.14.14.34 ³ As at Vin.4.207; explained in detail at Vin.2.8off. ⁴ pariyāya, defined at MN-a.i.18., MN-a.i.89. ⁵ As seen in the next paragraph sādhāraṇa, in common, does not mean here shared by monks and nuns.

Three decidings of a legal question concerning offences are in common: a verdict in the presence of, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a covering over (as) with grass. Four decidings of a legal question concerning offences are not in common: the decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a decision for specific depravity.

One deciding is in common with a legal question concerning obligations: a verdict in the presence of. Six decidings are not in common with a legal question concerning obligations: the decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass.

Concluded is the Seventh Chapter: on In Common

Prv.5.9.1

How many decidings of a legal question concerning disputes belong to that? How many decidings of a legal question concerning disputes belong to others?¹ How many decidings of a legal question concerning censure ... of a legal question concerning offences ... of a legal question concerning obligations belong to others?

Vin.5.104

Two decidings of a legal question concerning disputes belong to that ... (as in Prv.5.8.1; instead of in common and not in common read belong to that and belong to others.)

Concluded is the Eighth Chapter: on Belongs to That

Prv.5.10.1

Are decidings of a deciding in common, are decidings of a deciding not in common? It may be that decidings of a deciding are in common, it may be that decidings of a deciding are not in common.

How may it be that decidings of a deciding are in common, how may it be that decidings of a deciding are not in common.

The decision of the majority is in common with a verdict in the presence of; it is not in common with a verdict of innocence, with a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.153

¹ I.e. to other legal questions.

A verdict of innocence is in common with a verdict in the presence of; it is not in common with a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass, a decision of the majority.

A verdict of past insanity is in common with a verdict in the presence of; it is not in common with a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass, a decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence.

A carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is in common with a verdict in the presence of; it is not in common with a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass, a decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity.

A decision for specific depravity is in common with a verdict in the presence of; it is not in common with a covering over (as) with grass, a decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement.

A covering over (as) with grass is in common with a verdict in the presence of; it is not in common with a decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity.

Thus it may be that decidings are in common with a deciding, thus it may be that decidings are not in common with a deciding.

Concluded is the Ninth Chapter: on Decidings in common with a Deciding

Do the decidings of a deciding belong to that? Do the decidings of a deciding belong to others? It may be ... (as in Prv.5.10.1; instead of in common and not in common read belong to that and belong to others.)

Prv.5.11.1

Concluded is the Tenth Chapter: on Do the Decidings of a Deciding belong to That

A deciding is a verdict in the presence of, a verdict in the presence of is a deciding. A deciding is a decision of the majority, a decision of the majority is a deciding. A deciding is a verdict of innocence ... a verdict of past insanity ... a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... a decision for specific depravity ... is a covering over (as) with grass, a covering over (as) with grass is a deciding.

Prv.5.12.1
BD.6.154

Vin.5.105

A decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass—these decidings are decidings, but not a verdict in the presence of. A verdict in the presence of is a deciding as well as being a verdict in the presence of.

A verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass, a verdict in the presence of—these decidings are decidings, but not the decision of the majority. A decision of the majority is a deciding as well as being a decision of the majority.

A verdict in the presence of, a decision of the majority, a verdict of innocence, a verdict of past insanity, a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement, a decision for specific depravity—these decidings are decidings, but not a covering over (as) with grass. A covering over (as) with grass is a deciding as well as being a covering over (as) with grass.

Concluded is the Eleventh Chapter: on A Verdict in the Presence of being a Deciding

Prv.5.13.1

A verdict is a verdict in the presence of, a verdict in the presence of is a verdict ... a verdict is a covering over (as) with grass, a covering over (as) with grass is a verdict.

A verdict may be a verdict in the presence of and it may not be a verdict in the presence of. A verdict in the presence of is a verdict as well as being a verdict in the presence of.

A verdict may be a decision of the majority ... a verdict of innocence ... a verdict of past insanity ... a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... a decision for specific depravity ... a covering over (as) with grass and it may not be a covering over (as) with grass. A covering over (as) with grass is a verdict as well as being a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.155

Concluded is the Twelfth Chapter: on Verdict

Is a verdict in the presence of skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? Is a decision of the majority skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? ... Is a covering over (as) with grass skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? Prv.5.14.1

A verdict in the presence of may be skilled, it may be indeterminate; there is no unskilled verdict in the presence of. The decision of the majority may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. A verdict of innocence ... a verdict of past insanity ... a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... a decision for specific depravity ... a covering over (as) with grass may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate.

Is a legal question concerning disputes skilled, unskilled, indeterminate¹? Is a legal question concerning censure ... a legal question concerning offences ... concerning obligations skilled, unskilled, indeterminate? Vin.5.106

A legal question concerning disputes may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate. A legal question concerning censure ... may be indeterminate. A legal question concerning offences may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate; there is no legal question concerning offences that is skilled. A legal question concerning obligations may be skilled, it may be unskilled, it may be indeterminate.

Concluded is the Thirteenth Chapter: on Skilled

Where a decision of the majority is possible there a verdict in the presence of is possible; where a verdict in the presence of is possible there a decision of the majority is possible.² Not possible there is a verdict of innocence ... a verdict of past insanity ... a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... a decision for specific depravity ... a covering over (as) with grass. Prv.5.15.1

Where a verdict of innocence is possible there a verdict in the presence of is possible; where a verdict in the presence of is possible there a verdict of innocence is possible. Not possible there is a verdict of past insanity ... (Cf. Prv.5.10.1). BD.6.156

Where a covering over (as) with grass is possible there a verdict in the presence of is possible; where a verdict in the presence of is possible there a covering over (as) with grass is possible. Not possible there is a decision of the majority not possible there is a verdict of innocence ... a verdict of past insanity ... a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... a decision for specific depravity.

¹ Vin.2.91, where explanations are given. ² Vin.2.97; also see Vin.2.84.

Prv.5.15.2

Where there is a decision of the majority there is a verdict in the presence of; where there is a verdict in the presence of there is a decision of the majority. Not there is there a verdict of innocence, not there ... (see Prv.5.15.1 Omit here the words is possible.)

Where there is a verdict of innocence there is there a verdict in the presence of; where there is a verdict in the presence of there is there a verdict of innocence. Not there is ...

To make the root a verdict in the presence of¹ ...

Where there is a covering over (as) with grass there is there a verdict in the presence of; where there is a verdict in the presence of there is there a covering over (as) with grass. Not there is there a decision of the majority ... not there is there a decision for specific depravity.

*Repetition of the Cycle.*² Concluded is the Fourteenth Chapter: on Where

Prv.5.16.1

On that occasion when a legal question is settled by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority, where a decision of the majority is possible there a verdict in the presence of is possible; where a verdict in the presence of is possible there a decision of the majority is possible. Not possible there is a verdict of innocence ... a covering over (as) with grass.

Vin.5.107

BD.6.157

On that occasion when a legal question is settled by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence, where ...

On that occasion when a legal question is settled by a verdict in the presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass, where a covering over (as) with grass is possible there a verdict in the presence of is possible; where a verdict in the presence of is possible there a covering over (as) with grass is possible. Not possible there is a decision of the majority, not possible there is a verdict of innocence ... not possible there is a decision for specific depravity.

¹ sammukhāvīṇayaṃ kātūna mūlaṃ. See BD Introduction, p.xvi. ² cakka, wheel, series, cycle; the arrangement. The word is use same sense as above at e.g. Vin.1.330ff.

Concluded is the Fifteenth Chapter: on Occasion

“Legal question” or “deciding”—are these things associated or dissociated, and is it possible, having analysed these things again and again, to point to a difference between them¹? “Legal question” or “deciding”—these things are dissociated, not associated, and it is possible to point to a difference between them—this should certainly not be said. “Legal question” or “deciding”—these things are associated, not dissociated, and it is not possible, having analysed these things again and again, to point to a difference between them. What is the reason for this? Was it not said by the Lord: “There are, monks, these four legal questions and seven decidings. Legal questions are settled by decidings; decidings are settled by legal questions. Thus these things are associated, not dissociated, and it is not possible ... to point to a difference between them.”²

Prv.5.17.1

Concluded is the Sixteenth Chapter: on Associated

By how many decidings is a legal question concerning disputes stopped? By how many decidings is a legal question concerning censure ... a legal question concerning offences ... a legal question concerning obligations stopped?

Prv.5.18.1

A legal question concerning disputes is stopped by two decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority.³ A legal question concerning censure is stopped by four decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity.⁴ A legal question concerning offences is stopped by three decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a carrying out on his acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass.⁵ A legal question concerning obligations is stopped by one decidings: by a verdict in the presence of.⁶

BD.6.158

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure stopped? A legal question concerning ¹ Cf. MN.i.293, Mi.63, Atthasālinī 311, Vism.438. ² Untraced in so many words, but the sentiment is precisely that of Kd.14.14, ... Cf. also Vin.5.93, MN.ii.247, and indeed the words “There are, these four legal questions” occur there. ³ Vin.2.93. ⁴ Vin.2.99. ⁵ Vin.2.102.

⁶ Vin.2.104.

disputes and a legal question concerning censure are stopped by five decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity.

Vin.5.108

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning offences stopped? ... by four deciding: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by two deciding: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences stopped? ... by six decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by four decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity.

BD.6.159

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning offences and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by three deciding: by a verdict in the presence of and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences stopped? ... by seven deciding: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by five deciding: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by six deciding: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by seven deciding: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Concluded is the Seventeenth Chapter: on Is Stopped

By how many decidings is a legal question concerning disputes ... a legal question concerning censure ... a legal concerning offences ... a legal question concerning obligations stopped, by how many decidings is it not stopped?

Prv.5.19.1

A legal question concerning disputes is stopped by two decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority; it is not stopped by five decidings: by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a decision for specific depravity nor by a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.160

A legal question concerning censure is stopped by four decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity; it is not stopped by three decidings: by a decision of the majority nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a covering over (as) with grass.

A legal question concerning offences is stopped by three decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass; it is not stopped by four decidings:

by a decision of the majority nor by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a decision for specific depravity.

Vin.5.109

A legal question concerning obligations is stopped by one deciding: by a verdict in the presence of; it is not stopped by six decidings: by a decision of the majority nor by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a decision for specific depravity nor by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure stopped, by how many decidings are they not stopped? A legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure are stopped by five decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity; they are not stopped by two decidings: by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning offences stopped ... by four decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass; they are not stopped by three decidings: by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a decision for specific depravity.

BD.6.161

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by two decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority; they are not stopped by five decidings: by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a decision for specific depravity nor by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences stopped? ... by six decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass; they are not stopped by one deciding: by a decision of the majority.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by four decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity; they are not stopped by three decidings: by a decision of the majority nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning offences and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by three decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass; they are not stopped by four decidings: by a decision of the majority nor by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a decision for specific depravity.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences stopped? ... by seven decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.162

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by five decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity; they are not stopped by two decidings: by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a covering over (as) with grass.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by six decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass; they are not stopped by one deciding: a decision of the majority.

By how many decidings are a legal question concerning disputes and a legal question concerning censure and a legal question concerning offences and a legal question concerning obligations stopped? ... by seven decidings:

by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict-of past insanity and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a decision for specific depravity and by a covering over (as) with grass.

Concluded is the Eighteenth Chapter: on Are Stopped and Are Not Stopped

Prv.5.20.1

Decidings are stopped by decidings, decidings are stopped by legal questions, legal questions are stopped by decidings, legal questions are stopped by legal questions.

Vin.5.110

It may be that decidings are stopped by decidings ... not stopped by decidings; it may be that decidings are stopped by legal questions ... not stopped by legal questions, it may be that legal questions are stopped by decidings ... not stopped by decidings; it may be that legal questions are stopped by legal questions ... are not stopped by legal questions.

BD.6.163

How may it be that decidings are stopped by decidings, how may it be that decidings are not stopped by decidings? A decision of the majority is stopped by a verdict in the presence of; it is not stopped by a verdict of innocence, it is not stopped by a verdict of past insanity ... by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... by a decision for specific depravity ... by a covering over (as) with grass. A verdict of innocence is stopped by a verdict in the presence of; it is not stopped by a verdict of past insanity ... (Cf. Prv.5.10.1) ... A covering over (as) with grass is stopped by a verdict in the presence of; it is not stopped by a decision of the majority, it is not stopped by a verdict of innocence ... by a verdict of past insanity ... by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement ... by a decision for specific depravity. Thus there may be decidings that are stopped by decidings, thus there may be decidings that are not stopped by decidings.

How may it be that decidings are stopped by legal questions, how may it be that decidings are not stopped by legal questions? A verdict in the presence of is stopped by a legal question concerning disputes it is not stopped by a legal question concerning censure ... offences, it is stopped by a legal question concerning obligations. A decision of the majority is stopped by a legal question concerning disputes it is not stopped by a legal question concerning censure ... offences ... obligations. A verdict of innocence is not stopped by a legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences ... obligations. A verdict of past insanity is not stopped by a legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences ... obligations. A carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is not stopped by a legal question concerning disputes ... censure, it is stopped by a legal question concerning offences, it is not stopped by a legal question concerning obligations. A decision for specific depravity ... a covering over (as) with grass is not stopped by a legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences ... obligations. Thus there may be decidings that are stopped by legal questions, thus there may be decidings that are not stopped by legal questions.

How may it be that legal questions are stopped by decidings, how may be that legal questions are not stopped by decidings? A legal question concerning disputes is stopped by a verdict in the presence of and by a decision of the majority; it is stopped by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict for past insanity nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a decision for specific depravity nor by a covering over (as) with grass. A legal question concerning censure is stopped by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity; it is not stopped by a decision of the majority nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a covering over (as) with grass. A legal question concerning offences is stopped by a verdict in the presence of and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass; it is not stopped by a decision of the majority nor by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a decision for specific depravity. A legal question concerning obligations is stopped by a verdict in the presence of; it is not stopped by a decision of the majority nor by a verdict of innocence nor by a verdict of past insanity nor by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement nor by a decision for specific depravity nor by a covering over (as) with grass. Thus there may be legal questions that are stopped by decidings, thus there may be legal questions that are not stopped by decidings.

How may it be that legal questions are stopped by legal questions, how may it be that legal questions are not stopped by legal questions? A legal question concerning disputes is not stopped by a legal question concerning censure, it is not stopped by a legal question concerning offences; it is stopped by a legal question concerning obligations. A legal question concerning censure ... a legal question concerning offences ... a legal question concerning obligations is not stopped by a legal question concerning disputes it is not stopped by a legal question concerning censure, it is not stopped by a legal question concerning offences; it is stopped by a legal question concerning obligations. Thus there may be legal questions that are stopped by legal questions, thus there may be legal questions that are not stopped by legal questions.

BD.6.164

Vin.5.111

BD.6.165

Six decidings as well as the four legal questions are stopped by a verdict in the presence of; a verdict in the presence of is stopped by some.

Concluded is the Nineteenth Chapter: on Decidings and Legal Questions

Prv.5.21.1

Of the four legal questions which legal question originates a legal question concerning disputes Of the four legal questions it is not which legal question originates a legal question concerning disputes yet because of a legal question concerning disputes the four legal questions arise. How is it like that? As to this monks are disputing, saying, "It is Dhamma" or "It is not Dhamma" or "It is Discipline" or "It is not Discipline" or ... (see Kd.14.14.2) ... this is called a legal question concerning disputes If the Order disputes about a legal question concerning disputes there is a legal question concerning disputes If one censures when he is disputing, there is a legal question concerning censure. If one falls into an offence when he is censuring, there is a legal question concerning offences. If the Order carries out a (formal) act for these offences, there is a legal question concerning obligations. Thus it is that because of a legal question concerning disputes the four legal questions arise.

Of the four legal questions ... (as before) ... legal question concerning censure? ... yet because of a legal question concerning censure the four legal questions arise. How is it like that? As to this monks are censuring a monk ... (see Kd.14.14.2) ... this is called a legal question concerning censure. If the Order disputes about a legal question concerning censure, there is a legal question concerning disputes If one censures as he is disputing ... (as before) ... Thus it is that because of a legal question concerning censure the four legal questions arise.

Of the four legal questions ... a legal question concerning offences? ... yet because of a legal question concerning offences the four legal questions arise. How is it like that? Both the five classes of offence ... (see Kd.14.14.2) ... this is called a legal question concerning offences. If the Order disputes about a legal question concerning offences, there is a legal question concerning disputes If one censures ... Thus it is that because of a legal question concerning offences the four legal questions arise.

Vin.5.112

BD.6.166

Of the four legal questions ... legal question concerning obligations? ... yet because of a legal question concerning obligations the four legal questions arise. How is it like that? Whatever is an Order's business ... (see Kd.14.14.2) ... This is called a legal question concerning obligations. If the Order disputes about a legal question concerning obligations there is a legal question concerning disputes If one censures as he is disputing ... Thus it is that because of a legal question concerning obligations the four legal questions arise.

Concluded is the Twentieth Chapter: on Originating

Of the four legal questions to which legal question does the legal question concerning disputes appertain, which legal question is it dependent on, which legal question is it included in, in which legal question is it comprised? Of the four legal questions to which legal question does the legal question concerning censure ... concerning offences ... concerning obligations appertain ... in which legal question is it comprised?

Prv.5.22.1

Of the four legal questions the legal question concerning disputes appertains to a legal question concerning disputes it is dependent on a legal question concerning disputes it is included in a legal question concerning disputes it is comprised in a legal question concerning disputes Of the four legal questions the legal question concerning censure appertains to a legal question concerning censure ... the legal question concerning offences ... the legal question concerning obligations ... is comprised in a legal question concerning obligations.

Of the seven decidings to how many decidings does a legal question concerning disputes appertain, how many decidings is it dependent on, how many decidings is it included in, in how many decidings is it comprised, by how many decidings is it stopped? Of the seven decidings to how many decidings does a legal question concerning censure ... concerning offences ... concerning obligations appertain ... by how many decidings is it stopped?

BD.6.167

Of the seven decidings a legal question concerning disputes appertains to two decidings, is dependent on two decidings, is included in two decidings, is comprised in two decidings, is stopped by two decidings: a verdict in the presence of and a decision of the majority. Of the seven decidings a legal question concerning censure appertains to four decidings ... is stopped by four decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence and by a verdict of past insanity and by a decision for specific depravity. Of the four decidings a legal question concerning offences appertains to three decidings ... is stopped by three decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by a carrying out on (his) acknowledgement and by a covering over (as) with grass. Of the seven decidings a legal question concerning obligations appertains to one deciding ... is stopped by one deciding: by a verdict in the presence of.

Vin.5.113

*Concluded is the Synopsis of Decidings.*¹

ITS SUMMARY

Legal question come to presentation,² and those that are in common, those that belong,

Decidings of a deciding in common, that belong to that, /

Also decidings in the presence of, about verdict, and about skilled,

Where, occasion, associated, they stop, and they do not stop.

Also decidings and legal-questions, originating, and they appertain. /

¹ Kd.14 to which this Section pertains, is called Samathakkhandhaka. ² pariyāpanna. This is not the same as pariyāpanna ("included") in Prv.5.22.1 just above. It must be taken as pariyā (+या, omitted metri causa) + āpanna since pariyāya-vāra is the name given to the first chapter in this Samathabheda Section, i.e. Prv.5.7.

6. QUESTIONS ON THE KHANDHAKAS

I asked¹ about ordination with its provenance, with its demonstration: how many are the offences according to the eminent sentences?² I was answered about ordination with its provenance, with its demonstration: according to the eminent sentences there are two offences.³

I asked about the Observance with its provenance ... three offences.⁴

I asked about the beginning of the rains ... one offence.⁵

Prv.6.1
Vin.5.114
BD.6.168

Prv.6.2

Prv.6.3

Prv.6.4

¹ pucchissarī, an unusual form of the aorist. ² samukkaṭṭhapada. At Vin-a.1318 it is said, “There these sentences (pada, words) are called eminent (samukkaṭṭha), highest (uttama). In brief (sankhepato), how many offences are there according to these eminent sentences, highest sentences?” This is interesting since ukkaṭṭha means both eminent and condensed. See too AN.iv.140 where samukkaṭṭha is explained by uttama. ³ The first 10 questions here refer to the 10 Khandhakas in the Mahāvagga, and the remaining 12 to the 12 Khandhakas in the Cullavagga. Ordination belongs to Mahāvagga 1. But as it is overshadowed there by the account of the Awakening and the subsequent events and as ordination there gives no occasions producing offences, these are perhaps reasons why Recourse is had to Bu-Pc.65: there is an offence of expiation for ordaining a man under twenty years of age; and, as Vin-a.1318 says, “according to all the remaining sentences there is an offence of wrong-doing”. For these sentences see Vin.4.130. This is the only time there is flight from the Khandhakas to the Suttavibhaṅga in this Section. ⁴ See Kd.2, the Uposathakkhandhaka. Vin-a.1318 says that if incoming monks, being doubtful, say to the resident monks, “You are perishing, you are being destroyed,” and carry out the Observance aiming at a schism, there is a grave offence—referring to Vin.1.133; if the Observance is carried out with one who is suspended there is an offence of Pācittiya (possibly referring to Kd.2.36.2 which in its turn possibly refers to Bu-Pc.69); for the rest there is an offence of wrong-doing. ⁵ Vin-a.1318 says “there is just the one offence, of wrong-doing, in the Vassūpanāyikakkhandhaka” (Kd.3). Here a certain amount of offences of wrong-doing are laid down but no other type of offence is mentioned.

Prv.6.5	I asked about the “Invitation” ... three offences. ¹
Prv.6.6	I asked about what is connected with hides ... three offences. ²
BD.6.169	I asked about medicines ... three offences. ³
Prv.6.7	I asked about kaṭhina ... no offences. ⁴
Prv.6.8	I asked about what is connected with robe-material ... three offences. ⁵
Prv.6.9	I asked about the monks at Campā ... one offence. ⁶
Prv.6.10	I asked about the monks of Kosambī ... one offence. ⁷
Prv.6.11	I asked about the Khandhaka for (formal) acts ... one offence. ⁸
Prv.6.12	I asked about probation ... one offence. ⁹
Prv.6.13	I asked about accumulation ... one offence. ¹⁰
Prv.6.14	I asked about decidings ... two offences. ¹¹
Prv.6.15

¹ Pavāraṇakkhandhaka, Kd.4. If monks “invite” aiming at a schism, there is a grave offence, Vin.1.167; there is an offence of Pācittiya for inviting with one who has been suspended (perhaps referring to Kd.4.14.2, Kd.4.143, at Vin.1.168); in the other sentences there is an offence of wrong-doing. ² Cammakkhanda, Kd.5. Vin.-a.1318, following Vin.1.191, says the offences are 1) of Pācittiya (Bu-Pc.61) for killing a calf; 2) a grave one for, with a lustful mind, touching a calf’s private parts; 3) for the rest, there is an of wrong-doing (probably for mounting on a calf, as also at Vin.1.191). ³ Bhesajjakkhandhaka, Kd.6. The offences are 1) a grave one for “a distance of two finger-breadths”, Vin.1.216; 2) one of Pācittiya for eating someone else’s eating-conjey, Vin.1.224 where yathādhammo refers to Bu-Pc.33; 3) for the rest there is an offence of wrong-doing. ⁴ Kaṭhinakkhandhaka, Kd.7. This is simply a laying down, paññatti, of regulations. See too Kaṭhinavagga, Vin.3.195-202, covering the first 10 Nissaggiya rules and giving the type of offence incurred for breaking them. ⁵ Cīvarakkhandhaka, Kd.8. There is 1) a grave offence for wearing a garment made of kusa-grass, bark and so on (Vin.1.306); 2) one should be dealt with according to the rule, yathādhammo (given at Vin.3.195 in Bu-NP.1) for wearing an extra robe (Vin.1.289); 3) the rest are offences of wrong-doing. ⁶ Campeyyakkhandhaka, Kd.9. The one offence is one of wrong-doing, Vin.1.315. ⁷ Kosambakkhandhaka, Kd.10. The offence is one of wrong-doing, Kd.10.5.10. ⁸ Kammakkhandhaka, Kd.11. Vin.-a.1318 says the one offence is one of wrong-doing. It appears to be referred to at Kd.11.20.1 under the term yathādhammo. ⁹ Pārivāsikkhandhaka, Kd.12. At Vin.2.31 there is an offence of wrong-doing. ¹⁰ Samuccayakkhandhaka, Kd.13. At Vin.2.67f. a monk should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing, so dukkatāṃ desāpetabbo, for concealing various kinds of offences there enumerated. ¹¹ Samathakkhandhaka, Kd.14. An offence of Pācittiya which is mentioned in this Khandhaka at Vin.2.94 is taken by Vin.-a.1318 to refer to Bu-Pc.79. Another offence of Pācittiya is mentioned at Vin.2.94 but is ignored at Vin.-a.1318. It is difficult to say why one should be chosen in preference to the other. This Khandhaka also gives two offences of wrong-doing at Vin.2.73, Vin.2.83.

I asked about minor matters ... three offences.¹

Prv.6.16

I asked about lodgings ... three offences.²

Prv.6.17

I asked about schism in an Order ... two offences.³

BD.6.170

I asked about conduct⁴ ... one offence.⁵

Prv.6.18

I asked about suspension (of the Pātimokkha) ... one offence.⁶

Prv.6.19

I asked about the Nuns' Khandhaka ... two offences.⁷

Prv.6.20

I asked about the Five Hundred ... no offence.⁸

Prv.6.21

I asked about the Seven Hundred ... no offence.⁹

Prv.6.22

Concluded is the First¹⁰ Chapter: on Questions on the Khandhakas

¹ Khuddakavattthukkhandhaka, Kd.15, Vin-a.1318 says that if one cuts off his own male organ there is a grave offence (Vin.2.110); in ruminating there an offence of Pācittiya. That is to say at Vin.2.132, “whoever should so eat would be dealt with according to the rule,” i.e. presumably according to Bu-Pc.37 or Bu-Pc.38. In the remaining (sentences) there is an offence of wrong-doing. ² Senāsanakkhandhaka, Kd.16. There is a grave offence for disposing of important belongings, Vin.2.170. (There is another grave offence in Kd.16, Vin.2.172: again, why does Commentary choose the one rather than the other?); 2) in throwing out from a vihāra belonging to an Order one should be dealt with according to the rule—this is at Vin.2.166, referring to Bu-Pc.17; 3) in the remaining sentences there is an offence of wrong-doing. ³ Samghabhedakkhandhaka, Kd.17. 1) monks who are partisans (or imitators) of schismatics are to be made to confess a grave offence (Vin.2.20); 2) in a group-meal there is an offence of Pācittiya (Bu-Pc.32). I can only think that this is included under schism by the Commentary because the narrative introducing the formulation of Bu-Pc.32 is concerned with Devadatta, the schismatic though schism is not mentioned there in so many words. ⁴ samācāra. Vin-a.1318 takes this name to refer to Vattakkhandhaka, Kd.18. ⁵ At Vin.2.220 there is an offence of wrong-doing that Vin-a.1318 distinguishes from another which is at Vin.2.221 by the use of the word anādariya which is in the narrative portion at Vin.2.220. ⁶ An offence of wrong-doing for the suspension, ṭhapana, of the Pātimokkha for monks who are without offences, Vin.2.241 in the Pātimokkhaṭṭhapanakkhandhaka, Kd.10. ⁷ Bhikkhunikkhandhaka, Kd.20. Following Vin-a.1319 the offences may be identified with, first, Vin.2.275 where, if nuns do not “invite”, they should be dealt with according to the rule, i.e. Nuns' Bi-Pc.57; and, secondly, the rest are offences of wrong-doing. Another offence of Pācittiya (Nuns' Bi-Pc.85) is referred to in this Khandhaka, Vin.2.276, by the term yathāhammo. Again, therefore, there is the puzzle of why the Commentary chooses one offence rather than the other. ⁸ Pañcasatikakkhandhaka, Kd.21. This and Kd.22 are merely compendiums of Dhamma, i.e. accounts of the First and Second Councils, contain no offences. ⁹ Sattasatikakkhandhaka, Kd.22. ¹⁰ There seems no reason to call this Chapter “the First”. The Commentary ends here, so it is futile to think that some material is now lost.

ITS SUMMARY

Ordination, Observance, the beginning of the rains, Invitation, Hides, medicines, kaṭhina, robe-material, and about (the monks) of Campā, /
 The Kosambī-kkhandhaka, a (formal) act, probation, accumulation,
 Decidings, minor matters, lodgings,¹ schism in the Order, conduct, Suspension, and of the nuns, and about the Five-, the Seven-Hundred. /

¹ senā, abbreviated from senāsana.

7. AS TO GRADUATION

1. UNITS

1. ¹ Things making for offences should be known.²
2. Things not making for offences should be known.³
3. An offence should be known.⁴
4. What is not an offence should be known.⁵
5. A slight offence should be known.⁶

Prv.7.1
BD.6.171
Vin.5.115

¹ ekuttaraka, gradation, succession, progression of topics arranged in categories of things that are one to things that partake of eleven. Called at Uttaravinicchaya p.266, Ekuttaranaya, and arranged on the same plan, but in less detail than in Parivāra, and sometimes differing. The whole of the Aṅguttara-nikāya, sometimes called the Ekuttarika-nikāya, is arranged on this same plan also. Though the items in this First Chapter can each be regarded as “one”, several are in fact arranged by dyads. ² The six originations of offences, by means of which an individual falls into an offence, Vin-a.1319. ³ The seven decidings, Vin-a.1319. ⁴ The sikkhāpada and the Analysis (Monks’ or Nuns’) where an offence is to be found should be known. ⁵ Vin-a.1319 is apparently referring to Vin.3.33, Vin.3.35 when it cites “There is no offence, monks, for one who is not willing” (or, “does not agree”) as the way to begin the method of dealing with this clause; Cf. Vin.3.29f. ⁶ The fivefold offence from which one is purified by a light or slight, lahuka, formal act (or, disciplinary action). See Vin.1.49 where the “light (formal) act” is “light” compared with the five formal acts of censure, guidance, banishment, reconciliation and suspension. Its nature is not specified, but see Vin-a.1195. In general, it would seem that, taking the seven classes of offence (see Vin.5.91) into account, the first, the Pārājika group, may be ignored because no disciplinary proceedings exist for a monk or nun once there has been for him or her expulsion from the Order for good; the second type of offence, Saṃghādisesa, is a serious one, garukāpatti; the five remaining types (thullaccaya, Pācittiya, Pāṭidesaniya, dukkata and dubbhāsita) are therefore slight offences, lahukā āpattiyo.

6. A serious offence should be known.¹
7. An offence that can be done away with should be known.²
8. An offence that cannot be done away with should be known.³
9. A very bad offence should be known.⁴
10. An offence that is not very bad should be known.⁵
11. An offence for which amends are made should be known.⁶
12. An offence for which amends are not made should be known.⁷
13. An offence leading on to confession should be known.⁸
14. An offence not leading on to confession should be known.⁹
15. An offence that is a stumbling-block should be known.¹⁰
16. An offence the description (of which) is “blamable” should be known.¹¹

¹ An offence entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order from which one is purified by a serious or weighty, garuka, disciplinary action. But at Vin.2.101 a garukā āpatti is taken as a Pārājika offence or one bordering on it. Vin-a.1195 names six serious formal acts: cha kammāni garukāni: agreement on a boundary, abolition of a boundary, giving of kaṭhina (privileges), suspension of kaṭhina (privileges), marking out the site for a hut, marking out the site for a vihāra. This and the next three items are found at Vin.1.65; ignorance of them four of the reasons why a monk may not ordain and so on; and with the next seven items they occur at Vin.1.354, Vin.2.88, Vin.2.204. ² sāvasesā, what has a remainder. This means all offences except Pārājikas have no “remainder” for there is nothing to be done by the Order for an expelled monk or nun. ³ This is a Pārājika offence. ⁴ According to Vin.4.31 this belongs to two offence-categories: Defeat and Formal Meeting. ⁵ All the remaining kinds of offences, having excluded the two mentioned in the last note. ⁶ Cf. Vin.1.97, Vin.2.25. ⁷ Vin-a.1319 says this dyad is like the sāvasesā dyad. ⁸ See Vin.2.3. ⁹ Vin-a.1319 says this dyad is comprised in the “slight” dyad (i.e. the third in this Chapter). The penalties of the second part of the dyad do not include censure or confession, and so refer to a Defeat or a Formal Meeting offence, see Vin-a.1155 on Kd.11. ¹⁰ antarāyikā and anantarāyikā āpatti. Vin-a.1319 says stumbling-blocks mean that if the seven classes of offence are transgressed intentionally they make a stumbling-block to heaven and a stumbling-block to deliverance. But for one transgressing them unknowingly, though it is a blamable offence for him, it is a stumbling-block neither to heaven nor to deliverance. For further references see BD.3.21, n.5. ¹¹ sāvajjapaññatti āpatti, blamable in or by the world, lokavajjā; anavajjapaññatti āpatti, not blamable in or by the (Vinaya) laying-down, paññattivajjā, Vin-a.1319. These words appear to have been taken up at Mi.266 where several examples of behaviour not blamable in the world, but blamable in the Teaching are given.

17. An offence the description (of which) is “non-blamable”¹ should be known.
18. An offence originated by action should be known.²
19. An offence originated by non-action should be known.³
20. An offence originated by action-and-non-action should be known.⁴
21. The original offence should be known.⁵
22. The subsequent offence should be known.⁶
23. The secondary offences⁷ of original offences should be known.
24. The secondary offences of subsequent offences should be known.⁸
25. An offence confessed that comes to a reckoning should be known.⁹

BD.6.173

¹ sāvajjapaññatti āpatti, blamable in or by the world, lokavajjā; anavajjapaññatti āpatti, not blamable in or by the (Vinaya) laying-down, paññattivajjā, Vin-a.1319. These words appear to have been taken up at Mi.266 where several examples of behaviour not blamable in the world, but blamable in the Teaching are given. ² kiriya—by action; for example, doing something, one falls into an offence involving Defeat, Vin-a.1319. ³ akiriya—for example, not doing something, one falls into an offence for not determining the robe-material. ⁴ For example, doing and not doing something, one falls into an offence such as building a hut. ⁵ pubbāpatti, the offence first fallen into, Vin-a.1319. ⁶ The offence fallen into subsequently by those under probation (i.e. in offences entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order). ⁷ antarāpatti. I follow Inception of Discipline § 32 and its notes, q.v., for this translation in preference to that given in Critical Pali Dictionary which says antarāpatti “probably = antarāyikā āpatti”. But Pali seldom uses two technical terms to describe the same thing. Critical Pali Dictionary may have been misled by the two occurrences of antarā in the uddāna or tabulation at the end of this Chapter. The first is, however, an abbreviation of antarāyikā, as at Vin.5.114 senā is an abbreviation of senāsana. At Vin.2.43, to which Critical Pali Dictionary refers, antarā is conceptually unconnected with āpatti (antarā ekaṃ āpattiṃ āpajji) and simply means “meanwhile, during that time”. Vin-a.1319f. says this secondary offence is when one is purifying oneself from the root one. The second clause seems to refer to Kd.13.20.1 where the duration of concurrent probation for a number of offences is said to be agghena, depending on. Vin-a.1320 says, “But the Kurundiya says the original offence is the one first fallen into; the subsequent offence is one fallen into at the time of deserving mānatta; an offence secondary to the original one is one fallen into during probation; an offence secondary to subsequent offences means those fallen into while the monk was carrying out mānatta. This is construable by the one method.” See Kd.13. ⁸ See BD.6.172, n.15. ⁹ desitā gaṇanūpagā āpatti. Vin-a.1320 explains that what is confessed is that, having thrown off the responsibility (for his offence) he says, I will not fall again.

26. An offence confessed that does not come to a reckoning should be known.¹
27. A laying down should be known.²
28. A supplementary laying (down should be known.³
29. A laying down that has not yet occurred should be known.⁴
30. A laying down (that holds good) everywhere should be known.⁵
31. A laying down (that holds good only) for certain districts should be known.⁶
32. A laying down that is shared should be known.⁷
33. A laying down that is not shared should be known.⁸
34. A laying down for one (Order only) should be known.⁹
35. A laying down for both (Orders) should be known.¹⁰
36. An offence that is a grave fault should be known.¹¹
37. An offence that is not a grave fault should be known.¹²
38. An offence connected with the laity should be known.¹³
39. An offence not connected with the laity should be known.
40. An offence that is fixed (as to results) should be known.¹⁴
41. An offence that is not (so) fixed should be known.¹⁵
42. The individual who was the first-doer (of an offence) should be known.¹⁶
43. The individual who was not the first-doer should be known.¹⁷
44. The individual who is an occasional offender should be known.¹⁸

BD.6.174

¹ Here, the offence confessed is, not having thrown off responsibility, with an impure activity of mind. For nuns it is a Defeat in the eight things—Nuns' Bi-Pj.8. ² As at Vin.5.1.

³ As at Vin.5.1. ⁴ As at Vin.5.1. ⁵ As at Vin.5.1. ⁶ As at Vin.5.1. ⁷ As at Vin.5.1. ⁸ As at Vin.5.1. ⁹ As at Vin.5.1. ¹⁰ As at Vin.5.1. ¹¹ thullavajjā āpatti, heavily blamable offence.

Cf. Vin.2.87; explained at Vin-a.1194 as offences of Defeat and Formal Meeting of the Order, and by Vin-a.1320 as garukāpatti, for which see above, BD.6.171, n.6, n.7. ¹² Vin-a.1320 lahukāpatti, also see above.

¹³ See BD.5.115 and n.3 there. Vin-a.1320 says this is the Elder Sudhamma's offence (for insulting speech, for which see Vin.2.15ff.), and it adds that the remaining offences are not connected with the laity. ¹⁴ niyata, explained at Vin-a.1320 as pañcānantariyakammāpatti, the five kinds of offences that are actions the fruition of which comes with no delay. See e.g. Mi.25, Vb.378, Vism.177, MN.Q.i.35, n.2. A first deed of this type was done by Devadatta, Kd.173.9. See too Uttaravinicchaya 432, Buddhist Psychological Ethics, p.267, Atthasālinī 358, Vb-a.426f.

¹⁵ This means all the remaining offences; they are not niyata. But see Uttaravinicchaya 740ff. ¹⁶ Sudinna, the originator of the First Defeat.

¹⁷ The maker of the supplementary laying-down: the first recluse and the female monkey, Vin.3.23. ¹⁸ adhiccāpattika, as at MN.i.443f.

45. The individual who is a constant offender should be known.¹
46. The individual (at all these places) who reproves (for an offence) should be known.²
47. The individual who is reprovved should be known.³
48. The individual who reproves according to what is not the rule should be known.⁴
49. The individual who is reprovved according to what is not the rule should be known.⁵
50. The individual who reproves according to the rule should be known.⁶
51. The individual who is reprovved according to the rule should be known.⁷
52. The individual who is certain should be known.⁸
53. The individual who is not certain should be known.
54. The individual incapable of offending should be known.⁹
55. The individual capable of offending should be known.¹⁰
56. The individual who has been suspended¹¹ should be known.
57. The individual who has not been suspended should be known.¹²
58. The individual who has been expelled should be known.¹³
59. The individual who has not been expelled should be known.
60. An individual belonging to the same communion should be known.¹⁴
61. An individual not belonging to the same communion should be known.

BD.6.175

¹ abhiñhāpattika, as at MN.i.442f. ² codaka; see Vin.1.113, Vin.1.323, Vin.2.248f. ³ cudita.
⁴ See Vin.2.250. ⁵ See Vin.2.250. ⁶ See Vin.2.250. ⁷ See Vin.2.250. ⁸ niyata, certain or fixed. See above, n.1—used in relation to offences. Vin-a.1334 names these five offences, in explaining pañca puggalā niyatā, as those of cutting down if the proper measure has been exceeded: Bu-Pc.87, Bu-Pc.89, Bu-Pc.90, Bu-Pc.91, Bu-Pc.92. Vin-a.1320 says “possessed of mental states (dhammā) that are fixed by wrongnesses or fixed by rightnesses”, for which, with aniyata, Cf. Tikap.335. See also Ds.1028, Ds.1029, and Buddhist Psychological Ethics, p.267; also Pp.13: katamo ca puggalo niyato? Apart from the 13 types of men the rest are said to be aniyata. ⁹ abhabbāpattika: Buddhas and Hermit Buddhas according to Vin-a.1320; also Uttaravinicchaya 434. ¹⁰ Disciples, i.e. monks and nuns, Uttaravinicchaya 434. I know of no canonical reference to this or the preceding clause. ¹¹ ukkhitta, by a (formal) act of suspension, see e.g. Vin.1.49, Vin.2.21. ¹² Vin-a.1320: “He is not suspended by any of the four remaining (formal) acts, beginning with that of censure”—see Vin.1.49 for these. ¹³ Thus: “Expel the nun Mettiyā” (Vin.3.162); “a seducer (of nuns) is to be expelled” (Vin.1.85); “the novice Kaṇḍaka is to be expelled” (Vin.1.85; called Kaṇḍaka at Vin-a.1320). Cf. below BD.6.330. ¹⁴ samānasaṁvāsaka; as at Vin.4.154; Cf. Vin.3.28, Vin.3.47, etc.

62. Suspension (of the Pātimokkha) should be known.¹

Concluded are the Units

ITS SUMMARY

Things making for, offence, slight, that can be done away with, very bad,
For which amends are made, and confession, stumbling-block,² blamable, originating by action, /

By action-and-non-action, original, secondary,³ coming to a reckoning, Laying down, not yet occurred, everywhere, and shared, for one, /

Vin.5.116

Grave fault, laity, and fixed, first, occasional, reprover,

Not the rule, the rule, fixed, incapable, suspended, expelled,

The same, and suspension too: this is the summary⁴ for the Units. /

2. DYADS

Prv.7.2.1

1. ⁵There is the offence in which (contemporary) awareness counts (as a factor) for acquittal; there is the offence in which (contemporary) awareness does not count (as a factor) for acquittal.⁶

2. There is an offence for the attainer of the acquired; there is the offence for the attainer of what is not acquired.⁷

BD.6.176

3. There is the offence that is connected with true *Dhamma*⁸; there is the offence that is not connected with true Dhamma.⁹

¹ Vin-a.1321 says “Beginning with the phrase ‘Monks, one suspension of the Pātimokkha is not legally valid’ (Vin.2.241), the suspension of the Pātimokkha (Pātimokkhaṭṭhapana) should be known.” ² Abbreviated here from antarāyikā to antarā; see above, BD.6.172, n.8.

³ Again antarā, but here it is not an abbreviation. ⁴ udāna should read uddāna; Cf. the end of the Triads at Vin.5.124. ⁵ Again, Cf. Uttaravinicchaya, p.267ff. ⁶ See remarks on āpatti (no) saññāvimokkhā at Milinda’s Questions i, Introduction, p.xlviii. ⁷ This seems to be an offence of speaking about what is and about what is a fact, laddhasamāpattikassa āpatti. On samāpatti see BD.2.177, n.5, and Buddhist Psychological Ethics, p.321. See too Vin.4.25, where there is an offence of Pācittiya for speaking of a condition of further men—if it is a fact—to one who is not ordained; but if he speaks about what is not a fact, abhūtārocana, there is Defeat (Bu-Pj.4). See too Vin.4.7. ⁸ Vin-a.1321: beginning with Dhamma line by line (Vin.4.14, Bu-Pc.4). ⁹ Vin-a.1321: an offence of speech that is very bad.

4. There is an offence connected with one's own requisites¹; ... with another's requisites.²
5. There is an offence connected with one's own individual³; ... with another's individual.⁴
6. There is (the occasion when one) falls into a serious offence when speaking the truth,⁵ a slight one when speaking a lie⁶.
7. There is (the occasion when one) falls into a serious offence when speaking a lie,⁷ a slight one when speaking the truth.⁸
8. There is the offence one who is on the ground falls into,⁹ not one who is in the air¹⁰; there is the offence one who is in the air falls into,¹¹ not one who is on the ground.¹²
9. One falls into an offence while one is setting out not while entering¹³; one falls into an offence while one is entering, not while setting out.¹⁴
10. There is the offence one falls into while taking¹⁵; ... while not taking.¹⁶
11. There is the offence one falls into while undertaking¹⁷; ... while not

BD.6.177

¹ Commentary instances three such offences, all of Forfeiture: in enjoying, not having given up (Bu-NP.5); in hoarding bowls and robes (Bu-NP.1.21, Nuns' Bi-NP.1); in not washing soiled robes (Bu-NP.4). ² Vin-a.1321 refers this to a clause found in the sikkhāpada of Bu-NP.14. ³ Commentary describes this offence in accordance with an offence involving Defeat (Bu-Pj.1) laid down at Vin.3.35. ⁴ Going by Commentary this refers to Bu-Ss.2. ⁵ In Bu-Ss.3 at Vin.3.129 for saying to a woman sikharāṇī'si. See Uttaravinicchaya 443. ⁶ Bu-Pc.1, for telling a conscious lie. See too Vin.3.59, Vin.3.66 in Bu-Pj.2. ⁷ Proclaiming what is not a fact, e.g. at Vin.3.93ff. (in Bu-Pj.4). ⁸ Proclaiming what is a fact. ⁹ Vin-a.1321 says, "if he is sitting down to one side within a boundary and says, 'I will carry out a (formal) act of the Order with an incomplete (Order),' he falls, being one who is on the ground. Therefore he is called one who is not in the air" (vehāsagata). Does this refer to Vin.2.128ff.? If so it is an offence of wrong-doing. ¹⁰ Apparently referring to Bu-Pc.18, for Vin-a.1321 takes the words of the Old Commentary, on its sikkhāpada: (a monk), sitting down in a lofty cell (vehāsakuṭi) on a couch or chair with removable feet, falls, being one who is in the air. But if he, having put them out on the ground, should not he down, he worn not fall (into an offence). Because of this he is called one who is not on ground. See too Uttaravinicchaya 448. ¹¹ See previous note. ¹² See previous note. ¹³ Probably referring to Vin.2.211 (Kd.18.3) which gives the gamikānaṃ bhikkhūnaṃ vattaṃ described by Vin-a.1321 as gamiyo gamiyavattaṃ apūretvā; and at Uttaravinicchaya 451 as gamiko gamikavattāni apūretvāna. ¹⁴ This seems to refer to Vin.2.207 (Kd.18.1): entering a monastery with one's sandals on and one's sunshade up. See too Uttaravinicchaya 450. Cf. also Vin.1.194 (Kd.5.12); and Vin.2.130f. (Kd.15.23.2, Kd.15.23.3) where there is an offence of wrong-doing. ¹⁵ I.e. an oblation with water, Nuns' Bi-Pc.5. ¹⁶ I.e. not taking one of the three ways for disfiguring a new robe, Bu-Pc.58.

- undertaking.¹
12. There is the offence one falls into when one is doing²; ... is not doing.³
13. There is the offence one falls into while giving⁴; ... while not giving.⁵
14. There is the offence one falls into while accepting⁶; ... while not accepting.⁷
15. There is the offence one falls into through using⁸; ... through not using.⁹
16. There is the offence one falls into during the night, not by day¹⁰; ... by day, not during the night.¹¹
17. There is the offence one falls into at sunrise;¹² ... not at sunrise.¹³
18. There is the offence one falls into while cutting off;¹⁴ ... while not cutting off.¹⁵
19. There is the offence one falls into by concealing¹⁶; while not concealing.¹⁷

¹⁷ Vin-a.1322 by using the words mugabbata and titthiyavata appears to be referring to Vin.1.90f. (Kd.1.70, Kd.1.71)—the offence incurred being one of wrong-doing. ¹ The 94 vatta, customs, duties, for a monk under probation to whom Vin-a.1322 refers are given at Vin.2.31f. But the Commentary also refers to a monk against whom a disciplinary act of censure has been carried out. ² Sewing a robe, Bu-Pc.26. Uttaravinicchaya 459 more full. ³ Not doing the duties of a preceptor. These are stated at e.g. Vin.1.50ff. ⁴ Giving a robe to a nun who is not a relation, Bu-Pc.25. ⁵ Not giving robe-material and so on to those who share one's cell and to pupils. See Bu-Pc.59. ⁶ Accepting robe-material from a nun who is not a relation, Bu-NP.5 (Vin.3.209). ⁷ This seems to refer to Kd.20.9.5 (Vin.2.264) since Vin-a.1322 uses a phrase found there: na bhikkhave ovādo na gahetabbo. Cullavagga uses forms of the verb gaṇhāti; above passage has paṭigaṇhanto. The offence is one of wrong-doing. ⁸ paribhoga. This offence consists in using and not giving up something that should be given up, as at e.g. Vin.3.202 (in Bu-NP.2) where, because of not forfeiting a robe to be forfeited, but using it, there is an offence of wrong-doing. ⁹ Nuns' Bi-Pc.24. ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.5. ¹¹ This is an offence for not shutting the door while one is meditating in solitude; Cf. Atthasālini 95. ¹² A number of offences: after one night, Bu-NP.2; after six nights Kd.18 (?); after 7 days, Bu-NP.23; after ten days, Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.21; after a month. Bu-NP.3. ¹³ Eating after one has been invited. ¹⁴ Cutting down vegetable growth, bhūtagāma, is Bu-Pc.11; and cutting off aṅgajāta is in Bu-Pj.1. ¹⁵ Not cutting one's hair or nails: for the former there is an "allowance" for the latter an offence of wrong-doing at Kd.15.27.1ff. (Vin.2.133). ¹⁶ chādeti; presumably as e.g. in Bu-Pc.1 and Nuns' Bi-Ss.12 in both of which the word is paṭicchādeti. ¹⁷ A monk coming naked to a monastery falls into an offence of wrong-doing, Vin.3.212 (in Bu-NP.6).

20. There is the offence one falls into by wearing (using)¹; ... not using (wearing).²
21. There are two Observances: that on the fourteenth day and that on the fifteenth.³
22. Two Invitations: that on the fourteenth day and that on the fifteenth.⁴
23. Two (formal) acts: the (formal) act for which leave should be asked, and the (formal) act at which a motion is put.
24. And there are two further (formal) acts: the (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution, and the (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times.⁵
25. Two matters for a (formal) act⁶: the matter of a (formal) act for which leave should be asked, and the matter of a (formal) act at which a motion is put.
26. And two further matters for a (formal) act: the matter for a (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution, and the matter for a (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times.
27. Two defects⁷ in a (formal) act: the defect in a (formal) act for which leave should be asked, the defect in the motion for a (formal) act.
28. And two further defects in a (formal) act: the defect in a (formal) act where a motion is put and is followed by one resolution, and the defect in a (formal) act where a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times.
29. Two excellences⁸ in a (formal) act: the excellence of a (formal) act for which leave should be asked, and the excellence of a (formal) act where there is a motion.

BD.6.178

¹ I.e. garments made of bark, grass—a grave offence, Vin.1.305f. ² I.e. not using “this bowl till it breaks”—Bu-NP.22. ³ Vin.1.104 and cf. the triad at Vin.5.123. ⁴ Vin.1.160, and again see Vin.5.123. ⁵ See e.g. Vin.2.89, Vin.4.152; and another class of six formal acts at Vin.1.317. These two dyads from a tetrad at Vin.5.126. ⁶ kammavattu not given elsewhere in Vinaya. See preceding note. ⁷ See Vin.5.213. The three defects referring to four (formal) acts are given at Kd.9.2.4. See also Kd.9.2.1. ⁸ See below, Vin.5.213–Vin.5.214. If the four formal acts were carried out by rule in a complete assembly, there were “four excellences”.

30. And two further excellences in a (formal) act: the excellence of a (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution, and the excellence of a (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times.
31. Two grounds for belonging to a different communion: either of oneself one makes oneself belong to a different communion,¹ or a complete Order suspends one for not seeing or not making amends for (an offence) or for not giving up (a wrong view).²
32. Two grounds for belonging to the same communion: either of oneself one makes oneself belong to the same communion,³ or the Order restores one who was suspended for not seeing or not making amends for (an offence) or for not giving up (a wrong view).⁴
33. Two (groups of) offences involving Defeat: for monks and for nuns.
34. Two (groups of) offences entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order.
35. Two (groups of) grave offences.
36. Two of offences of Expiation.
37. Two of offences to be confessed.
38. Two of wrong-doing.
39. Two of wrong speech: for monks and for nuns.
40. Seven offences, seven classes of offence.⁵
41. An Order is split by two methods: by a (formal) act⁶ or by a voting-ticket.⁷
42. Two individuals should not be ordained: one lacking the full age,⁸ one lacking a limb.⁹

BD.6.179
Vin.5.117

¹ See Vin.1.135. ² As at Vin.1.340; see also Vin.1.340. ³ See Vin.1.106, Vin.1.109. ⁴ As at Vin.1.340. ⁵ Because the two have the same name they are shown in the dyads, Vin.a.1323. Given also in the Septets, Vin.5.134. ⁶ Probably referring to Devadatta at Vin.2.198. ⁷ Probably again referring to Devadatta at Vin.2.199. ⁸ addhānahīno; interpreted by Vin.a.1323 as ūnavīsativasso, and thus referring to Bu-Pc.65. See Vin.5.129 for this and next four items. ⁹ aṅgahīno. At Vin.1.91 one whose hands, etc., have been cut off is not allowed to go forth.

43. And two further individuals should not be ordained: one who has fallen away from the matter,¹ and the karaṇadukkaṭaka.²
44. And two further individuals should not be ordained: he who is not complete,³ and he who is complete but has not asked.⁴
45. One should not live in dependence on two individuals: on an unconscientious one⁵ nor on an ignorant one.⁶
46. Guidance should not be given by two individuals: by an unconscientious one⁷ and by a conscientious one if one has not requested him.⁸
47. Guidance should be given to two individuals: the ignorant one and the conscientious one if he requests.⁹
48. Two individuals are incapable of falling into an offence: Buddhas and Hermit Buddhas.
49. Two individuals are capable of falling into an offence: monks and nuns.
50. Two individuals are incapable of consciously falling into an offence: the ariyan individuals who are monks and nuns.
51. Two individuals are capable of consciously falling into an offence: ordinary individuals who are monks and nuns.
52. Two individuals are incapable of consciously transgressing a matter that goes too far¹⁰: ariyan individuals who are monks and nuns.
53. Two individuals are capable of consciously transgressing a matter that goes too far: ordinary individuals who are monks and nuns.
54. Two kinds of protest: one protests by means of the body, one protests by means of speech.¹

BD.6.180

¹ He seems to be one who has fallen from (the root of) the matter: eunuchs (Vin.1.85), animals (Vin.1.88), hermaphrodites (Vin.1.89). ² This comprises the remaining eight “incapable individuals”, abhabbapuggalā (i.e. not qualified for ordination because of something bad they have in this existence), beginning with him who is in communion by theft (Vin.1.86). See Vin-a.515. Also the five who are not to be ordained, Vin.5.129. ³ I.e. as to bowl and robe, see Vin.1.90, Vin.1.95. ⁴ Ordination must be asked for by the candidate, Vin.1.56f. ⁵ Vin.1.91. ⁶ Vin-a.1323 says even if he is of sixty years’ standing. ⁷ See Vin.1.91. Some rules for guidance and being in dependence are given at Vin.1.80f. ⁸ This may refer to Kd.1.73.1, Kd.1.73.2. ⁹ See Vin.1.62ff., Vin.1.80f. for the second case. ¹⁰ See Vin.1.55. ¹ Allowances for “protesting” against formal acts given at Vin.1.115. Silently protesting by signalling with the hand (hatthivikāra as at Vin-a.1323) occurs at e.g. Vin.1.158, Vin.1.352.

55. There are two (kinds of) being sent away²: there is the individual who has not arrived at the point of being sent away but who, if the Order sends him away, is sometimes rightly sent away, sometimes wrongly sent away.³
56. Two kinds of restoration⁴: there is the individual who has not arrived at the point of being restored but who, if the Order restores him, is sometimes rightly restored, sometimes wrongly restored.⁵
57. Two acknowledgements: either he acknowledges by body or he acknowledges by speech.⁶
58. Two acceptances: either he accepts by body⁷ or he accepts by means of something attached to the body.⁸
59. Two objectings to⁹: either he objects by body or he objects by speech.
60. Two harmings: harming to the training and harming to possessions.¹⁰
61. Two reproving: either he reproves by body or he reproves by speech.¹¹
62. Two impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina privileges: the residence-impediment and the robes-impediment.¹²
63. Two non-impediments to (the removal of) the kaṭhina privileges: the residence-non-impediment and the robes-non-impediment.¹³
64. Two (kinds of) robe-material: that (given by) householders¹⁴ and the rag-heap (robe-material).¹⁵
65. Two (kinds of) bowl: the iron bowl, the clay bowl.¹
66. Two (kinds of) circular (bowl-rests²): made of tin, made of lead.³

BD.6.181

² nissāraṇā. ³ Vin.1.321. ⁴ osāraṇā. ⁵ Vin.1.322. ⁶ Vin-a.1323 says “he acknowledges by signalling with the hand and so on”. (hatthavikāra), see above, n.2. ⁷ It would seem that many things may be accepted by means of the body, see e.g. Bu-NP.5, Bu-NP.6, Bu-NP.16, Bu-NP.18, Bu-Pc.40, etc. ⁸ Bu-Pc.40.3.1. ⁹ paṭikkhepā. The Buddha objects (by speech) to various things at Vin.1.238 (Kd.6.32.2). ¹⁰ Three ways of harming are given at Vin.2.13: bodily, verbal, and both. Cf. Vin-a.1157 and Vin-a.1323 for harming because one has not been trained in the three trainings. Injury to possessions refers to the person who wrongly makes use of possessions belonging to an Order or an individual, as probably in Bu-NP.30, Bu-Pc.15, Bu-Pc.17. ¹¹ Several examples of reproving verbally are given in Mahāvagga and Cullavagga. See BD.4, BD.5, Indexes under Reprove for an offence. (Note: Not in SuttaCentral edition.) ¹² Vin.1.265. ¹³ Vin.1.265. ¹⁴ See e.g. Vin.1.280 (Kd.8.1.34). ¹⁵ Vin.1.58 (Kd.1.30-4). ¹ Vin.2.112, Vin.3.243, Vin.4.123, Vin.4.243. ² Name abbreviated here from pattamaṇḍala to maṇḍala. ³ Vin.2.112.

67. Two (kinds of) allottings of a bowl⁴: either one allots by body or one allots by speech.
68. Two (kinds of) allottings of a robe: either one allots by body or one allots by speech.⁵
69. Two (kinds of) assignment: assignment in the presence of and assignment in the absence of.⁶
70. Two disciplines: for monks and for nuns.
71. Two things belonging to discipline⁷: what has been laid down and what is in conformity with what has been laid down.⁸
72. Two subduings of discipline: bridge-breaking in regard to what is not allowable, behaving with moderation in regard to what is allowable.⁹
73. In two ways one falls into an offence: one falls by means of body and one falls by means of speech.¹⁰
74. In two ways one rises from an offence: one rises by means of body and one rises by means of speech.¹¹
75. Two probations: probation for concealing, probation for not concealing.¹
76. And two further probations: purifying probation,² concurrent probation.³

Vin.5.118

BD.6.182

⁴ adhittāna, allotting. Rules about bowls are at Bu-NP.21, Bu-NP.22. In Bu-NP.22 we get the expression adhittāna, of a bowl; but see BD.2.121, n.4. There is also the pre-ordination requirement that the preceptor points out the bowl and robes to the candidate with the words, “This is a bowl for you ... this an outer cloak ... upper robe ... inner robe,” Vin.1.94.

⁵ See Kd.8.20, Kd.8.24.4. ⁶ Vin.4.122, in Bu-Pc.59. ⁷ venayika is not being used here in its more usual sense of “leader away” as at Vin.3.3. Here it means, according to Vin-a.1323, things accomplished for discipline, for the goal; see BD.5, Introduction, p.xx. ⁸ See Vin.1.25of., Vin.2.288, Vin.3.231. The “laid down” is concerned with what is and what is not allowable in the whole of the Vinaya-piṭaka; and what is in accordance with this should be seen among the four principal appeals to authority (mahāpadesa), Vin-a.1323. For mahāpadesa see AN.ii.167 and Guide § 120. ⁹ Subduing is sallekha. Bridge-breaking is breaking conditions, paccaya. See AN.i.261: bridge-breaking in singing and dancing—activities which nuns are forbidden to see in Nuns’ Bi-Pc.10, and monks at Vin.2.108 (a dukkāṭa for them). See too BD.1.13, n.2. ¹⁰ Examples can be found easily. ¹¹ By body, i.e. by the deciding (of the legal question) which is a covering over (as) with grass. When it has been pointed out to one, one rises from an offence by means of speech. On āpattivuttāna see Kd.1.36.10, Kd.2.3.5. ¹ On concealed and unconcealed offences and the duration of the probation incurred see Kd.13. ² Vin.2.59. ³ Vin.2.48. These four probations also occur in the tetrads, Vin.5.126.

77. Two mānattas: mānatta for concealing, mānatta for not concealing.⁴
 78. And two further mānattas: mānatta for a fortnight,⁵ concurrent mānatta.⁶
 79. For two kinds of individuals there is an interruption⁷: for him who is under probation⁸ and for him who is undergoing mānatta.⁹
 80. Two disrespects: disrespect for a person and disrespect for Dhamma.¹⁰
 81. Two salts: the natural and the made.¹¹
 82. And two further salts: sea(-salt), black salt.¹²
 83. And two further salts: rock-salt, culinary salt.¹³
 84. And two further salts: the “Sambhar Lake” (salt),¹⁴ pakkhālaka.¹⁵
 85. Two enjoyments: inner enjoyment and outer enjoyment.¹⁶
 86. Two modes of address: low mode of address and high mode of address.¹
 87. In two ways is there slander: in making dear or in desiring dissension.²

BD.6.183

⁴ See Kd.13. ⁵ pakkhamānatta probably refers specially to Kd.13.1, Kd.17.1. See too Vin.4.242 (Nuns’ Bi-Ss.13) which also seems to be referred to at Vin-a.117of. ⁶ See Kd.13. These four kinds of mānatta are given as a tetrad at Vin.5.126 and are mentioned at Vin-a.117of. ⁷ rat-ticheda, a breaking of the nights thus affecting the time he has to spend carrying out his penalties and so purifying himself of his offence. ⁸ Vin.2.33f. ⁹ Vin.2.36. ¹⁰ Vin.4.113. ¹¹ jātima kārīma. These names do not appear to occur elsewhere in the Pali canon. ¹² sāmudda and kāḷaloṇa are the two first salts allowed as medicines for monks at Vin.1.202. Vin-a.1090 says “sea-salt (sāmuddika) exists on the sea-shore as does sand. Black-salt (kāḷaloṇa) is the ordinary salt”. On black-salt see SIR GEORGE WATT, Commercial Products of India, London 1908, p.56. ¹³ sindhava and ubbhida are the next two salts allowed at Vin.1.202. The fifth and last there is bila, not mentioned above. Vin-a.1090 says sindhava is white and a mountain salt, and ubbhida, the culinary salt, is produced (as is) a shoot from the ground. Is this Sir George Watt’s ushasuta? See next note below. ¹⁴ romaka. Neither this nor the following occurs at Vin.1.202. Monier-Williams says that this is a kind of saline earth and the salt extracted from it. SIR GEORGE WATT, Commercial Products of India, p.963 says “Susruta, the father of Indian medicine, speaks of four kinds of salt, and these correspond with the four chief grades known today, viz. Saindhava, the rock-salt of Sind and Kohat; Sāmudra, produced from the sea; Romaka or Sākam bari, Sambhar Lake salt; and Pānsuja or Ushasuta, salt produced from saline earth”. ¹⁵ I cannot identify this salt. Has it anything to do with pakkhāleti, to wash, to cleanse? ¹⁶ According to Vin-a.1324 the inner enjoyment, paribhoga, is the enjoyment of food; the outer is smearing, makkhana, the head and so on. ¹ Vin.4.7.

² Vin.4.12.

88. In two ways is a group-meal entered upon: by being invited or by asking.³
89. Two (periods for) beginning the rains: the earlier and the later.⁴
90. Two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.⁵
91. Two suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.⁶
92. Two foolish men⁷: he who carries out a task unasked and he who, when asked, does not carry out a task.⁸
93. Two wise men: he who does not carry out a task unasked and he who, when asked, carries out a task.
94. And two further foolish men: he who thinks what is allowable is in what is not allowable and he who thinks what is not allowable is in what is allowable.
95. Two wise men: he who thinks what is not allowable is in what is not allowable and he who thinks what is allowable is in what is allowable.⁹
96. And two further foolish men: he who thinks there is an offence in what is not an offence and he who thinks there is not an offence in an offence.
97. Two wise men: he who thinks there is an offence in an offence and he who thinks there is not an offence in what is not an offence.
98. And two further foolish men: he who thinks there is Dhamma in what is not-dhamma and he who thinks there is not-dhamma in Dhamma.
99. Two wise men: he who thinks there is not-dhamma in not-dhamma and he who thinks there is Dhamma in Dhamma.
100. And two further foolish men: he who thinks there is not-discipline in Discipline and he who thinks there is Discipline in not-discipline.

³ See Bu-Pc.32. ⁴ Vin.1.137. ⁵ Vin.2.241f. ⁶ Vin.2.242. ⁷ From here to the end of the paragraph is very clearly linked with AN.i.84-86, the Bālavagga. ⁸ bhāraṃ na vahaṭi. Vin-a.1324, in order to emphasize that an elder is not doing an elder's tasks or duties, kicca, quotes Vin.1.113: anujānāmi bhikkhave therena bhikkhunā sāmaṃ vā Dhammaṃ bhāsitaṃ param vā ajjhesitum. That these duties are Vinaya tasks is clear also from AN.ii.155 though this Commentary appears to see the stupidity as that of a newly ordained monk doing the tenfold task of an elder without having been asked by an elder to do so. "Unasked" is anāgata, not told. ⁹ According to AN.ii.155 the unallowable is lion's flesh and so on (see Vin.1.220) and the allowable crocodile flesh and cat flesh.

101. Two wise men: he who thinks there is not-discipline in not-discipline and he who thinks there is Discipline in Discipline.
102. Of two individuals the cankers grow: he who is remorseful when he should not be remorseful and he who is not remorseful when he should be remorseful.¹
103. Of two individuals the cankers do not grow: he who is not remorseful when he should not be remorseful and he who is remorseful when he should be remorseful.
104. And of two further individuals the cankers grow: he who thinks what is allowable is in what is not allowable and he who thinks what is not allowable is in what is allowable.
105. Of two individuals the cankers do not grow: he who thinks what is not allowable is in what is not allowable and he who thinks what is allowable is in what is allowable.
106. And of two further individuals the cankers grow: he who thinks there is an offence in what is not an offence and he who thinks there is not an offence in an offence.
107. Of two individuals the cankers do not grow: he who thinks there is not an offence in what is not an offence and he who thinks there is an offence in an offence.
108. And of two further individuals the cankers grow: he who thinks that Dhamma is in not-dhamma and he who thinks there is not-dhamma in Dhamma.
109. Of two individuals the cankers do not grow: he who thinks there is not-dhamma in not-dhamma and he who thinks there is Dhamma in Dhamma.
110. And of two further individuals the cankers grow: he who thinks there is not-discipline in Discipline and he who thinks there is Discipline in not-discipline.
111. Of two individuals the cankers do not grow: he who thinks there is not-discipline in not-discipline and he who thinks there is Discipline in Discipline.

BD.6.184
Vin.5.119

Concluded are the Dyads

¹ Pp.26.

ITS SUMMARY

Awareness, and acquirers, True Dhamma, and requisites, individuals, Truth, the ground, while setting out, taking, undertaking, /
 Doing, giving, accepting, through using, and by night,
 Sunrise, cutting off, concealing, and wearing, Observances, /
 Invitation, (formal) acts and further, matter, further ones, and defects,
 And two further ones, excellence, different one, and just the same, /
 Defeat, Order, grave offence, Expiation, Confession,¹
 Wrong-doing, and also wrong speech, and seven classes of offence, /
 Is split, ordination, similarly a further two, BD.6.185
 Should not live, should not be given, incapable, and also capable, / Consciously, and that go too far, protests, being sent away, Restoration, and acknowledgement, acceptance, objecting to, /
 He harms, and reprovings, kaṭhina, and similarly two,
 Robes, bowls, what are circular, allottings, likewise two, /
 And assignments, disciplines, and belonging to discipline, subduings,
 And one falls, one rises from, probations, a further two, /
 Two mānattas, and further, interruption, disrespect,
 Two salts, a further three,² enjoyment, and by mode of address, /
 And slander, groups, the rains, suspensions, tasks, allowable,
 No offence, non-dhamma, Dhamma, in Discipline, similarly the cankers.

3. TRIADS

1. There is the offence one falls into while the Lord is alive, not after the *parinibbāna*³; there is the offence one falls into after the parinibbāna, not while the Lord is alive¹; there is the offence one falls into both while the Lord is alive as well as after the parinibbāna. Prv.7.3.1

¹ Abbreviated to: pārāji, saṅghā, (thullaccayaṃ), pācitti, pāṭidesani. ² Not of course a further three salts, but a further three dyads each naming two salts. ³ Vin-a.1324 takes as an example the offence of shedding a Tathāgata's blood; see e.g. Vin.1.89. ¹ Vin-a.1324 bases its two examples on two statements attributed to the Buddha and standing next to one another at DN.ii.154: (1) "At present, Ānanda, monks address one another with the epithet āvuso. After I am gone should not so address (one another). (2) Ānanda, a monk who is an elder should be addressed by a newly ordained monk as bhante or āyasmā.' Because addressing an elder with the epithet āvuso one falls into an offence after the Lord's parinibbāna, not while he is alive. Setting aside these two offences, one falls into the rest both while the Lord is living and also after the parinibbāna."

BD.6.186

2. There is the offence one falls into at a right time, not at a wrong time; there is the offence one falls into at a wrong time, not at a right time; there is the offence one falls into at a right time as well as at a wrong time.²
3. There is the offence one falls into during the night, not by day ... by day, not during the night ... during the night as well as by day.³
4. There is the offence that one of ten years' standing falls into, not one of less than ten years' standing⁴; there is the offence that one of less than ten years' standing falls into, not one of ten years' standing; there is the offence that one of ten years' standing and one of less than ten years' standing fall into.
5. There is the offence that one of five years' standing falls into, not one of less than five years' standing⁵; there is the offence that one of less than five years' standing falls into, not one of five years' standing; there is the offence that one of five years' standing and one of less than five years' standing fall into.
6. There is the offence that one of skilled mind falls into⁶; there is the offence that one of unskilled mind falls into⁷; there is the offence that one of indeterminate mind falls into.¹
7. There is the offence that one having a pleasant feeling falls into²; there is the offence that one having a painful feeling falls into³; there is the offence that one having neither a painful nor a pleasant feeling falls into.⁴

² Vin-a.1324: one falls into an offence at the right time, not at a wrong time for eating (though one is already satisfied) what is not left over (Bu-Pc.36). But at a wrong time, not at a right time, one falls into the offence of eating at a wrong time (Bu-Pc.37). For the remainder (of the offences) one falls at the right time as well as at the wrong time.

³ See the Dyads, Vin.5.116. Vin-a.1322 = Vin-a.1324 except that Vin-a.1324 adds "during the night as well as by day the remaining" (offences can be fallen into). ⁴ See Vin.1.59ff., Vin.1.65. ⁵ See Vin.1.81. ⁶ Vin-a.1325 says such as making one who is not ordained speak Dhamma line by line (Bu-Pc.4) or teaching Dhamma unaccompanied to a woman (Bu-Pc.7). ⁷ Vin-a.1325 gives catch-words indicating the Defeats, Bu-Ss.1, Bu-Ss.2, Bu-Ss.3, Bu-Ss.4, Bu-Ss.8, Bu-Ss.9, Bu-Ss.10, Bu-Pc.74, Bu-Pc.75. ¹ Cf. Vin.2.91f. where the Order is spoken of as skilled, unskilled, and indeterminate in mind. ² Sexual intercourse. ³ Bu-Ss.8, Bu-Ss.9. ⁴ No doubt "the remainder".

8. Three grounds for reproof according to what has been seen, heard, or suspected.⁵
9. Three methods of taking votes: the secret, the open, and whispering in the ear.⁶
10. Three objections⁷: (to) great wishes,⁸ discontent, unsubduedness.
11. Three permissions: small wishes,⁹ content, subduedness. And three further objections: (to) great wishes, discontent, immoderation.¹⁰
12. Three permissions: small wishes, content, moderation.¹¹
13. Three layings down: a laying down, a supplementary laying down, a laying down that has not yet occurred.¹²
14. And three further layings down: a laying down (that holds good) everywhere, a laying down (that holds good only) for some regions, a laying down that is shared.
15. And three further layings down: a laying down that is not shared, a laying down for one (Order only), a laying down for both (Orders).
16. There is the offence an ignorant person falls into, not the wise man¹³; there is the offence the wise man falls into, not the ignorant person; there is the offence the ignorant person falls into as well as the wise man.
17. There is the offence one falls into on the next new-moon day, not on the next full-moon day¹ ... on the next full-moon day, not the next new-moon day² ... on the next new-moon day as well as on the next full-moon day.
18. There is what is allowed on the next new-moon day, not on the next full-moon day³; ... on the next full-moon day, not on the next new-moon day⁴ ... on the next new-moon day as well as on the next full-moon day.

BD.6.187

⁵ Vin.1.172f., Vin.3.164. ⁶ Vin.2.98f. ⁷ Vin-a.1325 says that (these are) three objections of the Lord's. Other things he objected to are given at e.g. Vin.1.238. ⁸ Cf. AN.iv.280, MN-a.i.96. "Great wishes," mahicchātā, explained at AN.i.74, AN-a.211, and "discontent" asantuṭṭhitā, at AN.i.77, AN-a.115, and all three at DN-a.903. For the triad see DN.iii.115. ⁹ Fourfold at AN.i.76, AN.iv.118, as well as threefold also at AN.i.76. ¹⁰ Immoderation (in eating) defined at Pp.21. ¹¹ Moderation (in eating) defined at AN.ii.184, and more generally at AN.iii.283. ¹² See Vin.5.1. ¹³ Referring to monks of ten and of less than ten years' standing, and of five and of less than five years' standing: see Kd.1.31.5–Kd.1.31.8, Kd.1.35, Kd.1.53.9–Kd.1.53.13. ¹ Vin-a.1325 says this is not entering on the rains, see Kd.3.4.3: an offence of wrong-doing. ² kāle and juṅhe. See Kd.4.17.4ff. Vin-a.1325 calls this not inviting according to the "great Invitation".

19. There is the offence one falls into in the cold weather, not in the hot weather, not in the rains⁵ ... in the hot weather, not in the cold weather, not in the rains⁶ ... in the rains, not in the cold weather, not in the hot weather.⁷
- BD.6.188 20. There is the offence an Order falls into, not a group, not an individual⁸ ... a group falls into, not an Order, not an individual⁹ ... an individual falls into, not an Order, not a group.¹⁰
21. There is what is allowed for an Order, not for a group, not for an individual¹¹; there is what is allowed for a group, not for an Order, not for an individual¹²; there is what is allowed for an individual, not for an Order, not for a group.¹³
22. Three concealings: one conceals the subject, not the offence; one conceals the offence, not the subject; one conceals the subject as well as the offence.¹⁴
23. Three coverings: a covering to the bathroom, a covering to the water, a covering by clothes.¹
24. Three things are hidden, not open²: women-folk practise (their ways) in concealment, not openly; the mantras of brahmins are practised in concealment, not openly; a false view is practised in concealment,

Vin.5.121

³ Vin-a.1325: entering on the rains is allowed, kappati, on the next new-moon day, not on the next full-moon day. ⁴ Vin-a.1325 says Invitation by means of the Great Invitation is allowed on the next full-moon day, not on the next new-moon day. ⁵ Referring to Kd.8.20. ⁶ Referring to Bu-NP.24. ⁷ Perhaps referring to Kd.8.15.2, Kd.8.15.7, Kd.8.15.14; also Bu-NP.24. ⁸ The Order falls into an offence either carrying out by way of complete purity the Observance (Kd.2.22, and see Kd.2.3.3, Kd.2.3.26) or an Observance that has been determined on, adhiṭṭhānuposatha. This latter refers to Kd.2.26.9 where the word adhiṭṭhātabbam is used. ⁹ Carrying out a recital of the rules and an Observance that has been determined on. Probably referring to the group (of four, three or two monks) at Kd.2.26.10. ¹⁰ Kd.2.26.8, Kd.2.26.9. Of this triad Vin-a.1326 says it is the same as Invitation. ¹¹ An Order's Observance (see Kd.2) and an Order's Invitation (Kd.4.1.13, Kd.4.1.14). ¹² A group's Observance (Kd.2.26) and a group's Invitation (Kd.4.5.2ff.). ¹³ An Observance that has been determined on (Kd.2.26.9) and an Invitation that has been determined on (Kd.4.5.2ff.) ¹⁴ Kd.4.16.23ff. ¹ Vin.2.22, where these three kinds are allowed. ² AN.i.282f.

not openly.

25. Three things shine forth when they are unveiled, not in concealment³: the moon's disc shines forth when it is unveiled, not when it is hidden; the sun's disc ... not when it is hidden; the Dhamma-and-Discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata shines forth when it is unveiled, not when it is hidden.
26. Three times for the appropriation of lodgings: the earlier, the later, the intervening.⁴
27. There is the offence one who is ill falls into, not one who is not ill⁵; there is the offence one who is not ill falls into, not one who is ill⁶; there is the offence one who is ill falls into as well as one who is not ill.⁷
28. Three suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.⁸
29. Three suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.⁹
30. Three probations: concealed probation,¹⁰ unconcealed probation,¹¹ purifying probation.¹²
31. Three mānattas: concealed mānatta,¹³ unconcealed mānatta,¹⁴ the mānatta for a fortnight.¹⁵
32. Three interruptions for a monk who is under probation: dwelling with, dwelling away separated from, not announcing.¹⁶
33. There is the offence one falls into inside, not outside¹⁷; there is the offence one falls into outside, not inside¹; there is the offence one falls into inside as well as outside.
34. There is the offence one falls into inside a boundary, not outside a boundary²; there is the offence one falls into outside a boundary, not inside a boundary³; there is the offence one falls into inside a boundary as well as outside a boundary.

BD.6.189

³ AN.i.283; last sentence quoted at Mi.190. ⁴ Kd.16.11.4. ⁵ Asking for a different medicine from the one procured; see Bu-Pc.47.2.2. For this and the next clause see below, Vin.5.128, among the Fours. ⁶ Asking for medicines, as in Nuns' Bi-NP.6, Bu-NP.7, Bu-NP.8, Bu-NP.9, Bu-NP.10. ⁷ The remaining offences. ⁸ Vin.2.242; see below, Vin.5.128. ⁹ Vin.2.242; see below, Vin.5.128. ¹⁰ Kd.13. ¹¹ Kd.13. ¹² Vin.2.59 (Kd.13.26), Vin.5.126 gives these and one other among the Fours. See also Vin.5.118 in the Twos. ¹³ Kd.13. ¹⁴ Kd.13. ¹⁵ pakkhamānatta, see Vin.5.118 and Vin-a.1170 which give four kinds of mānatta as does Vin.5.126 in the Fours. ¹⁶ Vin.2.33-34. ¹⁷ Bu-Pc.16. ¹ Bu-Pc.14. ² Kd.18.1.1. ³ Kd.18.3.1.

35. By three ways does one fall into an offence: one falls by means of body ... by means of speech ... by means of body, by means of speech.
36. By three further ways does one fall into an offence: in the midst of an Order,⁴ in the midst of a group,⁵ in the presence of an individual.⁶
37. In three ways does one arise from an offence: one arises by means of body, one arises by means of speech, one arises by means of body, by means of speech.⁷
38. By three further ways does one arise from an offence: in the midst of an Order, in the midst of a group, in the presence of an individual.⁸
39. Three givings of a verdict of past insanity are not legally valid.⁹
40. Three givings of a verdict of past insanity are legally valid.¹⁰
41. An Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of censure against a monk who is possessed of three qualities: if he is a maker of strife, a maker of quarrels, a maker of disputes a maker of contention, a maker of legal questions in an Order; if he is ignorant, inexperienced, full of offences not rid of them; if he lives in company with householders in unbecoming association with householders.¹¹
42. An Order, if it So desires, may carry out a (formal) act of guidance ... association with householders.¹²
43. An Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of banishment against a monk who is possessed of three qualities: if he is a maker of strife ... a maker of legal questions in an Order; if he is ignorant ... not rid of them; if he brings a family into disrepute, is of depraved conduct, and if his depraved conduct is seen and also heard.¹
44. An Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of reconciliation against a monk who is possessed of three qualities: if he is a maker of strife ... if he is ignorant ... not rid of them; if he reviles and abuses householders.²
45. An Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of suspension against a monk ... for not seeing an offence ... if he is a maker of strife

BD.6.190

Vin.5.122

⁴ Kd.2.15.5. Offence of wrong-doing for speaking Dhamma, unbidden, in the midst of an Order. Cf. Kd.2.16.9. ⁵ Vin-a.1327 says the method is the same. ⁶ Vin-a.1327 says the method is the same. ⁷ Vin-a.1327: one arises by means of the deciding which is the covering over (as) with grass. ⁸ Kd.2.3.5. ⁹ Kd.14.6.1, Kd.14.6.2. ¹⁰ Kd.14.6.1, Kd.14.6.2. ¹¹ Kd.11.4. ¹² Kd.11.10.1. ¹ Bu-Ss.13. ² Kd.11.19, Kd.11.20.

- ... not rid of them; if (though) he has fallen into an offence he does not wish to see the offence.³
46. An Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of suspension against a monk ... for not making amends for an offence ... if he is a maker of strife ... not rid of them: if (though) he has fallen into an offence he does not wish to make amends for the offence.⁴
47. An Order, if it so desires, may carry out a (formal) act of suspension against a monk who is possessed of three qualities for not giving up a pernicious view: if he is a maker of strife ... not rid of them; if he does not wish to give up the pernicious view.⁵
48. An Order, if it so desires, may plan something hard⁶ for a monk who is possessed of three qualities: if he is a maker of strife ... not rid of them; if he lives in company with householders, in unbecoming association with householders.
49. A (formal) act may be carried out against a monk who is possessed of three qualities: if he is unconscientious⁷ and if he is ignorant⁸ and if he is not a regular (monk).⁹
50. And a (formal) act may be carried out against a monk who is possessed of three further qualities: if, in regard to morality, he has fallen away from moral habit¹; if, in regard to behaviour, he has fallen away from right behavior²; if, in regard to view, he has fallen away from right view.³
51. And a (formal) act may be carried out against a monk who is possessed

BD.6.191

³ See Kd.11.25-30, Kd.8.7.9. ⁴ See Kd.11.31, Kd.8.7.9. ⁵ See Kd.11.32, Kd.11.33. ⁶ āgālhāya ceteyya—expression appears to occur here only. Vin-a.1327 glosses by dalhabhāvāya ceteyya; and goes on to say an Order may carry out a (formal) act of suspension for one against whom an act of censure was out if he has not fulfilled his obligations. ⁷ alajjin, as at Vin.3.179, Vin.1.77. ⁸ He does not know what is Dhamma and what is not-dhamma, Vin-a.1327. ⁹ apakatatta. See Kd.12.1.5 for pakatatta, regular monk; also Kd.8.4.8, and definition of regular monk at Vin-a.1147. Vin-a.1327 says “he does not know what is an offence and what is not”, and hence cannot carry out a formal act. ¹ This triad is at Vin.2.4; Cf. also Vin.1.63. Vin-a.1327 says this means he has fallen into two classes of offence (Defeat and Formal Meeting). ² The five classes of offence. ³ Taking up an extreme view, antaggāhikā dīṭṭhi, Vin-a.1327. See Vin.1.172. There are 10 such views, see Vin.5.138. Commentary further says that a formal act may be carried out against those who neither see an offence, make amends for one, nor give up a wrong view.

of three further qualities: if he is possessed of bodily frivolity, if he is possessed of verbal frivolity, if he is possessed of bodily and verbal frivolity.⁴

52. And ... who is possessed of three further qualities: if he is possessed of bodily bad behaviour ... verbal bad behaviour ... bodily and verbal bad behaviour.⁵
53. And ... who is possessed of three further qualities: if he is possessed of harming by means of body ... harming by means of speech ... harming by means of body and speech.⁶
54. And ... who is possessed of three further qualities: if he is possessed of a wrong bodily mode of livelihood ... a wrong verbal mode of livelihood ... a wrong bodily and verbal mode of livelihood.⁷
55. And ... who is possessed of three further qualities: if, having fallen into an offence and a (formal) act has been carried out against him, he ordains, gives guidance, makes a novice attend him.⁸
56. And ... who is possessed of three further qualities: if he falls into that same offence for which a (formal) act was carried out (against him) by an Order, or into another that is similar, or into one that is worse.⁹
57. And ... who is possessed of three further qualities: if he speaks dispraise of the Buddha of Dhamma ... of the Order.¹⁰
58. If a monk is possessed of three qualities: if he is unconscientious and if he is ignorant and if he is not a regular monk (but if) he has suspended the Observance in the midst of an Order (but if other monks) have snubbed him, saying: "That's enough, monk; let there be no strife, no quarrel, no dispute, no contention," the Observance may be carried out by the Order.¹

BD.6.192

⁴ Vin.2.13. The first member of the triad appears to mean playing at dice (Vin-a.1327) though Vin-a.1147 says "bodily play"; the second may be producing a drumming sound with the mouth; and the third is dancing and singing. ⁵ Vin.2.13. These mean transgressing the rules of training laid down concerning the doors of the body and of speech. ⁶ Harming through not training in the rules of training regarding body and speech, Vin.2.13. ⁷ Going messages on foot or sorcery or accepting teachings on the Dispensation from lay-people. ⁸ Cf. Vin.2.5, etc. ⁹ Vin.2.4, etc. ¹⁰ Vin.2.4, etc. ¹ The main theme of Kd.19 is the suspension of the Pātimokkha.

59. If a monk is possessed of three qualities ... there may be Invitation by the Order.²
60. No agreement of an Order should be given to a monk who is possessed of three qualities: if he is unconscientious ... not a regular monk.³
61. If a monk is possessed of three qualities he should not speak⁴ in the Order: if he is unconscientious ... not a regular monk.
62. A monk who is possessed of three qualities should not be put in any separate place⁵; if he is unconscientious ... not a regular monk.
63. If a monk is possessed of three qualities he should not live in dependence ... If a monk is possessed of three qualities he should not give guidance: if he is unconscientious ... not a regular monk. Vin.5.123
64. If a monk who is possessed of three qualities obtains leave⁶ the giving of the leave is not sufficient: if he is unconscientious ... not a regular monk.
65. If a monk is possessed of three qualities he should not issue commands⁷: if he is unconscientious ... not a regular monk.
66. If a monk is possessed of three qualities he should not ask about Discipline⁸ ... not a regular monk.
67. Discipline should not be asked about by means of monk who is possessed of three qualities⁹: ... not a regular monk. BD.6.193
68. (Questions on) Discipline should not be answered by a monk who is possessed of three qualities¹: ... not a regular monk.
69. (Questions on) Discipline should not be answered through a monk who is possessed of three qualities²: ... not a regular monk.
70. An explanation should not be given to a monk who is possessed of three qualities³: ... not a regular monk.

² Kd.4.16.6. ³ Cf. Nuns' Bi-Pc.75. ⁴ voharitabbam, glossed by na kiñci vattabbam. ⁵ na kismiñci paccekattḥāne ṭhapetabbo, as at AN.iv.347. Vin-a.1328 says he should not be set in a high place, jeṭṭhakattḥāne, that is to say in a specially honoured position. AN.iv.160 adds that if he has been put in such a place, there is no chance to carry out a formal act of the Order. ⁶ okāsakammaṃ kārāpentassa. See Vin.1.114 okāsaṃ kārāpetvā; Vin.2.5, Vin.2.23, etc. okāsaṃ kāretabbo. ⁷ savacaniyaṃ na dātabbam. Vin.2.5, etc. read na savacaniyaṃ kātabbam, and Vin-a.1328 ādātabbam: his speech should not be taken up, not listened to. ⁸ Cf. Kd.2.15.6. ⁹ Cf. Kd.2.15.8. ¹ Kd.2.15.11. ² Kd.2.15.9. ³ Kd.4.16.6.

71. Discipline should not be discussed together with a monk who is possessed of three qualities⁴: ... not a regular monk.
72. One should not be ordained by a monk who is possessed of three qualities⁵: ... not a regular monk.
73. Guidance should not be given to⁶ a monk who is possessed of three qualities: ... not a regular monk.
74. A novice should not be made to attend on a monk who is possessed of three qualities⁷: if he is unconscientious and ignorant and not a regular monk.
75. Three Observances: on the fourteenth (day), the fifteenth (day),⁸ and the Observance of “being all together”.⁹
76. And three further Observances: Observance in an Order,¹⁰ Observance in a group,¹¹ Observance for an individual.¹²
77. And three further Observances: the Observance at which the rules are recited,¹³ the Observance at which there is entire purity,¹⁴ the Observance where there is determination.¹⁵
78. Three Invitations: the fourteenth (day), the fifteenth (day),¹⁶ and the Invitation of “being all together”.¹⁷
79. And three further Invitations: Invitation in an Order,¹⁸ Invitation in a group,¹⁹ Invitation for an individual.²⁰
80. And three further Invitations: Invitation by the threefold formula,²¹ Invitation by the twofold formula,²² Invitation of those keeping the rains (all) together.
81. Three (persons) doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya¹: he who, not getting rid of this,² is not a Brahma-farer though pretending to be a Brahma-farer; and he who, though not a pure Brahma-farer, makes an unfounded charge of non-Brahma faring against one who is faring a pure Brahma-faring³; and he who speaks like this and is of this view:

BD.6.194

⁴ See Vin.5.189. ⁵ Cf. Kd.1.76.4ff. ⁶ Kd.1.72.2. ⁷ Kd.1.52, Kd.1.55. ⁸ Kd.2.4.2; Kd.2.14.1. ⁹ Kd.2.5.1, Kd.2.5.2. ¹⁰ Cf. Kd.2.24. ¹¹ Kd.2.26.1ff. ¹² Kd.2.26.8ff. ¹³ Kd.2.26.1 (Cf. Kd.2.15.1). These three items appear with two others, Vin.5.133. ¹⁴ Kd.2.26.2 (Cf. Kd.2.22.1ff.). ¹⁵ Kd.2.26.9, Kd.2.26.10. ¹⁶ Kd.4.3.1. ¹⁷ Kd.4.3.2ff. ¹⁸ Kd.4.5.1. ¹⁹ Kd.4.5.2-5. ²⁰ Kd.4.5.6ff. ²¹ Kd.4.14.1. ²² Kd.4.15.1. The onefold formula of the Mahāvagga is not mentioned in the Parivāra above. ¹ See Vin.2.202, Vin.2.205. ² Vin-a.1328: this pretence. ³ Vin.3.90. According to Vin-a.1328 a pure Brahma-farer is a monk whose cankers are destroyed.

- “There is no defect in sense-pleasures” comes to indulgence among the sense-pleasures.⁴
82. Three roots of unskill: greed is a root of unskill, hatred is a root of unskill, confusion is a root of unskill.
83. Three roots of skill: non-greed is a root of skill, non-hatred is a root of skill, non-confusion is a root of skill.
84. Three ways of bad behavior: bad behaviour through body, bad behaviour through speech, bad behaviour through thought.
85. Three ways of good behavior: good behaviour through body ... speech ... thought.
86. Dependent on three reasons was a meal (to be eaten) by a triad (of monks) laid down by the Lord: for the restraint of evil-minded individuals; for the living in comfort of well-behaved monks lest those of evil desires should split an Order by means of a faction; and out of compassion for families.⁵
87. Devadatta, overcome and his mind controlled by three bad qualities is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya, staying there for an aeon, incurable: evil desire, evil friendship, coming to a halt midway in his career because his special attainments are of trifling value.⁶
88. Three agreements: agreement as to a walking staff⁷; agreement as to string⁸; agreement as to a walking staff and string.⁹
89. Three (kinds of) shoes that are in fixed places and cannot be handed on: privy shoes, urinal shoes, rinsing shoes.¹⁰
90. Three (kinds of) foot-rubbers: a stone, a pebble, sea-scum.¹¹

Vin.5.124

Concluded are the Triads

ITS SUMMARY

While he is alive, at the right time,
and during the night, ten, five, through skill, Feeling, grounds for reproof, votes, twice objections, /
Layings down, and two further, ignorant, and at the next new-moon day, is allowed,

BD.6.195

⁴ Cf. MN.i.305; see GS.i.244, n.2 on pālabyatam, indulgence. The whole triad occurs at AN.i.265f. ⁵ Whole triad at Kd.17.3.13 (Vin.2.196). ⁶ Vin.2.203. ⁷ Vin.2.131. See for this and next below Prv.9.1. ⁸ Vin.2.132. ⁹ Vin.2.130. ¹⁰ Vin.1.190. ¹¹ Vin.2.130.

In the cold weather, an Order, for an Order, and concealings, a covering, /
 Things hidden, and unveiled, lodgings, those who are ill,
 The Pātimokkha, probation, mānattas, those under probation, /
 Inside, and inside a boundary, does one fall, and again further,
 Does one arise, and further too, verdicts for past insanity are twofold, / (Act of) censure, and of guidance, of banishment, reconciliation,
 Not seeing, not making amends for,
 and not giving up a (wrong) view, /
 Something hard, (formal) act, as to the higher morality,
 frivolity, bad behaviour, harming,
 Mode of livelihood, having fallen, that same (offence), dispraise, and about Observance, / Invitation, and agreement, remaining, and in a separate (place),
 He should not speak, he should not give,
 likewise he should not get leave, /
 He should not issue commands,
 two on what should not be asked about,
 And similarly two on he should not answer,
 and he should not be given an explanation, /
 Discussion, ordination, guidance, and novices,
 Three triads on Observance, three triads on Invitation, /
 (Persons in) the Downfall, unskilled, skilled, two on behaviour,
 A meal by a triad, bad qualities, agreement, and about shoes,
 Similarly things that are foot-rubbers:
 this is the summary for the Triads.

4. TETRADS

Prv.7.4.1

1. There is the offence one falls into through one's own speech, rises from through another's speech¹; there is the offence one falls into through

BD.6.196

¹ Vin-a.1328f. says one falls into the offence beginning with speaking Dhamma line by line (Bu-Pc.4)—a speech-door offence—and having received the deciding of a covering over (as) with grass he rises (from the offence) through another person's proclamation, kammavācā.

- another's speech, rises from through one's own speech²; there is the offence one falls into through one's own speech, rises from through one's own speech³; there is the offence one falls into through another's speech, rises from through another's speech.⁴
2. There is the offence one falls into by body, rises from by speech: ... falls into by speech, rises from by body ... falls into by body, rises from by body falls into by speech, rises from by speech.⁵
 3. There is the offence one falls into when one is asleep,⁶ rises from when one is awake; ... when one is awake, rises from when one is asleep ... asleep, asleep ... awake, awake.
 4. There is the offence one falls into unconscious⁷ (that it is against ordinance), rises from conscious (that it is against ordinance); ... conscious unconscious ...; unconscious ... unconscious; there is the offence one falls into conscious (that it is against ordinance), rises from conscious (that it is against ordinance).
 5. There is the offence that, falling into, he confesses, confessing he falls into; there is the offence that, falling into he rises from, rising from he falls into.¹
 6. There is the offence one falls into through doing, rises from through not doing ... falls into through not doing, rises from through doing ... falls into through doing, rises from through doing ... falls into through

Vin.5.125

² Vin-a.1329: through another's proclamation one falls for not giving up a wrong view; confessing in the presence of an individual one rises (Cf. Vin.1.323, Vin.1.330). ³ Again, one falls speaking Dhamma line by line, but on confessing the offence one rises through one's own speech. ⁴ One falls into a Formal Meeting through another's proclamation made up to the third time; one rises through another's proclamation (that one should live under) probation. ⁵ One offends with the speech-door, rises by body through a covering over (as) with grass. ⁶ This is the offence of lying down on a couch belonging to an Order, having spread it for oneself; Cf. Bu-Pc.14. The word for "asleep" is pasutta, "awake" is paṭibuddha; neither word appears to occur elsewhere in Vinaya. See Introduction, p.xv. ⁷ acittake āpajjati means he falls into an acittakāpatti; acittaka occurs at Vin.5.207, but apparently not again in Vinaya. ¹ Vin-a.1329 here speaks of a collective offence, sabhāgāpatti, and says "whoever confesses one, falling into an offence of wrong-doing because of the confession, confesses a certain offence of Expiation and so on, and confessing that he falls into an offence of wrong-doing. But, falling into that offence of wrong-doing he rises from the offence of Pācittiya and so on, but rising from that offence of Pācittiya he falls into that". See Vin.1.126.

not doing, rises from through not doing.²

BD.6.197

7. Four unariyan statements³: speaking of the seen as unseen, speaking of the heard as unheard, speaking of the sensed as unsensed, speaking of the cognized as uncognized.
8. Four ariyan statements⁴: speaking of the unseen as unseen ... of the uncognized as uncognized.
9. And four further unariyan statements⁵: speaking of the unseen as seen, speaking of the unheard as heard, speaking of the unsensed as sensed, speaking of the uncognized as cognized.
10. Four ariyan statements⁶: speaking of the seen as seen ... the cognized as cognized.
11. Four offences involving Defeat are shared by monks and nuns.
12. Four offences involving Defeat are not shared by monks and nuns.⁷
13. Four requisites: there is the requisite that should be guarded, protected, cherished, made use of⁸; there is the requisite that should be guarded, protected, not cherished, made use of; there is the requisite that should be guarded, protected, not cherished, not made use of; there is the requisite that should not be guarded, not protected, not cherished, not made use of.
14. There is the offence one falls into in the presence of, rises from in the absence of¹; there is the offence one falls into in the absence of, rises from in the presence of²; ... falls into in the presence of, rises from in the presence of³; there is the offence one falls into in the absence of, rises from in the absence of.⁴

² Vin-a.1329 says that in this tetrad one falls through doing the offence of not giving up a false view. Confessing, one rises through not-doing. One falls through not-doing, beginning with emission (Bu-Ss.1), one rises from through doing probation. One falls also through the doing of admonishment, rises from by doing (see e.g. Vin.3.174, Vin.4.236). ³ Vin.4.2.

⁴ Vin.4.2. ⁵ Vin.4.2. ⁶ DN.iii.232, AN.ii.246. ⁷ See BD.3, Introduction, p.xxxii. ⁸ A deviation from the four requisites as usually given: robe-material, bowl, etc. Vin-a.1330 says the first is one's own requisites, the second belongs to the Order, the third to a cetiya (shrine), and the fourth is a householder's requisite. ¹ Vin-a.1330: one falls in the presence of the Order into the offence of not giving up a pernicious view. But at the time of rising (from the offence), if there is nothing to be done by the Order, one rises in the absence of. ² Beginning with emission (Bu-Ss.1). "Of the Order" is meant throughout. ³ Referring to "admonition" in the various Formal Meetings. ⁴ I.e. when telling conscious lies and so on.

15. There is the offence one falls into unknowing, rises from knowing; ... falls into knowing, rises from unknowing falls into unknowing, rises from unknowing; there is the offence one falls into knowing, rises from knowing.⁵
16. By four means does one fall into an offence: one falls by body ... by speech ... by body, by speech; one falls by a resolution.⁶ BD.6.198
17. And by four further means does one fall into an offence: in the midst of an Order, in the midst of a group, in the presence of an individual, through the appearance of a sexual characteristic.⁷
18. By four means does one rise from an offence: one rises by body ... by speech ... by body, by speech; one rises by a resolution.
19. And by four further means does one rise from an offence: in the midst of an Order, in the midst of a group in the presence of an individual, through the appearance of a sexual characteristic. Together with (its) acquisition he gets rid of the earlier, is established in the later, hintings are allayed descriptions are stopped.⁸ Together with (its) acquisition he gets rid of the later, is established in the earlier, hintings are allayed, descriptions are stopped.⁹
20. Four reprovings: one reprovves for falling away from moral habit, one reprovves for falling away from good behaviour, one reprovves for falling away from right views, one reprovves for falling away from right mode of livelihood. Vin.5.126
21. Four probations: probation for concealing, probation for not concealing, purifying probation, concurrent probation.¹
22. Four mānattas: mānatta for concealing, mānatta for not concealing, mānatta for a fortnight, concurrent mānatta.
23. Four interruptions for a monk who is undergoing mānatta: dwelling with, dwelling away separated from, not announcing, going about with less than a group.²

⁵ This tetrad is like that on “unconscious”, acittaka. ⁶ kammavācā. ⁷ Vin-a.1330 seems to refer this to Vin.3.35 (Bu-Pj.1.10.6). ⁸ Referring to the last tetrad. ⁹ Referring to the last tetrad. ¹ Split into two dyads at Vin.5.118; the first three also form a triad at Vin.5.121.

² Kd.12.7.

BD.6.199

24. Four things discovered of themselves.³
25. Four enjoyments (of food and so on, formally) accepted: for the time being, for a watch of the night, for seven days, for as long as life lasts.⁴
26. Four great irregular things: (a decoction of) dung, urine, ashes, clay.⁵
27. Four (formal) acts: a (formal) act for which leave should be asked, a (formal) act at which a motion is put, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution, a (formal) act at which a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times.⁶
28. And four further (formal) acts: a (formal) act in an incomplete (Order carried out) by what is not the rule; a (formal) act in a complete (Order carried out) by what is not the rule; a (formal) act in an incomplete (Order carried out) by the rule; a (formal) act in a complete (Order carried out) by the rule.⁷
29. Four fallings away: falling away from moral habit ... from good behaviour ... from right views ... from right mode of livelihood.
30. Four legal questions: legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences ... obligations.⁸
31. Four defilements of an assembly: a monk who is poor in moral habit, evil in character is a defilement of an assembly; a nun ... a lay follower ... a female lay follower who is poor in moral habit, evil in character is a defilement of an assembly.¹
32. Four adornments of an assembly: a monk who is of moral habit, lovely in character is an adornment of an assembly; a nun ... a lay follower ... a female lay follower who is of moral habit, lovely in character is an adornment of an assembly.²

³ Text sāmukkaṃsā. At Vin.1.16, Vin.1.18, Vin.2.156, etc., we find sāmukkaṃsika Dhammadeśanā: dukkhaṃ samudayaṃ nirodhaṃ maggaṃ. See MN-a.iii.92. On the other hand Vin-a.1330 explains cattāro sāmukkaṃsā by cattāro mahāpadesā, but the rest of its explanation is in line with MN-a.iii.92 and DN-a.277. The mahāpadesā therefore are probably not to be taken here in the sense given them at e.g. DN.ii.123ff. ⁴ See e.g. Vin.4.83 (and BD.2.330 notes). “Food for the time being” probably refers to the five kinds of meals, given to be eaten at once. ⁵ Vin.1.206; also Vin.4.90. ⁶ Forming two dyads at Vin.5.116. ⁷ Vin.1.111f.

⁸ Vin.2.88, Vin.3.164. ¹ AN.ii.225, reading parisadussanā; above and AN.iii.210 read -dūsanā.

² AN.ii.225.

33. There is the offence an incoming (monk) falls into, not a resident one³; there is the offence a resident (monk) falls into, not an incoming one⁴; there is the offence a resident monk falls into as well as an incoming one; there is the offence that neither a resident (monk) falls into nor an incoming one. There is the offence a (monk who is) going away falls into, not a resident one⁵; there is the offence a resident (monk) falls into, not one who is going away⁶ ... there is the offence that neither one who is going away nor a resident one falls into.
34. There is difference as to matter, not difference as to offence⁷; there is difference as to offence, not difference as to matter⁸; there is difference as to matter as well as difference as to offence⁹; there is difference neither as to matter nor as to offence.¹⁰
35. There is similarity as to matter, not similarity as to offence¹¹; there is similarity as to offence, not similarity as to matter¹²; there is similarity as to matter as well as similarity as to offence¹³; there is similarity neither as to matter nor as to offence.¹⁴
36. There is the offence the preceptor falls into, not the one who shares his cell¹; there is the offence one who shares a cell falls into, not the preceptor²; there is the offence the preceptor falls into as well as the one who shares his cell³; there is the offence neither ... falls into.

BD.6.200

³ Vin-a.1331 says here an incoming monk falls into an offence if he enters a vihāra with his sunshade up, his sandals on, his head covered—see Vin.2.207-8. ⁴ The resident does not perform a resident's duties, Vin.2.210. ⁵ Vin.2.211. ⁶ Vin.2.210. ⁷ Vin-a.1331: the four Defeats differ as to matter, not as to offence; similarly the Formal Meetings. ⁸ Vin-a.1331: if a monk and a nun come into physical contact with one another, there is a Formal Meeting for the monk and a Defeat for the nun. Likewise, eating garlic is an Pācittiya for a nun, wrong-doing for a monk. ⁹ I.e. in the four Defeats together with the 13 Formal Meetings. So too, as between the Formal Meetings and the Undetermined. ¹⁰ Beginning with the four Defeats that monks and nuns fall into separately. The meaning is that they fall separately and that they fall into offences that they share. ¹¹ Vin-a.1331: if a monk and a nun are in physical contact, there is similarity of matter, not of offence. ¹² In regard to the Defeats and the Formal Meetings. ¹³ In regard to the four Defeats for monks and nuns, and in regard to all the offences they have in common. ¹⁴ In regard to the offences monks and nuns do not share. ¹ If either fails in carrying out his duties to the other. ² If either fails in carrying out his duties to the other. ³ The remaining offences.

37. There is the offence the teacher falls into, not the pupil⁴ ... there is the offence neither the teacher nor the pupil falls into.
38. For four reasons there is no offence in cutting short the rains: if the Order is split, or if there are those desirous of splitting an Order,⁵ or if there is danger to life, or if there is danger to the Brahma-faring.⁶
39. Four bad ways of verbal conduct: lying speech, slanderous speech, harsh speech, gossip.⁷
40. Four good ways of verbal conduct: truthful speech, non-slanderous speech, gentle speech, utterance of mantras.⁸
41. There is, in taking, a serious offence that one falls into,⁹ a slight one in enjoining¹⁰; there is, in taking, a slight offence that one falls into, a serious one in enjoining; there is, in taking and in enjoining, a serious offence that one falls into; there is, in taking and in enjoining, a slight offence that one falls into.
42. There is the individual who merits respectful greeting, does not merit standing up for¹¹ ... standing up for, not respectful greeting¹² ... respectful greeting as well as standing up for¹³ ... merits neither respectful greeting nor standing up for.¹⁴
43. There is the individual who merits a seat, does not merit standing up for ... who merits neither a seat nor standing up for.¹
44. There is the offence one falls into at a (right) time, not at a wrong time² ... at a wrong time,³ not at a right time ... at a right time as well as at a wrong time ... neither at a right time nor at a wrong time.

BD.6.201
Vin.5.127

⁴ The explanation of this tetrad is similar to the former one; see Vin.1.61. ⁵ Vin.1.150f. (Kd.3.11.5ff.). The Pātimokkha may be recited in brief (Vin.1.112f.) and the Invitation curtailed (Vin.1.169f.) if these dangers are present. ⁶ Dangers to life during the rains are specified at Vin.1.148f., and to the Brahma-faring at Vin.1.150. ⁷ Stock, as at MN.iii.22, MN.iii.33, AN.ii.141. At DN.iii.232 the four are given under anariyavohārā. ⁸ AN.ii.141; for references to mantabhāsa see GS.ii.144, n.1. ⁹ Bu-Pj.2 (Vin.3.45). ¹⁰ “enjoining—payojento”. This appears to refer to Vin.3.53f. ¹¹ This seems to refer to nuns in a refectory. ¹² Referring to a monk who that day received ordination after he had spent sixty years under probation. ¹³ An older monk from one who is newly ordained. ¹⁴ A newly ordained monk by a more senior one. ¹ The meaning is much the same as in the preceding tetrad. The first clause here has the same meaning as the second clause there, and the second the same as the first. ² Eating, having been invited to do so, Bu-Pc.36. ³ The offence of eating at a wrong time, Bu-Pc.37.

45. There is the formal acceptance⁴ allowable at a right time, not at a wrong time⁵ ... at a wrong time, not at a right time⁶ ... at a right time as well as at a wrong time⁷ ... allowable neither at a right time nor at a wrong time.⁸
46. There is the offence one falls into in the border districts,⁹ not in the middle ones¹⁰ ... in the middle districts, not in the border ones¹¹ ... in the border districts as well as in the middle ones ... neither in the border districts nor in the middle ones.
47. There is what is allowable in the border districts, not in the middle ones¹² ... in the middle districts, not in the border ones¹³ ... in the border districts as well as in the middle ones¹⁴ ... neither in the border districts nor in the middle ones.
48. There is the offence one falls into inside, not outside¹⁵ ... outside, not inside¹⁶ ... neither inside nor outside ... inside as well as outside.
49. There is the offence one falls into inside the boundary, not outside the boundary¹ ... outside the boundary, not inside the boundary ... inside the boundary as well as outside the boundary² ... neither inside the boundary nor outside the boundary.
50. There is an offence one falls into in a village, not in a forest³ ... in a forest, not in a village⁴ ... in a village as well as in a forest⁵ ... neither

BD.6.202

⁴ paṭiggahita, see Vin.5.126. ⁵ Vin-a.1332 refers this to “before a meal”; see Bu-Pc.46, Nuns’ Bi-Pc.15. ⁶ A drink is allowable at a wrong time. “Not at a right time” refers to “the next day”. ⁷ Food for seven days and for as long as life lasts. ⁸ Meat that is not allowable, see Vin.1.218. ⁹ Defined at Vin.1.197. ¹⁰ Vin-a.1332 says, settling on a boundary in the sea one falls in bordering districts, not in middle ones. ¹¹ Wearing sandals with many linings (Kd.5.1.30), ordaining by a fivefold (Kd.8.4.1), constant bathing (see Bu-Pc.67), using hides as coverings (Kd.5.10.6ff.)—all allowed for border districts at Kd.5.13.13. ¹² See previous note. ¹³ Presumably not ordaining by a group of five (Kd.8.4.1) and the opposites of the cases given in the last note but one above. ¹⁴ Vin-a.1333 cites the five kinds of salts allowed as medicines (Kd.6.8.1). ¹⁵ To lie down encroaching on (the space intended for elders): Bu-Pc.16; see also Vin.1.47, Vin.2.213, Vin.2.220, Vin.2.224, Vin.4.42. ¹⁶ Going away and leaving a couch and so on that belong to the Order out in the open air, Bu-Pc.14. ¹ Vin-a.1333: an incoming monk, not fulfilling his duties, falls inside a boundary; one going away falls outside the boundary. ² One who tells lies and so on falls inside and outside the boundary. ³ See the Sekhiyas connected with “amid the houses”. ⁴ A nun, waiting for the sun to rise, falls into an offence in a forest, not in a village. ⁵ E.g. lying speech.

in a village nor in a forest.

51. Four reproving⁶: showing the matter, showing the offence, objection to living in communion, objection to the proper duties.
52. Four preliminary things to be done.⁷
53. Four occasions when things seem right.⁸
54. Four Expiations (containing the words) “not for another”.⁹
55. Four agreements of the monks.¹⁰
56. Four followings of a wrong course: he follows a wrong course through partiality (desire) ... through hatred ... through confusion ... through fear.¹¹
57. Four non-followings of a wrong course: he does not follow a wrong course through partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear.
58. Possessed of four qualities an unconscientious monk, following a wrong course through partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear, splits an Order.¹²
59. Possessed of four qualities a modest monk, not following a wrong course through partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear, makes harmonious an Order that was split.¹
60. Discipline should not be asked about of a monk² who is possessed of four qualities: if he follows a wrong course through partiality ... fear.³
61. Discipline should not be asked about by a monk⁴ who is possessed of four qualities: if he follows a wrong course through partiality ... fear.⁵
62. Questions on Discipline should not be answered for a monk⁶ who is possessed of four qualities ... should not be answered by a monk⁷ who

BD.6.203

⁶ Another four at Vin.5.125f. ⁷ (Making ready) a broom, a light, water and a seat, Vin-a.1333. This has the appearance of being the duty of a novice who is preparing a cell for an older monk. A broom is allowed at Vin.2.130. Commentary gives another four pubbakiccā: the complete purity of the consent (chanda, see Bu-Pc.79), utukkhāna (? has this anything to do with khīyanaka, criticism, see BD.3.59, n.2), counting the monks, and exhortation.

⁸ pattakallā; word at e.g. Bu-NP.18, Bu-NP.19. Vin-a.1333 says: Observance, as many monks are come who are eligible for a formal act, (if) collective offences are not to be found, and (if) individuals who are to be avoided are not in this, tasmim. ⁹ Referring to Bu-Pc.16, Bu-Pc.42, Bu-Pc.77, Bu-Pc.78.

¹⁰ Referring to Bu-NP.2, Bu-NP.14, Bu-NP.29, Bu-Pc.9. ¹¹ See e.g. Vin.2.14, Vin.3.238, Vin.3.246, Vin.4.238. ¹² See Kd.17 ¹ See Kd.17 ² See Vin.5.123.

³ See Kd.17 ⁴ See Vin.5.123. ⁵ See Kd.17 ⁶ See Vin.5.123. ⁷ See Vin.5.123.

is possessed of four qualities: if he follows a wrong course through partiality ... fear.

63. An explanation should not be given to a monk⁸ who is possessed of four qualities ...
64. Discipline should not be discussed together with a monk⁹ who is possessed of four qualities: if he follows a wrong course through partiality ... fear. Vin.5.128
65. There is an offence one who is ill falls into, not one who is not ill¹⁰ ... one who is not ill falls into, not one who is ill¹¹ ... one who is ill falls into as well as one who is not ill¹² ... neither one who is ill falls into nor one who is not ill.
66. Four suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.¹³
67. Four suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.¹⁴

Concluded are the Tetrads

ITS SUMMARY

Through one's own speech, by body,
and asleep, unconscious,
And falling into, through doing, statements are four likewise, /
And by monks and nuns, and requisites, in the presence of,
Unknowing, by body, and by means,
one rises from is likewise fourfold, /
With the acquisition, reprovings, and it is called probations Mānatta, and undergoings too, discovered by themselves, (formal) acceptance, /
Great irregular (things), (formal) acts, again (formal) acts fallings away,
Legal questions, and those poor in moral habit, adornment and on an incoming one, /
One going away, difference as to matter, similarity, and about a preceptor,
Teacher, reason, bad conduct, good conduct, /
Taking, and individual,

BD.6.204

⁸ See Vin.5.123. ⁹ See Vin.5.123. ¹⁰ See Nuns' Bi-NP.4, Bi-NP.5; also above Vin.5.121.

¹¹ See Bu-Pc.32, Bu-Pc.38, Bu-Pc.39, Bu-Pc.56, Bu-Pc.57, etc. ¹² Lying speech and so on.

¹³ Vin.2.242. ¹⁴ Vin.2.242

one who merits, and about a seat,
 At a (right) time, and also it is allowable, and it is allowable in the border districts, /
 Inside, and inside a boundary, and in a village, and reprovings,
 Preliminary duties, it seems right,
 “not for another,” and agreements, /
 A wrong course and not a wrong course too, unconscientious, and about a modest one,
 And two on whom may be asked,
 likewise two on what one may answer,
 Explanation, discussion, ill, and about suspension.

5. PENTADS

Prv.7.5.1

1. Five offences.¹
2. Five classes of offence.²
3. Five matters that are trained in.³
4. Five deeds whose fruit comes with no delay.⁴
5. Five individuals who are certain.⁵
6. Five offences involving cutting down.⁶
7. In five ways does one fall into an offence.⁷
8. Five offences due to lying speech.¹
9. In five ways does it not become a (formal) act: either one does not carry out a (formal) act by oneself, or one does not look about for another (monk), or one does not give consent or complete purity, or one protests when a (formal) act is being carried out,² or when there is the view that a (formal) act that has been carried out is not legally valid.

BD.6.205

¹ See Vin.5.91f. ² See Vin.5.91f. ³ See Vin.5.91f. ⁴ See Vin.2.193. ⁵ Or “fixed”. They are the ones who do a deed whose fruition comes once. See Vin.5.115. ⁶ Bu-Pc.87, Bu-Pc.89, Bu-Pc.90, Bu-Pc.91, Bu-Pc.92. ⁷ Vin-a.1334: through conscientiousness, ignorance, a scrupulous nature, one thinks that something is allowable when it is not, or that something allowable when it is. ¹ See Vin.5.193. Commentary lists Bu-Pj.4, grave offence (Vin.3.99), one of wrong-doing (Vin.1.104, Vin.3.100f. and Bu-Pj.4), Bu-Ss.8, Bu-Pc.1, also Bu-Pj.2.7.12, Bu-Pj.2.7.45, and Bu-Pj.4). ² Bu-Pc.79, Nuns’ Bi-Ss.4.

10. In five ways does it become a (formal) act: either one carries out a (formal) act by oneself, or one looks about for another (monk), or one gives consent or complete purity, or one does not protest when a (formal) act is being carried out, or when there is the view that a (formal) act that has been carried out is legally valid.
11. Five things are allowable to a monk who is an almsfood-eater³: walking for alms without having asked for permission to do so,⁴ a group-meal,⁵ an out-of-turn-meal,⁶ no determining upon,⁷ no assigning.⁸
12. A monk who is possessed of five qualities,⁹ whether he be a deprived monk or one who is steady¹⁰ in morality is mistrusted and suspected if his resort (for alms) is among prostitutes, or among widows, or among grown girls, or among eunuchs, or among nuns. Vin.5.129
13. Five oils¹¹: sesamum oil, oil of mustard seed, oil from the “honey-tree”,¹² oil from the castor-oil plant, oil from tallow.
14. Five tallows: tallow from bears, tallow from fish, tallow from alligators, tallow from swine, tallow from donkeys.¹³
15. Five losses: loss of relations, loss of possessions ... by illness ... in moral habit, loss in (right) view.¹
16. Five prosperities: prosperity in relations ... possessions ... health ... moral habit, prosperity in (right) view.² BD.6.206
17. Five nullifications of guidance from a preceptor: when preceptor has gone away or left the Order or died or gone over to another side (of ³ Begging for almsfood is one of the ascetic practices, see Vism.60, Vism.66. ⁴ Cf. Vin.1.254.

⁵ Bu-Pc.32. ⁶ Bu-Pc.33. ⁷ Vin-a.1334 refers to Bu-Pc.32 by saying “It is said ‘in a group-meal except at the right time’ (Vin.4.73f.) means having determined on a right time there is determination for a meal”. The word adhiṭṭhāna does not occur in Bu-Pc.32. ⁸ avikappanā, referring to Bu-Pc.33 (Vin.4.78). ⁹ This pentad is at Vin.1.70 (in another context) and at AN.iii.128 as above, ¹⁰ Reading is pāpabhikkhu pi akuppadhammo pi, with variant readings. See Gs.iii.98, n.1. Slightly different reading at AN.iii.128. Vin-a.1334 says since he is steady (not liable to anger?) and since he is one whose cankers are destroyed, he must avoid therefore what are not resorts (for alms). ¹¹ Oil is one of the five general medicines allowed, e.g. Bu-NP.23. These five occur also at MN-a.2.344, SN-a.ii.294. ¹² madhuka-tela. Madhuka is the tree Bassia latifolia. ¹³ Allowed at Vin.1.200 if used with oil. ¹ DN.iii.235, AN.iii.147, and three at Vin.4.277. See Vin.5.194. It is difficult to decide on suitable renderings for vyasana and its opposite sampadā. The former is loss, deficiency, reverse; the latter blessing, good fortune, success, gain. ² DN.iii.235, AN.iii.147. See Vin.5.194.

- the Order), and command is the fifth.³
18. Five persons should not be ordained: one lacking the full age,⁴ a one lacking a limb,⁵ one who has fallen away from the matter,⁶ one who is a karaṇadukkaṭaka,⁷ one who is not complete.⁸
 19. Five refuse-rag-robess⁹: (rags thrown down) in a charnel-ground, outside a shop, gnawn by rats, gnawn by white ants scorched by fire. And five further refuse-rag-robess: (those) gnawn by cattle, gnawn by goats, a robe from a shrine, one from a (king's) consecration, one worn going to or coming from (a charnel-ground).
 20. Five carryings-away¹⁰: a carrying-away by theft¹¹ ... by force ... by stratagem ... by concealment, a carrying-away at a casting of the kusa-grass.¹²
 21. Five great thieves are found in the world.¹³
 22. Five things not to be disposed of.¹⁴
 23. Five things not to be divided up.¹⁵
 24. Five offences originate by means of body, not by speech, not by thought.¹⁶
 25. Five offences originate by means of body and by means of speech, not by means of thought.¹⁷
 26. Five offences lead on to confession.¹⁸
 27. Five Orders.¹
 28. Five (ways for) the recital of the Pātimokkha.²
 29. Ordination may be conferred by a group with a Vinaya expert as the fifth (member) in all border districts.³
 30. Five advantages in the formal making of the kaṭhina-cloth.⁴
 31. Five (formal) acts.⁵
 32. Five offences (for which the offender may be admonished) up to the

BD.6.207

³ Vin.1.62. ⁴ addhānahīna, referring to Bu-Pc.65; see Vin.5.117. ⁵ See Kd.1.71 (not to go forth). ⁶ vatthuvipanna. ⁷ See Vin.5.117. ⁸ See Vin.5.117. ⁹ List of 23 given at Vism.62, not in the above order. This list does not include the second item in the next pentad. ¹⁰ Mentioned at DN-a.71, also at Atthasālinī 98 (which mentions Smp.by name). Vin-a.375ff. explains each term. ¹¹ Bu-Pj.2. ¹² Bu-Pj.2.7, Bu-Pj.2.9. ¹³ Bu-Pj.4.1, Bu-Pj.4.3. ¹⁴ Kd.12.15.2. ¹⁵ Kd.12.16.2. ¹⁶ Vin.5.94: the first origination of offences. ¹⁷ Vin.5.95: the third origination of offences. ¹⁸ See also among the Units. Vin-a.1334 says: leaving aside Defeat and Formal Meeting—the remainder. ¹ Kd.8.4.1. ² Kd.2.15.1. ³ Kd.5.13.11. ⁴ There will be five allowable things when the kaṭhina cloth is made up, Vin.1.154. ⁵ Vin.1.49.

- third time.⁶
33. There is an offence involving Defeat for in five ways taking something that has not been given.⁷
 34. There is a grave offence for ... There is an offence of wrong doing for in five ways taking something that has not been given.
 35. Five unallowable things should not be made use of: what has not been given, and what is not known about, and what is not allowable, and what has not been formally accepted, and what has not been made “left over”.⁸
 36. Five allowable things may be made use of: what has been given ... and what has been made “left over”.
 37. Five unmeritorious gifts are considered by the world to be meritorious⁹: a gift of intoxicants, a gift for a festival, a gift of women, a gift of bulls, a gift of pictures.¹⁰
 38. Five arisen things are hard to drive away¹¹: attachment that has arisen is hard to drive away, hatred ... confusion ... garrulousness¹² ... a mind that wanders¹³ when it has arisen is hard to drive away.
 39. There are five advantages in brooms¹: one calms one’s own mind, one calms the mind of others, devas are glad, one accumulates kamma that is conducive to what is pleasant, at the breaking up of the body after dying one arises in a good bourn, a heaven world.
 40. Five further advantages in brooms: one calms one’s own mind ... devas are glad, the Teacher’s instruction is carried out, people coming after fall into the way of (right) views.²
 41. If he is possessed of five qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned

Vin.5.130

⁶ From Vin-a.1334 these are to be identified as: Nuns’ Bi-Pj.7, the offences being Defeat, grave, wrong-doing (Vin.4.218f.); Monk’s Bu-Ss.10, Bu-Pc.68. There are of course several more sikkhāpadā requiring admonishment up to the third time. ⁷ Bu-Pj.2, as at Vin.3.54.

⁸ Bu-Pc.35. ⁹ Reading pañca dānāni apuññāni puññasammatāni lokassa. Mi.278f., in enumerating ten gifts, of which the first five are as above, reads however dasa ... dānāni loke adānasammatāni, ten gifts are considered in the world as not-gifts. See too AN.iv.185 which gives four of the above but in a different order and omits the last, cittakammadāna. ¹⁰ Cf. Vin.4.298 cittāgāra, picture-gallery. ¹¹ As at AN.iii.184f. ¹² paṭibhāna, wordiness, desire to talk. ¹³ gamiyacitta. ¹ No comparable passage has been traced so far. Vin-a.1335ff. gives a story explanation of each clause except the final one. Brooms are allowed to at Vin.2.130. ² One might Cf. Vin.2.108, AN.iii.256.

as ignorant: if he does not put a limit to his own speech, if he does not put a limit to the speech of another (person), if, not having put a limit to his own speech, not having put a limit to the speech of another (person), he has a (form act carried out not according to the rule, not with (his) acknowledgement.

BD.6.208

42. If he is possessed of five qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he puts a limit to his own speech ... has a (formal) act carried out according to the rule, with (his) acknowledgement.
43. And if he is possessed of five further qualities the expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is an offence,³ if he does not know what is the root of an offence,⁴ if he does not know the arising of an offence,⁵ if he does not know the stopping of an offence,⁶ if he does not know the course leading to the stopping of an offence.⁷
44. If he is possessed of five qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he knows what is an offence ... if he knows the course leading to the stopping of an offence.
45. And if he is possessed of five further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is a legal question ... the root¹ ... the arising² ... the stopping³ ... the course leading to the stopping of a legal question.⁴
46. If he is possessed of five qualities ... reckoned as clever: If he knows ... the course leading to the stopping of a legal question.
47. And if he is possessed of five further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know the subject⁵ ... the prove-

³ Vin-a.1337 says he thinks it is a Defeat or a Formal Meeting and does not know the difference between the seven classes of offence. ⁴ He does not know the two roots: body and speech. ⁵ The six originations of offences. ⁶ It is stopped and allayed by confessing. ⁷ He does not know the seven decidings. ¹ Vin-a.1338: there are thirty-three roots: twelve for legal questions concerned with disputes fourteen for those concerned with censure, six for those concerned with offences, one for those concerned with obligations. ² For dispute there are the eighteen ways connected with schism; for censure the four fallings away; for offence the seven classes of offence, obligation the four obligations of an Order. ³ He cannot achieve a firm opinion through Dhamma, Vinaya, the Teacher's instruction. ⁴ He does not know that the legal questions are settled by two, four, three, one decidings respectively. See Vin.5.101ff., in the Samatha Section. ⁵ The subject of the seven classes of offence.

nance⁶ ... the laying down⁷ ... the supplementary laying down, if he does not know the sequence of the connecting words.⁸

BD.6.209

48. If he is possessed of five qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he knows the subject ... the sequence of the connecting words.
49. And if he is possessed of five further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is a motion, if he does not know the carrying out of the motion,⁹ if he is not skilled in what comes first,¹⁰ if he is not skilled in what comes afterwards, and if he is one who is unknowing of the (right) time.¹¹
50. If he is possessed of five qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he knows what is a motion ... if he is skilled in what comes afterwards, if he is one who is knowing of the (right) time.
51. And if he is possessed of five further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight and what a serious offence, if he does not know what is an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with,¹ if he does not know what is a very bad offence and one that is not very bad, if he has not learnt properly from a succession of teachers, has not attended properly, has not reflected on properly.
52. If he is possessed of five qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he knows what is an offence and what is not an offence ... if he has learnt properly from a succession of teachers, has attended properly, has reflected on properly.
53. And if he is possessed of five further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight and what

⁶ Of the seven provenances (see Vin.5.144) he does not know that this rule of training was laid down here, that one there. ⁷ The first laying down of each rule of training.

⁸ anusandhivacanapatha. Vin-a.1338 says he does not know the subject to the sequence of meaning in the talk and in the thought. ⁹ There is carrying out a motion on nine occasions beginning with “restoration”, osāraṇā; see Vin.1.322 and Vin-a.1031. ¹⁰ He does not know that the motion should come first and not afterwards.

¹¹ He speaks unasked, unbidden, and does not know the time, the field (khetta) or the occasion (okāsa) for a motion; Vin-a.1338f. ¹ See Vin.5.115.

a serious offence, if he does not know what is an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with, if he does not know what is a very bad offence and one that is not very bad, and if the two Pātimokkhas have not been properly handed down to him in detail, not properly sectioned, not properly regulated, not properly investigated clause by clause and in respect of the linguistic form.²

Vin.5.131

BD.6.210

54. If he is possessed of five qualities ... clever: if ... the two Pātimokkhas have been properly handed down to him in detail, properly section a properly regulated, properly investigated clause by clause and in respect of the linguistic form.
55. And if he is possessed of five further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant if he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence ... if he does not know what is a very bad offence and one that is not very bad, and if he is not skilled in investigating³ a legal question. If he is possessed of five qualities ... clever: ... and if he is skilled in investigating a legal question.
56. Five forest-dwellers⁴: one is a forest-dweller from stupidity from confusion; one of evil desires, filled with covetousness is a forest-dweller; one is a forest-dweller from madness, from a deranged mind; one is a forest-dweller at the thought, "It is praised by Buddhas and disciples of Buddhas"; one is a forest-dweller because he is of few wishes, because of contentment, because of subduedness, because of aloofness, because this is of good avail.
57. Five almsfood-eaters ...
58. Five refuse-rag-wearers ...
59. Five tree-root-dwellers ...
60. Five charnel-ground-dwellers ...
61. Five open-air-dwellers ...
62. Five three-robe-wearers ...
63. Five house-to-house-seekers ...
64. Five who are sitters ...
65. Five who use any bed ...

² As at Vin.1.65, Vin.4.51, etc. Cf. Vin.5.134, BD.6.191. ³ vinicchaya. ⁴ As at Vin.5.193. AN.iii.219 gives ten of these thirteen ascetic practices in a slightly different order. This varies too at Vism.59.

66. Five eaters at one session ...
67. Five refusers of food later ...
68. Five who eat bowl-food: ... one is a bowl-food-eater from stupidity ... because this is of good avail.
69. A monk who is possessed of five qualities should not live independently¹: if he does not know the Observance, if he does not know the (formal) acts for Observance,² if he does not know the Pātimokkha, if he does not know the recital of the Pātimokkha,³ if it is less than five years (since his ordination).
70. A monk who is possessed of five qualities may live independently: if he knows the Observance ... if it is five years or more than five years (since his ordination).⁴
71. And a monk who is possessed of five further qualities should not live independently: if he does not know the Invitation, if he does not know the (formal) acts for Invitation,⁵ if he does not know the Pātimokkha, if he does not know the recital of the Pātimokkha, if it is less than five years (since his ordination).
72. A monk who is possessed of five qualities may live independently: ... if it is five years or more than five years (since his ordination).
73. And a monk who is possessed of five further qualities should not live independently: if he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight and what a serious offence, if he does not know what is an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with, if he does not know what is a very bad offence and one that is not very bad, if it is less than five years (since his ordination).
74. A monk who is possessed of five qualities may live independently: if he knows ... what is and what is not a very bad offence, if it is five years or more than five years (since his ordination).
75. A nun who is possessed of five qualities should not live independently: if she does not know the Observance, if she does not know the (formal) acts for Observance, if she does not know the Pātimokkha, if she does not know the recital of the Pātimokkha, if it is less than five years (since her ordination).

BD.6.211

¹ The five qualities given at Vin.1.8of. are not repeated here. ² Vin.1.111. ³ The four items to here are at Vin.1.116, Vin.1.119. ⁴ Vin.1.81. ⁵ Vin.1.160.

Vin.5.132

76. A nun who is possessed of five qualities may live independently ... or more than five years (since her ordination).

77. And a nun who is possessed of five further qualities should not live independently ... (the same paragraphs as above repeated for nuns) ... if she knows what is and what is not a very bad offence, and if it is five years or more than five years (since her ordination).

78. Five perils for one of unpleasing (actions)¹: the self upbraids the self, and the wise, having adjudicated,² blame him, an evil Rumour spreads abroad (about him), he does his time while he is confused, at the breaking up of the body after dying he arises in a sorrowful way, a bad bourn, the Downfall, Niraya.

BD.6.212

79. Five advantages for one of pleasing (actions)³: the self does not upbraid the self, and the wise, having adjudicated, praise him, a lovely rumour spreads abroad (about him), he does his time while he is unconfused, at the breaking up of the body after dying he arises in a good bourn, a heaven world.

80. And five further perils for one of unpleasing (actions)¹: non-believers are not pleased, there is wavering among some believers the Teacher's instruction is not carried out, people coming after fall² into the way of wrong views,³ his mind is not pleased.

81. Five advantages for one of pleasing (actions)⁴: non-believers are pleased, there is increase of believers, the Teacher's instruction is carried out, people coming after do not fall⁵ into the way of wrong views, his mind is pleased.

82. Five perils for one who is dependent on families⁶: he falls into (the offence of) walking for alms without having asked for permission,⁷ he falls into (the offence of) sitting down in private,⁸ he falls into (the offence of sitting down) on a concealed seat,⁹ he falls into (the offence

¹ AN.iii.255. Vin-a.1339 says apāsādikan ti kāyaduccarītādi akusalakammaṃ vuccati. ² anuvijja; AN.iii.255 reads anuvicca. ³ AN.iii.255. ⁴ AN.iii.255f. ⁵ Text reads nāpajjati; AN.iii.256 āpajjati. ⁶ Clause also at Vin.2.108. ⁷ AN.iii.256. ⁸ Text reads āpajjati as does AN.iii.256. ⁹ AN.iii.258f. "Dependent on families", kulūpaka, as at Vin.3.131, Vin.3.135. ⁷ anāmantacāra as at Vin.1.254. ⁸ Bu-Pc.45. ⁹ Bu-Pc.44.

- of) teaching Dhamma to women in more than five or six sentences,¹⁰ and he lives full of aspirations after sense-pleasures.
83. Five perils for a monk who is dependent on families: living in too much association with families there is a constant seeing of the women-folk, if there is seeing there is contact,¹¹ if there is contact there is intimacy, if there is intimacy there is desire, if his mind (is affected by) desire this may be expected for the monk: either he will fare the Brahma-faring dissatisfied or he will fall into some defiling¹² offence or, disavowing the training, he will revert to the secular life.¹³
84. Five kinds of propagation¹⁴: propagation from roots ... from stems ... from joints ... from cuttings, and fifthly propagation from seeds.
85. Fruit that is in five ways allowable to recluses may be made use of¹⁵: if it is damaged¹⁶ by fire, damaged by a knife, damaged by (one's) nail, if it is seedless, and the fifth is if the seeds have been discharged.
86. Five purifications¹⁷: having recited the provenance, the rest may be announced as though it had been heard (already): this is the first purification; having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving Defeat, the rest may be announced as though it had been heard (already): this is the second purification; having recited the provenance, having recited the four offences involving Defeat, having recited the thirteen offences entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order, the rest may be announced as though it had been heard (already): this is the third purification; having recited the provenance ... offences involving Defeat ... entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order, having recited the two Undetermined Offences, the rest may be announced as though it had been heard (already): this is the fourth purification; recital in full is the fifth.
87. And five further purifications: recital of the rules,¹ Observance when there is entire purity,² Observance when there is determination,³ Invitation, and the fifth is Observance with "being all together".

BD.6.213

Vin.5.133

¹⁰ Bu-Pc.7. ¹¹ Cf. Bu-Ss.2. ¹² Vin-a.1339, such as the very bad offence of coming into physical contact. ¹³ Cf. Vin.3.23f. (in Bu-Pj.1). ¹⁴ Vin.4.34. ¹⁵ Vin.2.109 (Kd.15.5.2). ¹⁶ Reading here is parajita; at Vin.2.109 paracita. ¹⁷ Also Vin.5.189. At Vin.1.112 these are called the five ways of reciting Pātimokkha. ¹ As at Vin.5.123, in the Triads. ² As at Vin.5.123, in the Triads. ³ As at Vin.5.123, in the Triads.

88. Five advantages for an expert in Discipline⁴: his own body of moral habit is well guarded, well protected; he is a shelter for those who are affected by scruples; confidently he lives in the midst of an Order; with Dhamma he restrains adversaries (of the Teaching)⁵ from one who is well restrained; he is one who practises for the stability of True Dhamma.
89. Five suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.⁶
90. Five suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.⁷

Concluded are the Pentads

ITS SUMMARY

Offence, classes of offence, trained in, and with no delay,
 Individuals, and also cutting down, and he falls, due to, /
 And it does not become, it becomes, allowable, mistrusted, oil,
 Tallow, loss, prosperity,
 nullification, and as to a person, /
 Charnel-ground, and gnawn by cattle, theft, and he is called a thief,
 Not to be disposed of, not to be divided up,
 from body from body and speech, /
 Confession, an Order, recital, bordering, and about kāṭhina
 (Formal) acts, up to the third time, defeat, grave, wrong-doing, /
 Unallowable, and allowable, unmeritorious, hard to drive away,
 Brooms, and a further (five),
 speech, and also about an offence, /
 Legal question, subject, motion, offence, and the two,
 These are slight (and) they are strong¹:
 distinguish between the dark and the bright; /
 Forest, and almsfood-eater, refuse-rag, tree, charnel-ground-dwellers,

BD.6.214

⁴ See Vin.5.184 (Prv.17.2.9). ⁵ paccatthike saha dhammena suniggahitaṃ niggaṇhāti.

⁶ Vin.2.242 (Kd.19.3.3). ⁷ Vin.2.242 (Kd.19.3.3). ¹ lahukathamakā, no doubt reading °thamakā for °thāmakā metri causa.

In the open air, and robe, house-to-house, a sitter, /
 Bed, refusers of food later, and too the bowl-food-eater,
 Observance, Invitation, and also an offence and what is not an offence,
 And similarly these dark and bright items are for nuns too, /
 Unpleasing (person), pleasing, likewise a further two,
 Dependent on families, too much,
 propagation, and allowable to recluses, /
 Purification, and a further too,
 Discipline, and not legally valid,
 Likewise legally valid is spoken of:
 concluded are the fair Pentads.

6. SEXTETS

1. Six forms of irreverence.²
2. Six forms of reverence.¹
3. Six matters that are trained in.²
4. Six “proper courses”.³
5. Six originations of offences.⁴
6. Six offences involving cutting down.⁵
7. In six ways does one fall into an offence.⁶
8. Six advantages for an expert in Discipline.⁷
9. Six “at most”.⁸

Prv.7.6.1

BD.6.215

² See Vin.5.92. ¹ See Vin.5.92. ² See Vin.5.92. ³ Bu-Ss.13 (Vin.3.186), Bu-NP.10, Bu-NP.22, Bu-Pc.34, Bu-Pc.71, Bu-Pc.84. Vin-a.1339 these six are in the Monks’ Pātimokkha only. Nuns’ Bi-Ss.13 is in “the seven proper courses” at Vin.5.134, at beginning of the Septets. ⁴ See Vin.5.92. ⁵ Same as the five intended at the beginning of Prv6.5 (Vin.5.128) with the addition of Nuns’ Bi-Pc.22. ⁶ See Prv.7.5 (BD.6.128). ⁷ These six are the same as the five advantages given towards end of 6.5 with the addition of “the Observance is his responsibility”, tass’ ādheyyo uposatho. ⁸ Identified as Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.3, Bu-NP.7, Bu-NP.10, Bu-NP.14, Bu-NP.16 by Vin-a.1340 which names another eight “at most” and gives the method for constructing other sextets.

10. One may be away, separated from that robe for six nights.⁹
11. Six (kinds of) robe-material.¹⁰
12. Six (kinds of) dyes.¹¹
13. Six offences originate from body and thought, not from speech.¹²
14. Six offences originate from speech and thought, not from body.
15. Six offences originate from body and speech and thought.
16. Six (formal) acts.¹³
17. Six roots of disputes.¹⁴
18. Six roots of censure.¹⁵
19. In length six spans of the accepted span.¹⁶
20. In breadth six spans.¹⁷
21. Six nullifications of guidance from a teacher.¹⁸
22. Six supplementary layings down about bathing.¹
23. Taking a robe that is imperfectly executed he goes away.²
24. Taking with him a robe that is imperfectly executed he goes away.³
25. A monk who is possessed of six qualities may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him: if he is possessed of an adept's body of moral habit ... body of concentration ... body of wisdom ... body of freedom ... body of the vision and knowledge of freedom, if he is of ten years' standing or more than ten years' standing.⁴
26. And a monk who is possessed of six further qualities may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if he is possessed of an adept's body of moral habit and encourages another as to an adept's body of moral habit ... if he is himself possessed of an adept's body of the vision and knowledge of freedom and encourages another as to an adept's body of the vision

Vin.5.134

BD.6.216

⁹ Vin-a.1340 refers to this clause, chāraṭṭaṃ ticīvarena vippavasitabbam, as one of the other "at mosts". Probably it should read with Vin.3.263 and Vin-a.1340 tena cīvarena instead of ticīvarena. ¹⁰ Vin.1.281. ¹¹ Vin.1.286. ¹² Vin-a.1340 refers us to the three "cycles" in the Anantarapeyyāla. ¹³ Vin-a.1340 identifies these as the four (formal) acts of censure, guidance, banishment and reconciliation (see Vin.1.49); the (formal) acts for not seeing and for not making amends for an offence—to be taken as one (formal) act; and the one act for not giving up a pernicious view. A different set of six (formal) acts is given at Vin.1.317. ¹⁴ See previous note. ¹⁵ See above Prv.4.1.1.14. ¹⁶ Bu-Pc.91. ¹⁷ Bu-Pc.92. ¹⁸ Vin.1.62. ¹ Bu-Pc.57. ² Vin-a.1340 says these two cycles are in the Kāṭhinakkhandhaka, i.e. at Kd.4.1 and Kd.5.1. ³ See previous note. ⁴ Kd.1.37.2.

- and knowledge of freedom, if he is of ten years' standing or more than ten years' standing.⁵
27. And a monk who is possessed of six further qualities may ordain ... novice may attend him: if he comes to have faith, if he comes to feel shame, if he comes to be cautious, if he comes to be of stirred up energy, if he comes to be of ready mindfulness if he is of ten years' standing or of more than ten years' standing.⁶
28. And a monk who is possessed of six further qualities may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if, in regard to moral habit, he has not fallen away from moral habit; if, in regard to good habits, he has not fallen away from good habits; if, in regard to (right) view, he has not fallen away from right view; if he has heard much; if he is intelligent; if he is ... of more than ten years' standing.⁷
29. And a monk who is possessed of six further qualities may ordain ... a novice may attend him; if he is competent to tend or get another to tend a pupil or one who shares a cell who is ill, to allay or get another to allay dissatisfaction that has arisen, to dispel or get another to dispel, by means of Dhamma, remorse that has arisen, if he knows what is an offence, if he knows the removal of an offence, if he is ... of more than ten years' standing.¹
30. And a monk who is possessed of six further qualities may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if he is competent to make a pupil or one who shares a cell train in the training regarding the fundamentals of conduct, to lead him in the training regarding the fundamentals of the Brahma-faring, to lead him in what pertains to Dhamma, to lead him in what pertains to Discipline, to discuss or get another to discuss, by means of Dhamma, a false view that has arisen, if he is of ... more than ten years standing.²
31. And a monk who is possessed of six further qualities may ordain ... a novice may attend him: if he knows what is an offence, if he knows what is not an offence, if he knows what is a slight offence, if he knows what is a serious offence, if the two Pātimokkhas in full have been properly handed down to him, properly sectioned, properly

⁵ Kd.1.37.5. ⁶ Kd.1.37.7. ⁷ Kd.1.37.9. ¹ Kd.1.37.11. ² Kd.1.37.13.

BD.6.217

regulated, properly investigated clause by clause and in respect of the linguistic form, if he is ... of more than ten years' standing.³

32. Six suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.⁴

33. Six suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.⁵

Concluded are the Sextets

ITS SUMMARY

Irreverences, and reverences, trained in, and "proper courses" too,
 Originations, and also cuttings down, ways, and about advantage, /
 And "at mosts", six nights,
 robe-material, and dyes,
 Six too from body and mind,
 as well as six from speech and mind, /
 And from body, speech and mind,
 (formal) acts, and also dispute,
 Censure, and in length,
 breadth, and about guidance, /
 Supplementary layings down, taking, and similarly taking with one,
 Adepts, one who encourages,
 faith, and in regard to moral habit,
 Ill, fundamentals of conduct,
 offence, not legally valid, legally valid.

7. SEPTETS

Prv.7.7.1

1. Seven offences.¹
2. Seven classes of offence.²
3. Seven matters that are trained in.³
4. Seven "proper courses".⁴
5. Seven carryings out on the acknowledgement of are not legally valid.⁵
6. Seven carryings out on the acknowledgement of are legally valid.⁶

³ Kd.1.37.15. ⁴ Vin.2.242. ⁵ Vin.2.242. ¹ At Vin.5.117 these two items appear to form the two members of one dyad. Why do they not here, nor "five offences, five classes of offence" do likewise? See also Vin.5.91. ² See previous note. ³ See Vin.5.91. ⁴ Add Nuns' Bi-Ss.13 to the six given at Vin.5.133. ⁵ Vin.2.83. ⁶ Vin.2.83.

7. There is no offence in going to seven (classes of people) if the business can be done in seven days.⁷
8. Seven advantages for the expert in Discipline.⁸
9. Seven “at mosts”.⁹
10. It is to be forfeited at sunrise on the seventh day.¹⁰
11. Seven decidings.¹¹
12. Seven (formal) acts.¹²
13. Seven raw grains.¹³
14. In breadth seven inside.¹⁴
15. Seven supplementary layings down for a group-meal.¹⁵
16. After one has accepted medicines they may be used as a store for at most seven days.¹⁶
17. Taking a robe that has been made up he goes away.¹
18. Taking with him a robe that has been made up he goes away.²
19. There is not an offence of a monk’s that should be seen.³
20. There is an offence of a monk’s that should be seen.⁴
21. There is an offence of a monk’s for which amends should be made.⁵
22. Seven suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.⁶
23. Seven suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.⁷
24. A monk who is possessed of seven qualities is an expert on Discipline: if he knows what is an offence, if he knows what is not an offence; if he knows what is a slight offence, if he knows what is a serious offence; if, possessed of moral habit,⁸ he lives controlled by the control of the Pātimokkha; if, possessed of right conduct and resort, seeing danger in the slightest faults, he, undertaking them, trains himself in the rules of training; if he is one who acquires at will, without trou-

Vin.5.135

BD.6.218

⁷ In Kd.3.7. ⁸ To those enumerated in the Pentads add “the Observance and the invitation are deposited in him”, Vin-a.1341. ⁹ The commentator has not decided which of the examples he enumerates at Vin-a.1340 are to be taken up here. See above, BD.6.215, n.3.
¹⁰ Bu-NP.29.2. ¹¹ Vin.4.207. ¹² Commentary is silent. Perhaps here one should take the formal acts for not seeing an offence and for not acknowledging one as two formal acts, and combine them as in the Sextets. ¹³ Vin.4.264, and see BD.1.83, n.4. ¹⁴ Bu-Ss.6, Bu-Ss.2, Bu-Ss.1. ¹⁵ Bu-Pc.32. ¹⁶ Bu-NP.23. ¹ Kd.7.2.1. ² Kd.7.3.1. ³ According to Vin-a.1341 these are three septets and occur in the Campeyyakakkhandhaka, i.e. Kd.8.5.
⁴ See previous note. ⁵ See previous note. ⁶ Vin.2.242. ⁷ Vin.2.242. ⁸ For this and the three following qualities, Cf. e.g. MN.v.

ble, without difficulty, the four meditations that are of the purest mentality—abiding in ease here and now; and if, by the destruction of the cankers, he, having realized here and now by his own super-knowledge the freedom of mind and the freedom through wisdom that are cankerless, enters and abides therein.

25. And if a monk is possessed of seven further qualities he is an expert on Discipline: if he knows what is an offence ... if he knows what is a serious offence; if he is one who has heard much, remembers what he has heard, stores up what he has heard—those things, lovely in the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending which, with the meaning and the spirit declare the Brahma-faring wholly fulfilled, perfectly purified, such things are much heard by him, borne in mind, familiarized by speech, pondered over in the mind, and are well penetrated by right view⁹; if he is one who acquires at will ... enters and abides therein.
26. And if a monk is possessed of seven further qualities he is an expert on Discipline: ... if he knows what is a serious offence; if the two Pātimokkhas have been properly handed down to him in detail, properly sectioned, properly regulated, properly investigated clause by clause and in respect of the linguistic form; if he is one who acquires at will ... enters and abides therein.
27. And if a monk is possessed of seven further qualities he is an expert on Discipline: if he knows ... what is a serious offence; if he recollects a variety of former habitations, that is to say one birth and two births ...¹ ... thus he recollects a variety of former habitations in all their modes and in detail; if with deva-like vision surpassing that of men, he sees beings as they are passing hence ...² ... thus with the deva-like vision surpassing that of men does he see beings as they are passing hence and coming to be—mean, excellent, fair, foul, and he comprehends that beings are in a good bourn, in a bad bourn according to kamma; and if, by the destruction of the cankers ... he enters and abides therein.
28. And if a monk is possessed of seven further qualities ... he shines as an expert on Discipline ... (here and following read he shines as an expert on Discipline instead of he is an expert on Discipline, and repeat the foregoing paragraphs exactly) ... abides therein.

BD.6.219

Vin.5.136

⁹ Cf. Vin.2.95, Vin.2.249, MN.1.356. ¹ See Bu-Pj.1.1.6. ² See Bu-Pj.1.1.7.

29. Seven bad conditions: if one is lacking in faith, is without conscience, is without shame, is one who has heard little, is lazy, is of muddled mindfulness, and is one weak in wisdom.³
30. Seven right conditions: if one has faith, is conscientious, is scrupulous, is one who has heard much, is one whose energy is stirred up, is one whose mindfulness is raised up, and is one full of wisdom.⁴

Concluded are the Septets

ITS SUMMARY

Offence, classes of offence, trained in, and “proper courses” too,
 Not legally valid, and legally valid, and no offence if within seven days, /
 Advantages, “at mosts,” sunrise, and about deciding,
 (Formal) acts, and raw grains, inside, for a group-meal, /
 For at most seven days, taking, and similarly taking with him,
 There is not, there is, and there is, not legally valid, and legally valid, /
 Four experts¹ on Discipline, and four shining monks,²
 And seven wrong conditions too, seven right conditions are taught.

BD.6.220

8. OCTETS

1. That monk should not be suspended for not seeing an offence by one possessed of eight advantages.³
2. That offence should be confessed even out of faith in others if they are possessed of eight advantages.⁴
3. Eight “up to the third time”.⁵
4. In eight ways does one bring a family into disrepute.⁶
5. Eight headings for the accruing of robe-material.⁷
6. Eight headings for the withdrawing of the kaṭhina (privileges).⁸

Prv.7.8.1

³ Five of these items are at Kd.1.36.6. For the seven see AN.iv.145. ⁴ Five of these are given at Kd.1.36.7. The seven are at DN.iii.252, DN.iii.282, AN.iv.145, Vb.349. ¹ Meaning four groups each, of experts and of shining monks, each with seven qualities. ² See previous note.

³ Kd.10.1.6, Kd.10.1.7. ⁴ Kd.10.1.8. ⁵ Bu-Ss.10, Bu-Ss.11, Bu-Ss.12, Bu-Ss.13, Nuns' Bi-Ss.10, Bi-Ss.11, Bi-Ss.12, Bi-Ss.13. ⁶ Bu-Ss.13.2. ⁷ Kd.8.32.1.2. ⁸ Kd.7.1.7.

7. Eight kinds of drinks.⁹
8. Devadatta, overcome and his mind controlled by eight bad conditions, is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya, staying there for an aeon, incurable.¹⁰
9. Eight things belonging to the world.¹¹
10. Eight important rules.¹²
11. Eight matters that should be confessed.¹³
12. Lying speech is eightfold.¹⁴
13. Eight factors for Observance.¹⁵
14. Eight factors for (going on) a message.¹⁶
15. Eight customs for members of other sects.¹⁷
16. Eight marvellous and wonderful things about the great ocean.¹⁸
17. Eight marvellous and wonderful things in this Dhamma and Discipline.¹
18. Eight “not left overs”,²
19. Eight “left overs”.³
20. It is to be forfeited on the eighth day at sunrise.⁴
21. Eight offences involving Defeat.⁵
22. Completing the eighth thing she should be expelled.⁶
23. By completing an eighth thing it is marked out even if not (actually) marked out.⁷
24. Ordination having eight formulas.⁸

Vin.5.137

BD.6.221

⁹ Kd.6.35.6. ¹⁰ As at Kd.17.4.7. ¹¹ DN.iii.260, AN.iv.156f.; see GS.iv.107, n.2. ¹² Vin.2.255, Vin.4.51, AN.iv.276. ¹³ Perhaps referring only to the eight Pāṭidesaniyas for Nuns. ¹⁴ This must refer to Bu-Pc.4, Bu-Pc.2, Bu-Pc.1: definition of telling a conscious lie. ¹⁵ The eightfold sīla; given at AN.iv.248ff. in detail, and in brief at Vin-a.1342 = Uttaravinicchaya verse 651; see Vin.5.213. ¹⁶ Vin.2.201. ¹⁷ Referred to the Mahākhandhaka by Vin-a.1342, probably to Kd.1.38. ¹⁸ Vin.2.237f. ¹ Vin.2.238. ² Vin.4.82. ³ Vin.4.82. ⁴ Bu-NP.23. ⁵ See BD.3.175, n.4. ⁶ Nuns' Bi-Pj.8. ⁷ The Commentary is of no help here. I believe this clause to refer to Bu-Ss.6—on marking out a site for a hut. ⁸ Again the Commentary is of no help. This phrase, aṭṭhavācīkā upasampadā, does not appear to occur in the first four volumes of the Vinaya. The reference may be to Kd.20.22, the ordination of a nun through a messenger. Uttaravinicchaya 648 says: having eight formulas by a messenger for nuns means an eightfold ordination with a formal act having a motion that is followed by a resolution made three times.

25. (Seats) should be risen from for eight nuns.⁹
26. A seat should be given to eight nuns.¹⁰
27. The woman lay disciple asked for eight boons.¹¹
28. A monk who is possessed of eight qualities may be agreed upon as an exhorter of nuns.¹²
29. Eight advantages for an expert in Discipline.¹³
30. Eight “at mosts”.¹⁴
31. A monk against whom a (formal) act for specific depravity has been carried out must act rightly in regard to eight things.¹⁵
32. Eight suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.¹⁶
33. Eight suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.¹⁷

Concluded are the Octets

ITS SUMMARY

Not that monk, and in others,
 up to the third time, bringing into disrepute, Headings, removal of the kaṭhina (privileges), drinks, and overcome by, / Belonging to the world, important rules, to be confessed lying,
 Observances, factors for a message, other sects, and in the sea, /
 Wonderful, not left over, left over, to be forfeited,
 Defeats, the eighth thing, not marked out, ordination, /
 And too rising from a seat, boon, and about an exhorter Advantages, “at mosts,” acting in regard to eight things

BD.6.222

⁹ Reading above is pacuṭṭhātabbam. The reference is to Kd.20.18 which, however, reads paṭibāhitabbam, should not be reserved. ¹⁰ Vin.2.274. ¹¹ Vin.2.242f. ¹² Prv.21.2 and see Vin.2.264. ¹³ Add to his five advantages given in the Pentads that Observance, Invitation, and the Order’s (formal) acts may be deposited in him, Vin-a.1342. ¹⁴ Of the fourteen given at Vin-a.1340 the first six form a sextet. The Commentary does not specify which further ones are intended here. ¹⁵ Vin-a.1342 says this refers to the Samathakkhandhaka (Kd.14) and begins with “he must not suspend the Observance for an ordinary monk, nor Invitation”. I cannot trace the exact reference. ¹⁶ Vin.2.242f. ¹⁷ Vin.2.243.

Not legally valid, and legally valid:
the Octets are well proclaimed.

9. NONADS

Prv.7.9.1

1. Nine occasions for ill-will.¹
2. Nine (ways of) averting ill-will.²
3. Nine matters that are trained in.³
4. Nine offences at once.⁴
5. An Order is split by nine (monks).⁵
6. Nine sumptuous foods.⁶
7. In (eating) nine kinds of meat there is an offence of wrong--doing.⁷
8. Nine recitals of the Pātimokkha.⁸
9. Nine “at mosts”.
10. Nine things rooted in craving.⁹
11. Ninefold pride.¹
12. Nine robes may be allotted.²
13. Nine robes should not be assigned.
14. In length nine spans of the accepted span.³
15. Nine gifts are not legally valid.⁴
16. Nine recipients⁵ are not legally valid.
17. Nine enjoyments⁶ are not legally valid.

¹ Given at Vin.5.168, and at DN.iii.262, AN.iv.408. ² Given at Vin.5.168, and at DN.iii.262, AN.iv.408. ³ In regard to the occasions for ill-will, Vin-a.1342. ⁴ Quoting Vin.3.186 and referring to Bu-Ss.1-8. ⁵ Referring to Vin.2.204. ⁶ Given at Vin.4.88. ⁷ Vin.1.218ff.
⁸ Five ways of reciting it are to be found at Vin.1.112. ⁹ Given at DN.ii.58, AN.iv.400, Vb.390=Vin-a.1342f. ¹ Given at Vb.389f. ² Vin-a.1343: such as the three robes and a cloth for the rains; see Vin.1.296f. ³ Bu-Pc.92.1. ⁴ Vin-a.1343 says (a gift meant for an Order) is changed for another Order, a shrine or an individual; if meant for a shrine it is given to another shrine or an Order or an individual; if meant for an individual it is changed over to another individual or an Order or a shrine. ⁵ Of these gifts, according to Vin-a.1343.
⁶ Of these gifts, according to Vin-a.1343.

18. Three gifts are legally valid; three recipients are legally valid⁷; three enjoyments⁸ are legally valid.
19. Nine (ways of) making known are not legally valid.⁹
20. Nine (ways of) making known are legally valid.¹⁰
21. Two nonads for a (formal) act that is not legally valid.¹¹
22. Two nonads for a (formal) act that is legally valid.¹²
23. Nine suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.¹³
24. Nine suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.¹⁴

BD.6.223

Vin.5.138

Concluded are the Nonads

ITS SUMMARY

Occasions for ill-will, averting, trained in, and at once,
 And is split, and sumptuous, meat, recital, and “at mosts”, / Craving, pride, allottings,
 and assigned, spans,
 Gifts, recipients, enjoyments, and again the threefold when legally valid, /
 Not legally valid, makings known that are legally valid, and two nonads twice,
 Suspensions of the Pātimokkha that are and are not legally valid.

10. DECADES

Prv.7.10.1

1. Ten occasions for ill-will.¹
2. Ten (ways of) averting ill-will.²
3. Ten matters that are trained in.

⁷ Vin-a.1343 says tending only to an Order, to a shrine or to an individual, one gives to the relevant one only. Each is one of the three recipients in the enjoyment of the gift.

⁸ Vin-a.1343 says tending only to an Order, to a shrine or to an individual, one gives to the relevant one only. Each is one of the three recipients in the enjoyment of the gift. ⁹ Kd.14.2.

¹⁰ Kd.14.3. ¹¹ Vin-a.1343 refers this to the first rule of training in the Ovādavagga, i.e. to Bu-Pc.21, and probably 3.2 there. ¹² See previous note. ¹³ Vin.2.243. ¹⁴ Vin.2.243

¹ AN.v.150. ² AN.v.150.

4. A wrong view founded on ten (tenets).³
5. A right view founded on ten (tenets).⁴
6. Ten (ways of) taking up an extreme view.⁵
7. Ten wrongnesses.⁶
8. Ten rightnesses.⁷
9. Ten ways of unskilled action.⁸
10. Ten ways of skilled action.⁹
11. Ten distributions of voting tickets are not legally valid.¹⁰
12. Ten distributions of voting tickets are legally valid.¹¹
13. Ten rules of training for novices.¹²
14. If he is possessed of ten qualities a novice should be expelled.¹³
15. If he is possessed of ten qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not put a limit to his own speech, if he does not put a limit to the speech of another (person), if, not having put a limit to his own speech, to the speech of another (person), he has a (formal) act carried out not according to rule, not with his acknowledgement,¹⁴ if does not know what is an offence, if he does not know what is the root of an offence, if he does not know the arising ... the stopping ... the course leading to the stopping of an offence.
16. If he is possessed of ten qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he puts a limit to his own speech ... if he knows what is an offence ... the course leading to the stopping of an offence.
17. And if he is possessed of ten further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is a legal question ... the root of a legal question ... the arising ... the stopping ... the course leading to the stopping of a legal question, if he does not know the

BD.6.224

³ N'atthi dinnam, etc. according to Vin-a.1343; found frequently, e.g. at DN.i.55, AN.i.268f.

⁴ E.g. AN.i.269. ⁵ antaggāhikā diṭṭhi, mentioned at Vin.1.172, see BD.4.226, n. These views begin with sassato loko according to Vin-a.1343, and occur frequently in the Pali Canon, e.g. at AN.v.193, MN.i.157, though not under the title of antaggāhikā diṭṭhi. ⁶ Add wrong or right knowledge, ñāṇa, and freedom, vimutti, to the eight factors of the Way, e.g. AN.v.240.

⁷ Add wrong or right knowledge, ñāṇa, and freedom, vimutti, to the eight factors of the Way, e.g. AN.v.240. ⁸ DN.iii.269. ⁹ DN.iii.269. ¹⁰ Vin.2.85. ¹¹ Vin.2.85. ¹² Vin.1.83f.

¹³ Vin.1.85. ¹⁴ These five clauses form one pentad at Vin.5.130, and the next five another pentad.

subject ... the provenance ... the laying down ... the supplementary laying down ... the sequence of the connecting words.¹

18. If he is possessed of ten qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he knows what is a legal question ... the sequence of the connecting words.
19. And if he is possessed of ten further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is a motion, if he does not know the carrying out of a motion, if he is not skilled in what comes first, if he is not skilled in what comes afterwards, and if he is one unknowing of the (right) time, if he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence, if he does not know a slight and a serious offence, if he does not know what is an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with, if he does not know what is a very bad offence and one that is not very bad, if he has not learnt properly from a succession of teachers, has not attended properly, has not reflected on properly.² Vin.5.139
20. If he is possessed of ten qualities an expert on, Discipline is reckoned as clever: if he knows what is a motion ... if he has learnt properly from a succession of teachers, has attended properly, has reflected on properly. BD.6.225
21. And if he is possessed of ten further qualities an expert on Discipline is reckoned as ignorant: if he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence, if he does not know a slight and a serious offence, if he does not know what is an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with, if he does not know what is a very bad offence and one that is not very bad, and if the two Pātimokkhas in full have not been properly handed down to him, not properly sectioned, not properly regulated, not properly investigated clause by clause and in respect of the linguistic form, if he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence ... if he does not know what is a very bad offence and one that is not very bad, and if he is not skilled in investigating a legal question.¹

¹ As at Vin.5.130, two pentads. ² As at Vin.5.130f., again two pentads. ¹ Forming two pentads at Vin.5.131.

22. If he is possessed of ten qualities ... clever: if he knows what is an offence ... and if he is skilled in investigating a legal question.
23. A monk possessed of ten qualities may be agreed upon for a referendum.²
24. Dependent on ten reasons a rule of training for disciples is laid down by the Tathāgata.³
25. Ten perils in entering a king's women's quarters.⁴
26. Ten objects as (alms-) gifts.⁵
27. Ten gems.⁶
28. A tenfold Order of monks.⁷
29. One may ordain through a group of ten (monks).⁸
30. Ten refuse-rag-robles.⁹
31. Wearers of ten colours for robes.¹⁰
32. One may wear an extra robe for at most ten days.¹¹
33. Ten (colours of) semen.¹²
34. Ten (kinds of) women.¹³
35. Ten (kinds of) wives.¹⁴
36. Ten points promulgated at Vesālī.¹⁵
37. Ten individuals who are not to be greeted.¹
38. Ten ways of cursing.²
39. One brings slander in ten ways.³
40. Ten lodgings.⁴
41. They asked for ten boons.⁵
42. Ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are not legally valid.⁶

BD.6.226

² Vin.2.95. ³ Given e.g. at Vin.3.21. ⁴ Vin.4.159. ⁵ Food, drink, etc., as at DN.iii.258, MN.iii.205, AN.iv.239, AN.v.271. ⁶ ratana, taken by Vin-a.1344 to be those given at Vin.2.238. Uttaravinicchaya 281 takes the view that the ten are drink, food, clothes and so on. ⁷ Vin.1.319; Cf. Vin.1.195. ⁸ Vin.1.58; Cf. Vin.1.319. ⁹ See the two pentads at Vin.5.129. ¹⁰ See e.g. Vin.1.306, Vin.2.267 where seven colours are mentioned for robes. Vin-a.1344 says "ten colours according to the Kurundiya. But the Mahā-aṭṭhakkathā says that to the nine allowable robes add the bathing cloth, or the vest (for nuns)". ¹¹ Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.1.2. ¹² Vin.3.112. ¹³ Vin.3.139. ¹⁴ Vin.3.139. ¹⁵ Kd.22.1.8. ¹ Kd.16.6.5. ² Bu-Pc.2. ³ Bu-Pc.3. ⁴ senāsanāni. The ten, or rather eleven, as given at Vin-a.1344 should be compared with the ten items given in a definition of seyyā at Vin.4.41 of which eight are in common. ⁵ Vin-a.1344 says Visākhā asked for eight (see Vin.5.137: "the woman lay disciple asked for eight boons"), King Suddhodana for one (Vin.1.82f.) and Jīvaka for one (Vin.1.280). ⁶ Vin.2.243.

43. Ten suspensions of the Pātimokkha are legally valid.⁷
44. Ten advantages from conjei.⁸
45. Ten (kinds of) flesh are not allowed.⁹
46. Ten “at mosts”.¹⁰
47. An experienced competent monk who is of ten years’ standing may let go forth,¹¹ may ordain,¹² may give guidance,¹³ a novice may attend him.¹⁴
48. An experienced competent nun who is of ten years’ standing¹⁵ may let go forth ... a woman novice may attend her.¹⁶
49. Agreement to ordain¹⁷ may be accepted by an experienced competent nun who is of ten years’ standing.
50. Training should be given to a girl who has been married for ten years.¹⁸

Concluded are the Decades

ITS SUMMARY

Ill-will, averting, matters, wrong (view), and right (view), taking up an extreme (view),
 And wrongnesses too, rightnesses, unskilled, and also skilled, /
 Not legally valid, and legally valid tickets, novices, and expelling,
 Speech, and legal question too, motion, and slight too, / Slight (and) serious these:
 discriminate between the dark and the bright,
 And referendum, and training, and women’s quarters, objects, /
 Gems, and tenfold,
 likewise ordination,
 Refuse-rags, and wearers,
 ten days, semen, women, /

Vin.5.140

BD.6.227

⁷ Vin.2.243. ⁸ Vin.1.221. ⁹ Vin.1.218ff. ¹⁰ See the list at Vin-a.1340. ¹¹ (?). ¹² See Kd.1.31.8 ¹³ Kd.1.35.2. ¹⁴ See Kd.1.36.17. ¹⁵ At Vin.4.329 it is said that no nun should ordain while she is of less than twelve years’ standing. ¹⁶ Not traced. ¹⁷ vuṭṭhāpana, ordination by nuns only. See BD.3, Introduction, p.xlivff., BD.3, Introduction, p.liii. See also Nuns’ Bi-Pc.75, though here again the nun has to be of twelve, not ten years’ standing. ¹⁸ See Nuns’ Bi-Pc.65, Bu-Pc.66. Again both these rules speak of twelve years, and not of ten.

Wives, ten points, not to be greeted,
 and about cursing,
 And slander too, and lodgings, and boons, not legally valid, /
 Legally valid, conjei, and flesh,
 “at mosts,” monk, nun,
 Ordination, married girl:
 the Decades are well proclaimed.

11. ELEVENS

Prv.7.11.1

1. Eleven individuals who, if they have not been ordained, should not be ordained; if they have been ordained, they should be expelled.¹
2. Eleven (kinds of) shoes are not allowable.²
3. Eleven (kinds of) bowls are not allowable.³
4. Eleven (kinds of) robes are not allowable.⁴
5. Eleven “up to the third time”.⁵
6. Eleven things which are stumbling-blocks (preventing women from becoming) nuns should be asked about.⁶
7. Eleven (kinds of) robes may be allotted.¹
8. Eleven (kinds of) robes may not be assigned.²
9. On the eleventh day at sunrise³ it is an offence of expiation involving forfeiture.
10. Eleven (kinds of) “blocks” are allowable.⁴
11. Eleven (kinds of) buckles are allowable.⁵

¹ Kd.1.60–68. ² Vin-a.1344 says ten made with gems (Kd.5.8.3) and the wooden shoe (Kd.5.6.4). ³ Kd.15.8.2, Kd.15.9.1. ⁴ Kd.8.29.1. ⁵ E.g. Nuns’ Bi-Pj.7, Nuns’ Bi-Ss.10, Bi-Ss.11, Bi-Ss.12, Bi-Ss.13, Bi-Ss.11, Nuns’ Bi-Pc.36, and Monks’ Bu-Pc.68. See also Vin.5.136 in the Eights. ⁶ This appears to refer to the opening sentence of Kd.20.17, though twenty-four things called stumbling-blocks, beginning with these eleven, are, in fact, enumerated there.

¹ Nine are given at Vin.1.297 (Kd.8.20.2). To these Vin-a.1345 adds the bathing cloth (for nuns, see Vin.1.292f., Vin.2.272) and (the nuns’) vest (Nuns’ Bi-Pc.96). In neither passage is allotting mentioned. Cf. Uttaravinicchaya p.282. ² Nine of those allotted may not be assigned. Vin-a.1345 adds gaṇṭhikā, “block” (see Kd.15.29.3) and buckle, vidha (Kd.15.29.2).

³ Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.2, Bu-NP.21, Bu-NP.23, Bu-NP.29, Nuns’ Bi-NP.1, for example. ⁴ Kd.15.29.3.

⁵ Kd.15.29.2.

12. Eleven (kinds of) earth are not allowable.⁶
13. Eleven (kinds of) earth are allowable.⁷
14. Eleven nullifications of guidance.⁸
15. Eleven individuals are not to be greeted.⁹
16. Eleven “at mosts”.¹⁰
17. They asked for eleven boons.¹¹
18. Eleven defects in boundaries.¹²
19. Eleven perils to be expected for an individual who reviles and abuses.¹³
20. If the freedom of mind that is loving-kindness¹⁴ is practised, developed, made much of, made a basis, made a vehicle, persisted in, become familiar with and well established eleven advantages¹⁵ are to be expected: one sleeps in comfort, wakes in comfort, dreams no evil dream,¹ is dear to human beings, dear to non-human beings, devatās guard him, fire poison and weapons do not affect him, his mind is easily concentrated, the expression on his face is serene, he does his (karmic) time unconfused, and if he penetrates no higher (to arahantship than the attainment of loving-kindness) he reaches the Brahma-world (on deceasing from this life). If the freedom of mind that is loving-kindness is practised ... well established, these eleven advantages are to be expected.

BD.6.228

Concluded are the Elevens

⁶ In the paṭhavīsikkhāpada according to Vin-a.1345. Vin-a.759 on Bu-Pc.10 refers to this as paṭhavikhaṇasikkhāpada. But no kinds of earth mentioned there are said to be allowable or unallowable; see Vin-a.759 however. ⁷ See previous note. ⁸ Five from a preceptor, six from a teacher, Kd.1.36.1. ⁹ Ten occur in the Decads; see Kd.16.6.5. Vin-a.1345 says these are meant together with the agga, and all are to be found in the Senāsanakkhandhaka (Kd.16). Perhaps the agga signifies the bhattagga in the second pentad “not to be greeted”, Vin.5.205. ¹⁰ The paramāni also occur in the Sextets, Septets, Octads, Nonads and Decads. See also the fourteen on Vin.5.146 below. ¹¹ In addition to the ten boons on Vin.5.139, there is also the boon Mahāpajāpatī asked for, Kd.20.3.1, not granted by the Buddha. ¹² Vin-a.1345 says beginning with “they agreed on too small a boundary” will be handed down in the Kammavagga (see Vin.5.220–223), i.e. at Vin.5.221 in [5] where eleven features are given. See also Kaṅkhāvitaranī 4f. ¹³ AN.v.317, which Vin-a.1345 refers to as a Buddhavacana, gives these perils. ¹⁴ AN.v.342; also at Ja.ii.61, Mi.198. ¹⁵ Eight are given at AN.iv.150, but are not in the Octets above. ¹ Or, sees no evil (in) a dream.

ITS SUMMARY

Should be expelled, and shoes,
 and bowls, and robes,
 The third, and should be asked about,
 allotting, assigning, / Sunrise, blocks, buckles,
 and not allowable, allowable,
 Guidance, and also not to be greeted,
 “at mosts,” and boons,
 And defects in boundaries, reviling, loving-kindness—
 The Elevens are done.

*Concluded is As to GradationITS SUMMARY

The Units, as well as the Dyads, and the Triads, Tetrads, Pentads,
 Six, seven, eights, and Nonads,
 ten, and the Elevens, /
 For the welfare of all beings,
 by Such a One who made known Dhamma
 Were the stainless Gradations taught by the Great Hero. /

8. ANSWERS ABOUT THE BEGINNING OF OBSERVANCE

¹ What is the beginning of a (formal) act for Observance, what is in the middle, what is the ending? What is the beginning of a (formal) act for Invitation ... What is the beginning of a (formal) act of censure ... of guidance ... of banishment ... of reconciliation ... of suspension ... of imposing probation, of sending back to the beginning, of inflicting mānatta (discipline), of rehabilitation, what is the beginning of a (formal) act for ordination, what is in the middle, what is the ending? What is the beginning of a nullification of a (formal) act of censure ... of guidance ... of banishment ... of reconciliation ... of suspension ... What is the beginning of a verdict of innocence ... of a verdict of past insanity ... of a decision for specific depravity ... of a covering over (as) with grass ... What is the beginning of an agreement as to an exhorter of nuns ... of an agreement to be away, separated from the three robes ... of an agreement as to a rug² ... of an agreement as to a silver-remover³ ... as to an assigner of outer cloaks⁴ ... as to an assigner of bowls⁵ ... as to a walking-staff⁶ ... as to string⁷ ... as to a walking-staff and string,⁸ what is in the middle, what is the ending?

What is the beginning of a (formal) act for Observance, what is in the middle, what is the ending? The “being all together”¹ is the beginning of a (formal) act for Observance, carrying out² is in the middle, the conclusion is the ending. What is the beginning of a (formal) act for Invitation ... ? The “being all together” is the beginning ... the conclusion is the ending. What is the beginning of a (formal) act of censure ... of guidance ... of banishment ... of reconciliation ... of suspension ... of imposing probation ... of sending back to the beginning ... of inflicting mānatta (discipline) ... of rehabilitation ... The matter and the individual are the beginning, a motion is in the middle, a resolution is the ending.³ What is the beginning for a (formal) act of ordination ... ? The individual is the beginning of a (formal) act for ordination, a motion is in the middle, a resolution is the ending.

¹ Note by Sujato: In Horner's edition this chapter and the next were regarded as sections of the same chapter. I have adjusted this to follow the more logical structure of the Mahāsaṅgīti edition. Since we have already divided her Chapter IV into two, the following chapters are numbered two greater than in her edition. Also see note on Prv.4. Horner's note on this point, which is now rendered obsolete, was: "It would seem that this title has been adopted by Oldenberg from Vin-a.1346, and refers to [1] only, [2] being called Atthavasappakaraṇa."

² Bu-NP.14. ³ Bu-NP.18. ⁴ Vin.2.177 (Kd.16.21.3). ⁵ Bu-NP.22.2.1. ⁶ Kd.15.24.2. For this and next see above Prv.7.3 (towards end). ⁷ Kd.15.24.3. ⁸ Kd.15.24.3.

BD.6.231

What is the beginning of a nullification of a (formal) act of censure ... of guidance ... of banishment ... of reconciliation ... of suspension, what is in the middle, what is the ending? Proper conduct is the beginning, a motion is in the middle, a resolution is the ending.⁴

Vin.5.143

What is the beginning of a verdict of innocence ... of a verdict of past insanity ... of a decision for specific depravity ... of a covering over (as) with grass ... of an agreement as to an exhorter of nuns ... of an agreement as to a walking-staff and string, what is in the middle, what is the ending? The matter and the individual are the beginning, a motion is in the middle, a resolution is the ending.

¹ See Kd.2.14. ² Vin-a.1346 speaks of pubbakiccaṃ katvā, perhaps referring to Kd.2.20.

³ See Kd.11.1-8. ⁴ Kd.11.5,6.

9. EXPOSITION OF REASONS

Prv.9.2.1
BD.6.232

Founded on ten reasons a rule of training is laid down by the Tathāgata for disciples:¹

1. for the excellence of the Order,
2. for the comfort of the Order,
3. for the restraint of evil minded individuals,
4. for the living in comfort of well behaved monks,
5. for the control of the cankers belonging to the here-now,
6. for the combating of the cankers belonging to a future state,
7. for the benefit of non-believers,
8. for the increase in the number of believers,
9. for the maintenance of True Dhamma,
10. for the furthering of Discipline.

That which is the excellence of the Order is the comfort of the Order. That which is the comfort of the Order is for the restraint of evil minded individuals. That which is for the restraint of evil minded individuals is for the living in comfort of well behaved monks ... That which is for the maintenance of True Dhamma is for the furthering of Discipline.

That which is the excellence of the Order is the comfort of the Order. That which is the excellence of the Order is for the restraint of evil minded individuals ... That which is the excellence of the Order is for the furthering of Discipline.

That which is the comfort of the Order is for the restraint of evil minded individuals ... That which is the comfort of the Order is for the furthering of Discipline.

¹ Vin.3.21, in Bu-Pj.1; also Vin.4.213, in Nuns' Bi-Pj.5.

That which is the comfort of the Order is the excellence of the Order ...

That which is for the furthering of Discipline is the excellence of the Order ... That which is for the furthering of Discipline is for the maintenance of True Dhamma.

THIS IS ITS KEY

A hundred meanings,¹ a hundred clauses, and two hundred expressions, Four hundred knowledges are in the exposition of the “reasons”.

BD.6.233

Concluded is the Exposition of the Reasons

Concluded is the Great Division²

ITS SUMMARY

At first there are eight for questions,³ and eight again in the conditions,⁴
These are sixteen for monks and sixteen for nuns. / Consecutive repetitions,⁵ Synopsis,⁶ and also the Gradation,⁷ Invitation⁸ and about the reasons:
the classification of the Great Analysis. /

¹ Vin-a.1346f. says “every beginning word (mūla) of these ten words (pada), from its tenfold linking (with the other words) is called ‘a hundred words’ (padasata). There are a hundred meanings (attha) on account of each later word, and a hundred clauses (dhamma) on account of each earlier one ... A hundred expressions (nirutti) on account of expressions for illuminating the meaning, a hundred expressions on account of expressions for the truth of the clauses (dhammabhūtanam) (make) two hundred expressions. In the two hundred meanings are a hundred knowledges, in the hundred clauses are a hundred knowledges, in the two hundred expressions are two hundred knowledges—so four hundred knowledges are to be found.” ² Vin-a.1347 takes this to mean “the Commentary on the Mahāvagga”.

The Mahāvagga is at Vin.1.1–360; its Commentary occupies the whole of Commentary Vol. V. But the uddana that now follows refers to all the Parivāra material up to here, except there is no catch-word for the short Chapter V. ³ Above Prv.1.1–Prv.1.8, Prv.2.1–Prv.2.8.

⁴ Above Prv.1.9–Prv.1.16, Prv.2.9–Prv.2.16. ⁵ peyyāla-antarabhedā refers, I believe, to the two Sections of Prv.4 and Prv.5 above. Regarding these as one heading in the Mahāvagga, and allowing for the absence of reference to Prv.6, the above total would amount to the seven headings required up to this point. ⁶ See previous note. ⁷ Here the reading is ekuttarikam; in last line of Vin.5.141 it is ekuttarikā. The “conclusion” however on BD.6.141 reads ekuttarakam.

⁸ pavāraṇā instead of, as at beginning of Prv.9, uposatha.

10. COLLECTION OF STANZAS

Prv.10.1.1
BD.6.234
Vin.5.144

“Arranging the robe over one shoulder, stretching forth the joined palms in salutation, Hoping for what,
for what purpose are you come here?”¹

“The ‘layings-down’ in the two Disciplines
that come up for recitation on Observance days,
How many are these rules of training?
In how many towns laid down?”² “Fortunate for you is the emergence,³ judiciously do you inquire,

I will tell you truly
(so that you may be) skilled herein.”⁴

“The ‘layings-down’ in the two Disciplines
that come up for recitation on Observance days—
They are three hundred and fifty

¹ Vin-a.1346 says the Sammāsambuddha is here speaking to the Ven. Upāli. ² The Commentary ascribes this stanza, imaṃ gātham, to the Ven. Upāli—printed as prose in the text.

³ bhaddako te ummaṅgo, which Vin-a.1348 puts into the plural: bhaddakā te pañhā, fortunate are these questions (or, for you, te, the questions are fortunate). “It is ‘emergence’, ummaṅga, because the questions are lasting, having emerged out of the darkness of ignorance”. On the other hand, the Dictionary meaning given to ummaṅgā in this passage is “unlucky”, on the analogy of ummagga. Also, the word appears in close proximity Above to bhaddaka, lucky or fortunate; but “unlucky” here seems to me to give no sense. ⁴ The Commentary, in ascribing this verse to the Buddha, says that Upāli asked all these questions in the time of the Buddha, and the Lord replied. At the end of the Council Mahākassapa asked and Upāli replied.

laid down in seven towns.”

“In which seven towns were they laid down?
Please (give) me the answer to that.
Listening to what is said, I will follow it so that it may be for our welfare.”

“The layings down were only in Vesālī, Rājagaha and Sāvattthī, at Āḷavī
And Kosambī, and among the Sakyans and among the Bhaggas.”¹

BD.6.235

“How many were laid down in Vesālī?
How many made in Rājagaha?
At Sāvattthī how many were there?
How many likewise at Āḷavī?

“How many were laid down at Kosambī?
How many spoken among the Sakyans?
How many laid down among the Bhaggas?
Tell that to me who have asked.”

“Ten were laid down in Vesālī, twenty-one made in Rājagaha,
Two hundred and ninety-four were all made in Sāvattthī,

“Six were laid down in Āḷavī,
eight made in Kosambī,
Eight spoken among the Sakyans,
three laid down among the Bhaggas.

“Listen to those laid down in Vesālī as they really are:

Intercourse,² (human) being,³ further,⁴ extra,⁵ and black,⁶ “Fact,⁷ out-of-turn meal,⁸ cleansing the teeth,⁹ naked ascetic,¹⁰

¹ Verse cited at Vin-a.1305. ² Bu-Pj.1. ³ Bu-Pj.3. ⁴ Bu-Pj.4. ⁵ Bu-NP.1. ⁶ Bu-NP.12.
⁷ Bu-Pc.8. ⁸ Bu-Pc.33. ⁹ Bu-Pc.40. ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.41.

And reviling among the nuns:¹ these ten were made in Vesālī.

“Listen to those laid down in Rājagaha as they really are:

“Taking what has not been given,² and two in Rājagaha on an unfounded charge,³

“And two on schisms also,⁴ inner robe,⁵ silver,⁶ yarn,⁷ and on making look down,⁸ Almsfood procured,⁹ group-meal,¹⁰ at a wrong time,¹¹ and calling on,¹² bathing,¹³ under twenty.¹⁴

Vin.5.145

“Having given away a robe,¹⁵ giving directions¹⁶:
these were made in Rājagaha.
Mountain-top,¹⁷ walking,¹⁸ likewise by showing favouritism¹⁹—twenty-one.

“Listen to those laid down in Sāvattthī as they really are:

“Four Defeats, Formal Meetings of the Order come to sixteen.
And there are the two Undetermined,
twenty-four Forfeitures,
And a hundred and fifty-six minor matters were pronounced,

BD.6.236

“Ten blameworthy,²⁰ seventy-two Trainings²¹:
Two hundred and ninety-four²² were all made in Sāvattthī.

“Listen to those laid down in Āḷavī as they really are:

“Hut,²³ silk,²⁴ sleeping-place,²⁵ and on digging,²⁶ “You go devatā”²⁷

¹ Nuns' Bi-Pc.52. ² Bu-Pj.2. ³ Bu-Ss.8, Bu-Ss.9. ⁴ Bu-Ss.10, Bu-Ss.11. ⁵ Bu-NP.5.
⁶ Bu-NP.18. ⁷ Bu-NP.26. ⁸ Bu-Pc.13. ⁹ Bu-Pc.29. ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.32. ¹¹ Bu-Pc.37. ¹² Bu-Pc.46. ¹³ Bu-Pc.57. ¹⁴ Bu-Pc.65. ¹⁵ Bu-Pc.81. ¹⁶ Bu-Pd.2. ¹⁷ Nuns' Bi-Pc.10.
¹⁸ Nuns' Bi-Pc.39, Bu-Pc.40. ¹⁹ Nuns' Bi-Pc.81. ²⁰ gārayhā in Bu-Pd.1.3, Nuns' Bi-Pd.1-8.
²¹ Nos. Bu-Sk.51, Bu-Sk.55, Bu-Sk.56 having been laid down elsewhere. ²² The reading is cha ūnatīṇi satāni, six less than 300. The above reckoning appears to come to 284 however. But this would not accord with the final reckoning of 350 rules of training. ²³ Bu-Ss.6.
²⁴ Bu-NP.11. ²⁵ Bu-Pc.5. ²⁶ Bu-Pc.10. ²⁷ Bu-Pc.11 (in narrative, not in sikkhāpada).

And they sprinkled water that contained life:¹
these six were made in Ālavī.

“Listen to those laid down in Kosambī as they really are:

“Large vihāra,² difficult to speak to,³ evasion,⁴ door,⁵ and spirits,⁶ Disrespect,⁷ regarding a rule,⁸ and the eighth is on a milk drink.⁹ /

“Listen to those laid down among the Sakyans as they really are:

“Sheep’s wool,¹⁰ bowl,¹¹ and exhortation,¹² and medicine also,¹³
Needle,¹⁴ forest-gone¹⁵—these six at Kapilavatthu.
In water for cleansing,¹⁶ exhortation¹⁷ were pronounced among the nuns.

“Listen to those laid down among the Bhaggas as they really are:

“Kindling a fire to warm themselves,¹⁸
(soiled) with food,¹⁹ with lumps of boiled rice.²⁰

“Four Defeats, Formal Meetings of the Order come to seven,
Eight Forfeitures, thirty-two minor matters,
Two blameworthy, three Trainings—fifty-six—

BD.6.237

“Were laid down in six towns
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun.
Two hundred and ninety-four were all made in Sāvattthī by the glorious Gotama.”

Prv.10.2.1

“What we asked you has been explained to us,
each (question) answered
(as asked and) not otherwise.

¹ Bu-Pc.20. ² Bu-Ss.7. ³ Bu-Ss.12. ⁴ Bu-Pc.12. ⁵ Bu-Pc.19. ⁶ Bu-Pc.51. ⁷ Bu-Pc.24.

⁸ Bu-Pc.71. ⁹ Bu-Sk.51. ¹⁰ Bu-NP.17. ¹¹ Bu-NP.22. ¹² Bu-Pc.23. ¹³ Bu-Pc.47.

¹⁴ Bu-Pc.86. ¹⁵ Bu-Pd.4. ¹⁶ Nuns’ Bi-Pc.5. ¹⁷ Bu-Pc.58. ¹⁸ Bu-Pc.56. ¹⁹ Bu-Sk.55.

²⁰ Bu-Sk.56.

I ask you another question.

“Please do you tell me: serious and slight too,
With a remainder, without a remainder,
very bad and not very bad,
and those up to the third time,

“Shared, not shared, and by which decidings are fallings away stopped?
Explain all these too, indeed we listen to your speech.”

Vin.5.146

“Those serious ones are thirty-one,
eight here without remainder,
Those that are serious are very bad, (among) those that are very bad is falling away from moral habit.

“Defeat, Formal Meeting of the Order is called falling away from moral habit.

“Grave, Expiation, to be Confessed, wrong-doing,
Wrong speech,
and whoever reviles another desiring laughter¹:
stopped is this that is falling away from right behaviour.

“Preferring false view, they choose by means of wrong rules,
Weak in wisdom, wrapped in confusion,
they misrepresent the Supreme Buddha:
stopped is this that is falling away from right view.”

If for the sake of livelihood,² for the reason of livelihood one of evil wishes, overcome by desire, claims a non-existent state of further-men which is not fact, there is an offence involving Defeat. If for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood one speaks saying, “Whatever monk ¹ See Bu-Pc.52, Bu-Pc.53—probably to revile another in jest refers to Bu-Pc.2 where various offences of wrong speech are said to ensue from comparable behaviour. ² See above Prv.4.5.4.

BD.6.238

lives in your vihāra is an arahant”; if for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood a monk, having asked for sumptuous foods for himself, eats them; if for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood a nun, having asked for sumptuous foods for herself, eats them; if for the sake of livelihood, for the reason of livelihood one who is not ill, having asked for curry or conjei for himself, eats it—this that is a falling away from right livelihood is stopped.

“Eleven ‘up to the third time’ —
listen to these as they really are:

“An imitator of one who is suspended,¹ eight ‘up to the third time’,² Ariṭṭha,³ and Caṇḍakālī⁴ — these are those ‘up to the third time’.

How many cuttings down⁵? How many breakings up? How many tearings off? How many “not for another” Expiations? How many agreements of the monks? How many proper duties? How many “at mosts”? How many “knowing(ly)” were laid down by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?

⁶Six cuttings down,⁷ one breaking up,⁸ one tearing off,⁹ four “not for another” Expiations,¹⁰ four agreements of the monks,¹¹ seven “proper duties”,¹² fourteen “at most”,¹³ sixteen “knowing(ly)”¹⁴ were laid down by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun.

“Two hundred and twenty rules of training for monks
come up for recitation on Observance days;

¹ Nuns’ Bi-Pj.7. See Vin.5.140 towards beginning of the “Elevens”. ² Five in Formal Meetings. ³ Bu-Pc.68. ⁴ Nuns’ Bi-Pc.36. ⁵ See above at beginning of Prv.7.6. ⁶ I follow Oldenberg’s numbering, usually of verse only, to the best my ability. ⁷ See above BD.6.133, beginning of the Sextets. ⁸ Bu-Pc.86. ⁹ Bu-Pc.88. ¹⁰ Bu-Pc.16, Bu-Pc.42, Bu-Pc.77, Bu-Pc.78; see Vin.5.127. ¹¹ See Vin.5.127. ¹² See Vin.5.134. ¹³ List of fourteen given at Vin-a.1340: Bu-NP.1, Bu-NP.3, Bu-NP.7, Bu-NP.10, Bu-NP.14, Bu-NP.21, Bu-NP.23, Bu-NP.29 Nuns’ Bi-NP.11, Bi-NP.12, Nuns’ Bi-Pc.5, Kd.15.31.2, Kd.16.2.5. ¹⁴ Bu-NP.30, Bu-Pc.16, Bu-Pc.20, Bu-Pc.29, Bu-Pc.36, Bu-Pc.62, Bu-Pc.63, Bu-Pc.64, Bu-Pc.65, Bu-Pc.66, Bu-Pc.69, Bu-Pc.70, Bu-Pc.72, Nuns’ Bi-Pj.6, Bi-Ss.2, Bi-Pc.51.

three hundred and four rules of training for nuns
 come up for recitation on Observance days.

“Forty-six are not shared by monks with nuns.
 A hundred and thirty are not shared by nuns with monks.

BD.6.239

“So one hundred and seventy-six are not shared between the two,
 A hundred and seventy-four are for equal training in by the two.¹

Vin.5.147

“Two hundred and twenty rules of training for monks
 come up for recitation on Observance days:
 listen to these as they really are:

“The four Defeats,
 the Formal Meetings which come to thirteen,
 there are the two Undetermined,
 exactly thirty Forfeitures,
 and ninety-two minor matters,
 four Confessions,
 seventy-five Trainings.

“And these are the two hundred and twenty rules of training for monks
 that come up for recitation on Observance days.

“Three hundred and four rules of training for nuns
 come up for recitation on Observance days:
 listen to these as they really are:

“The eight Defeats,

¹ The one hundred and seventy-six with the one hundred and seventy-four make up the three hundred and fifty rules of training which, at the beginning of this Section, are said to have been laid down in the seven towns.

the Formal Meetings which come to seventeen,
 exactly thirty Forfeitures,
 and one hundred and sixty-six called merely minor matters,
 eight Confessions,
 seventy-five Trainings.

“And these are the three hundred and four rules of training for nuns
 that come up for recitation on Observance days.

“‘Forty-six are not shared by monks with nuns’:
 listen to these as they really are:

“Six Formal Meetings with the two Undetermined are eight;
 twelve Forfeitures—
 with these there are twenty;
 twenty-two minor matters,
 four Confessions.

“And these are the forty-six that are not shared by monks with nuns.

“‘A hundred and thirty are not shared by nuns with monks’:
 listen to these as they really are:

“Four Defeats,
 ten are to be escaped from by means of¹ the Order,
 twelve Forfeitures,
 and ninety-six minor matters,
 eight Confessions.

BD.6.240

“And these are the hundred and thirty that are not shared by nuns with monks.

“‘So one hundred and seventy-six

¹ These are the 10 Formal Meeting offences for nuns.

are not shared between the two':
listen to these as they really are:

“Four Defeats,
the Formal Meetings come to sixteen,
there are the two Undetermined,
twenty-four Forfeitures,
and the minor matters are said to be a hundred and eighteen,
the twelve Confessions.

“And these are the hundred and seventy-six that are not shared between the two.

““A hundred and seventy-four are for equal training in by the two':
listen to these as they really are:

“Four Defeats,
the Formal Meetings which come to seven eighteen Forfeitures, an equal seventy minor matters,
seventy-five Trainings.

“And these are the hundred and seventy-four that are for equal training in by the two.

Vin.5.148

Precisely eight Defeats which,
difficult to remedy,
resemble an uprooted palm-tree:
That man is like a withered leaf,¹ a flat stone,²
a decapitated head,³
Like a palm-tree cut off at the crown⁴ — these have no further growth.

“Twenty-three Formal Meetings of the Order,

¹ See Vin.1.96-97. ² See Vin.1.96-97. ³ See Vin.1.96-97. ⁴ See Vin.1.96-97.

two Undetermined,
 forty-two Forfeitures,
 a hundred and eighty Expiations,
 twelve Confessions,
 seventy-five Trainings are stopped by three decidings.

“In the presence of,
 as on the acknowledgement of,
 and by a covering over (as) with grass.

“Two Observances,
 two Invitations,
 four (formal) acts,
 were taught by the Conqueror.

“Just five recitals,¹ four are not different,
 and the classes of offence are seven.
 The four legal questions are settled by seven decidings²:
 by two, by four, by three,
 ‘obligation’ is settled by one.”³ /

BD.6.241

“Listen to that which is called Defeat as it really is:

“Fallen away, fallen short of, and fallen down,
 destroyed by the true rules,
 For such a one there is no communion:
 it⁴ is so called because of that.”

“Listen to that which is called Formal Meeting as it really is:

“Only the Order imposes probation, sends back to the beginning,

¹ Vin.1.112. ² See above, Vin.5.99-101. ³ I.e. the first is settled by two decidings, the second by four, the third by three and the fourth by one. ⁴ The offence involving Defeat.

inflicts mānatta, rehabilitates:
it is so called because of that.”

“Listen to that which is called Undetermined as it really is:

“Undetermined,¹ not determined—the rule is undecided,
The occasion is (to be dealt with) by one of three (rules)²—it is called Undetermined.”

“Listen to that which is called a grave offence as it really is:

“Whoever confesses instigation to another,³ and whoever accepts that⁴—
The transgression is not equal for him:
it is so called because of that.”⁵

“Listen to that which is called Forfeiture as it really is:

“In the midst of an Order, in the midst of a group, just to a single one—
When forfeiting he confesses:
it is so called because of that.”

“Listen to that which is called Expiation as it really is:

“He throws off⁶ a skilled rule, offends against the ariyan Way
Because of confusion of his mind:
it is so called because of that.”

“Listen to that which is called Confession as it really is:

¹ It is the class of offence that is Undetermined. ² See sikkhāpada in Bu-Ay.1 for the three types of offence one of which might be involved; and see Bu-Ay.2 for two such types of offence. ³ ekassa mūle yo deseti. ⁴ Possibly based on Vin.3.75 and Vin.3.143. ⁵ This verse is cited at Vin-a.314. ⁶ pāteti is to throw off, bring to fall, make drop, destroy.

“A monk, not being a relation, whatever is food that,
 obtained with difficulty,
 Having taken it for himself, he might eat¹:
 it is called blameworthy.

BD.6.242

“Eating among those invited,
 a nun there directs from partiality,
 Not being refused, if he should eat of it:
 it is called blameworthy.²

Vin.5.149

“Going to a family which has faith,
 little wealth, is poor,
 Not being ill, if he should eat there:
 it is called blameworthy.³

“Whoever, if living in a forest that is dangerous, frightening Should eat there unannounced:
 it is called blameworthy.⁴

“A nun, not being a relation,⁵ whatever is cherished by others:
 Ghee, oil, honey, molasses, fish, meat, then milk, curds—
 a nun, asking for these for herself, has fallen into a blameworthy (matter)
 in the Dispensation of the Well-farer.”

“Listen to that which is called Wrong-doing as it really is:

“That which is fallen short of,
 and failing and stumbling is wrong-doing—
 The man who should do that evil whether in public or in private—
 They declare to be a wrong-doing:
 it is so called because of that.”⁶

¹ Bu-Pd.1. ² Bu-Pd.2. ³ Bu-Pd.3. ⁴ Bu-Pd.4. ⁵ Nuns' Bi-Pd.1-8 read agilānā, not ill, instead of aññātikā as above. ⁶ This verse is cited at Vin-a.313.

“Listen to that which is called Wrong Speech as it really is:

“The sentence, wrongly spoken, wrongly uttered, and that is impure,
And that the learned blame:
it is so called because of that.”¹

“Listen to that which is called Training as it really is:

“Following the straight way of the training of one under training,
This (right) conduct is the beginning,
and control by restraint of the mouth.
There is no training like this:
it is so called because of that.

BD.6.243

“It rains hard on a covered thing,
it rains not hard on an open thing,
So open up the covered thing:
thus it will not rain hard on that.”²

“A forest is the bourn of deer, the sky the bourn of birds,³
Non-being is the bourn of mental states, nibbāna the bourn of an arahant.”⁴

Concluded is the Collection of Stanzas

ITS SUMMARY

Laid down in seven towns, and also the four fallings away,
Shared, not shared by monks and nuns:
This Collection of Stanzas is for furthering the Dispensation.

¹ On account of its impurity and of its being blamed by the learned. ² Vin.2.240. ³ Cf. AN.ii.33 for the sentiment. ⁴ Stanza also at Snp-a.iii.6, and last line at MN-a.ii.36 in explanation of the fourth of five gati: vibhavaḡati.

11. SYNOPSIS OF LEGAL QUESTIONS

Prv.11.1.1
BD.6.244
Vin.5.150

Four legal questions: a legal question concerning disputes a legal question concerning censure, a legal question concerning offences, a legal question concerning obligations These are the four legal questions. Of these four legal questions how many openings up are there? Of these four legal questions there are ten openings up.¹ Of a legal question concerning disputes there are two openings up. Of a legal question concerning censure there are four openings up. Of a legal question concerning offences there are three openings up. Of a legal question concerning obligations there is one opening up. These are the ten openings up of these four legal questions. In opening up a legal question concerning disputes ... censure offences ... obligations, how many decidings does one open up? In opening up a legal question concerning disputes one opens up two decidings. In opening up a legal question concerning censure one opens up four decidings. In opening up a legal question concerning offences one opens up three decidings. In opening up a legal question concerning obligations one opens up one deciding.

Prv.11.1.2

How many openings up? In how many ways does one bring about an opening up? Of how many qualities is an individual who opens up a legal question possessed? How many individuals, in opening up a legal question, fall into an offence?

Twelve openings up. In ten ways does one bring about an opening up. An individual who is possessed of four qualities opens up a legal question. Four individuals in opening up a legal question fall into an offence.

Prv.11.1.3

What are the twelve openings up? Saying: The formal act is not carried out, the formal act is badly carried out, the formal act should be carried out again; it is not fixed,¹ it is badly fixed, it should be fixed again²; it is not decided, it is badly decided, it should be decided again; it is not settled, it is badly settled, it should be settled again—these twelve openings up.

¹ See Kd.14 and Bu-Pc.63. Vin-a.866 refers to this Section of the Parivāra.

BD.6.245

In what ten ways does one bring about an opening up? He opens up a legal question where it arose³; he opens up a legal question settled where it arose; he opens up a legal question on a highway⁴; he opens up a legal question settled on a highway⁵; he opens up a legal question when he has arrived there⁶; he opens up a legal question settled when he has arrived there; he opens up a verdict of innocence⁷; he opens up a verdict of past insanity⁸; he opens up a decision for specific depravity⁹; he opens up a covering over (as) with grass.¹⁰ In these ten ways one brings about an opening up.¹¹

Vin.5.151

Of what four qualities is an individual possessed that he opens up a legal question? Following a wrong course through partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear he opens up a legal question. Possessed of these four qualities an individual opens up a legal question.

Who are the four individuals who in opening up a legal question fall into an offence? If one who was ordained that very day opens (it) up, for opening up there is an offence of Expiation. If an incoming monk ... if one who carried out (the legal question¹²) ... if one who has given his consent¹³ opens (it) up, for opening up there is an offence of Expiation. These four individuals, in opening up, fall into an offence.¹⁴

Prv.11.1.4

What is the provenance, what the arising, what the birth, what the source, what the bringing forth, what the origin of a legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences obligations?

BD.6.246

A legal question concerning disputes has dispute as pro venance, dis-

¹ anihata, translated at BD.3.5 as “settled”. It may mean considers laid down. “Settle” is needed in the next clause but one, vūpasanta. ² Bu-Pc.63. ³ In the same vihāra. See Kd.14.14, Kd.14.16-18 for the first six cases. ⁴ If a monk, not satisfied with the settlement in his own vihāra, is going to another vihāra. ⁵ He may meet a monk who is an expert on discipline and settles it then and there. ⁶ I.e. if he has decided to proceed with his journey. ⁷ Kd.14.14.27. ⁸ Kd.14.14.28. ⁹ Kd.14.11.29. ¹⁰ Kd.14.14.30. ¹¹ Each kind of opening up involves an offence of Expiation. ¹² Kd.14.14, Kd.14.21, Kd.14.22, Kd.14.24. ¹³ chandadāyaka. On chanda, as consent, see BD.3.58, n.3; also BD.5.126. ¹⁴ In addition, at Kd.14.32 the individual who accepts (a confession), paṭiggāhaka, also falls into an offence of Expiation.

pute as arising ... dispute as origin. A legal question concerning censure has censure as provenance origin. A legal question concerning offences has offences as provenance ... origin. A legal question concerning obligations has obligation as provenance ... origin.

Prv.11.1.5

What is the provenance ... what the origin of a legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences obligations?

A legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences ... obligations has cause as provenance ... as origin.

Prv.11.1.6

What is the provenance ... what the origin of a legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences ... obligations?

A legal question concerning disputes ... censure ... offences ... obligations has condition as provenance ... as origin.

Prv.11.1.7

How many roots, how many origins of the four legal questions? There are thirty-three roots, thirty-three origins of the four legal questions.

Of the four legal questions what are the thirty-three roots? Twelve¹ roots of a legal question concerning disputes fourteen² roots of a legal question concerning censure; six³ roots of a legal question concerning offences; one root of a legal question concerning obligations. These are the thirty-three roots of the four legal questions.

Vin.5.152

Of the four legal questions what are the thirty-three origins? The eighteen matters making for schism⁴ are the origins of a legal question concerning disputes The four fallings away are the origins of a legal question concerning censure.⁵ The seven classes of offence are the origins of a legal question concerning offences.⁶ The four (formal) acts are the origins of a legal question concerning obligations.⁷ These are the thirty-three origins of the four legal questions.

BD.6.247

Prv.11.1.8

Is a legal question concerning disputes an offence or not an offence? A legal question concerning disputes is not an offence—could one then fall into an offence because of a legal question concerning disputes Yes, one could fall into an offence because of a legal question concerning disputes

¹ Six, beginning with the pair: anger, ill-will; then the three: greed, hatred, confusion; and the three: non-greed, etc. ² Add body and speech to the twelve in the preceding note.

³ The six origins beginning with body. ⁴ Cf. Vin.1.354, Vin.2.88. These aṭṭhārasa bhedakaravattthu are mentioned also at Atthasālinī 29. ⁵ Vin.2.88. ⁶ Vin.2.88. ⁷ Vin.2.89.

How many offences does one fall into because of a legal question concerning disputes? One falls into two offences because of a legal question concerning disputes if he insults one who is ordained there is an offence of Expiation¹; if he insults one who is not ordained there is an offence of wrong-doing. These are the two offences one falls into because of a legal question concerning disputes

Of the four fallings away, to how many fallings away do these offences appertain? Of the four legal questions which legal question? Of the seven classes of offence in how many classes of offence are they comprised? Of the six origins of offences by how many origins do they originate? By how many legal questions, among how many possibilities, by how many decidings are they stopped?

Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to one falling away: falling away from right behaviour. Of the four legal questions the legal question concerning offences. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in two classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by three origins. By one legal question: by the legal question concerning obligations; by three possibilities: in the midst of an Order, in the midst of a group, in the presence of an individual; by three decidings are they stopped: it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on his acknowledgement; it may be by a verdict in the Presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass.²

Prv.11.1.9

Is a legal question concerning censure an offence or not an offence ... (see Prv.11.1.8) ... One falls into three offences because of a legal question concerning censure: if he defames a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat there is an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order³; if he defames with an unfounded charge of an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order there is an offence of Expiation; if he defames with an unfounded charge of falling away from right behaviour there is an offence of wrong-doing. These are the three offences one falls into because of a legal question concerning censure.

BD.6.248

¹ See Bu-Pc.2. ² This does not seem to agree with Prv.4.7.2 above. ³ Bu-Ss.8.

Of the four fallings away, to how many ... by how many decidings are they stopped?

Of the four fallings away these offences appertain to two fallings away: it may be to falling away from moral habit; it may be to falling away from right behaviour. Of the four legal questions, the legal question concerning offences. Of the seven classes of offence they are comprised in three classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offence they originate by three origins. That which is a serious offence is an offence that is stopped by one legal question: the legal question concerning obligations; by one possibility: in the midst of the Order; by two decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on his acknowledgement. Those which are slight offences are offences that are stopped by one legal question: the legal question concerning obligations; by three possibilities ... (see Prv.11.1.8) ... by a covering over (as) with grass.

Is a legal question concerning offences an offence or not an offence? A legal question concerning offences is an offence—one could then fall into four offences because of a legal question concerning offences: if a nun knowingly conceals an offence involving Defeat¹ there is an offence involving Defeat; if, being in doubt, she conceals it, there is a grave offence; if a monk conceals an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order there is an offence of Expiation; if one conceals a falling away from good behaviour there is an offence of wrong-doing. One falls into these four offences because of a legal question concerning offences.

Of the four fallings away to how many ... by how many decidings are they stopped?

Of the four fallings away these offences ... (see Prv.11.1.9) ... are comprised in four classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence that is grave; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by one origin: they originate by body and speech and thought. That offence which cannot be done away with is an offence that is not stopped by any legal question, by any possibility, by any deciding. Those which are slight offences are offences that are stopped by one legal question: ... (see Prv.11.1.9) ... it may be by a verdict in the presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass.

¹ See above, Vin.5.83 for these four offences.

Prv.11.1.11

Is a legal question concerning obligations an offence or not an offence? ... (see Prv.11.1.8) ... One falls into five offences because of a legal question concerning obligations: if a nun who is an imitator of (a monk) who is suspended, though being admonished up to the third time, does not give up (her course), there is an offence of wrong-doing as a result of the motion, a grave offence as a result of two resolutions, at the end of the resolutions there is an offence involving Defeat¹; if imitators of a schismatic,² though being admonished up to the third time, do not give up (their course), there is an offence entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order; if they do not give up pernicious views, though being admonished up to the third time, there is an offence of Expiation.³ One falls into these five offences because of a legal question concerning obligations.

Of the four fallings away, to how many ... by how many decidings are they stopped?

Vin.5.154

Of the four fallings away these offences ... (see Prv.11.1.9) ... are comprised in five classes of offence: it may be in the class of offence involving Defeat; it may be in the class of offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; it may be in the class of offence that is grave; it may be in the class of offence of Expiation; it may be in the class of offence of wrong-doing. Of the six origins of offences they originate by one origin: they originate by body and speech and thought. That offence which cannot be done away with is an offence that is not stopped by any legal question, by any possibility, by any deciding. That which is a serious offence is an offence that is stopped by one legal question: the legal question arising out of obligations: by one possibility: in the midst of an Order; by two decidings: by a verdict in the presence of and by the carrying out on his acknowledgement. Those which are slight offences are offences that are stopped by one ... (see Prv.11.1.9) ... and by a covering over (as) with grass.

BD.6.250

Prv.11.1.12

¹ Nuns' Bi-Pj.7; see above, Vin.5.83. ² These are monks as at Vin.2.201. See too Bu-Ss.10. A nun is spoken of as an imitator of a schismatic at Vin.5.83. ³ Bu-Pc.68.

A legal question concerning disputes is a legal question concerning censure, it is a legal question concerning offences, it is a legal question concerning obligations. A legal question concerning disputes is not a legal question concerning censure, it is not a legal question concerning offences, it is not a legal question concerning obligations. Yet because of a legal question concerning disputes there is a legal question concerning censure, there is a legal question concerning offences, there is a legal question concerning obligations. How is it like this? As to this, monks are quarrelling ... (see Prv.4.21) ... a legal question concerning obligations. Thus because of a legal question concerning disputes there is a legal question concerning censure ... concerning offences ... concerning obligations.

A legal question concerning censure is a legal question concerning offences ... obligations, it is a legal question concerning disputes A legal question concerning censure is not a legal question concerning offences ... disputes How is it like this? As to this, monks are censuring a monk ... (see Prv.4.21) ... a legal question concerning obligations. Thus because of a legal question concerning censure there is a legal question concerning offences ... concerning obligations ... concerning disputes

BD.6.251

A legal question concerning offences is a legal question concerning obligations ... disputes it is a legal question concerning censure. A legal question concerning offences is not a legal question concerning obligations ... censure. How is it like this? Both the five classes of offence ... (see Prv.4.21) ... a legal question concerning obligations. Thus because of a legal question concerning offences there is a legal question concerning obligations ... concerning disputes ... concerning censure.

Prv.11.1.13

A legal question concerning obligations is a legal question concerning disputes ... censure, it is a legal question concerning offences. A legal question concerning obligations is not ... How is it like? Whatever is the Order's business ... (see Prv.4.21) ... a legal question concerning obligations. Thus because of a legal question concerning obligations there is a legal question concerning disputes there is a legal question concerning censure, there is a legal question concerning offences.

Vin.5.155

Where there is a verdict of innocence there is a verdict in the presence of, where there is a verdict in the presence of there is a verdict of innocence.

Where there is a verdict of past insanity there is a verdict in the presence of, where there is a verdict in the presence of there is a verdict of past insanity. Where there is the carrying out on his acknowledgement ... Where there is the decision of the majority ... Where there is a decision for specific depravity ... Where there is a covering over (as) with grass there is a verdict in the presence of, where there is a verdict in the presence of there is a covering over (as) with grass.

Prv.11.1.14

At a time when a legal question is settled by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of innocence: where there is a verdict of innocence there is a verdict in the presence of. Where there is a verdict in the presence of there is a verdict of innocence, there is not there a verdict of past insanity, there is not there a carrying out on his acknowledgement, there is not there a decision of the majority, there is not there a decision for specific depravity, there is not there a covering over (as) with grass.

At a time when a legal question is settled by a verdict in the presence of and by a verdict of past insanity ... by a verdict in the presence of and by a covering over (as) with grass: where there is a covering over (as) with grass there is a verdict in the presence of. Where there is a verdict in the presence of there is a covering over (as) with grass, there is not there verdict of innocence ... there is not there a verdict for specific depravity.

BD.6.252

Prv.11.1.15

“Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of innocence”—are these things associated or dissociated, and is it possible having analysed these things again and again, to point to a difference between them? “Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of past insanity” ... “Verdict in the presence of” or “covering over (as) with grass”—are these associated or dissociated, and is it possible, having analysed these things again and again, to point to a difference between them?

“Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of innocence”—these things are associated, not dissociated, and it is not possible, having analysed these things again and again, to point to a difference between them. “Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of past insanity” ... “Verdict in the presence of” or “covering over (as) with grass”—these things are associated, not dissociated, and it is not possible, having analysed these things again and again, to point to a difference between them.

Prv.11.1.16

What is the provenance, what the arising, what the birth, what the source, what the bringing forth, what the origin of a verdict in the presence of? What is the provenance ... of a verdict of innocence ... of a covering over (as) with grass?

A verdict in the presence of has provenance as provenance, provenance as arising, provenance as birth ... source ... bringing forth, provenance as origin. A verdict of innocence ... a covering over (as) with grass has provenance as provenance, provenance as arising ... provenance as origin.

Prv.11.1.17
Vin.5.156

What is the provenance ... what the origin of a verdict in the presence of ... a verdict of innocence ... a covering over (as) with grass? A verdict in the presence of has cause as provenance ... a covering over (as) with grass has cause as provenance ... cause as origin.

Prv.11.1.18

What is the provenance ... what the origin of a verdict in the presence of ... a verdict of innocence ... a covering over (as) with grass? A verdict in the presence of has condition as provenance ... a covering over (as) with grass has condition as provenance ... condition as origin.

Prv.11.1.19
BD.6.253

Of the seven decidings how many roots, how many origins? Of the seven decidings there are twenty-six roots, thirty-six origins.

What are the twenty-six roots of the seven decidings? Four roots of a verdict in the presence of: the presence of an Order, the presence of a rule, the presence of Discipline, the presence of the individual. Four roots of a verdict of innocence. Four roots of a verdict of past insanity. Two roots of carrying out on (his) acknowledgement: he who confesses and he to whom he confesses. Four roots of a decision of the majority. Four roots of a decision for specific depravity. Four roots of a covering over (as) with grass: the presence of an Order ... the presence of the individual. These are the twenty-six roots of the seven decidings.

What are the thirty-six origins of the seven decidings? Of a verdict of innocence there is the carrying out of,¹ the performance of,² the undertaking of, the assenting to, the acceptance of, the non-protesting against the formal act.³ Of a verdict of past insanity, of a carrying out on his acknowledgement, of a decision of the majority, of a decision for specific ¹ Vin-a.1359 says this is the motion. ² The motion having been finished with (set aside).

³ Cf. Vin.2.97.

depravity, of a covering over (as) with grass there is the carrying out of ... the non-protesting against the formal act. These are the thirty-six origins of the seven decidings.

Prv.11.1.20

“Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of innocence” — are these things different in meaning and different in connotation, or are they one in meaning and different only in connotation? “Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of past insanity” ... “Verdict in the presence of” or “carrying out on his acknowledgement” ... “Verdict in the presence of” or “covering over (as) with grass” — are these things different in meaning ... or are they one in meaning and different only in connotation?

“Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of innocence” — these things are different in meaning as well as different in connotation. “Verdict in the presence of” or “verdict of past insanity” ... “Verdict in the presence of” or “a covering over (as) with grass” — these things are different in meaning as well as different in connotation.

BD.6.254

(Can there be) a dispute and a legal question concerning disputes a dispute but no legal question, a legal question but no dispute, a legal question as well as a dispute? There may be ... (see Kd.14.14.12-15) ... A legal question concerning obligations is a legal question as well as an obligation.

Prv.11.1.21
Vin.5.157

Concluded is the Synopsis of Legal Questions

ITS SUMMARY

Legal question, openings up, ways, and about an individual,
Provenance, cause, condition, root, and about origin, /
Offence, there is, and where, associated, and about provenance,
Cause, condition, roots, about origin, connotation,
“Is a dispute a legal question?”:
this is in the Synopsis of Legal Questions.

12. AN ADDITIONAL COLLECTION OF STANZAS

Prv.12.1.1
BD.6.255
Vin.5.158

“For what purpose is reproving,¹ by reason of what is there making remember,
For what purpose is the Order,
but by reason of what is there an act of Understanding?²”

“Reproving is for making remember, for restraint³ is making remember,
The Order is for discerning,⁴ but an act of understanding is individual.

“Do not speak quickly, do not speak angrily,⁵
Do not arouse resentment
if you would be an adjudicator.⁶

¹ On reproving, codanā, etc., see Kd.18. ² matikamma, mental act; not otherwise found in the Pali Canon. Vin-a.1359 explains it as mantaggahaṇa (grasp or learning of the mantras—in a Buddhist sense) which, it says, is a matter of individual investigation and reasoning for Elders who are Suttantikas and for those who are experts in Discipline. ³ niggaha, a difficult word, meaning restraint, control, censure, rebuke; also refutation. The usual method, as found in Kd.11, is that a monk should be reproved for not seeing, etc., his offence, then be made to remember it, then accused of it, in order that a (formal) act of the Order might be carried out against him. Vin-a.1359 says that making one remember a defect is for the restraint, niggaha, of that individual. ⁴ pariggaha. Vin-a, reading pariggahaṇa, says: gathered together there, the Order is for the purpose of exploring (searching, finding out, pariggahaṇa) and of vinicchaya (discrimination, investigation, judgement, etc.). It is for weighing what is Dhamma and what is not, for finding out what has been well and what badly investigated, vinicchita. ⁵ caṇḍikata, angrily, harshly, with “quick temper”; Cf. Nuns’ Bi-Pc.53. ⁶ anuvijjaka, as below Vin.5.160f.; a scrutinizer of a legal question, an arbitrator, adjudicator; one who knows about (the matter). He has to be an expert on Vinaya.

“Do not in haste speak challenging¹ talk unconnected with the meaning²
 In Sutta,³ in Discipline, in Parivāra,⁴ in what is laid down,⁵ in the principal authorities.⁶

BD.6.256

“Be careful of the proper procedure⁷ that was done with skill by him of discernment,⁸
 Of what was well spoken in conformity with the rules of training, not destroying a bourn in a future state.

“Seeking for welfare, be intent during (that) time on what is connected with the goal.
 Consider not in haste the mode of speech of the reprovved or the reprover.

“If the reprover says he has fallen,⁹ if he who is being reprovved says he has not fallen—Both,¹⁰ proceeding, should be dealt with according to (their) acknowledgement.

“Acknowledgement is carried out among the conscientious,
 it exists not among the unconscientious;
 Though many unconscientious (monks) may say,
 ‘It should be carried out according to what has been said’.¹¹”

“Of what kind is an unconscientious one for whom acknowledgement is not Effective?¹²
 Thus I ask you this:

¹ viggāhika. Vin-a.1360, “You do not know this Dhamma and Discipline,” and so on. ² Or goal, attha. ³ Here, according to Vin-a.1360, the two Vibhaṅgas are Sutta, the Khandhakas are Vinaya. ⁴ anuloma, which Vin-a.1360 says is the Parivāra. ⁵ This is the whole of the Vinaya-piṭaka, according to Vin-a.1360. ⁶ anulomika, explained as cattāro mahāpadesa at Vin-a.1360. ⁷ anuyogavattarū nisāmaya. Commentary of no help here. ⁸ Vin-a.1360 seems to say: established by a clever, wise (man) who, after being driven out by the Lord, has attained the perfection of knowledge. Same verse Vin.5.164 below. ⁹ If he says that the monk who is being reprovved has fallen into an offence. ¹⁰ ubho anukkipanto. ¹¹ Text reads vuttānusandhitena; Vin-a.1361 vattānu-. ¹² See references to rūhati at BD.5.73, n.3.

What is the kind called an unconscientious individual?”

“He falls into an offence intentionally,
he hides the offence,
And goes following a wrong course:
this is the kind called an unconscientious individual.”

“I too know the truth¹ — this is the kind called unconscientious individual.
And I am asking you another:
what is the kind called a conscientious individual?”

“He does not fall into an offence intentionally,
he does not hide an offence,
He does not go following a wrong course:
this is the kind called a conscientious individual.”

BD.6.257

“I too know the truth’ —
this is the kind called a conscientious individual.
And I am asking you another:
what is the kind called one who reproves
according to what is not the rule?²”

Vin.5.159

“He reproves at a wrong time, about what is not fact, with harshness,
and with what is unconnected with the goal;
He reproves with inner hatred,
not with a mind of loving-kindness³:
this is the kind called one who reproves
according to what is not the rule.”

“I too know the truth’ —
this is the kind called one who reproves
according to what is not the rule.
And I am asking you another:

¹ As well as you. ² adhammacodaka as at Vin.2.249. ³ These five ways of reproving not by rule are given at Vin.2.250.

what is the kind called one who reproves
according to the rule?”

“He reproves at a right time, about fact, with gentleness,
with what is connected with the goal,
He reproves with a mind of loving-kindness,
not with inner hatred¹:
this is the kind called one who reproves
according to the rule.”

“‘I too know the truth’ —
this is the kind called one who reproves
according to the rule.
And I am asking you another:
what is the kind called one who reproves Ignorantly?”

“He does not know the earlier and the later,² he is unskilled in the earlier and the later,
He does not know the sequence of the connecting words,
he is unskilled in the sequence of the connecting words:
this is the kind called one who reproves ignorantly.”

“‘I too know the truth’ —
this is the kind called one who reproves ignorantly.
And I am asking you another:
what is the kind called one who reproves wisely?”

“He knows the earlier and the later,
he is skilled in the earlier and the later,
He knows the sequence of the connecting words,
is skilled in the sequence of the connecting words:
this is kind called one who reproves wisely.”

BD.6.258

“‘I too know the truth’ —
this is the kind called one who reproves wisely.

¹ As at Vin.2.250. ² What was said earlier and what was said later, Vin-a.1361.

And I am asking you another:
what is reproving called?"

"He reproves for falling away from moral habit, then from right behaviour and view,
And he reproves for a (wrong) mode of livelihood:
therefore it is called reproving."

Concluded is an Additional¹ Collection of Stanzas

¹ Additional, or further, apara, no doubt in relation to Prv.10. The title of Prv.19 is Dutiyagāthāsaṃgaṇika and cannot be easily explained. The Commentary, Vin-a.1361, Vin-a.1390 calls both Prv.12 and Prv.19 Dutiyagāthāsaṃgaṇikā but attempts no explanation.

13. PORTION ON REPROVING

The one who is reproving should be asked by an adjudicator: “That monk whom you are reproving, reverend sir, for what are you reproving him? Are you reproving him for falling away from moral habit, are you reproving him for falling away from right behaviour, are you reproving him for falling away from right view?” If he should speak thus: “I am reproving him for falling away from moral habit, or I am reproving him for falling away from right behaviour, or I am reproving him for falling away from right view,” he should be spoken to thus: “But does your reverence know ... (see Kd.16.11-15. Instead of if you suspend this monk’s Invitation read I reprove, you reprove) ... Did you suspect, having heard from disciples of (other) sects?”

Prv.13.1.1
BD.6.259
Vin.5.160

If the seen corresponds with the seen,
the seen being in agreement with the seen,¹
If concerning the seen he² does not consent,³ he⁴ is one suspecting impurity:
That man, on his acknowledgement,⁵ may carry out Observance with him.

If the heard corresponds with the heard,

Prv.13.1.2

¹ Vin-a.1361 says that if a monk sees another leaving a place or entering it with a woman, he reproves him for an offence involving Defeat. This other (monk) allows that the first one saw this, but he does not acknowledge Defeat. Thus, “what was seen by him was seen by me”—and so these words about the seen tally. But as the other (monk) does not acknowledge any defect (in himself) because of what was seen, he (the first one) is one who suspects impurity (in the other). Once that individual says “I am pure”, however, Observance may be carried out with him. ² Referring to two different monks, see preceding note. ³ upeti, glossed by paṭijānāti at Vin-a.1361. ⁴ Referring to two different monks, see preceding note. ⁵ That “I am pure”.

the heard being in agreement with the heard,
 If concerning the heard ...
 Observance with him.

If the sensed corresponds with the sensed,
 the sensed being in agreement with the sensed,
 If concerning the sensed ...
 Observance with him.

Prv.13.1.3
 BD.6.260

What is the beginning of reproving, what is in the middle what is the ending? Giving leave is the beginning of reproving,¹ carrying out is in the middle, a decision is the ending.²

How many roots of reproving, how many matters, how many (mental) planes?³ In how many ways does one reprove? Two roots of reproving, three matters, five (mental) planes He reproves in two ways.

What are the two roots of reproving? With root, or rootless.⁴ These are the two roots of reproving.

What are the three matters for reproving? About the seen the heard, the suspected.⁵ These are the three matters for reproving.

Vin.5.161

What are the five (mental) planes⁶ for reproving? "I will speak at a right time, not at a wrong time; I will speak about fact, not about what is not fact; I will speak gently, not harshly; I will speak about what is connected with the goal, not about what is not connected with the goal; I will speak with a mind of loving-kindness, not with inner hatred."⁷ These are the five (mental) planes for reproving.

What are the two ways by which he reproves? He reproves by body and he reproves by speech. These are the two ways by which he reproves.

Prv.13.1.4

What should be practised by one who is reproving ... by one who is being reprovved ... by an Order ... by an adjudicator?

What should be practised by one who is reproving? Another may be reprovved by a reprovver who is firm in five things: "I will speak at a right time, not at a wrong time ... I will speak with a mind of loving-kindness, not with inner hatred.” Thus should it be practised by one who is reprovng.

¹ See Vin.1.114, Vin.1.170. ² Cf. Vin-a.592 for this paragraph. ³ Cf. Vin-a.592. ⁴ Cf. Vin-a.592 for this paragraph. ⁵ Cf. Vin-a.592 for this paragraph. ⁶ Five other bhūmi at AN.iii.39f. See also Ps.i.83. ⁷ Cf. Vin-a.592 for this paragraph.

What should be practised by one who is being reprovng? In two things should one who is being reprovng practice: in the truth and in being without anger.¹ Thus should it be practised by one who is being reprovng.

BD.6.261

What should be practised by an Order? What has been said already and what has not been said² should be known by an Order. Thus should it be practised by an Order.

What should be practised by an adjudicator? As that legal question is settled by an adjudicator according to rule, according to Discipline, according to the Teacher’s Dispensation, so should he settle this legal question. Thus should it be practised by an adjudicator.

Prv.13.1.5

For what purpose is Observance, by reason of what is there Invitation,
For what purpose is probation, by reason of what is there sending back to the beginning,
For what purpose is mānatta,
by reason of what is there rehabilitation?

Observance is for “being all together”, for purity there is Invitation,
Probation is for mānatta, sending back to the beginning is for restraint, Mānatta is for rehabilitation,
for purity there is rehabilitation.

If he abuses Elders for (having) partiality, hatred, fear, confusion:

¹ As at Kd.18.5.7. He should say exactly what has and what has been done and not be angry with the adjudicator or the Order, Vin-a.1362. ² otiṇṇānotiṇṇo. Vin-a.1362 says “So much was the earlier talk, so much the later of the reprovng, so much the earlier, so much the later of the reprovng. The Order should also assess the ‘measure’ of the reprovng, the reprovng and the adjudicator”. Otiṇṇa appears to be a word of several meanings: see SN.i.79 (or, ociṇṇa, convinced?) and text below, BD.6.170 anotiṇṇa (not put down?). Otiṇṇa must also mean something like “gone into” both physically and by word of mouth.

At the breaking up of the body, weak in wisdom, done for, faculties destroyed,
He goes to Niraya, the stupid fool who has no reverence for the trainings.¹

Not depending on things of the world nor depending on an individual,² Abandoning both of these,
he should be dealt with according to the rule.

BD.6.262

Angry and bearing ill-will,³ harsh and abusive,
Saying, “It is an offence”
he accuses⁴ him of what is not an offence:
a reprover such as this burns up himself.⁵

He murmurs in his ear, seeks what is crooked,⁶ seeks only for a defect or blemish.
passes beyond (the judgement),⁷ follows a wrong way—
Saying, “It is an offence”
he accuses him of what is not an offence:
a reprover such as this burns up himself.

Vin.5.162

He reproves at a wrong time, about what is not fact, harshly, about what is not connected with the goal
he reproves with inner hatred, not with a mind of loving-kindness—

¹ See the six reverences above, Vin.5.92. ² He should not depend on either of these for his support. ³ As at Vin.2.89, kodhano upanāhi. ⁴ ropeti, to accuse, bring a charge, see Vin.2.2, Vin.2.26, Vin.2.85, Vin.4.36. At Vin.2.261 it appears to mean to cancel. ⁵ jhāpeti attānaṃ. Cf. Vin.2.26 attānaṃ khaṇesi, and Dhp.247 mūlaṃ khaṇati attano. No doubt both jhāpeti and khaṇati in such contexts mean to destroy. Khata, past participle of khaṇati is translated “done for” five lines above. ⁶ jiṃhaṃ pekkhati, explained at Vin-a.1363 as dosam eva gavesati. ⁷ This is a very tentative rendering of vītiharati. It is glossed at Vin-a.1363 as vinicchayaṃ hāpeti, the “judgement” probably referring to the a taken in the course of a legal question.

Saying ... what is not an offence ...
burns up himself.

He does not know what is a rule
and what not a rule,
he is unskilled in what is a rule
and what not a rule—

Saying ... what is not an offence ...
burns up himself.

He does not know what is Discipline and what not Discipline,
he is unskilled in Discipline and what is not Discipline—

Saying ... what is not an offence ...
burns up himself.

He does not know what has been said and what not said ...

He does not know what is the usage¹
and what not the usage ...

He does not know what has been laid down and what not laid down ...

He does not know what is an offence
and what not an offence,
he is unskilled in what is an offence
and what not an offence ...

He does not know a slight offence and a serious offence ...

He does not know an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with ...

¹ āciṇṇa, what is customary.

He does not know what is a very bad and what is not a very bad offence ...

He does not know what is the earlier and what the later (talk) ...

He does not know the sequence of the connecting words, he is not skilled in the sequence of the connecting words—

Saying, “It is an offence” he accuses him of what is not an offence:

a reprover such as this burns up himself.

Concluded is the Portion¹ on Reproving

ITS SUMMARY

Reproving, and adjudicator, beginning,
by root, Observance, wrong course²:
The Teaching is put into the Portion on Reproving.

¹ kaṇḍa is portion, section, paragraph or part. ² gati here must refer to chandā dosā bhayā mohā (from partiality, hatred, etc.) in the seventh line of the second set of verses. Oldenberg’s colon should therefore come here and not after Observance.

14. THE LESSER COLLECTION

¹ When a monk who is engaged in conflict² is approaching an Order he should approach the Order with a humble mind,³ with a mind as though (it were) removing dust.⁴ He should be skilled about seats and skilled about sitting down. He should sit down on a suitable seat without encroaching on (the space intended for) monks who are Elders and without keeping newly ordained monks from a seat.⁵ He should not talk in a desultory fashion,⁶ nor about inferior (worldly) matters.⁷ Either he should speak Dhamma himself or should ask another to do so, or he should not disdain the ariyan silence. A preceptor should not be asked about⁸ by an Order, by an approved individual, by an adjudicator, by one anxious to adjudicate; a teacher should not be asked about, one who shares a cell ... a pupil ... a fellow-preceptor⁹ ... a fellow-teacher¹⁰ should not be asked about; birth should not be asked about, name ... clan ... the (scriptural) tradition¹¹ ... the family's standing¹² ... the native district¹³ should not be asked about. What is the reason for that? In case there were regard or hatred for it. If there were regard or hatred he might follow (a wrong course) from partiality ... hatred ... confusion, he might follow (a wrong course) from fear. There should be respect for an

Prv.14.1.1
BD.6.264
Vin.5.163

¹ saṅgāma is a battle, a conflict, as well as a collection. ² saṅgāma vacara. Vin-a.1363 says that the Order has been convened so as to investigate a legal question—that is called saṅgāma; and a saṅgāma vacara is said to be like the Elder Yasa (who protested against the Vajjian monks and their Ten Points: see Kd.22). ³ With the banner of arrogance lowered. ⁴ Like a towel for wiping the feet, Vin-a.1363. ⁵ See Kd.18.4.2. ⁶ Such as is not connected with the goal. ⁷ Detailed at e.g. Vin.4.164. ⁸ Saying, “What is your preceptor’s name?”—so Vin-a.1364. ⁹ Kd.8.26.4. ¹⁰ Kd.8.26.4. ¹¹ āgama, explained at Vin-a.1364 as “Are you a Dīgha-repeater, a Majjhima-repeater?” ¹² kulapadesa does not appear to occur elsewhere in the Pali Canon. Vin-a.1364 simply explains by “beginning with khattiya-kula”. ¹³ jātibhūmi, or place where one was born, as at MN.i.145. AN.iii.366.

BD.6.265 Order, for an approved individual, for an adjudicator, for one anxious to adjudicate, not respect for an individual. There should be respect for True Dhamma, not respect for the material things of the world. There should be pursuit of the goal, not conformity to an assembly. One should adjudicate at a right time, not at a wrong time; one should adjudicate about what is fact, not about what is not fact; one should adjudicate gently, not harshly; one should adjudicate about what is connected with the goal, not about what is not connected with the goal; one should adjudicate with a mind of loving-kindness, not with inner hatred.

Vin.5.164 There should not be murmuring in his ear, he should not seek what is crooked, he should not cover his eye,¹ he should not raise his eye-brow,² he should not raise his head, he should not make a movement with his hand,³ he should not give a gesture with the hand. He should be skilled about seats, he should be skilled about sitting down; looking a plough's length ahead, pursuing the goal he should sit down on his own seat and should not rise from the seat, he should not pass beyond (the judgement),⁴ he should not follow a wrong way; he should not speak waving his arms about, he should be unhastening, he should be considerate, he should not be quick tempered,⁵ with a mind of loving-kindness he should be gentle in speech; merciful, he should be compassionate for welfare; seeking for welfare, he should not be frivolous in speech; limiting his speech, he should be one who masters hostility, and is without irascibility.

BD.6.266 The self must be assessed,⁶ the other⁷ must be assessed, the reprover must be assessed,⁸ the reprovved must be assessed,⁹ one who reproves not by rule ... one who is reprovved not by rule ... one who reproves by rule ... one who is reprovved by rule must be assessed. Without omitting what was said,¹⁰ not bringing forward what was not said, having properly learnt the words and sentences as given, questioning the other in return, he should deal with him according to his acknowledgement.¹¹ An indolent person should be roused,¹ a fearful one given confidence, a violent one checked,² an impure one put right,³ a straight one (treated) with mildness. He should not follow a wrong course from partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear. He should be balanced⁴ as to the rules and the individuals. Thus is an adjudicator when he adjudicates thus both a doer of the Teacher's Dispensation, and is dear to learned men and to his fellow Brahma-farers and liked by them and he is esteemed and to be respected.

¹ As at Vin.3.78. ² As at Vin.3.78. ³ See Vin.1.352. ⁴ See above Vin.5.161. ⁵ acaṇḍikata; Cf. Nuns' Bi-Pc.53. ⁶ attā pariggahetabbo. Vin-a.1364 says: Am I able to judge (determine or decide), to settle (the legal question) or not? The measure of oneself must be known. ⁷ Vin-a.1364: is this company able to appease (convince) or not? ⁸ Is he a reprover by rule (dhammacodaka)? ⁹ Has he been reprovved by rule? ¹⁰ By either the reprover or the reprovved, Vin-a.1365. ¹¹ See Vin.2.83f.

Prv.14.1.2

A clause is for the sake of reference,⁵ a simile is for the sake of illustration,⁶ a meaning is for the sake of instruction, a question (asked) in return is for the sake of setting aside,⁷ giving leave is for the sake of reproving, reproving is for the sake of making remember, making remember is for the sake of commands,⁸ a command is for the sake of impediments,⁹ an impediment is for the sake of investigating, investigating is for the sake of a decision,¹⁰ a decision is for the sake of referring to a possibility and what is not a possibility,¹¹ referring to a possibility and what is not a possibility is for the sake of restraint of evil-minded individuals¹² and for the sake of the support of well behaved monks; the Order is for the sake of agreement and acceptance¹³; individuals approved of by the Order are persevering by themselves, are persevering in being trustworthy¹⁴; discipline is for the sake of restraint,¹⁵ restraint is for the sake of not being remorseful, not

BD.6.267

¹ hāsetabbo, stimulated, encouraged. ² nisedhetabbo, disparaged, menaced. ³ vibhāvetabbo. Vin-a.1365 says "having pointed out that he is unconscientious, he should be made to confess the offence". By so doing he becomes "pure" again. ⁴ majjhattenā bhavitabban, he should be neutral, indifferent, not taking sides. ⁵ saṃsandanā, application, conclusion—in regard to what are and are not offences. ⁶ I.e. of the meaning. ⁷ I.e. the question put by the individual (presumably the one who asked the original question)—such a question need not be answered. Cf. the 4 questions at Milinda's Questions i.202f., where other references are given. ⁸ savacaniya, see Vin.2.5, Vin.2.22, Vin.2.276. ⁹ palibodha, see e.g. Kd.7.13. ¹⁰ As to whether there is a defect or not. ¹¹ ṭhānāṭhānagamana. Vin-a.1365f. explains that this is for discovering whether there is an offence or not, and whether it is a slight or a serious one. ¹² See Vin.2.196, Vin.3.21. ¹³ Vin-a.1366: "Agreement on an investigation and knowing the state of what has been well and badly divided—the four". Cf. Vin.1.65, Vin.4.51. Whether catu, "the four," refers to suttaso (clause by clause, or rule by rule) anubyāñjanaso (by sentence) of Vin.1.65, and to mātikāto (by summary) vibhaṅgato (by Suttavibhaṅga), I am not sure. ¹⁴ Vin-a.1366 "for mastery and power (over themselves) and they are placed in a position of trust, in the place of the eldest. The meaning is that these are not to be despised (or sent away)"; apasādetabbā. ¹⁵ Cf. SN.ii.32, AN.v.2, etc.

being remorseful is for the sake of joy, joy is for the sake of delight, delight is for the sake of tranquillity, tranquillity is for the sake of happiness, happiness is for the sake of concentration, concentration is for the sake of knowledge and vision of what has come to be as it really-is, knowledge and vision of what has come to be as it really is is for the sake of turning away, turning away is for the sake of dispassion, dispassion is for the sake of freedom, freedom is for the sake of the knowledge and vision of freedom,¹ the knowledge and vision of freedom is for the sake of final nibbāna without clinging. According to this meaning is the talk.² According to this meaning is the counsel. According to this meaning is the causal relation. According to this meaning is the lending ear,³ that is to say the deliverance of mind without clinging.

Prv.14.1.3

Be careful of the proper procedure being intent on what was done with skill by him of discernment,
Of what was well spoken in conformity with the rules of training,
not destroying a bourn in a future state.⁴

Vin.5.165

Ignorant as to subject,⁵ falling away, offence,⁶ provenance,⁷ kind,⁸
He does not know the earlier and the later (speech)
nor likewise what was and was not done,

And he is ignorant too as to formal act
and legal question and decidings,
Impassioned, corrupted and astray,
he proceeds from fear, from confusion,⁹

BD.6.268

And he is not skilled as to layings down

¹ Cf. SN.ii.32, AN.v.2, etc. ² Vin-a.1366: this talk on Vinaya. ³ When one has lent ear to this successive talk, knowledge arises, Vin-a.1366. ⁴ Verse as at Vin.5.158. ⁵ Of offences beginning with Monks' Defeat. ⁶ The sevenfold (classes of) offences. ⁷ The town where a rule of training was laid down ⁸ ākāra, defined on Vin.5.166. ⁹ These are two of the four wrong courses.

and is not versed in pacifying,¹
 One who has obtained a faction,
 conscienceless, (of) dark deed, disrespectful:
 A monk such as this is called one who should not be shown deference.²

Knowledgeable as to subject, falling away, offence, provenance, kind,
 He comprehends the earlier and the later (speech) and likewise what was and was not done,

And he is knowledgeable as to formal act
 and legal question and decidings,
 Unimpassioned, uncorrupt, not astray,
 he proceeds not from fear, from confusion,

And he is skilled as to layings down and is knowledgeable as to pacifying,
 One who has obtained a faction,
 conscientious, (of) bright deed, respectful:
 A monk such as this is called one who should be shown deference.

Concluded is the Lesser Collection

ITS SUMMARY

With a humble mind, he may ask,
 respect, for the Order, not for an individual,
 A clause is for the sake of reference and for furthering Discipline:
 The summary of the Lesser Collection is made into this one recital.

¹ nijjhatti. Vin-a.1367 says inability (asammatthatā) to see cause or reason, karāṇa, and absence of cause or reason; thus, incapable of appreciating reasons, he is incapable of knowing how to pacify. Cf. nijjhan(t)tibala a Ps.ii.168 and nijjhāpeti on Vin.5.166. ² appatikkhā as at AN.v.248.

15. THE GREATER COLLECTION

Prv.15.1.1
BD.6.269
Vin.5.166

When a monk who is engaged in conflict is speaking in an Order he should know the subject, he should know the falling away, he should know the offence, he should know the provenance, he should know the kind, he should know the earlier and the later, he should know what has been done and what has not been done, he should know the formal act, he should know the legal question, he should know the deciding; he should not follow a wrong course from partiality, he should not follow a wrong course from hatred ... confusion ... fear; he should make known¹ on an occasion for making known, he should pacify² on an occasion for pacification, he should consider on an occasion for consideration,³ he should be gracious on an occasion for graciousness; saying, “I have obtained a faction” he should not despise another faction; saying “I have heard much”, he should not despise one who has heard little; saying “I am very senior” he should not despise one more recently ordained; he should not speak about what is not attained,⁴ he should not set aside what is attained by rule and by discipline, he should settle that legal question as it is settled according to the rule, according to Discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction.

Prv.15.1.2

“He should know the subject” means: he should know the subject of the eight offences involving Defeat, he should know the subject of the twenty-three offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order ... of the two Undetermined offences ... of the forty-two offences of Forfeiture ... of the hundred and eighty-eight offences of Expiation ... of the twelve offences to be Confessed ... of offences of wrong-doing, he should know the subject of offences of wrong speech.

¹ saññāpeti as at Vin.2.73; “win over” at Vin.2.197. ² nijjhāpeti as at Vin.2.73, “dispose favourably”. Commentary has nothing to say. The meaning here seems to be to burn, away, i.e. wrong mental states. ³ pekkheti as at Vin.2.73. ⁴ asampattaṃ na byāharitabbaṃ. This phrase appears to occur only here and below, BD.6.170, in the “explanation”.

“He should know falling away” means: he should know falling away from moral habit ... from good behaviour ... from right view ... from right mode of livelihood.

BD.6.270

“He should know the offence” means: he should know offence involving Defeat, he should know an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order ... grave offence ... offence of Expiation ... offence to be Confessed ... offence of wrong doing, he should know an offence of wrong speech.

“He should know the provenance” means: he should know the provenance of the eight offences involving Defeat he should know the provenance of the twenty-three offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order ... he should know the provenance of offences of wrong speech.

“He should know the kind” means: he should know an Order from its kind, he should know a group from its kind, he should know an individual ... the reprover ... the one who is being reprovved from his kind. He should know an Order from its kind means: “Now is this Order capable or not of settling this legal question according to the rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction?” Thus should he know an Order from its kind. He should know a group ... an individual from his kind means: “Now, is this individual capable ... instruction?” Thus should he know an individual from his kind. He should know a reprover from his kind means: “I am not sure whether or not this venerable one is reproving the other with the support of the five things¹ or not.” Thus should he know a reprover from his kind. He should know the one who is being reprovved from his kind means: “I am not sure whether this venerable one is supported or not by two things: truth and being without anger.”² Thus should he know the one who is being reprovved from his kind.

Vin.5.167

“He should know the earlier and the later” means: “I wonder whether this venerable one passes on from subject to subject³ or if he passes on from falling away to falling away or if he passes on from offence to offence or if, having despised, he approves, or if, having approved, he despises or shelves the question by asking another or whether he does not?" Thus should he know the earlier and the later.

BD.6.271

¹ These are possibly the five bhūmi as given at Vin.5.161, where they also called, as above, pañca dhammā. ² Cf. Prv.13.4, Vin.5.161 above. ³ Vin-a.1368 “He may say: ‘Matter for the first Defeat was seen by me or heard of by me.’ But on being asked again, he says, ‘Matter for the first Defeat was not seen or heard of by me. Matter for the second Defeat was seen or heard’.” This whole paragraph is about contradicting oneself.

"He should know what has been done and what has not been done" means: he should know sexual intercourse, he should know the proper order of sexual intercourse, he should know the earlier part of sexual intercourse. "He should know that sexual intercourse" means: that consummation between a couple is to be known. "He should know the proper order of sexual intercourse" means: the monk takes hold of another's male organ with his own mouth. "He should know the earlier part of sexual intercourse" means: the different colours (of semen), physical contact, lewd speech, ministering to one's own pleasure, intercourse.¹

Prv.15.1.3

"He should know the formal act" means: he should know the sixteen formal acts: he should know the four formal acts for which leave should be asked,² he should know the four formal acts at which a motion is put,³ he should know the four formal acts at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution,⁴ he should know the four formal acts at which a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times.⁵ "He should know the legal question" means: he should know the four legal questions: he should know the legal question concerning disputes ... concerning obligations.

Prv.15.1.3

"He should know the formal act" means: he should know the sixteen formal acts: he should know the four formal acts for which leave should be asked,⁶ he should know the four formal acts at which a motion is put,⁷ he should know the four formal acts at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution,⁸ he should know the four formal acts at which a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times.⁹ "He should know the legal question" means: he should know the four legal questions: he should know the legal question concerning disputes ... concerning obligations.

¹ dhanamanuppadānaṃ. Commentary calls this sañcaritta, which is either acting as a go-between (Vin.3.137) or dealings with women (Mi.266). ² See Vin.2.89. Vin-a.1368 says "beginning with 'not by rule, in an incomplete assembly'. This is the meaning of the others. Thus the four cycles are sixteen". ³ See Vin.2.89. ⁴ See Vin.2.89. ⁵ See Vin.2.89. ⁶ See Vin.2.89. Vin-a.1368 says "beginning with 'not by rule, in an incomplete assembly'. This is the meaning of the others. Thus the four cycles are sixteen". ⁷ See Vin.2.89. ⁸ See Vin.2.89. ⁹ See Vin.2.89.

“He should know the deciding” means: he should know the seven deciding: he should know verdict in the presence of ... he should know covering over (as) with grass.

“He should not follow a wrong course from partiality” means: How does one who is following a wrong course from partiality follow the wrong course from partiality? As to this, someone saying, “This is my preceptor or teacher one who shares a cell or pupil or fellow-preceptor or fellow-teacher or friend or intimate or blood-relation,” out of compassion for him, protecting him, he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma, he explains Dhamma as non-dhamma ... (see Kd.10.5.4, etc.) ... explains not a very bad offence as very bad offence. Because of these eighteen points, he is following a wrong course from partiality, is faring along for what is not the welfare of the many-folk, not the happiness of the many-folk, for what is not the goal, for the woe, the anguish of the many-folk, and of devas and mankind.¹ If, because of these eighteen points, he is following a wrong course from partiality, (then) done for, destroyed, he looks after self, is blameworthy and is to be blamed by learned men, and he sets up much demerit. Following a wrong course from partiality it is thus that he follows a wrong course from partiality.

“He should not follow a wrong course from hatred” means: How does one who is following a wrong course from hatred follow the wrong course from hatred? As to this, someone saying, “He has done me harm,” bears ill-will; thinking, “he is doing me harm” ... “he will do me harm”, he bears ill-will; thinking, “He has done harm, is doing harm, will do harm to someone dear to me and liked by me,” he bears ill-will; thinking, “He has done good, is doing good, will do good to someone not dear to me or liked by me,” he bears ill-will. Because of these nine occasions for ill-will,² (feeling) ill-will, resentment, angry, overcome by anger, he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. If, because of these eighteen points, he is following a wrong course from hatred ... it is thus that he follows a wrong course from hatred.

¹ Because the Order, the nuns, the lay-followers and the devatās who guard them and others are split into two. ² Stated but not explained in the Nonads of Prv.7.

Prv.15.1.4

BD.6.272

Vin.5.168

BD.6.273

“He should not follow a wrong course from confusion means: How does one who is following a wrong course from confusion follow the wrong course from confusion? Impassioned, he follows it on account of passion; corrupted, he follows it on account of hatred; astray, he follows it on account of confusion; defiled,¹ he follows it on account of view—astray, altogether astray, overcome by confusion, he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. If, because of these eighteen points, he is following a wrong course from confusion ... it is thus that he follows a wrong course from confusion.

“He should not follow a wrong course from fear” means: How does one who is following a wrong course from fear follow the wrong course from fear? As to this, someone saying: “This one, relying on what is uneven² or relying on the thicket³ (of wrong views) or relying on (someone who is) powerful,⁴ pitiless and harsh, will make a danger to life or a danger to the Brahma-faring⁵” —terrified by that fear he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. If, because of these eighteen points, he is following a wrong course from fear ... It is thus that he follows a wrong course from fear.

Of him who Dhamma
oversteps from partiality, hatred, fear, confusion,
The repute fades
as in the dark fortnight does the moon.⁶

Vin.5.169

How does one not follow a wrong course from partiality? Explaining non-dhamma as non-dhamma he does not follow a wrong course from partiality; explaining Dhamma as Dhamma he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... explaining not a very bad offence as not a very bad offence, he does not follow a wrong course from partiality. It is thus that he does not follow a wrong course from partiality.

How does one not follow a wrong course from hatred ... a wrong course from confusion ... a wrong course from fear? Explaining non-dhamma as ¹ parāmaṭṭha. ² See AN.iii.285: the ariyan disciple gets rid of the uneven. ³ See MN.i.8, MN.i.485. ⁴ Vin-a.1368 says: relying on powerful well-known monks. ⁵ See Kd.2.15.4.

⁶ AN.ii.18, DN.iii.182, ascribed to the Teacher.

non-dhamma ... explaining not a very bad offence as not a very bad offence, he does not follow a wrong course from fear. It is thus that he does not follow wrong course from fear.

BD.6.274

Of him who Dhamma oversteps not from partiality, hatred, fear, confusion,
The repute increases
as in the bright fortnight does the moon.¹

How does one “make known on an occasion for making known”? Explaining non-dhamma as non-dhamma he makes known on an occasion for making known ... explaining not a very bad offence as not a very bad offence he makes known on an occasion for making known. Thus does he make known on an occasion for making known.

Prv.15.1.5

How does one “pacify on an occasion for pacification”? Explaining non-dhamma as non-dhamma he pacifies on an occasion for pacification ... Thus does he pacify on an occasion for pacification.

How does one “consider on an occasion for consideration”? ... How is one “gracious on an occasion for graciousness”? Explaining non-dhamma as non-dhamma ... he is gracious on an occasion for graciousness ... Thus is he gracious on an occasion for graciousness.

Prv.15.1.6

How, “saying ‘I have obtained a faction’”, does he despise another faction? As to this, there is someone who has obtained a faction, obtained a following, a faction-man² having relations.³ Thinking, “This one has not obtained a faction, not obtained a following, he is not a faction-man having relations,” despising him he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... he explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. Thus, thinking, “I have obtained a faction,” he despises another faction.

How, “saying ‘I have heard much’” does he despise one who has heard little? As to this, someone who has heard much remembers what he has heard, is a store-house of the heard. Thinking, “This one has heard little, has little of the tradition,¹ remembers little,”² despising him he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... he explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. Thus, thinking, “I have heard much” he despises one who has heard little.

BD.6.275

¹ AN.ii.18, DN.iii.182, ascribed to the Teacher. ² pakkhavā ñātivā; apparently neither word is found elsewhere in the Pali Canon. ³ pakkhavā ñātivā; apparently neither word is found elsewhere in the Pali Canon.

How, “saying ‘I am very senior’” does he despise one more recently ordained? As to this, there is an Elder of longstanding, long gone forth. Thinking, “This one is newly ordained, he is not esteemed,³ he does not know what is appointed,⁴ his bidding will not be done,” despising him he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... he explains not a very bad offence as a very bad offence. Thus, thinking, “I am very senior,” he despises one more recently ordained.

Vin.5.170

Prv.15.1.7

“He should not speak about what is not attained” means: he should not cause a burden to be put down that has not been put down.⁵

“He should not set aside what is attained by rule and by discipline” means: he should not set aside by rule and by discipline that matter for the sake of which an Order has been convened.

“According to the rule” means: according to fact, according to the subject. “According to Discipline” means: having reproved (him) he makes (him) remember. “According to the Teacher’s instruction” means: by furnishing a motion, by furnishing a proclamation. “He should settle that legal question as it is settled according to the rule, according to Discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction” means: the one who is reprovng should be asked by the adjudicator: “If you, your reverence, suspend this monk’s Invitation ... (Kd.4.16.10-15) ... Did you suspect, having heard from a monk ... from disciples of (other) sects?”

BD.6.276

If the seen corresponds with the seen,
the seen being in agreement with the seen,
If, concerning the seen, he does not consent,

¹ appāgama appadhara. These two words again are apparently not found elsewhere in the Pali Canon. ² appāgama appadhara. These two words again are apparently not found elsewhere in the Pali Canon. ³ appaññāto, as at Vin.4.231, Vin.4.310. ⁴ appakataññū, or, not properly versed in, as at Vin.2.199. ⁵ On burden, bhāra, see Vism.512 where it should be regarded as sacca, truth. On otiṇṇa, put down, see above Vin.5.161. Also see otarati at AN.ii.168, where it appears to mean “to tally”, i.e. to lie beside. The history of otarati has still to be written.

he is one suspecting impurity:
That man, on his acknowledgement,
may carry out Invitation with him.

If the heard corresponds with the heard ... (see Prv.13.2.)

If the sensed corresponds with the sensed ...
Invitation with him.

Prv.15.1.8

“What was seen by you?” — which are the questions?

“How was it seen by you?” — which are the questions?

“When was it seen by you?” — which are the questions?

“Where was it seen by you?” — which are the questions?¹

“What was seen by you?” means: questions on the subject, questions on fallings away, questions on offences, questions on conduct.² Questions on the subject means: the subject of the eight offences involving Defeat, the subject of the twenty-three offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; the subject of the forty-two offences of Forfeiture, the subject of the hundred and eighty-eight offences of Expiation, the subject of the twelve offences to be Confessed, the subject of the offences of wrong-doing, the subject of the offences of wrong speech. Questions on fallings away means: questions on falling away from moral habit, questions on falling away from good behaviour, questions on falling away from right view, questions on falling away from right mode of livelihood. Questions on offences means: questions on offences involving Defeat, questions on offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, questions on offences that are grave ... questions on offences of wrong speech. Questions on conduct means: questions on the consummation of a couple.³

“How was it seen by you?” means: questions on characteristics, questions on the postures, questions on kinds, questions on changes. Questions on characteristics means: tall or short or dark or fair. Questions on the postures means: walking or standing or sitting down or lying down. Questions on kinds means: the attributes of a householder or the attributes of members of (other) sects or the attributes of one who has gone forth. Questions on changes¹ means: walking or standing or sitting down or lying down.

BD.6.277

¹ Questions as at Kd.4.16.13. ² ajjhācāra as at Kd.1.36.8. At Vin.3.121 the meaning appears transgression, i.e. bad conduct. ³ Word as at Vin.5.167.

Vin.5.171

“When was it seen by you?” means: questions on the time,² questions on the occasion,³ questions on the day, questions on the season. Questions on the time means: in the morning time or at the time of mid-day or at evening time. Questions on the occasion means: on a morning occasion or at a mid-day occasion or on an evening occasion. Questions on the day means: before the meal or after the meal or during the night or by day or in the dark⁴ or in the moonlight.⁵ Questions on the seasons means: in the cold weather or in the hot weather or in the rains.

“Where was it seen by you?” means: questions about the place, questions about the ground,⁶ questions about the quarters,⁷ questions about the locality.⁸ Questions about the place means: on (in) the ground or on (in) the earth⁹ or on Earth¹⁰ or in the world. Questions about the ground means: on (in) the ground or on a mountain-Slope or on a rock or in a temple.¹¹ Questions about the quarters means: in an eastern quarter or in a western quarter or in a northern quarter or in a southern quarter. Questions about locality means: in an eastern locality or in a western locality or in a northern locality or in a southern locality.

Concluded is the Greater Collection

ITS SUMMARY

BD.6.278

Subject, provenance, kind, earlier and later, what has been done and has not been done, Formal act, and legal question too, deciding, and following from partiality, /
From hatred, from confusion, from fear too,

¹ vippakāra. It is rather odd that this is defined in the same way as are the postures. ² kāla.

³ samaya, also meaning time; see DN-a.251. ⁴ kāle vā juṅhe vā. These two words can also mean the dark and the bright halves of a month. ⁵ kāle vā juṅhe vā. These two words can also mean the dark and the bright halves of a month. ⁶ bhūmi, ground or soil, among other meanings. ⁷ okāsa, open space, so, apparently, quarter or direction. ⁸ padesa, region, district. ⁹ pathavī, the usual word for the earth: the first of the four great primaries, the element of solidity, extension or expansion. ¹⁰ dharaṇī, Earth as a name, “of the pregnant one.” ¹¹ pāsāda as long house, palace, mansion or terrace, does not seem to fit very well here. Unfortunately the Commentary has stopped some way previous to this.

making known, and about pacification,
Consideration, gracious, "I have a faction," one who has heard, and about a very senior one, /
And the not attained, the attained,
by rule, and by Discipline,
Also by the Teacher's instruction:
the explanation of the Greater Collection.

16. SYNOPSIS OF KAṬHINA

Prv.16.1.1
BD.6.279
Vin.5.172

By whom is kaṭhina cloth not formally made¹? By whom is kaṭhina cloth formally made? How is kaṭhina cloth not formally made? How is kaṭhina cloth formally made?

“By whom is kaṭhina cloth not formally made?” means: kaṭhina cloth is not formally made by two individuals: by him who does not formally make it and by him who does not give thanks.² Kaṭhina cloth is not formally made by these two individuals.

“By whom is kaṭhina cloth formally made?” means: kaṭhina cloth is formally made by two individuals: by him who formally makes it and by him who gives thanks. Kaṭhina cloth is formally made by these two individuals.

“How is kaṭhina cloth not formally made?” means: in twenty-four ways is kaṭhina cloth not formally made. Kaṭhina cloth is not formally made merely by marking it³ ... (Kd.7.1.5) ... Thus also is kaṭhina cloth not formally made.

Insinuation⁴ is called: he insinuates, saying “I will formally make kaṭhina out of this cloth”. Roundabout talk is called: he makes roundabout talk, saying “I will get⁵ the cloth for kaṭhina cloth by means of this roundabout talk”. Temporary is called: it is called a gift that should not be appropriated. Postponement is called: there are two kinds of postponement: a postponement in carrying out (doing) and a postponement of possessions. To be forfeited is called: if the dawn breaks while it is being made.¹ In these twenty-four ways is kaṭhina cloth not formally made.

¹ anattata, not formally made, see BD.2.26, n.3. Kd.7 is devoted to Kaṭhina. There was a certain formality together with strict regulations for the proper making up of the kaṭhina cloth into robes at the end of the rains. Thus “formally make” seems a better translation for attharati (spread) while keeping karoti for simply making, making up. Cf. Vinayavinicchayā 2697, called Kaṭhinakkhandhaka. ² See Kd.7.1.6. ³ See Kd.7.1.5. ⁴ nimittakamma, or perhaps literally, making a sign; see BD.4.355, n.3. The words commented on in this paragraph occur in Kd.7, for all of which see BD.4.355 and Vin-a.1111 which is the part of the Commentary on the Kaṭhinakkhandhaka to which Vin-a.1370 refers. ⁵ nibbattessāmi, I will make it to be produced, to come into being.

BD.6.280

“How is kaṭhina cloth formally made?” means in seventeen ways is kaṭhina cloth formally made. Kaṭhina cloth is formally made when it is unsoiled ... (see Kd.7.1.6) Thus also is kaṭhina cloth formally made. In these seventeen ways is kaṭhina cloth formally made.

Prv.16.2.1

With the formal making of kaṭhina cloth how many things are produced? With the formal making of kaṭhina cloth fifteen things are produced²: eight grounds,³ two impediments,⁴ five advantages.⁵ With the formal making of kaṭhina cloth these fifteen things are produced.

Prv.16.2.2

Vin.5.173

Of a means⁶ how many things are the condition through the contiguous condition, the condition through the immediate condition, the condition through the foundation condition, the condition through the inducement condition, the condition through the pre-arising condition, the condition through the post-arising condition, the condition through the co-arising condition⁷?

Of a former action⁸ how many things are the condition through the contiguous condition ... ?

Of a removal⁹ how many things, of an allotting¹⁰ how many things, of a formal making how many things, of the grounds and the impediments how many things, of the clothing¹¹ how many things are the condition through the contiguous condition ... the condition through the co-arising condition?

Prv.16.2.3

A former action is the condition of the means through a contiguous con-

¹ Vin-a.1111 interprets this to mean: “to be forfeited during the night”; and then it gives the Parivāra exegesis. ² At Vin-a.1112 it is said “all this is gone into in the Parivāra”. ³ mātikā, see Kd.7.1.7; also BD.2.6, n.5 where the eight are enumerated. ⁴ palibodha, see Kd.7.13. ⁵ This refers to Kd.7.1.3. See Vinayavinicchaya verse 2725. ⁶ payoga. ⁷ I take these kinds of paccaya, condition, from NYANATILOKA’S Buddhist Dictionary, Colombo, 1956, s.v. paccaya, though this may be to take them out of their rightful context. ⁸ pubbakaraṇa. Vin-a.1369 specifies “beginning with washing”. ⁹ paccuddhāra, see Bu-NP.2, Bu-NP.3, Bu-NP.18, and BD.2.22, n.3. Also see below Vin.5.174 which clearly relates the removal to robes, and Vin-a.1369 which says it is the removal of the outer cloak and so on; this probably refers to the old robes. ¹⁰ adhiṭṭhāna, i.e. of the kaṭhina robe-material. See Bu-NP.1.3.1.1, Bu-NP.1.4.1 and note at BD.2.7. ¹¹ Text reads vatthu, but Vin-a.7369 reads vattha, “clothing,” a reading it supports by saying vattha means the outer cloak and so on.

BD.6.281 dition, it is the condition through an immediate condition, it is the condition through a foundation condition, it is the condition through an inducement condition. A means is a condition of a former action through a pre-arising condition. A former action is the condition of the means through a post-arising condition. Fifteen things are the condition through a co-arising condition.

Prv.16.2.4 Removal is a condition of a former action through a contiguous condition, it is the condition through an immediate condition, it is the condition through a foundation condition, it is the condition through an inducement condition. A former action is the condition of removal through a pre-arising condition. Removal is the condition of a former action through a post-arising condition. Fifteen things are the condition through a co-arising condition.

Prv.16.2.5 Allotting is a condition of removal through a contiguous condition ... an immediate condition ... a foundation condition ... an inducement condition. Removal is a condition of allotting through a pre-arising condition. Allotting is a condition of removal through a post-arising condition. Fifteen things are the condition through a co-arising condition.

Prv.16.2.6 Formal making is a condition of allotting through a contiguous ... immediate ... foundation ... inducement-condition. Allotting is a condition of formal making through a pre-arising condition. Formal making is a condition of allotting through a post-arising condition. Fifteen things are the condition through a co-arising condition.

Prv.16.2.7 The grounds and the impediments are the condition of formal making through a contiguous ... immediate ... foundation ... inducement condition. The formal making is the condition of the grounds and the impediments through a pre-arising condition. The grounds and impediments are the condition of the formal making through a post-arising condition. Fifteen things are the condition through a co-arising condition.

Prv.16.2.8
Vin.5.174 Expectation¹ and lack of expectation² are the condition of clothing through a contiguous ... immediate ... foundation ... inducement condition. Clothing is the condition of expectation and lack of expectation through a pre-arising condition. Expectation and lack of expectation are the condition of clothing through a post-arising condition. Fifteen things are the condition through a co-arising condition.

BD.6.282

¹ āsā, anāsā. See Vin.1.259ff., and BD.2.6, n.4. ² āsā, anāsā. See Vin.1.259ff., and BD.2.6, n.4.

What is the provenance, what the arising, what the birth what the source, what the bringing forth, what the origin of a former action? What is the provenance ... what the origin of a removal? What is the provenance ... what the origin of an allotting ... of formal making? What is the provenance what the origin of grounds and impediments ... of expectation and lack of expectation?

Prv.16.3.1

Means is the provenance, means is the arising ... means is the origin of former action. Former action is the provenance ... the origin of removal. Removal is the provenance ... of allotting. Allotting is the provenance ... of formal making. Formal making is the provenance ... of allotting. The grounds and the impediments are the provenance ... of formal making. Expectation and lack of expectation are the provenance of clothing ... the origin of clothing.

Prv.16.3.2

What is the provenance, what the arising ... what the origin of means ... former action ... removal ... allotting ... formal making ... the ground? and the impediments ... clothing? What is the provenance ... what the origin of expectation and lack of expectation?

Cause is the provenance, cause the arising ... of means ... Cause is the provenance, cause is ... the origin of expectation and lack of expectation.

Prv.16.3.3

What is the provenance ... of means ... What is the provenance ... what the origin of expectation and lack of expectation?

Condition is the provenance, condition the arising ... of means ... Condition is the provenance, condition is ... the origin of expectation and lack of expectation.

Prv.16.3.4

With how many things is former action classified? Former action is classified with seven things: with washing, with calculating,¹ with cutting,² with tacking,³ with sewing, with dyeing, with making allowable. Former action is classified with these seven things.

BD.6.283

With how many things is removal classified? Removal is classified with three things: with outer cloak, with upper robe, with inner robe.⁴

¹ vicāraṇā, as at Kd.7.1.5. ² Kd.7.1.5 ³ bandhana, Kd.7.1.5. ⁴ On the three robes see BD.2.1, n.2.

With how many things is allotting classified? ... with three things: with outer cloak, with upper robe, with inner robe.

Prv.16.3.5 With how many things is formal making classified? Formal making is classified with one thing: with breaking into speech.¹

Vin.5.175 How many roots of kaṭhina cloth, how many matters, how many materials²? One root of kaṭhina cloth: the Order³; three matters: outer cloak, upper robe, inner robe⁴; six materials: linen, cotton, silk, wool, coarse hemp, canvas.

Prv.16.3.6 What is the beginning of kaṭhina cloth, what is in the middle, what is the ending? Former action is the beginning of kaṭhina cloth, carrying out is in the middle, formal making is the ending.

Prv.16.3.7 When an individual is possessed of how many qualities is he incapable of formally making kaṭhina cloth? When an individual is possessed of how many qualities is he capable of formally making kaṭhina cloth? When an individual is possessed of eight qualities he is incapable of formally making kaṭhina cloth. When an individual is possessed of eight qualities he is capable of formally making kaṭhina cloth. Possessed of which eight qualities is the individual incapable of formally making kaṭhina cloth? He does not know former action ... removal ... allotting ... formal making ... ground ... impediment ... withdrawal⁵ ... advantage. Possessed of these eight qualities an individual is incapable of formally making kaṭhina cloth. Possessed of which eight qualities is the individual capable of formally making kaṭhina cloth? He knows former action he knows advantage. Possessed of these eight qualities an individual is capable of formally making kaṭhina cloth.

BD.6.284 Prv.16.3.8 Of how many individuals are formal makings of kaṭhina cloth not effective? Of how many individuals are formal makings of kaṭhina cloth effective? Of three individuals formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are not effective. Of three individuals formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are effective. Of which three individuals are formal makings of kaṭhina cloth not effective? If, standing outside the boundary, he gives thanks¹; if, giving thanks, he does not break into speech; if breaking into speech, he does not inform another (monk).² Of these three individuals formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are not effective. Of which three individuals are formal makings of kaṭhina cloth effective? If, standing on the boundary, he gives thanks³; if, giving thanks, he breaks into speech; if, breaking into speech, he informs another (monk). Of these three individuals formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are effective.

¹ Vin-a.1370 says this means that (the monk) thinks "I am formally making kaṭhina robes into this outer cloak, into this upper robe, into this inner robe". ² bhūmi is a word of several meanings to which we must now add that of material or stuff, i.e. basis. ³ The Order has to give the kaṭhina material to a monk, Kd.7.1.4. ⁴ Only if the three robes are made up is kaṭhina cloth properly made, Kd.7.1.5. ⁵ ubbhāra, see Vin.5.136 in Prv.16.3.8. See Vin.1.255, Vin.1.300, BD.2.5, n.3, and Vin-a.1113.

Prv.16.3.9

How many formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are not effective? How many formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are effective? Three formal makings ... are not effective. Three formal makings ... are effective. Which three formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are not effective? There is failure as to clothing, and failure as to time, and failure as to making.⁴ These three formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are not effective. Which three formal makings of kaṭhina cloth are effective? There is success as to clothing, success as to time, and success as to making. These three formal makings ... are effective.

Prv.16.4.1

Kaṭhina cloth should be known, the formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known, the month for the formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known, failure in the formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known, success in the formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known, insinuation should be known, roundabout talking should be known, what is temporary should be known, postponement should be known, what is to be forfeited should be known.

BD.6.285

Vin.5.176

“Kaṭhina cloth should be known” means: the classification of these very things,⁵ the combination, the name,⁶ the denomination, the giving of a name, the interpretation, the distinctive sign, the expression, — that is to say, kaṭhina cloth.

“The month for the formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known”⁷ means: the last month of the rains should be known.

“Failure in the formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known” means:

¹ Kd.7.1.5. ² Vin-a.1109 gives this interpretation. ³ Kd.7.1.6 ⁴ Explained at Vin-a.1370 as (i) unallowable cloth, (ii) what is given today by the donors is given tomorrow by the Order for the formal making, and (iii) though cut out today it is not made. For these clauses Cf. Kd.7.1.5. ⁵ Vin-a.1370 says material shape and so on. ⁶ This term and the following are at Ds.1306. ⁷ “The formal making of the kaṭhina cloth” is given a long paragraph at the end of Prv.16.4.4.

the failure in the formal making of kaṭhina cloth in the twenty-four ways should be known.¹

“Success in the formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known” means: the success in the formal making of kaṭhina cloth in the seventeen ways should be known.²

“Insinuation³ should be known” means: he insinuates, saying, “I will formally make kaṭhina cloth with this cloth.”

“Roundabout talk should be known” means: he makes roundabout talk, saying, “I will get the cloth for kaṭhina cloth by this roundabout talk.”

“What is temporary should be known” means: a gift that should not be appropriated should be known.

“Postponement should be known” means: the two postponements should be known: the postponement in carrying out and the postponement of possessions.

“What is to be forfeited should be known” means: if the dawn breaks while it is being made.

“The formal making of kaṭhina cloth should be known” means: if cloth for kaṭhina cloth has accrued to an Order, what line of action should be taken by the Order, what line of action should be taken by (the monk) who is the formal maker of it, what line of action should be taken by (the monk) who gives the thanks⁴? A monk who is a formal maker of kaṭhina cloth should be given by the Order a formal act at which motion is followed by one resolution. Kaṭhina cloth should be made that same day by a monk who is the formal maker of it after he has washed it, smoothed it,⁵ calculated it, cut it sewn it, dyed it, made it allowable. If he wants formally to make kaṭhina cloth into an outer cloak the old outer cloak must be removed, a new outer cloak allotted, and he should break into speech, saying, “I will formally make kaṭhina cloth into this outer cloak.” If he wants formally ... to make an upper robe ... If he wants formally to make kaṭhina cloth into an inner robe ... speech, saying, “I will formally make kaṭhina cloth into this inner robe.” After the monk who is the formal maker of kaṭhina cloth has approached

BD.6.286

¹ Kd.7.1.5. ² Kd.7.1.6. ³ For this terms and the following four see Vin.5.172. ⁴ Cf. Vin-a.1109 Which points out that in the Parivāra the kaṭhina is made by two monks: the one who makes it and the one who gives the thanks. ⁵ vimajjitvā, not among the processes given at Kd.7.

the Order arranged his outer robe over one shoulder, stretched out his joined palms in salutation, he should speak thus to it: “Venerable sirs, the Order’s kaṭhina cloth has been formally made, the formal making of kaṭhina cloth was according to regulation; give thanks.” After he has arranged his upper robe over one shoulder and has stretched forth his joined palms in salutation, he should be spoken to thus by those monks who gave the thanks: “Revered sir, the Order’s kaṭhina cloth has been formally made, the formal making of kaṭhina cloth was according to regulation; we are giving thanks.” After a monk who is a formal maker of kaṭhina cloth has approached several monks, arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, stretched out his joined palms in salutation, he should speak thus to them: “Venerable sirs, the Order’s kaṭhina cloth ... give thanks.” ... by those monks who give the thanks ... “ ... we are giving thanks”. After the monk who is a formal maker of kaṭhina cloth has approached one monk, ... he should speak thus to him: “Reverend sir ... give thanks.” After he has arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, stretched out his joined palms in salutation, he should be spoken to thus by the monk who is the giver of the thanks: “Reverend sir, the Order’s kaṭhina cloth has been formally made, the making of kaṭhina cloth was according to regulation; I am giving thanks.”

Vin.5.177

BD.6.287

Prv.16.5.1

An Order formally makes kaṭhina cloth, a group ... an individual formally makes kaṭhina cloth. An Order does not formally make kaṭhina cloth, a group does not ... an individual formally makes kaṭhina cloth. If the Order does not formally make kaṭhina cloth, if a group does not ... if an individual formally makes kaṭhina cloth: kaṭhina cloth is not formally made by the Order, kaṭhina cloth is not formally made by a group, kaṭhina cloth is formally made by an individual.

An Order recites the Pātimokkha, a group recites the Pātimokkha, an individual recites the Pātimokkha. An Order does not recite the Pātimokkha, a group does not recite the Pātimokkha, an individual recites the Pātimokkha. If an Order ... if a group does not recite the Pātimokkha, if an individual recites the Pātimokkha the Pātimokkha is not recited by an Order ... not recited by a group, the Pātimokkha is recited by an individual.

When an Order is complete, when a group is complete, on the recital by the individual the Pātimokkha is recited by an Order ... by a group ... by an individual. In the same way an Order does not formally make kaṭhina cloth, a group does not formally make kaṭhina cloth, an individual formally makes kaṭhina cloth: by the thanking of an Order, by the thanking of a group, by the formal making by an individual kaṭhina cloth is formally made by an Order ... by a group, kaṭhina cloth is formally made by an individual.

Prv.16.6.1

“Depending on his going away his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed¹
by the Kinsman of the Sun:
And I ask you this:
Which impediment is cut off first?”

Vin.5.178

“Depending on his going away
his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed
by the Kinsman of the Sun,
And I answer you this:
the robes-impediment is cut off first,
On his going outside the boundary the residence-impediment is cut off.”²

BD.6.288

“Depending on (his robes) being settled³
his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed
by the Kinsman of the Sun:
And I ask you this ... ”

“And I answer you this:
the residence-impediment is cut off first,
When the robes are settled
the robes-impediment is cut off.”

“Depending on his resolves⁴
his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed
by the Kinsman of the Sun:
And I ask you this ... ”

¹ Kd.7.2.1. See BD.4.358, n.7. ² Verse cited at Vin-a.1112. ³ Kd.7.2.1. ⁴ sanniṭṭhānantika, as at Kd.7.1.7, Kd.7.2.1; see BD.4.359, n.1. The line is quoted at Vin-a.1113.

“And I answer you this:
the two impediments are cut off simultaneously.”

“Depending on (the robe-material) being lost¹
his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed
by the Kinsman of the Sun:
And I ask you this ... ”

“And I answer you this:
the residence-impediment is cut off first,
When the robe is lost
the robes-impediment is cut off.”

“Depending on his hearing (the news)² his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed
by the Kinsman of the Sun:
And I ask you this ... ”

“And I answer you this:
the robes-impediment is cut off first,
On his hearing of it
the residence-impediment is cut off.”

“(Depending on) the disappointment of his expectation³ his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed
by the Kinsman of the Sun:
And I ask you this ... ”

“And I answer you this:
the residence-impediment is cut off first,
When there is disappointment of robe-material
the robes-impediment is cut off.”

“Depending on his crossing a boundary⁴
his kaṭhina (privileges) are called removed by the Kinsman of the Sun:

BD.6.289

¹ As at Kd.7.1.7, Kd.7.2.1. ² savanantika, as at Kd.7.1.7, Kd.7.2.1. ³ As at Kd.7.1.7. ⁴ As at Kd.7.1.7.

And I ask you this ...”

“And I answer you this:
the robes-impediment is cut off first,
When he has gone outside the boundary
the residence-impediment is cut off.”

“Depending on withdrawal together with¹ (the kaṭhina privileges)
his kaṭhina privileges are called removed
by the Kinsman of the Sun:
And I ask you this:
Which impediment is cut off first?”

“And I answer you this:
the two impediments are cut off simultaneously.”

Prv.16.7.1

How many removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are dependent on an Order, how many ... on an individual, how many removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are dependent neither on an Order nor on an individual? One removal of the kaṭhina (privileges) is dependent on an Order: a temporary withdrawal.² Four removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are dependent on an individual: that depending on his going away, that depending on (his robe) being settled, that depending on his resolves, that depending on his crossing the boundary. Four removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are dependent neither on an Order nor on an individual: that depending on (the robe) being lost, that depending on (his) hearing, the disappointment of an expectation, the withdrawal together with.³

Prv.16.7.2

Vin.5.179

How many removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed inside the boundary ... outside the boundary, how many removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) may be removed inside the boundary ... outside the boundary? Two removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed inside the boundary: temporary withdrawal and withdrawal together with. Three removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are removed outside the boundary: that depending on going away, that depending on hearing, that depending on crossing the boundary. Four removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) may be removed inside the boundary and may be removed outside the boundary; that depending on (the robes) being settled, that depending on resolves, that depending on (the robe) being lost, the disappointment of an expectation.

¹ sahubbhāra, “together with” meaning the withdrawal of other monks’ privileges. ² antarubbhāra, not in Kd.7 (?). ³ See Kd.7.1.7.

BD.6.290

Prv.16.7.3

How many removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are of one arising, one cessation? How many removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are of one arising, different cessations? Two removals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are of one arising, one cessation: temporary withdrawal, withdrawal together with. The remaining withdrawals of the kaṭhina (privileges) are of one arising, different cessations.

Concluded is the Synopsis of Kaṭhina

ITS SUMMARY

By whom, how, fifteen, things, and cause as provenance, Condition, classification, roots, and the beginning, eight individuals, /
Of three breakings, three, should be known,
and formal making compared with recital,
Impediment, depending on, boundaries, and about arising and cessation. /

*Concluded is the Parivāra*¹

¹ Parivāraṃ niṭṭhitam. Does this mean that the material so far presented is the original compilation, and that the remainder of the material is a later addition? See Introduction, p.xiii; also the final ending on Vin.5.226, Parivāro niṭṭhito.

17. UPĀLI-PENTADS

DIVISION 1: INDEPENDANTLY

Prv.17.1.1
BD.6.291
Vin.5.180

At that time the Buddha, the Lord was staying near Sāvattthī in the Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika’s monastery. Then the venerable Upāli approached the Lord; having approached and greeted the Lord he sat down at a respectful distance. As he was sitting down at a respectful distance, the venerable Upāli spoke thus to the Lord, “Possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should a monk not live independently for as long as life lasts?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities,¹ Upāli, he should not live independently for as long as life lasts. Of what five? If he does not know the Observance,² if he does not know the formal act for the Observance,³ if he does not know the Pātimokkha,⁴ if he does not know the recital of the Pātimokkha,⁵ if it is less than five years (since his ordination). Possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk should not live independently for as long as life lasts.

Possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may live independently for as long as life lasts. Of what five? If he knows the Observance ... the formal act for the Observance ... if it is five years or more than five years (since his ordination). Possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.1.2

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, he should not live independently for as long as life lasts. Of what five? If he does not know the Invitation, if he does not know the formal act for the Invitation, if he does not know the Pātimokkha, if he does not know the recital of the ¹ Cf. Vin.5.131. ² Vin-a.1371, he does not know the ninefold Observance. ³ Vin-a.1371, fourfold (as given at Vin.1.111). ⁴ Vin-a.1371, the two mātikās. ⁵ Vin-a.1371, fivefold for monks (as at Vin.1.112), fourfold for nuns.

Pātimokkha, if it is less than five years (since his ordination). Possessed of these five qualities ...

Possessed of five qualities, Upāli a monk may live independently for as long as life lasts. Of what five? If he knows the Invitation ... if it is five years or more than five years (since his ordination). Possessed of these five qualities ...

BD.6.292

Prv.17.1.3

If a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... he should not live independently. Of what five? If he does not know what is an offence and what is not an offence, if he does not know what is a slight and what a serious offence, if he does not know an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with, if he does not know what is a very bad offence and what is not a very bad one, if it is less than five years (since his ordination). Possessed of these five qualities ...

Possessed of five qualities ... may live independently. Of what five? If he knows what is an offence and what is not an offence ... if it is five years or more than five years (since his ordination). Possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk may live independently for as long as life lasts.”

Prv.17.1.4

Vin.5.181

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should he not ordain, not give guidance, and a novice not attend him?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him. Of what five? If he is not competent to tend or get (another) to tend a pupil or one who shares a cell and is ill, to allay or get (another) to allay dissatisfaction that has arisen, to dispel or get (another) to dispel, by means of Dhamma, remorse that has arisen,¹ to lead him in what pertains to Dhamma,² to lead him in what pertains to Discipline.³ Possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk should not ordain, he should not give guidance, a novice should not attend him.

Possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him. Of what five? If he is competent to tend ... to lead him in what pertains to Discipline. Possessed of these five qualities

¹ To here see Vin.1.64 (Kd.1.36.10). ² Also at Vin.1.64 (Kd.1.36.12), but not in the same pentad as the first three clauses in this paragraph. ³ Also at Vin.1.64 (Kd.1.36.12), but not in the same pentad as the first three clauses in this paragraph.

... a novice may attend him.

Prv.17.1.5

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... a novice should not attend him. Of what five? If he is not competent to train a pupil or one who shares a cell in the training regarding the fundamentals of conduct, to lead him in the training regarding the fundamentals of the Brahma-faring,¹ to lead him in the higher morality, to lead him in the higher thought, to lead him in the higher wisdom.² Possessed of these five qualities ... a novice should not attend him.

BD.6.293

Possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him. Of what five? If he is competent ... to lead him in the higher wisdom. Possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk may ordain, he may give guidance, a novice may attend him.”

Prv.17.1.6

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should a formal act (against him) be carried out?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a formal act (against him) should be carried out. Of what five? If he is unconscientious, and ignorant, and not a regular monk,³ and if he is one of wrong view, and has fallen away from a right mode of livelihood. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against him.

Prv.17.1.7

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a formal act (against him) should be carried out. Of what five? If, as regards morality, he has fallen away from moral habit, if, as regards behaviour, he has fallen away from good behaviour, if, as regards view, he has fallen away from right view, and if he is of wrong view, and has fallen away from a right mode of livelihood. Possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.1.8

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... Of what five? If he is possessed of bodily frivolity ... of verbal frivolity ... of bodily and verbal frivolity, if he is one of wrong view, if he has fallen away from a right mode of livelihood. Possessed of these five qualities ...

Vin.5.182

Prv.17.1.9

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... If he is possessed of bodily bad behaviour ... verbal bad behaviour ... bodily and verbal bad behaviour, and if he is of wrong view, and has fallen away from a right mode of livelihood. Possessed of these five qualities ...

¹ Also at Vin.1.64 \(Kd.1.36.12\). ² Apparently not in the relevant material at Vin.1. ³ These first three clauses are in the Triads, Vin.5.122, and similarly for the next six paragraphs.

Prv.17.1.10
BD.6.294

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities if he is possessed of harming by means of body ... harming by means of speech ... harming by means of body and speech, and if he is of wrong view, and has fallen away from a right mode of livelihood. Possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.1.11

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... If he is possessed of wrong bodily mode of livelihood ... wrong verbal mode of livelihood ... wrong bodily and verbal mode of livelihood, and if he is of wrong view, and has fallen away from a right mode of livelihood. Possessed of these five qualities ...

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... If having fallen into an offence and a (formal) act has been carried out against him, he ordains, gives guidance, makes a novice attend him, if he consents to an agreement as to an exhorter of nuns,¹ if, even though agreed upon, he exhorts nuns.² Possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.1.13

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... If he falls into that same offence for which a formal act was carried out (against him) by an Order, or into another that is similar, or into one that is worse,³ if he finds fault with the formal act, if he finds fault with one who carried it out.⁴ Possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.1.14

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against him. Of what five? If he speaks dispraise of the Buddha, if he speaks dispraise of Dhamma, if he speaks dispraise of the Order, and if he is one of wrong view, and if he has fallen away from a right mode of livelihood. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a formal act should not be carried out against him.”

The First Division: on Independently

ITS SUMMARY

Observance, Invitation, and offence, one who is ill, Fundamentals of conduct, and unconscientious, as to morality, and frivolity, /

¹ Cf. Kd.11.5.27 for these five clauses. ² Cf. Kd.11.5.27 for these five clauses. ³ First three clauses at Vin.5.122. ⁴ All five clauses at Kd.11.5.27.

BD.6.295 Wrong behaviour, harming, wrong, and as to offence itself,
That offence for which, of the Buddha:
the Compendium of the First Division.

DIVISION 2: NOT REVOKING

Prv.17.2.1

Prv.17.2.2

Prv.17.2.3

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should a formal act (against him) not be revoked?”

Vin.5.183

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a formal act (against him) should not be revoked. Of what five? If, having fallen into an offence and a (formal) act has been carried out (against him) ... (see Prv.17.1.12-14, reading should not be revoked instead of should be carried out (against him)) ... and if he has fallen away from right mode of livelihood. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a (formal) act (against him) should not be revoked.

Prv.17.2.4

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a (formal) act (against him) should not be revoked. Of what five? If he is unconscientious, and is ignorant, and is not a regular monk, and is one who chooses among customs,¹ and is one who does not fulfil the training. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a (formal) act (against him) should not be revoked.”

Prv.17.2.5

“When a monk who is engaged in conflict, revered sir, is approaching an Order, having set up how many states within himself should he approach the Order?”

“When a monk who is engaged in conflict, Upāli, is approaching an Order, having set up five states within himself should he approach the Order. What five? When a monk who is engaged in conflict,² Upāli, is approaching an Order he should approach the Order with a humble mind, with a mind (as though) it were removing dust; he should be skilled about seats and skilled about sitting down; he should sit down on a suitable seat without encroaching on (the space intended for) monks who are Elders and without keeping newly ordained monks from a seat; he should not talk in a desultory fashion nor about inferior (worldly) matters; he should speak Dhamma himself or should ask another to do so, nor should he disdain the ariyan silence. If, Upāli, an Order is carrying out (formal) acts that should be carried out by a complete Order, but if this does not seem right to the monk, then, giving an explanation of (his) views,¹ the “being all together” may be attained. What is the reason for this? He says, ‘Let me not be different from the Order.’ When a monk who is engaged in conflict Upāli, is approaching an Order, having set up these five states within himself he should approach the Order.”

¹ omaddakārako vattesu. Usual meaning of omaddati is to grind, press down. It has been rendered as “choose” at BD.5.300, BD.3.130 (Vin.2.214, Vin.4.192). ² For the following see above at the beginning of Prv.17.12.1.

BD.6.296

“Possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is a monk who is speaking in an Order not liked by the many-folk, not dear to the many-folk, and not pleasing to the many-folk?”

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk who is speaking in an Order is ... not pleasing to the many-folk. Of what five? If he is a grandiose speaker,² and one who hankers after support,³ and is not skilled about the sequence of meanings in a speech, if he is one who does not reprove according to Dhamma, according to Discipline, according to the offence, if he is one who does not carry out according to Dhamma ... the offence. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk ... is not pleasing to the many-folk.

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk who is speaking in an Order is liked by the many-folk and is dear to the many-folk and is pleasing to the many-folk. Of what five? If he is not a grandiose speaker, and is not one who hankers after support, and is skilled in the sequence of meanings in a speech, if he is one who reproves according to Dhamma, according to Discipline, according to the offence, if he is one who carries out according to Dhamma, according to Discipline, according to the offence. If he is possessed of these five qualities ...

Vin.5.184

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a monk who is speaking in an Order is ... not pleasing to the many-folk ... If he is one who exalts,¹ one who upbraids,² if he chooses not-dhamma, if he shuts out Dhamma, and if he speaks much fatuous talk. If he is possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.2.7

¹ diṭṭhāvikkamma, apparently not in other parts of Vinaya, except below Prv.17.4.1.2. ² ussitamantī. Ussita is used of raised standards and banners. Vin-a.1372 calls it speech about the greed, hatred and confusion of human beings, a speech, not explaining the goal. ³ nis-sitajappī. Vin-a.1372: he has to quote a king or minister or his teacher or preceptor and say that he has spoken to these.

BD.6.297

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk who is speaking in an Order is ... pleasing to the many-folk ... If he is not one who exalts, not one who upbraids, if he chooses Dhamma, if he shuts out non-dhamma, and if he does not speak much fatuous talk. If he is possessed of these five qualities

Prv.17.2.8

...

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a monk who is speaking in an Order is ... not pleasing to the many folk ... If he is a teacher who uses force, if he is a teacher who has not obtained leave, if he is one who reproves not according to Dhamma, not according to Discipline, not according to the offence, if he is one who carries out not according to Dhamma, not according to Discipline, not according to the offence, if he is an expounder³ not in accordance with right view. If he is possessed of these five qualities

...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk who is speaking in an Order is liked by the many-folk and is dear to the many-folk and is pleasing to the many-folk. Of what five? If he is a teacher who does not use force, if he is a teacher who has obtained leave, if he is one who reproves according to Dhamma, according to Discipline, according to the offence, if he is one who carries out according to Dhamma, according to Discipline, according to the offence, if he is an expounder in accordance with right view. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk who is speaking in an Order is liked by the many-folk and is dear to the many-folk and is pleasing to the many-folk.”

Prv.17.2.9

“How many advantages are there, revered sir, for one who has mastery in Discipline?”

“There are these five advantages, Upāli, for one who has mastery in Discipline. What five? His own body of moral habit is well guarded, well protected, he is a shelter for those who are affected by scruples, confidently he lives in the midst of an Order, with Dhamma he restrains adversaries from one who is well restrained, he is one practising for the stability of True Dhamma. These, Upāli, are the five advantages for who has mastery in Discipline.”

¹ Vin-a.1372: who exalts his own teacher. ² Vin-a.1372, for an offence someone does not know. ³ byākatā.

BD.6.298

The Second Division: on Not Revoking

ITS SUMMARY

Fallen, as long as,¹ and praise, unconscientious, and in conflict,
Grandiose, and one who exalts, by force,
for one who has mastery in.

The First Description: by Pairs

DIVISION 3: SPEAKING

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir should a monk not speak in an Order?”

Prv.17.3.1
Vin.5.185

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk should not speak in an Order.² Of what five? If he does not know an offence, if he does not know the origin of an offence, if he does not know the means (used) for an offence,³ if he does not know the removal of an offence, if he is not skilled in discriminating an offence. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he should not speak in an Order.

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may speak in an Order. Of what five? If he knows an offence ... if he is skilled in discriminating an offence. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he may speak in an Order.

Prv.17.3.2

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a monk should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not know a legal question⁴

¹ For yāya of text read yāva. ² Cf. the different three qualities in the Triads, Vin.5.122.

³ Bodily or verbal, Vin-a.1372. ⁴ Either that it is connected with the 18 matters causing a schism, or with the 4 fallings away, or with the 5 or 7 classes of offence, or with the 4 towards an Order: Vin-a.1373.

... the origin of a legal question ... the means (used) for a legal question¹ ... the removal of a legal question, if he is not skilled in discriminating a legal question. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities ...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may speak in an Order. Of what five? If he knows a legal question ... if he is skilled in discriminating a legal question. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.3.3

BD.6.299

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a monk should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he is a teacher who uses force, if he is a teacher who has not obtained leave, if he is one who reproves not according to Dhamma, not according to Discipline, not according to the offence, if he is one who carries out not according to Dhamma, not according to Discipline, not according to the offence, if he is an expounder not according to right view. If he is possessed of these five qualities ... If he is possessed of five qualities ... Of what five? If he is a teacher who does not use force ... if he is an expounder according to right view. If a monk ...

Prv.17.3.4

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... Of what five? If he does not know what is and what is not an offence, if he does not know a slight and a serious offence, if he does not know an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with, if he does not know what is and what is not a very bad offence, if he does not know an offence for which amends are made and one for which amends are not made.² If he is ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... Of what five? If he knows what is and what is not an offence ... If he is ...

Prv.17.3.5

And if ... Upāli, he should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not know a formal act, if he does not know the carrying out of a (formal) act, if he does not know the matter for a (formal) act,³ if he does not know the procedure for a (formal) act, if he does not know the removal of a (formal) act. If he is ...

Vin.5.186

If he is possessed ... may speak in an Order. Of what five? If he knows a (formal) act ... If he is ...

Prv.17.3.6

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not know the matter, if he does not know the source, if he does not know the laying down, if he does not know the order of words (in a sentence),¹ if he does not know the sequence of the connecting words. If he is possessed of these ...

¹ Either that it has 12 means (payoga) as roots (or bases), or 14 or 6 or one. ² For words in this paragraph, see Prv.7.1; see also Prv.17.7.4. ³ See Prv.7.2, Vin.5.116.

If he is possessed of five qualities ... may speak in an Order. Of what five? If he knows the matter ... If he is ...

Prv.17.3.7
BD.6.300

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course through partiality, if he follows a wrong course through hatred if he follows a wrong course through confusion, if he follows a wrong course through fear, and if he is unconscientious. If he is ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... may speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course through partiality ... and if he is conscientious. If he is ...

Prv.17.3.8

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course through partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear, and if he is unskilled in the Vinaya.² If he is ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... may speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course through partiality ... and if he is skilled in the Vinaya. If he is ...

Prv.17.3.9

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not know the motion, if he does not know the carrying out of the motion, if he does not know the proclamation of the motion,³ if he does not know the deciding of the motion,⁴ if he does not know the removal of the motion.⁵ If he is ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... may speak in an Order. Of what five? If he knows the motion ... the removal of the motion. If he is ...

Prv.17.3.10

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not know the clauses,⁶ if he does not know what is in conformity with the clauses,¹ if he does not know Vinaya,² if he does not know what is in conformity with Vinaya,³ and if he is not skilled in what is and what is not causal occasion. If he is possessed ...

¹ Text reads padapacchābhaṭṭhaṃ, and Vin-a.1373, more correctly -paccā-. Commentary explains that when buddho bhagavā should be said he says bhagavā buddho. ² Vin-a.1373: if he is unskilled in the Pali Vinaya and the Commentary. ³ Vin-a.1374: whether it is to be made once or three times. ⁴ Vin-a.1374, instances four of the deciding. ⁵ Vin-a.1374: he does not know which legal question is stopped by the fourfold deciding of the motion. ⁶ sutta, Cf. Vin.5.158; explained at Vin-a.1374 (also Vin-a.1360) as ubhatovibhaṅga.

BD.6.301

If he is possessed of five ... Of what five? If he knows the clauses ... and if he is skilled in what is and what is not causal occasion. If he is ...

Prv.17.3.11

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not speak in an Order. Of what five? If he does not know Dhamma,⁴ if he does not know what is in conformity with Dhamma, if he does not know Vinaya,⁵ if he does not know what is in conformity with Vinaya,⁶ and if he is not skilled in what precedes and what follows.⁷ If he is possessed ...

If he is possessed of five ... Of what five? If he knows Dhamma ... and if he is skilled in what precedes and what follows. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk may speak in an Order.”

Vin.5.187

The Third Division: on Speaking

ITS SUMMARY

Offence, legal question,
using force, knowing an offence,
(Formal) act, subject,
and unconscientious, motions,
He does not know the clauses, (nor) Dhamma:
the Compendium of the Third Division.

DIVISION 4: EXPLANATIONS OF VIEWS

Prv.17.4.1

“How many explanations of views, revered sir, are not legally valid?”

¹ suttānuloma. Vin-a.1374 (also Vin-a.1360) says: if he does not know the four principal authorities, mahāpadesa. ² Here called by Vin-a.1374 the Khandhakas and the Parivāra.

³ The Commentary again says the four principal authorities. ⁴ Leaving aside the Vinayapiṭaka, the two remaining Piṭakas. ⁵ Again called the Khandhakas and Parivāra at Vin-a.1374. ⁶ Vin-a.1374 again says the four principal authorities, and adds: The two Vibhaṅgas are not included here, so that when the Kurundiya says “he does not know the whole of the Vinaya-piṭaka”, that should not be accepted. ⁷ Referring to the order of syllables and words. Cf. AN.iii.201.

“These five explanations of views, Upāli, are not legally valid. What five? He explains a view by means of what is not an offence,¹ he explains a view by means of an offence not leading on to confession,² he explains a view by means of an offence that has been confessed,³ he explains a view by means of four, of five⁴ (people), he explains a view by means of a mental action of the mind.⁵ These five explanations of views, Upāli, are not legally valid.

BD.6.302

These five explanations of views, Upāli, are legally valid. What five? He explains a view by means of what is an offence ... by means of an offence leading on to confession ... by means of an offence that has not been confessed ... not by means of four or five (people), he explains a view not by means of a mental action of the mind. These five ... are legally valid.

Prv.17.4.2

And five further explanations of views, Upāli, are not legally valid. What five? He explains a view in the presence of one belonging to a different communion ... in the presence of one standing on a different boundary ... in the presence of one who is not a regular monk⁶ ... by means of four or five (people), he explains a view by means of a mental activity of the mind. These five ...

These five explanations of views, Upāli, are legally valid. What five? He explains a view in the presence of one belonging to the same communion ... in the presence of one standing on the same boundary ... in the presence of one who is a regular monk ... not by means of four or five, he explains a view not by means of a mental activity of the mind. These five explanations of views, Upāli, are legally valid.”

Prv.17.4.3

“How many ways of accepting,⁷ revered sir, are not legally valid?”

“These five ways of accepting,⁸ Upāli, are not legally valid. What five? When something that is being given by means of body is not accepted by means of body, when something that is being given by means of body is not accepted by means of something attached to the body, when something that is being given by means of something attached to the body is not accepted by means of body, when something that is being given by means of something attached to the body is not accepted by means of something attached to the body, when something that is being given by means of what may be cast is not accepted by means of body or of something attached to the body. These are the five ways of accepting, Upāli, that are not legally valid.

¹ Vin-a.1374: he shows (or, confesses, deseti) that an offence is not an offence. ² Vin-a.1374 He explains it as a serious offence and confesses a Formal Meeting and Defeat. ³ Vin-a.1374 He explains it as a slight offence. ⁴ Vin-a.1375: four or five people confess an offence together. ⁵ manomānasa. Vin-a.1375 says he explains the view by means of a mental action (mānasena) reckoned as the mind (manas). He does not break into speech but confesses the offence by means of thought only. ⁶ He confesses an offence in the presence of one who is suspended or whose Observance and Invitation have been suspended, Vin-a.1375. ⁷ paṭiggaha is a formal acceptance. ⁸ Perhaps referring to Bu-Pc.34.

BD.6.303

These five ways of accepting, Upāli, are legally valid. What five? When something that is being given by means of body is accepted by means of body ... when something that is being given by means of what may be cast is accepted by means of body or of something attached to the body. These five ways of accepting, Upāli, are legally valid.”

Prv.17.4.4

Vin.5.188

“How many ‘not left overs’¹ are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five ‘not left overs’, Upāli. What five? It is not made allowable, it is not made formally accepted, it is not made delivered, it is not made within a reach of the hand, it is not said ‘All this is enough’. These, Upāli, are the five ‘not left overs’.

These are the five ‘left overs’, Upāli. What five? It is made allowable, it is made formally accepted, it is made delivered, it is made within a reach of the hand, it is said ‘All this is enough’. These, Upāli, are the five ‘left overs’.”

Prv.17.4.5

“In how many ways, revered sir, is satisfaction² to be seen?”³

“Satisfaction is to be seen in five ways, Upāli. In what five? Eating is to be seen, a meal is to be seen, standing within a reach of the hand, he asks him, a refusal is to be seen. In these five ways, Upāli, is satisfaction to be seen.”

Prv.17.4.6

“How many carryings out (of a formal act) on the acknowledgement (of a monk), revered sir, are not legally valid?”

“These five carryings out (of a formal act) on the acknowledgement (of a monk), Upāli, are not legally valid. What five? A monk⁴ comes to have fallen into an offence involving Defeat; while he is being reproved for an offence involving Defeat he claims that he has fallen into an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order; if the Order has him dealt with for an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is not legally valid.

¹ anattirittā, referring to Bu-Pc.35. ² pavāraṇā, not Invitation here in the monastic sense, but “having eaten and being satisfied”, bhuttavī pavārito, of Bu-Pc.35, Vin.4.82. ³ Similarly here paññāyati is not to “lay down”, of a rule. ⁴ See Vin.2.83, which differs somewhat.

A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving Defeat; while he is being reprovved for an offence involving Defeat he claims that he has fallen into an offence of Expiation, into an offence to be Confessed, into an offence of wrong-doing; if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong-doing, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is not legally valid.

BD.6.304

A monk comes to have fallen into an offence requiring Formal Meeting of the Order, of Expiation, of one to be Confessed, of wrong-doing; while he is being reprovved for an offence of wrong-doing he claims that he has fallen into an offence involving Defeat; if the Order has him dealt with for an offence involving Defeat, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is not legally valid.

A monk comes to have fallen into an offence of wrong-doing; while he is being reprovved for an offence of wrong-doing he claims that he has fallen into an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, into one of Expiation, into one to be Confessed; if the Order has him dealt with for an offence to be Confessed, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is not legally valid. These, Upāli, are the five carryings out on the acknowledgement (of a monk) that are not legally valid.¹

These five carryings out (of a formal act) on the acknowledgement (of a monk), Upāli, are legally valid. What five? A monk comes to have fallen into an offence involving Defeat; while he is being reprovved for an offence involving Defeat he claims that he has fallen into an offence involving Defeat; if the Order has him dealt with for an offence involving Defeat, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is legally valid. A monk comes to have fallen into an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order, into one of Expiation, into one to be Confessed, into one of wrong-doing; while he is being reprovved for an offence of wrong-doing he claims that he has fallen into an offence of wrong-doing; if the Order has him dealt with for an offence of wrong-doing, the carrying out on (his) acknowledgement is legally valid. These ... valid.”

¹ Apparently only four cases are given here, but five kinds of offence named. Vin.2.83 includes grave offences and those of wrong speech.

Prv.17.4.7

Vin.5.189

“Possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is it insufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave¹?”

BD.6.305

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, it is insufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave. Of what five? If he is unconscientious, and is ignorant, and not a regular monk, if he speaks intent on quitting,² not intent on rising from (an offence). If he is possessed of these five qualities

...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, it is sufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave. Of what five? If he is conscientious, and wise, and a regular monk, if he speaks intent on rising from, not intent on quitting. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, it is sufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave.”

Prv.17.4.8

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should Discipline not be discussed with him³?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, Discipline should not be discussed with him. Of what five? If he does not know the matter ... the source ... the laying down ... the order of the words (in a sentence), if he does not know the sequence of the connecting words.⁴ If a monk ...

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, Discipline may be discussed with him. Of what five? If he knows the matter ... If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, Discipline may be discussed with him.”

Prv.17.4.9

“How many kinds of questions and inquiries are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five kinds of questions and inquiries,⁵ Upāli. What five? One asks a question from stupidity, from confusion; one who is of evil desires, filled with covetousness, asks a question⁶; one asks a question from disrespect⁷; one asks a question desiring to know (the proper answer); one asks a question thinking ‘If he answers aright the question asked by me, that is good, if he does not answer aright the question asked by me, I will answer it aright’. These, Upāli, are the five kinds of questions and inquiries.”

Prv.17.4.10

BD.6.306

“How many declarations of profound knowledge are there, revered sir?”

¹ See Vin.5.123. ² cāvanādhippāya. Vin-a.1375 explains by sāsanato cāvetukāmo, anxious to “fall”, move away from the Dispensation. ³ See Vin.5.123. ⁴ These five qualities are as Prv.17.3.6. ⁵ See AN.iii.191f. ⁶ See Vin.5.131. ⁷ paribhava.

“There are these five declarations of profound knowledge,¹ Upāli. What five? One declares profound knowledge from stupidity, from confusion²; one who is of evil desires filled with covetousness³ declares profound knowledge; one declares profound knowledge from madness, from a deranged mind⁴; one declares profound knowledge from an undue estimate of himself⁵; one declares profound knowledge when it is a fact. These, Upāli, are the five declarations of profound knowledge.”

Prv.17.4.11

“How many purifications are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five purifications,⁶ Upāli. Which five? Having recited the provenance ... recital in full is the fifth. These, Upāli, are the five purifications.”

Prv.17.4.12
Vin.5.190

“How many soft foods are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five soft foods, Upāli. What five? Cooked rice, food made with flour, barley-meal, fish, meat.⁷ These Upāli, are the five soft foods.”

The Fourth Division: on Explanations of Views

ITS SUMMARY

Explanations of views, further, acceptings, not left overs, Satisfaction, on the acknowledgement of,
leave, and discussion with,
Question, declarations of profound knowledge,
and purification too, soft foods.

DIVISION 5: UNDERTAKING ON ONE'S OWN BEHALF

Prv.17.5.1

“When a monk is reproofing, revered sir, and wishes to reprove another, having considered how many states within himself may he reprove the other⁸?”

“When a monk is reproofing, Upāli, and wishes to reprove another, having considered five states within himself may he reprove the other. What five? Upāli, when a monk is reproofing and wishes to reprove another, he should consider thus: ‘Now, am I quite pure in bodily conduct ... (as at Kd.19.5.1) ... When a monk is reproving, Upāli, and wishes to reprove another, having considered these five states within himself he may reprove the other.’

¹ aññabyākaraṇa, see Vin.3.100 in Bu-Pj.4; and for these five ways see AN.iii.119 where they are spelt aññāvya-. ² See Vin.5.131. ³ See Vin.5.131. ⁴ See Vin.5.131. ⁵ As at Vin.3.100; see also MN.ii.252. ⁶ See Vin.5.132-133. ⁷ See Vin.4.83 in Bu-Pc.35. ⁸ See Kd.19.5.1.

Prv.17.5.2

BD.6.307

“When a monk is reproving, revered sir, and wishes to reprove another, having set up how many states within himself may he reprove the other?”

“When a monk is reproving, Upāli, and wishes to reprove another, having set up five states within himself may he reprove the other. What five? ‘I will speak at a right time ... (as at Kd.19.5.2) ...’ When a monk is reproving, Upāli, and wishes to reprove another, having set up these five states within himself he may reprove the other.”

Prv.17.5.3

“When a monk is reproving, revered sir, and wishes to reprove another, having attended to how many states within himself may he reprove the other?”

“When a monk is reproving, Upāli, and wishes to reprove another, having attended to five states within himself may he reprove the other.¹ What five? Compassion, seeking welfare, sympathy, removal of offences, aiming at Discipline.² When a monk is reproving, Upāli, and wishes to reprove another, having attended to these five states within himself he may reprove the other.”

Prv.17.5.4

“Possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is it insufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave?”

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, it is insufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave. Of what five? If he is not quite pure in bodily conduct,³ if he is not quite pure in verbal conduct, if he is not quite pure in mode of livelihood, if he is ignorant and inexperienced, if when being examined he is not competent to pass the examination. These, Upāli, are the five qualities possessed of which it is insufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave.

Vin.5.191

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, it is sufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave. Of what five? If he is quite pure in bodily conduct⁴ ... in verbal conduct ... in mode of livelihood, if he is clever and experienced, if when being examined he is competent to pass the examina-

¹ Referred to at Vin-a.589. ² See Kd.19.5.7. ³ For this sequence, in other contexts, see Kd.4.16.5-7. ⁴ See Kd.4.16.10.

tion. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, it is sufficient to give leave to a monk who is obtaining leave.”

“Revered sir, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf¹ of how many qualities should the undertaking that he undertakes on his own behalf be possessed?”

Prv.17.5.5
BD.6.308

“Upāli, if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf, the undertaking that he undertakes on his own behalf must be possessed of five qualities. What five? Upāli if a monk wishes to undertake an undertaking on his own behalf he must consider thus: ... (as at Kd.19.4) ... Thus, Upāli if an undertaking on one’s own behalf is undertaken when it is possessed of these five qualities, later it will be no cause for remorse.”

Prv.17.5.6

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir is he of great service to monks who are engaged in legal questions?”

“When a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he is of great service to monks who are engaged in legal questions. Of what five? He is moral, he lives controlled by the control of the Pātimokkha, he is possessed of (right) behaviour and resort, he is one seeing danger in the slightest faults, (and) undertaking them he trains in the rules of training.² He is one who has heard much, who remembers what he has heard, (and) those things which are lovely in the beginning, lovely in the middle, lovely at the ending which, with the spirit and the letter, declare the Brahma-faring wholly fulfilled, perfectly purified, such things are much heard by him, borne in mind, familiarized by speech, pondered over in the mind, well penetrated by (right) view.³ Both the Pātimokkhas are properly handed down to him in detail, properly sectioned, properly regulated, properly investigated clause by clause and in respect of the linguistic form.⁴ He comes to be firm in Discipline, immovable.⁵ He is competent in convincing both of those who are hostile about a matter, in winning them over, in making them consider, in understanding, in reconciling them.⁶ Upāli, if a monk is possessed of these five qualities he is of great service to monks who are engaged in legal questions.

BD.6.309

Prv.17.5.7

¹ As at Kd.19.4. Referred to at Vin-a.589. ² Stock, as at Vin.2.95, Vin.4.51; MN.i.355. ³ Stock, as at Vin.2.95, Vin.4.51; MN.i.356. ⁴ As at Vin.2.95, etc. Cf. Vin.5.131. ⁵ As at Vin.2.96, there reading cheko, clever, for ṭhito, firm, steadfast as above. ⁶ As at Vin.2.96.

And, Upāli, if a monk is possessed of five qualities he is of great service to monks who are engaged in legal questions. Of what five? If he is quite pure in bodily conduct ... in verbal conduct ... in mode of livelihood, if he is clever and experienced, if when being examined he is competent to pass the examination. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he is of great service to monks who are engaged in legal questions.

Prv.17.5.8

And, Upāli, if a monk is possessed of five further qualities he is of great service to monks who are engaged in legal questions. Of what five? If he knows the matter, knows the source, knows the laying down, knows the order of the words (in a sentence), knows the sequence of the connecting words. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he is of great service to monks who are engaged in legal questions.”

Vin.5.192

Prv.17.5.9

Prv.17.5.10

“Revered sir, if a monk is possessed of how many qualities should he not be examined?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he should not be examined. Of what five? If he does not know the clauses, does not know what is in conformity with the clauses, does not know Vinaya, does not know what is in conformity with Vinaya, if he is not skilled in what is and what is not causal occasion.¹ If a monk ... (see Prv.17.3.10, Prv.17.3.11; for might speak, should not speak in an Order read could be examined, should not be examined) ... and if he is skilled in what precedes and what follows. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he could be examined.

Prv.17.5.11

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, he should not be examined. Of what five? If he does not know the matter ... the source ... the laying down ... the order of the words (in a sentence), if he does not know the sequence of the connecting words. If he is possessed of these five ...

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he may be examined. Of what five? If he knows the matter ... If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he may be examined.

BD.6.310

Prv.17.5.12

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, he should not be examined. Of what five? If he does know an offence, does not know the origin of an offence does not know the means (used) for an offence, does not know the removal of an offence, is not skilled in discriminating an offence If a monk is possessed of these five ...

¹ As above, Vin.5.186.

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he may be examined. Of what five? If he knows an offence ... is skilled in discriminating an offence. If a monk is possessed of these five ...

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, he should not be examined. Of what five? If he does not know a legal question, does not know the origin of a legal question, does not know the means (used) for a legal question, does not know the removal of a legal question, is not skilled in discriminating a legal question. If a monk is possessed of these five ...

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he may be examined. Of what five? If he knows a legal question ... is skilled in discriminating a legal question. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he may be examined.”

Prv.17.5.13

The Fifth Division: on Undertaking on one's own Behalf

ITS SUMMARY

And quite pure, at a right time, compassion, and about leave,
One's own behalf, legal question,
and further, and the matter,
The clauses, Dhamma, and matter again, offence, and about a legal question.

DIVISION 6: ASCETIC PRACTICES

“How many (types of) forest-dwellers are there, revered sir?”

Prv.17.6.1
Vin.5.193

“There are these five (types of) forest-dwellers, Upāli. What five? ...¹ ... of good avail. These, Upāli, are the five (types of) forest-dwellers.”

“How many (types of) almsfood-eaters² are there, revered Sir?” ... “How many (types of) refuse-rag-wearers ... tree-root-dwellers ... charnel-ground-dwellers ... open-air-dwellers ... three-robe-wearers ... house-to-house seekers ... sitters ... users of any bed ... eaters at one session ... refusers of food later ... bowl-food-eaters are there, revered sir?”

Prv.17.6.2
Prv.17.6.3
Prv.17.6.4
Prv.17.6.5
Prv.17.6.6
Prv.17.6.7
Prv.17.6.8
Prv.17.6.9
Prv.17.6.10
Prv.17.6.11
Prv.17.6.12
Prv.17.6.13
BD.6.311

¹ As at Vin.5.131. ² All these are at Vin.5.131.

“There are these five (types of) bowl-food-eaters, Upāli. What five? One is a bowl-food-eater from stupidity ... because this is of good avail. These, Upāli, are the five (types of) bowl-food-eaters.”

The Sixth Division: on Ascetic Practices

ITS SUMMARY

Forest-dweller, almsfood and rags, tree, and charnel-ground is the fifth,
Open air, and the three robes too,
house-to-house, sitters,
Bed, and one session too, refusers later, bowl-food-eaters.

DIVISION 7: LYING SPEECH

Prv.17.7.1

“How many (kinds of) lying speech are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five (kinds of) lying speech, Upāli. What five? There is the lying speech leading to an offence involving Defeat,¹ there is the lying speech leading to an offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order,² there is the lying speech leading to a grave offence,³ there is the lying speech leading to Expiation,⁴ there is the lying speech leading to an offence of wrong-doing.⁵ These, Upāli, are the five (kinds of) lying speech.”

Prv.17.7.2

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities,⁶ revered sir, and has suspended an Observance or Invitation in the midst of an Order, (but if other monks) have snubbed him, saying ‘That’s enough, monk, let there be no strife, no quarrel, no dispute, no contention’, may Observance or Invitation be carried out by the Order?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli ... may be carried out by the Order. Of what five? If he is unconscientious, and is ignorant, and not a regular monk, if he speaks intent on quitting, if he is not intent on rising from (an offence).⁷

BD.6.312

¹ Bu-Pj.4. “Five offences due to lying speech” are included in the Pentads (towards the beginning), see Vin.5.128. ² Bu-Ss.8. ³ Vin.3.99. ⁴ Bu-Pc.1. ⁵ Vin.3.100f. ⁶ Cf. Vin.5.122. ⁷ For this pentad see Vin.5.189.

If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, ... may be carried out by the Order.

Prv.17.7.3

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli be carried out by the Order. Of what five? If he is not pure in bodily conduct, is not quite pure in verbal conduct is not quite pure in mode of livelihood, is ignorant and inexperienced, is a maker of strife, a maker of quarrels. If monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, ... may be carried out by the Order.”

Vin.5.194

Prv.17.7.4

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir should he not pass an examination?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he should not pass an examination. Of what five? If he does not know what is and what is not an offence, does not know what is a slight and what a serious offence, does not know what is an offence that can be done away with and one that cannot be done away with, does not know what is a very bad offence and what is not, does not know what is an offence for which amends are made and one for which amends are not made. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he should not pass an examination.

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he may pass an examination. Of what five? If he knows what is and what is not an offence ... If a monk ... he may pass an examination.”

Prv.17.7.5

“For how many reasons, revered sir, does a monk fall into an offence?”

“For five reasons, Upāli, a monk falls into an offence. For what five? From lack of conscientiousness, from ignorance, from ordinary bad conduct, from (thinking) something is allowable when it is not allowable, from thinking (something) is not allowable when it is allowable.¹ For these five reasons, Upāli, a monk falls into an offence.

Prv.17.7.6

And for five further reasons, Upāli, a monk falls into an offence. For what five? From not seeing,² from not hearing,³ from being sleepy,⁴ from

BD.6.313

¹ On these two last clauses Vin-a.1375f. says that if a scruple has arisen (in him) and he sees a monk who is expert in Discipline and questions him the nature of what is and what is not allowable, then, getting rid of what is not allowable he should do what is allowable.

² Not seeing an expert on Discipline he falls into an offence he would not have fallen into had he seen one. ³ If he goes to an expert on Discipline to attend to his needs and fails to ask him what is and what is not allowable, he falls into an offence from “not hearing”.

⁴ pasuttakatā.

thinking that it is so,¹ from confused mindfulness.² For these five reasons, Upāli, a monk falls into an offence.”

Prv.17.7.7

“How many dread (things)³ are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five dread (things), Upāli. What five? Onslaught on creatures, taking what has not been given, going wrongly amid sense-pleasures, lying speech, occasions of sloth (through drinking) fermented liquor, spirits and strong drink. These, Upāli, are the five dread (things).”

Prv.17.7.8

“How many abstentions are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five abstentions,⁴ Upāli. What five? Abstention from onslaught on creatures, abstention from taking what has not been given, abstention from going wrongly amid sense-pleasures, abstention from lying speech, abstention from occasions of sloth (from drinking) fermented liquor, spirits and strong drink. These, Upāli, are the five abstentions.”

Prv.17.7.9

“How many losses are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five losses,⁵ Upāli. What five? Loss of relations, loss of possessions, loss by illness, loss in moral habit, loss in (right) view. These, Upāli, are the five losses.”

Prv.17.7.10

“How many prosperities are there, revered sir?”

“There are these five prosperities, Upāli. What five? Prosperity in relations ... possessions ... health ... moral habit, prosperity in (right) view. These, Upāli, are the five prosperities.”

The Seventh Division: on Lying Speech

ITS SUMMARY

Vin.5.195

Lying speech, and he snubbed, of a further, and an examination,

BD.6.314

And an offence, of a further,
dreads, and abstentions too,
Loss, and prosperity as well:

the Compendium of the Seventh Division.

¹ tathāsaññī, falling through thinking it is allowable when it is not. ² Such as letting one night too many pass by. ³ Cf. AN.iii.204, SN.ii.68. Vera is twofold: akusala- and puggala-vera.

⁴ Cf. Nuns' Bi-Pc.63 where a sixth abstention is given. ⁵ See Vin.5.129.

DIVISION 8: EXHORTATION OF NUNS

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should a formal act be carried out against a monk by the Order of nuns itself?”

Prv.17.8.1

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against a monk by the Order of nuns itself—this monk is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns. Of what five? Having exposed his body he shows it to nuns he shows his thigh, he shows his private parts, he shows both shoulders, he offends and quarrels with a householder.¹ If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli ... this monk is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns.

Prv.17.8.2

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli ... this monk is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns. Of what five? If he tries for the non-receiving (of requisites) by nuns, if he tries for non-profiting by nuns,² if he tries for non-residence³ for nuns, if he reviles and abuses nuns, if he causes monks to break with nuns.⁴ If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli ...

Prv.17.8.3

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against a monk by the Order of nuns itself—this monk is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns. Of what five? If he tries for the non-receiving (of requisites) by nuns, if he tries for non-profiting by nuns, if he tries for non-residence for nuns, if he reviles and abuses nuns, if he makes monks quarrel with nuns. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli ... this monk is not to be greeted by the Order of nuns.”

Prv.17.8.4

“If she is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should a formal act be carried out against a nun?”

BD.6.315

“If she is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against a nun. Of what five? Having exposed her body she shows it to monks, she shows her thigh, she shows her private parts, she shows both shoulders, she offends and quarrels with a householder. If she is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli ...

¹ The last clause reads obhāsati gihī sampayojetī which is somewhat meaningless. At the parallel passage at Kd.20.9.1 the reading is the more intelligible bhikkhuniyo obhāsanti bhikkhunihi saddhiṃ sampayojetī, they offend nuns, they quarrel (or, associate) together with nuns.

² Finding fault with them, Vin-a.1376. ³ Trying to drive them out of the “village-field” where they are staying. ⁴ Parallel passages at Vin.1.84, Vin.2.125 (about monks), Vin.2.18 (about householders).

Prv.17.8.5

And if she is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against a nun. Of what five? If she tries for the non-receiving (of requisites) by monks, if she tries for non-profiting by monks, if she tries for non-residence by monks, if she reviles and abuses monks, if she causes nuns to break with monks. If she is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli

Prv.17.8.6 ...

And if she is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against a nun. Of what five? If she tries for the non-receiving (of requisites) by monks, if she tries for non-profiting by monks, if she tries for non-residence by monks, if she reviles and abuses monks, if she makes nuns quarrel with monks. If she is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a formal act should be carried out against a nun.”

Vin.5.196

Prv.17.8.7

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should he not suspend exhortation for nuns?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities ... for nuns. Of what five? If he is unconscientious, and ignorant, and not a regular monk, and if he is one who talks intent on quitting, not intent on removal. If a monk ...

Prv.17.8.8

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... for nuns. Of what five? If he is not quite pure in bodily conduct, if he is not quite pure in verbal conduct, if he is not quite pure in mode of living, if he is ignorant and inexperienced, if on being examined he is not competent to pass an examination. If a monk ...

Prv.17.8.9

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli ... for nuns. Of what five? If he is possessed of bad bodily conduct, if he is possessed of bad verbal conduct, if he is possessed of bad bodily and verbal conduct, if he is one who reviles and abuses nuns, if he lives in company with nuns, in unbecoming association. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.8.10

BD.6.316

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, he should not suspend exhortation for nuns. Of what five? if is unconscientious, and ignorant, and not a regular monk, and if he is a maker of strife, a maker of quarrels, and is not who has fulfilled the training. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities ... ”

Prv.17.8.11

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should he not accept exhortation of nuns?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities ... of nuns? Of what five? If he is possessed of bad bodily conduct, if he is possessed of bad verbal conduct, if he is possessed of bad bodily and verbal conduct, if he is one who reviles and abuses nuns, if he lives in company with nuns, in unbecoming association. If he is possessed ...

Prv.17.8.12

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... of nuns. Of what five? If he is unconscientious, and is ignorant, and is not a regular monk, or if he is setting out on a journey, or if he is ill.¹ If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he should not accept exhortation of nuns.”

Prv.17.8.13

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should he not converse with a nun?”

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he should not converse with a nun. Of what five? If he is not possessed of an adept’s body of moral conduct, if he is not possessed of an adept’s body of concentration ... body of wisdom ... body of freedom ... if he is not possessed of an adept’s body of the knowledge and vision of freedom. If a monk is possessed ...

Vin.5.197

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he may converse with a nun. Of what five? If he is possessed of an adept’s body of moral conduct ... If he is possessed of these five ...

Prv.17.8.14

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, he should not converse with a nun. Of what five? If he has not attained to the analytical insight of meanings, if he has not attained to the analytical insight of Dhamma, if he has not attained to the analytical insight of language, if he has not attained to the analytical insight of perspicuity,² if he is not one who reviews the mind according to freedom.³ If he is possessed of these five ...

BD.6.317

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, he may converse with a nun. Of what five? If he has attained to the analytical insight of meanings ... if he is one who reviews the mind according to freedom. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, he may converse with (a nun).”

¹ See Kd.20.9.5. ² These four paṭisambhidā (attha, dhamma, nirutti, paṭibhāna) are given at AN.ii.160, AN.iii.113, etc.; also Mi.22. ³ Vin-a.1377 speaks of the four fruits of freedom.

*The Eighth Division: on Exhortation of NunsITS SUMMARY

Should be carried out by the nuns themselves, likewise two further,
Three formal acts for nuns,
two dyads on he should not suspend,
Twice he should not accept is spoken of,
and two dyads on conversings.

DIVISION 9: REFERENDUM

Prv.17.9.1

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, should a monk not be agreed upon for a referendum¹?”

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk should not be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is not skilled in meanings,² if he is not skilled in Dhamma,³ if he is not skilled in language, if he is not skilled in syllables, if he is not skilled in what precedes and what follows. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk should not be agreed upon for a referendum.

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is skilled in meanings ... If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk may be agreed upon for a referendum.

Prv.17.9.2

BD.6.318

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, a monk should not be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is angry, overcome by anger, if he is harsh, overcome by harshness, if he is unmerciful, overcome by unmercifulness, if he is envious, overcome by envy, if he is infected by wordliness, grasping it tightly, not letting go of it easily.⁴ If he is possessed of these five ...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is not angry overcome by anger ... if he is not envious, overcome by envy, if he is not infected by worldliness, not grasping it tightly, letting go of it easily. If he is possessed of these five qualities.

¹ See Vin.2.95ff., where if a monk has ten qualities, quite different from those given here, he may or may not be agreed upon. These are no doubt the qualities referred to at Vin.5.139 and AN.v.71. ² Vin-a.1376 (on 8, 14) and Vin-a.1377 takes this to mean skilled in the aṭṭhakathā, the Commentaries. ³ Vin-a.1376 calls this pāḷi, the text. If he has not learnt it from a teacher he is not pāḷisūra. ⁴ Cf. Vin.2.89.

Prv.17.9.3

Vin.5.198

If he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is agitated,¹ if he is malevolent, if he offers resistance, if he causes anger, if he is intractable, if he is incapable of being instructed.² If he is possessed of these five qualities ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... may be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is not agitated, if he is not malevolent ... if he is tractable and is capable of being instructed. If he is possessed of these five qualities ...

Prv.17.9.4

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is one who confuses the mind and does not make remember,³ if he is a teacher who has not obtained leave, if he is one who reproves not according to Dhamma, not according to Discipline, not according to the offence, if he is one who carries out not according to Dhamma, not according to Discipline, not according to the offence, if he is an expounder not in accordance with right view.⁴ If he is possessed of these five ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... may be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he is one who makes remember and does not confuse the mind, if he is a teacher who has obtained leave, if he reproves according to Dhamma ... if he carries out according to Dhamma ... if he is an expounder in accordance with right view. If he is possessed of these five ...

BD.6.319

Prv.17.9.5

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course from partiality, if he follows a wrong course from hatred ... confusion ... fear, and if he is unconscientious. If he is possessed of these five ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... may be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ...

¹ kuppati, or angry. ² Last clause also at Vin.3.178. ³ pasāretā hoti no sāretā, explained at Vin-a.1377 by mo hetā hoti na satiuppādetā, he is one causing confusion and not one who arouses mindfulness. The Commentary adds that he confuses the talk of reprovers and reproved, and does not make (the reproved monk) remember. ⁴ As at Vin.5.184.

and if he is conscientious. If he is possessed of these five ...

Prv.17.9.6

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... should not be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course from partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear, and if he is not skilled in Vinaya. If he is possessed of these five ...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk may be agreed upon for a referendum. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... and if he is skilled in Vinaya. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk may be agreed upon for a referendum.”

Prv.17.9.7

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is a monk reckoned as ignorant?”

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk is reckoned as ignorant. Of what five? If he does not know the clauses, if he does not know what is in conformity with the clauses, if he does not know Vinaya, if he does not know what is in conformity with Vinaya, and if he is not skilled in what is and what is not causal occasion.¹ If he is possessed ...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a monk is reckoned as learned. Of what five? If he knows the clauses ... and if he is skilled in what is and what is not causal occasion. If he is possessed of these five ...

Prv.17.9.8

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... is reckoned as ignorant. Of what five? If he does not know the rules,² if he does not know what is in conformity with the rules he does not know Vinaya, if he does not know what is in conformity with Vinaya, and if he is not skilled in what precedes and what follows. If he is possessed of these five ...

BD.6.320

Vin.5.199

If he is possessed of five qualities ... reckoned as learned. Of what five? If he knows the rules ... and if he is skilled in what precedes and what follows. If he is possessed of the five ...

Prv.17.9.9

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... reckoned as ignorant. Of what five? If he does not know the matter the source ... the laying down ... the order of the words (in a sentence), if he does not know the sequence of the connecting words.³ If he is possessed of these five ...

If he is possessed of five ... reckoned as learned. Of what five? If he knows the matter ... If he is possessed of these five ...

Prv.17.9.10

¹ See Vin.5.186, BD.6.192. ² dhamma. ³ As at Vin.5.192.

And if he is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli ... reckoned as ignorant. Of what five? If he does not know an offence, if he does not know the origin of an offence, if he does not know the means (used) for an offence, if he does not know the removal of an offence, if he is not skilled in discriminating an offence.¹ If he is possessed of these ...

If he is possessed of five qualities ... reckoned as learned. Of what five? If he knows an offence ... if he is skilled in discriminating an offence. If he is possessed of these five ...

Prv.17.9.11

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... reckoned as ignorant. Of what five? If he does not know a legal question, if he does not know the origin of a legal question, if he does not know the means (used) for a legal question, if he does not know the removal of a legal question, if he is not skilled in discriminating a legal question.² If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk is reckoned as ignorant.

If he is possessed of five qualities ... reckoned as learned. Of what five? If he knows a legal question ... if he is skilled in discriminating a legal question. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a monk is reckoned as learned.”

Concluded is the Ninth Division: on a Referendum

ITS SUMMARY

And also not skilled in meanings, angry, and who is agitated,
One who confuses the mind,
wrong course from partiality,
and likewise not skilled,
Clauses, and rules, and matter,
offence, legal question:
Two by two all is made clear:
know well the dark and the bright.

DIVISION 10: SETTLING LEGAL QUESTIONS

“If a monk is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is it insufficient to settle a legal question?”

Prv.17.10.1

“If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, it is insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not know an offence ... (see Prv.17.9.10) ... If he is possessed of these five ...

Vin.5.200

If a monk is possessed of five ... it is sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he knows an offence ... If he is possessed of these ...

Prv.17.10.2

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not know a legal question ... (see Prv.17.9.11) ... If he is possessed of these five ...

If a monk is possessed of five qualities ... sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he knows a legal question ... If he is possessed of these ...

Prv.17.10.3

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course from partiality ... and if he is unconscientious. If he is possessed of these ...

If a monk is possessed of five ... it is sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... and if he is conscientious. If he is possessed of these ...

Prv.17.10.4

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course from partiality ... and if he has heard little. If he is possessed of these ...

BD.6.322

If a monk is possessed of five ... sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... and if he has heard much. If he is possessed of these ...

Prv.17.10.5

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not know the matter ... (see Prv.17.9.9) ... if he does not know the sequence of the connecting words. If he is possessed of these ...

If a monk is possessed of five ... sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he knows the matter ... If he is possessed of these ...

Prv.17.10.6

¹ As at Vin.5.192. ² As at Vin.5.192.

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course from partiality ... (see Prv.17.9.6) ... and if he is not skilled in Vinaya. If he is possessed of these ...

If a monk is possessed of five ... sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... and if he is skilled in Vinaya. If he is possessed of these ...

Prv.17.10.7

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities ... insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course from partiality ... if he esteems an individual¹ and does not esteem the Order. If he is possessed of these ...

Vin.5.201

If a monk is possessed of five ... sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... if he esteems the Order² and does not esteem an individual. If he is possessed of these ...

Prv.17.10.8

And if a monk is possessed of five further qualities, Upāli, it is insufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... if he esteems worldly things³ and does not esteem true Dhamma.⁴ If he is possessed of these five ...

If a monk is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, it is sufficient to settle a legal question. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... if he esteems true Dhamma and does not esteem worldly things. If a monk is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, it is sufficient to settle a legal question.”

BD.6.323

Prv.17.10.9

“In how many ways, revered sir, is an Order split?”

“In five ways, Upāli, is an Order split. In what five? By a formal act,⁵ by a recitation,⁶ by talking,⁷ by proclamation,⁸ by offering a voting ticket.⁹ These, Upāli, are the five ways in which an Order is split.”

Prv.17.10.10

¹ His preceptor or teacher; desiring their victory he explains non-dhamma as Dhamma.

² He gives up Dhamma and Vinaya, and esteems the Order only. ³ Such as robes, which he decides to take. ⁴ Deciding according to the rule (or Dhamma) and not taking robes, etc., is called respect for saddhamma (True Dhamma). ⁵ Vin-a.1377 says “by one of the four formal acts for which leave should be asked”. Four formal acts are mentioned at Vin.5.167. See Vin.2.89. ⁶ By one of the five ways of recital of the Pātimokkha, Vin-a.1377. ⁷ Talking on the 18 points given at Vin.2.204. ⁸ See Vin.2.203. ⁹ See Vin.2.203.

“Revered sir, as to the words: Dissension in an Order, dissension in an Order—to what extent, revered sir, is there dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order? And to what extent is there dissension in an Order as well as schism in an Order?”¹

“This observance for incoming monks, Upāli, was laid down by me for incoming monks.² The rules of training having been properly laid down by me thus, Upāli, if incoming monks do not observe the observance for incoming (monks)—thus, Upāli, is there dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order. This observance for resident (monks), Upāli, was laid down by me for resident monks.³ The rules of training having been properly laid down by me thus, Upāli, if resident monks do not observe the observance for resident (monks)—thus, Upāli, is there dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order.

This observance for a refectory, Upāli, was laid down by me for monks in respect of a refectory⁴: the best seat, the best water (for washing), the best alms⁵ according to seniority,⁶ according to (the time of) night,⁷ according as it is befitting. The rules of training having been properly laid down by me thus, Upāli, if newly ordained monks reserve a seat in the refectory for monks who are Elders⁸—thus, Upāli, is there dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order.

BD.6.324

This observance in respect of lodgings,⁹ Upāli, was laid down by me for monks in respect of lodgings according to seniority according to (the time of) night, according as it is befitting. The rules of training having been properly laid down by me thus, Upāli, if newly ordained monks reserve lodgings for monks who are Elders—thus, Upāli, is there dissension in an Order but not schism in an Order.

This was laid down by me, Upāli, for monks inside a boundary: one Observance,¹⁰ one Invitation,¹¹ one formal act of the Order, one set of formal acts.¹² The rules of training having been properly laid down by me thus, ¹ See Vin.2.203. ² Vin-a.1378 refers us to the Vattakkhandhaka, see Kd.18.1. It also points out that a dissension can grow into a schism. ³ Kd.18.2. ⁴ Kd.18.4. ⁵ Best seat, water, alms spoken of at Vin.2.161f. ⁶ See Vin.2.162. ⁷ yathāraṭṭam, explained at Vin-a.1378 as rattiparimāṇānurūpaṃ, conformably to the measurement of the night. ⁸ Kd.16.10.1. ⁹ Vin.2.218. ¹⁰ Kd.2.6.2. ¹¹ Kd.4.13.14. ¹² kammākamma, large and small ones, Vin-a.1378.

Upāli, if, having made a separate arrangement just there inside a boundary and having split off a group, they carry out a separate Observance and carry out a separate Invitation and carry out a separate formal act of the Order and carry out a separate set of formal acts—thus, Upāli, is there dissension in an Order as well as schism in an Order.”¹

Vin.5.202

Concluded is the Tenth Division: on Settling Legal Questions

ITS SUMMARY

Offence, legal question, partiality, and one who has heard little,
And matter, and unskilled,
individual, and on worldly things,
Is split, both dissension in an Order,
and so too schism in an Order.

DIVISION 11: A SCHISMATIC IN THE ORDER

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is a schismatic in the Order doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, staying there for an aeon, incurable²?”

Prv.17.11.1

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma, he explains Dhamma as non-dhamma ... non-discipline as Discipline, ... Discipline as non-discipline³ and he is one misrepresenting view as to formal act.⁴ If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli ... incurable.

BD.6.325

Prv.17.11.2

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... and he is one misrepresenting view as to recitation. If he is possessed ...

Prv.17.11.3

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... and he is one who, talking, misrepresents view. If he is possessed ...

Prv.17.11.4

¹ Kd.17.5.2. ² As at Vin.2.202. ³ Vin.2.204ff. ⁴ For this and the next four misrepresentations see above, Prv.17.10.9.

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... and he is one misrepresenting view by speaking out. If he is possessed ...

Prv.17.11.5

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... and he is one misrepresenting view by offering a voting-ticket. If he is possessed ...

Prv.17.11.6

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... and is one misrepresenting approval¹ as to a formal act ... as to the recitation ... (by) talking ... by proclamation ... by offering a voting ticket. If he is possessed

Prv.17.11.7

...
And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... and is one misrepresenting pleasure² as to a formal act ... by offering a voting ticket. If he is possessed ...

Prv.17.11.8

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... and is one misrepresenting intention³ as to a formal act, is one misrepresenting intention as to the recitation, is one misrepresenting intention (by) talking, is one misrepresenting intention by speaking out, is one misrepresenting intention by offering a voting ticket. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a schismatic in the Order is doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya Hell, staying there for an aeon, incurable.”

Vin.5.203

BD.6.326

Concluded is the Eleventh Division: on a Schismatic in the Order

ITS SUMMARY

Misrepresenting view as to formal act,
as to recitation and (by) talking,
By speaking out, by a voting-ticket:
these five are dependent on view.
Approval, and pleasure, and intention:
these three contexts are fivefold.

¹ Cf. Vin.4.2f. ² Cf. Vin.4.2f. ³ Cf. Vin.4.2f.

DIVISION 12: A SECOND SCHISMATIC IN THE ORDER

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is a schismatic in the Order not doomed to the Downfall, not (doomed) to Niraya Hell, not staying there for an aeon, not incurable?¹”

Prv.17.12.1

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, ... not incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma, he explains Dhamma as non-dhamma, he explains non-discipline as Discipline, he explains Discipline as non-discipline, but is not one misrepresenting view as to a formal act. If he is possessed of these five qualities ... not incurable.

Prv.17.12.2

And if he is possessed of five further qualities ... not incurable. Of what five? As to this, Upāli, a monk explains non-dhamma as Dhamma ... misrepresenting view as to recitation ... misrepresenting intention by offering a voting ticket. If he is possessed of these five qualities, Upāli, a schismatic in the Order is not doomed to the Downfall, not (doomed) to Niraya Hell, not staying there for an aeon, not incurable.”

Prv.17.12.3

Prv.17.12.4

Prv.17.12.5

Prv.17.12.6

Prv.17.12.7

Prv.17.12.8

Concluded is the Twelfth Division: on a Second Schismatic in the Order

ITS SUMMARY

Not misrepresenting view as to formal act,
as to recitation, and by talking,

By speaking out, by a voting ticket:
these five are dependent on view.

Approval, and pleasure, and intention:
these three contexts are fivefold. /

BD.6.327

As above are twenty forms exactly on the dark side,
You must know likewise the twenty exactly on the bright side.

DIVISION 13: RESIDENT

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is a resident monk consigned to Niraya Hell just as a burden is set aside?²”

Prv.17.13.1

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a resident monk is consigned to Niraya Hell just as a burden is set aside. Of what five? If he follows a

¹ Vin.2.205. ² See Middle Length Sayings i.96 for further references. Vin-a.1379 explains as yathā āharitvā ṭhapito.

Vin.5.204 wrong course from partiality, if he follows a wrong course from hatred, if he follows a wrong course from confusion, if he follows a wrong course from fear, if he makes use of something belonging to an Order, belonging to an individual. If he is possessed of these five ...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a resident monk is consigned to heaven just as a burden is set aside. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality ... if he does not make use of something belonging to an Order, belonging to an individual. If he is possessed of these five ... consigned to heaven ... ”

Prv.17.13.2

“How many expositions of Vinaya are there, revered sir, that are not legally valid?”

“These five expositions of Vinaya, Upāli, are not legally valid. What five? As to this, Upāli, a monk speaks¹ saying non-dhamma is Dhamma, he speaks saying Dhamma is non-dhamma, he speaks saying non-Vinaya is Vinaya, he speaks saying Vinaya is non-Vinaya, he lays down what has not been laid down and abrogates what has been laid down.² These five expositions of Vinaya, Upāli, are not legally valid.

These five expositions of Vinaya, Upāli, are legally valid. What five? As to this, Upāli, a monk speaks saying non-dhamma is non-dhamma ... he speaks saying Vinaya is Vinaya, he does not lay down what has not been laid down and does not abrogate what has been laid down. These five expositions of Vinaya, Upāli, are legally valid.”

BD.6.328

Prv.17.13.3

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is an issuer of meals³ consigned to Niraya Hell just as a burden is set aside?”

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, an issuer of meals is consigned to Niraya Hell just as a burden is set aside. Of what five? If he follows a wrong course from partiality ... hatred ... confusion ... fear, if he does not know what has been issued and what has not been issued. If he is possessed of these five ...

If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, an issuer of meals is consigned to heaven just as a burden is set aside. Of what five? If he does not follow a wrong course from partiality fear, if he knows what has been issued and what has not been issued. If he is possessed of these five ... consigned to heaven ...”

¹ pariṇāmeti, also meaning to bend round, to twist; but this would not fit the following pentad. Vin-a.1379 says niyāmeti katheti. ² Cf. Vin.1.354, Vin.2.88, Vin.2.204; for the last dyad see DN.ii.74. ³ See Kd.16.21 on this and the following officers and their qualities.

“If he is possessed of how many qualities, revered sir, is an assigner of lodgings ... a store-room keeper ... an acceptor of robes ... a distributor of robe-material ... a distributor of conjeý ... a distributor of fruit ... a distributor of solid food ... a disposer of trifles ... an acceptor of outer cloaks ... an acceptor of bowls ... a superintendent of monastery attendants ... a superintendent of novices consigned to Niraya Hell just as a burden is set aside?”

Prv.17.13.4
Prv.17.13.5
Prv.17.13.6
Prv.17.13.7
Prv.17.13.8
Prv.17.13.9
Prv.17.13.10
Prv.17.13.11
Prv.17.13.12
Prv.17.13.13
Prv.17.13.14
Prv.17.13.15

“If he is possessed of five qualities, Upāli, a superintendent of novices ... (see Prv.17.13.3; instead of what has been issued and what has not been issued read who has been superintended and who has not been superintended) ... consigned to Niraya Hell ... consigned to heaven just as a burden is set aside.”

Concluded is the Thirteenth Division: on Resident (Monk)

ITS SUMMARY

Resident, expositions,
issuer of meals, and lodgings,
Store-room, and acceptor of robes, and distributor of robe-material, /
Conjeý, fruit, and solid food, trifles, acceptor of outer cloaks,
Bowls, and monastery attendants too, superintendent for a novice.

Vin.5.205

BD.6.329

DIVISION 14: THE FORMAL MAKING OF KAṬHINA CLOTH

“How many advantages are there, revered sir, in formally making kaṭhina cloth?”

Prv.17.14.1

“There are these five advantages, Upāli, in formally making kaṭhina cloth. What five? Going (to families for alms) without having asked for permission, walking (for alms) not taking the three robes, a group-meal, as much robe-material as is required, and whatever robe-material accrues there, that will be for them.¹ These, Upāli, are the five advantages in formally making the kaṭhina cloth.”

Prv.17.14.2

“How many perils are there, revered sir, for one of muddled mindfulness, not clearly conscious, when he has fallen asleep?”

“There are these five perils, Upāli, for one of muddled mindfulness ... when he has fallen asleep. What five? He sleeps uneasily, he wakes uneasily, he sees an evil dream, devatās do not guard him, impurity is emitted.² These are the five perils ... when he has fallen asleep.

“There are these five advantages, Upāli, for one of raised up mindfulness, who is clearly conscious, when he has fallen asleep. What five? He sleeps easily, he wakes easily, he does not see an evil dream, devatās guard him, impurity is not emitted. These are the five advantages ... when he has fallen asleep.”

Prv.17.14.3

“How many, revered sir, are not to be greeted?”

“These five, Upāli, are not to be greeted.³ Which five? One who has entered amid the houses is not to be greeted, one who is on a carriage-road is not to be greeted, one who is in the (partial) darkness⁴ is not to be greeted, one who is not considering⁵ (his duties) is not to be greeted, one who is asleep is not to be greeted. These five, Upāli, are not to be greeted.

Prv.17.14.4

“And a further five, Upāli, are not to be greeted. Which five? One who is drinking conje is not to be greeted, one in arefctory ... one who has turned away alone⁶ ... one who is thinking about something else⁷ ... one who is naked is not t be greeted. These five, Upāli, are not to be greeted.

BD.6.330

Prv.17.14.5

“And a further five, Upāli, are not to be greeted. Which five? One who is eating solid food is not to be greeted, one who is eating soft food ... one who is defecating ... one who is urinating ... one who is suspended¹ is not to be greeted. These five, Upāli, are not to be greeted.

¹ As at Vin.1.154 where these are called five things that are allowable. ² As at Vin.1.295.

³ See Prv.7.10.1 above (towards end at item 37) and Prv.7.11.1 (towards middle at item 15) where ten individuals and eleven individuals are not to be greeted. ⁴ otamasika, not in Pali-English Dictionary. No other canonical reference given by P.T.C. Vin-a.1379 explains by andhakāragato, and adds that in greeting him the forehead might be hurt by the legs of a couch. ⁵ kiccayapasutattā vandanam asamannāharanto, not attending to, not reacting to the greeting because he is not performing his obligations. ⁶ ekāvatta: to a rival faction. Greeting him, one might get kicked, Vin-a.1379. ⁷ aññāvihita, as at Vin.4.69, Vin.4.97, Vin.4.269.

Prv.17.14.6

“And a further five, Upāli, are not to be greeted. Which five? One ordained later is not to be greeted by one ordained earlier,² one not ordained is not to be greeted, one belonging to a different communion (even) if he is more senior (yet) is a speaker of non-dhamma is not to be greeted, a woman is not to be greeted a eunuch is not to be greeted. These five, Upāli, are not to be greeted.

Prv.17.14.7

“And a further five, Upāli, are not to be greeted. Which five? One under probation³ is not to be greeted, one who deserves to be sent back to the beginning⁴ ... one who deserves mānatta ... one undergoing mānatta ... one who deserves rehabilitation is not to be greeted. These five, Upāli, are not to be greeted.”

Prv.17.14.8

“How many, revered sir, are to be greeted?”

Vin.5.206

“These five, Upāli, are to be greeted. Which five?⁵ One ordained earlier is to be greeted by one ordained later, one belonging to a different communion if he is more senior and is a speaker of Dhamma is to be greeted, a teacher is to be greeted,⁶ a preceptor is to be greeted, a Tathāgata, arahant, perfect Buddha is to be greeted by the world with its devas, with its Māras, with its Brahmās, by creatures with recluses and brahmins, with devas and mankind. These five, Upāli, are to be greeted.”

Prv.17.14.9

“If a more newly ordained monk, revered sir, is honouring⁷ the feet of a more senior monk, when he has caused how many states to be set up within himself should he honour the feet?”

BD.6.331

“If a more newly ordained monk, Upāli, is honouring the feet of a more senior monk, having caused five states to be set up within himself he should honour the feet. What five? When a more newly ordained monk, Upāli, is honouring the feet of a more senior monk, having arranged his outer cloak over one shoulder, holding out his joined palms in salutation, stroking his feet on all sides with the palms of his hands, having caused regard and esteem to be set up, he should honour his feet. When a more newly ordained monk, Upāli, is honouring the feet of a more senior monk, having caused these five states to be set up within himself, he should honour his feet.”

¹ “Suspended by the threefold formal act of suspension. Those against whom the other four formal acts have been carried out may be greeted. There is an offence in greeting one who is naked (see Kd.15.15) and one who is suspended,” Vin-a.1379. ² This pentad and the next occur at Kd.16.6.5. ³ see Kd.12.1.2. ⁴ See Kd.13.15. ⁵ The first, second and fifth are given at Kd.16.6.5. ⁶ Vin-a.1379 says these five teachers are to be greeted: the teacher forgoing forth, for ordination, for guidance, for the recitation, and for exhortation. ⁷ Same Pali word as for “greeting”.

Concluded is the Fourteenth Division: on the Formal Making of Kaṭhina Cloth

ITS SUMMARY

Formal making of kaṭhina cloth, and asleep, amid, conje, when eating,
And earlier, and one under probation,
one to be greeted, one who should honour.

Concluded are the Upāli-Pentads

THE SUMMARY OF THESE DIVISIONS

Independently, and (formal) act, remain, and as to an explanation,
And reproof, and ascetic practices, lying, and to a nun also, / Referendum, legal question, schismatics, the fifth in the preceding,¹ Resident (monks), and kaṭhina cloth:
the fourteen are well proclaimed. /

¹ bhedakā pañcamā pure, referring no doubt to the two sections (Prv.17.11, Prv.17.12) on a schismatic where the fifth clauses of each pentad are opposed to one another. Oldenberg gives no comma after bhedakā and thus accounts for 13 Divisions only.

18. ORIGIN

There is the offence one falls into unconscious (that it is against ordinance), rises from conscious (that it is against ordinance¹); there is the offence one falls into conscious rises from unconscious ...; there is the offence one falls into unconscious ... rises from unconscious ...; there is the offence one falls into conscious ... rises from conscious² (that it is against ordinance). There is the offence one of skilled mind falls into,³ one of skilled mind rises from; there is the offence one of skilled mind falls into, one of unskilled mind rises from; there is the offence one of skilled mind falls into, one of indeterminate mind rises from; there is the offence one of unskilled mind falls into, one of skilled mind rises from; there is the offence one of unskilled mind falls into, one of unskilled mind rises from; there is the offence one of unskilled mind falls into, one of indeterminate mind rises from; there is the offence one of indeterminate mind falls into,⁴ one of skilled mind rises from; there is the offence one of indeterminate mind falls into, one of unskilled mind rises from; there is the offence one of indeterminate mind falls into, one of indeterminate mind rises from.

Prv.18.1.1
BD.6.332
Vin.5.207

PĀRĀJIKA

From how many origins originates the first offence involving Defeat? The first offence involving Defeat originates from one origin: from body and

Prv.18.1.2

¹ Vin-a.1380 “Beginning with lying down together, falling unintentionally into a fault against ordinance (paṇṇattivajja), he falls (into it) unconscious (of its nature). Confessing, he rises from it conscious (of its nature).” Rising from seems to be effected by means of “the covering over (as) with grass”—Cf. Vin-a.1329. ² As at Vin.5.125. ³ As at Vin.5.120.

⁴ As at Vin.5.125.

mind, not from speech.¹From how many origins originates the second offence involving Defeat? ... from three origins²: it may be that it originates from body and mind, not from speech; it may be that it originates from speech and mind, not from body; it may be that it originates from body and speech and mind. From how many origins originates the third offence involving Defeat? ... from three origins³: it may be that it originates from body and mind, not from speech; it may be that it originates from speech and mind, not from body; it may be that it originates from body and speech and mind. From how many origins originates the fourth offence involving Defeat? ... from three origins⁴: it may be that it originates from body and mind, not from speech; it may be that it originates from speech and mind, not from body; it may be that it originates from body and speech and mind.

Concluded are the four Offences involving Defeat

SANĠHĀDISESA

Prv.18.2

From how many origins originates the offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for emitting impurity using (the hand)? It originates from one origin: from body and mind, not from speech. From how many ... for coming into physical contact with a woman? ... from one origin: from body and mind, not from speech. From how many ... for offending a woman with lewd words? ... from three origins: it may originate from body and mind, not from speech; it may originate from speech and mind, not from body; it may originate from body and speech and mind. From how many ... for speaking in praise of ministering to sense-pleasures for oneself in the presence of women? ... from three origins: (as above) ... From how many ... for acting as a go-between? ... from six origins: it may originate from body, not from speech, not from mind; it may originate from speech, not from body, not from mind; it may originate from body and speech, not from mind; it may originate from body and mind, not from speech; it may originate from speech and mind, not from body; it may originate from body and speech and mind. From how many ... for begging for oneself for having a hut built? ... from six origins (as above) ... From how many ... for having a large vihāra built? ... from six origins ... From how many ... for defaming a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat? ... from three origins ... From how many ... for defaming a monk with a charge of an offence involving Defeat, taking up some point as a pretext in a legal question really belonging to something else? ... from three origins ... From how many ... for a schismatic monk who on being admonished up to the third time does not give up (his course)? ... from one origin: it originates from body and speech and mind. From how many ... for monks who are imitators of schismatics and on being admonished up to the third time do not give up (their course)? ... from one origin: it originates from body and speech and mind. From how many ... for a monk who is difficult to speak to and on being admonished up to the third time does not give up (his course)? ... from one origin: it originates from body and speech and mind. From how many origins originates the offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order for a monk who brings a family into disrepute and on being admonished up to the third time does not give up (his course)? It originates from one origin: it originates from body and speech and mind.

Vin.5.208

¹ Cf. Vin.5.86f. ² Cf. Vin.5.87. ³ Cf. Vin.5.87. ⁴ Cf. Vin.5.87.

BD.6.334

Concluded are the Thirteen Offences entailing a Formal Meeting of the Order

SEKHIYA

... From how many origins originates the offence of wrong-doing for relieving oneself or spitting in water, out of disrespect? The offence of wrong-doing for ... out of disrespect originates from one origin: it originates from body and mind, not from speech.

Prv.18.3

Concluded are the Sekhiyas

PĀRĀJIKA

From how many origins originate the four offences involving Defeat? The four offences involving Defeat originate from three origins: they may originate from body and mind, not from speech; they may originate from speech and mind, not from body; they may originate from body and speech and mind.

Prv.18.4

SAṄGHĀDISESA

Prv.18.5

Vin.5.209

From how many ... the thirteen offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order? ... originate from six origins: they may originate from body, not from speech, not from mind; they ... (see Prv.18.2.1) ... may originate from body and speech and mind.

ANİYATA

Prv.18.6

From how many ... the two Undetermined offences? ... originate from three origins: they may originate from body and mind, not from speech; they may originate from speech and mind, not from body; they may originate from body and speech and mind.

NISSAGGIYA PĀCITTIYA

Prv.18.1.7

BD.6.335

From how many ... the thirty offences of Forfeiture? ...originate from six origins: they may originate from body, not from speech, not from mind ... they may originate from body and speech and mind.

PĀCITTIYA

Prv.18.8

From how many ... the ninety-two offences of Expiation? ... originate from six origins: they may originate from body, not from speech, not from mind ... they may originate from body and speech and mind.

PĀTIDESANĪYA

Prv.18.9

From how many ... the four offences to be Confessed? ... originate from four origins: they may originate from body, not from speech, not from mind; they may originate from body and speech, not from mind; they may originate from body and mind, not from speech; they may originate from body and speech and mind.

SEKHIYA

Prv.18.10

From how many origins originate the seventy-five Sekhiyas? The seventy-five Sekhiyas originate from three origins: they may originate from body and mind, not from speech; they may originate from speech and mind, not from body; they may originate from body and speech and mind.

Concluded is Origin

ITS SUMMARY

Unconscious, and also skilled,
and origin in every way:
Know well origin by the method
according to the rule. /

19. SECOND COLLECTION OF STANZAS

Prv.19.1.1
BD.6.336
Vin.5.210

“How many bodily offences?
How many verbal are done?
How many offences of concealing?¹
How many due to contact?”

“Six bodily offences,
six verbal are done,
Three offences of concealing,² five due to contact.³”

“How many offences at sunrise?
How many on up to the third time?
How many here are the eight things?
through how many is the whole collection?”

“Three offences at sunrise,⁴ two up to the third time,⁵
One here are eight things,⁶

¹ chādenta, see Vin.5.120, towards end. ² Nuns’ Bi-Pj.6, Monks’ Bu-Pc.64, wrong-doing at Kd.13.34. N.B. In this Section offence means class of offence and not individual offences.

³ Bu-Pj.1, Bu-Ss.2, Bu-Pc.52, Nuns’ Bi-Pj.5.2.2. ⁴ Bu-NP.2 (one night), Bu-NP.23 (seven days), Bu-NP.1 (ten days), Bu-NP.29 (six nights), Bu-NP.3 (more than a month); being away for a night alone, Nuns’ Bi-NP.3; if an offence has been concealed for the first, second and third watches of the night, and is still concealed after the sun has risen, he who conceals it should be made to confess an offence of wrong-doing—as at Kd.13.34.2. The three offences are thus Nissaggiya, Formal Meeting, and wrong-doing. ⁵ There are eleven admonitions “up to the third time”. Here those both for monks and for nuns are intended. ⁶ One here in this Dispensation (sāsana) for nuns. See Nuns’ Bi-Pj.8.

through one is the whole collection.¹”

“How many are the sources of Discipline that have been laid down by the Buddha?
How many are called serious in the Discipline?
How many called concealing a very bad (offence)?”

“Two are the sources of Discipline that have been laid down by the Buddha,²
Two are called serious in the Discipline,³ two concealings of a very bad (offence).⁴”

“How many offences among villages?
How many due to the other side of a river?
In (eating) how many meats is there a grave offence?
In how many meats an offence of wrong-doing?”

BD.6.337

“Four offences among villages,⁵ four due to the other side of a river,⁶
In (eating) one meat there is a grave offence,⁷ in nine meats an offence of wrong-doing.⁸”

“How many verbal offences at night?
How many verbal offences by day?
How many offences for one who is giving?
How many for one who is receiving?”

“Two verbal offences at night,⁹ two verbal offences by day,¹⁰
Three offences for one who is giving,¹¹

¹ Through the recitation of the provenance of all the rules of training and of the recitations of the whole Pātimokkha, Vin-a.1381. ² Body and speech. ³ Defeat and Formal Meeting and four for a recipient.¹”
⁴ For concealing an offence of Defeat or of Formal Meeting there is an offence for the concealer. ⁵ Wrong-doing (Bu-Pc.67.2.2), Pācittiya (Bu-Pc.27), grave, and Sañghādisesa (Nuns' Bi-Ss.3.5.1). ⁶ Wrong-doing (Kd.2.7.2), Pācittiya (Bu-Pc.28), grave, and Formal Meeting (Nuns' Bi-Ss.3.5.1). ⁷ In eating human flesh, Vin.1.218. ⁸ Eating nine other kinds of meat, Vin.1.219f. ⁹ Pācittiya and wrong-doing (Nuns' Bi-Pc.11.2.1). ¹⁰ Pācittiya and wrong-doing (Nuns' Bi-Pc.12.2.1). ¹¹ Defeat (Bu-Pj.3.4.7), grave, and Pācittiya (Bu-Pj.3.4.5).

“How many lead on to confession?
How many for which amends are made?
How many here for which amends are not made are spoken of by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?”

“Five leading on to confession,² six for which amends are made,³
One here for which amends are not made⁴
are spoken of by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun.”

“How many serious (offences against)
Discipline are spoken of?
And bodily-verbal (offences)?
How many flavours of grain at a wrong time?
How many agreements for a motion followed by a resolution made three times?”

BD.6.338

“Two serious (offences against) Discipline⁵ are spoken of and bodily-verbal (offences),⁶
One flavour of grain at a wrong time,⁷ one agreement for a motion followed by a resolution made three times.⁸

“How many bodily Defeats?
How many grounds for communion?
And how many interruptions?”

Vin.5.211

¹ Bi-Ss.2, Bi-Pj.5, Bi-NP.5, grave (Nuns' Bi-Ss.5.2.2). ² Vin-a.1382: five that are slight.

³ Vin-a.1382: setting aside Defeat, the remainder mean “one here for which amends are not made” is the one offence (in the class of Defeat)—i.e. Defeat is the only offence for which amends cannot be made. ⁴ Vin-a.1382: setting aside Defeat, the remainder mean “one here for which amends are not made” is the one offence (in the class of Defeat)—i.e. Defeat is the only offence for which amends cannot be made. ⁵ Defeat and Formal Meeting.

⁶ Referring to absolutely all the rules of training; not one is laid down in respect of the mind-door, Vin-a.1382. ⁷ Only salted sour gruel for an invalid, Vin.1.210. ⁸ This one agreement is allowed for exhorting nuns (Bu-Pc.21).

How many two finger-breadths are laid down?”

“Two bodily Defeats,¹ two grounds for communion,²
And interruption for two (individuals),³ two finger-breadths twice are laid down.⁴”

“How many ‘having struck oneself’?
By how many is an Order split?
How many here are first offenders?
How many carryings out of a motion?”

“Two ‘having struck oneself’,⁵ by two is an Order split,⁶
Two here are the first offenders,⁷ two carryings out of a motion.⁸”

“How many offences in onslaught on creatures?
How many Defeats from speech?
How many are called offensive (words)?
Or how many because of a go-between?”

“Three offences in onslaught on creatures,⁹ three Defeats from speech,¹⁰

¹ Bu-Pj.1, Bi-Pj.5. ² “ground” is bhūmi. Vin-a.1382: “either he makes a ‘same communion for himself’, or a complete Order restores a suspended monk. But in the Kurundiya the two grounds for communion that are spoken of are a ground for a similar communion and a ground for a different communion.” Cf. above Prv.7.2 (end of text, pp.116.) ³ Cf. above Prv.7.2 (Vin.5.118): one under probation and one undergoing mānatta. ⁴ Nuns’ Bi-Pc.5 is one, and “two finger-breadths or two for a month” is the other, Vin-a.1382. ⁵ Vin-a.1382: “A nun who has struck herself falls into two offences: if she strikes and weeps there is an offence of Pācittiya; if she strikes but does not weep there is an offence of wrong-doing.” See Nuns’ Bi-Pc.20. ⁶ By a formal act and by a voting ticket. ⁷ Vin-a.1383: there are two in the whole of the Vinaya according to the layings down for both (Orders). But, on the other hand (? itarathā) there are nine for monks and nine for nuns, making eighteen. ⁸ Vin-a.1383: the formal act and the basis of the formal act. ⁹ Defeat, grave, Pācittiya, as at Bu-Pj.3.4.5. ¹⁰ For one who conceals a fault, for an imitator of one who is suspended, and for a doer of eight (things)—Nuns’ Bi-Pj.6.3.4. “But the Kurundiya says that the three are: at a command taking what has not been given, killing a man, and claiming a state of further-men.”

Three are called offensive (words),¹ three because of a go-between.²”

“How many individuals should not be ordained?
How many things included in formal acts?
How many are called ones who are expelled?
For how many is a one fold formula?”

“Three individuals should not be ordained,³ three things included in formal acts,⁴ Three are called ones who are expelled,⁵ for three is a one fold formula.⁶”

“How many offences in taking what has not been given?
How many because of unchastity?
How many offences for cutting off?
How many because of throwing down?”

“Three offences in taking what has not been given,⁷ four because of unchastity,⁸
Three offences for cutting off,⁹ five because of throwing down.¹⁰”

BD.6.340

“Offences of wrong-doing with Expiation

¹ Formal Meeting, grave, wrong-doing, as at Bu-Ss.3.3.2, Bu-Ss.3.3.3. ² Formal Meeting, grave, wrong-doing, as at Bu-Ss.5.4.12. ³ One who is under the right age (Bu-Pc.65), one lacking the accessories (bowl and robe) (Kd.1.70), and one who has fallen away from the matter (a matricide, eunuch, hermaphrodite and animal) (Kd.1.63-69)—the (last two) interpretations being given by the Kurundiya. ⁴ The preparation of a formal act (it should be carried out), the individually unfinished (he is carrying out), and a past carrying out (it was carried out). A further threefold classification is by subject-matter, motion and proclamation: Vin-a.1383. ⁵ “Expel the nun Mettiyā” (Bi-Ss.11.1.9), a seducer of nuns should be expelled (Kd.1.67), and a novice who is possessed of ten qualities should be expelled (Kd.1.60). Cf. above Section Prv.7.1. ⁶ “I allow, monks, two or three to make proclamations together,” so Vin-a.1384 apparently quoting Vin.1.93. For ekavācika see Vin.1.169ff. ⁷ Defeat, grave, wrong-doing (see Bu-Pj.2.1.6 and Bu-Pj.3.6.1). ⁸ Defeat, grave, wrong-doing, Pācittiya (all in Bu-Pj.1). ⁹ Bu-Pj.2.4.18, Bu-Pc.11, grave (in Bu-Pj.1). ¹⁰ Defeat (Bu-Pj.3.4.5.6), grave and Pācittiya (Bu-Pj.3.4.5; Bu-Pj.5.25), Formal Meeting (Bu-Ss.1), wrong-doing (Bu-Sk.74).

for an exhorter in an incomplete (Order of) nuns,
 How many here are spoken of as nonads?
 And of how many in regard to robe-material?”

“Offences of wrong-doing with Expiation are done by an exhorter in an incomplete (Order of) nuns,¹ Four here are spoken of as nonads,² and of two in regard to robe-material.³”

“And how many Confessions are pointed out for nuns?
 How many wrong-doings with Expiation when they partake of raw grain?”

“And eight Confessions made for nuns are pointed out,⁴ Wrong-doings with Expiation are done when they partake of raw grain.⁵”

“How many offences for one who is walking?
 And how many for one who is standing?
 How many offences for one who is sitting?
 And how many for one who is lying down?”

“Four offences for one who is walking,⁶ and as many too for one who is standing,⁷
 Four offences for one who is sitting,⁸

¹ Bu-Pc.21. ² navakā; Vin-a.1384 says that in the first rule of training (i.e. in the division on nuns, Bu-Pc.21-30) there are precisely two formal acts that are not legally valid, and two that are. The reference seems to be Bu-Pc.21. See Vin.5.137-138. ³ Vin-a.1384 says that in giving robe-material in the presence of monks to one who is ordained there is Pācittiya; in the presence of nuns there is wrong-doing. Thus there is an offence in giving robe-material to two nuns. ⁴ As handed down in the Pali, i.e. the text. ⁵ Nuns' Bi-Pc.7. ⁶ Wrong-doing (Bu-Pc.27, Bu-Pc.67), Pācittiya (Nuns' Bi-Pc.96), grave and Formal Meeting (Nuns' Bi-Ss.3.5.1). ⁷ Pācittiya (Nuns' Bi-Pc.11, Bu-Pc.12), wrong-doing (Nuns' Bi-Pc.6.2.2), grave and Formal Meeting (Nuns' Bi-Ss.3.5.1); see also Nuns' Bi-Pj.8.2.1. ⁸ Commentary merely remarks that if one sits or lies down one falls into four offences; perhaps the same as for standing.

and as many too for one who is lying down.¹”

“How many offences of Expiation
all about different subjects
could one simultaneously fall into together?”

“Five are the offences of Expiation
all about different subjects that one could simultaneously fall into together.²”

BD.6.341

“How many offences of Expiation
all about different subjects could one simultaneously fall into together?”

Vin.5.212

“Nine are the offences of Expiation
all about different subjects that one could simultaneously fall into together.³”

“How many offences of Expiation
all about different subjects
Should be confessed by how many formulae spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun?”

“Five are the offences of Expiation⁴
all about different subjects
That should be confessed by one formula
are spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun.”

“How many offences of Expiation
all about different subjects
Should be confessed by how many formulae
are spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun?”

¹ “I allow, monks, two or three to make proclamations together,” so Vin-a.1384 apparently quoting Vin.1.93. For ekavācika see Vin.1.169ff. ² Vin-a.1385: a monk accepts five medicines, mixes them in one or more vessels, but if he sets them aside for more than seven days there are five offences of Pācittiya. Perhaps this refers to Bu-NP.23. ³ This refers to a monk who asks for, crushes up together and eats the nine sumptuous foods; see Bu-Pc.39.

⁴ Confessing in one formula (sentence) to storing the five medicines for more than seven days; Bu-NP.23.

“Nine are the offences of Expiation¹
 all about different subjects
 That should be confessed by one formula
 are spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun.”

“How many offences of Expiation
 all about different subjects
 Should be confessed after one has announced something,
 are spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun?”

“Five offences of Expiation²
 all about different subjects
 Should be confessed after one has announced the matter,
 are spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun.”

“How many offences of Expiation
 all about different subjects
 Should be confessed after one has announced something
 are spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun?”

“Nine offences of Expiation³
 all about different subjects
 Should be confessed after one has announced the matter
 are spoken of by the Kinsman of the Sun.”

“How many offences up to the third time?
 How many because of speech?
 How many for one who is eating?
 How many for partaking of?”

“Three offences up to the third time,⁴ six because of speech,⁵

BD.6.342

¹ Referring to sumptuous foods (?). ² Referring to medicines. ³ Referring to sumptuous foods. ⁴ Defeat for imitating one who is suspended (Nuns' Bi-Pj.5), Formal Meeting for imitating a schismatic (Bu-Ss.10.1), and Pācittiya for the nun Caṇḍakāli for not giving up a pernicious view (this may refer to Nuns' Bi-Ss.10 which, however, does not mention an offence of Pācittiya). ⁵ See Vin.5.99 on “for the sake of livelihood ...”.

Three offences for one who is eating,¹ five because of partaking of.²”

“How many occasions do all the
‘up to the third times’ reach?
And for how many are offences?
For how many by a legal question?”

“Five occasions do all the
‘up to the third times’ reach,³
And there is an offence for five,⁴ and for five by a legal question.⁵”

“For how many is there an investigation?
And for how many by a settlement?
And for how many simply no offence?
For how many reasons does one shine?”

“For five is there an investigation,⁶ and for five by a settlement,⁷
For five simply no offence,⁸ for three reasons does one shine.⁹”

“How many bodily (offences) by night?
How many bodily by day?
How many offences for looking at with longing?

¹ Grave offence to eat human flesh (Vin.1.218), one of wrong-doing to eat the other unallowable meats (Vin.1.219ff.), offence of Pācittiya for a nun who eats garlic (Nuns’ Bi-Pc.1).

² Formal Meeting (Nuns’ Bi-Ss.5), grave (Vin.1.218), Pācittiya (Nuns’ Bi-Pc.1), Confession (Nuns’ Bi-Pd.1-8), and wrong-doing (Vin.1.219f.). ³ Wrong-doing, grave, Defeat (Nuns’ Bi-Pj.7.2.1). Formal Meeting (Bu-Ss.10), Pācittiya (Bu-Pc.68). ⁴ Vin-a.1386: the five co-religionists (monks and nuns, Vin.2.262), probationers, female and male novices (Vin.1.84, specifically of male novices). Though their offences did not have to be confessed, a punishment, daṇḍakamma, had to be imposed on them. ⁵ For these same five classes all ordinary investigations (? vinicchayavohāra) about bowl and robe is called a legal question, Vin-a.1386. ⁶ The same five as in the immediately preceding notes. ⁷ The same five as in the immediately preceding notes. ⁸ The same five as in the immediately preceding notes. ⁹ Vin-a.1387: if an individual makes amends (for an offence) in the midst of an Order, in the midst of a group, or in the presence of an individual (monk).

How many because of alms?”

BD.6.343

“Two bodily (offences) by night,¹ two bodily by day,²
One offence for looking at with longing,³ one because of alms.⁴”

“Beholding how many advantages should one confess out of faith in others?
How many are spoken of as being suspended?
How many ‘proper conducts’?”

“Beholding eight advantages should one confess out of faith in others,⁵ Three are spoken of as being suspended,⁶ forty-three ‘proper conducts’.”⁷”

“On how many occasions is there lying speech?
How many are called ‘at most’?
How many are to be Confessed?
And of how many were there confessions?”

Vin.5.213

“On five occasions is there lying speech,⁸ fourteen are called ‘at most’,⁹
Twelve are to be Confessed,¹⁰

¹ Pācittiya and wrong-doing (Nuns’ Bi-Pc.11.2.1). ² Pācittiya and wrong-doing (Nuns’ Bi-Pc.12). ³ Wrong-doing (Bu-Ss.1.5.12). ⁴ Vin-a.1387: “Monks, a monk must not look at a donor’s face’—here is an offence of wrong-doing. But the Kurundiya speaks of this phrase as meaning ‘if a nun is partaking of prepared (ripened, paripācita) alms there is an offence of Pācittiya’.” ⁵ Vin-a.1387: “called advantages in the Kosambakakkhandhaka”—apparently referring to Kd.10.1.7.8, though the word ānisaṃsa does not occur there in Oldenberg’s edition. ⁶ For not seeing an offence, not making amends for one, not giving up a pernicious view, e.g. Kd.1.79. ⁷ Vin-a.1387: some are for those monks who have been suspended. ⁸ Vin-a.1387: Defeat, Formal Meeting, grave, Pācittiya, and wrong-doing. See Vin.5.128, BD.6.193. ⁹ Vin-a.1387 “ten days at most” and so on is spoken of below (i.e. above here). ¹⁰ Four offences to be Confessed for monks, eight for nuns.

and of four were there confessions.¹”

“How many factored is lying speech?
How many factors of Observance?
How many are the factors for (going on) a message?
How many the customs of other sects?”

BD.6.344

“Lying speech is eight-factored,² eight factors of Observance,³ Eight factors for (going on) a message,⁴ eight customs of other sects.⁵”

“How many formulas for ordination?
For how many should there be rising from?
To how many should a seat be given?
Of how many is an exhorter of nuns?”

“Eight formulas for ordination,⁶ for eight should there be rising from,⁷
To eight should a seat be given,⁸ of eight is an exhorter of nuns.⁹”

“Of how many is there ‘could be destroyed’?
Of how many a grave offence?
And of how many simply no offence?
Are they one subject for all?”

“Of one is there ‘could be destroyed’,¹⁰

¹ desanā. Vin-a.1387: this means confession of a transgression, accaya, and refers in particular to the assassins hired by Devadatta (Vin.2.192); to the woman who tried to seduce the elder Anuruddha (Vin.4.18); to Vaḍḍha the Licchavi (Vin.2.126); and to incoming monks who carried out a formal act of suspension against an Elder who was a resident in Vāsabha village (Vin.1.314f.). ² See Vin.5.136. ³ See Vin.5.137. ⁴ See Vin.5.137. ⁵ See Vin.5.137. ⁶ Commentary here says this refers to the ordination, upasampadā, of nuns. ⁷ See Vin.5.137. ⁸ See Vin.5.137. ⁹ See Vin.5.137. ¹⁰ Now the verses begin to be concerned with schism; “could be destroyed” is chejja. Vin-a.1388 says “In the verses whoever of nine people offers a voting ticket, he splits the Order; only for him is there chejja”, and it rather strangely adds “as Devadatta fell into an offence involving Defeat”. The above clause apparently refers to Vin.2.204 (Kd.17.5.1).

of four a grave offence,¹
 And of four simply no offence,² they are one subject for all.³”

“How many occasions for ill-will?
 By how many is an Order split?
 How many here are offences at once?
 How many carryings out by a motion?”

“Nine occasions for ill-will,⁴ an Order is split by nine,⁵ Nine here are offences at once,⁶ nine carryings out by a motion.⁷”

BD.6.345

“How many individuals should not be greeted nor (receive) joined palms or proper homage?
 For how many is there an offence of wrong-doing?
 How many for wearing the three robes?”

“Ten individuals should not be greeted nor (receive) joined palms or proper homage,⁸
 For ten is there an offence of wrong-doing,⁹ ten for wearing three robes.¹⁰”

“To how many who have kept the rains should a robe be given here?
 For how many should purity be declared?
 and for how many likewise not declared?”

“To five who have kept the rains

¹ Vin-a.1388: “the followers or imitators of schismatics, such as Kokālika and so on” — i.e. Kokālika and three other followers of Devadatta are mentioned at Bu-Ss.10.1.1, Kd.17.3.14. At Kd.17.4.4 they were to be made to confess a grave offence. Four other sets of circumstances for falling into a grave offence for aiming at a schism occur at Kd.2.34.6–9. ² No offence for four speakers of Dhamma — this is obscure. ³ Vin-a.1388: “But these offences, founded on one for all, are founded on a schism in the Order”. ⁴ See Vin.5.137. ⁵ See Vin.5.137. ⁶ See Vin.5.137. ⁷ Vin-a.1388 says nine formal acts should be carried out by a motion. ⁸ Kd.16.6.5. ⁹ Vin-a.1388: for greeting these same ten. ¹⁰ An extra robe may be worn for most at ten days, Bu-NP.1.2.

should a robe be given here,¹
 For seven should purity² be declared, for sixteen not declared.³”

“Concealing how many hundred offences for a hundred nights?
 Having spent how many nights could he who is under probation be freed?”

“Concealing ten hundred offences for one hundred nights,
 Having spent ten nights
 he who is under probation could be freed.⁴”

BD.6.346

“How many defects in formal acts were spoken of
 by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
 In the Vinaya-matter at Campā?
 And how many—were all—not legally valid?”

“Twelve defects in formal acts⁵ were spoken of
 by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
 In the Vinaya-matter at Campā,
 all were made not legally valid.”

¹ The five fellow Dhamma-people: monks, nuns, probationers, women and men novices.

² The word sante is unusual in Vinaya. It looks like an accusative plural and as if it is being used for parisuddhi, complete purity; and dātabbani is probably here to declare, see BD.4.158, n.1. The above clause possibly refers to Kd.2.22, Kd.13.26: suddhanta. For Vin-a.1388 the seven are: those gone to distant parts, disāpakkantā for disarāgamika of Kd.2.21; those who are mad, unhinged, in pain, and the three who have been suspended (i.e. for not seeing, not making amends for and not giving up). ³ Vin-a.1388 says that these sixteen, beginning with eunuch, are spoken of in the Cīvarakkhandhaka, and seem to refer to the first six and the last ten in Kd.8.30.1. ⁴ This is the answer to the one question asked in the preceding verse. Vin-a.1389: “Whoever on every ten days having fallen into 100 offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order conceals them for each of the ten days is therefore a concealer of 1,000 offences for 100 nights. If he asks for probation, saying all these offences have been concealed for ten days, and having spent ten nights (then the words may be spoken) “The probationer may be freed’.” On probation see Kd.12, Kd.13. This verse is quoted at Vin-a.1183.

⁵ The Campeyyakakkhandhaka is Kd.9. Three defects refer to four formal acts, see above Prv.7.2, towards end of Vin.5.116.

“How many excellences in formal acts were spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
In the Vinaya-matter at Campā?
And how many—were all—legally valid?”

“Four excellences¹ in formal acts were spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
In the Vinaya-matter at Campā,
all were made legally valid.”

Vin.5.214

“How many formal acts were spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
In the Vinaya-matter at Campā?
How many were legally valid, not legally Valid?”

“Six formal acts² were spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
In the Vinaya-matter at Campā;
here one was made legally valid,
Five were spoken of as not legally valid³
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun.”

“How many formal acts were spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
In the Vinaya-matter at Campā?
How many were legally valid, not legally Valid?”

“Four formal acts were spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
In the Vinaya-matter at Campā;
here one was made legally valid,
Three were spoken of as not legally valid⁴

¹ See again towards end of Vin.5.116, and Kd.9. ² See Kd.9.3.5. The legally valid one is that which is carried out by rule in a complete assembly. See also Vin.5.115 (near beginning, and the note in the translation). ³ See Kd.9.3.5. The legally valid one is that which is carried out by rule in a complete assembly. See also Vin.5.115 (near beginning, and the note in the translation). ⁴ See Kd.9.2.4. The one that is legally valid is the same as in the preceding stanza.

BD.6.347

by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun.”

“Those classes of offences taught by Such a One,
the Conqueror of the Unending,¹ by the One who sees aloofness²—
How many here are stopped without the deciding?
I ask you, (you who are) proficient in analysis.”

“Those classes of offences taught by Such a One,
the Conqueror of the Unending, by the One who sees aloofness, —
One here³ is stopped without the deciding:
this I point out to you, (you who are) proficient in analysis.”

“How many doomed to the Downfall are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes⁴ of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

“One hundred and forty-four⁵ are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
Schismatics of the Order, doomed to the Downfall, to Niraya for an aeon,⁶
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many not doomed to the Downfall are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

¹ Vin-a.1389: nibbāna. ² Vin-a.1389 speaks of the same five kinds of “aloofness” or seclusion as does MN-a.i.85. Cf. Vin.5.97. ³ Only one class of offence, that of Defeat, is stopped without the deciding. Here one verdict in the presence of is stopped without the deciding, but yet attains the status of a deciding. ⁴ visayāni. ⁵ Vin-a.1390 referring to the Sanghabhedakkhandhaka, classifies the eighteen speakers of non-dhamma into eight groups each, thus arriving at the total of cha ūnadiyaḍḍhasata. See Kd.17.5.2 (for the eighteen points giving rise to schism) and Kd.17.5.5 (for the views and the doubts, which Commentary classifies as eight). ⁶ Lines at Kd.17.5.5, there in the singular.

“Eighteen not doomed to the Downfall¹ are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many octads are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

BD.6.348

“Eighteen octads² are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many formal acts are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

“Sixteen formal acts³ are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many defects in formal acts are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

Vin.5.215

“Twelve defects in formal acts⁴ are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

¹ Vin-a.1390 here copies Kd.17.5.6. These are schismatics in fact, but act in good faith. ² This refers to the answer last but two above, where the 144 are reduced to 18×8 . ³ See above Prv.15.3, BD.6.167. ⁴ See Vin.5.214.

“How many excellences in formal acts are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

“Four excellences in formal acts¹ are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many formal acts are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

“Six formal acts² are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many formal acts are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

“Four formal acts³ are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many offences involving Defeat are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

“Eight offences involving Defeat are spoken of

¹ See Vin.5.214. ² See Vin.5.214. ³ See Vin.5.214.

by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“How many offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order?
...”

¹“ Twenty-three offences requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order
...”

BD.6.349

“How many Undetermined offences? ...”

“Two Undetermined offences ...”

“How many offences of Forfeiture? ...”

“Forty-two offences of Forfeiture ...”

“How many offences of Expiation? ...”

“One hundred and eighty-eight offences of Expiation ...”

“How many offences to be Confessed? ...”

“Twelve offences to be Confessed ...”

“How many Trainings are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun?
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
we listen to you.”

“Seventy-five Trainings are spoken of
by the Buddha, the Kinsman of the Sun,
On the attributes of one claiming Vinaya
listen to me.”

“What has been well asked by you that has been well answered by me.
By means of question and answer

¹ See Vin.5.214.

there is nothing at all that is not threaded.¹”

Concluded is the Second Collection of Stanzas

¹ asuttaka, not woven, not threaded on the Thread (sutta) of the Teaching. On sutta as Thread see The Guide, PTS Translation Series, No. 33, Introduction, p.xxxiii, and p.3, note 12.

20. THE SWEAT INDUCING STANZAS

Prv.20.1.1
BD.6.350
Vin.5.216

One not in communion with monks or nuns,¹ a certain eating is not obtained there,²
There is no offence for one who is not away, separated from³:
these questions were thought out by those of skill.

Five things not to be disposed of,⁴ (five) not to be divided up⁵ were spoken of by the Great Seer,
There is no offence in disposing of,⁶ of making use of:
these questions were thought out by those of skill.

I do not say ten individuals,⁷ eleven are to be shunned,⁸
There is an offence for one who is greeting a senior⁹:
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Not one who is suspended,
nor yet one who is undergoing probation,
Nor a schismatic of the Order,
nor yet one who has gone over to a faction,

¹ Referring to the Observance and Invitation. Cf. Bu-Pc.69.2.1. ² Two kinds of eating, sambhoga, are given at Bu-Pc.69.2.1. Here Vin-a.1391 takes it to mean that he does not obtain unallowable food. ³ Vin-a.1391 appears to take this to mean: if the sleeping-place is in a house, sahagāraseyyā. Cf. Vin.1.109. ⁴ Vin.2.170. ⁵ Vin.2.171. ⁶ Vin-a.1391 says this should be understood in reference to a nun who is the mother of a young child. ⁷ Vin-a.1391 refers this to the Senāsanakkhandhaka, Kd.16. ⁸ Vin-a.1391 refers this to the Mahākkhandhaka, Kd.8, and the naked monk—probably referring to Kd.8.28. ⁹ Does this refer to Kd.16.6.5? Commentary is silent. But see above Prv.17.14.6.

Firm in the basis of belonging to the same communion,¹
 How could there be no sharing in the training?²
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Being questioned, he comes to the Dhamma,
 what is skilled, what is connected with the goal,
 He is neither living nor dead nor attained to nibbāna.
 Which is this individual the Buddhas speak of?³
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

BD.6.351

I do not say above the collar-bones,
 below the navel should be shunned,
 How could there be an offence involving Defeat because of sexual Intercourse?⁴
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

A monk begging for himself builds a hut, the site not marked out,
 Exceeding the right measure, involving destruction, without an open space (round it): there is no offence.⁵
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

A monk begging for himself builds a hut, the site marked out,
 To the right measure, not involving destruction, with an open space (round it): there is an offence.⁶
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Should one perform no bodily action,
 nor even speak to others with the voice,

¹ Bu-Ss.10.2; Bu-Pc.81.2.1. ² Vin-a.1391 says this question concerns the monk who formerly was a barber, Kd.6.37. ³ Vin-a.1391: this question concerns a fashioned (created) Buddha, nimmita-buddha. Is this a Buddha-image? ⁴ This question is about the headless trunk or body whose eyes and mouth were on its chest; see Vin.3.107. ⁵ Vin-a.1391 says this refers to a hut roofed with grass. See Bu-Ss.6.3.16. No offence if a monk builds one. Verse quoted at Vin-a.574. ⁶ This refers to Dhaniya's hut, which was sabbamattikāmaya (the clue-word at Vin-a.1391); see Bu-Pj.2.1.1.2. The offence in building a hut of this kind was one of wrong-doing. The other part of the dilemma (concerning a hut not specified as made entirely of mud or clay) is at Bu-Ss.6.

One would fall into a serious (offence), a matter for being destroyed.¹
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

A good man should not do any bodily,
 verbal or even mental evil,
 How then if he is expelled is he well expelled?²
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Not conversing with any man by speech, should he utter no word to others
 He might fall verbally, not bodily.³
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

The rules of training praised by the noble Buddha could be four Formal Meetings,
 All of which one might fall into at one stroke.⁴
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

If two (nuns) ordained together should accept a robe from the hand of both,
 Could the offences be different?⁵
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Four people having arranged together removed valuable goods:
 Three offences involving Defeat,

BD.6.352
 Vin.5.217

¹ garukam chejvatthum. Commentary says this question is about the nun who concealed another nun's fault. Nuns' Bi-Pj.6. The word chejja is connected with Defeat though it does not occur in Nuns' Bi-Pj.6. ² Vin-a.1391 says this question is about the incapable, abhabba, persons, beginning with the eunuch. See Kd.1.61-68. For the eleven persons Commentary speaks of see e.g. Kd.8.30.1. ³ This question is about lying speech though the offence cannot be made clear. For as the monk was sitting silent after he had given an acknowledgement that was not legally valid, the offence was not one of the mind-door. Therefore what should have been made clear has not been made clear. This offence of his arises through non-action in the voice-door, Vin-a.1391f. ⁴ Nuns' Bi-Ss.3. ⁵ Possibly referring to Bu-Pc.25. The two offences are those of Pācittiya and wrong-doing, according to whether acceptance was from the hand of a monk or a nun.

one not an offence involving Defeat.¹

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

And should a woman be within, and a monk outside,
(As) there was no hole in that house²—because of unchastity. How could there be Defeat?
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

If, having accepted oil, honey, molasses,
as well as ghee for oneself, one should lay them aside,
Seven days not having elapsed, unless there is a reason,
there is an offence in partaking (of them).³
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

The offence is one of Expiation for a slighter offence with one involving Forfeiture
Together for one who falls.⁴

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Twenty monks might be assembled thinking that,
complete,⁵ they could carry out a formal act,
A monk might be standing twelve yojanas (away),
and that formal act could be reversed

BD.6.353

¹ Vin-a.1392 refers this to Pārājika 2. See Pj.2.4.29. But there is no mention here of the teacher and the three pupils as there is at Vin-a.1392 and Vin-a.366 where this verse is quoted. The one offence not involving Defeat is said to be a grave one. ² This question appears to refer to Kd.15.35.2 where the word chidda, hole, occurs, as does also the Commentary's santhata, something spread (in a privy). Nuns not allowed to use a privy, Kd.20.273. ³ Bu-NP.23, Bu-Pc.39; see too Kd.6.15.10. ⁴ "Slighter offence," suddhaka, occurs only, I think, at Vin.2.67, thus not in a Defeat or Formal Meeting It is used there in connection with concealing an offence or not concealing it which would entail an offence of wrong-doing for the offender or his being dealt with according to the rule. Vin-a.1392 says that this stanza is about obtaining, for whoever obtains two robes, one for himself and one for another from acquisitions belonging to an Order, falls at one blow into an offence of Nissaggiya Pācittiya, and into an offence of Pācittiya involving a "slighter" offence. Commentary reads suddhika-. This question might conceivably refer to Bu-NP.7. ⁵ A twenty-fold Order is entitled to take part in all formal acts, Vin.1.319.

because (the Order) was incomplete.¹

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

And a speaker through voice even for the length of a stride
Would fall into all sixty-four serious offences together for which amends (should be made).²

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Dressed in an inner robe,³ a double outer cloak⁴ put on,

All these are to be forfeited.

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

And there was not even a motion, nor yet a resolution, nor did the Conqueror say “Come, monk”,
Nor even was there going for refuge for this one,
but his ordination was irreversible.⁵

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Should one kill the woman who is not (his) mother, and should he kill the man who is not (his) father,⁶

Should the dullard kill an unariyan, because of this he would attain the immediately next.⁷

¹ Vin-a.1392 says this question concerns the gāmasimā (a boundary that is a village, Cf. Vin-a.1055) in such towns as Benares for distances of twelve yojanas—perhaps referring to Kd.2.11-13 or Kd.2.24. No formal act may be carried out by an incomplete Order, Kd.2.23.2.

² Vin-a.1392 says this question is about a go-between (Bu-Ss.5); it seems to refer specially to Bu-Ss.5.4.12: “if he does not accept but examines and brings back”. Vin-a.558 cites this verse and thinks that the number of offences equals the number of women to whom the monk gives a message. Vin-a.559 speaks of sixty-four offences mentioned in the verse above. ³ Permission to wear these is given at Vin.1.289. All robes, however, are to be forfeited by a monk who gets a nun who is not a relation of his to wash them (Bu-NP.4).

⁴ Permission to wear these is given at Vin.1.289. All robes, however, are to be forfeited by a monk who gets a nun who is not a relation of his to wash them (Bu-NP.4). ⁵ Referring to Mahāpajāpati’s ordination. ⁶ Vin-a.1393 says this question is about change of sex (see Vin.3.35, Bu-Pj.1.10.6), the mother having become a man and the father a woman, so the person who kills them probably would not be guilty of matricide or parricide. ⁷ anatarāṃ phuse. Does this mean the next world? Or an offence whose fruition comes straightaway?

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

BD.6.354

Should one kill the woman who is (his) mother, and should he kill the man who is (his) father,
Having killed mother and father, not because of this would he attain the immediately next.¹

Vin.5.218

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Not being reprov'd, not being made to remember, a formal act might be carried out for one not face to face
And when carried out the formal act would be well carried out, and an Order, the carrier out, would incur no offence.²
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Being reprov'd, having made to remember,
a formal act might be carried out for one face to face,
And when carried out the formal act might not be well carried out,
and an Order, the carrier out, would incur an offence.³
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

There is an offence in cutting down,⁴ no offence in cutting off,⁵
There is an offence in concealing,⁶ no offence in covering.⁷

¹ Vin-a.1393 says this question is about having animals for parents, like sons of a lion, and like the ascetic who was the young of a doe. This latter case refers to Isisīngatāpasa, see Mi.124, Ja.no.523, Ja.no.536, Mahāvastu translation iii.140. See also Mahāvastu translation iii.148f. for another child born of a doe. ² Vin-a.1393 says this stanza is about ordination by means of a messenger—referring to ordination of nuns, see Kd.20.22. ³ Vin-a.1393 refers this to the ordination of eunuchs, etc. See Kd.1.61ff. But the Kurundiya is of another opinion. ⁴ Vin-a.1393 says in felling a forest-tree there is Defeat (see Bu-Pj.2.4.18); in cutting down grass and creepers an offence of Pācittiya (does this refer to Bu-Pc.2?); in cutting off the male organ a grave offence (Bu-Pj.1). ⁵ No offence in cutting one's hair or nails—see Kd.15.27.1-3. ⁶ Both words are chādentassa; the offence is to conceal one's own or another's offence, but it is no offence to cover (or thatch) a house, etc. ⁷ Both words are chādentassa; the offence is to conceal one's own or another's offence, but it is no offence to cover (or thatch) a house, etc.

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Speaking the truth is a serious offence,¹ and lying a slight one for the speaker,² Speaking a lie is a serious offence,³ and the truth a slight one for the speaker.⁴
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

One that is allotted, dyed with dye
even if made allowable,
There is an offence for making use of it.⁵
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

A monk eats meat after sunset,
If he be not mad nor yet unhinged nor even in bodily pain,
Not for him is there an offence,
and this rule was taught by the Well-farer.⁶
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

BD.6.355

Not inflamed in mind,⁷ nor yet with a mind set on theft,⁸ nor even if he intended “for after dying”,⁹
For him who gives a voting ticket there is “to be destroyed”, for him who accepts a grave offence.¹⁰
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Not even what is agreed on as a dangerous forest-(lodging), not even an agreement given by the Order,

¹ That is when a monk abuses a woman saying “You are deformed, you are a hermaphrodite” (Bu-Ss.3.3.1). ² Bu-Pc.1. ³ Bu-Pj.4. ⁴ Vin-a.1393: speaking the truth when announcing what is a fact is a slight offence. ⁵ The Commentary says this question concerns one who, not having forfeited a robe to be forfeited, makes use of it. See Bu-NP.1.4; Bu-NP.2.3.18; Bu-NP.3.2.3. ⁶ This question is about the “ruminator”, see Kd.15.25. The “allowance” given there is quoted at Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 109. ⁷ One who is inflamed in mind falls into Bu-Pj.1. ⁸ One whose mind is so set falls into Bu-Pj.2. ⁹ If he so intends he falls into Bu-Pj.3. Vin-a.1393 says a schismatic monk has none of these three features. ¹⁰ See Vin.5.213; translation BD.6.344, n.4. Vin-a.1393 confirms that this refers to a schismatic and an imitator of a schismatic.

And not for him is kaṭhina formally made, should he, having laid aside a robe just there, go for half a yojana,
There is no offence for him till sunrise.¹

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

All the various bodily, not verbal, matters
That together he might fall into simultaneously.²
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

All the various verbal, not bodily, matters
That together he might fall into simultaneously.³
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Three women—in sex: that she would not indulge in,
three men and three non-ariyans (and three) eunuchs.⁴
And she would not practise sex in accordance with the letter⁵—

it might be she is to be destroyed because of sexual intercourse.⁶
These questions were thought out by those of skill.

One could ask to give robe-material to his mother⁷
if it is not altered⁸ for an Order,
Of what is there an offence for him,

BD.6.356

¹ Bu-NP.29. ² Vin-a.1393 says this verse is about taking hold of together the hair and fingers of several women—see Bu-Ss.2. It is quoted at Vin-a.841 where, in the exegesis of Bu-Pc.39, adding the word “nine”, it refers to the nine sumptuous foods. If, for example, one puts them all into one dish and eats a morsel of each, one falls into nine offences of Pācittiya.

³ Vin-a.1393 says this verse is about a speaker of lewd words beginning with “All of you are deformed”—see Bu-Ss.3.3.1, and see five verses above. ⁴ Vin-a.1393f. says this verse is about three women. Of these, one (followed by singular verb) does not indulge in what is called sex; having approached three men she does not indulge in sex. Three “unariyan eunuchs” means: three unariyan hermaphrodites and three eunuchs. Having approached these six people she does not indulge in sex. The verse is quoted at Vin-a.905 in exegesis of Nuns’ Bi-Pj.8. ⁵ byañjanasmim. This means she does not actually have sexual intercourse and no offence for his relations?¹

⁶ This question concerns a doer of eight things (Nuns’ Bi-Pj.8) and is about a nun who shows her desire for a man in eight ways. ⁷ Cf. Kd.8.22; Nuns’ Bi-Pc.28.2.2. ⁸ pariṇata.

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

An angry man is pleasing, an angry man is contemptible.

Then what is that rule called by which an angry man is laudable?²

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

A satisfied man is pleasing,

a satisfied man is contemptible,

Then what is that rule called by which a satisfied man is contemptible?

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Could one fall together into a Formal Meeting,

a grave offence, an Expiation,

one to be Confessed, one of wrong-doing?³

These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Both are full twenty years of age, for both there is one preceptor, one teacher, one resolution:

¹ This verse appears to refer to Bu-NP.24. Vin-a.1394 says it is about “raising up mindfulness for using a cloth for the rains piṭṭhiyasamaye, and that its analysis is spoken of in the Commentary on the rules for cloths for the rains”. Piṭṭhiyasamaya is defined at Vin-a.720 as the seven months between the last day of the bright fortnight of the full moon of Kattikā to the beginning of the full moon of Jeṭṭha (Jeṭṭhamūlapuṇṇamā, Cf. DN-a.6). ² Vin-a.1394 says this stanza and the next are about the customs of other sects; and it refers to three matters, but does not specify them. Perhaps receiving food in one’s hand (Vin.1.90, Vin.3.245), in a gourd (Vin.2.114) and in a water-pot (Vin.2.115) are meant; the angry man is probably the layman who objects to monks adopting these customs. ³ Vin-a.1394: this is about going in the sky, ākāsaḡata. If, by supernormal power, one of two novices is sitting down freed from the earth for even as much as a hair’s breadth he is called not ordained. When he has returned to the earth a formal act cannot be carried out by the Order. If it is, it is reversible.

One is ordained, one not ordained.¹
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

Not made allowable, not even dyed with dye—wearing that he might go where he liked,
 And there is no offence for him;
 and this rule was taught by the Well-farer.²
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

One does not give, one does not accept,
 for him a recipient does not exist,
 She falls into a serious offence, not a slight one because of her enjoyment.³
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

One does not give, one does not accept,
 for him a recipient does not exist,
 She falls into a slight offence, not a serious one because of (her) enjoyment.⁴
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

One falls into a serious offence that can be done away with, out of disrespect he conceals⁵;
 Not a nun, and she would not attain a fault.⁶
 These questions were thought out by those of skill.

¹ This is about a nun who, filled with desire, takes almsfood from the hand of a man who is filled with desire (Nuns' Bi-Ss.5), and eats the remaining unallowable meats having crushed them up with human flesh (Vin.1.118), garlic (Nuns' Bi-Pc.1) and the sumptuous foods (defined at Bu-Pc.39); and see Nuns' Bi-Pd.1-8. The above offences are all covered by these rules and their elaborations in the Old Commentary. ² The Commentary says this verse is about the monk whose robes are stolen (Bu-NP.6) and refers us to the Commentary on that rule (Vin-a.665ff. which cites this verse). ³ Nuns' Bi-Ss.6. Vin-a.914 quotes this verse. ⁴ Nuns' Bi-Ss.5.2.2: a nun, filled with desire, accepts water for cleansing the teeth from a man who is filled with desire: an offence of wrong-doing. ⁵ Bu-Pc.64. ⁶ This probably refers to Nuns' Bi-Ss.13. Vin-a.1395 (silently) refers to the conclusion of the Nuns' Formal Meetings (Vin.4.242) where both the seventeen offences of this nature and the fortnight's mānatta for a nun who has fallen into any of them are spoken of, as at Vin-a.1395.

*Concluded are the Sweat-Inducing StanzasITS SUMMARY

Not in communion, not to be disposed of,
 and ten, not one who is suspended,
 He comes-to Dhamma, above the collar-bone, and two on begging for himself, /
 And no bodily action—serious, no bodily nor verbal (evil),
 Not conversing, and training, and two, four people, /
 A woman, and oil, Forfeiture, and monks, the length of a stride,
 And dressed in, and not a motion, should one kill not the mother or father, /
 Not being reprov'd, being reprov'd, cutting down, and so truth-speaking,
 And allotted, after sunset, not inflamed, and not a forest (lodging), /
 Bodily-verbal, and three women too, to the mother,
 An angry man is pleasing, satisfied, and Formal Meeting both, /
 Not made allowable, one does not give,
 one does not give, one falls into a serious (offence):
 The Sweat-Inducing Stanzas are Questions made clear by the Learned. /

21. THE FIVE DIVISIONS

FIRST DIVISION

Prv.21.1.1
BD.6.359
Vin.5.220

¹ Four formal acts: formal act for which leave should be asked, formal act at which a motion is put, formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution, formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by the resolution made three times.² In how many ways are these four formal acts invalid?³

In five ways are these four formal acts invalid: as to matter, or as to motion, or as to proclamation, or as to boundary, or as to assembly.

Prv.21.1.2

How are formal acts invalid as to matter? One carries out a formal act that should be carried out in the presence of not in the presence of: a formal act (carried out) not by rule is invalid as to matter. One carries out a formal act that should be carried out by a question asked in return⁴ not by a question asked in return: a formal act (carried out) not by rule is invalid as to matter. One carries out a formal act that should be carried out on his acknowledgement not on his acknowledgement ... to one who merits a verdict of innocence⁵ he gives a verdict of past insanity ... for one who merits a verdict of past insanity he carries out a formal act for a decision for specific depravity¹ ... for one who merits a decision for specific depravity he carries out a formal act of censure²... for one who merits a formal act of censure he carries out a formal act of guidance³ ... for one who merits a formal act of guidance he carries out a formal act of banishment⁴ ... for one who merits a formal act of banishment he carries out a formal act of reconciliation⁵ ... for one who merits a formal act of reconciliation he carries out a formal act of suspension⁶ ... to one who merits a formal act of suspension he gives probation one who merits probation he sends back to the beginning to one who merits being sent back to the beginning he gives mānatta ... one who merits mānatta he rehabilitates ... one who merits rehabilitation he ordains ... he carries out Observance not on an Observance day ... he invites not on an Invitation day: a formal act (carried out) not by rule is invalid as to matter. Thus are formal acts invalid as to matter.

¹ Oldenberg calls this division “The Five Vaggas”, but though they are numbered consecutively as a group in the text they seem there to have no general name. ² Cf. Vin.5.167.

³ At Vin-a.1195 it is said this is explained in the Kammavagga of the Parivāra, while Vin-a.1395 says the four formal acts are spoken of in the Samathakkhandhaka (Kd.14) of which Vin-a.1191 forms the Commentary. See Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 131ff. for this fourfold kamma. ⁴ See Vin.5.164. Vin-a.1397 says this formal act should be carried out after one has questioned, reproved and made to remember. ⁵ Vin-a.1397 instances Dabba the Mallian; see e.g. Bu-Ss.8.1.9. For this verdict see Vin.4.207.

BD.6.360

How are formal acts invalid as to motion? In five ways are formal acts invalid as to motion: one does not touch on⁷ the matter,⁸ he does not touch on the Order,⁹ he does not touch on the individual,¹⁰ he does not touch on the motion,¹¹ or, later he sets aside the motion.¹² Formal acts as to motion are invalid in these five ways.

Prv.21.1.3

How are formal acts invalid as to proclamation? In five ways are formal acts invalid as to proclamation: one does not touch on the matter ... on the Order ... on the individual, he omits an announcement, or he announces at a wrong time.¹³ Formal acts as to proclamation are invalid in these five

Prv.21.1.4

Vin.5.221

¹ See Vin.4.207; also Kd.14.11 for the carrying out of this formal act against the monk Uvāla (called Upavāla at Vin-a.1397). ² See Kd.11.1.3ff. ³ Kd.11.9.1ff. ⁴ Kd.11.13.6ff. ⁵ Kd.11.18.5ff. ⁶ Kd.11.25. ⁷ parāmasati, to deal with, to take up. ⁸ Vin-a.1397f. says this means one does not carry out a formal act of ordination and so on, does not deal with it, does not bring forward his name. Instead of saying “this Dhammarakkhita desires ordination from the reverend Buddharakkhita”, he says “one desires ordination from the reverend Buddharakkhita”. ⁹ Vin-a.i.398: he does not say “Revered sirs, let the Order listen to me” but “Let the reverend sirs listen to me”. ¹⁰ Vin-a.i.398: He does not say “This Dhammarakkhita desires ordination through the reverend Buddharakkhita” but “this Dhammarakkhita desires ordination”. ¹¹ He does not carry out the formal acts properly according to whether there is a motion only, or a motion followed by one resolution or by three. ¹² He does not make every proclamation of a resolution. ¹³ The proclamation first, afterwards he sets aside, ṭhapeti, the motion.

ways.

Prv.21.1.5

How are formal acts invalid as to boundary?¹ In eleven ways are formal acts invalid as to boundary: one agrees on a boundary that is very small,² he agrees on a boundary that is very extensive,³ he agrees on a boundary whose mark is interrupted,⁴ he agrees on a boundary in the shade, he agrees on “not a mark” as a boundary⁵; standing outside a boundary he agrees on a boundary⁶; he agrees on a boundary that is in a river⁷; he agrees on a boundary that is in the sea; he agrees on a boundary that is in a natural lake; he combines boundary with boundary⁸; he places boundary within boundary.⁹ Formal acts as to boundary are invalid in these eleven ways.

BD.6.361

Prv.21.1.6

How are formal acts invalid as to assembly? In twelve ways are formal acts invalid as to assembly: when a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete fourfold assembly,¹⁰ if as many monks as are entitled to take part in the formal act are not come, if the leave of absence of those fit to declare their leave of absence is not sent, if those who are present protest¹¹; when a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete fourfold assembly, if as many monks as are entitled to take part in the formal act are come, if the leave of absence of those fit to declare their leave of absence is not sent, if those who are present protest; when a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete fourfold assembly, if as many monks as are entitled to take part in the formal act are come, if the leave of absence of those fit to declare their leave of absence is sent, if those who are present protest; when a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete fivefold assembly ... tenfold assembly ... twentyfold assembly, if as many monks as are entitled to take part in the formal act are come, if the leave of absence of those fit to declare their leave of absence is sent, if those who are present protest. Formal acts as to assembly are invalid in these twelve ways.

¹ On boundary, sīmā, see Kd.2.6-13. Fifteen kinds are given at Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 59 and Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 59 4f. gives the eleven invalid kinds as above. See also Sīmāvivādavinichayakathā, edited by J. MINAYEFF, Journal of the Pali Text Society 1887. ² Cf. Vin.1.107.

³ Vin.1.106. ⁴ khaṇḍanimitta. Vin-a.1401 explains that the marks have not been completed. Monks should gradually walk round from east to south to west and to north, and at each quarter should proclaim the mark. They should then proceed to the eastern quarter again and proclaim the same mark as they proclaimed originally, and not a different one. Thus is the boundary completed or not-interrupted, akkhaṇḍa. If, however, they stop at the northern quarter without going on to the eastern one again, the boundary and its marks are interrupted. ⁵ animitta: not all the marks having been agreed on by everyone Vin-a.1401.

⁶ See Kd.2.24. ⁷ A river, sea and natural lake may be taken as a boundary themselves, but not things that are in them, islands and rocks perhaps. ⁸ Offence of wrong-doing at Kd.2.13.1. ⁹ Similar offence at Kd.2.13.2. ¹⁰ Complete assemblies or Orders of monks may be fourfold, fivefold, tenfold or twentyfold, each larger Order being able to carry out more formal acts than the smaller ones. In various ways each may be incomplete or choose an unallowable type of person to bring it up to the right number. See Kd.9.4. ¹¹ For this sentence see Kd.9.3.5.

BD.6.362

When a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete fourfold assembly four regular monks are entitled to take part in the formal act,¹ the remainder who are regular monks are fit to declare leave of absence.² He for whom the Order is carrying out the formal act is neither entitled to take part in the formal act nor is he fit to declare leave of absence, but he merits the formal act.

Prv.21.1.7

When a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete fivefold assembly five regular monks ...

When a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete tenfold assembly ten regular monks ...

When a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete twentyfold assembly twenty regular monks ... but he merits the formal act.

Prv.21.1.8

Vin.5.222

Four formal acts: formal act for which leave should be asked, formal act at which a motion is put, formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution, formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by the resolution made three times. In how many ways are these four formal acts invalid? In five ways are these four formal acts invalid: as to matter, or as to motion, or as to proclamation, or as to boundary, or as to assembly.

Prv.21.1.9

How are formal acts invalid as to matter? One ordains a eunuch³: a formal act (carried out) not by rule is invalid as to matter. One ordains one who is in communion by theft⁴ ... one who has gone over to (another) sect⁵

BD.6.363

¹ Vin-a.1402: in this incomplete assembly there must be four regular monks (to complete it), i.e. not those who have been suspended or sent away, but those of entire moral purity; without these that act cannot be carried out but their leave of absence or entire purity is not sent. ² Vin-a.1402: even if the remainder number about a thousand, if they belong to the same communion all are fit to declare leave of absence. Once they have given this and the entire purity (see Kd.2.3.3), then "Let them come or not", the formal act still stands.

³ See Kd.1.61. ⁴ Kd.1.62. ⁵ Kd.1.62.

... one ordains an animal¹ ... one ordains a matricide² ... a parricide³ ... a murderer of an arahant⁴ ... a seducer of a nun⁵ ... a schismatic⁶ ... a shedder of (a Tathāgata's) blood⁷ ... a hermaphrodite⁸ ... one ordains a man who is less than twenty years of age⁹: a formal act (carried out) not by rule is invalid as to matter.

Prv.21.1.10

How are formal acts invalid as to motion ... (= Prv.21.1.3–Prv.21.1.6) ...

Prv.21.1.11

Formal acts as to assembly are invalid in these twelve ways.

How many possibilities¹⁰ does a formal act for which leave should be asked have access to ... a formal act at which a motion is put ... a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution ... How many possibilities does a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by the resolution made three times have access to? A formal act for which leave should be asked has access to five possibilities; a formal act at which a motion is put has access to nine possibilities; a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution has access to seven possibilities; a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by a resolution made three times has access to seven possibilities.

Prv.21.1.12

Which are the five possibilities to which a formal act for which leave should be asked has access? Restoration,¹¹ being sent away, close shaving,¹² the higher penalty,¹³ a characteristic mark of the formal act is itself the fifth. These are the five possibilities to which a formal act for which leave should be asked has access.¹⁴

Which are the nine possibilities to which a formal, act at which a motion is put has access? Restoration,¹⁵ being sent away,¹⁶ Observance, Invitation, agreement,¹ giving,² way of accepting,³ rejection,⁴ a characteristic mark of the formal act is itself the ninth.⁵ These are the nine possibilities⁶ to which a formal act at which a motion is put has access.

BD.6.364

¹ Kd.1.63. ² Kd.1.64. ³ Kd.1.65. ⁴ Kd.1.66. ⁵ Kd.1.67. ⁶ Kd.1.67. ⁷ Kd.1.67.

⁸ Kd.1.68. ⁹ Bu-Pc.65. ¹⁰ ṭhānāni, qualities, attributes. ¹¹ As at Vin.1.321f., but “being sent away” there precedes “restoration”. Vin-a.1402 says this is the right order, the other being for the connexion, siliṭṭhatā, of the words; and it adds that an example of this meaning of these two words is the expulsion and restoration of the novice Kaṇṭaka. ¹² bhaṇḍakamma, see Kd.1.38.11, Kd.1.48.2. ¹³ brahmadāṇḍa, Kd.21.1.12. ¹⁴ For this paragraph see Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 131. ¹⁵ osāraṇā here seems to mean, according to Vin-a.1409, Kaṅkhāvitarāṇī 132, the formula, “Let him come” spoken for one who desires ordination.

Which are the seven possibilities to which a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution has access? Restoration,⁷ being sent away,⁸ agreement,⁹ giving,¹⁰ removal,¹¹ marking out,¹² a characteristic mark of the formal act is itself the seventh.¹³ These are the seven possibilities to which a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution has access.

Which are the seven possibilities to which a formal act at which a mo-

BD.6.365

¹⁶ nissāraṇā, at Vin-a.1409, Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 132 means that a monk is a speaker of Dhamma, but does not know the rules or their analysis. He does not reflect on the meaning, but pushes it out under the shadow of the appurtenances (or details or syllables, byañjana). If the venerable sirs see fit, having turned out, uṭṭhāpetvā (Cf. Dhp-a.iv.69) this monk, the rest of us could settle this legal question. His being sent away is due therefore to the decision taken at a referendum. ¹ sammuti as to a particular monk who shall present the monk so-and-so for his ordination and shall question him as to discipline and the stumbling-blocks to ordination; also required is the agreement of the monk who seeks ordination that he will answer the questions on discipline put to him by the monk so-and-so. ² This is the Order giving (or giving back) a robe forfeited to the Order that had had to be forfeited by the monk so-and-so. ³ paṭiggaha. This is the way of accepting an offence that a monk had remembered and confessed and says he sees. ⁴ paccukkaḍḍhanā; or postponement? Cf. paccukkaḍḍhitabbaṃ at Vin.2.99, “to be rejected”. paccukkaḍḍhanā, with reference to Vin.1.175 is explained at Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 133 and, rather more fully at Vin-a.1410f., as “Let the venerable sirs who are residents listen to me; if it is pleasing to them we could carry out the Observance now, we could recite the Pātimokkha, we could invite on the next full-moon day”. Thus a rejection of the carrying out of Invitation is “rejection”. ⁵ Here the mark appears to be in settling a legal question by the covering over (as) with grass. ⁶ In all of them a motion is put before an Order. ⁷ Vin-a.1411 and Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī refer this to the episode (see Kd.15.20.2-6) of the turning upside down and the setting upright of Vaḍḍha the Licchavi’s bowl. ⁸ See previous note. ⁹ Agreement on a boundary (Kd.2.6.1). Only with the agreement of monks may a monk be away, separated from his three robes (Bu-NP.2); agreement on a rug (Bu-NP.14.2); and fourteen other agreements—see Kd.16.21, Vin-a.1411, Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 133. ¹⁰ Giving of kaṭhina robe-material (Kd.7.1.3.4); and the giving of the robes of a monk who has died (Kd.8.27). ¹¹ Referring to the removal of the kaṭhina (privileges). ¹² Referring to Bu-Ss.6 and Bu-Ss.7, where there has to be the marking out, desanā, of the site for a hut and for a vihāra. ¹³ Where there is a covering over (as) with grass, that one on the one side and one on the other side are called two proclamations of a motion that is followed by one resolution, Vin-a.1411; Cf. Kaṅkhāvitaraṇī 133.

tion is put and is followed by the resolution made three times has access? Restoration, being sent away,¹ agreement,² giving,³ rebuke,⁴ admonition,⁵ a characteristic mark of the formal act is itself the seventh.⁶ These are the seven possibilities to which a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by the resolution made three times has access.

Prv.21.1.13

When a formal act is being carried out by an incomplete fourfold assembly four regular monks ... (= Prv.21.1.7) ... by an incomplete fivefold assembly ... by an incomplete tenfold assembly ... by an incomplete twentyfold assembly ... but he merits the formal act.

Vin.5.223

Concluded is the First Division: on Formal Acts

SECOND DIVISION

Prv.21.2.1

Founded on two reasons the rule of training was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata for the excellence of the Order, for the comfort of the Order⁷: founded on these two reasons the rule of training was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata. Founded on two reasons ... for the restraint of evil-minded men, for the dwelling in comfort of well behaved monks: founded on these two reasons the rule of training was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata. Founded on two reasons ... for the restraint of the cankers belonging to the here and now, for combating the cankers belonging to future states ... for the restraint of dreadful actions⁸ belonging to the here and now,⁹ for the combating of dreadful actions belonging to future states¹⁰ ... for the restraint of blamable actions belonging to the here and now,¹¹ for the combating of blamable actions belonging to future states ... for the restraint of fears¹ belonging to the here and now, for the combating of fears belonging to future states ... for the restraint of unskilled things belonging to the here and now,² for the combating of unskilled things belonging to future states ... out of compassion for householders,³ for breaking up the factions of evil-minded (individuals)⁴ ... for pleasing those who are not yet pleased and for increasing the number of those who are pleased⁵ ... for establishing True Dhamma, and for protecting Discipline. Founded on these two reasons the rule of training was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata.

BD.6.366

¹ Referring to the seven formal acts beginning with that of censure. When these are revoked restoration can be spoken of. ² On the exhorter of nuns. ³ Giving, or imposing probation and mānatta. ⁴ niggaha; this is sending back to the beginning. ⁵ Referring to eleven admonitions up to the third time: Bi-Pj.7, Bu-Ss.10, Bu-Ss.11, Bu-Ss.12, Bu-Ss.13, Bi-Ss.10, Bi-Ss.11, Bi-Ss.12, Bi-Ss.13; Bu-Pc.68; Bi-Pc.36. ⁶ Given as formal acts of ordination and rehabilitation. ⁷ For the first three pairs see e.g. Vin.3.21; also AN.i.98 for all the pairs. ⁸ vera, Cf. AN.iii.204. ⁹ Offences against the first five silas, see AN.iii.204. ¹⁰ Of which the result will be anguish. ¹¹ The same as the dreadful actions, Vin-a.1412.

Concluded is the Second Division: on Reasons

THIRD DIVISION

Founded on two reasons the Pātimokkha was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata ... the recitation of the Pātimokkha was laid down ... the suspension of the Pātimokkha was laid down ... the Invitation was laid down, the suspension of the Invitation was laid down, the formal act of censure⁶ was laid down, the formal act of guidance⁷ was laid down, the formal act of banishment⁸ was laid down, the formal act of reconciliation⁹ was laid down, the formal act of suspension¹⁰ was laid down, the giving of probation¹¹ was laid down, the sending back to the beginning¹² was laid down, the imposing of *mānatta*¹³ was laid down, rehabilitation¹⁴ was laid down, to be restored¹⁵ was laid down, to be sent away¹⁶ was laid down, ordination¹⁷ was laid down, a formal act for which leave should be asked¹⁸ was laid down, a formal act at which a motion is putwas laid down,¹⁹ a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by one resolution was laid down, a formal act at which a motion is put and is followed by the resolution made three times¹ was laid down.

Prv.21.3.1

BD.6.367

¹ Vin-a.1412 says the fears belonging to the here and now are of the formal acts of censure and so on, the suspension of the Observance and the Invitation, and the formal act of Information (for which see Kd.173.2). ² The five dreadful things, and the ten unskilled ways of acting (see AN.v.266). ³ That they might guard their faith. ⁴ Vin-a.1413 refers this to the rule for eating a group-meal (Bu-Pc.32). ⁵ As at Vin.3.21. ⁶ Kd.1.25.22. ⁷ Kd.1.25.22. ⁸ Kd.1.25.22. ⁹ Kd.1.25.22. ¹⁰ Kd.1.25.22. ¹¹ See Kd.13. ¹² See Kd.13. ¹³ See Kd.13. ¹⁴ See Kd.13. ¹⁵ See Kd.179.2; Kd.9.4.9; Cf. Bu-Pc.69.2.1. ¹⁶ See each sikkhāpada in Nuns' Bi-Ss.1-10. But Vin-a.1413 refers this to makers of quarrels who are to be sent away by a formal act that has been laid down. ¹⁷ Kd.1.28.3-6. ¹⁸ See Vin.5.220. ¹⁹ See Vin.5.220.

Concluded is the Third Division: on Layings Down²

FOURTH DIVISION

Prv.21.4.1

The laid down in the not laid down,³ a laying down that is supplementary to a laying down,⁴ a laying down that is a verdict in the presence of, ... a verdict of innocence ... of past insanity, a laying down that is to be carried out on his acknowledgement, a laying down that is the decision of the majority, a laying down for specific depravity, a covering over (as) with grass is laid down for the excellence of the Order, for the comfort of the Order. Founded on these two reasons a covering over (as) with grass was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata. Founded on two reasons a covering over (as) with grass was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata for the restraint of evil-minded men ... for establishing True Dhamma, for protecting Discipline. Founded on these two reasons a covering over (as) with grass was laid down for disciples by the Tathāgata.

Vin.5.224

Concluded is the Fourth Division: on What was Laid Down

FIFTH DIVISION

Prv.21.5.1

Nine classifications: classification by matter, classification by falling away, classification by offence, classification by provenance, classification by individual, classification by class, classification by origin, classification by legal question, classification by deciding.

Prv.21.5.2

¹ See Vin.5.220. ² Vin-a.1413 appears to consider that this and the next Division go together as one Division which it calls Ānisaṃsavagga. The text calls the former Paññattavagga and the latter Paññattavagga. ³ Vin-a.1413 says: the seven classes of offence; setting aside the Buddhas Kakusandha, Koṇāgamana and Kassapa, any rules of training not laid down in between are called laid down. ⁴ See above, Vin.5.1.

When a legal question has arisen, if two come who are hostile about the matter,¹ the matter should be announced to both; when the matter has been announced to both the acknowledgement of both should be made known; when the acknowledgement of both has been heard both should say “After this legal question of ours is settled both should be satisfied”. If they say, “Both will be satisfied,” that legal question should be accepted by the Order. If the assembly has a majority of shameless (persons), it should be settled by means of a referendum.² If the assembly has a majority of ignorant (persons), a Vinaya-expert should be sought.³ He settles that legal question according to rule, according to discipline, according to the Teacher’s instruction—so should that legal question be settled.⁴

BD.6.368

Prv.21.5.3

The matter should be known, the kind⁵ should be known, the name should be known, the offence should be known. Sexual intercourse means matter as well as kind; offence involving Defeat means name as well as offence. Taking what has not been given means matter as well as kind; offence involving Defeat means name as well as offence. Human being ... State of further-men means matter as well as kind; offence involving Defeat means name as well as offence. Emission of semen means matter as well as kind; offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order means name as well as offence. Physical contact means matter as well as kind; offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order means name as well as offence. Lewd words ... Sense-pleasures for self ... Go-between ... Begging for oneself for having a hut built ... for having a large vihāra built ... Defaming a monk with an unfounded charge of an offence involving Defeat ... Defaming a monk with a charge of an offence involving Defeat taking up some point as a pretext in a legal question really belonging to something else ... The not giving up (of his course) by a schismatic monk though there is admonition up to the third time ... The not giving up (of their course) by monks who are imitators of schismatics though there is admonition up to the third time ... The not giving up (of his course) by a monk who is difficult to speak to though there is admonition up to the third time ... The not giving up (of his course) by a

Vin.5.225

¹ att(h)apaccatthika, see Kd.14.14.16. ² See Kd.14.14.19–21. ³ See Kd.14.14.25. ⁴ See Kd.14.14.25. ⁵ gotta above does not seem to mean clan-name as at Kd.1.74.1, but the class to which an offence belongs, its kind, its lineage.

BD.6.369 monk who brings families into disrepute though there is admonition up to the third time means matter as well as kind; offence requiring a Formal Meeting of the Order means name as well as offence ... Out of disrespect easing oneself or spitting in water means matter as well as kind; offence of wrong-doing means name as well as offence.

Concluded is the Fifth Division: on Nine Classifications

Prv.21.6.1. ITS SUMMARY¹:

For which leave should be asked, and motion, followed by one, and by three,
 Matter, motion, proclamation, boundary, and assembly likewise, /
 In the presence of, and question in return, acknowledgement, deserving discipline,
 Matter, the Order, and an individual,
 on motions, and later a motion, /
 Matter, the Order, and an individual,
 announcement, and at a wrong time,
 Very small, and extensive, interruption, shadow, "not a mark," /
 Outside, in a river, and in the sea,
 and in a natural lake, one combines,
 One places within a boundary, four-fivefold, /
 And ten-twentyfold, and is not sent, is sent,
 Entitled to take part in a formal act,
 fit to declare leave of absence, and individuals who merit a formal act, /
 Five possibilities for a formal act for which leave should be asked,
 and a motion is nine-possibilitied,
 Seven possibilities for a motion followed by one resolution, and the motion with the resolution made three times is seven-possibilitied, / Excellence and comfort,
 of evil-minded as well as well behaved, cankers,
 Dreadful actions, blamable actions as well as fear, unskilled, and for householders, /
 Of evil wishes, for pleasing those who are not yet pleased, for establishing Dhamma
 As well as protecting Discipline,

BD.6.370

¹ This covers the five Divisions in Section 19.

Pātimokkha, and with the recitation, /
 And suspension of the Pātimokkha, and Invitation suspension,
 Censure, and guidance, and banishment, and reconciliation, / Suspension, probation,
 the beginning, mānatta, rehabilitation,
 Restoration, sending away, likewise ordination, /
 For which leave should be asked,
 and motion, followed by one, and by three,
 In the not laid down, supplementary laying-down, verdict in the presence of, innocence, /
 Past insanity, acknowledgement,¹ majority, depravity, covering over (as) with grass,
 Matter, falling away, offence, provenance, and by an individual, /
 And class too, origins, and a legal question also,
 Deciding, classifications too, likewise about name and offence. /

Vin.5.226

Concluded is the Parivāra

So, having asked this and that about the way of former teachers
 Dīpanāma of great wisdom,
 who remembered what he had heard, attentive,

Thinking out this epitome of the details for the middle way of study,² Had it written for bringing happiness to disciples.

“Parivāra” means all that is said
 as to matter with the characteristic mark, Meaning by meaning in the True Dhamma, rule by rule in what is laid down.
 It encompasses³ the Dispensation as the ocean (encompasses) India.

BD.6.371

¹ paṭiññā is here abbreviated to paṭi. ² Cf. Vin.5.48. ³ parivāresi.

Not knowing the Parivāra whence is there discrimination between the rules?

Falling away, matter, laying down, supplementary laying down, individual,
For one (Order), for both,
as well as what is held blameworthy by the world—

Doubt, for whomever it arises, is cut off by the Parivāra.
As a universal monarch amid his vast forces,
as a maned lion in the midst of deer,

Like the sun surrounded by its rays,
like the moon in a host of stars,
As Brahmā in a company of Brahmās, as a leader in the midst of his following—Thus through the Parivāra
the True Dhamma-and-Discipline shines forth.

